The WHITE ROSE

The Story

"The White Rose" pictures a love story of tremendous appeal, beautifully told—a story of plain people aimed straight at the heart, and never missing its mark,—a story like a page from life—a story that will tug at the heart strings of every spectator from every class—a story that draws on every human emotion, and that first brings tears, then relieving laughter.

The Cast

The incomparable Mae Marsh, again under Griffith direction, does the greatest work of her career. The many millions who knew her in other days are sure to welcome her in this triumphant return to the screen; the delicately beautiful Carol Dempster, known for her splendid work in Griffith pictures; Ivor Novello, the handsome hero and Neil Hamilton, a new Griffith "discovery."

The Picture

All the D. W. Griffith touches in picture-making are found in this film. It is artistic for those who want screen art; pleasing for those who want deep pathos plus subtle comedy; a woman's picture but also a man's picture; a picture that is dramatic and entertaining at all times; a film without a dull moment, with superb photography depicting the most beautiful scenes.

The New York Herald-

"Don't Miss It."

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' a sequel to 'Robin Hood,' accounted for the string of hopeful ticket buyers extending from the Strand Theatre box office all the way down 47th Street. We enjoyed Richard quite as much as we enjoyed Robin. We were happily surprised, because we had not expected great things. Wallace Beery as Richard, the Lion-Hearted, is magnificent. He is a royal King! We should advise every one not to miss it."—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted' is a good picture. In the role of Richard, Wallace Beery is the same splendid, forceful, vital, engaging King that he was in 'Robin Hood.' We are given a glimpse of the unforgotten wonders of 'Robin Hood'."—R. E. Sherwood, N. Y. Herald.

"Dramatic Moments."

"Wallace Beery gives a convincing and vital performance as King Richard. There are dramatic moments, excellently staged scenes, and it takes us back to the stirring times of the Crusaders."—Morning Telegraph.

"Strikes Home."

"Associated Authors in their initial production struck home. The settings are splendid, as are the costumes. Wallace Beery fills the role he had in 'Robin Hood' just as one would want it, and in the humorous scenes he is excellent. The cast is far above the average."
N. Y. Times.

"By All Means See It."

"If you like romantic adventure skilfully done into a movie, by all means see 'Richard, the Lion-Hearted.' It is a colorful tale, and beautiful maidens are saved and villainous foreigners slain while you pant in suspense. The great difference between 'Richard, the Lion-Hearted' and the 'million dollar spectacles' which dot Broadway and its side streets is that tickets don't cost you $2."—N. Y. Sun.

"Exactly The Thing."

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' is exactly the thing as a photoplay for Associated Authors, Wallace Beery, the leading actor, the Strand Theatre, and, most important of all, also for the movie-going populace."—N. Y. Evening Telegram.

"Most Enjoyable."

"Wallace Beery gives an interpretation of England's crusading King which is human to the nth degree, and which shows the greatness and the smallness of this medieval hero. These actions are unconventional and most enjoyable."—N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Pictorially Beautiful."

"Laughs On All Sides."

"We heard laughs on all sides at the subtle, clever performance of Wallace Beery. Others were affected as we were. You might be, too, if you see the picture. As for settings, frills, and all the rest, they're all just fine. Excellent, in fact!"—N. Y. Daily News.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Motion Picture Day

THE exhibitor needs organization. The exhibitor wants organization.

The number of theatre owners who will admit the facts above is legion.

But organization to be of value must be active; activity costs money. And between the number of exhibitors who proclaim the necessity of organization and those who, in the past, have contributed their share towards the expense of organization—what a difference.

This is something for the theatre owner to think about; a question for him to put squarely to himself, and on the answer depends largely the right of the individual exhibitor to criticize organization or to participate in it.

VARIOUS methods of meeting necessary national organization overhead, good, bad, and indifferent, have been tried in past years. It goes without saying—but is at the same time a sorry confession to make—that no scheme has been successful.

In State and local bodies better results have been achieved in many instances. The pledges secured at the recent Michigan convention, as told elsewhere in this issue, are one evidence of local strength.

But the national body has been an orphan. Something to be kicked around when you felt grouchy; a prize to be bitterly fought for from time to time; but always and forever an object for niggardly consideration and a starvation diet.

Which is not as it should be.

THE results of the orphan-like treatment are plain. It is a fact well known to many in a position to learn the facts that national organization has for too long been dependent upon the ability of its individual leaders to carry the burden.

That's one result of past conditions.

The other is that the national organization is forced into abortive attempts to raise funds, methods that involve activities beyond its scope.

This cannot last—if exhibitor organization is to last. And it must last—regardless of the personalities and politics of the moment, for organization as organization is above all and beyond all.

* * *

This is a funding method adopted by the directors of the national organization after lengthy and exhaustive investigation of all possible means.

It is a method that has met with an enthusiastic response—such strongly organized territories as New Jersey, Western Pennsylvania and Arkansas are among those that have placed this enthusiasm on the records. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York City, not by any means a Cohen organization, is cooperating wholeheartedly.

It is a method in tune with the possibilities and operations of the motion picture business.

THE date of Motion Picture Day is drawing near.

The time is already here for the individual exhibitor—with or without organization affiliations and no matter what those affiliations—to decide upon his own part in the campaign.

He must face the question.

He must answer it honestly.

Either he desires national organization efficiently and intelligently operated; or he prefers national organization run on the basis of the Salvation Army tambourine. Or he doesn't give a hang about national organization.

But he can't criticize and throw bricks at an edifice towards the erection of which he has refused to contribute. He can't refuse aid to the right hand of organization and plead for help in his battles from the left hand.

The points at issue are obvious. They can neither be dodged nor confused.

Don't let anybody tell you that the Admission Tax fight isn't progressing. Very nicely. Some good work being done. Some worth-while friends being made. And no small part of the valuable effort being put forth is that on the part of Moving Picture World readers—responding to our urge to write their legislators. We knew a lot of letter-writing was going on, for most of the exhibitors send us copies. But we were ourselves surprised by reports from Washington this week. A number of Congressmen who never knew there was an Admission Tax are now showing a strong desire for information.

F. B. O. heads the news list this week just as they have also captured this issue of Moving Picture World. The news is: MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON has been elected managing director of the organization, succeeding P. A. POWERS. No further changes in personnel or policy contemplated.

The man who gets our goat is the fellow who asks us the meaning of day to day happenings in the FEDERAL TRADES COMMISSION hearing. You can't answer him—there is no answer. Lots of good newspaper headlines—but they don't mean anything.

SAM ROTHAFEL celebrates the fourth birthday of the Capitol this week. The big house opened with "THE MARK OF ZORRO"—and the celebration comes just when UNITED ARTISTS is putting that production back on the market with a flourish. Looks like a great follow-up bet for the exhibitor playing "ROBIN HOOD."

FRED J. BEECROFT has just returned from a motor trip through Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and a few other states. Reports that he found both THE NEWS and THE WORLD subscriber doing as well as could be expected.

Friday sees day and date opposition on the luncheon attractions. Fredman being honored at the Astor, and Baby Peggy holding a birthday celebration at the Ritz.

This Week

When is news not news but something else again? That is a problem that has entered the news weekly field and is going to take a lot of threshing out before it is finally settled. If you want to read a real modern "Romance of Business" don't miss the story in this issue about the Zev-Papyrus race and the pictorials' clash. Ex-Postmaster Generals would never do in the weekly field. When those boys get ambitious they'll have to go out and hire Foch and Pershing.

FRANK J. CARROLL
Of Colorado Pictures Corporation.

ERNEST FREDMAN, editor of The Film Renter, London, is in town. Comes in just as jovial and likeable as FRANK TILLEY on his entry. Hope he doesn't repeat the Tilley stunt of entering like a lamb and going out like a lion.

Met DOC SHALLENBERGER at the Astor. "Just back from a trip?" we asked. "Yes." "Just starting on another one?" we followed. "Yes." And then he added: "You have to keep moving in the picture business these days. No time to warm the chair."

JOHN W. McKEON, formerly of Mayflower, is in town as advance prophet of a new distributing plan. Something of a "zone showing" plan. Prints, advertising, and sales concentrated in one section—a grand clean-up, then on to the next territory.

HODKINSON announces the completion of a contract for HARRY CAREY'S next series. There hasn't been much talk about new product from Hodkinson lately, but they say this announcement is the first shot of a series.

SAM WARNER wants it known just as emphatically as advertising can make it that any exhibitor can book any Warner picture anywhere without having to take other product.

FRANK CARROLL has been away from New York so long that we are afraid some of you boys may be passing him on the street without nodding. So we went out to the office files and dug up the old cut to present herewith.

Frank has had a busy day on behalf of the Colorado Pictures Corporation and "The Birth of the West." Contract signing in abundance—and some important news to spring next week.

Just saw a real serviceable and snappy press book. Merritt Crawford the creator. "The Right of the Strongest" the picture. E. K. Lincoln the star. Also hear that Merritt did a great editing job on the film.

Nebraska M.P.T.O. Plans to Fight Unjust and High Taxes and Rates

EXHIBITORS and exchangemen to the number of more than 100 met at the Hotel Loyal in Omaha, Neb., in a two-days' session of the Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association of Nebraska, October 16 and 17.

Admission tax, music tax, insurance, and the relation of exchanges to exhibitors, were among the subjects freely discussed. As a result of the two days' session, a set of resolutions were adopted, providing for a campaign against the admission tax, the music tax, a campaign against high fire insurance rates for motion picture houses, approving "Movie Day," as set aside for November 16, endorsing the theatre owners' distribution corporation, and seeking means to bring down the prices of films.

Al Pramer, of Omaha, president of the association, opened the session the afternoon of October 16, by introducing Kelso A. Morgan, Omaha, attorney, who welcomed the picture men in behalf of Omaha.

The president then outlined some of the problems before the exhibitors, declaring that while the government had during the war placed the motion picture theatres among the most essential industries of the country because they were morale builders by keeping the public at home cheered up, the government had nevertheless not yet seen fit to remove the burdensome war taxes which Mr. Palmer said, 85 per cent. of the owners were absorbing themselves instead of charging back to the public. He suggested that some definite stand be taken on the matter of getting these taxes removed.

"Ethics in Salesmanship" was the subject of an address by C. R. Gilmour, Omaha manager of the Fox Film Corporation. Speaking for the Film Exchange Board of Trade, of which he is a member, he said, the board would tolerate only the cleanest of methods.

He admonished exhibitors not to take verbal promises from salesmen as a part of the contract. "You yourselves know that nothing will hold except what is on the contract, and when a man has given you everything he can, and writes it in the contract and then goes on making you verbal promises, stop him then and there, for you know he cannot do what he is promising.

"When your dates are booked full and a salesman from another house tries to get you to pull out dates and cancel some of the contracts to put his goods in, you are in duty bound to the industry to kick that man out of your theatre. Thus in your own hands lies the problem of clean selling."

The exhibitors seemed to take this talk as a kind of challenge. They refused to accept the proposition that it is entirely up to them to make clean salesmen out of the representatives of the exchanges. Mrs. R. W. Steen, of Atlantic, Ia., woman exhibitor, answering Mr. Gilmour, said that there are seven exchange salesmen calling on the houses at Atlantic, for example, "and," she said, "if we kicked out every one who tries to get us to pull dates and put in his product, we would only have three left out of the seven."

Eugene Blazier, Omaha attorney, who until recently represented the exchanges here, but now represents some exhibitors, told Mrs. Steen and the rest of the exhibitors his version of why salesmen use the high pressure methods. It was due to the intense competition and pressure from the branch offices and the producer. "When a picture is produced," he said, "the producer is badly in the hole, and the picture must sell at once or go on the rocks. The producer then gives the district manager his quota of $40,000 for example, assuming that the picture cost $1,000,000 to produce. The branch manager is told to sell his $40,000 in a given time or lose his job. The branch manager puts his salesmen out and gives each his particular quota with the same admonition to sell it quick or lose his job. They are pushed to use every method to get their goods sold to save their jobs.

Exchangemen sought the floor to answer Blazier, and C. E. Senning, of the Educational Film Co., pointed out that Mr. Blazier was until recently the paid attorney of the exchanges, "and be it known," he said, "while Mr. Blazier is talking of certain practises that anything done by the exchanges was until recently done under the sanction of Mr. Blazier."

C. R. Gilmour then denied Mr. Blazier's charges that the exchanges were putting any one on the "blue card" or threatening to do so. "It should be remembered," he said, "that the exchanges have three men who work hard every morning on the board of arbitration with three men of the exhibitors to straighten out cases that come before them. So don't get radical. You have an arbitration board to settle all differences. Let the board do it. We don't need lawsuits. We need arbitration. Let the exchanges help you. We'll fight your battles if you'll fight ours."

Mr. Blazier got the floor again to point out that while the exhibitors get a chance to meet at the arbitration board they do not meet in the Film Board of Trade, and the "exhibitors are nailed to the cross," he said.

President Pramer had to take matters in his own hands at this point to restore order, for men were on their feet in all parts of the house ready to debate either side of the question. The president drew attention to the fact that the meeting had started out to discuss taxation and had got badly switched off, and he gently drew them back again.

Philip A. Schlumberger, Denison, Ia., declared that in the palmiest days of the saloon, the saloon had never been taxed as the motion picture house is taxed today.

C. E. Senning reviewed his experience as one of a committee that made a fight in committee conference before the last Congress on the taxation question. "We made a plea for no tax on motion picture theatres charging 25 cents admission or less. We had made a good case, and thought we had a chance, when the circus people and the so-called 'legitimate' people went into conference with the committee and insisted on having all taxed or none taxed and the thing proved a boomerang on us when the circus people came in."

He advised that the fight be made on either the admission tax or the seat tax, instead of both at once.

Here it was pointed out by A. C. Smead, of Council Bluffs, that this tax brings the government a revenue of $70,000,000 a year and that experience has shown that it is hard to get a tax removed when once it has been shown to be a tax that produces handsome revenue. He warned the picture men that this means a real fight ahead of them.

"There is only one way to beat it," he said, "and that is to convince the congressmen and senators one by one, that their job depends upon the repeal of that tax. Then and then only will they listen. You know that many times the question has come up in Congress of placing a heavy tariff on Canadian wood pulp from which news print paper is made. But it has never been passed. Why not? Because the newspapers have to buy the paper made from the wood pulp and they do not want the tariff on it, and every one of the congressmen is afraid of the newspapers."

M. Stern, of Omaha, said the picture theatre man was the only business man he knew of who was compelled to pay a tax on his losses as well as on his profits. "When you have a bad week and lose a lot of money, you nevertheless pay taxes on every ticket sold," he said, "when you have a rainy or stormy night and only have a $.75 house, you nevertheless pay the government tax on even that $.75. I believe you should make it clear to Congress that you are perfectly willing to pay a tax on profits and a big tax on everything above a legitimate profit, but that you want to be relieved from paying taxes on your losses."

Speaking on "Independent Productions" Al Kahn, of the Crescent Federation of Film Exchanges, said for the first time in history the independents feel on a par with any of them, and that they are now putting out some of the best pictures in the field, which are being shown at the leading theatres in the country. He said many of the independents were putting on extensive advertising campaigns in the newspapers in the key cities and he advised the exhibitors to take advantage of these advertising campaigns which are placed so as to do the exhibitor the most good.

Discussing advertising and promotion of business for the picture house. C. H. Dumont, of New York, representing Warner Bros., said the exhibitor must advertise and exploit his business as any other line of business if he would keep the crowds coming to his theatre.

"Insurance" was discussed by John Alden Towers, of Kansas City, representing the Theater Inter-Insurance Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa. Flaws often creep into policies, he said, and so many of them that the exhibitors find after a loss, that he is not as completely covered as he thought he was.

Exhibitors Throughout the Union Back National Motion Picture Day

WITH practically every state in the union lined up solidly behind National Motion Picture Day, under the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which organization is sponsoring the event, is concentrating on a drive to furnish every theatre in the country with slides, campaign books and similar exploitation aids. There will be no lack of material placed in the hands of theatre owners whereby they can energetically promote public interest in their big celebration on November 19.

The Service Book

A twelve-page service book is being mailed to every theatre in which is covered every phase of the campaign. The front cover carries a reproduction of a calendar in a two-color effect, which calls attention to Monday, November 19, as National Motion Picture Day. The next page is devoted to an explanation of the purpose and general plan of the observance, stressing its importance and outlining briefly the high lights of an ideal campaign. Page three contains especially written letters to newspaper editors, mayors, merchants, civic clubs, city department heads and women's clubs. The exhibitors will use the suggested communications in securing the support of these officials and organizations.

Newspaper Campaign

The two pages following are devoted to a special campaign of newspaper publicity, with stories to cover every angle of the day's celebration as it appeals to public interest. The next two pages carry definite suggestions of exploitation and advertising. This includes ideas for fitting programs on the big day, together with suggestions for special music and similar features. A section is devoted to appropriate plans for the theatres, which includes lobby decorations and displays. A wealth of ideas are presented for street exploitation and a complete campaign of newspaper advertising is presented. An advanced drive is worked out and copy is suggested for a postcard and direct-by-mail campaign, as well as material for program announcements and contest ideas to be arranged in conjunction with newspapers.

Slides and Posters

The back cover of the book carries a reproduction of the slides and posters prepared by the national headquarters and the names of theatre owners composing the National Motion Picture Day Committee, of which William Bender, Jr., is chairman. A four-page spread in the center of the book is printed on a green stock and outlines the manner in which campaigns are being worked up by three state units, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Western Pennsylvania and Arkansas.

The other exploitation aids now being sent out include special posters and two series of slides, whereby the theatre owners can start their campaigns immediately and stimulate public interest during the time between now and November 19. It is understood that, as the day draws nearer, two separate folders containing supplementary exploitation ideas and suggestions will be furnished all theatre owners, as well as a series of letters of instructions and individual assistance.

Generally Approved

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is leaving no stone unturned in providing ways and means of putting over National Motion Picture Day. The campaign has already won its approval and support of between eight and ten thousand theatre owners. From all indications the movement, which has certainly won instantaneous approval, will prove the biggest thing ever attempted by the exhibitors in the history of the industry. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have inaugurated a comprehensive and complete service campaign, based on showmanship and the ideals of public service, which distinguish the movement.

Motor Trucks Aid

In New York City, the large fleet of motor trucks which daily deliver film to over 400 theatres throughout Greater New York and New Jersey, are carrying National Motion Picture Day banners. These will bear the message of the event to the public from now until November 19. This is the first shot of the campaign in New York and New Jersey, which promises to bring forth several startling innovations.

SPREADING THE GOSPEL OF MOTION PICTURE DAY

Fleets of trucks delivering film throughout New York and New Jersey carried the message, "Go to the Movies on Monday, November 19, National Motion Picture Day."

U. S. Bureau of Education Urges Teachers to Boom Exhibitor Day

ONE of the most important announcements concerning National Motion Picture Day on November 19 is given out from the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to the effect that the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior, Washington, through Dr. John J. Tigert, Commissioner of Education, is co-operating with the theatre owners in making the event an outstanding success. As American Education Week, in which the Bureau of Education is interested, will be observed November 18 to 24, inclusive, and National Motion Picture Day is to be held on November 19, the educational forces of the country and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are uniting their mutual interests for that date.

Writes to Schools

To achieve the highly desirable contact between local school authorities and the theatre owners in each community, the Commissioner of Education is writing to each and every superintendent of schools and high school principals throughout the entire country, urging them to immediately get in touch with the motion picture theatre owners in their respective localities toward the end of meeting the theatre owners and effecting a line of mutual service in carrying out the purpose of the week. A portion of one of these letters, from the commissioner, is quoted in the statement from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as follows:

Pupils to Be Told

"We respectfully suggest that you have all the teachers in your district call the attention of the pupils of the schools to the fact that National Motion Picture Day is being observed on Monday, November 19, in all the theatres of the United States and that on that day special attention will be given to our National Constitution, as part of the program of American Education Week. We will be pleased to have you make such suggestions to the theatre owners as will best serve our mutual purposes. Slides and other material to present this matter on the screen will be furnished by the theatre owners and you can co-operate with him in determining just what shall be placed on the same."

In addition to writing the above communication to all superintendents and high school principals, the Commissioner of Education is sending a letter to every theatre owner in the country expressing his gratification that the theatre owners, through the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, are so deeply interested in the patriotic and constructive work of the Bureau of Education, and complimenting the theatre owners on their policies of public service and co-operation in all such matters of national importance. Commissioner Tigert concludes his letter with the following words:

"I am writing to the school superintendents and high school principals all over the United States to co-operate with the theatre owners in this matter. No doubt, you will be visited by your local superintendent and school principal. I hope that the arrangements you make with them to help further the high purposes of American Education Week will be mutually satisfactory."

Letters to Exhibitors

In order to emphasize the importance and value of this contact with the United States Bureau of Education, a letter is being sent to every exhibitor in the country from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as follows:

"This is to advise you that the United States Bureau of Education, of which Dr. John J. Tigert is commissioner, is now engaged in promoting the observance of American Education Week, November 18 to 24, inclusive.

"It is our desire, and no doubt you share with us that patriotic feeling, to have every theatre owner in the United States co-operate with the United States Bureau of Education and the state and city superintendents and school authorities generally in making this movement a pronounced success.

"We know you will co-operate. During this period on Monday, November 19, we celebrate National Motion Picture Day and you no doubt have arranged special programs for that day. You can add to this program such elements of the Education Week plans as the school authorities of your locality and yourself agree upon.

Cohen Co-operates

"The United States Bureau of Education has communicated directly with every school superintendent in the United States and requested them to co-operate with the motion picture theatre men in this relation. You may expect a visit from your school superintendent; please give him the best line of screen co-operation you can.

"We will supply some slides and other forms of screen publicity and you can arrange for others with the proper local features yourself. We will be pleased to keep you further advised on the matter and earnestly hope you will do everything in your power to aid the cause of education in this connection."

This letter is jointly signed by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; William Bender, Jr., chairman of the National Motion Picture Day Committee, and M. J. O'Toole, national chairman of the Public Service Department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The undersigned hereby heartily endorses the celebration of NATIONAL MOTION PICTURE DAY, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19th, 1923, and agrees to give twenty-five per cent (25%) of his gross receipts on that day to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the protection and advancement of the interests of the motion picture theatre owner.

New Jersey Theatre Co-operation Assured for Motion Picture Day

THE board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey met in regular meeting at the Hotel Stacy-Trent, Trenton, N. J., on Wednesday, October 17. In attendance were R. F. Woodhull, Joseph Seider, Henry P. Nelson, William Keegan, Charles Hildinger, Peter Adams, Sidney Samuelson, Arthur B. Smith, Ben Shindler and A. J. Moeller. Luncheon was served in the Princeton room. A business session followed.

Activities as they relate to National Motion Picture Day were reviewed and a definite policy as it relates to the celebration of that day was determined upon.

Plan Mass Meetings

Mass meetings will be held throughout the state during the ensuing two weeks, one of these to be held in Trenton of all of the exhibitors in Mercer County on Thursday, October 24, at the Hotel Stacy-Trent, Trenton, N. J. Theatre owners attending will be the guests of Charles Hildinger, of Trenton, at a luncheon at the Hotel Stacy-Trent on that day. Mr. Hildinger is a member of the board of directors and one of the leaders in the National Motion Picture Day movement in New Jersey.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss fully all legislative activities, National Motion Picture Day and numerous other matters of importance to New Jersey theatre owners.

The plan of procedure with regard to National Motion Picture Day is a powerful one. New Jersey is taking the campaign direct to the public in a tremendously big and constructive way.

Realize Opportunity

Following the establishing of a public service policy, New Jersey is tying up with National Motion Picture Day. New Jersey realizes the tremendous strength of the greatest medium for publicity in the world—their screen—which is the link between the theatre and the public, and as a result are building an important campaign around it, having adopted the slogan: "TALK DIRECTLY FROM YOUR SCREEN."

They are going to use National Motion Picture Day as an opportunity for building up a close and cordial relationship between the theatre owner and their public. They are going to show the people their sincere purpose of gratifying the public's wish as regards entertainment. They are going to be able to meet the public on a common ground of service and pave the way for the public to appreciate their problems and, in return, help the theatre owners solve them.

Concretely, New Jersey is preparing a series of slides. Get that—not a slide but a series of slides. They're going to explain what National Motion Picture Day is, and what it means. Then they're going to follow along making National Motion Picture Day mean something, by asking the public what they like and what they want. That's the constructive effort, stripped of all superfluous words.

Explanatory Slides

The slides will explain the purpose of the campaign. The next step will actually secure the public's opinion. This will be done by passing out blanks at every performance upon which patrons are asked to indicate in writing what kind of pictures they like and want; if they prefer comedies, comedy dramas or dramas, etc. What kind of picture the children like, and similar questions which will give the theatre owners a general idea of the attitude of their patrons, in order that they may be in a position to give consideration to the wishes of the majority.

All this is directly tied up to National Motion Picture Day. Consider what vast possibilities the idea affords. Consider the talk which will be stimulated among the people. Consider the publicity National Motion Picture Day will receive. It's immense—it's right in line with the day.

To carry out the campaign, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey has appointed fifty additional theatre owners as members of the National Motion Picture Day committee for New Jersey. These are in addition to the Congressional District chairmen who are already appointed and hard at work.

Resolutions were adopted tendering the use of the screens of the State of New Jersey for the purpose of furthering National Education Week—week of November 18. Resolutions offering co-operation of the roll call campaign of the American Red Cross on November 12 by displaying slides, the Red Cross flag and otherwise assisting this worthy institution.

Rosenthal a Director

Louis Rosenthal, of East Orange, was elected a member of the board of directors to fill the unexpired term of Samuel Sobelson.

Means of procedure as it relates to state legislative activities were determined upon, as the Legislature convenes on January 16, and New Jersey is determined to combat all adverse legislation and see that some favorable legislation for theatre owners is procured.

Joseph Seider, chairman of the board of directors, presided. The next meeting of the board will be held in New York City at the Hotel Astor, on November 2. The directors on this occasion will be the guests of Joseph Seider, chairman of the board of directors, at a luncheon. Other members of the board tendered similar invitations to the board of directors to hold meetings in their respective cities as their guests.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Pledge a Quarter of Big Day's Receipts

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn held a regular meeting on Friday, October 19, 1923, at the Hotel St. George. Following a luncheon a business session was held, at which R. Sanders presided. Several matters of importance came before the meeting and considerable progress was reported.

The operators' situation was thoroughly discussed, and notwithstanding certain reports that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn are having difficulties with Local 306 of the Operators' Union, denial was made that any fight between the two organizations is on, it having been stated that any slight misunderstanding between the members of the Brooklyn Theatre Owners and Local 306 would be adjusted without difficulty.

The following resolution was adopted indorsing National Motion Picture Day:

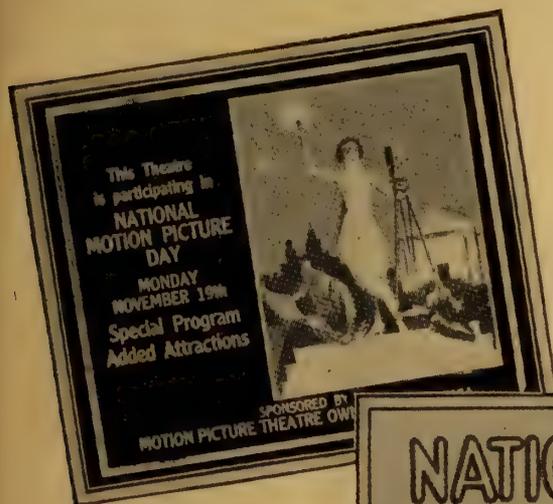

"Whereas, the Motion Picture

Theatre Owners of Brooklyn have directly participated in the benefits accruing to theatre owners generally through the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and

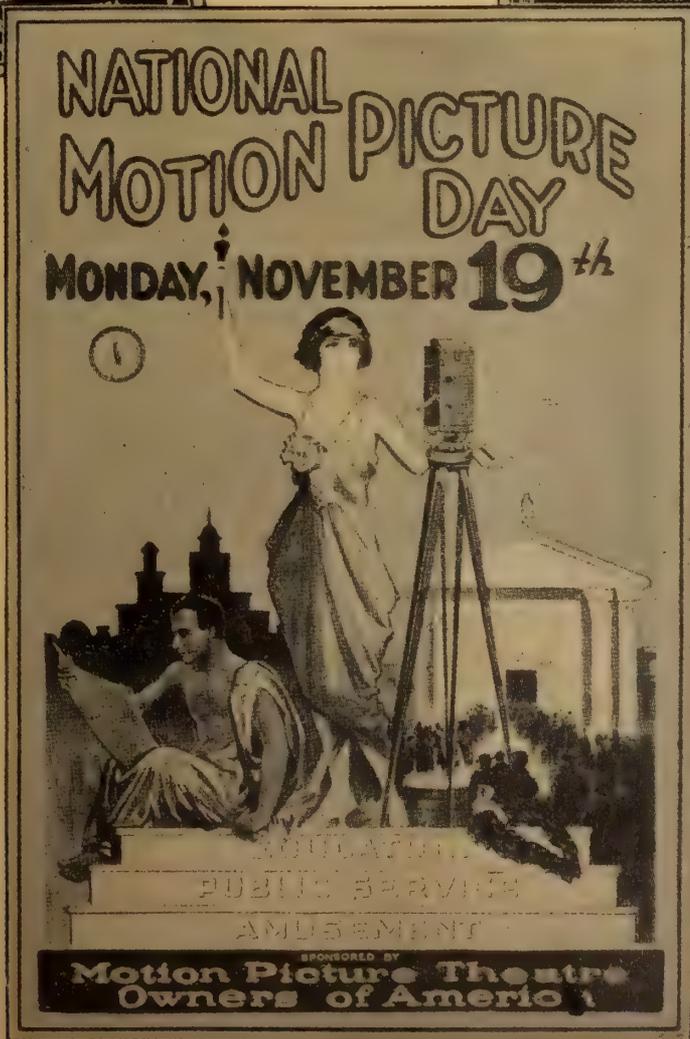

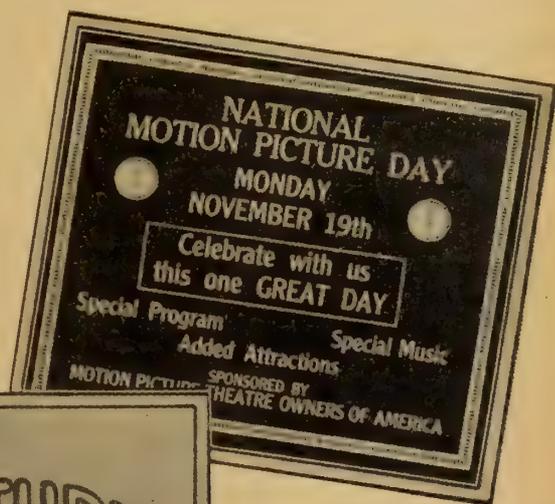

"Whereas, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have designated Monday, November 19, as National Motion Picture Day for the purpose of continuing their activities for and in behalf of the motion picture theatre owners throughout the United States.

"Therefore be it resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn, in meeting assembled on this 19th day of October, 1923, do hereby heartily indorse National Motion Picture Day and pledge themselves to give twenty-five per cent. of the gross receipts on that day to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America."

The following National Motion Picture Day Committee was appointed: Messrs. Rosenthal, Schiffmann, Rosen and Phillips.

Implements of War Called Into Play As Rival Cameramen Film Horse Race

ALL the thrills of a military campaign attended the filming, by different motion picture companies, of the Zev-Papyrus international horse race last Saturday. Pathe paid a reported sum of $38,000 for the privilege of officially filming the race, after Pathe's competitors had declined to bid, arguing that they, as well as the newspapers, should be permitted to "report" the race gratis. These rivals of the privileged organization, however, did not sit back with folded arms and philosophize, and to hinder in every possible way their attempts to film the race, Belmont Park assumed the appearance of the Marne front. Smoke pots were set off around a tree in which "uninvited" cameramen were discovered, gigantic reflecting mirrors mounted on trucks flashed to foil other prying camera eyes, guards stood at all the gates to turn back disguised rival cameramen, and an aeroplane overhead laid a smoke screen to frustrate the efforts of competing 'planes. Guerilla warfare, you might call it.

The result was that clever ruses enabled all the companies to photograph the race. Sept cameras concealed in the handbags of actresses was one of the stunts that succeeded for Fox News. International News recalled the storming of Babylon by rushing observation towers on motor trucks up to and overlooking the inclosure. Kinograms "shot" from a house outside the park and also got cameramen by the eagle-eyed spotters at the gates.

The following stories tell just what each company did, in its own words. Certainly they are interesting tales of a spectacular matching of wits and initiative, and well worth reading.

Pathe Accomplishes Its Herculean Task

WHEN America's champion race-horse, Zev, passed under the wire ahead of the English Papyrus at the Belmont race-track last Saturday afternoon, October 20, camera work was being completed on a screen production which in point of box-office value and historic significance surpasses anything of its kind ever attempted before. With the final glorious dash of the American monarch of the turf across the finish line amid the acclaim of over 60,000 frenzied race fans, twenty Pathe cameramen ceased their nerve-racking task of recording the first international horse-race ever held in America.

One herculean task had been completed—and with rare success—but another of equally colossal proportions was just starting, the task of developing the precious negatives and distributing prints as fast as human ingenuity could make possible to waiting screens all over the world. Within a few moments after the close of the race, aeroplanes in a nearby field soared aloft with one set of negatives, bound for pre-arranged destinations. One of these headed for the open sea and set out in pursuit of the S.S. Leviathan, which had left its New York berth fully six hours before bound for Europe. By the end of the week, London, Paris, and possibly Rome will be witnessing Pathe's pictures of the great American turf classic. Another set of negatives was loaded aboard waiting autos, which preceded by an escort of motorcycle police, to assure right of way along the entire route, tore at top speed to the Pathe laboratory in New Jersey.

Before midnight, two aeroplanes supplied with prints left the New Jersey plant for Chicago and Cleveland, distributing centers for the Middle West. Before dawn special messengers started for Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, with ample quotas of prints. The distributing field, accustomed to feats of extraordinary speed, had never accomplished such marvels. By Sunday evening every key city from the Atlantic Coast line to Chicago was showing Pathe's exclusive picturization of the Zev-Papyrus race.

The Pathe special is in two reels and is the most comprehensive picture of its kind ever filmed. When arrangements were effected whereby Pathe secured exclusive rights to film the event, the Pathe representative in England was cabled to secure motion pictures of all the highlights of Papyrus' career—his sire and dam, English methods of breeding and training race horses, and the recent English Derby in which Papyrus was the victor. All these views were incorporated in the two-reel special of the race, distributed by Pathe.

Exactly the same procedure was followed with relation to Zev. Pictures of his sire and dam, the American method of breeding and training race horses, and the Kentucky Derby showing Zev the winner were also incorporated in the special. Thus the Pathe picture embodies, with many spectacular touches, a comparative screen study of horse-racing methods here and abroad and resumes of the careers of America's and England's most outstanding three-year-olds.

During the entire training period, a staff of eight Pathe cameramen were kept constantly at the Belmont race tracks, covering every phase of the training of the two contestants. When it is stated that the Belmont race park is some sixty acres in area and that both stables conducted the training of their charges with the greatest possible secrecy, the tremendous task confronting the Pathe cameramen becomes apparent. The cameramen had to watch and wait, making the best of their opportunities when either horse was in the open. There was no way of knowing when either horse was to be taken out on the course, nor where nor how long he was to remain in action. Only the immediate attendants of each horse were "in the know," and their impenetrable shroud of secrecy made a military censorship shrivel like an open confession.

Unfavorable weather conditions at times and the presence of some hundred other race-horses in training at the track each day added to the difficulties. Despite these handicaps, the Pathe cameramen succeeded by dint of unceasing vigilance and constant effort, extending over a period of three weeks, in acquiring a comprehensive record of the training of both thoroughbreds. These views are also shown for the first time in the two-reel special.

The recording of the race itself was a feat of generalship and co-ordination never before equalled in the history of screen journalism. The entire Pathe camera force arrived on the field at 9 o'clock in the morning after being conveyed with full equipment from the Pathe home-office in a convoy of fifteen automobiles. A police escort accompanied the convoy, expediting the speedy passage of cars throughout the entire route. Upon arriving at the park the cameramen immediately took up their posts at the pre-arranged locations in the enclosure and along the home-stretch.

Ten special stands erected in the infield covered definite portions of the track. One huge stand, twenty-five feet in height, situated in the center of the oval, provided a continuous and uninterrupted view of the entire race course. A force of 550 detectives and guards patrolled the park in addition to the large detail of police. This entire force were under strict orders to confiscate all motion picture cameras found on the grounds, except those being operated by the Pathe cameramen. These arrangements, designed to enforce Pathe's exclusive rights to film the event, were carried out with dispatch throughout the day.

Every type of up-to-the-minute camera and camera accessory was included in the Pathe equipment for the occasion. Nothing was spared in the way of expense or effort that would make for perfect photography. Two weeks before Pathe's staff of camera experts had gone over the entire ground and after tests with special lenses and other apparatus had selected the best vantage points for the location of the camera stands. Only one thing was left to chance—the weather—and that fortunately was perfect for camera purposes.

Nothing was missed by the formidable battery of Pathe cameramen. From the very first appearance of Zev and Papyrus in the paddock to the final glorious moments when Zev, with Earl Sande up, crossed the finish line and was surrounded by the screaming, surging masses of delight-maddened fans, the Pathe cameras—regulation, Aikley and slow-motion—clicked on unceasingly, the expert hands on the revolving cranks cool, steady, unflinching amid the hurricane of emotion, intent on one thing alone—the recording of these historic moments for the entertainment of millions everywhere, who impatiently await to see how an American horse met a royal British racer and beat him at the sport of kings.

Fox News Triumphs Over All Obstacles

TO what lengths William Fox will go to protect the users of his news service and to bring to them the news pictures to which they are entitled without extra charge, is strikingly illustrated by the manner in which Fox News presented its patrons with the results of the great Zev-Papyrus race at Belmont Park, New York, last Saturday.

Fox News secured magnificent news pictures covering this event, including the actual running of the race, and gave this as a part of its regular service to Fox News patrons without extra cost—and was first in the theatres, at that.

The film covering the Zev-Papyrus race was no mere apologetic flash of a few feet in order to claim that the event was covered; it was a real picture of 1,100 feet, showing the race in every detail and covering it from every angle. The enormous sum of $30,000 was expended by Fox News in order to insure that this event reached its patrons as a part of the service to which they are entitled.

For two weeks before the great race actually took place, plans were made for recording this event with all the care and attention to detail of a military campaign. Belmont Park, where the race was held, was examined thoroughly and all its vantage points noted. Most elaborate plans were laid for covering every foot of the track with squads of cameramen operating standard equipment. Thus it resulted that when the two horses went to the post for the contest, which was to determine whether the premier turf laurel rested with America or went to England, Fox News cameramen were in a position to make an absolutely complete record of this great sporting event, toward which the eyes of two continents were turned.

Twenty-five experienced cameramen were used in all, and these were assisted by fifty lay helpers. The services of ten big touring cars were enlisted, as well as six motorcycle sidecars and three enormous moving van trucks. In addition to this, two aeroplanes, bearing trained cameramen, covered the event from the air for Fox News. One main squad of cameramen was stationed to the left of the race course, looking from the grand stand. Two other squads were located at the right at various distances. Four other batteries of cameramen were placed at various intervals between these three main locations outside the track, so that every inch of the course was adequately covered by standard cameras every minute during the race.

Within the oval inclosure two other cameramen were stationed and slow-motion cameras were not overlooked. These, with the two cameramen shooting from the air and several accessory smaller cameras placed at various points, gave Fox News a magnificent assortment of film from which to select, as is well attested by the splendid picture of the race with which it was able to serve its patrons.

Now as to results. How successfully the arrangements had been made to expedite the handling of the Fox News film on this great sporting event was soon apparent. Each cameraman had been carefully instructed as to where he was to take the film which he secured; a rendezvous had been made with a waiting high-speed vehicle to convey this film to the Fox studios in New York.

By 5:15 p. m. Saturday the first film had arrived at the laboratories.

At 6:00 p. m. the first batch of film began emerging from the laboratories.

At 6:30 p. m. all takes had been run on the screen for cutting and editing.

At 8:15 p. m. the film covering the entire subject was in the laboratory for finishing.

At 9:15 p. m., just one hour later, the first print was out of the laboratory, followed by others immediately thereafter. Special touring cars were waiting to rush these prints to the big Broadway theatres and the various theatres of the Fox circuit, in order to be able to show these pictures first to their patrons.

At 9:30 p. m. Saturday the Capitol Theatre in New York presented the Fox News pictures of the race—a complete splendid news covering of this event.

During Saturday only the Fox News picture was used at the Capitol and in many of the other theatres which had received this print first of all. Other prints came in during the evening and for the Sunday shows theatres which subscribe to several services made up composite prints, after their usual custom.

Between 9:15 p. m. Saturday and 1:30 the next morning a full quota of prints had been finished and distributed by Fox News, and those shipped by the post had been placed in the United States mails for distribution to every part of the country.

At the first early showings Sunday the Fox picture was displayed to the audiences in the principal theatres in New York, Philadelphia, Newark, Rochester, Buffalo and Syracuse.

Fox News had determined that the Zev-Papyrus race would be presented as a part of its regular service to its patrons, presented in splendid completeness and presented first. It kept its word.

International Displays Skilful Strategy

BELIEVING that a news reel is obligated to supply its clients with pictures of any great news event, whether the promoters of the event hope to make it an exclusive affair or not, the International News Reel Corporation laid plans to procure, and did obtain, exceptional pictures of the celebrated "race of the century," between Zev and Papyrus, at Belmont Park last Saturday. These pictures were taken despite every effort made to prevent the International News Reel Corporation from getting them.

The results of International's efforts were so excellent that a 400-foot subject was obtained and shipped to all theatres booking the International News. These pictures went out as a pre-release issue of International News No. 87, at no increase in cost to the exhibitor. They show the race from start to finish, as well as sidelight views of the crowds, the jockeys, and close-ups of the horses. They were shipped to all International first-run patrons during the evening following the race.

They reached Broadway theatres in time for the second show Saturday, and on Sunday more than thirty big New York theatres were using the International News shots. These theatres included the Capitol, Rialto, Loew's State, Olympia, Fox's Audubon and Fox's Academy, the Sheridan, Farragut, Stone, Claremont, 79th Street, Plaza, Bluebird, and the following Loew houses: Metropolitan, Victory, Palace, Orpheum, 83d Street, and State of Newark.

International's success in getting such good pictures of the race was due to a bit of strategy worthy of a high military command. Edgar B. Hatrick, the general manager, was in command. Permits were obtained quietly to erect camera stands in several of the best locations just outside of Belmont Park. The stands were not constructed there, however. They were built secretly several blocks away from the race track and mounted on huge trucks like the ancient assault towers used against Babylon.

The trucks were rushed to the selected locations just before the race and too late for the race-track detectives to devise means of putting them out of commission. This surprise attack bewildered those opposing International's work. As a result excellent pictures were obtained of the racing thoroughbreds at several of the critical points of the race—the first and second turns.

Meanwhile other International cameramen had entered the park in disguise, with cameras concealed in automobiles or under coats. These men successfully filmed the race, made shots of the crowd and other close-ups.

The various means taken by the race-track detectives to interfere with International included canvas screens, smoke screens and mirrors reflecting dazzling sunlight. They were futile, however.

Kinograms Also Outwits Its Opponents

DUPLICATING the service furnished regular Kinograms subscribers on the Japanese earthquake, the Kinogram Publishing Corporation, through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., provided their New York customers with prints of the great international race between Zev and Papyrus on the evening of the day of the race, beating other advertised "Specials" to the screen, and showing in four of New York's big first-run houses, as well as four in Newark, on Saturday evening.

The Kinograms racing scenes, all taken on the day of the race, were showing at the Rivoli, Rialto, Capitol and Stanley Theatres, all in the Times Square district of New York, at the 9 o'clock performances of these theatres. The Branford, Rialto, Strand and Goodwin, in Newark, also had the Kinograms racing scenes on their screens at the 9 o'clock show.

As with the scenes of the Japanese disaster, no extra charge was made for these scenes or for this service, as Captain George McL. Baynes, head of Kinogram Publishing Corporation, believes that subscribers to a news reel are entitled to scenes of any news event without extra charge, just as newspaper readers and subscribers are entitled to the big news of the day in their daily papers without extra charge. The scenes of the great race form part of the current issue of Kinograms, and are furnished without extra charge to all Kinograms subscribers.

Alexander Surveys Industry; Tells How to Solve Problems

WILLIAM ALEXANDER returned to New York this week after two months spent on a nation wide investigation of distribution conditions for Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation. He spent several weeks in Los Angeles and, in going and coming, met with exhibitors in over twenty cities and towns throughout the country.

Mr. Alexander is recognized as one of the most practical sales executives in the industry. His experience dates back to the opening of the first Fox exchange outside of New York City. He was later general representative for the United States and subsequently named by both South America and Great Britain for that organization. Mr. Alexander is therefore well qualified to consider conditions on a comprehensive scale and his report issued in the form of a statement by the Anderson office is worthy of careful consideration.

There is no question but that as a class the exhibitors are fairly ill-informed. It is inevitable that the tremendous production costs of the post-war period should result in a corresponding increase in the so-called exhibitor values passed on to the exhibitors in the form of higher rentals. It is high time that in planning production one considered the potential buying power of the public. The exhibitors give close attention to the requirements of the exhibitor and to the facts which his business experience is bringing to light every day. This was brought home to me authoritatively by the tremendous increase the feature owners are showing in the amount of money they loan Anderson Pictures Corporation, which indicates this organization has regard for the exhibitor's requirements. The general impression expressed in the history of the industry exists today in the organization which will handle dual first class exchange business on a basis of ready advance terms and widespread availability of distribution.

Production costs are inflated, gross values are low. Producers and distributors alike have exaggerated the benefits of business volume and as usual the theatre owners are bearing the brunt of the blame.

By no stretch of imagination is it true that the industry would prosper at present conditions of sales. A pessimistic would be more balanced than an optimistic observer. But I do contend that, in looking back, the understanding producers and exhibitors should have a deeper understanding of the market. They should be guided more in the treatment of business conditions and prospects than by last experience and habit. They should serve the market instead of having the market serve them. They should understand the business big picture at wonderful opportunities exist at some seasons and times that they are doing at the present time, with no regard of aid or effort. It is a question of volume, in sensible proportions placed upon the commercial elements going into it.

The story is the thing. A business story may cost a million dollars and it would not be a profitable piece of entertainment. An interesting story, presented in a simple and suitable picture at interesting prices of rental value and at reasonable grosser would have possibility for big picture profits. Such are the means which will serve the requirements of all business irrespective of size or position, on a scale suitable that will make them invisible in the exhibitors' eye, in the procedure to have the gross figures necessary to assure the producer of his profit.

"The industry, like every other industry, is governed by certain fundamental laws of economics. But the motion picture industry, divided into its several parts, a course of experimenting and over-testing, has largely disregarded many of these basic laws. It has largely overlooked the most important link in the chain—the theatre owner. This link is today the weakest. It needs strengthening by careful attention and actual service. I think that's just what Anderson Pictures Corporation is geared up to do. That is the fundamental policy of our organization, our plan, platform and plan."

South America Busy

Rio de Janeiro Opening 4 New Houses; Chances for American Equipment

Washington, D. C.—Several opportunities for American manufacturers of theatre equipment exist in Rio de Janeiro, according to advice just received by the Department of Commerce from Brazil. Four moving picture theatres are about to be built in that city, the report states, to be constructed along the most modern lines and using the latest types of furnishings and theatre equipment. The capacity of each house will be in the neighborhood of 1,000 persons, and manufacturers of theatre equipment who may be interested can secure further particulars concerning the project from the Consular Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington, or from any of the district or consular offices of the Bureau.

Moving pictures are a very popular form of entertainment in Brazil, with American films predominating on the screen. Sao Paulo, the second largest city of the country, has twenty picture houses open seven days a week, with direct to twenty thousand paid admissions daily. Moving picture exhibitors of the better class in Brazil, according to Consul F. M. Lawton, have passed the cowboy stage and are best suited dramas taken from real life. Serial films are common, but only as interludes of historical facts, and not too extended.

Ruby Advanced by Pathe

The announcement of C. J. Ruby's appointment as branch manager of the Pathe office in Cleveland was contained in a statement issued this week from the Pathe home office. The assignment of Mr. Ruby to take charge of the Cleveland office is the culmination of a career of meritorious service under the Pathe banner.

Ince Denies Rumor

Thomas H. Ince has no intention of entering the field of theatrical production, despite a report which was recently published that he intended to stage a big musical comedy. He states:

"My interests are centered in motion pictures and I am entirely too busy producing big dramatic pictures to devote any of my time to theatrical production. The report may have been inspired by the fact that I have recently negotiated for the purchase of some big plays. These plays are for pictures."

HARRY SCOTT
New Feature Sales Manager for Pathe

New Pathe Officer

Harry Scott Succeeds W. B. Frank as Feature Sales Manager

An important trade announcement from the Pathe home office this week brings news of the appointment of Harry Scott to succeed W. B. Frank as feature sales manager at Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Scott will enter upon his new duties Monday, October 23, at which time Mr. Frank takes over his new work as eastern representative of the Hal E. Koch studios.

Before becoming associated with the motion picture field, Mr. Scott was for a number of years identified with the theatrical field and served as press agent for the Kinging Brothers Circus for five years, during which time he traveled to every part of the country and made fast friends in the show circles.

His first affiliation in the film industry was with George Kleine, for whom he managed branch offices in Columbus, O., Dallas, Texas, Philadelphia, Pa., eventually becoming eastern division sales manager of the Kleine organization. His next connection was with Columbia for whom he acted as special representative. Later he joined First National and managed its Detroit office for four years, resigning to become branch manager for Pathe in the same city. He returned to New York to become local manager of the Vitaphone Film Exchange office and here was made manager of distribution at the Ritz Carlton Pictures.

Baby Peggy in New York

Baby Peggy Montgomery, the world famous movie starlet, has arrived in New York. This is her first trip east and not only does it mark her initial entrance into Gotham, but marks the celebration of her birthday. The little star, who is now under the Paramount Pictures Corporation banner for a period of years, was accompanied by her parents, Mr. and Miss Jack Montgomery, her seven and more. They are residing at the Bellevue during their stay east.

King on Vacation

Edwin C. King, general manager of the Paramount Long Island studios, is at White Sulphur Springs, Va., for a short vacation. He made his trip in his car and was accompanied by his family.

Michigan Convention Establishes Record for Striking Achievements

Attendance Mark Exceeded—Denniston Elected President—Members Pledge $10,000

HANGING up a record of accomplishments that it has never before equaled, the Jackson convention closed officially Wednesday night, the most remarkable gathering of motion picture theatre owners ever held in Michigan. Despite the fact that all phases of the industry were present, despite the fact that the problems were many and varied, there was not one discordant note struck during the entire three days' gathering.

And as the best evidence that the Theatre Owners of Michigan intend to maintain their title as "the greatest exhibitor organization in the world," on Tuesday afternoon, without perceptible effort or without the slightest coercion, $10,002.50 as voluntary pledges to the organization were made.

Representatives of trade publications, old timers in organization work, were unanimous in their statements that the Jackson meeting will go down in history as the greatest meeting they ever had the privilege of attending.

Joseph R. Denniston, old timer in exhibitor organization in Michigan and one of the best loved exhibitors in the organization, was the unanimous choice of the convention for the next president, taking up the work so admirably carried on by W. S. McLaren, of Jackson.

Jackson welcomed the exhibitors of Michigan with open arms. Not a stone was left unturned to make the stay a pleasant one, and that they were successful was evident on every hand.

The outstanding features of the convention were the compromise conference between representatives of the association and J. C. Rosenthal, Mr. Hartman and Mr. Dentz, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, over the Music Tax; the comprehensive plans for assistance on the Admission Tax matter as handled by Claude E. Cady; the assurance given by C. C. Pettijohn, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, that Michigan would be given relief from the non-theatrical booking menace; the comprehensive outline of a program for the building of public good will in Michigan, and the excellent financial standing of the association.

The new officers and directors of the association for the coming year are:

J. R. Denniston, Monroe, President.
Phil Gleichman, Detroit, Vice-President.
H. T. Hall, Detroit, Secretary.
John E. Niebes, Detroit, Treasurer.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Sam Ackerman, Detroit.
Bert R. Williams, Detroit.
Paul Schlossman, Muskegon.
Vernon Locey, Howell.
W. S. McLaren, Jackson.
James C. Ritter, Detroit.
Claude E. Cady, Lansing.
W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek.
Charles Q. Carlisle, Saginaw.
A. J. Kleist, Pontiac.
G. A. Cross, Battle Creek.

The address of welcome was given by Leland S. Bisbee, city attorney of Jackson, and E. R. Linabury, manager of the Jackson Chamber of Commerce. G. A. Cross then read the report of the Auditing and Budget Committee. The report was that of a certified public accountant and showed that although the organization had had the most active year in its history, had grossed over $32,000 and expended $25,000, and still had a balance of $6,222.09. Mr. Cross went into details regarding this report, explaining each and every item, analyzing the report for the benefit of each member.

J. C. Rosenthal, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, who the night before had held a conference with J. R. Denniston, James C. Ritter and the manager, explained in detail regarding the music tax and the object of the tax. It was finally decided that this matter be left entirely in the hands of Mr. Richey and Mr. Dentz, of the society. Phil Gleichman read the report of the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws and several amendments to the Constitution were made.

Tuesday afternoon was an interesting session. F. G. Minisky, of the Mill Mutuals Company, outlined the fire insurance tie-up. Mr. Burhans, of the same company, explained the importance of expiration dates being furnished, and A. E. Harv, of the General Accident Company, outlined in detail the compensation and public liability tie-up.

H. M. Richey reported the progress on the non-theatrical situation, which, in brief, was that exhibitors who were being unfairly dealt with would be taken care of if they would notify the association office and that the matter would be handled by the association.

The next report was that of the manager, H. M. Richey, who outlined in detail the accomplishments of the association. He pointed out that the showing was only possible through the excellent co-operation and support given, and made suggestions relative to a comprehensive program of public good will on the admission tax, non-theatrical situations, etc. Mr. Richey was given a rising vote of thanks.

One of the interesting features of the convention was the address of Claude E. Cady on the Admission Tax. Mr. Cady read a very carefully prepared analysis of the situation and pointed out among other things that the tax was a war measure, and therefore was made severe; that in 55 per cent. of the cases the theatre owners had absorbed the tax; that the public was having this burden reflected in poorer pictures; that pool halls did not have a tax to pay; that music halls were exempt because they tended to raise music standard; that the seat tax had been raised 100 per cent. and that taxes had been lifted off, passes, when they would apply to the man who has to pay his admission.

Blair McElroy, member of the firm of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, who have interests in Michigan, was right on the job to take charge of the dues proposition. An efficient committee, consisting of Mr. McElroy, Mr. Butterfield, Mr. Locey, Mr. Ritter and Mr. Baehr, handled the matter. In less than twenty minutes $10,002.50 was pledged. Scores of exhibitors doubled their pledge. A list of the pledges is attached.

The banquet Tuesday night was a colorful event. At the speaker's table and called on during the evening were President McLaren, J. R. Denniston, toastmaster; Lieutenant Governor Thomas R. Reed, Congressman Robert Clancy, Congressman A. B. Williams, John I. Gibson, of Battle Creek; Charles C. Pettijohn, legal counsel for the Hays organization; Judge Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel of the Michigan organization, and Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland.

Entertainment was furnished by the Carrell Theatrical Agency, of Chicago, including the seven Brown Sisters, Three Buddies, with three beautiful solo numbers by Mrs. Charles Carrell, of Chicago. Music was also furnished by the Capitol Theatre Orchestra.

In his address Mr. Pettijohn paid tribute to the Michigan organization and deplored "the lack of national association." He discussed mutual problems in a straightforward manner, paying special stress to production and distribution costs, which he said were being lowered.

Judge Murphy delivered his farewell word to the organization, inasmuch as he will assume his duties on the bench January 1. He spoke of the place of the exhibitor in the industry, and showed that he has made a careful study of the exhibitor problems.

Who Denniston Is

Joseph R. Denniston, of Monroe, new president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, comes from a town of 12,000. He has been a director of the organization for four years, and by virtue of that experience is thoroughly conversant with the working of the organization. He has played as active a part in the affairs of the association during that time as any member, and holds the record for fidelity at attending directors' meetings.

Mr. Denniston is a fine example of a smaller town showman, assuming the responsibility in his community that he should. He is past president of the Exchange Club of Monroe, is at the present time president of the Monroe Building and Loan Association, and recently had the acceptance or refusal of the honor of nomination for mayor of Monroe tendered him by the biggest men of Monroe, which honor he declined because of his other civic activities.

The Family Theatre, of which he is president and manager, is a fine type of playhouse, a credit to the community and a community center.

He paid high tribute to the association and its work, to the board of directors who were carrying it on, and to Mr. Richey, its manager. Seldom has an address made such a profound impression on the exhibitors of Michigan as Judge Murphy gave, and there were many dimmed eyes when he finished.

After the banquet, an entertainment at the Capitol Theatre, followed by two sparring bouts, was arranged by Mr. McLaren.

Wednesday morning the entire convention assembled were guests of Harry L. Hulburt and Chaplin Hopp, of the Jackson Prison, at a ham and egg breakfast at the prison farm.

The session of Wednesday afternoon was opened by a discussion on the uniform contract by Judge Murphy, with short addresses by Mr. Shreck, of the Exhibitors' Herald; Mr. Mason, Motion Picture News; W. E. Wilkinson, Film Board of Trade; Jacob Smith, Michigan Film Review, and the election of officers. Following the election, Saginaw was selected as the next meeting place.

The following resolutions were passed at the convention: Resolution of thanks to President W. S. McLaren, the Board of Directors, General Manager H. M. Richey, the City of Jackson, Leeland S. Bisbee, Mr. Linabury, Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland; Warden Harry Hulburt and Chaplain Hopp, Judge Alfred J. Murphy, the Entertainment Committee for the ladies, and resolutions relative to the music tax, non-theatrical booking, misleading press agent stories and authorizing a membership campaign.

Special interest during the convention was given to the public good will program as outlined by Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland. Mrs. Derr believes in the approval of good pictures, forgetting the poor ones, and her talk was a big hit at the convention.

The ladies attending the convention had a royal good time arranged for them by President McLaren, including a luncheon given by the Capitol Theatre on Tuesday, a theatre party at the Majestic Theatre, banquet Tuesday evening, entertainment at the Capitol later, with the ham and egg breakfast at the prison, luncheon at the Otsego Wednesday noon, and trips through the Gilbert Candy Works and the Jackson Corset Factory.

Mr. McLaren left nothing in the way to make the visit to Jackson a pleasure and the convention showed it.

During the next few months an active membership campaign will be waged in Michigan to get enrolled under the banner of the association every theatre owner in Michigan. Detailed announcements relative to this will be made later.

Government Finishes Its Case in Paramount Investigation

Company Record Shows Brokers as Largest Stockholders

By TOM WALLER

AFTER practically touring the continent and securing bits of testimony here and there in its investigation of charges made against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Federal Trade Commission got back to its starting point of many months ago and resumed in New York City hearings which had been adjourned since April last.

The commission, headed by Attorneys Fuller and Hawkins, has put in full days all of this week. Monday morning it was hoped that the Government would have concluded its case by Wednesday, October 24. But Wednesday arrives and there are yet four witnesses to be heard so the prospects for a wind-up on Friday, October 26, are more encouraging.

With the closing of the plaintiff's side of the issue a recess of one month will be taken, during which time the defendant will assemble all points of contention. Robert T. Swaine, chief counsel of the Zukor group, expressed a belief that the defense will not occupy a period in excess of three weeks.

During the last few days of its investigation the commission has gone deep into the history of Famous Players-Lasky. Outstanding among some of the details thus revealed by the court record is the fact that the company has no record of its president, Adolph Zukor, owning a share of either common or preferred stock; and that brokerage concerns are the largest stockholders according to the record. Marcus Loew's testimony is another of the highlights. Thirteen years ago he and Zukor severed business relations and since then it has been each man for his own.

Monday's Session

Twenty-five years ago Marcus Loew and Adolph Zukor were partners in a fur business in downtown Manhattan. Then Loew went into the theatrical world and later was financially assisted, partly by Zukor. Although it was conceded that the Zukor family owned about one per cent. of the stock of Loew, Inc., Marcus Loew, testifying at the hearing on Monday, October 22, before the Federal Trade Commission, declared that since he and Zukor severed business relations thirteen years ago neither has attempted to interfere with or legislate the commercial policy of the other. In other words, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Metro group and Loew, Inc., have enjoyed unrestrained and uninfluenced individual government.

Mr. Loew maintained that no partiality had been shown him in booking Famous productions or did the Zukor concern have the preference of Metro films. The distribution of Metro material in Australia and Brazil by Famous was due solely to a business transaction which had been negotiated strictly because of Famous efficiency.

Chief Examiner W. H. Fuller for the commission revealed through Leopold Friedman, secretary and counsel for Loew, Inc., that a Loew stock record dated April 4, 1923, showed Mrs. Adolph Loew as the holder of 6,392 shares of Loew stock and Eugene J. Zukor the possessor of 6,000 shares. With these Mr. Fuller read the names of other Loew stockholders, apparently pertinent to the government issue, which reached a total of about 26,000 shares. The latter constituted but a part of the 1,060,780 shares outstanding divided among 8,000 stockholders, said Robert T. Swaine, of counsel for Famous, in maintaining by the comparison that neither individually nor collectively had the stockholders cited by Mr. Fuller endeavored to control the policy of Loew, Inc., or Metro. In response to a question by Mr. Swaine, the Loew secretary said all of the Loew stockholders had made their purchases with a good investment as the sole motive.

Four other witnesses, whose testimony was of comparatively minor importance to that secured in the early part of the day's proceeding, were interrogated mainly by Gaylord Hawkins, the chief examiner's colleague.

The reorganization of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., established in 1917, into the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in 1920, was brought about by the harmony of the theatre owner members inspiring the expansion in membership, H. O. Schwalbe told Mr. Hawkins.

Under the new association about 3,300 theatres are now amalgamated, whereas under the original combine but 600 at the most were fraternized, he stated. The witness is the president of the Electric Theatre Supply Company, located in Philadelphia, of which he claimed he is the owner of practically the entire capital stock.

Elek J. Ludvigh of the Famous New York office said that although Mr. Zukor is president of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation he is less than a figurehead in that capacity and that the home office is little concerned about it. This corporation, he stated, was organized with theatre acquisition as the forethought and capitalized at $4,000,000 which was to be disposed of to Dominion residents. The stock sales fell short of $1,000,000 and of this amount Famous Players-Lasky invested $750,000, more as a compulsory obligation than an investment, he stated.

Concerning United States activities, Mr. Ludvigh said that Famous is contemplating the erection on the Putnam site, New York, of a theatre whose architectural design will be similar to that of the Capitol, except that it will be a smaller house than this Manhattan movie hippodrome. The other plan is for a theatre on the English Hotel site in Indianapolis, he stated.

It was brought out by Mr. Fuller that the Nanuet Holding Corporation was merged into Famous in 1917, and that Famous owns all of the common stock of Charles Frohman, Inc. In addition to this and since April 4, 1923, according to the witness, Famous Players-Lasky has acquired fifty per cent. interest in the Fairfax, Fairfax, Va.; lease on the Community, Miami; the Sugg and Kozy theatres, Chickasha, Okla.; the Graphic, Bangor, Me.; the Capitol, Pittsfield, Mass.; and fifty per cent. interest in the Criterion, Oklahoma City. Mr. Ludvigh's testimony further shows that Famous now owns outright the Metropolitan, Grauman and Rialto in Los Angeles; that seven theatres owned or controlled by Southern Enterprises have been sold since April; and that the organization has taken a lease on McVicker's house in Chicago.

The booking situation in Philadelphia was gone into with considerable detail by S. E. Applegate, United Artists manager there. Going over a list of twenty-one theatres, Mr. Applegate stated they were mostly under the Stanley control.

Certain dates which he had specified in his testimony at a Boston hearing were corrected by John E. Eames of Littleton, New Hampshire. This witness was formerly in the employ of Alfred S. Black.

Tuesday's Session

Who owns the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation? It was obvious that the commencement of the second day of the proceeding, Tuesday, October 23, had, for the Federal Trade Commission, resolved itself into this question. The closing of this session showed that "on record" Adolph Zukor owns not a single share of common or preferred; that the total capital stock held and listed "on record" by eighteen members of the Board of Directors sums up about 9,378 shares, and that over 62,000 shares are credited to the titles of nine concerns of stock brokers.

This comprises in part the approximate 225,000 shares of capital stock issued and outstanding of the bulk of 450,000 authorized shares. In divulging these figures, relative to the financial status of the Famous Players-Lasky Company as sought out by Chief Examiner Fuller, Elek J. Ludvigh, treasurer and secretary of the organization, said that it was impossible to procure a record of the real owner of each share of stock and that there were on issue thousands of shares whose owners are unknown. He explained "unknown" by adding, as far as the record is concerned.

Prior to the organizing of the old Famous Company in 1913 Mr. Ludvigh, the chief witness of Tuesday's hearing, testified that he was Mr. Zukor's personal attorney. Except for drawing his will the witness said he did nothing of note for Zukor until he drafted the company's certificate of incorporation and entered its legal department. Arthur H. Friend incorporated the Jesse Lasky Company and when the organizations were amalgamated he joined the barrister force until the time came when he accepted the treasurership. Ludvigh said that he did not know whether Friend made this move to avoid a "clash" or whether it was because he preferred the business end of the game.

The witness said that he then headed the Famous legal department. He also mentioned, under examination by Mr. Fuller, that he incorporated the People's Vaudeville Company for Mr. Loew fifteen years ago. Until about three years ago he said he represented in barrister capacity that company and Mr. Loew, while for a part of that period he also represented Mr. Zukor.

Mr. Ludvigh admitted that he was a Loew stockholder. He explained that it had not been of his own seeking but that Loew at the time "couldn't" pay him his yearly salary of $1,000 for his legal advice and so instead of cash presented him with shares of stock in the Loew organization.

The record of owners of stock shares referred to by Mr. Fuller was dated September of this year. Mr. Fuller produced a letter alleged to have been written by the witness in September, 1920, in which the ten largest stockholders and their holdings were mentioned. It credited Mr. Zukor with being included as the possessor of 15,163 shares in June of that year. Asked as to what had become of those shares, according to the latest record which establishes Mr. Zukor with having nothing in hand, the Famous official replied that this could easily be accounted for by the fact that the amount of one's holdings often fluctuates from month to month.

Questioned as to whether it was necessary to be a stockholder in order to be eligible to sit on the Board of Directors, Mr. Ludvigh replied that he could not recall if such a provision was in the company's charter but that the statutory requirement for a director of a corporation to hold from five to eight shares of stock had become invalidated about eight years ago.

Considerable quibbling ensued when Mr. Fuller pressed the witness for details of the report which credited Mr. Zukor with having no stock in his own company. This in substance was:

Mr. Zukor owns not a dollar's worth of stock? the witness was asked.

The record shows he owns nothing. It is impossible to state the complete list of stockholders. Thousands of shares may be in brokers' hands. Finding out the owner would depend entirely upon the broker's practice. Sometimes brokers transfer shares to the names of clerks, Mr. Ludvigh replied.

No dividend was paid to Mr. Zukor in October?

The witness replied in the negative.

You personally do not know whether Mr. Zukor owns one dollar's worth of stock?

The witness hesitated and then replied: Not to testify about. I've had my impressions.

Do you know whether the stock Mr. Zukor had in June, 1920, was taken off the company's books?

Again the reply was in the negative.

You don't know what broker might have received them?

Mr. Ludvigh retorted: I have impressions but really could not say.

Mr. Fuller brought out that Mrs. Lottie Zukor, wife of the Famous official, owns 1,500 shares and Zukor's son, Eugene, and grandson, Eugene Adolph Zukor, 1,000 shares each.

Reaching the list of directors, Mr. Fuller observed that in September, 1920, Jesse Lasky possessed 3,530 shares of common stock and that for September of this year he owns but 300. The drop was attributed by Mr. Ludvigh to a fluctuation.

It was unearthed that in Mr. Zukor's class of owning no stock, according to the record, were Directors Maurice Wertheim, Felix A. Kahn, Sir William Wiseman and Harold B. Franklin.

On record with an average minimum of 100 and maximum of two or three thousand, some in preferred, others in common and a few in both, are: Directors William H. English, Fred G. Lee, Frank A. Garbutt, Theodore F. Whitmarsh, Gayer G. Dominick (under the firm name of Dominick & Dominick), Mr. Ludvigh, Jules E. Brulattour, Cecil deMille, Albert A. Kaufman, Daniel Frohman, Sidney R. Kent, Emile Shauer, Ralph H. Kahn.

The witness conceded that as far as the record goes stock brokers at the present are the largest holders of stock. Among the brokerage concerns on the Famous share record are: Halle and Stieglitz, Hariman Company, Hutten and Company, Keech and Company, McClure, Jones and Reid, Pane, Webber, Post and Flagg, Rothschild and Company, Seligsberg.

The remainder is unissued stock and is locked up in the safe of the organization, Mr. Ludvigh stated. In response to Mr. Fuller's interrogation he said the company has no voting trust to handle the stock. He added for the record that preferred stock has a conversion privilege so that an amount of common stock has to be reserved for such conversion.

Harold B. Franklin, who was called during a previous hearing, explained what he said was a form for a tentative contract which he maintained was used only by Southern Enterprises. The witness, who is in charge of Famous's theatre department, said that he never made contracts but in some instances approved them. He stated that this form, an innovation in his department a few months ago, was used by the office as a memorandum. He explained that it is an aid in selecting a picture which would meet with all of the requirements of the town where a showing is being contemplated.

Wednesday's Session

Al Lichtman's knowledge of the industry was tested from Portland, Me., to Seattle, Washington, with many stops in between, by Counselor Hawkins, who conducted the Federal Trade Commission investigation today, Wednesday, October 24. The witness, one time head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, specified, under direct examination, what he considered first class first run theatres in a good number of the chief cities on the continent.

The term first class, Lichtman told Attorney Swaine for the defendant during a period of cross-examination, is a matter of comparative valuation—that the worst picture house on Broadway, New York, might be the best in "Oshkosh."

Mr. Swaine asked the witness if it were not true that statisticians in listing first class first run houses often vary in such listing from 100 to 900 theatres. Lichtman replied that such judgment was more a matter of individual interpretation and such theatres he had picked for the first rank had been gauged accordingly.

Capacity, price, architecture, quality of the picture and music for a large part go to make up such a house, he stated. He nodded affirmatively when Mr. Swaine asked him if, in this respect the real thing was not the operator's showmanship. As an illustration, two houses with all of the former qualities might be standing side by side in the same city and yet one might be ranked in class ahead of the other. In such a case he said the lacking asset of the second house was the proprietor's ability to put the bill across.

No theatre where vaudeville is a part of the bill is recognized by the witness as a first class first run house. A house with a mixed policy cannot afford to pay the price for a film that a theatre specializing in movies can, he testified. The vaudeville makes up a big item in the expense account and lessens the percentage. Many go to such a theatre who are interested solely in the vaudeville, thereby creating a mixed audience in such a theatre, he pointed out.

In regard to good showmanship being a requirement for a top grade house, Lawyer Hawkins sought to break down Lichtman's testimony. He referred to the fact that many managers of the houses which Lichtman had placed in this category earlier in the hearing conducted houses which the witness had termed second raters. Under cross questioning by Swaine, Lichtman corrected this version by stating that overseers of topnotchers conducted some other houses on a different basis, taking into consideration the type of audience and the percentage which would be realized from the same.

Lichtman admitted that at the April hearing in this investigation he had testified that he had undergone considerable difficulty in selling pictures in the south. Since Famous Players acquired Southern Enterprises he stated he has been able to dispose of his product without any trouble and with considerable satisfaction. He stated that he has sold this season's output of fifteen features in the south, on a percentage basis ranging from 20 to 25 per cent.

"Did Franklin try to compel you to break contracts with competitive houses?" Attorney Swaine queried in regard to Famous's southern acquisition.

Lichtman replied that no attempt at coercion was made and that the negotiations were such as had met his own trade situation. The witness said that his last Broadway, New York, picture was "The Broken Wing," shown at the Rialto, of which he realized seventeen and one-half per cent. of the gross receipts.

In the opinion of W. W. Hodkinson, who was the sole witness during the afternoon session, Marguerite Clark was as good an actress as Mary Pickford when he severed connections with Paramount as its president in June, 1916. This belief was divulged when Lawyer Hawkins asked the witness if he did not believe at that time that Mary Pickford was Paramount's greatest actress.

The last conference which Mr. Hodkinson said he had had with Mr. Zukor before leaving Paramount was in January, 1916, when he advocated that Mary Pickford be granted a raise. This, he said, was presented before the Board of Directors and necessitated an advance in the price of Pickford pictures.

The merging of Famous Players, Jesse Lasky and Bosworth took place in 1916 when Paramount introduced, he said, the first five reel picture innovation. Hitherto companies had been making pictures ranging from one to three reels. The present day discrimination between features and short subjects was not then recognized, he testified, and Paramount had to compete in the same market with the shorter subjects. Mr. Hodkinson assented to a question by Mr. Swaine that as Paramount progressed in its five reel subjects competing companies fell in line and paid more attention to the bigger footage.

Prior to the merger Paramount acted as distributor for Bosworth and Lasky, it was brought out by Mr. Swaine. Also in this respect it was recorded that five other companies then distributed through Mutual.

No Enormous Salaries

Lesser Denies Stars Are Paid Exorbitantly

Sol Lesser, whose activities in the motion picture field should qualify him to speak with authority on practically any subject pertaining to that industry, now comes to the front with the statement that reports concerning gigantic salaries paid motion picture stars are entirely unfounded.

"The motion picture industry," says Lesser, "is just like any other legitimate business. It must be maintained on a business basis at all times, and these rumors and reports of fabulous salaries paid stars and players of the silent drama cannot be taken too seriously.

"The report that Baby Peggy Montgomery signed a contract with Principal Pictures Corporation, of which I am president, at a yearly salary exceeding $1,000,000 is entirely out of reason and unfounded. The motion picture industry cannot afford to pay any such price to any star—if it wanted to remain in business any length of time."

Joe Brandt Says Wall Street Millions Menace the Industry

THAT Wall Street millions poured into the motion picture producing companies, have lowered production standards and made it difficult for an independent producer to survive, is the charge made by Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

"I look for a return to a production monopoly similar to that of the producers of General Film Company days," states Mr. Brandt. "There is the same affinity of interest between the Wall Street-financed producers of today as existed amongst the Patents Company producers.

"It will be remembered that the latter producers were independent and were competitive for many years until financial reasons made it wise for them to consolidate their interests. This is happening amongst the Wall Street financed companies of today. They have been spending money extravagantly in production that cannot possibly pay out, and the spirit of amalgamation is in the air.

"The independent producers cannot meet the competition of high finance. I say that the independent producer is the only one today who is making pictures at anything like a fair cost, but what does this matter when the wastage of the Wall Street producers is quickly made up by the sale of additional stock or securing tremendous loans from their banker friends?"

"The independent companies are fighting the battle of their lives today but they are getting very poor aid from the exhibitors for the risks they are taking and the product they are building.

"A poor picture may be widely exploited as has been done by Wall Street, and the exhibitor is buncoed in believing that it is a big picture and he pays big money for it, and when he has run it and counted up his receipts, he finds he has taken a loss. Occasionally he puts up a squawk and he gets a rebate in the form of another picture—not cash—but a picture that was made under Wall Street auspices, and they can well afford to give a rebate in the form of a free run on this picture because nine chances out of ten the exhibitor wouldn't have booked it anyway. And I venture to say that a great many times when the exhibitor does get a good rebate picture, it's a picture that was acquired by the Wall Street-financed concern from an independent producer.

"In my opinion the handwriting is on the wall. The exhibitors must take the situation seriously in hand and begin to realize that the more they support independent pictures the quicker they are going to be able to make the Wall Street-financed producing unit bring down their cost of production and make pictures on a basis that will insure reasonable rentals. Unless the exhibitor is willing to do this, the independent's fight is useless and he might as well give up the field to the Wall Street-financed organizations, and let the exhibitors take their chances as to what the result will be."

Annual Meeting Held

Chicago Film Board of Trade Elects Officers and Reviews Work

The annual meeting of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, held this week at their offices, Standard Oil Building, was marked by the election of officers for the ensuing year. Edwin Silverman, outgoing president, was re-elected by a unanimous vote. Other elections are as follows:

Vice-President, J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Corp.; Secretary, H. L. Hollander, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan; Treasurer, I. Maynard Schwartz, Educational.

Board of Directors: F. C. Aiken, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; C. E. Bond, Associated First National; S. Meyer, Fox Film Corp.; J. Sampson, Film Booking Offices; R. Simmons, W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

The annual meeting was attended by the board's full complement. Following the disposal of regular business, nominations for the office of president were opened, with the subsequent election of Mr. Silverman. Coincident with the nomination of Mr. Silverman special mention was made of the unqualified success achieved by the local board, through the untiring efforts of its president, to faithfully serve the best interests of both exchange and exhibitors. Various speakers lauded the sagacity and fairmindedness of Mr. Silverman in his efforts to reconcile differences between the two factors, and also commented upon the state of efficiency the board had attained during his régime.

Installation of officers will be held at the board's annual banquet and dance on Friday, November 9, at the East Room of the Hotel La Salle. Prominent executives and stars are expected to be on hand to supplement a splendid program of entertainment arranged by I. Maynard Schwartz.

Kane Going to Coast

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, expects to leave for Los Angeles within a week or ten days. He intends to look after production and distribution matters.

Safron Succeeds Flynn

Jerry Safron, one time New York manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange and more recently special representative of the Film Booking Offices has succeeded J. Flynn as manager of the Philadelphia exchange for the F. B. O. Mr. Flynn will take over the management of two theatres in New Jersey.

J. Gordon Edwards Tells of Picture Activities Abroad

J. GORDON EDWARDS, the dean of the William Fox directors, has returned from a three months' pleasure trip through France, Austria and Italy. He was accompanied by Mrs. Edwards and his son, Gordon, who has appeared in a number of the Fox pictures directed by his father. Mr. Edwards keeps a car in Italy, where he spent a year and a half making part of "The Shepherd King," and before that "The Queen of Sheba." The Edwards' party motored through Rome, Verona, Florence and other towns in the Romeo and Juliet country, and sailed for home from Naples.

"I was much surprised," remarked Mr. Edwards during a recent interview, "by the great change I noticed all through Italy and the wonders accomplished by Mussolini. Not that I favor Fascism, but the country has improved 500 per cent. since the last time I was there."

In Austria the Fox director saw the making of a big spectacle, "Messallina." The company producing the picture had obtained permission to use the Imperial grounds in Vienna for some of the scenes. In Italy "Quo Vadis" is being made by the U. C. I. company. The organization rented the buildings and equipment at one of the annual fairs in Rome, following its close, and took many of their scenes there while Mr. Edwards was present. Emil Jannings, who is well-known to American audiences, is playing the role of Nero. Several important pictures are being made in Austria and Italy but, according to the American director, the two mentioned above are the biggest. The banks in these countries are very friendly toward the producers and are helping them in making big pictures.

"American pictures are greatly in demand throughout Italy," continued Mr. Edwards. "I met Louis Lenine, the Fox European manager, who was in Rome selecting a site for a new exchange. Mr. Lenine tells me that many of the Fox pictures will be shown at the Castanza Theatre, the great national theatre in Rome."

Mr. Edwards, who will soon start a big special at the New York Fox studios, was asked if he believed in making American productions abroad. "Not unless I can take an American cast from this country," he replied. "The certainty of obtaining the right atmosphere and also of keeping down production costs are important considerations, but I prefer our own brand of actors. Poli Negri and Emil Jannings are the only two stars the motion pictures have recruited from Europe. Valentino cannot be considered because he is a product of America and American motion picture development."

Music Society Warns

No Rights Waived, It Says, During Negotiations With M. P. T. O. A.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers announces that, during negotiations with the M. P. T. O. A., it does not waive any rights as to public performances of the works copyrighted by its members, and that the mere fact negotiations looking toward a settlement of differences is under way does not confer upon any unlicensed theatre a right in the interim to play the society's music.

"No information, so far as our advices go," says the statement, "justifying any such construction of the arrangements made has been issued by either this office or the M. P. T. O. A., yet in many cases exhibitors are stating to our representatives that they 'understand' nothing is to be done until the conferences are over."

Goldwyn Restricted in Use of His Name According to Court Ruling

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, former head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was, on October 18, enjoined from releasing motion pictures under the Goldwyn name unless he makes it clear that the productions were not made by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He is directed to use the word "not connected with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation" in display type in his advertisements.

Evidently Judge Learned Hand, who issued the injunction, sympathizes with the plight in which Mr. Goldwyn now finds himself with respect to his right to use his assumed name in business judging from several comments made in the opinion filed in the United States District Court. The decision does not pass on the merits of the controversy, and the injunction is only a preliminary one pending the final determination of the litigation.

"A self-made man may prefer a self-made name," remarked Judge Hand, alluding to the fact that Mr. Goldwyn had changed his familial name of Gelbfisch or Goldfish to Goldwyn. "Under circumstances like these at bar it appears to me that Goldwyn, who has familiarized the public—with the acquiescence of the plaintiff—with that name, has as much right to complain of its loss as though he had not inherited the less euphonious Gelbfisch or its equivalent, Goldfish."

Judge Hand expressed the opinion that Mr. Goldwyn had played a prominent part in building up the business of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and alluded to the fact that it was not contradicted that he had adopted the name of Goldwyn at the suggestion of his business associates at a time when the company was not involved in any trouble.

Mr. Goldwyn had stated in affidavits that he resigned as president of the corporation on September 2, 1920, at a time when negotiations were under way to induce Dupont to invest new capital, and the latter was averse to doing so if Mr. Goldwyn remained as the head of the company. The negotiations fell through, however, Mr. Goldwyn declared, and he succeeded in interesting other financiers to invest capital in the business, with the result that his contract with the corporation was renewed, and he continued as head of the corporation under the provisions of a contract executed October 22, 1920.

Mr. Goldwyn's last contract expired on October 10, 1922, but it contained a clause prohibiting him from engaging in the motion picture business, and the present suit to enjoin him from using the name Goldwyn is based on this clause. Judge Hand did not pass on this question finally in the present decision.

"If there were any suspicion that the defendant had adopted his name in 1918 because he contemplated using it as he now proposes he could be enjoined," declared Judge Hand. "This would be true because it would then be apparent that he had no interest in the name to protect other than its use to take away the plaintiff's customers. There is, however, no ground for any such suspicion. The proof is uncontradicted that the suggestion came to him from his co-adventurers in the plaintiff's predecessor at a time when no trouble was brewing and when, so far as appears, he had no thought of its competitive use.

"A new name, when honestly assumed and worn, may well be of as much or nearly as much consequence to its bearer as though it were familial," continued Judge Hand. "Our names are useful or dangerous to us according to the associations they carry among those who hear them. If we have by our past conduct established a good-will which attaches to the name that is an interest, pecuniary or honorific, of which we may well object to being deprived, and which may exceed in value that which we inherited."

Receiver for Triangle

Bankruptcy Proceedings Filed Against Firm by Three Creditors

The Triangle Film Corporation, which was formerly one of the largest distributing organizations in the motion picture industry, passed into the hands of a receiver on October 17 following the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation in the United States District Court.

Percival L. Waters, who is well known in the industry, and who has practically been in charge of the company's business for the past four years, was appointed receiver under a bond of $10,000 by Judge Learned Hand upon the request of a majority of the creditors.

When Mr. Waters assumed charge of the company's affairs in 1919 the company owed approximately $2,680,000, but under his management the liabilities have been gradually liquidated, with the result that upwards of $2,000,000 of the former indebtedness has been paid off and substantial assets remain to meet existing claims.

The Triangle Film Corporation owns practically all of the capital stock of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation. The New York Motion Picture Corporation controls the Keystone Film Company, and the three companies are creditors for about $1,000,000 each.

At one time the Triangle Film Corporation handled the productions of Douglas Fairbanks, Norma Talmadge and William Hart among others.

Building New Theatre

The Suffolk Amusement Company, of Suffolk, Va., is to erect a 500-seat house exclusively for colored people. It is to be ready by December 1, and is to be devoted to pictures and vaudeville. The company will also remodel the Fotosho Theatre at a cost of $25,000, increasing the seating capacity to 1,200.

Brown Married

Announcement is made of the marriage of Colvin W. Brown, Eastern Representative of Thos. H. Ince, and Pearl Marion Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Saylor of Elgin, Ill.

Film Exports Heavy

Continue to Maintain Their Recent Average of 15,000,000 Feet Monthly

Washington, D. C.—Exports of motion picture film continue to maintain their recent average of 15,000,000 feet a month, figures compiled by the Department of Commerce for the month of August showing that we exported in that month 1,164,002 linear feet of raw stock, valued at $31,408; 826,457 feet of negative film, with a value of $68,442, and 12,161,066 feet of positive film, worth $461,837.

By far the best market for positive film during the month was Australia, which country imported 2,625,244 feet, valued at $109,907. However, England, Canada and Brazil each imported more than a million feet of film, although in no case was the value of the film exported to those countries more than $60,000. The best market for both raw stock and negative films was England, whose imports included 404,721 feet of raw stock, valued at $8,995, and 245,063 feet of negatives, valued at $35,640.

To Visit Coast Studio

Abe Warner Practically Recovered from Illness

Warner Brothers' home office announces that Abe Warner has practically recovered from the illness that kept him in the hospital for six weeks, and, following a short recuperative period at Atlantic City, he will journey to the West Coast studio for a much needed rest and a general inspection on matters pertaining to future productions and general distribution.

While on the coast Mr. Warner will confer with H. M. Warner regarding the ten productions that have already been completed for this season and the different productions that are now facing the batteries of cameras.

Kane, Jr., Marries

Arthur S. Kane, Jr., son of the president of Associated Exhibitors, and himself a member of the publicity staff, was married in New Haven last Friday to Miss Flavia A. Cavanaugh of that city.

Press Book Tells How to Campaign For the Big Day

One of the finest exhibitor aids that could have been gotten out for National Motion Picture Day appears in the form of a press book replete with advertising and publicity suggestions and showing facsimiles of special free slides and posters. These latter are shown elsewhere in this issue.

"Devoted to the prestige and profit of your theatre" is the slogan that shows on the front page of the press sheet. "Exhibitors, this is your BIG DAY. Make the day make friends for you," is the advice under it. Within, under the caption, "The Big Idea Behind the Big Day," is an outline of the intents and advantages of observing National Motion Picture Day.

Then come the helpful hints. Exhibitors are suggested ways and means of obtaining the co-operation of city and town officials and organizations. Slogans are offered, and a compete campaign of publicity. A special insert in green describes how heartily New Jersey exhibitors are working out the project. There is copy for a post-card campaign, a contest idea for newspaper publicity, a program reader, a sample letter to be mailed prominent local folk, and street exploitation ideas. All in all, it's a helpful book for the exhibitor intent on putting over National Motion Picture Day with a bang.

Bow Wow Wow!!!

Tuckahoe's population has taken a terrible jump since Clem Kracht, of the Moving Picture World's advertising department, abandoned his Manhattan apartment for an adobe dwelling in that village, noted in the past for its cock fights and in the present for its desire to become a "be-eg city."

The other night Mr. Kracht, after a futile search in the neighboring garbage cans, found Mrs. Kracht's pet mongrel with fourteen new sons and daughters under a neighbor's porch.

Anyone in the industry, Mr. Kracht announces, who wants a good, live, healthy pup can have one free of cost and parcel post and at the same time do a great service, as the Kracht fresh air ranch was not intended for a dog farm.

Austria Turns From German Films to Productions Made in America

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

VIENNA, August 31.

ANOTHER recent and complete convert to the American film is the New Austria. When the Austrian crown was a subject for the jesting paragrapher and sold at wall paper prices, the German film dominated the Austrian film market, for the mark was closest to the crown in financial degradation and debility. Thus in the first three months of the current year about ninety per cent. of the films imported into Austria came from Germany, the rest from various other countries, ours being represented by about five per cent.

Austria Able to Buy

Like all the rest of Europe Austria was fond of our films but it could not pay for them and thus reluctantly it settled down to the heavy film diet supplied by Berlin and Munich. Its own producing ventures were then in a very primitive state and unable to compete seriously with the foreign product. Then the Allies took hold of Austria, stopped its foolish political wrangling and put the exploitation of its natural and economic resources on a sound basis. Thereupon the crown began to improve and now it has become stabilized at about 70,000 crowns for a dollar while you can buy six millions of German marks for the same price. Though they could now buy in the cheapest and nearest market in the world the Austrians distinctly turned away from German films. An estimate made for me by a competent authority shows that the imports from abroad within the last six months indicate an immense gain of the American over the German and every other foreign film, the proportion being about forty against five in favor of films originating in the United States. Fox has established an office in Vienna and there are reports of an overwhelming demand for his productions. This has naturally stimulated the demand for American films all along the line. It is true that the new Austria is a small country, scarcely as large as Belgium in point of population. Vienna however wholly lost its importance as a great distributing station between the West and the East. Moreover its taste in all matters of art is still taken seriously even by those states that detest Austria as a political entity. The result is that films with a successful run in Vienna to their credit acquire a prestige all down the Danube to the very gates of Constantinople.

Judge Us by Films

Having now travelled around and about the Continent of Europe for something like two years, always interested in what concerns the world of films, I may perhaps be permitted to offer an opinion touching the influence of the American films on the European and more particularly the Continental mind. Let me say at the outset that nothing next to the Great War has helped the European to discover us like our films. In every conceivable way the American film is our greatest advertising medium in Europe as indeed all over the world. To properly judge of the effect of our films on the mind of Continental Europe two things must be considered: first, the so-called better classes and the great aggregation of self-discovered highbrows do not as a rule go to the motion picture theatre; second, the classes that do go take the pictures very seriously and are eager for instruction no less than for entertainment. It would be idle to deny that the effect on the masses which are constantly growing in political power has been very great indeed. It will grow in volume as time goes on. Instead of the absurd notions propagated by romantic but mendacious editors, which made the United States seem like a huge and disorderly dime museum in the eyes of the European nations, our European friends begin to get glimpses of the real America—first of its bigness and its strong national feeling. Slowly but surely the Continental mind, begins to absorb the astounding fact that there is a vast country across the water where one may travel for four days from one end to the other on fast trains without a passport and without a custom house, using but one language and enjoying equal rights and privileges as citizens of a commonwealth numbering over a hundred million people. No medium of visualization brings this tremendous fact home to even the simplest mind quite as strikingly and quite as convincingly as the screen. It is indeed a revelation. More than one distinguished writer in the European press might be quoted on the power of our films in instilling new views and conceptions of life into the European mind. It has been said that the American head shows a depression where the bump of reverence ought to be. I might add that on the other hand the bump of humor is abundantly developed. Now this humor, which according to his own confession not even Mark Twain could make intelligible to the European mind and from which one translator after another has turned away in weariness and despair has been explained completely on the screen. The European Continent is still overburdened in every walk of life with a ballast of false dignity and useless dignity, often the outward symptoms of dry rot. American humor has "shown up" the silliness of all this stuff and has brightened the European mind where it needed brightening most.

Roy Crawford, After Survey, Predicts Big Year for Films

ROY CRAWFORD, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, returning to New York this week from a trip through the Middle West and the Mississippi Valley, predicted an unusually good year in both the theatrical and picture industries. He based his opinions on expressions made to him by exhibitors in several states.

Mr. Crawford's trip was made primarily to inspect his theatrical, banking and other business interests in Topeka, Wichita, and other cities in Kansas and Missouri.

En route the Associated official called at the offices of the organization in Chicago, St.

Louis and Kansas City, and conferred with the branch sales managers.

"In every case I found these men more than enthusiastic over the prospects for the coming year," said Mr. Crawford on his return to New York. "Associated's product is enjoying an unprecedented demand on the part of leading exhibitors.

"This feeling of optimism is shared by all the exhibitors with whom I conferred, and I took the opportunity to meet as many as possible. The business situation generally throughout the Middle West is rapidly approaching the normal conditions which prevailed before the war, and it is inevitable that the existing prosperity should be reflected in the entertainment field."

Philadelphia Hopeful

Looks for Settlement at New York Conference

The City of Brotherly Love, which took a prominent part in defending exhibitors in some sixty suits brought by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, is hopeful that its efforts at pacification will be successful. At a conference to be held in New York this week, which will be attended by George P. Aarons, secretary of the M. P. T. O. A. and of the Philadelphia branch, and also its counsel, it is hopeful that the differences which have lasted six years will be overcome.

The moving picture interests contend that they are doing for nothing a work of publicity for the publishers and authors, and particularly in the smaller towns are popularizing musical productions more effectively than is done in the larger centers by song boosters and paid performers, and that in many instances they have actually established the fame and sale of productions.

The American Society contends that the productions are copyrighted and therefore that the theatre owner should pay a royalty. It is understood that a mutually satisfactory plan has been worked out and that it needs only the confirmation of the conference this week to make it effective.

Gain Wage Rise

Following conferences of several weeks' duration, projectionists in Albany, N. Y., have been granted a ten dollar a week increase in wages under a two-year contract, all other conditions remaining the same as in the past. The adjustment of differences between the theatre owners and the projectionists will now give the latter $45 a week and an eight-hour day for six days a week, Albany not having Sunday movies.

The operators had demanded $50 a week, a six-hour day, two men to the booth, and a one-year contract. At first the theatre owners attempted a compromise at $42 a week.

Non-Theatrical Competition Serious in Michigan, Theatre Owners Agree

NON-THEATRICAL competition, the admission tax problem and the building of public good will were important subjects of discussion at the fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, held at Jackson, Mich., October 16 and 17.

The convention was attended by 200 exhibitors of the state and all showed interest and enthusiasm in the organization. Reports showed the association to be in a flourishing condition. A healthy growth in membership was reported for the past year, and the financial report showed expenditures of more than $32,000, with a cash balance on hand at the time of the convention of more than $6,000.

The financing of this organization is partially taken care of by pledges made by the members. Out of $14,000 pledged for the year just closed, more than $12,000 was paid into the treasury. When exhibitors were asked for their pledges for the ensuing year, more than $8,000 was raised in about ten minutes.

In his annual report, H. M. Richey, manager of the association, stated that the exhibitors had gone into convention with the largest cash balance ever reported by an exhibitor association. He spoke of the establishment of an insurance department saving the exhibitor 40 per cent., and also mentioned that no legislation detrimental to the theatrical men's interests had been placed on the statute books of Michigan during the past year.

The non-theatrical situation, he declared, is very serious. In some instances, he said, the small exhibitor is being put out of business by this competition. He suggested a classification of films to be submitted to theatrical and non-theatrical interests as a partial remedy for the difficulty, the non-theatrical enterprises to run only the films of a religious or educational nature.

The building of public good will was stressed as an important problem of the theatre owner. Mr. Richey stated that the standards by which people who do not go to the theatre judge films should be changed and this class of people should be reached and made into picture fans.

Mrs. Emily Derr, of Cleveland, president of the Cinema Club of that city, also touched upon this problem in her address. She explained the operation of the Cinema Club, which is composed of representatives from all clubs, church groups, religious groups, civic organizations and any known club in the entire community. She stated that these representatives by indorsing and boosting good pictures, helped the exhibitor by backing him in his demands for something better and helped the producer by letting him know the desires of the public. Such an organization, she said, also helped the exhibitor at the box office as it enabled him to reach all classes, her contention being that pictures which do not appeal to some classes have a big appeal for others.

A statement made by Mrs. Derr which met with the hearty accord of the exhibitor was that little children have no place in the theatre. "The theatre has been the nursery too long," she stated, "and it is time the women found it out. The theatre is an adult amusement. The usual program is too long for little children and children from 10 years old to the adolescent age should have their entertainment chosen for them by their parents."

Claude E. Cady, of Lansing, Mich., presented the problem of the admission tax. This tax, he explained, being a war measure, was far more severe than such a tax would have been under ordinary circumstances. He cited the excellent support given the government by theatre men during the war and the custom still prevailing of supplying entertainment for disabled veterans. "Other emergency measures have been lifted," he said, "but the theatre man, already burdened with many taxes, still is paying the admission tax. The exhibitor plays an important part in the molding of public opinion and should not be hampered. Better entertainment will be possible if he is given relief from this tax, and relief is needed up to 50 cent admissions.

C. C. Pettijohn, representative of the Hays organization at the convention, spoke Tuesday evening at the annual banquet, saying that by next year he hoped to see a good national organization functioning fairly and representing the exhibitors frankly and fairly. Bigger, cleaner and higher grade pictures are in demand, he stated, but to satisfy this demand the three branches of the industry must put their cards on the table. Cost of distribution will be diminished next year, he stated, by the organization of film boards of trade throughout the country. All producing companies will be working on production schedule next year, he declared, and the cost of production will be diminished from seven to ten millions of dollars.

"Many exhibitors run up the cost of pictures by buying pictures they never expect to play. The exhibitor who ties up a town by refusing to buy pictures except at his own prices is not fair, but the exhibitor who is willing to pay a fair price for his films should not be made to suffer competition with schools and churches."

The non-theatrical problem was classed by Mr. Pettijohn as one of the most serious facing the producer. He also stated that some of the present methods of publicity, termed by him "foolish and inane," were detrimental to picture interests.

Thomas B. Read, lieutenant governor of the State of Michigan, stated his opposition to censorship, declaring that censorship would destroy all initiative in the industry to produce better and higher class pictures.

Others who spoke at the banquet were Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, Judge Alfred J. Murphy, Cong. Clarence J. McLeod, Cong. Robert Clancy, Cong. A. B. Williams and Martin G. Smith, president of the Ohio association. W. S. McLaren, retiring president, had charge of the meeting and J. R. Denniston acted as toastmaster.

At the closing session officers were elected as follows: President, J. R. Denniston, Monroe; vice-president, Phil Gleichman, Detroit; secretary, H. T. Hall, Detroit; treasurer, J. Niebes, Detroit; directors, Sam Ackerman, Detroit; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; Claude E. Cady, Lansing; C. Q. Carlisle, Saginaw; Glenn Cross, Battle Creek; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac; Vernon Locey, Howell; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Paul Scholssman, Muskegon, and Bert Williams, Detroit.

The 1924 convention will be held at Saginaw.

An unique feature of the entertainment program was a ham and egg breakfast served at the North Prison Farm, just outside Jackson, followed by a trip through the farm buildings and a part of the main prison in the city. The breakfast was provided by the prisoners from their Good Fellowship Fund. Exchange men and exhibitors have been most kind in supplying the inmates of Jackson prison with the best pictures and entertainment obtainable and the prison inmates took this opportunity to show their appreciation.

Smoot Sees Hope of Admission Tax Repeal if Veterans Don't Get Bonus

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Hopes of securing the repeal of the admission tax have been raised again by statements of Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, leading Republican member of the Senate Finance Committee, that if Congress does not pass any extravagant appropriations or provide a bonus for the soldiers, it will be possible to change the revenue laws so as to save approximately $500,000,000 to the people of the country.

The admission tax, as well as the direct taxes on jewelry, confectionery and a number of other articles, would be affected by any changes which might be made in that section of the law, it is believed. At a conference between President Coolidge, Secretary of the Treasurer Mellon and Senator Smoot, held recently at the White House, the Senator proposed to reduce certain of the special taxes by approximately $75,000,000, while at the same time reducing surtaxes from a minimum of 50 per cent to 33 1-3 per cent, exempting incomes under possibly as high as $3,000 from taxation, and reducing the rates on incomes between $3,000 and $10,000.

These changes, it was made definitely known, are contingent upon the setting aside of a soldiers' bonus measure and the practicing of strictest economy in the conduct of the Government. Furthermore, it is desirable that a full study of the situation be made before any steps are taken to change the law, and it is very probable that, if revision is undertaken, it will not be brought up until some time next Spring.

the settings and Noah Beery as the pious Chinese leader adds to the picturesqueness.

The fight between Santschi and Beery is perhaps the biggest scene. It will be interesting because it is an evenly-matched combat and although not exceptionally long, succeeds in producing considerable suspense. The types are all well depicted. Something is happening all of the time and while there is a suggestion of crudeness in the continuity at times, there is sufficient excitement to make the average person overlook this.

"Jamestown"

Second of "Chronicles of America" Series is Released by Pathe
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Similar to the first one of this series, "Jamestown" is remarkable in its authentic colorfulness. It gives further indication of the sincerity and competence of the producers, the Yale University Press, who are now offering the second of the "Chronicles of America," the first being "Columbus."

America's development at the time when Great Britain's control of Virginia was threatened by both the Indians and the Spanish is the subject. The Indian princess, Pocahontas, played by Dolores Cassinelli is an important historical figure in this. The British high Marshall holds her as hostage in order to force her father into certain agreements. In connection with this her love affair and marriage with the English colonist, John Rolfe, is touched upon. Another dramatic feature is the capture of a Spanish spy, detailed to carry messages to the Floridas.

The majority of patrons who are seeking superior entertainment will find much to enjoy in "Jamestown," which is in four reels, like its predecessor. It gives a more than adequate picture of America at this period. Jamestown is reproduced as a crude village, guarded by a high picket fence, practically isolated in winter and in summer the picturesque seat of conflict for the British, Indians and Spanish. It gives an exceptionally vivid idea of British politics at this time and their effect upon embryonic America. Edwin Hollywood directed the picture.

"Modern Matrimony"

Selznick Release with Owen Moore and Alice Lake Has Excellent Comedy Value
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Light comedy-drama of this type is much in demand. The troubles of the newlyweds having no cash and very little credit provide a pleasant hour of amusement for anyone. The picture has already proved capable of creating a chuckling response and can be booked without risk.

Victor Heerman's idea for the story is fresh and his direction shows a keen understanding of farce. While the situations are unquestionably funny, the action quick and snappy, the human interest note is not entirely submerged. Thus when the young husband's last lie has failed and the last piece of furniture has been removed, the wistful is quite as pronounced as the ludicrous. Owen Moore's clever performance is partly responsible for this.

He maintains a certain equanimity throughout his various blunders that makes them, of course, twice as amusing. His attitude is well counterbalanced by Alice Lake's work. She is a somewhat peppery young bride, inclined to demand explanations but infinitely credulous of her husband's lies. Their scenes together are highly entertaining.

The theme of the picture—the way the housing problem confronts young married couples—should suggest good exploitation angles. Various tie-ups with real estate firms would prove effective. Originally, the story was called "One Dollar Down," which will give some idea of its character. Miniature houses would make excellent advertisements, and would carry out the idea that has been used on one of the shots of an interior of the real estate offices. This comprises one of the many interesting scenes in the picture.

Its naturalness will be one of the picture's popular features. The comedy value is sure to register and the acting is in the hands of an unusually capable cast including Mayme Kelso and Frank Campeau.

"A Wife's Romance"

Metro's Latest Release With Clara Kimball Young Should Be Generally Entertaining
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Typical of Clara Kimball Young's most popular work, her latest Metro release makes its greatest appeal to women. As this sort of entertainment it should succeed in the majority of houses. It has a story along the desired paths of romance and is attractively staged and costumed, with Spain as a setting.

An offshoot of the popular screen theme that the neglected wife is susceptible to attentions from other men, this one makes no great pretensions at being original but follows the lines of acceptable entertainment. It is interestingly done and will afford the average feminine fan a pleasant hour. The affair with the bandit is managed in a series of fairly picturesque events from the first meeting in the park at night to the fight with the Toreador in the cafe. None of it carries much realism, but this is not its purpose. It is more or less like a day dream and as such caters to the tastes of a large class of patrons.

Vitagraph's Latest Has Many Thrills and Big Climax—Mary Carr Featured

Thrill seekers will find something new and big in the flood climax which brings this Vitagraph melodrama to a close. The old "Sarah Jane" plowing through Main Street, making its rescues from second story windows is an impressive spectacle, but only a part of a maelstrom of dramatic events that culminate here.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" is an attraction which a large class of theatres cannot afford to miss. Its stupendous climax will accomplish its purpose in bringing the thrills, and giving your patrons what the earlier part of the picture hints at—terrific flood scenes.

J. Stuart Blackton, the producer, has not striven for fine effects, but for broad sweeping action with a certain undertone of human interest that makes it more powerful. This element is embodied mainly in the performance of Mary Carr. She has an appealing part which she plays with great understanding and invests the production with something that all women will like.

Various dramatic complications unravel themselves in the climax in which the suspense is splendidly managed. The artist, reported dead, returns to save his daughter from drowning and his wife from being burned to death; the burning house sets fire to the old river boat, the "Sarah Jane" which is doing the rescuing; the village spinster confesses her deceit which has almost wrecked another woman's life; the Captain discovers that her brother has been swindling the town with fake investments and prevents his escape; the boy goes back to his country sweetheart whom he had neglected because of an infatuation; in fact an incredible number of melodramatic incidents are involved. The fan who is looking for sensational entertainment could ish faces are a becoming asset while her performance is charmingly reserved and eminently "wifely," even in the throes of a forbidden romance. The picture has an honorable ending that will doubtless appeal, in spite of the fact that the husband's renewed interest seems a bit far-fetched. Albert Roscoe is good as the romantic bandit and the others are well chosen. Thomas Heffron has given effective direction to the scenes and clear photography adds considerably to the enjoyment.

"The Tango Cavalier"

George Larkin as Colorful Hero of Western Border Picture Released by Aywon

A highly romantic cast to the performance of George Larkin is given in this picture of Mexican border life which Aywon is releasing. He is the vagabond frequenter of cafes, the king of the tango and a daring air pilot. With a few touches like these, the usual story of outlawry and one man's bravery is made slightly more alluring than as frequently handled.

The tango scenes are fairly well done. Ollie Kirby, who is Larkin's partner, is at her best in the dancing scenes as her dramatic work shows less experience. While her part is not nominally the heroine's, it is more colorful and indicates that with some direction in the art of facial expression, she would be a pleasing screen player.

At times the picture seems somewhat padded. Small, unimportant scenes are lengthened beyond their appeal and there is not much suspense. The aeroplane stunt and the spectacular ride down the perpendicular embankment are thrilling, but the picture as a whole is not especially full of action. It will interest those who admire George Larkin, and will average up as a fair program attraction in almost any small theatre.

"Bright Lights of Broadway"

Principal Releases Entertaining Picture of Popular Theme with Good Cast

Another story of the country girl who seeks a Broadway career has been pictured in a way that should afford the usual appeal. The cast is above average, featuring Doris Kenyon, Lowell Sherman and Harrison Ford who give smoothness and charm to the performance. While the story is not exceptional it is pleasingly handled and should mean fair entertainment, generally.

Doris Kenyon's interpretation of the girl who gives up her sweetheart, for the thrill of seeing her name illuminating Broadway is interesting because it has her individual charm. She plays in a thoughtful, wistful manner and does not overdo either in acting or dressing. Lowell Sherman plays the part of tempter with a finesse that helps one to forget partially that it is one of the oldest of roles.

The locomotive accident is well managed. Consistent with the rest of the picture, it is a theatrical touch, but gives a melodramatic dash to the ending that will most likely be enjoyed by the masses. The picture has been attractively staged and the charm of the acting will appeal to many.

"The Darling of New York"

Baby Peggy Makes Debut as a Feature Star in Universal-Jewel Picture That Provides Fine Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Baby Peggy the diminutive star who in two-reel Century Comedies has endeared herself to thousands, makes her debut as a full-fledged feature star in the Universal-Jewel production "The Darling of New York" which gives every indication of proving a great big box-office success and we predict that this little lady if she keeps on appearing in features as good as this one, will be the darling of film fans everywhere.

The story provides an excellent vehicle for her and shows her off to advantage. Those responsible for the production have not attempted to cast her as an overly clever or precocious child but have depended on her wonderful personality and undoubted ability to play upon the spectator's sympathy by casting her simply as a lovable little baby who becomes the plaything of fate and is buffeted about, falling into the hands of crooks, some kind, some unkind, then as the ward of a poor Hebrew with a large family, next a waif of the streets and finally trapped in a burning building, only to find happiness at last with her wealthy grandfather.

In this attempt they have surely succeeded, for it is a production that should appeal to all classes of audiences, it is the kind that will get under your skin, unusually strong in human interest, with plenty of action, pathos and clever comedy touches. It is a melodramatic story and there is considerable hokum but it is all well worked out and will "get" almost anybody. Your heart will go out to the poor helpless little tot who is buffeted from one to another in the underworld not knowing what it is all about, and maintaining a sunny cheerfulness through it all. In addition to the plight of the little child your interest will be held by a well worked out crook angle involving the adventures of a quantity of smuggled diamonds which have been hidden in the baby's rag doll and which becomes lost. You feel an intense sympathy for the crooks who have been kind to her and a corresponding hatred for the one crook that ill-treated her. There is such strong sympathy developed for the diminutive heroine and such suspense as to what will happen to her and the diamonds that at times you feel you can hardly wait to see how the sequences will work out, but at the same time the story is not padded.

King Baggot has finely directed the production and there are a number of finely handled scenes such as the manner in which the baby softens the hearts of the crooks who then shower her with toys, the scenes where she is a member of the kind-hearted Hebrew's big family and where she is left in an ash can and dumped into a street cleaner's wagon. Especially good too is the fire scene with the blazing house and falling walls culminating in a big climax where the kind-hearted woman crook who has decided to go straight jumps from a third story window into a life net with the baby in her arms, the camera following the figures as they jump.

Baby Peggy is really wonderful in this picture, she gets you with her personality, magnetism and ability and her infectious humor which has full play, and the already large number of her admirers will be increased many fold. She has been surrounded by an excellent cast, including Sheldon Lewis, Frank Currier, Carl Stockdale, Gladys Brockwell and others not forgetting Max Davidson who does particularly fine work as the poor Hebrew.

Here is a picture that you need not fear to run, for it will provide fine entertainment for any class of audience. It will prove a delight to the kiddies.

Maryland Censors Clothe Baltimore Poster Maidens

Without any warning whatsoever, an order was issued to the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., by the state censors to cover up the thirty-five 24-sheet posters that they had put up around Baltimore advertising Elinor Glyn's "Six Days." These posters showed six couples embracing and it is understood the objection to the posters was that there was no scene in the film like that depicted on the posters. The order to remove the posters came from Miss Marie W. Pressman, of the censor board, according to Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century.

As a special added attraction to his program of pictures and music at the Rivoli Theatre, City Hall Plaza, Guy L. Wonders, the manager, booked Frank Silver, composer of "Yes, We Have No Bananas," and his Metropolitan orchestra of eleven pieces to play twice daily during the week beginning Monday, October 22. On Sunday night, October 21, the performances started at the following theatres at 7:30 o'clock: Garden, Capitol, Bridge, Broadway, Edmondson, Apollo, Horn and Rialto.

There is a great necessity at the present time for an additional hospital in Baltimore, it is said, to take care of the sick and injured of Baltimore, and a campaign is being waged to raise the money to build it. According to Mr. Cluster, the picketing has been done because he employs a non-union operator, as there was a change made there a short time ago. The injunction also keeps the union from distributing handbills informing the public that union men are not employed by the theatre.

Washington's Hollywood is fast coming into existence. Since Harry M. In this section are the home also of Joseph P. Morgan and John J. Payette, who are connected with the Crandall organization, and Edward Sherwood of the Exhibitors Co-operative Film Exchange.

He told of the "block booking" demand of certain companies and also of the uncertainty of pleasing the public. Mr. Savage declared that quality has superseded quantity, and of the future of the industry asserted that "it is not going backward—it is surely going forward. If they care to help, millions of men and women who make up audiences in this country will give the motion picture a square deal," were his concluding words in the article.

Cincinnati's Cox Theatre Swings Into Movie Column

The Cox Theatre, after having housed Shubert dramatic plays and a stock company, recently swung into the movie column, and it was believed that the house would in the future be devoted to pictures exclusively. It now develops, however, that pictures will be occasionally "sandwiched" in between regular attractions. The house has just finished a four weeks' run of "Scaramouche" and is being followed by "Shuffle Along," a musical play by colored performers, after which "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is booked for a screening.

There is a well authenticated report going the rounds that Gus Sun, head of the vaudeville booking office bearing his name, at Springfield, Ohio, is negotiating for the services of Frank Van Hoven, of vaudeville fame, to appear in pictures. St. Louis

The Mid-West Productions Company launched about a year ago by Louis K. Ansell, Aaron A. Fineshriber and Leon de la Mothe has "blown up" and the stockholders are wondering whether they will ever get back any of the money they invested. The company never went into bankruptcy formally, but, to quote Ansell, who was its secretary, it "just petered out." He says that all of the money derived from the sale of stock, and more, went into the cost of promotion cost, such as printing, rent, etc.

Ansell and Fineshriber, owners of the Rainbow Theatre, 5 North Broadway, St. Louis, was induced by de la Mothe about a year ago to launch the Mid-West Productions Company. De la Mothe was made its director general. However, the company never actually did any producing in St. Louis and de la Mothe left the city several weeks ago.

Ansell says that he personally lost $2,500 in the enterprise while Fineshriber dropped $2,000. The company was capitalized for $150,000 and it was planned to sell $60,000 of stock to the public for $100 a share.

Fall Festival Brings Crowds to Kansas City Film Houses

The final week of the Fall Festival, which has been in progress for a month, brought large crowds to Kansas City from out of town. The downtown section of the city was overflowing with humanity. This fact alone was good news to the theatre owner, for when there are crowds, there is business. The last week of the festival saw cooler weather, which also was a stimulant to business. Many of the downtown houses reported a larger patronage during the week and none of them complained of a slump.

The seating capacity of the theatre will be 750 persons. The estimated cost of the structure is $50,000. The theatre will be ready for operation late in December, probably for a first showing on Christmas day.

The Newman Theatre of Kansas City and the Miller Theatre of Wichita recently inaugurated Paramount's "demonstration plan" with "The Spanish Dancer" as the feature attraction.

Three downtown theatres which have been closed for many months reopened here last week. There is much speculation among the trade as to the situation of the downtown theatres this season. The Empress, a large house, is showing musical comedy and pictures at 10-20-30 cent admissions. The Garden, another large house, has a civic comic opera company headed by De Wolf Hopper. The Grand Opera House is showing road shows of the popular priced type. There has always been competition between the movie theatres and those showing pictures and vaudeville. But with the opening of three more theatres, it is a matter of speculation as to the amount of business each house will do. During the first week all reported exceptional business, but some think it might have been due to the Fall Festival. One can only wait for the season to become more advanced.

J. Dittmar and Johnson Musselman, picture men of Louisville. The gardens were unroofed by fire a few weeks ago, and no announcement has been made as yet concerning repairs.

Milwaukee

Blue Laws and "reformers who would substitute the policeman's club for the cross of Christ" were attacked by nationally known speakers at a recent session of the Seventh Day Adventists, now holding their national convention in Milwaukee. Among those who led the discussions on the matter were Prof. C. S. Longacre, secretary of the Religious Liberty Association of America; the Rev. W. F. Martin, California; the Rev. S. B. Horton, Chicago, and W. H. Thornton, Montana.

Theatrical men watching the developments of the convention were particularly interested in a warning sounded by these liberal leaders that reformers are planning to introduce a Sunday bill for the District of Columbia at the next session of Congress, hoping later to use this as a model for the entire country. The Adventists will, as a result, immediately begin organization of its forces to defeat this scheme, the leaders declared.

Picture shows in churches were condemned.

Buffalo Theatre Found Safe; Anonymous Letters Were Lies

Answering a flood of inquiries as to whether or not the new Lafayette Square Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., is safe, Douglas Cornell, structural engineer of the Department of Parks and Public Buildings, has issued the following statement:

"The many anonymous letters and telephone messages calling the attention of the building department to the rumors as to unsafe and dangerous conditions of the Lafayette Square Theatre seem to demand some answer and therefore I submit the following statement:

"These rumors have been in circulation ever since the theatre was first opened, but none of them have ever pointed to any particular thing which would indicate a dangerous condition. The plans for this building were carefully checked by the engineers of this department and made to comply with the building ordinances before the building permit was issued. During construction the building was inspected at various times and the inspectors' reports indicate that it was constructed in conformity with the approved plans. Since said rumors have been in circulation an inspection has been made and not the slightest thing found to indicate an unsafe or dangerous condition."

The owners of the magnificent house hope that this will set at rest for all time the malicious reports which have been circulated from an unknown source for many months. Some reports even went so far as to say that there was a sign in the lobby declaring the house was condemned.

"We have received permission from the trustees to show pictures on Sunday and have never received any instructions to the contrary. We have the personal assurances of some of the trustees that they approve our action. We desire to observe the law and would be pleased to have the village board pass on the matter. The patrons of the moving picture theatres are almost unanimously in favor of Sunday pictures and they number several thousand. Sometimes between 4,000 and 5,000 persons attend the Washington avenue theatres on Sunday."

Howard J. Smith this week is putting on a revival of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Palace Theatre, Buffalo, and packing 'em in like sardines. That one is still a box office attraction, it seems.

Moyer's Little Falls, N. Y., Theatre Opens Auspiciously

Under most auspicious conditions the Gateway Theatre in Little Falls, N. Y., owned by C. H. Moyer, who also runs a house in the neighboring city of Herkimer, was opened Monday night. The theatre has been under course of construction for nearly a year and adds another to the chain of theatres which now occupy the Mohawk valley. Many from Albany attended the opening, the exchanges being represented by several automobile loads which left for Little Falls during the early afternoon. Exhibitors were present from many places. The entire lobby of the house was banked with floral tributes.

There has been a change in Schenectady in opening the week, the State and the Albany opening on Saturdays, while the Strand, also under the management of the recently created Farash Corporation, starting its weeks on Friday. Week runs will prevail at the State, the only exception having been recently when "The Famous Mrs. Fair" was "pulled" after three days and "Cameo Kirby" substituted on short notice. Manager William Shirley of the operating company announces the booking of "Old Time Songs" at the State next week.

Mrs. Patrick Wallace, who runs the Grand in Whitehall, will close her house about November 21 and assume the management of the new Capitol, which is being erected by William Benton in Whitehall. Mr. Benton also conducts theatres in Ballston and Saratoga Springs.

On the policy that it pays to give one's patrons a bit more than they are paying for, Oscar Perrin, manager of the Leland in Albany, has just booked "Little Old New York," "Rupert of Hentzau," "Common Law" and "In the Palace of the King" for straight week runs, at a 25 cent admission.

When it comes to odd names for picture theatres the "Two Bills" at Elizabethtown, N. Y., comes pretty near carrying off first prize in this part of the state. The house is run by Bill Knowlton and Bill Voschel.

According to all reports, picture theatres in the smaller towns in this state are holding their own these days and few complaints are being heard around here of poor business.

After having had their machine overhauled, Jones and Jones, who run a cozy little theatre at Petersburg, N. Y., have reopened their house, running two days a week, giving one day to a Universal program and the other to a Fox.

All because of the fact that he is unable to heat the parish hall, Father McCaffrey of New Lebanon, N. Y., will be unable this winter to entertain the good folks of that village with pictures, as in the past. The house closed Wednesday and will not open until spring brings warmer weather to New Lebanon valley.

There is a report current in this city that Charles Sesonske, well known in Oswego and Watertown as having managed houses there, may take over the Albany in Schenectady and run it as a vaudeville house. While the theatre is included in the combine, it is said that those at the head of the combination are rather anxious to get rid of it.

In Troy, the Griswold still remains closed, with no announcement as yet as to its reopening. While it is generally conceded that the house will run pictures only, it is a question whether they will be first or second runs. George Whelan will continue as manager.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Not so good as the "Hottentot" and the action is not so rapid as the title would have you believe; however, it was satisfactory for a Sunday showing, clean and fairly clever, but it lacked the movement and comedy that is expected of MacLean. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ONE CLEAR CALL. (7,450 feet). Star cast. Good picture, pleased all who saw it. Had average attendance. Draw general

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

What would a producer say if an exhibitor told him, "I'm showing that big feature of yours tonight. I'm leaving out about six titles; probably there will be half a dozen big scenes cut short.

"Oh, yes—and the film will be stopped a few times at unexpected places. Besides, the climax of the whole picture will be chopped up."

Mr. Producer would go right up in the air!

Then why let his exchanges send to exhibitors prints that ARE IN THAT CONDITION?

THREE JUMPS AHEAD. (4,854 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Some hard riding, good-sub-titles, an attractive leading lady Alma Bennett, a few thrills, and comedy make this a good western. Tom Mix always draws well for me. One person didn't care much for this but said that was probably due to the fact that he had seen Tom in "Soft Boiled" just a few days before. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HER DANGEROUS PATH (Pathe-Serial). A different type of serial. Attracts a different type of patrons, especially the ladies. I admitted all ladies free on opening night. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

FRENCH DOLL (Metro). While a very good picture, not up to Mae Murray's standard. Do not raise admission prices. It will please seventy-five per cent. but may disappoint Murray fans. Fair moral tone, not suitable for Sunday in small town. J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

CIRCUS DAYS (First National). Did not draw the adults as expected but more than pleased those who came. Made money at that; second night better than first. It's a very good picture and better than "Oliver Twist." J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star cast. Little entertainment value here and patrons voted it tedious. As to box office value would term it a lemon. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

EBB TIDE. Star cast. Pleased an average Wednesday crowd. Two reels too long. Film punk. Has good moral tone and is too rough for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

EXCITERS. (5,039 feet). Star cast. A very satisfactory and pleasing picture all the way. It seems to be the type the movie audiences of today like best. Miss Daniels is good and Antonio Moreno is particularly good, putting over a crook-detective role in a manner that pleased. Our people seemed to like it very much for three nights. Not exactly suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw general working class in city of 18,000. Admission 10-20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

FOR THE DEFENCE. Star, Ethel Clayton. Another old one. Just got by here. Star has quite a following due to her splendid personal reputation. This is just a good program picture. Not ideal for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GO-GETTER. (7,771 feet). Star, Roy Barnes. In six reels this would have been a hundred per cent plus picture. Film fine. Has absolutely clean moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had below average attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. (6,658 feet). Star cast. Fair program picture. Some liked it and some did not care for it. Will get by if you don't promise much. Used ones, slide. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star Theodore Roberts. One of the most intelligently handled pictures I've seen. Roberts is great, balance of cast capable and the clever handling of the simple story will delight the better element. It pleased extra well for us. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Two days is our usual maximum run but we gave this one four days at raised prices. Held up for good business all days. Created much discussion which brought business. Everyone satisfied. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Attendance better than usual. Draw all classes in town of 8,000. J. E. Madison, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star cast. An exceedingly interesting picture and well worth seeing. It's a bracing yarn of the world of ships. Swift as a gale and as mighty as the sea. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JAVA HEAD. (7,365 feet). Star cast. A peculiar combination here. A beautiful production, intelligently staged, but the two leading feminine members of cast are entirely miscast. Leatrice Joy does not look well as the Manchu Princess and Jacqueline Logan cannot play the American girl. Costume paper kept them out. Why do they try to force costume stuff on us? Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had very poor attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. An exceptionally good crook story that was admirably produced. Lytell shows to advantage in this type of a picture. Supporting cast good. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star cast. Good production. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A program picture very similar to "The Sheik," possibly better. Lots of action, well produced but producers should realize that patrons are tired of oriental stuff. Advertising slant, state it is equal to "The Sheik" with the action of a serial. Good attendance, drawing farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Stood well and pleased the people. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good picture that pleased my audience. Fast moving drama that ought to please anyone. Dalton is a good drawing card here. Good moral tone; suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing all classes in town of 2,500. Admission 10 to 55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (500 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Good picture but not as good as "While Satan Sleeps." It is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

MISSION MILLIONS. (5,870 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Clever crook drama. Film fine. Has good moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

NTH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A fair show of some human interest. Patrons commented favorably on it and several were quite enthusiastic in their praise. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

A Late Vitagraph

MAN NEXT DOOR (Vitagraph)). An entertaining picture with good comedy. Will not please the women, but the men will like it. Not the type a woman cares for, but they won't kick very much on it. Print good. Draw university students and better class. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. Good cast; well acted and very pleasing. Did average business with regular advertising. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. Cor'ing good picture. Pleased most all of them. Story was new, keen, fine, and dandy. Play it boys and you will be pleased so will the congregation. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Good attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES. Prints tore all up. Leaders gone. Ends gone. All exhibitors in small towns should write them up. Good picture, bum prints. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

RACING HEARTS. (5,600 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A splendid automobile story and a picture that most anyone should enjoy. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Very, very good picture; pleased all. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,900. Admission 10-25. Strand Theatre (300 seats), Pierce, Nebraska.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. A rousing romance of the early West with the tremendous sweep of action for which the author is noted. Produced under Zane Grey's personal supervision, and actually screened in the picturesque cattle and sheep country of Arizona. The picture is splendid. See it for yourself and be convinced. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. This picture with two very fine stars has more thrills and more action than any other picture therefore will please your audience. I am sure

YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE. (5,703 feet). Stars, Leatrice Joy, Lewis Stone. Good picture of its class; too long, could have been in five reels. Miss Joy, Miss Naldi and Mr. Stone do good work. Paid too much for this so did not come out. It might pull in some sections of the country but didn't do much here. Pleased about sixty per cent. Fair moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of all classes in town of 2,500. Admission 10 to 55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (500 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. I was afraid of this feature, as I have read so many adverse criticisms, but I only wish all the pictures on the market were as good entertainment as this one. It pleased a greater percentage of the audience than "Blood and Sand." The price was right. Paramount has always been fair on film rentals with me, and they send along a print instead of an apology for your money. "The Young Rajah" will please any type of audience. I used slide, billboards and Paramount Week advertising. A very stormy night, so the attendance was poor. Used slide, heralds, billboards. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Pathe

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Lloyd's comedies draw them in and please everyone. The kids went wild about it and some came the second time to see it. It is there. Had good attendance, S. R. O. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Preferred

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. (6,971 feet). Star cast. Very fine picture. Direction, story, settings, photography all that could be as ed for. Suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

Selznick

GRUB STAKE. (8,061 feet). Star, Nell Shipman. You find this a good one. In fine shape. Only thing have against this one it's too long and somewhat draggy. If you run it put a single reel comedy or news with it. We ran a two reel comedy with it and made too long a show of hot weather. Did fair business for two days. Bought the picture right. This one is better than "Quicksands" with the same star. Push on this one. It will stand it. Might say fine scenes and snow stuff. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S JUNGLE ADVENTURES. Ran this early in the summer hoping to reap from big publicity that was being given "Trailing African Wild Animals." Was careful to advertise that there were pictures from Johnson's previous trip. Worked hard to put it across, but it threw me for the worst flop I've had in months. The production is good, although probably rather tame in comparison to Johnson's last production or Snow's. The titles are worthy of special mention. I consider the showing of this type of picture one of the loftiest missions of the industry. I am just starting advance work of Johnson's last picture. Am letting the schools in on this for a percentage. If we don't pack them in, I'm no showman. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A masterpiece and that's that, nothing more to say. It cost money to make. It will cost you money to get and if you do buy it, you've got to get busy every minute prior to opening, for you must get them in on the first show. My experience was at the price I could hardly afford to have an empty seat. A grand time was had by all my patrons, and ever since the exhibit I have been trying to figure how I came out. I said "out." Usual advertising brought great attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star Reginald Denny. Very good picture. Lots of action, good plot, splendid photography.

Pleasing comedy touches by Buddy Messenger. Heard nothing but praise from my patrons. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

CONFLICT. (6,205 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This picture would have gone over strong if the exchange had shipped us a good print. The way it was it was terrible as half of the house walked out in the middle of the show. The same old stuff—a good picture, but Oh! what a print. Usual advertising gave good attendance. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good, and will please most everybody. The horse racing scene is particularly good and creates lots of excitement with both adults and children. Condition of print good. Had good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A good program picture with plenty of action but should have been a little longer as some of the scenes are not exactly finished although the picture pleased very much. Moral tone o. k. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

KINDLED COURAGE. (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Edward does good in this. Don't know why they change from Hoot to Edward when they hop from two reels to five. The western fans want to know Hoot. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

KINDLED COURAGE. (8,400 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. About the best Hoot Gibson picture we ever ran. Not so much western as his others usually are, but good supporting cast, good story, and Gibson better than usual. Poor attendance. Fred J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

McGUIRE OF THE MOUNTED. (5,020 feet). Star, William Desmond. A very good program picture. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NOBODY'S BRIDE. (4,861 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good clean entertainment. Pleased all. Rawlinson goes good here. Everybody seemed pleased. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PAID BACK. Star cast. An extra good program production that seemed to please about eighty per cent of our patrons. While theme is rather daring, it is handled in a clean manner and will not give offence. Moral tone excellent; suitable for Sunday. Average attendance of family (mostly labor class) in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

POWER OF A LIE. (4,910 feet). Star cast. A very good picture but failed to draw Saturday crowd as they look for raw stuff here on that day. Suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in big city. Admission always ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. This is not the usual type of picture for Rawlinson, but it will get by where he has a following. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

SIX DAYS (Go'dwyn). This is one of the best pictures ever shown in Dallas; unanimous approval of everyone who saw it. Lighting is exquisite; settings are very beautiful. Direction of Charles Brabin faultless. Acting of stars and cast splendid. A 100% picture. S. Charninski & R. Stinnett, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP (Paramount). Here is the best picture of the year. It simply was a knockout; heard more good comments on this than any other picture I have run in many a day. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico. (Fuller report later, space prevents full use here.)

SECOND HAND ROSE. (5 reels). Star, Gladys Walton. A dandy little picture. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

SHOOTING FOR LOVE. (5,100 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Hoot Gibson's pleasing action pictures. Ran it to a holiday crowd and they raved about it. For the western type of action stories this lad does the best of any we get. Has good moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw working class in city of 18,000. Admission 10-20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Nothing to it, and unless they put him back in Westerns, I don't want any more Hoot Gibsons. My patrons don't care for him in this type picture. Attendance fair. Draw all classes in small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. They substituted this one for "Man To Man." Fair northern drama, but wouldn't class it as an extra special or Jewel. Has fair moral tone. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Had some audience appeal, still did not mean anything above the average at the box office. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good picture of its kind but does not appeal. My patrons don't like this kind and had several knocks on it. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Vitagraph

BLACK BEAUTY. (7 reels). Star, Jean Paige. A splendid picture; better than the book. Pleased over ninety per cent. Fine photography, good film, although a few subtitles cut short. The trailer somewhat misleading to those unfamiliar with the book—too many thrills in it—gets them in all right

PIONEER TRAILS (Vitagraph). A mighty, mighty satisfactory western with good cast. I haven't seen "Covered Wagon" but if it satisfies any better than this one it is some picture, and from what I hear from those of my patrons who have seen the run in Chicago, that is a great picture; but I am willing to bet that with the price this will be held at (and perhaps what it is worth) I will have more money from this "P. T." than I will from the "C. W." This is not a knock-'em-dead, drag-'em-out, but a real drama with some splendid acting and a story!—which most Westerns do not have. A worth while production that is worth the money and the effort to get them in, knowing that those who ordinarily do not like this type will be satisfied. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

but the thrills are not in such profusion as the trailer leads them to expect. Moral tone of picture excellent. Used ones, threes, twenty-fours, slides, dodgers. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FLOWERS OF THE NORTH. (7,130 feet). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A Curwood that I approached with some apprehension on account of the only moderate rating given in World review and consensus. However, I was completely satisfied. Furthermore it proved to be a drawing card and I believe pleased a large percentage. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN. (8,000 feet). Star, William Duncan. This is a reissue and a new print. Everyone enjoyed the picture. Many had seen it before and glad to see it again. Did not play a big price but did big business. Pictures are like the styles; if a woman came down the street in a fig leaf she would be a big attraction, the same can be said of some old programs. Had capacity attendance. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrock, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

LOYAL LIVES. (5,950 feet). Star, Brandon Tynan. Melodrama from start to finish with a little comedy now and then. But if they like "meller" play it. It can be bought for a fair price and it pleased fairly well here; in the face of a tough storm I did pretty well. A picture that's a little better than program. Usual advertising brought pretty good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LUCKY CARSON. (5 reels). Star, Earle Williams. Fair program picture that pleased about seventy per cent. Showed this with a round of the "Leather Pushers" and an "International News Reel" and got by with it O. K. Action very slow but Earle Williams plays his part fairly well. Photography poor in spots. Title led patrons to believe this would be action picture. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MAN FROM DOWNING STREET. (4,950 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Quite a pleasing little program picture. Had a number of favorable comments. Earle Williams does some good acting in this mystery drama. Good week-day picture. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Entertaining but hardly a special except in price and cast. Had good attendance. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Played this behind ourselves, second run, and excellent. Rich business. Most universally liked picture we have ever played. Work of Irene Rich wonderful. Story strong, and characters well drawn. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had capacity attendance. Draw best and middle classes in city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. N. L. Royster, Capitol Theatre (340 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Very good production. Fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MAIN STREET. (8,000 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A Warner Brothers classic that is a classic. Cast headed by Monte Blue and Florence Vidor is well chosen and does excellent work throughout. The only disappointing thing about this feature is the length. Nine reels is too long for a picture that could have been done in seven at the most. Do not be afraid to book this and advertise it well. It is worth an increased admission. Many said it was more entertaining than the book which has been BLACKSMITH. (First National). Not Keaton's best, but pretty good. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

NEWLY RICH. (Pathe). Snub's stunts in this new two reeler are not as convincing as in some of his old single reels. It is rough stuff and lacks the finer points that go to make a high class comedy. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

PEANUTS. (Universal). About the poorest one reel comedy we ever ran. Will someone tell the kid that he is not a comedian? Nothing wrong with moral tone. Not suitable for any day. Draw family class (mostly labor) in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

PUNCTURED PRINCE. (Metro). A good comedy with as many laughs as possible for 2,000 feet of film. First Montana comedy I ever used and if that's a fair sample, I'd say he's a good bet. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

THREE WEEKS OFF. (Universal). Star, Lee Moran. Some new fun; this is the best Lee Moran so far. Will set by if your audience isn't too critical. Good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

UNCLE BIM. (Universal-Gumps). This is the first of the Universal "Andy Gump" comedies and it seemed to please. Two freak characters such as Andy and Uncle BIM put the story over. They look considerably like the cartoon drawings. They are elaborately mounted and Universal has spent some money in producing them. Looks like they will make good anywhere. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Short Subjects

COLUMBIA THE GEM & THE OCEAN. (Universal). One of the "Leather Pusher Series" that was not up to the standard. The prize fight pulled off in the water was so prolonged that a good many of the "regulars" kicked. Seems that the director slipped and tried to make a slapstick comedy out of this one. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

FIGHTING BLOOD. Round 9. (F. B. O.) This is a good one. You won't need any comedy when you run round No. 9. It has enough comedy and good comedy. "Fighting Blood" is getting better as it goes along. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

HARD TO BEAT. (Universal). Star, Roy Stewart. A fair program picture; nothing either good or bad in it. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 177. (Pathe). As usual good. Something worth while. Has good moral tone and is always suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

State Rights

BORDER BANDIT KILLER. (Enterprise Dist). An excellent picture, well executed and full of pep. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CYCLONE JONES. (Progress). Star, Big Boy Williams. A lemon for me. Five thousand feet of absolutely nothing. Leave this one alone. Used ones, threes. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance and am glad of it. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

IMPULSE. (Arrow). Star, Neva Gerber. (4,505 feet). Only fair picture, nothing to rave about; will prove fair entertainment to the indiscriminating patrons. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SADDLE GIRTH. (Jans Distributing Co.) Star, Tom Mix. Don't boost these old Mix pictures as they are sure rotten and will give the present day Mix a black eye. Steer clear, regardless of what the salesman may say. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

STREETS OF NEW YORK. (Arrow). Star cast. (7 reels). An excellent society melodrama adapted from the old stage play. Made a hit with our audiences and should do as well wherever the old "melo" is liked. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre (1,100 seats), Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

Monogram Pictures Offers Six Westerns Featuring Fred Thomson

By ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN,
President Monogram Pictures Corporation

We have made a year and a half's careful survey of the State Right market, particularly that market that has again been revived and is becoming so popular—Western pictures. Today there is being offered five or six series, or more, of Western pictures, all of them more or less alike. It may be a new face as a featured player, but in the essential the same theme, with the same mountains and plains back of them.

To successfully conclude and know a subject thoroughly one must start with the foundation, whether it be in thinking or building. We, therefore, start with the assured successes that the screen recognizes as indisputable. In 1906 George M. Anderson, "Bronco Billy," offered two-reel Westerns wherein he was the hero in the morning and doubling, in the afternoon, as the heavy. His stories were turned out at the rate of two a week, which satisfied and soothed the public of that time.

In 1910 to 1912 we graduated into the five-reel Western picture, in which William Hart pleased the public with films that were satisfying for those days.

Douglas Fairbanks came into Western pictures with personality plus, at the same time introducing into those Westerns a few well-planted, well-played and well-delivered stunts. He left that field to be succeeded by Tom Mix, who today gives us Western atmosphere, an attractive horse, some rough-riding and a little bull-dogging.

In the interim, four or five of the lesser stars, taking advantage of these major stars, have furnished the none too exacting audiences with just "Westerns." If Fairbanks was a star and a success, because of the Western pictures, together with the athletic ability that the man has, and if Mix was a star in Western pictures, combined with the athletic stunts and Western dare-devil ideas he injected into his pictures, why not continue to give your audiences that which has made two stars?

The reason we have not heretofore continued with such pictures was because there was no one on the market, especially the independent market, who has been thus far able to compete with either of these gentlemen.

The attendance and gross that "The Covered Wagon" has brought—together with the success of "Salomy Jane," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Bad Man"—have reiterated tenfold that which we already know: That, irrespective of age, American men and women have inborn in them that patriotic feeling and respect for their forefathers, who blazed trails across the prairies, and they want to see the spirit of the West carried on. All this being so, to succeed in a field of keen competition one must offer the exhibitors and public more than they are getting today in that class of pictures.

We are, therefore, in a position to offer to the exhibitors a series of six Western pictures, featuring Fred Thomson, who, if you will recall, was champion all-around athlete of the world. He has had a great deal of picture experience with Mary Pickford in "The Love Light," Universal's "The Eagle's Talons," etc. He also has to offer to the screen athletic and stunt ability which we have injected into our pictures. We are giving the public the Western picture in Western atmosphere, together with big sets, exceptional cast and the stunts that made reputations for Fairbanks and Mix.

Miriam in Theatre

Miriam Battista, child star of "The Steadfast Heart," and known throughout the country for the success of her personal appearances, is giving a one-act performance in Pittsburgh this week, October 22, during the showing of "The Steadfast Heart," at the Blackstone Theatre.

Creative Films Has Finished Sea Story

Fred C. Kusse, Sr., president of the Creative Film Corporation, announces the completion of "Superstition," a thrilling story of the sea. The shooting of the film has been completed under the direction of John B. O'Brien and it is now being edited and titled at the Hollywood Studios. One of the greatest all star casts that could be assembled was gathered together to present "Superstition." These include John Bowers, Margaret De La Motte, Sheldon Lewis, Joseph Dowling, Edward Burns, Spottiswoode Aitken, Cesare Gravina, Claire McDowell, Martha Marshall and others. The story was adapted from I. W. Irving's story, "Trapped," by Frank Beresford.

According to the announcement no time, care or expense has been spared to make "Superstition" one of the really big feature productions of the year.

Many of the scenes were taken at sea and a big three-masted old-time sailing vessel was chartered for four weeks by W. H. Carr, production manager, of the organization, for the film.

Company Preparing Its Activities

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., of which Ben Blumenthal is president and Louis Auerbach vice-president, is now prepared to push its activities in all territories, and in order to do this will probably take over the world rights to a large number of American productions in the next few weeks. The company has its own branch offices in London, Paris, Berlin and Budapest and has agents in all the principal capitals of the world.

Yokel Is Named to Direct Publicity

L. Lawrence Weber, producer of "Little Jessie James," now playing at the Longacre Theatre, announces that he has appointed Alex Yokel general director of publicity of theatrical enterprises. Mr. Yokel is a former dramatic editor of the Chicago Examiner and of late has exploited a number of feature motion pictures which have played in the legitimate theatres.

Artclass Finishes New Production

Max Weiss, vice-president and general manager of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces the completion of their new production, "One Night," the production having been cut and titled by Katharine Hilliker, and is rumored as being a very big picture. The mode of release has not as yet been determined.

Two Players Added to Cast

Two interesting names have been added to the cast of Mildred Davis' first Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher, as yet untitled. They are Miles McCarthy, who plays a detective, and Margaret Cullington, doing an old maid role.

Beau Brummel Pretentious

The forthcoming Warner classic, "Beau Brummel," in which John Barrymore is starred, is declared by Jack Warner, production manager, to be the biggest and most pretentious production that has ever faced the camera for the Warner organization.

In points of cast, sets and elaborate costuming, the Barrymore production surpasses any of the eight productions that have already been completed by the Warners. Almost a thousand costumes typifying the periods of 1795, 1814 and 1821 have been assembled by the research and wardrobe departments for the filming.

Fadman Announces Organization Plans Completed for Red Seal

Edwin Miles Fadman announces that organization plans have been completed for the formation of the national distribution company known as the Red Seal Pictures Corporation. Offices have been opened on the tenth floor, 1600 Broadway.

Fadman is president and general manager. Harold Rodner is vice-president and Max Fleischer, treasurer.

Fadman will be remembered as the producer and distributor of the unusual "Einstein Theory of Relativity" film. The skepticism with which his idea was originally greeted of putting the Einstein theory on the screen was changed overnight into enthusiastic commendation, as the film successfully played circuit after circuit throughout the country following upon its phenomenal four weeks' run on Broadway.

Rodner is well known in the New York Metropolitan District for his successful distribution there of such novelties as "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies," "Felix the Cat Comedies," "Screen Snapshots," etc. Rodner was previously affiliated with the Stanley Company in Philadelphia for many years.

Max Fleischer needs no introduction to film men. The creator of the famous "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies" has been advertised from coast to coast by his mirth-provoking clown.

Fadman's idea in the formation of this company is based upon the fact that study of the present day film industry has convinced him that "expensive pictures" do not necessarily mean "better pictures," and it is "better pictures" that exhibitors and public want.

"The soaring costs of production will eventually bring about their own downfall," said Fadman. "The exhibitor pays and pays and pays, but there is a limit even to his ability to pay. As the producer's costs for "super-pictures" rise from one-half million to a million, to a million and a half and now the two million mark, signs of uneasiness on the part of the exhibitors become more and more pronounced.

"The time must inevitably come, in fact the time is here, when the value of a picture will be judged not by the number of dollars that it costs but by the amount of entertainment it gives. Applying this standard to most of our 'super-pictures' they flop miserably. The public is interested in seeing a good story spun out before them. They are not so much interested in knowing that the set they are looking at cost $100,000 to construct.

"The public further wants novelty pictures, pictures that have something of the unusual about them. America is the original home of novelty and through its very wide-awakeness, will continue to be that. Novelties in any line of industry receive a greater reward in America than in any other country in the world.

"I expect to place our company in the foreground in providing exchange men and the public with unusual and distinctive pictures."

The Red Seal Corporation promises some interesting announcements regarding distribution plans within the next few days. For the present the company will operate on a state-right basis.

Harlan Knight in Burr Picture

Harlan Knight, portrayer of rural types and who has often appeared on the same big time vaudeville bills with Charles "Chic" Sale, has been engaged by C. C. Burr to play in support of the star in his first feature picture under the Burr management.

Goulding Helping Prepare Script

Alf Goulding is assisting in the preparation of the script for Monty Banks first five-reel comedy feature which will shortly be started at the Grand Studio under Herman Raymaker's direction.

Shirk Is Writing Mystery Story

Adam Hull Shirk is now engaged upon a new mystery story for the screen which will probably be made into a picture later on. He wrote the story for "The Satin Girl" which Ben Wilson produced for Grand-Asher with Mabel Forrest starred and Norman Kerry featured.

Burr Productions in Big Deal

Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution of Mastodon Films, Inc., reports that the Michigan territory on the entire output of C. C. Burr productions for the season 1923-24, has been bought by William Hurlbut of the Favorite Film Company, Inc., Detroit.

Webb to Direct Burr Picture

When C. C. Burr signed Constance Binney for a starring series of features to be distributed on the Independent market, he recalled that "The Stolen Kiss," Miss Binney's great screen success, was directed by Kenneth Webb. Mr. Burr, therefore, engaged Webb to direct "Three o'Clock in the Morning," the star's first C. C. Burr production, written by Mann Page and scenariorized by Gerald C. Duffy.

Standard Laboratory to Remain on Coast

John M. Nickolaus, vice-president of the Standard Film Laboratories, is emphatic in his denial of rumors current in Hollywood that the flying visit of S. M. Tompkins, president of that concern, to New York in any way looks toward the establishment of a branch of the Standard in that territory.

"There is positively not a single reason why we should establish a plant in or around New York and every reason why we can function to greater advantage here," declared Nickolaus. "The talk of us entering the eastern field is ridiculous. On the other hand it is the eastern laboratory which must come to the west coast or be forced from business.

"I feel that I am being conservative when I point out that more than ninety per cent. of the motion pictures made in the United States today are being produced on the west coast. Since the Standard Film Laboratories first entered the field it has been our unceasing contention that the release prints should be made where the negative print is made, and more and more of the producers have come to see this our way, with the result that our business in this line has been steadily growing.

"Today, with practically every big producer abandoning their eastern studios, there is far greater reason for us ignoring the eastern territory than there was a year ago.

"Our contention has always been that, working in co-operation with the producer, director and cameraman through the making and the cutting of the picture, our laboratories are the only ones in the industry who can give to the releasing organization the best prints from the negatives we have made.

"We know the feeling and mood the producer has endeavored to put into his picture and give him our assistance in accurately presenting this to the public by making an absolutely honest release print from a negative in which the tints and densities have been painstakingly worked over and the timing is in keeping with the tempo of the picture.

"The Standard Film Laboratories, in less than three years, through quality work, have risen to the point where their volume of work is not exceeded by any laboratory in the United States."

"A Bride for a Knight" In an Important Deal

An important picture deal has just been consummated with the Syracuse Motion Picture Company whereby the Producers' Security Corporation will handle the general territorial distribution for a new five-reel comedy entitled "A Bride for a Knight," which is headed by a cast of well known players led by Henry Hull and Mary Thurman. The story and direction of this new comedy are by Hamilton Smith.

"A Bride for a Knight" was no sooner announced on the independent market than M. H. Hoffman, president of the Renown Exchanges bought it for his New York, Buffalo and Chicago exchanges. The Producers' Security Corporation is lining up many big city openings for "A Bride for a Knight" and has been flooded with inquiries for territorial rights, it is said. A special line of lithographs, cuts and press book are now in work and will be off the press within a week.

"A Bride for a Knight" is a typical story of the big city of today and was designed for laughing purposes only notwithstanding that the author-director, Hamilton Smith, gave the film some absorbing crook angles. The cast includes besides Henry Hull and Mary Thurman, Chas. Craig, William H. Tooker, Marcia Harris, Alyce Mills, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Tammany Young and Billy Quirk.

Export and Import Buys Twelve Chaplin Films

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., has just announced its purchase of the famous twelve Chaplin classics for the entire world with the exception of the United States and Canada. It will immediately reissue these comedy masterpieces and will have brand new prints made up for all territories.

The Chaplin pictures included in the list of twelve are: "The Count," "The Floorwalker," "The Rink," "The Fireman," "The Cure," "Easy Street," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen," "The Immigrant," "The Adventurer," "One A. M." and "The Vagabond."

C. C. Burr a "Square Shooter" Say Many State Right Men

A short while ago, Samuel Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc., Boston, Mass., conducted an extensive correspondence with leading state right men on the subject of Independent film product. The answers proved very interesting. Writing to Mr. C. C. Burr, Mr. Moscow said:

"I have learned first hand that the Independent distributor in the United States has the utmost confidence in your ability to produce the type of picture which goes to make up the big exchange, and when I say big, I mean the type of exchange with which exhibitors are glad to do business.

"Sometime ago, I took the liberty of writing many of the Independent men in the United States requesting from them an expression of opinion with reference to the condition of the Independent market. I was extremely gratified at the replies I received, which I am mailing you today."

Practically all the replies received by Mr. Moscow contained lines of praise for and confidence in C. C. Burr, as is shown by the following extracts picked at random from a score or more of letters.

"We feel that Mr. Burr is one of the squarest shooters in the Independent field," wrote James Alexander of the Columbia Film Service, Inc., Pittsburg, "and it is our intention to give him all the aid we possibly can. We sincerely hope that your letter has gone forward to a number of the Independent exchanges as we feel that Mr. Burr should be backed up to the utmost by Independent exchanges."

"My business dealings with Burr have always been of a most amicable nature and his product has proved a profitable investment," wrote Wm. Skirboll of Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, Inc., Cleveland.

"We are willing to co-operate with you in any way to keep C. C. Burr's output on the Independent market," wrote David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia. "We fully realize Mr. Burr's qualities as a producer."

"You can rest assured that I will go to great length in keeping Mr. Burr in the Independent field," wrote Si Greiver of Greiver Productions, Chicago. "Count on me for anything that will be of mutual benefit to keep Mr. Burr in this status."

"I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Burr about a year ago, and I too, feel that he will be able to do a whole lot for we Independents," wrote E. A. Sherwood of the Exhibitor's Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.

"I quite agree that his name (Mr. Burr's) stands for that which is best among the Independent producers," wrote George N. Montgomery of the Supreme Film Company, Los Angeles. "His pictures have been generally good, having brought money to the box-office and some prestige and profit to the Exchange, but above all his organization has been fair and business-like throughout."

"As far as Mr. Burr's productions are concerned, I bought 100 per cent. this year and would be glad to do the same next year. You can rest assured that I will stand up when it comes to doing business with Chas. Burr," stated Robert Lynch of Metro Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia.

"Our past co-operation with Mr. Burr has demonstrated this fact (our support) and you might assure him that in the future we are one hundred percent ready to co-operate with him," stated Louis Hyman of All Star Features Distributors, Inc., San Francisco.

"I wish to say that we have bought every picture that Mr.

Burr has offered so far," stated Floyd Brown of the Lieber Company, Indianapolis, "and fully intend to continue doing business with him. His pictures have been very satisfactory and if he continues to make pictures of the same calibre he can count on us and he knows this."

"The French Doll" Coast Premiere

Mae Murray and her director-husband, Robert Z. Leonard, attended the opening of "The French Doll," Miss Murray's latest Metro picture, at Loew's Warfield Theatre in San Francisco last week. A record audience was in attendance to greet the famous pair of the motion picture colony as they entered the theatre. "The French Doll" received enthusiastic ovations from the spectators.

Mabel Forrest and Washburn Welcomed

The Grand Studio has been renovated from top to bottom during the absence of the stars and others in New York and on their return to resume production around the first of the month everything will be in tip-top shape.

Glowing reports of the reception accorded Bryant Washburn, Elliott Dexter, Mabel Forrest and others in Albuquerque, Kansas City, Chicago and New York, have been received. A veritable ovation was accorded them in these cities, especially in Chicago where they had several hours between trains. This is Bryant Washburn's and Mabel Forrest's old stamping ground.

It is understood that new stories have been arranged for which will occupy the attention of the respective producing stars on their return, while Ben Wilson, who is in the party also, will arrange for further vehicles for Mabel Forrest.

In New York, according to newspaper reports, the movie party was informally received at the Astor where a party was held for newspaper and magazine representatives and prominent people in other branches of the industry.

A Warner Film Nearing Finish

Within the fortnight Ernst Lubitsch will have completed the filming of the major portion of his second American production, "The Marriage Circle," which he is making for the Warner Brothers.

While nothing of a definite nature is known regarding Lubitsch's next production for the Warners under the terms of the contract in which the director will produce two features annually, it is intimated that the story under consideration will be of a sensational nature.

"Yesterday's Wife" Pleases Author

Evelyn Campbell, the author of "Yesterday's Wife" is now in New York to confer with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation officials with regard to several stories that she has written and which she would like the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to produce.

Immediately upon Evelyn Campbell's arrival in New York, she went to see "Yesterday's Wife" at one of the largest theatres in New York and she was elated to see the manner in which the audience received this picture.

Miss Campbell was enthusiastic with regard to her opinion of "Yesterday's Wife." Miss Campbell is also the author of "The Marriage Market" which has just been completed at the Coast by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

"Barefoot Boy" on Broadway

Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, and the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation have entered into an arrangement whereby they will give a pre-view of "The Barefoot Boy" at one of the Broadway theatres.

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation officials have in mind a similar pre-view of the picture in every big city of the United States where the women's clubs and various civic and teachers organizations will be invited so they may co-operate locally with the exhibitors in every city to make "The Barefoot Boy" a big success.

ANOTHER BOX-OFFICE WINNER, CRITICS and EXHIBITORS UNANIMOUSLY DECLARE:

Harrison's Reports writes: "FORGIVE AND FORGET—AN ALL-STAR CAST—A GOOD MYSTERY STORY—ALL INCIDENTS AND COMPLICATIONS VERY CLOSE TO LIFE—HOLDS THE INTEREST WELL FROM START TO FINISH."

Dorothy Daye, of the New York Telegraph, says that "FORGIVE AND FORGET" is "A STORY FULL OF DRAMATIC INCIDENTS—KEEPS THE AUDIENCE IN SUSPENSE—THE BEST THING ON THE SCREEN."

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

Canadian Manager Puts Birthday Scheme Upon a New and Interesting Foundation

APPARENTLY it was Fred V. Greene, Jr., who started the birthday greeting scheme a year or so ago. At his suggestion managers obtained the birth dates of their patrons and sent a greeting card and a pass on these anniversaries.

For a time the idea created good will worth thousands of dollars for the picture theatres through the country, but lately it seems to have been dropped, else it has become such a matter of routine that it is no longer reported. It remained for the manager of the Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, to take the idea up again and give it a twist that offers a new aspect.

For the Children

He has formed the Royal Theatre Birthday Club, with a constitution and officers and a code of rules framed by the owner-manager. It may be that this idea will be permitted to drop, as other angles have lapsed, but the Royal offers a wholly new scheme so good that it can be run for a year or more without the interest dropping.

A membership application is printed in the local paper, with spaces for the name of the child, the age at the next birthday, the date by month and year, place of birth and present residence.

Admission to membership is without cost and is open to every juvenile in the Province, though it is to be presumed that only children in nearby towns will be interested. These are provided for in a clause in the rules of the club which reads: "Members living outside of Dartmouth will be given a complimentary pass on presentation of their membership cards. The pass may be for one or more shows or for a week or longer, in the discretion of the management."

This may sound like reckless generosity, yet few children will come alone, and those who accompany them will pay full prices for their admissions.

In addition to this courtesy to the non-resident members, there are frequent treats to the resident children. Each child will be given a party on its birthday and in addition there are special parties for boys, and for girls, and for individuals.

These treats are advertised in the local paper, (apparently with no cost to the theatre), and a current issue carries a number of announcements. Three children are advised that their membership cards will be good for free admission on specified dates, two are told to bring a friend, one boy is invited to bring his parents and two fortunates who have birthdays within the week are told to bring five friends each. There is also expression of regret that one of the members whose anniversary falls within the week has moved too far from the town to be invited, and a pleasant message is sent to him.

All of these messages are supplemented with letters from three out-of-town members of the club, along the familiar children's club lines, and the whole makes a good department for the paper, which explains the free space.

Such a scheme goes beyond the usual birthday idea and makes an improvement on the various clubs along the more familiar lines of the Jackie Coogan clubs in that it is a weekly feature and not useful only when a Coogan feature is in sight.

And for an ace in the hole the president of the club is elected by vote to hold office during the pleasure of the management. If things get dull they can always hold an election and jazz up a bit.

Taken by, large and sideways, this looks to be a whale of a business holder. Try it on your own patrons.

David Lloyd George Helped an Exploit

There seems to be nothing particularly slow about Oral D. Cloakley, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa. With the United States and Dominion of Canada talking about the visit of the former premier, he hooked David Lloyd George to a stunt on Why Worry with the consent of the brainy Welshman.

He was working a Don't Worry Club on the Harold Lloyd picture of that title, and following the English custom he made the visitor the "Honorary Secretary" of the club and received an acceptance of the nomination. The headquarters of the club was in a florist's store, but another merchant hunted Cloakley up and persuaded him to open a branch. The club idea is getting frayed at the edges since the original "Clarence" club, but the Honorary Secretary put a powerful kick into the revival.

All told Mr. Cloakley worked 34 stunts on the comedy, including the ambulance to carry away hysterical patrons, and a liberal tie-up to the title, not alone in a newspaper display but in windows and on taxicabs, the letter asking "Why worry about transportation?" He got a two-page newspaper hook-up with special hook-in's with banks on "Why Worry about the future" when you could start a savings account and provide for the coming rainy days.

There was a special showing to the Mayor and some invited guests, including Lord Birkenhead, who was in Ottawa on a visit, and who was also made a member of the club. He also sent a certificate to "Lord Renfrew," but the Prince sent no acceptance, though Cloakley got a press story out of the mailing.

Our own F. H. Richardson was also made a member.

He also worked a unique combination in advertising the Japanese earthquake with Why Worry. It was a jazzy campaign and got unusual attention—and receipts.

A Pathe Release

TWO OF THE THIRTY-FOUR STUNTS WORKED FOR WHY WORRY BY ORAL D. CLOAKLEY

The Why Worry Club window made so much talk that a second merchant went over to the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, and persuaded Mr. Cloakley to give him a similar display. It must be good when they ask for a chance to come in. The other is the familiar ambulance stunt, but it was new in Ottawa, so it was brand new. They made Lloyd George Honorary Secretary and he took the nomination. Not so slow, what!

Lem Is Wenting

Lem Stewart, who developed the exploitation department of the former Southern Enterprises until his local managers did better work than most exploitation experts, and who has been connected with the theatres department of Famous Players-Lasky since the string was taken over, is leaving.

He came up to the New York offices to handle from here the same work he had been doing in the South, but he feels that the change has constricted his opportunities for keeping in touch with the resident managers to a point where his usefulness to Paramount is too reduced to make it possible to keep the exploitation work up to the old standard, and so he has presented his resignation.

He has no plans for the future other than to devote a few weeks of rest to the complete healing of an injury to his leg recently sustained while playing baseball, but this department sincerely hopes that he will presently be found in harness again, for his constructive work is of value to the entire business and not alone to his employers.

It is understood that William (Bill) Johnson, of the Texas offices, will take over his department.

Minted Money

George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., got a new angle on the often used distribution of mint candy samples. He had Lawful Larceny coming, so he put the samples in the lobby with a card reading: "Take one. This is Lawful Larceny." This was worked the week ahead of the showing and everyone remembered the title so cleverly put over.

A First National Release

LOG CABIN WORKS WELL FOR THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST This was engineered by B. W. Bickert, of the Isis Theatre, Houston, Texas. It involved very little building and gave plenty of background for advertisements of the production. The girls are not ballyhoos but are the house ushers, just posing out front.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AMBER was the color note hit upon by Eddie Hyman to get his program under way and to thread its way through the show when "The Bad Man" was the attraction. There were four musical presentations in addition to the feature picture and a new Ben Turpin comedy, one presentation serving as atmospheric tie-up to "The Bad Man."

The Symphonized Jazz Overture starting the show was a special arrangement and orchestration of "Chansonette," "Love," "Steamboat Sal," "First, Last and Always" and "Louisiana." Two dome Mestrum floods, 150 amperes, covered the entire stage and orchestra with amber, as did also the Mestrum floods from the projection booth. The transparent windows at either side of the stage were amber from open box lamps behind, and two entrance spots crossed amber on the llama cloth canopy overhead the orchestra. This lighting was disclosed after the huge llama cloth curtains at the proscenium arch were opened after being closed for the opening. The lighting on them was solid amber from the four Mestrum floods and both spots. The two transparent columns at the proscenium arch either side were amber spots from the base and light green from the top downward.

The most ambitious presentation of the week was the special thirty-minute version of "Pagliacci" in English by the Dornay Opera Company. This was done in the usual prologue and theatre scene, the first named being before the antique gold draw curtains, and the latter in front of the tent-theatre and inside it. The front lighting included two floods from the booth deep blue covering sides and orchestra. Two dome floods violet on orchestra. Light green transparent windows, blue borders, and transparent columns light green from the top. The stage lights at opening were amber foots and two amber spots from the sides to denote afternoon. After the tenor sang "Vesti la Gibba" the lights dimmed down for nightfall, and the foots came up light blue and the string of Chinese lanterns strung along the tent front were lighted. As the curtains of the "Pagliacci" stage parted for the evening show, disclosing a room interior with pictures, table set for dinner, and chairs, orange and magenta box lamps at either side lighted the scene and remained to the close. At the finish the transparent llama cloth draws were closed as the orchestra thundered out the finale, and were opened again coincidental with the closing note for one bow by the company. Then the antique gold draws were closed instead of the llama cloth.

For "Will She Come from the East," atmosphere number for "The Bad Man," the scene showed a sign-post center stage against a landscape back drop. Two runways from either side of the stage ran in toward the post, the runways hidden by a graduated neutral leg piece. Tenor came on center stage, under an amber spot, dressed in approved Western style. At the chorus a girl costumed for the East came slowly down the runway under a rose pink spot, walked to the singer and then exited. Girls for West, North and South followed alternately from either side, the West under amber spot, North under light blue and South under orange. At the finish of the chorus the girls, who had changed to party dress, came on as tenor exited and danced the chorus, and tenor came back for vocalizing the closing strains. This was under four orange spots from the sides and the magenta x-rays.

Soprano, singing "Neath the Autumn Moon," appeared on the orchestra stage apron under a straw spot from the booth. The two booth Mestrum floods violet covered the silver draw curtains small stage; one dome flood deep blue also on draws and other dome flood same color over orchestra. Four amber arch spots on pleats of the draws. Blue foots, small stage; blue borders large stage. Columns light blue from top. Two entrance spot lights pink on sides.

Enlarged Stills Without Expense

Getting enlargements of scene stills without cost is Charles Morrison's contribution to the Ways and Means Committee. Morrison is manager of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., and wanted to play up the fight stuff in The Spoilers.

A local photographer made enlargements of several of the spirited stills at no charge, but supplied a card advertising the fact that he specialized in these enlargements. Then a store window the photographer never could have broken into took the stills and his advertisement because they made an attractor. Morrison increased the pull by unrolling a couple of reels of old film, which was a real curiosity to most persons.

Two business firms were benefited as well as the theatre, and Mr. Morrison got his still enlargements for nothing.

Morrison also horned in on the returns on the Firpo-Dempsey fight by arrangement with the newspaper receiving the details. In between the rounds and before the fight began Mr. Morrison, with the largest megaphone he could borrow, told the crowds that the Wild Bull of the Pampas was not in it with the big fight in The Spoilers.

They must have believed him, for it took only $10 above the usual appropriation to run the box figures up $300.

HOW A BABY PEGGY CONTEST GAVE HER THE STAR PLACE

The Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alta., put on a resemblance contest and made the comedy the big attraction over Trifling With Honor, Universal's baseball story. This was a photographic contest and the entries may be seen on the posts.

In a Coop

For Bluebeard's Eighth Wife the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., built a latticed arbor for cutouts and three sheets of Gloria Swanson in the title role, using two threes and a cutout from a six or 24-sheet. The title was displayed in cutout letters on the face of the lattice.

A Paramount Release

BLUEBEARD'S CHAMBER

It is something of a departure from the usual style and may suggest a re-use of the abandoned lattice material. Use it once as a lattice and then drape in the back with some inexpensive material. You can work several changes; particularly if you wire for lights.

Packed the Theatre and Turned Them Out

Intensive work for two weeks before the opening got big crowds into the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. George E. Brown took the marquis for a coming attraction for the first time in the history of the house. He did more than that. With 30 passes to each advertiser, he got a co-operative page in the face of the opposition of the Merchants' Association. They were against all extra advertising, but seven merchants welcomed a chance to tie up and Brown got a full page and paid for only a small proportion of the space.

The picture was liked and the second day business was better than the first. There was a sell-out for the evening show, and then an electrical storm put the power house out of business for an hour and forty minutes and Brown had to give out 1,200 rain checks as well as turning away his stand-out.

Saturday the sale was stopped between 8:30 and 9, but the break gave him a chance to resume selling. The crowd in the lobby was so dense that departing patrons had to use the emergency exits. Even with the lost night he was $700 better off on the three-day run.

Make a special scrap book of economy stunts. You'll find it comes in handy.

Found Own Plugger for Homeward Bound

Home Bound has no plugger song, but Harold Horne, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, found a song "My Love Ship" that seemed to be what he wanted, so he took that and made it the basis of a hook to music and phonograph stores, which announced that it would be sung in the prologue to Homeward Bound at the Palace.

This particular title was selected because Mr. Horne appealed to women patrons with the love interest, feeling that they would be more interested in love than in a sea story. He ran such lines as "All Aboard for Romance Land" and "A Romance of the Moonlit Sea" in conjunction with Meighan's name. The receipts seem to prove the value of his idea.

For his trailer he ran a few feet of blank leader immediately following "Next week," and while the screen was dark the title was flashed out in red lamps just below the screen frame and held on while the remainder of the trailer ran through.

For the marquis a new scheme has been inaugurated. A new backing is provided each month, and the weekly change is designed to work in with this. For the Greater Movies season the backing was the Paramount trade mark. In front of this was run the star and title. This is supposed to do away with the cost of building a new display each week, but the scheme is too new to have proved its value.

Had to Hustle

Getting Strangers of the Night on very short notice, Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., had to work fast to make certain that this better-than-usual play was seen by those he most wanted to get in.

He kept the telephone working for three days to give personal notice and for a quick action stunt he ran a misspelled word contest which brought in 3,000 replies to the cooperating newspaper. Everywhere he tied to the personal recommendation.

In spite of the time handicap, he put it over to much better than usual business, getting in the discriminating patron who is the hardest to win.

ANOTHER CARTRIDGE CO-OPERATION WITH THE SNOW FILM

W. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., hooked a whole raft of pictures on Hunting Big Game in Africa to a brand of ammunition with a dozen palm leaves to give enough of a suggestion of the jungles. Note the nice arrangement.

No Distinction with His Crackers

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., figured that if animal crackers appealed to the children as an advertisement for Hunting Big Game in Africa, it might also interest the adults, so he got several pounds of lions and tigers and bears, put each one into an envelope he got from the National Baking Company, without cost, and built an evergreen jungle. The chief figure of the jungle was a cutout of a tiger which had been saved from Jack Holt in The Tiger's Claw. He also used cutouts from the 24-sheet which were first placed in store windows before he pulled them over to his lobby display.

He had a tieup with a hardware store on guns and hunting knives and he had new slide copy every day for two weeks in advance. He also put out 700 throwaways stressing the fact that this was not a picture already shown, but the Martin Johnson picture had been there first and crimped things a little, though some people drove 20 miles to see the Snow production.

Mr. White has been taking things quietly through the summer, but he seems to be starting up again. Watch his smoke.

Made Full Campaign in a Smaller Town

Jackson, Tenn., is not precisely a key city on any film concern's map, but A. R. Lynch, manager of theatres, treats it in a big town way and Jackson responds gratefully to such treatment. Here is the way Mr. Lynch put over the Greater Movie idea, and Hollywood, in the Lyric Theatre.

He started with a horseshoe in the lobby patterned after that in the Howard, Atlanta. This was all gold and purple with the titles of the greater movies lettered in. On Hollywood he did this outside advertising:

One hundred window cards as tack cards along the white way for five days ahead. All windows lithoed at the same time. Photo frames in all the drug stores and two special windows in department stores. Fifteen other stores permitted stills mounted on compo board to be tacked to their screen entrance doors.

One thousand rotos and two thousand heralds were put into homes, two restaurants surcharged their menus, and teaser slides told that "You do not need to go to Hollywood to see the stars. You can see them all here in one big picture, Hollywood."

JACK HOLT'S TIGER GETS BACK TO THE AFRICAN JUNGLE

Oscar White put him in moth balls after The Tiger's Claw and dug him out for the lobby display on Hunting Big Game in Africa. It helped the Snow picture to a clean-up in Sumter, S. C., at the Rex Theatre, drawing patrons twenty miles.

All of which had a beneficial effect on the box office reports, which looked much better than they had through August.

Shooting Fair Crowd Sold Souls for Sale

Getting the big crowds in town for the County Fair, all John C. Graham, Jr., of the Lyric Theatre, Butler, Pa., had to do was work the crowd.

He used 5000 accessory automobile tags on the farmers' cars, and this stunt was new to most of them. They sold an unusual proportion. But this was merely the prelude to the big stunt.

He bannered a truck telling that Souls for Sale took the spectator into the studios of Hollywood, and then he mounted a camera on the truck and took shots of the street crowds. He was also able to obtain permission to enter the grounds and drive around the track between heats of the races. He used an actual camera and the print was rushed through and shown the following day at the theatre, most of the first day crowd coming in to see if they could discover themselves on the screen.

They also used the fake casting director's questionnaire, which is not so good, even though it may bring a lot of newspaper space.

Good Pass Stunt

Hollywood was used to open the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Ga., after it has been closed for renovation. J. G. Ewins wanted to open to a good crowd, and matinee crowds are not easy to get in the south in September. People still prefer to stay in the cool.

To ensure an attendance that would go out and talk about the unusual play, Mr. Ewins ran a series of nine advertisements, each with a thumbnail cut of a star and advertised that the presentation of the series would be good for one pass to the opening matinee.

About 300 sets were turned in. These were mostly from children, but Mr. Ewins rightly figured that Mother, and perhaps Daddy, had helped to clip and paste the set, which advertised to them as well.

A CUTOUT EFFECT FROM THE MAJESTIC, AUSTIN, TEXAS

E. B. Roberts offered a somewhat different handling of the poster at his theatre, and filled in with broad bands of colored crepe papers. This merely served to supplement some novelty stunts that sold The Merry-Go-Round to a thirty per cent. increase.

Sparks Flew for Compson Feature

Making the tableau of Betty Compson about to open the safe in The Woman with Four Faces, C. A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, arranged it so that the electric drill in Miss Compson's hands would spark when touched to the door of the safe. A buzzer was employed to imitate the whirl of the motor and give a sound attractor.

The ushers were masked as were the cashiers and doormen.

Roses Made Business

A production which brought a lot of extra business for an entire week was lately tried out by George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The previous week a baritone had been employed to help put over a picture for a full week in a three-change town, and he was kept on to sing "Love Brings a Little Gift of Roses."

At the chorus two little girls rose from their seats in the front row and slowly walked up the aisles of the darkened house, handing out roses from baskets to the women on the aisles. Flashlights in their baskets lighted their heads. During the week some 1,200 roses were passed out, the novelty being put on three times a day. The only cost was for the children, and the $10 apiece paid them went for the purchase of the dresses they wore. The flowers were donated.

The local papers carried several stories and the stunt helped to put over three different pictures.

Three on One

That the people of Dallas might know of the coming of Main Street to the Palace Theatre, Bruce Fowler, City Manager, and Raymond Willie, the resident manager, posted street sides of the local flatiron building with huge signs telling the world it would miss something if it did not see Main Street. It made a nice flash at a small cost.

Pined for Kola

Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., hooked The Trail of the Lonesome Pine to a new Kola drink and gave a bottle to each patron, dispensing the samples from a special booth just outside the lobby. You could drink it there or take it into the theatre with you, the ushers collecting the empty bottles. He disposed of 1,500 bottles in two days and got an increase of business at no cost.

On His Way

In addition to a showing of the new model of a make of automobiles with the suggestion that such a car would have been a luxury in the Klondike rush of the period of The Spoilers, the Rialto Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., used a good ballyhoo.

This was a miner with a pack burro. The donkey was hung with signs reading: "I have come a long way to see The Spoilers at the Rialto Theatre."

Offered Free Taxis for Merry-Go-Round

Through the efforts of Universalist Jack Meredith, Manager E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, took out rain insurance with a local concern on The Merry-Go-Round. This led to another and much more novel stunt. A local taxi company was induced to gamble on the weather and advertise that in case of rain on the closing Saturday, its fleet of cabs would bring anyone to the theatre free, the argument being that no one should miss this attraction.

But Mr. Roberts did not stop there. He pasted a 24-sheet to the lobby floor for advance work and them made a cutout of another for use as his chief display at the showing. The floor poster was spotted by overhead lights.

A special billing location was the top of a new hotel next door to the theatre. This fine structure is the pride of Austin and its erection is watched with interest. If they saw the hotel they had to see the posters.

Numerous window displays were arranged and 250 letters were sent the local Elks reminding them that Mary Philbin was the winner of the beauty contest at the Elks' convention and urging them to get behind the choice of the Order.

All it cost was $20 over the average and it ran business up nearly one third. That's a pretty neat profit.

Large Souls

Getting a fence around a construction operation, the Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., covered nearly a city block with Souls for Sale in five-foot letters with house and date in smaller letters on either end. Practically all of the cars of the street railway system pass the block, and there was a heavy automobile traffic in addition, so it was difficult to overlook the sign.

WHAT YOU CAN GET FROM PENROD WITHOUT HAVING TO PAY

The makers of the Penrod Suits are following the film in the eastern territory and have effected more than 150 hook-ups to date without cost to the houses. This showing was worked for the Playhouse, Passaic, N. J., the two boys being winners in suit contests.

Sold Anniversary on Twelve Dollar Flash

The ornate front of the Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., shown on this page, represents a cash outlay of only twelve dollars, and this includes an O. T. Taylor design that can be worked repeatedly on future attractions. With the exception of the actual painting was done by the projectionist, Charles D. MacGregor. The cost of the banner was $5 and of the centrepiece $7. Evidently Mr. MacGregor has been saving up his papers, for this design was printed in December, 1921.

This was the first anniversary of the Princess, which is a unit of the Canadian Paramount Theatres, managed by J. A. Stewart, and what seems to be a hat just above the line "Anniversary week" is really a pink birthday cake with silver trimmings and one candle. You cannot see the candle, which has sunk into the print. The banner is airbrushed green with gilt lettering. The circles in the Taylor design are green, yellow and red.

Mr. MacGregor also went out and hooked up a window to Hollywood. It had no merchandise connection, but it showed a lot of photographs, and the merchant figured that it helped sell the other things in the window, so he wants some more.

We hope that MacGregor does not share the usual fate of projectionist-exploiters, who are generally pulled off the exploitation work by their unions before experience qualifies them for the full exploitation job.

White Rose Nearly Broke House Record

Only rain prevented The White Rose from breaking the record for an opening day at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., and at that George E. Brown came within $27 of equaling the best previous figures. Had not rain spoiled the matinee the figures would have been the top notch.

The best was a copy of the Memphis stunt which, it will be recalled, was a distribution of white roses to the shut-ins of the city, ostensibly at the request of Mae Marsh. A florist contributed 75 dozen flowers, mostly white roses, and a local paper worked up the scheme as a circulation stunt. It gave long stories and the call for automobiles for distribution still further spread the effect. It is a valuable idea and one almost any live paper will be glad to sponsor. The only cost to the house was the writing of the cards with the compliments of Miss Marsh. The cards and ribbons as well as the flowers, were supplied by the florist.

ADVERTISING AN ANNIVERSARY WITH AN O. T. TAYLOR IDEA

Charles D. MacGregor, of the Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., reproduced this Taylor design for an anniversary week. When he is not exploiting Mr. MacGregor is projecting the picture for the house, of which J. A. Stewart is local manager.

The florist also supplied flowers for the lobby without other return than a credit card.

A strong press campaign was worked, apart from the shut-in stunt.

The house came into luck when a sister house in the circuit sent over a 24-foot banner it had ordered, but which had come too late to be used. It sent it to the Imperial with no other charge than expressage. Mr. Brown figures that he did well even if he was $27 below the top notch.

He didn't write the weather.

Insurance Hook-up

J. G. Evins, of the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Ga., is working hard to put the house over after its shut down, and he is working some pretty stuff.

One of his best was a hook to an insurance company which had a short advertising film it wanted run. Mr. Evins would not take any money for showing the print, but offered to run it if the company instructed its collectors to mention Homeward Bound to each policy holder called upon.

As the company carries hundreds of policy holders who pay a weekly premium, Mr. Evins made a good deal, for it helped to beat the record hung up by The Spoilers by $148.

Fifty Better

Boosting receipts on Only 38 with a 38-cent sale was the big angle on the two day run of the picture at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

Roy Smart arranged with a leading store for a 38 cent sale, as suggested by Dem Stewart. The window was dressed for Saturday and stayed in action through the opening day of the engagement, the following Wednesday. Fifty tickets were given the store to help the sale along, and as they were singles, they brought in one or more paid admissions.

This was about the only special work done, but it brought one of the best advances since the hot weather set in.

Cussen the Town

When he came to play The Town that Forgot God, Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., used direction arrows with merely the title of the play. These were not only tacked to telegraph poles but were fixed to lath and posted on the roads leading into the place; which was not very polite to the town, but Chickasha was not insulted and the City Fathers gave a permit for the local tacking of the arrows.

As they have no Sunday shows, the lobby was brightly lighted Sunday evening to get the attention of the churchgoers to a title which might be supposed to appeal to them. Mr. Tunstill did everything but get the ministers to preach about Sodom and Gomorrah.

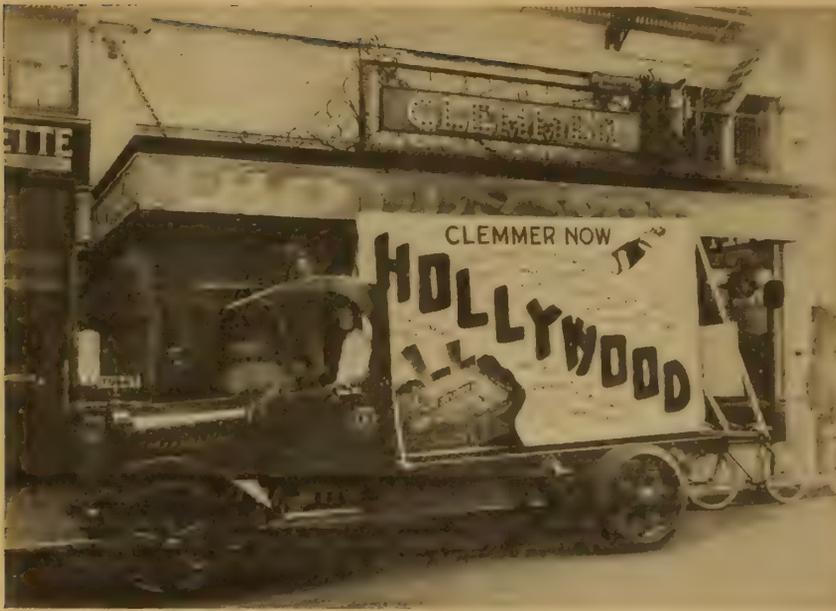

For an expenditure of one dollar, Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., got a small increase on Lorna Doone. The dollar was for cards placed in the public library, but in addition he effected some window hooks and borrowed a phonograph which was decorated and placed in the lobby to play the Lorna Doone record with a repeater. The phonograph company also gave windows for advertising use and made a nice cleanup on the records.

DOC CLEMMER'S PERAMBULATOR FOR HOLLYWOOD

Adapted from the 24-sheet, this truck covered Spokane in the interests of the Clemmer Theatre and Hollywood pretty thoroughly. Just for a sign on the rear the company handling the truck gave the use of the machine, the driver and the gas.

Railroad Contributes Full Hollywood Lobby

Most lobby displays on Hollywood have been either the observation end or the concourse style, but J. B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla., used the Seaboard Air Line as his property room and worked out a station interior with time table racks, bulletin boards and all the rest of the familiar furnishings. The bulletin gave the leaving times of the Hollywood Special and worked in some wheezes about nearby towns on the road, while the ticket office was for "Tickets and Pullmans."

Covered Forty Miles

The Seaboard also sent six special half sheets and some window cards to every station within forty miles, instructing the agents to post the sheets and get the cards into store windows. And all it cost was a small distribution of passes and the printing of the material.

A local shoe store opened a sale of Hollywood Sandals two days ahead of the show, and took a quarter page display advertisement in addition to the window dressing. Fifty passes were given purchasers.

Instead of the usual screen work the slides were all reproductions of newspaper criticisms from southern towns where the picture has already shown.

Business was good and cost very little.

A Rich Effect

Figuring that richness of appeal would best harmonize with Daughters of the Rich, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used a three sheet cutout against green draperies for the centrepiece of his lobby display. This was backed by compo board wings on either side of the lobby. Directly overhead was a 3 by 10 foot panel in the same shade of green with the title in white. If you have not used this combination, try it some time. Three foot circles flanked the banner carrying the names of the players.

The general effect was one of quiet elegance comporting with the title and selling better than more spectacular stuff.

Sells Roto Space

Selling off advertising spaces on the rotogravure section for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, the Des Moines theatre for a big flash at a cost of only $130, though the rotos, plus printing, cost $250. They had to be printed up with the house advertisement, so there was no real extra cost for the printing and with one space on the front and two on the back, the Des Moines Theatre Company got a drawback of $120 and still had two-thirds of a page for its two houses. At that we think that the space was sold rather cheaply. Probably the company can get a better price next time.

Trade Hook-Ups Are Planned by Merchant

Only a couple of years ago it was felt that when an exploitation man succeeded in selling a merchant the idea of devoting a portion of his space to the current attraction at some theatre he was doing big things.

Today the merchant is running around for a chance to hook-in to a form of advertising that brings in more than he could get for his exclusive space and in New Haven an instalment house has created a "movie-plan" which is the same old instalment scheme worked in a new way.

The instalments are on a sliding scale instead of the usual dollar-a-week idea, and to motivate the "movie-plan" angle the store has tied up to Enemies of Women with a four column scene cut and a panel telling that the attraction is to be seen at the Globe theatre.

Printed Own Inserts for Use on Enemies

Using 10,000 each of the bread and laundry inserts on Enemies of Women, Charles A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Tex., printed up his own instead of using the accessory material.

Having established the enemies idea by this means, he sold two restaurants on large signs telling that cooking was one of the enemies of women and advising the reader to eat there. Book stores were sold on the read-the-book-and-then-see-the-picture idea, and the parking signs in front of the theatre told that Reckless Drivers were also enemies of women. It got so that the poor women began to feel that they had no friends left.

During the showing a 25 foot cutout was placed on top of the marquee to further add to the enmity.

AN EFFECTIVE DISPLAY ON CIRCUS DAYS FROM THE BRANFORD
The Newark house not only painted a special front, but it ran a Congress of Strange Peoples in the long corridor that was alone worth the price of admission, bearded lady, snake charmer, blue-skinned man and all the rest of the standbys.

Fake Camera Was a Hollywood Stunt

One of the ballyhoo stunts on Hollywood at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, was a fake cameraman who shot the audience as they entered the house.

J. P. Harrison made no promises about showing the picture and there was no "try-out" bunk. It was just a straight ballyhoo that gave good return and cost very little.

There was an automobile with a banner almost larger than the diminutive hood and with wheels painted vari-colored. Regularly it was used by a shoe polish concern, but it helped shine up the stars in Hollywood.

Stars were the lobby feature. There were lettered stars for the title, stars on the posters and a large star in front of the box office with one hole for tickets and another through which the cashier could see who was trying to hand her a Canadian dime.

Mindful of the need for press work, Mr. Harrison got up a hook-up page with identification of the stars, and this left the editor in a receptive frame of mind for a large cut and reader display for the opening. Mr. Harrison also had fine returns from Lem Stewart's scrap book contest.

Talked It

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C. figured that Penrod and Sam should come pretty close to selling itself, but he was willing to help a little, so he got four boys to stand around the lobby and discuss the picture whenever anyone came into the lobby to see the stills. A surprisingly large number of persons appeared to be influenced into the purchase of tickets.

Profitable

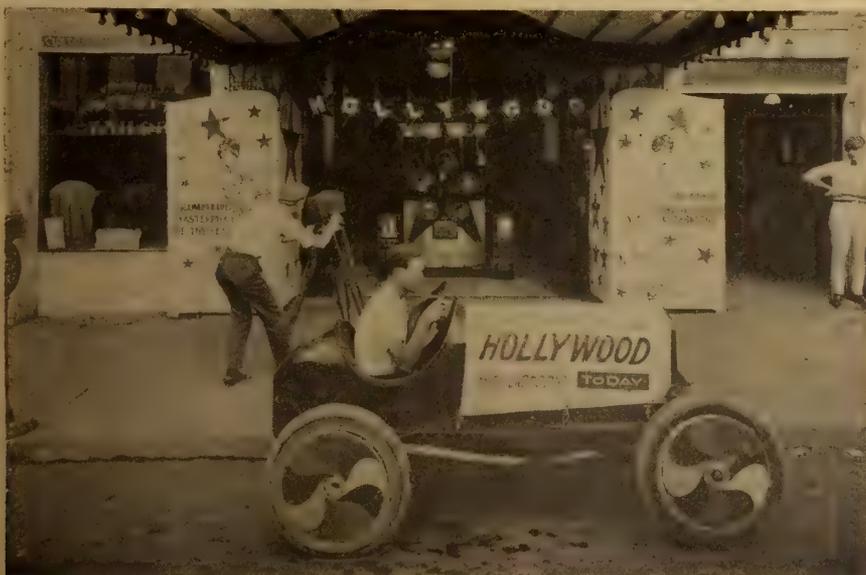

Adapting the C. B. C. novelty recently written of in this department brought some $15,000 in back dues to a fraternal order lately. It was used as a reminder to members in arrears, and the novelty of the form got attention while the text was phrased to avoid goat getting, with the result that almost half of the replies added a "thank you."

A New Society of Enemies of Women

Securing the proper permission, D. Frisnia, of the Elks Theatre, Taylorville, Ill., constructed a small booth on an important corner. Before he began he posted a sign stating that when completed the structure would be used as a registration booth by a newly formed society, The Enemies of Women. At the same time letters signed by a mythical committee of women urged other women to do something about it.

The workmen took as long as they could to get the shack up, and by that time the title had been put over—so they pulled it down again, in the same leisurely fashion.

An adaptation of the out of town post-card idea was made through a special card showing the front of the Kings Theatre, St. Louis with the crowds attracted by this title. The message stated that the writer had seen the play in St. Louis and urged the recipient to see it in Taylorville.

THIS CAMERAMAN SHOT THE AUDIENCES BUT HE GOT NOTHING

The camera was a fake, but it helped make for interest at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, and J. P. Harrison did not promise that pictures would be made, so there was no comeback. Note the star through which tickets were sold.

Gorgeous Booklets

Supplementing the greater movies booklets supplied the Paramount theatres, the Paramount Publicity prepared an exceptionally handsome booklet for use by managers taking the Paramount output.

This carries a two-page calendar to July 1924 and 21 pages announcing coming Paramount productions. It is all cased in a brown grained cover printed in black and two colored bronze; an unusually ornate job yet in such excellent taste that the cover constitutes more than half the selling value of the offering.

It is as pretty a piece of printing as has ever been offered in quantity production for picture advertising.

Cheap Money

Twenty passes, used as prizes in the acoustic scheme suggested in the Goldwyn press book on Three Wise Fools brought a better business by seven hundred dollars to the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

Charles Morrison did not require that the acoustic deal with photoplay matters and so widened the appeal of the idea while still keeping the attention of the contestants on the title. Two window hook-ups were the only other exploitation.

Gloria the Goat in This Advance

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, made Gloria Swanson his nominal copy writer in his advance work for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, using a three column cut over an appeal "To the people of Hamilton" in a 175 by 3.

No doubt you recall Prodigal Daughters, in which I made my last appearance at the Palace Theatre sometime ago. Excepting only one single reviewer, this last production met with instantaneous favor everywhere.

Beginning next Sunday, you will have the opportunity to see me in my newest picture, entitled Bluebeard's 8th Wife, the screen adaptation of the stage success by the same name.

When Managing Director Meyer of the Palace Theatre saw Bluebeard's 8th Wife in a private screening, he was so enthused that he immediately sent me the following telegram:

"Consider Bluebeard's 8th Wife not only your greatest success but by far the most noteworthy of current achievements. It should create a sensation wherever shown and create many new admirers for Gloria Swanson."

Theatre owners are a hard boiled lot; it takes a most unusual picture to get a word out of them. Therefore, I have every reason to believe that you will share Mr. Meyer's views as regards my forthcoming production, and urge you to see when it comes to the Palace Theatre next Sunday.

Sincerely yours,
GLORIA SWANSON.

The populace responded nobly to the appeal. Try it on some picture you are playing. It does not have to be Bluebeard. You can work up the idea for any star picture.

HERE IS A VARIANT TO THE PENROD AND SAM FENCE

This was planned by Harry Browne, of the T. & D. Theatre, San Jose, Calif. Only the box office was decorated with the piratical insigna which form but a minor incident in the play. It was cheap and it sold tickets, so it was capital exploitation.

Chamber of Horrors for Bluebeard Wives

Easily the best lobby display on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife comes from Augusta, Ga., where Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska and other theatres planned a striking effect.

Against a semi-circular platform he built seven panels of translucent cloth, back of each being a cutout of a woman hanging by her hair. Strong lights back of each threw these into such relief that enough light could be used in front to illuminate the cutout from the three sheet of Gloria Swanson as the eighth wife. The effect was purposely left a trifle sketchy rather than depict the horror.

The design of the structure is fantastic to suggest the idea of the title, and the general effect was so striking that business shot up a little above the $400 mark.

The only other special effect was the handling of 500 rotos, 1000 large heralds for store distribution and 2000 of the smaller ones in the mail.

Railroad Envelopes for Railroad Herald

Working together, City Manager Bruce Fowler and Raymond Willie, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, put over a fine campaign for Hollywood, the outstanding feature of which was the distribution of 10,000 of the railroad ticket herald in envelopes such as are used by the Southern Pacific for purchased tickets. This gave a fine realism to the well-planned novelty. The cooperation of the Southern and Atlantic Coast lines has already been recorded from the Southeast, but the donation of 10,000 high grade manila envelopes is a more costly cooperation.

Cuts Used But Once

Fanfotos of the various stars were distributed from the theatre, about 2,500 being used, and thumbnail cuts of the stars were used in small teasers, no cut being used more than once. The title with each letter on a star, was strung from the roof to the marquee and more stars edged the canopy, while the rear of the house, which faces a traffic street, carried a large painted sign. Streamers eight feet high were placed on windows of stores and cafes, the banners being decorated with the fanfotos, fifteen stars being used.

It was a very thorough campaign and put over the picture in the big house of the Texas chain.

Exploited a Short

Feeling that the entire strength of the program does not lie in the feature picture, the Opera House, St. John, N. B., sent out a rube for First National's Gymnasium Gym.

This was a man in a suit of fleshings made of a dyed union suit. He had an inflated chest and enlarged biceps and in addition to advertising the comedy he told that some local gymnasium experts would give an exhibition of tumbling as a part of the program. The short length was one of the best sellers of the bill in consequence.

Among other stunts used by A. J. Phillips, of the Arcade Theatre, Canning, Mo., on First National's Money, Money, Money, was a contest in which he offered a few synonyms for money and prizes for the longest lists, accepted slang not barred.

HERE'S THE BEST BET YET ON BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE

Planned by Frank J. Miller for the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. The seven ex-wives are shown in silhouette with the cutout from the three-sheet going to meet her doom as Mrs. B— number eight. There is real selling to this idea.

Satin Draped Lobby for an Anniversary

Recently we spoke of the seventh anniversary of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. On this page is shown a detail of the lobby decoration with seven electrically lighted candles, each dated and growing in size with the progress of the years, on the barrier, which was draped to suggest a banquet table.

The entire lobby was done over in hangings of grey and gold satin; a scheme which was carried into the house, and special painted posters for Dulcy, the anniversary attraction, replaced the usual frames and posters.

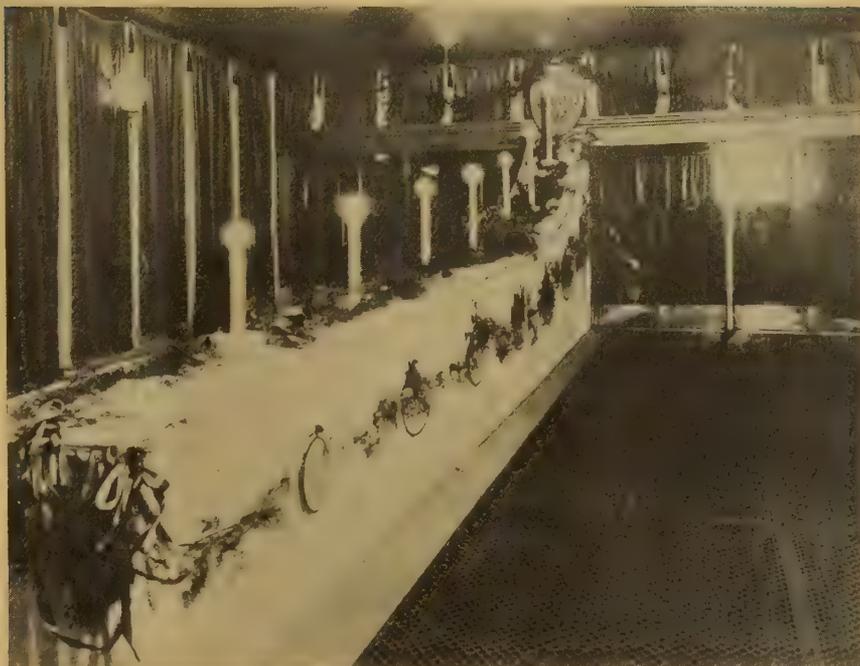

The exterior carried the usual posters for Dulcy, but the space over the marquee was devoted to the anniversary announcement.

One Sided Display Is Something New

Frank J. Miller, who is manager of theatres for Paramount in Augusta, Ga., seems to be giving more attention to lobby displays, though he has always been in the front row of lobby builders. Now he is going rapidly to the head of his class.

One of his new ideas was worked on When Knighthood Was in Flower and introduces the one-sided display. This is a decided innovation. Hitherto the lobby display has either been a centerpiece or a matched display on two sides. Mr. Miller has shattered tradition by building his display on Knighthood from one side of the lobby, a mountain rising to a castle on the eminence.

It was a fine idea, though spoiled somewhat through contrast with the large cutouts just back of it. At that we have an idea that Mr. Miller did not place these two figures back of the structure except when he moved them over to get everything in one photograph. Very possibly he used this cutout on the other side of the lobby to preserve the balance. But forget the figures and note the excellent effect Mr. Miller has gained, and remember that he built on the entrance and not the exit side of the lobby.

Don't overlook your short feature. Sometimes you can exploit your news reel for real money.

Stirred Broadway with Red Lighting

One of the Eddie Bonns stunts for the opening of Red Lights at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, was to have an aviator fly over the theatre district about the time the scores of audiences were coming out. Red flares were burned constantly.

The stunt was planned for Saturday, the day before the opening, but rain prevented the flight and it was delayed until the following evening, when the aerial patrol excited much attention and the newspapers and police stations were asked to explain.

Helping to hook in to this display, the front of the Capitol was flooded with red lamps and spots, a dash of red in the famous White Lights district.

The same idea was used in Los Angeles, where the picture opened at the California Theatre. Here the story ran to the effect that the management, fearful that the print would not arrive in town in time, had arranged to have the reels come via airplane from Reno, the flares being the signal that the print was aboard. This was worked on the Wednesday prior to the opening, and got into the newspapers.

There was also a special Red Lights night at the Hotel Ambassador, where many of the scenes of the picture were made. Special cards on each table a week in advance announced the coming event. The dancer used in the production made several appearances and there was a prize cup presented the best amateur couple by June Mathis. Special menus carried the program and a scene from the play.

Matched a Herald

With a cutout from the three-sheet on Salomy Jane, the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., was able to approximate the front page of the herald and hook to this distributed matter. Thomas G. Coleman put out several thousand heralds, and the value of the hook-in is obvious.

ANOTHER GOOD RAILROAD STATION LOBBY ON HOLLYWOOD

This is almost a duplicate of the Fort Smith display, worked by Hugo Plath, but it is from Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, and Ollie jazzed the signs up to match the railroad atmosphere of the general display.

Hugo Plath Finds a Hollywood Line

Most of the semaphores for Hollywood have read "Look out for Hollywood" in copy of the usual look out for the locomotive. Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., has dug out the right line. He uses the cross with "Slow down" and "Hollywood." That's better than looking out. You can generally trust Mr. Plath to dig it out right when he starts to dig. One of the best little diggers.

His general lobby design is shown on this page. As suggested in the caption, it looks as though he had pulled Gloria Swanson's Gilded Cage apart to make the railing of a railroad concourse, with the gates labeled for the "Paramount Express" and the "Amusement Special" both to Hollywood. It might help to use the changeable signs for the departing time, such as are used in railroad stations, and change for each show. It's a little trouble but a big help.

The cutout engine has practical wheels geared to a motor, with sandpaper contacts to give the puff of the exhaust into the stack. In case you don't remember, this is a piece of sandpaper fixed to the back support where it will rub against a similar piece on one of the wheels, contact being made intermittently each time the wheel turns over. If you want more noise, use two pieces of paper on the wheel.

Boosted Records with Robin Hood

Beating the house attendance by 76 admissions and the cash record by something better than $300, Robin Hood has pride of place at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., chiefly through the intensive and sustained work of Roy Smart.

From the time the booking was made, he let no week go by without mention in the house organ, these growing in length and strength as the playing date came closer.

Ten days in advance a banner was thrown across the main street, and later this was backed by a castle front on the theatre. Three cards were gotten into the Public Library to reach adults and children, one going to the children's reading room.

Because of the training camp activities at Camp McClelland Mr. Smart offered a reduced admission to the men in uniform at the opening performance only. He could not get them marched down in a body, but the notice "To the Men of Camp McClelland" was on each company bulletin board and when the commanding officer came down to see the picture he was stood out forty minutes. The soldier attendance was good all through the run.

One Merry-Go-Round Was a Big Pinwheel

Blue and gold festoons and a lattice helped to turn the lobby of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., into an amusement park for The Merry-Go-Round. This was built up with cutouts and signs in ornamental shapes and various colored lights added to the carnival effect.

On the marquee was an eight foot pinwheel with arms each of a different color, with electric lamps at night. The wheel was kept in motion by a small motor. It was not a Merry-Go-Round, but it went around and around and kept in with the title.

This Railroad Has Clever Trick Signs

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., practically duplicates the display of Hugo Plath, of Fort Smith. Perhaps one loaned the other the makings.

But the Brownlee box office boasts some trick signs, the one at the top reading with the prices for upper and lower berths, which correspond to the prices for orchestra and balcony while "staterooms" are understood to be the loge seats.

On the left of the window are the departing times, corresponding to the showings and the right urges the reader to "See the Agent About Rates to Hollywood."

Both top pieces above the gates are lettered "Ride the Paramount Express to Hollywood—See—" and the names of the stars, while the centre is "Muskogee to Hollywood on the Paramount express, via Palace Theatre." The cross arms have the "Slow down. Hollywood." One side if further letters "To trains" and the exit is "From trains." The railings are turned wood, painted black.

It all helped to put a boost in the box office sheet, and it cost only $20.

Likes Book Rebate on Lorna Doone Run

Just to encourage the booksellers to offer Lorna Doone windows, the Queen Theatre, St. John, N. B., offered a rebate of five cents to everyone who bought a seat and showed a copy of the book. Some of the books presented came over in Evangeline's time, but the theatre was game and the old ones got the nickel off too.

That was an opening night stunt, but it worked so well that for the remainder of the run a new copy of the book was good for a rebate at any matinee.

It was a getaway from the pass-with-each-copy; but, if you want to help your cooperators, specify new books! If you want a novelty on an old timer, offer a special prize for the oldest copy presented.

The named cracker campaign also helped and the music stores kicked in, but the book idea proved the real winner.

Only one rebate was allowed on a book, but by the end of the run some of the books had turned up so often that they were calling the cashier by her first name.

WOULD YOU GIVE $35 FOR A DISPLAY PARADE LIKE THIS ON CIRCUS DAYS? THAT'S THE COST

Al Sobler, of First National, helped Doc Robinson, of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., put over a costume contest that turned into a two-block parade with a 30-piece band, at a cost of only $35 for the prizes. It's old stuff, but the Circus Days angle permitted a wider display of costumes and gave far more color to the turnout, and it saved up the newsboys for the next kid picture, which is something to think about.

Got a Big Parade

Sitting in with Dor. Robinson, of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., Al Sobler, Chicago First National exploiteer, staged a layout for Circus Days that brought hundreds of dollars worth of publicity at a cost of only $35 for cash prizes. The stunt included a parade that stretched two blocks and which was headed by a thirty piece brass band.

The band was a boys band sponsored by the Journal-Transcript, which was tied in to the stunt through being permitted to pose as the donor of the prizes for the best circus costumes. This got columns of publicity which cost nothing, and also won the services of the band. The paper also borrowed a camel, the property of Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and some floats and tractors to pull them, on which the children rode.

Several hundred children appeared for the judging, and after the judges had made their decision and the band had played a few selections, the youngsters climbed aboard the floats and took a ride over a rather lengthy route. As the photographs show, there was a wide variety of costumes and no lack of banners.

A second paper, the Star, was permitted to use the name-in-the-classified-ads idea, fifty tickets being invested in this scheme. The space the Star gave the stunt would have cost several hundred dollars had it been paid for at card rates.

The ten cent store gave a picture of Jackie with each purchase of school supplies and took an entire window to announce that fact, and a book store was tied to copies of Toby Tyler while the chain tobacco stores were hooked to a brand mentioned in the production.

Not So Good

In the interests of The Girl of the Golden West, George J. Schade, of Sandusky, offered prizes to the first seven persons discovering misspelled words in the columns of a local classified ad department. The prizes of course were tickets to the Schade.

The hard part is that an ungrateful newspaper made George split the cost of the two fours used to make the announcement. Most papers are glad to give more space than that just for the tickets. That's no nice way to treat a theatre.

Passed it to George

Letting the manufacturers of the tied up cigarette do most of his work for him, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., merely added the telephone stunt to collect additional revenue on The Spoilers. He didn't see the use of worrying when he had someone else to do the hustling and supply the advertising material free.

Had Floral Parade
for Mrs. Bluebeard

When Walter Murphy, of the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., asked Paramounteer Russell B. Moon for a stunt on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, Moon remembered the scene where the husband sends innumerable baskets of flowers to Gloria Swanson.

A local florist donated five baskets and five boys and for two hours on Saturday afternoon the kids carried these into the theatre, through the lobby, slipping out the back way to make another circuit.

It not only brought a Sunday sell-out, but it helped the feature playing on Saturday as well.

Australian Smiles

Cabaret parties named after pictures have become a pest in Los Angeles, but in Australia it is a brand new idea and L. Scantelbury, of the Majestic Theatre, Brisbane, made a pot of money through a Smilin' Through night at a local cabaret. The feature was an advance screening of the picture and the stunt was worked up into a regular party.

There is a good idea here for this side, though we think it will work better with a light comedy. Smilin' Through is almost too delicate for a cabaret.

JOHNNY COULD BACK HIS HORSE UP AND STILL WIN

The Lotus Theatre, Sheridan, Wyo., used the old picket fence to frame a one-horse walkover for Little Johnny Jones. It's not a very big display, but it was more than enough to get in the business, and that was all the management was after.

Punched Letters to Help Posters

Here is an adaptation of the idea used by the Blackstone, Pittsburgh, to illuminate letters. The Blackstone used the idea for its lobby banners, but Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., employed it for the outside special three sheets.

THE SPECIAL THREE SHEET

The letters forming the title, Red Lights, have been perforated with a drill, and show as minute black specks in the center of these letters, if all goes well with the cut. These holes were backed by red medium and lamps were set in back of the frame.

At a small cost for current and wiring the display value of the posters was greatly increased.

Gave a Party

Giving a party to the Strangers of the Night was Edwin D. Turner's idea for putting over the Metro production at the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Refreshments were donated by local merchants in return for credit cards and after the last showing the first night the patrons were invited to the rest room where the orchestra played while eight local girls in pirate costumes more or less after the cabin boy costume in the picture, handed out the refreshments.

As a side line there was a double truck in two local papers with a misspelled word contest that brought in more than 2,000 replies.

Mr. Lovett's Idea Is Old, but Paying

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Providence, read in a recent issue that he owed us an idea and he hastens to write that he sent it in but that evidently it miscarried in the mails, so he repeats.

The idea is simply that Mr. Lovett framed up a crack sandlots ball team, named it after the theatre, and turned them loose on the community. They have been cleaning up all summer and getting space on both the Olneyville and sporting pages of the papers. Practically every day there was one item at least about the Royals, and the idea of a winner was passed along to the house. Mr. Lovett says it gave him the best summer business he ever had, and likes the stunt so well that he has formed a football team for the more limited season and has arranged to continue baseball next year. The team finished third in the amateur league and he expects them to top the bunch next year.

It's a good idea, but not as new as Mr. Lovett thinks. We gather he has not a copy of Picture Theatre Advertising, but if he has, it might interest him to look on page 245 where the precise scheme is outlined in full. It's not new, but we are glad to have Mr. Lovett's testimony to the value of the idea.

Got a Horse

Apparently the newsboys were on strike down in Louisville when Circus Days came to town, for instead of a newsboys' parade the management of the Mary Anderson Theatre hooked the Post to a resemblance contest, with a pony named Jackie Coogan as the prize for the child most nearly resembling the juvenile star.

Some 400 youngsters made entry, the majority of them presenting themselves in costume, though this was not required. The most likely contestants were presented on the stage, but the award was made in one of the parks where the entire town could look on without entrance fee and where a film of the event could be recorded.

According to the receipts, the pony was a good investment.

A CLASSY FLOAT ON THE VOICE FROM THE MINARET

This is a good example of the sort of thing they are doing over in England. This float was built by the Palace Theatre, Cheltenham, England. It is twelve feet long by six feet wide and sixteen feet in height, and was planned by Manager Shenton.

Gets New Wrinkles for Fashion Shows

Making a style show the big appeal for the opening of his Greater Movie Season, George A. McDermit, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., had a number of new ideas.

In the first place, since he had no adequate stage room, he built a T stage in front of the orchestra with the tail down the center aisle and with steps leading up from either side. In the floor of the platform was set a glass light trap with a spot above, there were also spots on either side and in the balcony, which permitted the attainment of interesting light effects.

The program was varied for each night, each presenting some special feature, which drew the crowds back, and there was also a special tableau each evening. One night the tableau was "The most popular model" and while the recruiting officers of the Army and Navy marched down the aisles, the curtains parted to disclose a girl in a Red Cross uniform. The "best" model was a boy in scout uniform and the "sweetest" was a bride, while for the final nights the "most beloved" was a mother. This was shown on Friday with the mother alone on the stage while on Saturday the same tableau was repeated with a soldier and marine bringing gifts to the mother, one presenting flowers and the other candy.

There was also a special showing of children's models at a Saturday morning matinee.

The constant changes held business up for a record week with The Cheat and The Silent Partner, both good alibis for swagger dressing.

Free Rides

Although the home office campaign book writers no longer urge the use of stage coaches for western pictures, knowing that they cannot be had as a rule, Jack Hellman, Paramounteer, dug up an old station bus for E. G. Anderson, of the Princess Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

He had to go two miles out of town to find its last resting place, but he refurbished it up a bit and sent it around town with a hand-made sign announcing that anyone could jump in and ride to the Princess to see To the Last Man. The ride was free. Shooting off blank cartridges was a helpful stunt until the police arrested the driver, and after that it at least brought in some press notice. Hellman also horned in on the A boards of the army recruiters, the only sidewalk signs permitted in town.

Socket 'Em

Infringing on the Trilby publicity, H. C. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., gave silk stockings (donated by a local concern) to the women who wore the same size hose as Mae Murray in The French Doll.

Cards were given all women purchasers at the opening matinee. These were filled in with the name and stocking size of the recipient and handed the doorman. Before the conclusion of the performance the cards had been checked up and those entitled to stockings were asked to obtain orders on the store, and obtain their prizes on the way home.

The women nearly wrecked the lobby, but it made business for both store and house.

Tagged Kisses Were an Atlanta Novelty

Selling The Cheat at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Howard Price Kingsmore pinned his faith largely to an extensive distribution of a locally manufactured candy kiss.

The makers supplied 200,000 of these, tagged with a small card, which was fastened to each kiss by having the waxed paper of one end thrust through a punched hole. The copy read: "Pola Negri's $10,000 The Cheat Kiss. You'll thoroughly enjoy The Cheat at the Howard just as much as you enjoy Block's Aristocratic Kiss."

These were handed out in the lobby the week before the showing, with an occasional street distribution to use up the surplus. The distribution was made by girls and also through a help-yourself basket in the foyer.

The candy is handled by eighteen drug stores, each of which gave a window to a display of the kisses with cards stating that while the Pola Negri kiss cost $10,000, the candy kisses were only 49 cents a pound.

The car company used dashboard banners and a masked dancer, who looks not unlike the star, appeared at an Elks' entertainment a couple of days before the opening, getting the attention the mask seems always to obtain.

Railroaded Them In

A model locomotive with tender, about four feet long, displayed on a table at the curb line of the Jefferson Theatre, St. Augustine, Fla., was enough to pull a fancy business on The Westbound Limited. Crepe paper streamers were festooned from the top of the marquee, concentrating upon the display.

Verne E. Johnson writes that practically every passer-by came to a dead stop the first time the display was encountered.

Broke in the Bank

Arguing that a bank account, savings' or otherwise, was the best Silent Partner, George R. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., got the run of a bank window for Paramount production of that name, and the bank liked the idea so well it went into the newspaper with it.

Ashes of Vengeance Cried to the Town

According to Walter Eberhardt, the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, was using a town crier for Ashes of Vengeance the same days a flock of town criers were offsetting the lack of newspaper notice in New York for Potash and Perlmutter, but there was only one Cleveland crier. Here he is.

ANOTHER TOWN CRIER

There was no newspaper strike in Cleveland. It just happened to hit Mr. Malaney as a good idea, so he tricked out a man in Colonial costume and put him on the streets to ring his bell, adding a poster to make certain the call could be heard.

Invited the Klan to Meet the Jews

While a fashion show probably brought the most money to the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, the most talked of exploitation was an advertisement in the official organ of the Ku Klux Klan inviting the knights of the Invisible Empire to meet the two best known Jews in the world face to face. It was a daring stunt, but the gag worked, and it helped to fatten business for Jo Trunk.

Even before Mr. Trunk was advised that he could have the assistance of an exploitation man he started an arrangement for a fashion show with a local store, the theatre to pay for the models. He turned over the scheme to Irwin Franklin, when the latter breezed in from the Sam Goldwyn offices, and Franklin came back and announced that the store would pay for four models in addition to giving windows. Then he went out and tied up the nine other principal stores to window displays for the well-known clothing manufacturers, and made it unanimous. One of the two shown here is the shoe hook-up with a shop which shod the models.

Copying a stunt worked on the Dempsey-Firpo fight in New York, folders were gotten out announcing that a local pugilistic star would lose an impending battle because he would be weakened through laughing at Potash and Perlmutter, and Franklin gave a talk before the Advertising Club for the newspaper comment he knew the luncheon would receive. To prove that he was an advertiser himself, he threw out cards offering a prize for any member of the club who could sit through the show without laughing.

The whole thing cost under $500 and paid for itself many times over.

Sells the Feature on New York Report

Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., is not the first to try and sell a picture on the success of the New York run, but he seems to be the first to present the matter through a reproduction of a clipping from Variety's box office reports. This is infinitely better than the press criticisms, because there is a finality to the statement that Six Days did $53,000 the opening week that the most glowing criticism lacks. It is definite and convincing when it can be used so close to the release date as the Leroy took this picture. Storin writes that it brought an accession of business.

It's a good advertisement except for the line "The musical gems on the mighty organ will carry Six Days along its merry way." Does Mr. Storin think this is a Keystone comedy?

An Unusual Banner for Danish Theatre

One of the best banners on East is West comes from Copenhagen, where the Little Theatre built this unusually elaborate frame for the Constance Talmadge feature. The house has a very narrow entrance, and this is surmounted by a built up structure in the Chinese style supporting a cutout from the lithograph and a three line title below, which does not come out very well in the picture.

Held His Business Against State Fair

Having a minstrel show as well as a state fair to buck, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, more than held his own with Why Worry, though he did not break the Safety Last record. He did play to more than 29,000 persons on the week. That would be a good record (though not the record), even without extraordinary opposition.

He made a very ingenious use of cutouts from the smaller sizes of paper, as is shown in the cut, mounting these against a pair of circles, and similar cutouts adorned the ledge in the foyer, making up what was practically a 24-sheet.

One of the unexpected helps was an unusual attendance at a concert on Sunday when most of the audience of 5,000 arrived before the doors were opened and had nothing to look at but the Lloyd advertising. They also received Why Worry heralds in their programs.

Ten thousand stickers with merely Why Worry in red and white, about 4x4 inches, were fastened to windshields and wherever they could be put, and 2,000 rotos were distributed. There were several tieups based on the useful title in store windows and on taxi spares and a three day teaser merely asked "Why Worry?" with "Harold Lloyd says Why Worry?" for the last day.

Mr. Kingsmore reports that Capt. Kleinschmidt's Trip into the Far North made an excellent complement to the comedy and gave just the support needed. It was played up in the advertising as a feature in its own right, and made good for the distinction.

Swiped a Circus

Ignoring property rights, when Circus Days came to Daffin's Theatre, Tallahassee, the manager promptly announced Daffin's Circus and got twice as much interest as the straight announcement of the Coogan feature could have gained, particularly before the announcement made it clear that the circus was on a film. It gave a local twist to the idea that got the patronage-winning laugh.

Try These Figures on Your Local Bank

If you want something to help you put over a hook up with your local bank, now or later, cut this out. Cut it out anyway. You will need it sometime. When you argue for a stunt it is more convincing to cite facts than opinions, and these are the facts of a bank hook-up at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, on behalf of The Silent Partner.

Working under Howard Price Kingsmore, Raymond B. Jones tied the Citizens-Southern Bank, one of the largest local institutions, to a check issue, good for one dollar, when accompanied by a deposit of $10, in the savings department for a new account on condition that the sum remain on deposit for one year. In other words, if the ten dollars are withdrawn before the expiration of a year the other dollar reverts to the bank. Thirty thousand checks were used, being given out with each ticket bought to witness the Paramount production, special checks being printed with the words "I am your Silent Partner" printed at the top. There was a six weeks' time limit on the offer.

Draw New Accounts

Two weeks after the checks had been distributed, the bank expressed its satisfaction with the campaign, more than 200 new accounts having been opened. The accounts were still coming in at the rate of seven or eight daily. The probabilities are that had the initial deposit required been the usual dollar, to match the check, the results would have been very much larger, but the bank wanted only the better class of accounts and purposely made the initial deposit larger than usual.

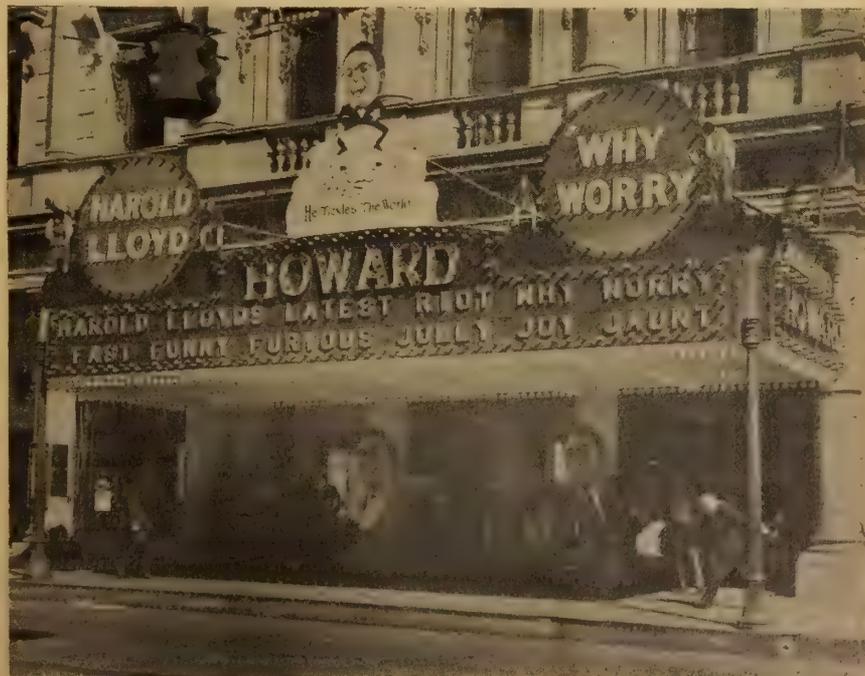

The stunt has been worked hundreds of times and always with success, but this is the first instance in which we have been able to give definite figures.

Almost any bank with a savings department is willing to spend fifty cents or a dollar for a new account, and the idea can be worked with an infinity of titles.

Tagged a Contest

Because the Merchants' Association was about to give away an automobile, J. H. Stelling, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., sent a bannered truck through the crowds, the copy reading: "If you don't win a cigar, Why Worry? Laugh with Harold Lloyd at the Rex. Now playing."

One man got the car but several hundred got the message and cheered their disappointment with the antics of Lloyd and his tame giant.

Australia Obtains Exceptional Result

Rarely have we seen a better result from half tone work than this five column drop for the Globe Theatre, Sydney, Australia, on Smilin' Through. The half tone itself is seventeen inches deep, very evidently an enlarged wash drawing from one of the stills, but on a rather cheap newsprint it gives almost as good a result as can be had on coated stock apart from the color.

AN EXCEPTIONAL HALFTONE

The drawing is signed by Wynne W. Davies and we do not blame him for wanting to sign, for he has done an exceptional bit of work and has planned it so that it will reproduce. It is seldom that a cut serves as more than an attention attractor, but this fine work sells through the suggestion of excellence it creates and which it transfers to the feature. His handling of the lights and shades is wonderfully well done and his shadow mass, while simple, is carefully planned. There is good copy to back the drawing, but good copy is far less infrequent than such wash work in newspaper displays. It is a liberal education in showing what can be done for newspaper illustration.

Orderly Display Very Attractive

As a change from the freak styles, we think this six nine and a half from the Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind., is better than usual. Based on a single line cut that is pressman proof, the type arrangement is orderly and well considered and makes for a very striking display. As a set-up we do not think it can be much improved. The star and title show well, and the panel helps to clinch the sale if it has not been made through the announcement of Miss Talmadge in a notable play. The chief strength of the display comes from the use of white space. Extending the lines to get larger letters, and running them over to the cut would have spoiled the entire effect. It is the spacing as much as the choice of types and copy which go to make this an appeal very much out of the ordinary. There is available on this feature an unusual amount of cut material, and some of this could have been dumped into this space to the utter ruination of the entire layout. Even a thumbnail cut in addition would have spoiled the charm.

gained would have given a better play-up for the title and have removed an eyesore from the space, for the press work is poor and even the line cuts do not fare as well as they should. The advertisement is from the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, and shows a good use of copy even if the half tone spoils the general effect. Since the half tone result was probably foreordained, we think that the use of the router would have helped very considerably. Even the line cut is not well printed though we have seen this same cut come up nicely under better press work. Here it looks as though too cheap an ink were at fault.

opportunity to throw in the halftone just because you happen to have it. In this display from the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., on The Huntress, the cut of Colleen Moore is strictly non-essential. It is a good looking cut, with the proper screen to reproduce fairly well with careful printing, but it is a bust when compared with the greater selling value of line cut in conjunction with the six point fact that she abducted the man she wanted to marry. A twelve or eighteen point, "When she wanted a husband she abducted him," working with the line cut of the pursuit would get many times the attention and would have brought the innocent bystander to a reading with his mind more than half made up that he wanted to see the play. Not many will be particularly interested in the portrait. They will be interested in the cavewoman stunt, and this will back up the clever cartoon cut, which is one of the best First National has offered in some time for selling quality.

All Type Display a Capital Seller

Few cut-decorated spaces offer as much strength as this six fours framed by the K. of P. Theatre, Greensburg, Ind. No one can read around a space like that. They must see it. Cuts would only clog this space. With a four letter title to be put over there is no chance to get it tangled with selling lines and the best cut that could be had would not have the display or selling value of this space. The exhibitor who complained lately that we did not show a sufficient number of good type displays should look at this with interest. It is larger than the average space—equivalent to a four sixes or a three eighths, but for a smash it will work more effectively than a "pretty" advertisement using an entire art gallery of illustration. It is seldom that the cut sells tickets in other sense than it gets attention for the space, and this type layout does not require the aid of illustration. It is far more emphatic just as it stands and any attempt at illustration would probably ruin it. It's smashing good.

Makes Two Col. Cut Four Column Space

Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, one of the Paramount Canadian chain, made a two-column advertisement the basis of a four column display. In the plan book this was intended to be made complete with the addition of the signature and the small features, but Mr. Cloakey set it into a four thirteens and it looks as though it might have been made for the space. We think this might have been improved by routing out that reverse and resetting the title in a larger letter to extend across the space for The Cheat has some pulling power left from its last production which could be better applied in a larger letter, but perhaps Mr. Cloakey did not have the time to arrange for trimming the cut. We do not like the typographical display on this. There is too much all capitals where the same copy could have been carried in a twelve point bold, upper and lower, with a much better result. More, we think we would have carried the copy to the left of Holt's head across the space to the right, so that it would read completely: "At last—Pola Negri as you've always wanted to see her; as a lovable heroine in a strictly modern romantic drama." This could have been extended on the second line and then dropped down the space at the right to complete the message. A change from all caps to upper and lower following "see her" would have given additional emphasis. It is good as it stands, but an intelligent compositor could have built up on Mr. Cloakey's work.

Not Just Talking; They Are Shouting

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS
CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

IS it the distributors' fault that short subjects are not advertised as they and their share of the program deserve?

The question arises through the remarks of Chris Behrens, who runs the Family Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, and who told Danny, of Film Daily, a few things while the latter was en route to the W. and W. West.

HERE'S what Mr. Behrens had to say:

"Many exhibitors would probably be much pleased to advertise their short added subjects to their regular features if the producing companies would have their advertising departments supply suitable mats, as well as reading matter that could be used by the exhibitor in his regular newspaper advertising. The facts are that one can request press sheets and mats even on the better comedies and the usual reply is that 'we do not supply them.'

ONE of the Baby Peggy ad. cuts. This and the subject below could be used in advertising any one of the releases of the diminutive star.

THE illustrations show the cuts in a size of two inches deep. They are also available in a size one inch deep, in both cut and mat form.

"When the exhibitor is making up his regular feature ad., if he was also supplied with the attractive one-column cuts, or even smaller, that he could use in his ad. without using an unnecessary lot of space, he would greatly advertise his short

Mr. Exhibitor Read This

We want to hear from every exhibitor who has anything to say regarding advertising aids. And by that we mean we want to hear from the little fellow to whom a couple of hundred heralds constitute a complete campaign, as well as from the key-city man who goes in a comprehensive plan of promotion on each picture. No item is too small to be of importance; no subject too big for discussion. Let us know if the advertising aids you are getting are satisfactory. Tell us what you like in slides, trailers, lobby displays, posters, heralds—anything. Tell us what you want for your own particular locality.

It is our earnest desire to be instrumental in getting for you exactly what you need in the line of advertising aids. We know we can do it if YOU will take the time and trouble to tell us. The advertising men are only too willing—anxious, in fact—to give you what you want. So if you (yes, YOU, not the other fellow) will write us we'll see that the advertising men get the information. If you've got a kick—shoot; if you've got a boost, let's hear it! Do it NOW!

subjects. But we can't get away from the fact that in the regular picture houses the feature is the thing and the comedy, news reel or special subject is just that much added to the attraction.

"In taking up a campaign to get the exhibitor to advertise short subjects, the first requisite would be to supply him with subjects and material from which he could prepare copy."

CONSIDERING Mr. Behrens' last statement first, we register the opinion that not only is it important to supply the exhibitor with suitable advertising material, but just as important is it for the maker of the feature advertisement to see to it that there is enough room left in the feature ad. in which to place the short subject material. Or so to construct the ad. that it is flexible enough to permit of lengthening without losing its unity or effectiveness.

We know of no distributor—and that includes distributors of both features and short subjects—who makes provisions for any elasticity of feature ads. Virtually every press book ad. we have seen on features has been so "tight" that even another credit line could not be squeezed in anywhere.

AND as to Mr. Behrens' claim that producers do not issue suitable material, let some of the bigger producers answer for themselves.

ON every two-reel comedy released by Educational a press sheet is issued. This press sheet includes synopsis and cast, publicity stories, short program paragraphs, reviews, catch lines and suggestions for exploitation.

One of the big features about the aid given exhibitors by Educational is that the exchange furnishes, free of charge, a mat of the one-column, one-inch-deep advertisement prepared for each release. Cuts are also available of these ads., and are sold at a very nominal price. The cuts, samples of which are reproduced elsewhere, are of such size, shape and form that they can be used as an entire ad. or as a part of a bigger ad. They permit of being used at the bottom of a bigger one-column ads. and are, in our opinion, just what exhibitors need, and the sort of stuff that Mr. Behrens asks for.

Besides the foregoing there are prepared a one-column publicity halftone star cut and a one-column publicity scene cut. Mats on these cuts are furnished free; cuts are sold for a very small amount.

Four-color three-sheets and four-color one-sheets are also available, as well as colored slide, duo-tone 11 x 14 lobby cards (eight to set) and, according to the press sheet, "The fullest co-operation from your exchange."

The aids outlined are issued on Mermaid Comedies, Christie Comedies, Hamilton Comedies, Juvenile Comedies and Tuxedo Comedies.

PATHE already has issued a press sheet on Hal Roach's "Our Gang" Comedies, and it seems to us that the advertising material available on these releases is more than adequate to the needs of any exhibitor. The press sheet at hand contains nine reading notices of various lengths. The posters available on each release include one three-sheet and one one-sheet. There is a stock twenty-four on the series.

Each subject brings eight 11 x 14 sepia lobby display cards; also five black and whites. A special slide is issued and a special trailer is available from the National Screen Service. There are a two-column stock halftone cut and a two-column current halftone cut, as well as a one-column stock ad. line cut. Mats on these cuts are also to be had.

A paper hat novelty is also included in the aids.

OUR GANG COMEDY

Stock cut on Hal Roach's "Our Gang" copies. Reproduced same size. Mats also are available.

FROM Fox we learn that on Sunshine Comedies, Al. St. John Comedies, Imperial Comedies and Clyde Cook Comedies there are supplied a three-sheet and one-sheet, a set of 11 x 14 lobby cards and a set of 8 x 10 stills. Cut-outs are supplied with some of the Al. St. John and Clyde Cook Comedies.

A one-sheet is prepared for each issue of Fox News, as is also done for each of the Fox Educational Entertainments.

On special short subjects, such as "The Japanese Earthquake," "Red Russia Revealed" and "The Land of Tut-Ankh-Amen," special press sheets are issued, in addition to two styles of one-sheets.

CENTURY COMEDIES also are backed with a good line of aids. The press book issued on a series of six Baby Peggy Comedies is a good example. Here we again find an assortment of reading notices and catchlines on the various releases; not to forget exploitation suggestions.

Star cut of Baby Peggy which is issued in both two-inch and one-inch wide sizes. This can be reproduced in any size desired—especially good as part of a bigger ad.

The accessories seem to be much the same in quantity as issued by other producers—posters, slides, lobby displays, etc. This applies to the Buddy Messinger Comedies also, and to other Century Comedies.

In the Baby Peggy book is a sample of a four-page herald, with illustrations, that could be used in pushing any of her releases. It carries plenty of illustrations, a selling talk, and enough room for a theatre imprint. In point of variety we believe there are a greater number of cuts to select from in the Baby Peggy book than on any other short subjects. Besides this, there are suggestions for advertising, with copy and the manner of display shown in the book. There are three different line cuts, each made in one-inch and two-inch sizes. They are illustrated in these columns.

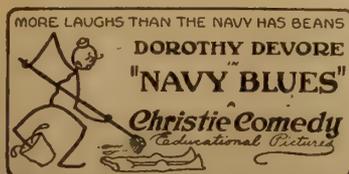

ALL in all, we believe that the exhibitor who really wants to advertise his short stuff will find more than enough material to do so at his local exchange. If he cannot we'd be glad to hear of it and, hearing of it, you can rest assured that the matter will be remedied at once.

HERE are samples of the cuts designed for exhibitor use by Educational. They are reproduced exact size—just right to fit any newspaper column in the country. Mats are furnished free. Cuts may be obtained at a nominal cost.

An Important Message to Theatre Managers

Many of you have heard the expression, "Lens Chart."

But how many of you really know just what it means and just what its importance is to you?

Briefly, the new Lens Chart is a chart which will enable your projectionist to give you the very best screen result possible with the lens and carbon arc equipment you are using.

You know, it isn't always the equipment that's at fault. Very often it's just improper adjustment of the lens, carbon crater, working distance and other important factors involved.

This new Lens Chart is the product of John Griffiths, projection optical expert. In it he has concentrated the results of years of experiment, the "know how" which is so important—yet which so few men can supply.

If you are using carbon arc equipment, by all means spend one dollar and get this invaluable chart. For with it YOU CAN CHECK UP AND SATISFY YOURSELF THAT YOU ARE GETTING MAXIMUM SCREEN RESULTS WITH THE EQUIPMENT YOU ARE USING.

ISN'T THAT WORTH A DOLLAR?

If your dealer doesn't have Griffiths' new Lens Chart, we will supply you direct.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Lachmann Sails for London

Marc Lachmann, of Universal, sailed on the Aquitania Tuesday for London, where he will take charge of the presentation and exploitation campaign for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which makes its London debut the latter part of November at the Empire Theatre, where it will show for an indefinite period.

Up to the time of his sailing for the other side Lachmann had been piloting the exploitation end of the Astor Theatre's, New York, engagement of "Hunchback" for Universal. In his absence Paul Perez, of the Universal home office publicity department, will assume exploitation duties for the Universal special.

De Grasse to Direct "Flowing Gold"

Richard Walton Tully's production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" is to be directed by Joseph De Grasse. The Tully offices announce that De Grasse has been signed to direct this epic of the oil fields of Texas.

De Grasse is at present enjoying a short vacation at Wellington, pending the return from New York of Tully, and actual production will start within a couple of weeks.

Photoplay Edition of Song

Dan Fish, English representative for Preferred Pictures Corporation, has concluded an arrangement with Chappell and Company, London music publishers, for a special photoplay edition of the song "April Showers," to tie up with Tom Forman's production of that name which is ready for early release both here and abroad. One hundred thousand copies will be printed.

"Cupid's Fireman" to Be Jones Film

Photoplay Editions of Two Novels

Photoplay editions of the two popular novels, "Poisoned Paradise" and "White Man," which are under production by B. P. Schulberg as Preferred Pictures, are now being published.

"Flaming Youth" Among First National Films

"Flaming Youth," a current best seller in the world of fiction, a daring and sensational story of present-day society life, which combines strength of plot and dramatic action with delicate tracings of flapper psychology, is announced by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as one of four pictures which will be issued by it during the month of November.

The company's schedule for the month is completed by "Jealous Husbands," a Maurice Tourneur drama presented by M. C. Levee; "The Dangerous Maid," Constance Talmadge's first contribution to the field of romantic comedy-drama, and "The Wanters," a society drama which John M. Stahl has made.

In "Flaming Youth" Colleen Moore has the featured role. John Francis Dillon directed. "The Dangerous Maid," Constance Talmadge, was directed by Victor Heerman. "Jealous Husbands" affords Ben Alexander, the boy hero of "Penrod and Sam, an important part. Earle Williams plays the husband and Jane Novak the wife. "The Wanters" is presented by Louis B. Mayer. The story is interpreted by Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis in the featured roles.

Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" grossed $53,942.75 in its first week at New York's Capitol Theatre. It was decided early in the week that a holdover would be necessary. The second Sunday's crowds equalled those of the first Sunday, with the ticket lines extending to Fiftieth street and around the corner into Fifty-first street. A fine break in the house about 8:30 o'clock brought in a lot of new money.

"The Green Goddess" in its run at Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, did the biggest business of any photoplay attraction at that house this season. In Vancouver and in Montreal also it was a clean-up.

Songs on the Screen Prove a Big Success

Patrons of motion picture theatres are now having provided for them a unique form of screen entertainment, one in which much of the enjoyment comes from the fact that the spectators themselves contribute quite a little to their own enjoyment. This effect is achieved through the showing of the "Sing Them Again" series of single reels which Educational is distributing.

These little gems are produced by Norman Jeffries of Philadelphia. They represent the working out of Mr. Jeffries' own ideas and owe their success largely to his skill in visualizing the underlying ideas in connection with favorite songs.

In each of these reels Mr. Jeffries in the space of about three hundred feet tells the story of a song which the orchestra plays and then the chorus is thrown on the screen and the audience, having caught the spirit, joins in singing it. There are three of these songs to each reel.

As an example of how this is handled, take for instance "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." Mr. Jeffries shows an old, happily married couple talking over their youthful experiences and visualizes some of the happy moments of their youth, then the words of the song are projected on the screen.

The "Sing Them Again" series is already enjoying great success in a number of theatres. In filming these little gems, Mr. Jeffries is ably assisted by Mr. Van Avery who selects the locations, directs the characters and supervises the photography.

London Critics Laud "A Woman of Paris"

Reviews of Charles Chaplin's first serious dramatic film production, "A Woman of Paris," dominated first-page space in several London newspapers recently. Chaplin's directorial ability as revealed in this United Artists Corporation release was considered by the British editors as having international significance, so much so that it was given exceptional display on the first page of the London Daily Express of October 3.

The Express said: "The new methods adopted by Charles Chaplin as producer were first described by the Daily Express cinema correspondent on September 20. The photoplay has been produced with extreme simplicity, naturalness and sincerity. The situations are abnormal, but the people in them are severely normal. Settings, lightings and photography follow the same plan. Everything is regulated as it would appear to an eavesdropper and an unseen prompter."

Another first-page story in London on "A Woman of Paris" was in the Sunday Express of September 30.

Clift Will Direct "Loyalties"

Denison Clift, who directed "This Freedom," the William Fox special from the story of A. S. M. Hutchinson, has been put under contract by Fox. His first assignment will be to direct the screen version of "Loyalties," the John Galsworthy stage play which had a long run at the Gaiety Theatre in New York. Mr. Clift will report to the Fox West Coast studios at once.

Great First Week in Chicago

Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, had a tremendous first week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago. It played to bigger business than did Miss Davies' previous spectacular production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," or "Enemies of Women."

"Little Old New York" is still running at the Empire Theatre, London, where it is among the outstanding film successes of the year. Los Angeles is still flocking to the California Theatre to see it.

"The Signal Tower" Cast Selected

The cast has been selected for the forthcoming Universal-Jewel, "The Signal Tower," being adapted from Wadsworth Camp's short story. It will be directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Virginia Valli will be featured. With her are Rockcliffe Fellowes, Wallace Beery, J. Farrell MacDonald, Dot Farley, Frankie Darrow and James O. Barrows.

Metro Hollywood Studios Working Full Speed on 1923-24 Schedule

There is no lull at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Production on the big Metro 1923-1924 program of major pictures is forging rapidly and steadily ahead. Part of the big schedule has already been completed and the productions, beginning this month, will be released steadily at short intervals. Constant additions are being made to the program, increasing the number of pictures which Metro announced several months back at the time of the national convention in New York of the Metro sales organization. New stories by well known authors have been secured, and as is customary with Metro, they will be filmed with casts of noted players, whose box-office value is well known, and under the charge of directors whose reputation for turning out successes are bywords in the industry.

Though Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" will not be released with the productions listed below it is one of the first of the new Metro pictures to be completed. "Scaramouche" is now in its fourth week at the big legitimate Forty-fourth Street Theatre on Broadway. It is definitely set for a long, continuous Broadway engagement.

The first release, early in September, was Mae Murray's Metro starring picture, "The French Doll," which had a highly successful engagement at the Capitol Theatre several weeks ago. Taken from Irene Bordon's great New York stage success, "The French Doll" has already had a series of record-breaking engagements in various cities throughout the country. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions.

September also saw the release of the following new-season productions: Fred Niblo's production, "Strangers of the Night," a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction adapted from the great international stage success, "Captain Applejack." "Strangers of the Night" also had an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, to its credit, and numerous successful runs in other cities.

"Rouged Lips," Viola Dana's first starring Metro picture of the series of five which Metro announced, with possibly a sixth, a dramatic production; "Three Ages," Buster Keaton's first feature length Metro comedy, which has already enjoyed a run at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, a brilliant triumph in London, and similar triumphs in San Francisco and other cities;

"Desire," a Louis Burston presentation which forms one of the series of Metro Premier Feature productions of the 1923-1924 program; "The Eternal Struggle," a Reginald Barker production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces. This picture played last week at the Rivoli Theatre, New York; "The Eagle's Feather," another Metro Premier Feature production with James Kirkwood and Mary Alden among other noted players in the cast; "The Social Code," Viola Dana's second Metro starring picture.

Four important productions will be released by Metro during the month of November. These are: "Pleasure Mad," Reginald Barker's second production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. It will be released November 5; "Held to Answer," with House Peters in the leading role. It will be released November 12; "Hospitality," Buster Keaton's second feature length Metro comedy. It is a Joseph M. Schenck presentation through Metro. It will be released November 19.

And last, Jackie Coogan's long-heralded Metro picture, "Long Live the King," to be released November 26. This is a nine reel production recently completed on the west coast under the direction of Victor Schertzinger from the novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It was produced under the personal supervision of Jackie Coogan, Senior. It will be released November 26.

Friedman to Handle Preferred in Chicago

In a deal involving a quarter of a million dollars, J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, in Chicago, has taken over the distribution of Preferred Pictures in the Chicago territory. Mr. Friedman left for Chicago on Saturday after completing negotiations with B. P. Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann of Preferred Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Friedman will immediately enlarge his organization to handle adequately this new product. Among the new members of his sales force will be many from the former Preferred staff in Chicago.

The new contract gives Mr. Friedman the new Preferred Fifteen in addition to the Preferred Eight, and he will at once begin an extensive sales and exploitation for Preferred Pictures in Chicago.

Riesensfeld Praises Paramount Film

Hugo Riesensfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres in New York, is the latest to accord to Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments," the enthusiastic praise of an expert viewer of pictures. In a telegram to Adolph Zukor, Mr. Riesensfeld says in part: "Have viewed 'The Ten Commandments' twice. It is the greatest picture I have ever seen."

"Grandma's Boy" Makes This Township Grow

A new record has just been set by Harold Lloyd in his Associated Exhibitors super-attraction, "Grandma's Boy."

In Torrance, Cal., a town of 1,500 inhabitants, it played on September 25th and 26th to 1510 paid admissions. The figures indicate either that every man, woman and child living in Torrance attended, or that every stranger within its gates was present on one day or the other.

Those who attended on the opening day of the run apparently advertised the attraction well, for whereas the paid admissions that day were 659, these swelled to 851 the second day.

In "The Mirage"

It is announced by Joseph M. Schenck that Constance Talmadge will appear in "The Mirage," a screen production of the play by Edgar Selwyn.

Changes Title

Metro announces that the new title of "The Living Past," which Harold Shaw is now directing at the Metro Hollywood studios, will be "The Fool's Awakening."

November Exodus for Next Coogan Film

According to an announcement made on the west coast by Jack Coogan, Sr., Victor Schertzinger, film director, has been retained to direct Jackie's second Metro picture, production on which will begin within the next several weeks.

"Long Live the King" will be released in the latter part of November.

MAE MARSH IN PADDY-THE-NEXT-BEST-THING, A UNITED ARTISTS' PICTURE

Sanger Co. Books Preferred Films

The first four Preferred Pictures released this fall have been booked by the Sanger Amusement Company for exhibition in their entire circuit of theatres throughout the south. The productions included in this contract are "The Broken Wing," "Mothers-in-Law," "April Showers," and "The Virginian."

"Fashion Row" Completed

Mae Murray has completed "Fashion Row," her second Metro starring picture, which together with "The French Doll," her current release, and another production, form one of the important units of the Metro 1923-1924 program of major production. "Fashion Row" is scheduled for December release.

Those in the cast of "Fashion Row" with Miss Murray are Elmo Lincoln, Freeman Wood, Earle Fox and Mathilde Brundage.

"The Way of a Man" Made by Pathe as Feature and Serial

In view of the virile, dramatic character of the story unfolded in Emerson Hough's novel, "The Way of a Man," throbbing with the indomitable spirit of the hardy pioneers of the early West and aglow with all the rugged vigor and color of its great open spaces, Pathe has had prepared both a feature and serial version of the famous story.

Both versions were produced at the same time under the direction of George Seitz, in pursuance of well-defined plans laid down last June preliminary to the start of production work. The feature version of this splendid story by the author of "The Covered Wagon" and "North of 36" will be released by Pathe December 16 in advance of the release of the serial production.

Like his "Covered Wagon,"

Emerson Hough's "The Way of a Man" is vibrant with the perils and hardships that beset the pioneers of our Middle and Far West in their hazardous advance across the great sweeping plains and arid desert wastes of the little-known regions west of the Mississippi. Throughout all the stages of production work on both feature and serial, Mr. Seitz has labored unceasingly to reproduce with unerring accuracy and thrilling realism the spirit of heroic adventure, which the author breathed into his world-famous story of this epochal chapter in the nation's history.

The fast action and outdoor atmosphere of "The Way of a Man," abetted by the tremendous success on the screen of "The Covered Wagon" by the same author, will in the opinion of Pathe officials strongly recommend the feature version to first-run theatres, which because of their transient patronage are not usually in the market for serials. The universal interest extending to this colorful and eventful period of the country's development is also expected to prove an important factor in making "The Way of a Man" a box-office attraction of the first magnitude.

Allene Ray and Harold Miller head an eminently capable cast, which includes in the principal roles "Bud" Osborne, Kathryn Appleton, Chet Ryan, Whitehorse, and Lillian Gale. Mr. Seitz took his cast of principals, accompanied by a great company of extras, Indians from the reservations, droves of horses and a train of the historic "covered wagons" of the plains, into the Arizona desert, where over six weeks were spent in the filming of exteriors.

Universal Lines Up Strong List of Stories for Early Production

Universal has lined up an unusual selection of literary material for adaptation to the screen, it has just been learned from the Universal home office. The list includes powerful stories by world-known authors, and promises a series of high grade pictures for Universal release in the coming months.

Upon Mr. Carl Laemmle's arrival from Europe, the Universal scenario forces held a long series of conferences with him over the stories for next spring's Jewels, and other pictures. The Universal chief in outlining his picture policy, made it known that Universal will stop at no limits in obtaining high grade stories for the screen.

The list selected under Mr. Laemmle's supervision by Robert F. Roden, Universal's eastern scenario head, and Raymond L. Schrobl, Universal's coast scenario chief, includes the following well-known stories; "The Inheritors," a novel by Miss I. A. R. Wylie; "Love Insurance," a novel by Earl Derr Biggers; "Wine," a story by William MacHarg; "Courtin' Calamity," by William Dudley Pelley; "Judgments of West Paradise," by Valma Clark, and "The Free Trader," by Kathrene and Robert Pinkerton.

Some of the stories are due for early production. Scenarists already have been engaged to whip them into film form. Following the liberal purchase policy of Mr. Laemmle, Universal has obtained the services of some of the best scenarists in the business to make over these stories for the screen.

Among the recent purchases, one is for serial adaptation. Sevens William McLeod Raine's "Ridger" other well-known stories are in the process of production.

Following completion of "Clay of Ca'lina," starring Herbert Rawlinson and directed by Robert Hill, work will be started on "Jack of Clubs," as a Rawlinson story. Work on the adaptation of "The Tornado," Lincoln Carter's celebrated melodrama, is also under way. George W. Ogden's "Claim Number One" is in process of scenarization for Jack Hoxie, as way of Montana.

"Souls That Pass in the Night," the remarkable mystery story written by former chief William Flynn, of the United States Secret Service, has also been purchased by Universal and is being adapted for an all star cast and is to be produced in the near future. Perhaps one of the most important pictures under way in the entire industry is "Damned," the world celebrated anonymous novel, now being filmed at Universal City.

A striking example of the simplicity and purity of composition adhered to in filming Douglas Fairbanks' "Thief of Bagdad" was seen in the shooting of the great throne room scene, one of the most imposing interiors in the picture. Here only fifty persons represent the retinues of five powerful Asiatic princes. Ordinarily such a scene would be crowded with some 600 gaudily garbed extras.

"The Broken Wing" Lauded by Critics

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, "The Broken Wing," from the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, has concluded a successful first showing at the California in San Francisco.

San Francisco Call-Post said: "The production sparkles with high dramatic qualities and a brand of humor of the first caliber." San Francisco Journal: "An amusing story with many bright lines."

Story of "Black Oxen" Chaplin Makes a Personal Appearance Is Widely Distributed

That newspaper serialization of a photoplay story has been attained to an extent hitherto unrealized is the claim of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in announcing the full details of its "Black Oxen" serialization plan.

"Black Oxen," a Gertrude Atherton novel, which is among the year's best sellers, is to be offered by First National as a Frank Lloyd production. In laying out its campaign for newspaper serialization, the company aimed at obtaining the maximum value to the exhibitor. The serialization rights were released so that upon completion of the novel, which was issued in full, the picture would be ready for release in the local theatre. In addition to this every installment in the newspaper carried an announcement of the forthcoming Frank Lloyd production which features Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle.

At the present time one hundred and thirty daily newspapers are carrying the serialization.

"Charlie Chaplin, wag of the world and droll picture-maker, who has made a million sides to shake and a million eyes to run with tears of laughter, owned Detroit Monday."

Thus the Detroit Free Press, expressed itself on Monday, October 16, when Charles Chaplin broke a long-standing rule of his own and cut loose with public personal appearance stuff that kept that city in a turmoil of delight from eight o'clock in the morning till midnight.

The unusual sight of Charles Chaplin overcoming his reluctance to appear in public was in response to an official invitation from Detroit's great commercial body, the Board of Commerce, to be the city's guest.

Big Audience Welcomes Cosmopolitan Picture

"Unseeing Eyes," the latest production from the Cosmopolitan Studios, starts its career armed with evidence of the high approval of capacity Broadway audiences and the newspaper reviewers. The premiere of the picture at the Cosmopolitan Theatre on Sunday evening attracted a big and typical Broadway audience, which welcomed the picture warmly.

New York newspaper reviewers plainly shared in the welcome which the audience gave to Lionel Barrymore, hero of Arthur Stringer's tale of perilous adventure in the Canadian Rockies. Seena Owen is the heroine, and Louis Wolheim has the "heavy" part. Victor Herbert and his orchestra, of course, topped off the whole occasion.

Following are expressions from some newspaper reviews: Daily News: "Unseeing Eyes," tale of north, has thrill for every second." New York Times: "Lionel Barrymore gives a good account of himself as Dean. Miss Owen is sympathetic as Miriam, and if you want a super-villain, Wolheim fills the bill." Evening Telegram: "Go up to the handsome theatre on Columbus Circle and enjoy the many thrills in this story of the frozen North."

Telegraph: "If the success of the film is measured by its appeal to the motion picture public then we must say that 'Unseeing Eyes' occupies an enviable position. It has everything the public loves." Evening Mail: "Unseeing Eyes" also differs from other films of the great outdoors in its careful direction and beautiful and effective staging."

"The Call of the Wild" Undergoing Big Booking

Following its premieres on the West Coast at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, and on the East Coast at the Cameo Theatre, Broadway, New York, Pathe's picturization of Jack London's famous dog story, "The Call of the Wild," is playing to capacity audiences in prominent first-run theatres throughout the country.

The volume of bookings on this subject, which was released generally on Sept. 23, is mounting steadily, and during the last ten days some of the most important theatres and circuits of the country have closed for engagements on the production. Among these houses and theatre chains are: The I. H. Libson Circuit, closing for the Strand, Cincinnati, the Colonial in Columbus, and the Strand in Dayton; the Rothchild group, signing for the Granada, San Francisco; the A. H. Blank chain, for the Palace Theatre in Des Moines; the Midwest Theatre Company, including the Midway of Rockford, the Lincoln Square of Decatur, the Rialto in Bloomington, and the Rialto at Elgin, Ill.; the Capitol Theatre Circuit of Kansas City, Mo., including its theatres in Independence, Eldorado, Manhattan, Chantute in the state of Kansas, Excelsior Springs and Carthage, in the state of Missouri, and the following theatres in Kansas City, Mo.: the Lyndwood, Gladstone, Summit, Admiral, Benton, and Elsworth; the State Theatre, Oakland, Cal.; the Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; Fox, Aurora, Ill.; Gem, Gary, Ind.; Palace, Tulsa, Okla.; Capitol, Charleston, W. Va., and the Hippodrome, Lancaster, O.

Big Exploitation for "The Drivin' Fool"

Following intensive exploitation and publicity campaigns the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on Saturday, October 20, launched a two weeks' engagement of its latest comedy feature, "The Drivin' Fool," at the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, Mo. The advance campaign was in charge of Charles Geigerich, of the Hodkinson exploitation department, who spent more than a week in the mid-west city preparing and executing the drive.

The Hodkinson picture set new attendance records for both Saturday and Sunday performances, it is said, and by Monday was well under way to establish a new mark for the downtown playhouse.

The exploitation campaign as carried out was followed exactly as laid out in the press and exploitation book on "The Drivin' Fool," prepared by the Hodkinson offices for the guidance of exhibitors throughout the land.

Warner Says Showmen Want Variety in Films

"Exhibitors want a wide variety of motion picture productions," declares Sam Warner, "rather than the occasional big production for the coming season. The conditions imposed on exhibitors by companies producing photoplays of a stupendous nature and presenting them in legitimate theatres at high prices is frightening off the exhibitor who formerly looked on the big picture as an out-of-the-ordinary photoplay for his theatre. Naturally, showmen are booking these bigger features, even though their box-office record shows a loss now and then, but they depend a great deal on the simpler production that lends itself to unusual exploitation methods just as much as the photoplay containing million dollar names, massive sets and super direction."

Mr. Warner made this declaration after conferring with important exhibitors in New England and live-wire showmen that he has come in contact with during his visit to the Warner office in New York.

"It has been this organization's policy to make every variety of a production so that each exhibitor will have a wide choice to select from in his dealings with us. So far this season we have placed productions before the camera that involve large sums of money and we have undertaken productions that have not been so costly but contain a certain amount of an appeal that an exhibitor cannot overlook.

"In our schedule for the season of 1923-24 we have included productions with the finest stories and stars available, and we have also undertaken productions that have not called for such an outlay of money but which will appeal to the exhibitor because of their universal theme, treatment and box-office drawing power."

Thompson in New York

David H. Thompson, First National production manager, is in New York for a conference with First National executives relative to future activities at the West Coast studios. He brought with him the master print and negative of "Flaming Youth."

Tie-up Race with Warner Film

Live-wire exhibitors in all sections are losing no time in taking advantage of the recent international race between Zev and Papyrus, and are tying up the Warner Classic, "Little Johnny Jones," starring Johnny Hines, with the big sporting event, it is reported.

The story of the picture is almost a direct parallel with the international race, Warner Bros. state, except that Johnny Jones and his famous horse, Yankee Doodle, traveled to England to race the English champion at Epsom Downs, instead of the English horse coming to this country as did Papyrus.

Cruze Will Direct "North of 36"

"North of 36," Emerson Hough's epic of the stirring and colorful pioneer days that bridged the gap between Indian warfare and America's industrial birth, is to be filmed at once as the result of a decision reached after months of planning and deliberation by executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky announced in Hollywood recently. James Cruze will direct.

M. H. Hoffman Resigns

Milton H. Hoffman, Metro production manager for the last two years, has announced his resignation to take effect next month, when he will leave for an extended ocean voyage. Mr. Hoffman has been in ill health for several months.

Goldwyn Grooming "Dark Horse;" High Hopes for Seastrom Pictures

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, it appears, has been holding an ace up its sleeve. While producing or distributing and publicising and bragging about such big successes as Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women," its own "Three Wise Fools," "The Spoilers," "Six Days," Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" and others, it has been quietly grooming another picture to capture motion picture sweepstakes for the year. It will be released sometime around December 1.

The dark horse is "Name the Man!" the first American-made picture by the noted Swedish actor-director, Victor Seastrom. It is an adaptation from Sir Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man." Report has been made from the Goldwyn studios, from time to time, regarding the selection of members of the cast and progress on photography, but there has been a curious silence regarding the quality and the magnitude of the production.

It now develops that there has been a purpose in the sparingness of the advance publicity regarding "Name the Man!" Goldwyn wished to have its first Seastrom picture almost on the point of release before beginning its publicity campaign, so that it could approach the task of telling the trade the quality of the picture with fresh material and fresh impressions.

Mr. Seastrom now is putting the finishing touches on the editing and titling of the production at the Goldwyn studios. The continuity was prepared by Paul Bern, one time editor-in-chief of Goldwyn and one of the most gifted of scenarists, in consultation with June Mathis, editorial director for Goldwyn, and with Mr. Seastrom.

Reports from production executives at the studios are that "Name the Man!" is a picture astounding in its humanity and its realism; one that will make its appeal straight to the heart of every person seeing it. The noted director has imbued the actors playing the important roles with his own peculiar gift of making real life in the screen's shadow picturing of life. Each player, answering to the director's appeal to avoid excess in portraying the highly wrought emotions of the characters, while at the same time keeping them keyed up to dramatic tenseness, has achieved, Goldwyn says, a naturalness seldom attained on the screen.

Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man" was the one story out of all the material available at the Goldwyn studios, and from all of the outside material that he had read and considered, that Mr. Seastrom selected as the story he wanted to present to the American public as his first production made in this country. It held the qualities that appealed to the Swedish director and in the expression of which he won world-wide honor as one of the greatest screen directorial geniuses of the world, before Goldwyn induced him to come to America and make a series of productions for it.

The cast which Goldwyn gave Mr. Seastrom to work with is without question one to delight the heart of any director. Mae Busch has the best part she has essayed in the films. Patsy Ruth Miller has the role of the good woman who is really loved by Victor Stowell, while Bessie Collister, the role which Mae Busch plays, is the girl he has wronged in a moment of passion. Conrad Nagel is the Victor Stowell.

Boston Papers Praise Vitagraph Production

The metropolitan premiere of "Pioneer Trails" in Boston called forth high commendation from the critics of newspapers in that city. Not only is the story praised for its dramatic entertainment but the splendid photography is emphasized in the critical reviews.

The Boston Advertiser said: "One bit of photography showing an Indian scout signalling to his fellow killers upon a cliff is a beautiful sample of camera painting at its best." Boston Telegram: "Atmosphere and beautiful scenes abound in 'Pioneer Trails' showing at the Park Theatre. All in all 'Pioneer Trails' is an instructive and well portrayed picture of American life and American people when our country was young."

Boston Herald: "Incidentally there is a very pretty heroine in crinolines, played by Alice Calhoun." Boston American: "Mr. (Cullen) Landis as the young hero gives a characterization always pleasing and virile. Particular mention should be made of the picturesque scenes in mountains and plains." Boston Post: "It is a thrilling and romantic drama done in a large manner with a big cast headed by Alice Calhoun and Cullen Landis."

Fairbanks Film Awarded High Honor in Mexico

Douglas Fairbanks' screen version of the famous Robin Hood has been awarded first place as the best motion picture exhibited in the Republic of Mexico during the year 1923.

This signal honor for "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" came as the result of a voting contest conducted recently by El Universal, one of the leading newspapers of Mexico City.

In honor of the award those in charge of the contest arranged an impressive fiesta at one of the big theatres in Mexico City. One of the principal features was the presentation to Harvey Sheehan, general manager of United Artists in Mexico, of a diploma from El Universal, stating that the diploma was for Douglas Fairbanks for his "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

Warners Enthusiastic About "Tiger Rose"

News comes from the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios that Sidney A. Franklin has completed the editing, titling and cutting of the screen version of the famous Belasco stage play, "Tiger Rose," in which Lenore Ulric is starred, and that the finished print has been shipped East for the approval of the Warner officials in the city of New York. Before the print left the Warner Studios it was shown to H. M. Warner and Jack Warner, who were highly enthusiastic over the new production, and who predicted that it would take its place among the finest motion picture productions of the new season.

"The Spanish Dancer" Reported Making Hit

Reports received at the Paramount home office on the initial showings of the Herbert Brenon production, "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri, in New York, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Sandusky, indicate that the picture is destined to score one of the greatest box-office records of recent years, Paramount says.

"The Spanish Dancer" is the first of the new Paramounts to be released under the policy of demonstration showings by which prices to exhibitors are to be ultimately determined.

Total admissions and receipts for the picture during its first week in New York at the Rivoli, Paramount states, lifted it immediately into the class of "Blood and Sand," "The Sheik," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Man-slaughter," all of which had their New York premieres at the same theatre. Approximately 9,000 people paid admission on the opening day. At Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles the picture is now in its second week of capacity business. In the first seven days it played to 20,397 people.

Educator Forecasts Success for Picture

"Every lover of Dickens is certain to be pleased with the new photoplay, 'David Copperfield,'" declared Dr. C. E. Meloney, associate superintendent of the New York City public schools, following a special showing of the Associated Exhibitors feature, which he attended recently. "And if it pleases the students of Dickens it is certain to make a deep appeal to every one who appreciates good, wholesome entertainment. I consider the production splendidly done and well worthy of popular support."

John S. Woody, Associated's general manager, has announced also the booking of "David Copperfield" for an indefinite run in Tremont Temple, Boston.

Announcement of the official release of this feature has been the signal for a veritable rush of bookings, Mr. Woody stated.

"Six Days" Gets Good Baylies' Campaign for National Advertising Pathe Film "Columbus"

Twenty-five of the big key cities of the country have either already carried, or will carry just prior to the first booking of "Six Days," a large number of the striking and artistic 24-sheet posters designed for the production. The posting remains on the boards for several weeks in advance of the showings.

The bill posting campaign was arranged and put across by Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn. Among the towns where the poster campaign has already been put through are New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee and Salt Lake City.

In connection with the national bill posting campaign, Mr. Dietz also arranged a tie-up with the nineteen Hearst newspapers in the largest cities of the country by which a serial version of "Six Days" would be run in the Hearst newspaper in every city where they are published at the time the picture was shown in first run.

The receipts at the Capitol, New York, for the first week's screening of the picture were in excess of $53,000, which is very close to the record week's business for the Capitol. The picture was retained for a second week, doing a business almost as great as the first week.

When "Six Days" was put on at their Chicago Theatre by Balaban & Katz, the week following its screening for them, the serialization of the story was published in Hearst's Herald-Examiner. In Los Angeles, where "Six Days" is now in its second week, the Examiner published the story serially.

The campaign conducted by T. B. Baylies, managing director of the State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., for the engagement of Pathe's "Columbus" at that house serves admirably as a model, it is said, for the presentation of this and the forthcoming productions, belonging to the "Chronicles of America" series to be released through Pathe.

Capitalizing the extraordinary appeal of the subject to the school authorities, Mr. Baylies concentrated his efforts on the local teaching staff, the City Librarian, and prominent clergymen and newspaper editors, who by virtue of their professions would be expected to be particularly interested in anything pertaining to the educational welfare of the city's juvenile population.

Pilgrim Film Successful in New York Premiere

New York newspaper critics expressed their praise of "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's stage play, "The Scarecrow," now being given its premiere engagement at the Cameo Theatre, New York City.

The New York Times said: "Puritan Passions' is a picture that has enlisted careful study and unlimited pains." The Daily News: "Not only have we Percy Mackaye's best but Glenn Hunter's finest and Mary Astor's most charming personality." "A singularly fine, graceful performance by Glenn Hunter," declared the New York Herald. The Evening World avers: "To us, 'Puritan Passions' was a movie treat."

The New York Tribune: "'Puritan Passions' seems to us one of the most interesting pictures of the year." The New York Evening Telegram says: "You will find in 'Puritan Passions' a vanished phase of life brought back vividly and dramatically."

Hart Congratulated on New Paramount Picture

William S. Hart, who recently completed "Wild Bill Hickok," the first of the series of pictures which is to be released under the star's new contract with Paramount, is receiving congratulations from many film people in Hollywood on the excellence of the production which he has made to serve as his first starring vehicle since his temporary retirement from the screen two years ago.

Among those who have seen "Wild Bill Hickok" in its finished state is Jesse L. Lasky, who sent Hart the following telegram: "My dear Bill: I have just finished looking at 'Wild Bill Hickok' and seldom have I spent a more fascinating hour and a half. The picture is truly the best Bill Hart picture thus far produced and unquestionably will prove popular and successful."

"A Lady of Quality" Received in New York

The Universal home office has received from the West Coast the advance print of one of the biggest pictures in that company's 1923-1924 schedule. "A Lady of Quality." It is a Super-Jewel Production, and is expected to take its place beside "Merry Go Round" as a big box-office bet.

Hobart Henley directed the picture, from a screen adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's popular novel. Virginia Valli is the star, and as the first production in which she is starred alone, Universal has gone to extremes to make "A Lady of Quality" an outstanding picture. The production is due to reach the screen around the first of the year. Its appearance will be preceded by an elaborate exploitation campaign, already under way.

"The Temple of Venus" to Have N. Y. Premiere

The fourth Broadway presentation of the William Fox specials for the season of 1923-24 is scheduled for Monday night, October 29 when "The Temple of Venus" will be given its World's premiere at the Central Theatre. "Monna Vanna," which is now at this house will continue its run until Sunday, October 28.

This is a Henry Otto production. It was filmed on Santa Cruz Island off the coast of California. Mary Philbin is in the leading feminine role. She is supported by David Butler and Phyllis Haver and also by one thousand bathing beauties.

With the final editing of the picture the following cast is announced in support of the three featured players: William Walling, Micky McBain, Alice Day, William Boyd, Leon Barry, Celeste Lee, Senorita Consuella, Robert Cline, Marilynn Boyd, Frank Keller, Lorraine Easton and Helen Virgil.

Suggests Exploitation for Warner Production

"Back-Home-to-the-Farm-Week," says Warner Bros., is an idea which should appeal to all exhibitors who have booked the latest Warner classic, "The Country Kid," starring Wesley Barry. Live-wire showmen can cash in on this idea by co-operating with different stores and obtaining full page ads from merchants who handle goods of a rural nature. A combined full page ad with the exhibitor's in the center calling attention to the showing of "The Country Kid" should stimulate a great amount of interest.

An endless number of stunts can help the box-office in connection with "Back-to-the-Farm-Week" in each city where the picture is booked. Tie-ups can be made with dance halls, giving nights for a Country Kid Barn Dance with rube costumes; amateur nights can be staged in each theatre with a prize given to the best rube dancer; a country store on the stage of the theatre at each performance should also stimulate interest.

The exploitation and publicity department of the Warner organization have created an unusual amount of ideas which are included in the campaign book for the exhibitor's benefit.

"Virginian" Praised by Dayton Newspaper

Owen Wister's story, "The Virginian," which has been filmed for Preferred by Tom Forman, was given its first public exhibition this week at the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, Ohio.

The Dayton Journal says: "Owen Wister's story 'The Virginian,' in its screen form was presented for the first time on a commercial screen Sunday at the Columbia before a packed house. To our mind, it is one of the very superior cinemas of the season—or for two seasons. By dint of deft handling, it succeeded in forcing its point. Kenneth Harlan who portrays the name role, seems to be the embodiment of the popular notion of his part."

"Pioneer Trails" Liked in Boston

The Park Theatre in Boston held "Pioneer Trails," produced by Vitagraph under the direction of David Smith, over for a second week.

Bookers in New England are striving eagerly to obtain play dates following the success of this super feature in Boston.

Detective Praises Vitagraph Film

The ingenuity with which "The Leavenworth Case" the second Whitman Bennett production for Vitagraph sustains the mystery of the murder of Ira Leavenworth was highly praised by Henry Forbes, a retired detective sergeant in charge of a homicide squad of New York City, after a showing of this mystery photoplay at the Bennett Studios in Yonkers. The old detective declared the mystery story to be one of the best pictures he had ever seen.

Tourneur Hits on Timely Theme

That Maurice Tourneur hit upon an ever timely theme when he made "Jealous Husbands," was pointed out by M. C. Levee, the producer, last week. Through a clipping service the Tourneur organization in one week received four thousand clippings from newspapers in which the word "jealousy" appeared in the headlines, many of which were front page stories. The picture is for First National release.

Lloyd to Direct "The Sea Hawk"

With "Black Oxen" in the cutting room, Frank Lloyd will start work within a week on the production of Rafael Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk," which will be produced for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. In "Black Oxen" Lloyd has brought to the screen Gertrude Atherton's most successful novel.

Cast of Stahl Film Is Selected

John M. Stahl has completed his cast for his picturization of the stage play, "Why Men Leave Home." This First National picture will be interpreted by Lewis Stone in the principal role, Helene Chadwick, Mary Carr, William V. Mong, Alma Bennett, Hedda Hopper, Lile Leslie, Sidney Bracey and E. H. Calvert.

More Circuits Sign

Pathe continues to report the signing by circuits of theatres for the entire Pathe two-reel comedy output. The latest are the W. P. Gray circuit of fifty-five houses in the New England states and the Sam Goldstein chain, located in Springfield, Holyoke, Pittsfield, Northampton, Westfield, Ware and Palmer, Mass.

Hodkinson Novelty

The Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an interesting novelty for "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow." A card, postal size, shows Glenn Hunter as Lord Ravensbane looking into the mirror of truth. When the card is held to the light the image of the Scarecrow appears in the glass.

Cast of Vitagraph Picture Announced

J. Stuart Blackton announced the complete cast of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," the indictment of the divorce evil, adapted from the novel by Basil King, at the Vitagraph studios last week. Mr. Blackton began shooting on his new super feature last Monday.

In the cast are Pauline Frederick, Lou Tellegen, Effie Shannon, Leslie Austen, Maurice Costello, Helen D'Algy, Gladys Frazin, Clifton Webb and Homer Lynn.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder" will be one of the great significant photoplays of the year," Mr. Blackton said. "The divorce evil is growing throughout the world. How to avoid unhappiness in marriage is one of the gravest problems in America today. In my coming production the cause of an unhappy marriage is presented frankly. Those who see this picture will learn what a terrifying evil discontent in the home may become and to what disaster it may lead."

"Going Up" Sold to 2 Cities Via Air Wave

Science scored heavily this week when Jensen & Von Herberg, the big west coast exhibitors, traveling Europewards aboard the Mauretania, booked Douglas MacLean's "Going Up" for their theatres in Seattle and Portland, Ore. With John S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, sitting at the New York or receiving end of the ethereal connection, the entire negotiations were conducted and the deals closed by radio messages.

What science accomplished was this: Radiograms from Mr. Woody's office, station JSW, overtook a speedy ocean liner, two passengers on which, disregarding the ocean waves, used air waves to flash the desire to serve patrons at home with the picture.

The Mauretania was three days out when Mr. Woody got into communication with Claude Jensen.

"Warrens of Virginia" Being Filmed by Fox

"The Warrens of Virginia," the famous stage play produced by David Belasco and written by William C. deMille, is the only production now in progress at the William Fox New York Studios. Elmer Clifton, who made "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Six Cylinder Love," is directing the picture.

Martha Mansfield, whose last work was in the Fox special, "The Silent Command," has the role of Agatha, the feminine lead. The others in the cast include Robert Andrews, Harlan Knight, James Turfler, J. Barney Sherry, Helen Ray Kyle, Wilfred Lytell and Rosemary Hill.

The original stage production ranked as one of the leading dramatic achievements.

"Columbus" Is Feature of Dedication Program

"Columbus," the first release of Pathe's colorful and dramatic "Chronicles of America" series, was a feature of a special gala program arranged by the Indianapolis chapter of the Knights of Columbus for the dedication of their new building on last Friday evening, October 12.

An enthusiastic audience, which included representatives of the city and state governments, the Speaker of the Lower House of the Canadian Parliament, and more than five hundred members of the order, received the picture with prolonged and hearty applause. Following the showing of the picture, Mr. Pagani, chairman of the meeting, spoke of the production in highly laudatory terms.

"Madame Sans Gene" Is Pola's Next

According to an announcement issued by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Miss Negri's next starring picture will be made from Victorien Sardou's play "Madame Sans Gene."

De Mille Adds La Rocque

William de Mille has announced that Rod La Rocque has been added to the cast of his current Paramount production, "Everyday Love."

The featured members are Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Nita Naldi, Theodore Kosloff.

"Pleasure Mad" for November Release

With the hurried preparations going on for the new Reginald Barker production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, "Women Who Wait," it is apparent that Mr. Barker is rapidly completing his second Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction of the new season, "Pleasure Mad," upon which the noted director has been engaged for many months.

"Pleasure Mad" is scheduled for release early in November. It is a film version of Blanche Upright's novel, "The Valley of Content." A. P. Younger made the screen adaptation and it was photographed by Norbert Brodin.

Spearing Prepares Scenario

The latest scenario work of James O. Spearing, former New York newspaper critic, now associated with the Universal Pictures Corporation, has been the preparation of "The Signal Tower" for screening. "The Signal Tower" is Wadsworth Camp's short story included in O'Brien's "Best Short Stories of 1921" and is to be a Universal-Jewel special. Clarence L. Brown will direct it.

Tulsa Welcomes "Going Up"

John S. Woody, general manager of Associated, has just received this telegram from Harry Castle, manager of the Palace Theatre, Tulsa:

"We opened with your production, 'Going Up,' Friday, and packed them at every show, despite a continual downpour of rain. The laughter and criticism from my audiences indicate that it is one of the best ever shown. Congratulations, and may you have many more like it."

Big Campaign Book for Vitagraph Film

Vitagraph is compiling a campaign book for "The Man from Brodney's," the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, prints of which will soon go forward to branches from the Brooklyn laboratories.

The new exploitation book will be eight columns wide, full newspaper size and printed on heavy stock.

Fairbanks Works with Tigers

Douglas Fairbanks worked with a group of Bengal tigers every night last week. These animals are required in the forthcoming Fairbanks' feature, "The Thief of Bagdad." These beasts have become the chief residents of the ancient city of Bagdad, which stands on the Pickford-Fairbanks lot, and are kept within their city limits by a wire fence twelve feet high.

"The Spanish Dancer" Scores Hit at the Demonstration Theatres

Additional reports from Paramount demonstration theatres, received at the home office of the company, bear proof of the box-office power of "The Spanish Dancer," the first picture to be released under the new policy of test showings. The reports include not only figures on attendance and box-office revenue but press criticisms and opinions of the theatre managers.

The four-day run of the picture at the Plaza Theatre, Sandusky, O., was terminated Wednesday, October 17, when Manager A. C. Himmelein reported as follows: "Just finished a remarkable four-day run on 'The Spanish Dancer'—a few dollars less than 'Manslaughter,' which holds the house record. I honestly believe that 'The Spanish Dancer' will prove to be one of the season's sensations."

Last Sunday night, following the opening in Chicago, the McVicker's management sent the following telegram: "The Spanish Dancer' drew record box-office line and there was a stampede for seats when McVicker's opened today. Chicago acclaims 'The Spanish Dancer' Pola Negri's best picture. Big business sustained all day."

At the Grand Theatre in Columbus the Brenon production broke all house records on its opening day, Sunday, October 14, and the Olympic in Pittsburgh, where the opening was Monday, the 15th, reported a never-ending box-office line for the first time in many weeks. At both these houses the week's business approached the house records.

Pola Negri took Kansas City by storm when the picture had its local premiere at the Newman. The Star critic said: "The Spanish Dancer' is an exceptionally good picture, well acted, well directed. And, running through it all, vivid as a flame, is the characterization Pola Negri gives of the gypsy girl. She talks with her eyes, her hands, her whole body, and there is fire and buoyancy in her work. We take off our hats to her."

Opens at Central

The fourth Broadway presentation of the William Fox specials for the season of 1923-24 is scheduled for Monday night, October 29, when "The Temple of Venus" will be given its world's premiere at the Central Theatre. "Monna Vanna," which is now at this house, will continue its run until Sunday, October 28.

"The Temple of Venus," says Fox, combines drama, allegory and a beauty extravaganza and has been called the "Ziegfeld Follies" of the screen. It is a Henry Otto production.

From George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress in Salt Lake City, came the following wire: "The public has welcomed Paramount's new policy with open arms. With admission prices advanced they jammed the Paramount-Empress day and night. Forced to stop ticket sales three times Sunday."

"There is not a moment's drag in the picture," said the Herald of Grand Rapids, where "The Spanish Dancer" played to capacity throughout its engagement at the Majestic. "The simple story of love and adventure among the most romantic circumstances sweeps simply through with fighting, exaltation, humor, despair and a happy ending. The capable cast and glittering sets are, after all, used for their rightful purpose of emphasizing a thrilling romance."

The Republican-Gazette, of Lima, O., where the picture played to turn-away business throughout the week of the 14th at the Quina Theatre, said: "The first 'demonstration' audiences to view 'The Spanish Dancer' at the Quina Sunday gave this new photoplay the stamp of their unqualified approval. The theatre was crowded at every performance and every one of the many telling points in the engaging romance was roundly applauded. As hundreds were turned away Sunday, unable to gain admittance, the engagement will evidently be as big a success financially as it is artistically."

ness averaged $500 a day, as against a daily average of $125 for several months previous, while at the Appleton the average was $460.80 as against $150. The Daily Cardinal, of Madison, said: "We don't have a twinge of conscience when we say that 'The Spanish Dancer' is one of the best pictures we have seen in Madison."

A new house record was set up at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, last Sunday, when "The Spanish Dancer" played to $6,220. The picture opened Saturday to $4,000 and present indications are that a new week's record will be established.

At the Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill., the opening was last Saturday and Manager Harry Thornton wired: "Congratulations on this greatest of Negri productions. She has undoubtedly created a masterpiece for Paramount. National advertising and your exploitation campaign gave us a splendid opening."

Reports from the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., are to the effect that big crowds were turned away Sunday and it is expected that all records will be broken. The New London Evening Day said Monday: "The production is more than a spectacle—it tells a real story. Pola Negri's interpretation of the lawless, laughing, impetuous dancing girl is superbly done. Nothing she did in 'Passion' surpassed her dueling scene. It was a splendid piece of work. And speaking of Moreno—at last Tony has come into his own."

N. Y. Critics Praise United Artists Film

Broadway critics had much of praise for "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," initial production of Associated Authors, Inc., which had its New York premiere at the Mark Strand Theatre Sunday, October 21, under an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release. The New York public also greeted the picture warmly.

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted," a Frank Woods production, is an adaptation of Scott's "The Talisman," and is the first release turned out by the film triumvirate of Messrs. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris. Later this trio, so well-known in the motion picture world, added Clark W. Thomas to its strength.

The picture stars Wallace Beery in the role of King Richard, the same role he so successfully created in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

"If you like romantic adventure skilfully done into a movie, then by all means see 'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,'" said the reviewer for the Sun and Globe. "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," is a good picture," said Robert E. Sherwood in the New York Herald. "In the role of King Richard Wallace Beery is the same splendid, forceful, vital, engaging King that he was in 'Robin Hood.'"

"Associated Authors struck home in their initial production," said F. W. M. Hall in the New York Times. "The settings are splendid, as also are the costumes."

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted," is exactly the thing as a photoplay for Associated Authors, Wallace Beery, the leading actor, the Mark Strand Theatre, and, by far the most important of all, the movie-going populace," said Robert G. Welsh in the Evening Telegram.

"Wallace Beery gives a convincing and vital performance as King Richard," said the critic for the Morning Telegraph. "Wallace Beery gives an interpretation of England's Crusading King which is human to the Nth degree," said the critic for the Evening Mail.

Glenn Hunter Ends Work on Film

Glenn Hunter has completed his first Paramount picture, "West of the Water Tower," at the company's Long Island studio, and is now in Chicago playing "Merton of the Movies," at the Blackstone Theatre. The production is finished with the exception of an atmospheric shot of Maryville, Mo., the town which Homer Croy wrote about in the novel from which the picture was made. Rollin Sturgeon, the director, and Harry Harris, cameraman, will stop off at Maryville on their way to Hollywood to secure the necessary scenes.

A cast of exceptional merit supported Hunter in this production. Headed by May McAvoy, Ernest Torrence and George Fawcett, it included ZaSu Pitts, Anne Schaefer, Joe Burke, Riley Hatch, Gladys Feldman, Alice Mann, Allen Parkes and Jack Terry.

Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario, and the camera work was done by Harry Harris and George Hinners. W. J. Scully acted as Director Sturgeon's assistant.

Dwan Completes "Big Brother"

Allan Dwan has completed "Big Brother," the Paramount screen version of the novel of the same name by Rex Beach. The production was made at the eastern studio at Long Island City.

Heading the list of players is Tom Moore in the role of Jimmy Donovan, the leader of the car-barn gang on New York's lower East Side. Edith Roberts has the role of a dope fiend, and others who have prominent parts are Mickey Bennett, the talented seven-year-old player; Charles Henderson, Joe King, Paul Panzer, Neill Kelley, William Black, Milton Herman, Florence Ashbrook and Yvonne Hughes.

Three Stars in "Stranger"

Betty Compson will play the leading feminine role in the forthcoming Joseph Henabery production, "The Stranger," according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky.

Richard Dix and Lewis Stone will play the principal masculine roles, and all three players will be co-featured, according to the same announcement.

"The Stranger" is an adaptation by Edfrid Bingham of John Galsworthy's "The First and the Last."

Signs for Preferred

Reported from the contract department of Preferred Pictures Corp. this week are the following houses which have signed for the fifteen features constituting the Preferred output for the season: the Garden, Princeton, N. J.; Strand, Owasso, Mich.; Virginia, Somerset, Kentucky; Imperial, Alliance, Neb.; the Castle, Irvington, N. J.; Colonial, Easton, Pa.; Strand and Rialto, Allentown, Pa.; Hippodrome, Sioux City, Iowa; and the Rialto, Westfield, N. J.

"The Midnight Alarm" Fox Films for Release Does Get Them Inside Week of Oct. 21

The box office pull of "The Midnight Alarm," Vitagraph's story dealing with the life of a fireman, is attested by J. J. Harwood, manager of the Lexington Theatre, Cleveland. Mr. Harwood in a letter to Vitagraph says:

"I am very much pleased to advise you that we opened yesterday to the greatest business the house has ever done, the attraction being your latest release, 'The Midnight Alarm.' It was impossible to get the crowds into the theatre and we did a real turn-away business, the feature pleasing every one that was fortunate enough to get in."

Its appeal to audiences in Canada is demonstrated by the following telegram from Manager Brandon of the Imperial Theatre at Cornwall, Ontario:

"'Midnight Alarm' over the top with flying colors. Never in all my experience saw anything like the crowd in front of our theatre. Ran two shows, both houses jammed to outside doors. Good old Vitagraph."

"Cameo Kirby," the William Fox special production adapted from the great stage success by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, and the Sunshine Comedy, "The Roaring Lion," are scheduled for release October 21 by Fox Film Corporation. "The Governor's Lady" another of the specials announced for the 1923-24 season will follow "Cameo Kirby" in one week.

Few stage plays achieved a record on the road such as "Cameo Kirby." The story centers about a picturesque Mississippi River gambler of a former generation, who shoots straight and deals squarely, eventually winning when hearts are trumps.

John Gilbert will be seen in the role of the swanking, cynical soldier-of-fortune type of gambler. Gertrude Olmsted will have the feminine lead. "Cameo Kirby" is a John Ford production.

Precedent Broken at Metropolitan Theatre

Thomas H. Ince has been paid a remarkable tribute by Sid Grauman, of Los Angeles, by the booking of Ince's "Her Reputation," a big newspaper drama, for Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre. This is the first "outside" picture ever shown at the Metropolitan, which heretofore has run only Paramount-Lasky offerings. "Her Reputation" stars May McAvoy, with an all-star supporting cast headed by Lloyd Hughes.

The country have given praise to the picture. "The events in 'Her Reputation' are set forth convincingly and the fine acting, especially that of May McAvoy, gives the play an atmosphere of realism rare in such an exciting feature.

The Portland Oregonian says: "The flood and fire scenes in 'Her Reputation' are convincing and marked with a genuineness in their enactment seldom attained in similar screen efforts."

Viola Dana, Metro star, is now at work on her fourth Metro starring picture of the new Metro season, "Angel Face Molly." This is an original story for the screen by Fred Kennedy Myton adapted by Thomas J. Hopkins and being produced at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Oscar Apfel who also directed Miss Dana in her two previous pictures, "The Social Code" and "In Search of a Thrill."

"Angel Face Molly" is a dramatic story.

In the cast with Miss Dana, is Milton Sills. This marks his second appearance opposite the Metro star, his earlier being several years ago in the Metro pictures, "Dangerous to Men." Other players in the cast are Gertrude Claire, Wallace MacDonald, Betram Grassby, DeWitt Jennings, Nelson McDowell, Matthew Betts and Edward Wade.

Palmer Audience Now 35,000,000

A ready-made audience of over 35,000,000 people! Over 35,000,000 hearts have beaten a little quicker; over 35,000,000 imaginations have been stirred a little deeper through the vast advance advertising campaign now being carried on by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation in no less than twenty-five of the most popular national magazines; a campaign making a home and heart appeal to 20,062,079 people, by telling them how Mrs. Ethel Middleton, wife of a factory foreman, wrote the prize scenario of their first production, "Judgment of the Storm."

The campaign was not and is not being limited to small ads in a few issues, but consists of full pages in twenty-five magazines; and this advertising has been going on consistently, month after month, since September, 1922, hammering home the message to 20,062,079 fans.

The names of these magazines alone tell their own story of the magnitude of this campaign: McCall's, Red Book, American, Pictorial Review, Cosmopolitan, Picture Play, Better Pictures, Writers Monthly, Motion Picture, True Story, Metropolitan, Film Fun, Photoplay, The Writer, The Student Writer, Good Housekeeping, Screenland, Drama, Story World, Editor, Independent, Physical Culture, Nautilus, Writers Digest and the Dial.

Tully to Picturize "Bird of Paradise"

When the picturization of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" is completed, Richard Walton Tully, producing for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will bring to the screen the world famous "Bird of Paradise," his Hawaiian love drama which as a stage play has enjoyed a coast-to-coast success seldom equalled in the history of American dramatics.

Tully plans to start the filming of "The Bird," as the play is known in dramatic circles, about the first of the new year. The picture will be made in the Hawaiian Islands. The story of the play is laid in the period 1890 and Tully, in bringing this South Sea epic to the screen, will also be producing a picture of historic and educational interest inasmuch as all the quaint customs and traditions which once prevailed will be picturized.

Shipman Films Made in Natural Backgrounds

Israel Zangwill, noted writer and dramatist, who is visiting this country now, sounded the keynote of the Ernest Shipman policy of motion picture production in a recent New York address. "The great idea today," said Mr. Zangwill, "seems to be to film pictures in flashy settings, rather than with a strict adherence to any legitimate dramatic value the scenario might originally have possessed."

It has always been the Shipman aim to produce published novels as they were written in the nature backgrounds that may bring so much beauty to the screen. It has been with this in mind that Mr. Shipman produced such well known novels as those of James Oliver Curwood and Ralph Connor.

Mr. Shipman's three latest pictures, "The Man from Glengarry," "The Critical Age," and "The Rapids," which W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is distributing, are typical of these big, clean outdoor dramas.

Mussolini Given Print of "The Eternal City"

George Fitzmaurice, who is associated with Samuel Goldwyn in the production of Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," which is for First National distribution, sent a copy this week of the finished picture to Premier Mussolini at Rome, Italy, in payment of a promise he made the heads of the Italian government after he had completed three months' work in Rome.

Mussolini had been extremely helpful to Fitzmaurice and his company during their work in the Roman city. Permission was obtained to use, as locations, such places as the Coliseum, the Forum, the Roman Baths, Old and New Appian Way. Battalions of soldiers were delegated to both work in the picture and guard the players from interference. And Mussolini actually played a small role in the production.

The entire story has been changed by Ouida Bergere with the consent of Sir A. Hall Caine so that every element of religion has been eliminated.

"The Mailman" Given Two World Premieres

The Film Booking Offices made a new departure in the way of picture previews last week when a double header premiere was run in Washington and Philadelphia at the same time on Emory Johnson's picture, "The Mailman."

The Washington preview was held at the Ambassador Theatre on Thursday morning and was attended by prominent Washington society people and members of foreign legations. In addition to this a private showing was made at the general post office before Post Master General Harry

New and his staff of assistant post masters.

On reviewing the picture Post Master New expressed himself very pleased with the results obtained by Johnson in the making of the postal picture. His assistants were also very enthusiastic in their praise of the production and of the dramatic way it was handled.

At Philadelphia the trade premiere was held at Ed Fay's Knickerbocker Theatre and was attended by twenty-nine hundred people with eight hundred of them standing through the performance.

Civic Bodies Endorse "Blow Your Own Horn"

Basing the campaign on the spirit of civic progressiveness which underlies the activities of thousands of communities, F. B. O. is launching an aggressive and widespread exploitation drive for its production, "Blow Your Own Horn."

Among the prominent boards of commerce which have already endorsed the production is the Association of Commerce of Racine, Wis., the executive director of which is Francis H. Bartlett. Mr. Bartlett recently saw a special preview of the picture and immediately requested that it be shown to the public in Racine at the best theatre in town because of its lively spirit.

"'Blow Your Own Horn' will do more to uplift one's civic spirit than any other photoplay I have ever seen," remarked the executive after thoroughly analyzing the entertainment elements of the production. Hundreds of tie-ups are being effected by F. B. O. with chambers of commerce throughout the country.

Crowds in Baltimore See "The Hunchback"

Another brilliant opening was given for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" when the first Southern Company opened its tour at Baltimore on Monday, October 22. A feature of the program was the Symphony Orchestra under the direction of M. Rollman, one of Baltimore's leading musicians. Newspapers in their flattering reviews of the Universal production stressed the fact that the orchestra excelled any ever heard with any production that had ever visited that city. Mention was also made of the elaborate staging and Universal was thanked for bringing the production to that city for a pre-release showing.

It is interesting to note that two of the biggest musical comedy successes in the country opened on the same night and in spite of the fact that "The Hunchback" prices were much less than those charged in the other two theatres, the gross receipts at the Academy of Music exceeded both houses.

Arliss to Make Film in London

George Arliss will work in films during his playing of "The Green Goddess" on the London stage. The final shots of his next picture, "The Adopted Father," will be made in England by Distinctive Pictures Corporation owing to the fact that the success of the William Archer melodrama will keep Mr. Arliss abroad longer than had been expected. He had almost finished work in this American screen comedy before sailing to keep his engagement at the St. James Theatre in London.

The cast supporting Mr. Arliss in "The Adopted Father" includes Edith Roberts, Ronald Colman, Taylor Holmes and Little Joseph Donohue. Harmon Weight, who has directed all the Arliss pictures except "The Green Goddess" was chosen by Distinctive to make this photoplay.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

This Is Going to Be the Biggest Comedy Year in History of Screen

By AL CHRISTIE

This is going to be a big year for comedy, and the laughmakers will come into their own more than ever before in the history of the motion picture business.

The tide of long and boresome features has been turned and exhibitors everywhere have demanded in certain tones their desire for pure entertainment, whether it comes in large or small packages.

What will our part in this be?

Our entire organization has been concentrating these last few months on new ideas, new situations, new gags, building up a type of comedy for laughing purposes only, without detracting one particle from the standard we have set for quality production.

We are starting on our fourth year of distribution through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., our eighth year as independent producers, and my own thirteenth year of directing behind a camera, and I want to say that I fully believe there is nothing unlucky about the latter number. It has always spelled good fortune before, and this should be our most successful period.

We are encouraged everywhere by exhibitors who believe in the two-reel comedy as a regular diet on all programs. The comedy has been likened to the funny page and the daily funny strip in the successful newspapers.

Publishers have long realized that the cartoon strip is the biggest single circulation builder in the paper. Likewise real motion picture exhibitors know that the building of a steady clientele is dependent to a large degree on the showing of comedies which put their patrons in good humor, which give them good fun for their money. They know that running a picture theatre without high-class comedy is like printing a newspaper which is all editorials and reading matter concerning the business, the crime, the grief and the strife of the world.

And there's enough grief in the world without going to a theatre to get more. The whole world loves a laugh, and the most successful theatre men are taking advantage of this universal demand by making the comedy part of their program one of the biggest advertising assets.

Two Two-Reelers and "Jamestown" on Pathe's List for November 4

Variety marks the Pathe schedule for November 4 which includes an unusually large number of subjects. Heading this program is "Jamestown," the second of the "Chronicles of America" series. Like the first "Columbus" it is in four reels.

Ruth Roland's serial, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its fourth episode which is titled "The Terror Trail." The third of the "Spat Family" series is titled "Roughing It" and shows the discordant family out West staking a mining claim and meeting with many ludicrous mishaps.

On this schedule is also a Mack Sennett two-reeler "One Cylinder Love." Built around a story of a broken engagement are aeroplane thrills and clever acting. Stan Laurel is featured in "The Whole Truth," a single reel Hal Roach comedy, presenting an amusing version of the recent scientific discovery of a serum which is an antidote against lying and makes the patient tell the truth.

The Aesop Film Fable, Cartoonist Paul Terry's laughable creation, is titled "A Barnyard Rodeo," and shows the familiar animals in a typical Western rodeo. Pathe Review No. 44 contains the following subjects: "The Pleasure Boat," a pictorial interpretation of Richard Henry Dana's poem; striking views of Durango, Mexico, under the caption "The City of Sorrows," and a Pathecolor presentation of a day in Volendam, Holland, under the title "Dutch Doings." In addition there is an industrial section that will interest the majority of spectators.

"Jamestown" deals with the early struggles of the Colonists and introduces the colorful chapter of American history dealing with the Indian Princess Pocahontas and the English Colonist John Rolfe; also the struggle between the English and Spanish Colonists for supremacy.

Amusement and Knowledge Provided in Tolhurst's Pictures for Educational Educational Exchanges, Inc., are of the opinion that the distribution of the series of Tolhurst microscopic pictures produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, of which Sol Lesser is president, marks a forward and significant step in the development of the screen, that of providing entertainment and instruction in a manner that will be as welcome to the public as the works of Maeterlinck and Fabre on insects have been to the world of literature.

"Once the public accepts scientific demonstrations on the screen the general education of humanity may fairly be said to have begun," says Louis H. Tolhurst, the California scientist who perfected the process by which these pictures are taken. "The exhibitor has learned that the public is not over-zealous to increase its stock of knowledge, but is very eager to be amused. Accordingly, in attempting to present the intimate lives of familiar insects I have sought to keep this element of entertainment uppermost. I believe no scientist or educator familiar with Maeterlinck's "The Life of the Bee," or better still Fabre's charming books, will quarrel with me or my methods when I say that without a doubt more people have learned of the habits of the bee from these romantic works than through scientific text-books.

Maeterlinck has brought the subject well within the scope of "human interest." Fabre has done even more with his careful and scientific "stories" of insects. To achieve in pictures what these celebrities have done with their literary style, is my ambition. Properly titled, the lives of insects are capable of an infinite variety of treatment. Tragedy, comedy, epic struggle, satire, humor and sensational action can be found, while the social relations of "colonies" are so complex and interesting as to supply a never failing field of investigation and exploitation.

Century Working on "Buster Brown"

Julius Stern, who some time ago acquired the film rights to R. F. Outcault's celebrated Buster Brown cartoon strip, announces that the story for the first of this series which will be filmed as Century Comedies, is now nearing completion and numerous players are being considered in order to select a suitable Buster Brown and Mary Jane and a perfect Tige for their respective roles. The number of comedies to be made has not yet been decided. Competent gag men are busy on the material and the name of the director will be announced soon.

Century Announces Fifth Unit

Noel Smith, formerly with Century and then with Fox, has returned to Century Comedies and will direct a series of two-reelers. Work on the first one featuring Harry Sweet, who was also formerly a Century star and then went to Fox, will be started within a few days as Sweet is again in the Century fold.

Smith makes the fifth director to head a unit making Century Comedies, the others being Al Herman, Bob Kerr, Harry McCoy and Arvid Gillstrom. All units are working under the supervision of Julius Stern and Sig Neufeld. Casts of well-known comedians have been selected for all of these units.

Books Semon Film

The Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston booked "The Gown Shop," the first Larry Semon comedy for the season of 1923-24. There are to be four Larry Semon comedies released by Vitagraph which include "The Gown Shop," "Lightning Love," "Horseshoes" and one for which a title has not yet been selected.

"Peggy" Bookings

Heavy bookings continue to pour in on the Baby Peggy series of Century Comedies. Among the most recent are the Missouri in St. Louis, Majestic in Columbus, Strand in Wichita Falls, Broadway in Richmond, Rialto in Butte, Liberty in Spokane and California in San Pedro.

Signs for Series

Pathe announces that the Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn have booked the entire series of "Spat Family" and "Our Gang" two-reel comedies.

New Burr Comedy

"Fearless Flanagan," the C. C. Burr two-reel comedy released October 7, features Charles Murray, Kathlyn Martin and Raymond McKee. It was directed by Gregory LaCava, and is being distributed by Hodkinson.

Pal Film Retitled

The title of the newest Century comedy, starring Pal the dog, has again been changed and it will be known as "Down to the Ship to See," which it is announced was suggested by a Long Island exhibitor.

"Three Cheers"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

An abundance of amusing stunts makes this second number of Jack White's Juvenile Comedy series a good program subject. It has less plot than the first one of the series and is more like an unrelated arrangement of childish pranks, but goes over nevertheless and in places is very funny. The children are all interesting types and anyone should enjoy their performance.—M. K.

"Fashion Follies"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

New ideas are not plentiful in this Century comedy but most of it is the type of amusement that goes very well anyway. The bathing girls will appeal and the fashion show gives a chance for the familiar but laughable stunts of confusing the live models with the dolls. It has an abundance of action and should entertain, generally. Henry Murdock is featured.—M. K.

"The Code of the Mounted"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

This is so evidently a reissue of something produced some time ago that it is doubtful whether it will be a success on the average program now. The clothes, photography and general style of acting dates back to early days in picture-making. It relates the story of a Mounted Police officer who has to make the familiar choice between love and duty.—M. K.

"A Barnyard Romeo"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry's clever touches enliven the well-known Western stunts of lassoing, steer taming and rough riding here. The humor is delightful as usual and the subject itself is more widely appealing than some of the other Aesop Fables. A well worth-while number.—M. K.

"Discontent"

(Educational—Scenic—One Reel)

Considerably more emphasis is placed upon the dramatic note this time than in the usual Bruce Wilderness Tale. While there is no real attempt at acting, the story is sympathetic and there is a simplicity and humanness about the types. The husband who finds complete happiness in his work in the open and the wife who longs for the city and ultimately deserts her husband are the figures in an emotional conflict against pictorial backgrounds.—M. K.

"Be My Guest"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A situation that will be rather generally appreciated is the basis for action in this Neely Edwards number. A man who prefers starvation to restaurant fare accepts dinner invitations from three friends but finds the resulting disaster far worse than dinner at a hot-dog lunch counter. This will amuse the average patron.—M. K.

"The Whole Truth"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Revealing to what interesting heights man's imagination will soar when accounting for his absences to his wife, this Stan Laurel number has good comedy value. In spite of sampling the serum that forces a man to tell the truth, the hero thinks up a good story to tell in court. It is lively and entertaining.—M. K.

"Fighting Blood"

(F. B. O.—Drama—Two Reels)

Round Five of this series, "The Taming of the Shrewd," and Round Six, "The Wages of Cinema," compare favorably with the earlier numbers, and maintain the high standard of entertainment and box-office value. Each one contains strong human interest, good comedy and a peppy fight in the ring. George O'Hara is excellent in the leading role, and is ably assisted by Mary Beth Milford and Louise Lorraine, as well as the old favorites, Kit Guard and Al Cooke.

"The Taming of the Shrewd"

There is a lot of good comedy in this number, which first shows Gale trying to take care of a waif that is wished on him. Later he jumps into the water, thinking to rescue his friend Rosemary, who is working in a picture, but finds he has saved a property boy, who doubled for her and jumped off the cliff. He succeeds in winning a fight in the ring against "The Shrewd."

"The Wages of Cinema"

This is a clever number, containing a lot of good audience material. Gale, unable to get Kilpatrick to sign up for a fight with him, gets a job in the movies; and, disguised as an actor, with the assistance of the director and two girls, Kilpatrick is persuaded to don the gloves. Gale licks him, reveals his identity, and is promised a real fight in the ring for the championship with Kilpatrick.—C. S. S.

"Roughing It"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Western life disagrees painfully with the Spat Family in this third picture of the series. Their quarrels are staged on the desert where everything from toads disturbing midnight slumbers to a hair-breadth escape from "bandits" who prove to be only prospective buyers, offering a vast fortune for the Spat Family's property, keep them excited. It has a good many laughs and should go well.—M. K.

Pathe Review No. 44

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Greater emphasis is placed upon the pictorial value in this review which has many pleasing scenes. An illustration of Richard Henry Dana's poem, "The Pleasure Boat," views of Durango, Mexico, called the "City of Sorrow," and a color presentation of Dutch village scenes are included. Facts about coloring wall paper supply the technical interest.—M. K.

Hal Roach Companies Busy Making Comedies for Pathe

Production activities at the Hal Roach Studios, Culver City, Calif., are moving along at a fast clip.

The new Stan Laurel vehicle is a story of the "after the war" type with the comedy theme of "I got my captain working for me now!"

In the cast appear Jimmy Finlayson, Ena Gregory, Mae Laurel, Eddie Baker, and William Gillespie. George Jeske is handling the megaphone.

The comedy just started by Will Rogers is a typical Rogers cowboy story written for the star by Hal Conklin. Jay Howe is directing the production. Marie Mosquini appears opposite Rogers.

Hal Roach's aggregation of animal players in the latest "Dippy Doo Dad," directed by Len Powers, are enacting a crook story.

The company of players engaged for "The Spat Family" has been augmented by the addition of Philip Miller, a well-known child actor.

"Snub" at Rivoli

The first of the new series of single reel Pathe comedies starring Snub Pollard titled "It's a Gift" was the comedy attraction at the Rivoli, New York, and it is announced that it enjoyed the distinction of being the only comedy attraction at any of the big houses on Broadway.

Other comedies in this series already announced are "Dear Ol' Pal" for November 11, and "Join the Circus" December 2. "It's a Gift" was released October 14.

Christie's Four Stars Will Each Be Seen in Five Films

Christie forces are now busily engaged in producing what is described as a "rip-snorting western comedy" which would seem to be a burlesque on ordinary "westerns." Bobby Vernon appears as Cactus Kelly. Then, too, there is Lopez the Lizard as the villain and Charlotte Stevens as the heroine.

This is but one of the twenty comedies scheduled by Christie for the coming season, five for each of their comedians, Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Jimmie Adams and Dorothy Devore. The first five to be released on the new schedule are "Navy Blues," starring Dorothy Devore; "Hold Everything," with Bobby Vernon; "Done in Oil," with Jimmie Adams; "Fool Proof," with Neal Burns, and "A Perfect 36," with Bobby Vernon.

The supporting staff for the stellar comedians includes Jimmie Harrison, Vera Steadman, Charlotte Merriam, Babe London, Natalie Joyce, Tom Murray, Ward Caulfield, George French, Bob North, George Burton, Felix Valle, Bud Fine and Roy Weston.

Charles Christie has just returned from Europe, bringing with him John H. Taylor, managing director of Christie Film Sales Co., Ltd., of London, and John Maxwell, owner of a chain of theatres in Scotland.

PROJECTION

Has Been Adopted

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

The following is the nomenclature adopted, to this date, by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, insofar as has to do with projection:

Arc—A column of very hot light-emitting gas carrying an electric current sustaining this condition.

Back Focus—Distance from principal focus of a lens to its nearest face.

Working Distance—The distance between an object and the nearest face of a lens forming an image of an object.

Change-over—In projection, the act of changing from one projector to another without interrupting the continuity of projection.

Condenser—The lens combination which deflects the diverging rays of the luminant into the projection lens.

Collector Lens—The lens of the condenser nearest the light source.

Converging Lens—The lens nearest the objective.

Center Lens—The lens of a three-lens combination, lying between the collecting and the converging lens.

Dissolve—The gradual transition of one scene into another.

Douser—The manually operated door at the projector which intercepts the light before it reaches the film.

Effective Aperture—The largest diameter of a lens available under the conditions considered.

Equivalent Focal Length—The equivalent focal length of a combination of lenses is equal to the focal length of a simple thin lens which will give an image of a distant object of the same size as does the combination lens.

Fade-In—The gradual appearance of a picture from darkness to full brightness.

Fade-out—The gradual disappearance of the screen picture into darkness.

Feature—A pictured story, a plurality of reels in length.

Film—The support upon which the series of related picture elements are recorded.

Flare—A short name usually not more than three to five feet in length.

Flash-Back—A very short cut-back.

Focal Length—The distance from the center of a simple thin lens to the image formed by it of a distant object.

Footage—Film length measured in feet.

Frame—A single picture in the series on a motion picture film.

Frame Line—The dividing line between two frames.

Intermittent Sprocket—The sprocket which engages the film to give it intermittent movement at the picture aperture.

Int.—An adjustable iris stop.

Insert—Any photographic subject without action, at the film.

Lantern Lantern—A still picture projected on the screen by a lantern.

Lantern slide (Stereo Slide)—A transparent picture for projection by a stereopticon.

Ledger—A piece of blank film attached to the beginning of the picture series.

Lens Simple—A lens consisting of but a single piece of glass, or other transparent medium.

Lens Compound—The combination of a number of simple lenses.

Light Beam—A bundle of light rays which has a cross section of appreciable size.

Light Ray—A stream of light of unappreciable cross section.

Magnifying Valve—The film opening in the neighborhood of a motion picture projector.

Motion Picture—The representation of an object by the rapid presentation of a series of pictures showing the object at successive intervals of time.

Motion Picture Projector—A device suitable for projecting motion pictures.

Multiple Reel—A multiplicity more than a thousand feet in length.

- Objective—The simple or compound lens nearest an object which forms an image of it. Looks like an error these—Ed.
- Optical Axis—The straight line through the centers of the light source lenses comprising part of an optical system, in which their planes are at general perpendicular. This seems to be wrong as printed since the projector and lantern light sources usually is not perpendicular to the aforesaid line—Ed.
- Photoplay—A story in motion pictures.
- Projectionist—A person skilled in the art of projecting motion pictures.
- Projective Distance—The distance between the projection lens and the surface upon which the image is focused.
- Projector Lens—The objective which forms upon the screen an image of a lantern slide, film or other object under examination.
- Rewind—A flanged spool upon which film is wound.
- Reel—An arbitrary unit of linear measure

- of film—approximately a thousand feet.
- Revolving—To superimpose slides.
- Rewind—The process of reversing the winding of a film, usually so that the end first projected shall be upon the outside of the reel.
- Rewinder—The mechanism by means of which rewinding is accomplished.
- Shutter—A moving element usually a disc, which intercepts the light at a motion picture apparatus one or more times for each frame.
- Shutter Working Blade—That sector which intercepts the light during the movement of the film at the aperture.
- Shutter Intersecting Blade—That sector which intercepts the light one or more times while the film is stationary.
- Splicing—Joining the ends of film by cementing.
- Split Reel—A reel of film of two or more parts, the subject of each part unrelated to the subject of the other part.
- Spot—The illuminated area on the aperture plate of motion picture apparatus.
- Sprocket—The toothed cylinder which engages the perforation in the film.
- Stereopticon—A lantern for projecting transparent pictures; i. e., lantern slides, often a double lantern for dissolving.
- Take-Up motor—The mechanism which receives and winds the film after it passes the picture aperture.
- Take-Up over—To wind up the film after it passes the picture aperture in motion picture apparatus.
- Trailer—See Projection Distance.
- Trailer—That piece of blank film attached to the end of a picture series.

The following proposed nomenclature is under consideration, but is not yet officially adopted.

- Moving Period—That portion of the picture cycle during which the film at the aperture is in motion. This period is expressed in degrees of revolution of the flywheel when 360 degrees is equal to one cycle.
- Observing Part—The opening in the front wall of the projection room through which the projectionist observes the screen.
- Picture Cycle—The entire series of mechanical operations which takes place between the passing of one frame of a motion picture film and the positioning of the next frame.
- Projection Periods—Those periods during the picture cycle during which the picture is projected upon the screen.
- Projection Room—A room or enclosure from which motion pictures are projected. This is proposed to change to "Exhibition Room" and it would probably have come through that way at Ottawa, but was held over until the next meeting.
- Stationary Period—That portion of the picture cycle during which the film at the aperture is stationary. This period is expressed in degrees.

He Wants Help

C. D. MacGregor, Projectionist, Princess Theatre, Coatham, Ontario, wants advice, as follows:

I purchased the new lens chart some time ago and had by checking over my present optical layout, that it is all wrong. I therefore ask that you send me some suggestions as to how to get the best possible results with present equipment, also any suggestions as to changes which would improve the optical lineup.

That you have some idea of conditions in general, here are a few of the important measurements: Distance of projector—lens combination—46 feet center to picture also (approximately) 11 1/2 feet distance screen to first row of seats, 10 feet distance screen to last row of seats, 100 feet width of auditorium, 20 feet projection opening, 37

It is my earnest desire to project as nearly a perfect picture as may be upon the screen—not to be the barnyard mechanic who merely works for a set wage, to whom ability to "get by" and continue to draw that wage is the sum total of everything. Any suggestions regarding improvement will be gratefully received.

I suppose you need no introduction to our Chief Projectionist, Charles A. Dentebeck, to whom I shall forward your reply when received. I have not yet met him, but from what I have read and heard of him he must be a rousing peg in a round hole, which is all any of us may hope to be. In closing let me earnestly wish every future success for the World Projection Department.

No, I certainly do not need any introduction to Dentebeck, whom I saw last week at the meeting of the S. M. P. E. in Toronto. He wanted friend daughter and me to drive to Toronto and visit the Dentebeck wigwam, but time would not permit. He is all you think he is, but for two years past he has had a "boil" which caused the round peg, normally fitting the hole snugly, to fit "not so good." The boil is now, I am more than glad to say, removed, root and branch, so Charlie again is 100 per cent. Chief Projectionist for the Canadian Paramount—more power to him!

First of all the crater impressions were well made and show that you are carrying your crater at least at a fairly efficient angle. You should, unless you already have done so, study "Crater Angle," pages 405 to 412, inclusive, of the Bluebook, and apply the information on page 408 so that you may always know that you have your crater exactly at the right angle. Possibly you have already done so. Inasmuch as all your crater impressions are about the same, it is quite likely you have.

Mirror Screen Efficient

In the first place, your auditorium is one in which a satin finish mirror screen would be enormously efficient, except for a few of the front side seats. With that screen the patrons seated in the rear seats would be able to see every detail of the picture and you could reduce your amperage by at least one-third and still have a far brighter picture than you now have. Mirror screens are costly, yes, but were that theatre mine I certainly would have one. Failing in that you should have a highly reflecting type of screen, and a Crystal Bead would give excellent results in such a theatre.

Your craters average 7-16 inch in horizontal diameter. You may tell both your manager and Dentebeck that the projection lenses you have are totally and entirely unsuited to the work they are TRYING to do. It is worse than foolish to keep such lenses. They are enormously inefficient when used with the ordinary condenser.

Your craters are 36-64ths of an inch in 6½ column, we find that in order to get the minimum distance from crater to lens for this amperage we would have to have a distance of 11 inches from face of converging lens to aperture, under which condition chart B shows us that even a 2½-inch free diameter would not pick up all the beam. That, therefore, is "out"—impossible.

Turning Around

Turning the thing around we find that your lens would not pick up all the beam even with the face of the converging lens 21 inches from the aperture. The thing is so atrociously bad that I hesitate to suggest any compromise. The only right thing to do is to throw your present optical system into the discard, though it is possible you might use a Cinephor condenser with your present projection lenses.

I have submitted your case to Griffith and he says: "Cinephor condensers would be very good in this case. Working distance 4-2=2 inches; Y distance 13-2=11 inches. Use 6½ plano convex collector and a Parabolic converging lens (Cinephor consists of a plano convex and a Parabolic lens.—Ed.). Crater distance will be approximately 3½ inches and the spot 3-64ths of an inch greater in diameter than for ordinary condenser, because the crater is 1-64th of an inch greater than chart size.

You thus see that in this case Cinephor makes a bad condition good."

Correct! Before I had consulted Griffith I had forgotten the fact that Cinephor in effect reduces the projection lens working distance. Griffith is a wizard at doping out these things, which is the natural result of concentrating on just one thing for a long while.

From Toronto

From Harry T. Dodson, Toronto, Ontario, comes the following:

First and foremost, here is one perfectly good dollar, for which send me a copy of the new lens chart; also accept my support, though darned late, for the adoption of the name "Projection Room" as against the proposed "Projector Room."

You express surprise at the laxness of the various locals in not indorsing the name "Projection Room" as a body. Well, Brother Richardson, I am not! I think that after a local has been formed and has run along smoothly for a certain time, it gets to feeling that WE are about the best there is, or ever was. OUR conditions and OUR results are equal to all the others—and better than most of them, and you can't stir up pride, ambition or much of anything else in them. They just slide along year after year, with an increasing scale each year, giving exactly the same old results for the increased money. This does not apply to the entire membership of most locals, but to the great majority, and you very well know it does.

The discouraging thing is that the few men who do study and try to give maximum results at minimum cost to the exhibitor don't get any more pay than the slide-along dub. He does not even get any credit for his hard work and endeavor. Friend Manager says: "If you're not satisfied with the scale I can get plenty who are," and that's that!

Who Gets the Credit?

There may be two theatres running within a block of each other. One does a good business and the other a poor one. The first has A1 projection, in all that entails. The other has a punk screen result. WHO GETS THE CREDIT IN THE PAYING HOUSE??? The projectionist? Ye gods, no!! It is the popular manager, the won-der-ful orchestra and the be-yu-ti-ful house! That is the whole story, and the man who puts on what the people really pay to see at 100 per cent. value gets—well, maybe a little credit, but not much.

I know your answer, Rich. It is "classify the men"—but it can't be did, because the majority vote counts and the great majority is class Z, so it is promptly voted down.

I'm going to write every time I see anything in the department you want a discussion on. Maybe it will at least induce some one else to write, if only to show me what a sap I am, and how darned little I know, and we will thus learn something anyhow. By the way, can you tell me who used that little green handbook of yours—the vest pocket one? I remember getting one from the Laemmle Film Exchange, in Winnipeg, in 1907, I think it was. Everyone I met said the N. Power Company was the only one who put them out.

Everyone Wrong

Then everyone was wrong. They were put out by about every film exchange and projector manufacturer in existence at that time. I sold 80,000 of them, as I remember it, but not all had the green cover. As to the locals, what you say is exactly true, and it is a condition which demands drastic treatment, because it is a condition which works injury to the industry itself. To date, though, every one but my 'umble self seems afraid to tackle it. I would not feel so keenly about it did it not result, in practice, in keeping many competent, high-class men out of the union; hence out of work, until the union DUBS (oh yes, there is such a thing alright, and he is a numerous species, too), as well as the competent union men, are all at work.

I have neither liking nor respect for the DUB, union or otherwise. By "Dub" I mean the incompetent, shiftless or lazy man, who will not deliver the best there is in him, and make every possible effort to improve.

I came very near visiting Toronto October 6, on my way back home from the S. M. P. E. meeting. Daughter and I talked it over and concluded the path was too long and the time too short. It meant about four hundred miles added driving. Glad to hear from you any time, brother Dobson.

Backs Us Up

Local Union No. 433, I. A., Rock Island and Moline, Ill., through its Educational Department, writes as follows:

Dear Sir and Brother: This is to advise you that Local 433 is behind you in your endeavor to advance the PROJECTIONIST (capitals by the writer of the letter) to his proper position in the industry.

Now that the summer is over, the school has started again, and the boys will have something to argue about after the show. This semester we are equipping the school with projection apparatus, and will put into actual practice that which we learn at the time we learn it, thus avoiding a whole raft of blackboard work and a (deleted) of a lot of examinations—maybe.

You may say: why can't each man put into practice that which he learns from the Blue book on his own equipment? Probably he can, but we believe that when we all get together and work together, the results will be more satisfactory; also by swapping ideas I think more will be learned than by one man studying a book alone. No matter how well the book may explain a thing there is always the chance of getting the wrong slant, but when several are together, studying the same thing, with the actual equipment before them, it is a combination hard to beat.

Probably it will interest you to know that this local will order the new lens chart for each of its members, every one of whom owns a Bluebook already. Attached find our action on the Projection Room matter.

The letter, which is on the stationery of and under the seal of local union 433, I. A., reads:

Dear Sir and Brother: This is to certify that this organization endorses the term "PROJECTION ROOM" as the correct term to be used, and condemns the use of "Booth" or any other term than "Projection Room" to designate the enclosure housing motion picture projectors and other equipment used in a theatre showing motion pictures.

If agreeable, please place this communication before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

SEAL K. T. SIMPSON, Secretary.

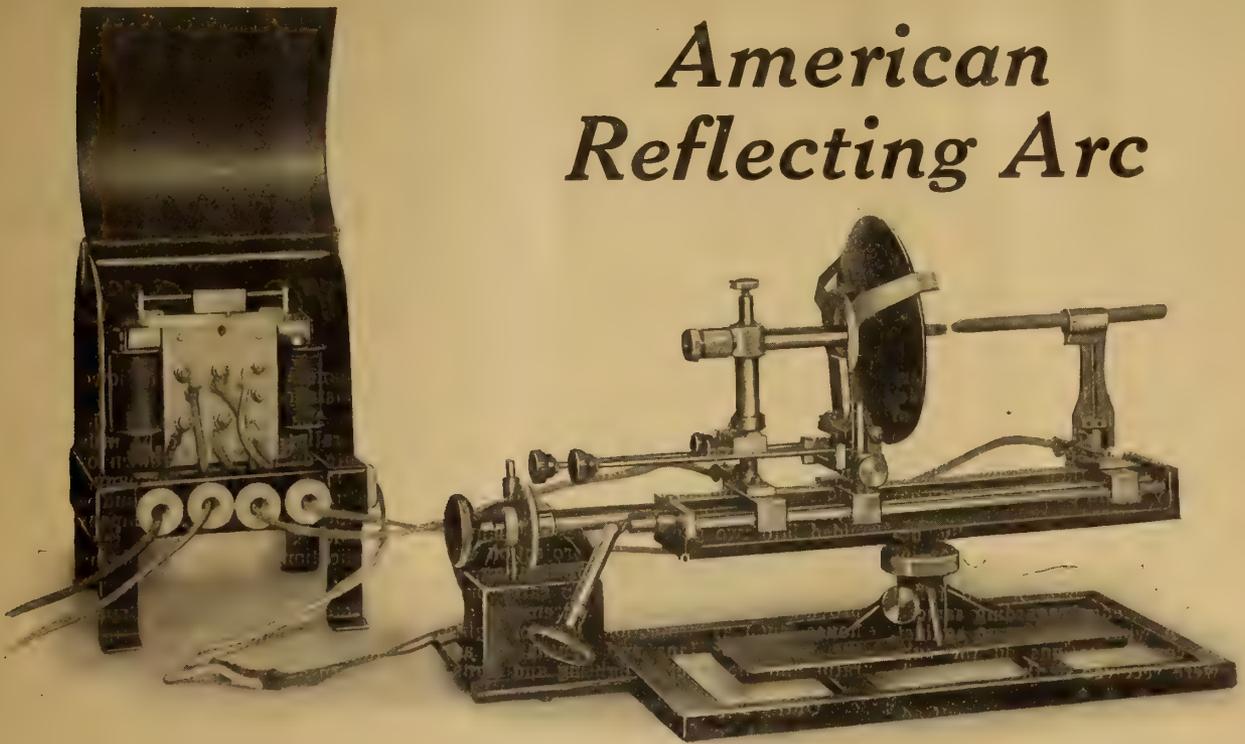

It is indeed good to know that at least one educational department of a local union has been able to withstand the test of time, and is still doing business after an extended period of existence. I thoroughly agree that much more can be learned, and learned much better, by a group of men studying together than is possible by an individual studying alone. The equipment will help, too, if used intelligently.

As to your endorsement of the term "Projection Room," it will be placed before the S. M. P. E. at its next meeting.

Warning

When endorsing the name projection room, always make a separate letter of it. DON'T stick your endorsement in the body of a letter dealing with other matters.

The Independent Generating Plant For Motion Picture Theatre Service

In a recent issue we made some observations regarding the value of independent lighting plants as an item of motion picture theatre equipment. The comments referred above are being repeated in this issue for their educational importance. A more varied article in the same issue dealt with the subject.

The use of the independent generating plant is a matter of great importance to the motion picture theatre owner. It is a matter of great importance to the motion picture theatre owner in that it is a matter of great importance to the motion picture theatre owner.

Number one has a generating capacity of 2 KW and is particularly suitable for houses in which Mazda or mirror lamps are used for projection. It furnishes sufficient current to carry projection lamp, electric fans and also a moderate number of lights, both interior and exterior.

The plant consists of a 4 cylinder, 4 cycle engine, 2 inch bore and 3 inch stroke, operating on either gasoline or kerosene fuel and direct connected to a 2 KW shunt wound generator.

The motor runs at a normal speed of 1,250 revolutions per minute. Ignition of the motor is by high tension magneto and starting is automatic by pushing a starting button, although it may also be turned by hand.

The dimensions of the power plant are 38 inches in length, 38 inches high and 16 inches wide, and it weighs approximately five hundred pounds.

The generator may be utilized either with or without storage batteries. As it is provided with a sensitive governor and a specially wound generator, it produces a straight flow of direct current with practically no variations in voltage.

Storage batteries to be utilized in connection with the outfit, if desired, can be supplied in capacities of sixty, eighty, one hundred, one hundred and twenty, one hundred and sixty or one hundred and eighty amperes, as desired.

As will be noted in the illustration, the switchboard, on which are mounted a combined voltmeter, battery indicator, ammeter, main line switch, a battery switch, a battery testing switch, battery fuse, line fuse and an automatic reverse current cut-out with starting and stopping button, is mounted on the radiator.

This outfit is extremely portable, as it is entirely self-contained and carries a fuel tank located in the base.

Illustration number two shows a generating set of 4 KW capacity. This set consists of a four cylinder, four cycle motor, two and five-eighths inches bore and a four inch stroke, operating on either kerosene or gasoline, as may be desired, and which, like number one, is entirely self contained, the radiator being mounted over the generator and the gasoline tank over the forward end of the motor.

The overall dimensions are twenty by forty-six inches long and forty inches high. It weighs five hundred and ninety pounds.

Ignition is either by high tension magneto or battery as the purchaser may desire. The motor is directly connected to a

Better Projection— More Patrons

It is admitted by all authorities that the carbon arc operating on a properly controlled source of direct current will produce by far the best results on the screen on account of the quality of its light, the evenly illuminated screen, no trouble from a reflected image and the abundance of the light, permitting projection of a brilliant picture even in a theatre otherwise well illuminated.

With the use of the Transverter the above results are reinforced by simplicity of operation and economy in power cost, that makes such an installation ideal.

multiple pole type generator, which is compound wound, unless otherwise ordered, and generates current of 60, 110 or 140 volts, as may be desired.

The armature is mounted on an extended crank shaft and takes the place of a fly-wheel.

This outfit may be supplied with an electrical starter, but is easily cranked by hand.

Where storage batteries are used in connection with the outfit, the motor can be started on same by means of a push button.

On the switchboard are mounted a pilot lamp, voltmeter, ammeter, rheostat, main switch and fuse switch. For battery charging, an automatic cut-out is supplied, which automatically opens the circuit should the engine slow down or stop.

Illustration number three shows a generating set built in three different capacities—10, 15 or 25 K. W. The 10 and 15 K. W. plants consist of a four cylinder, four cycle motor, four and one-quarter inches bore by six inches stroke, direct connected to a multiple pole type generator.

The dimensions of the 10 K. W. plant are twenty-two inches long, eighty-one inches wide and fifty-three inches high. The dimensions of the 15 K. W. are identical, with the exception of being eighty-four inches in length. The 10 K. W. plant weighs 2,650 pounds and the 15 K. W. 3,990 pounds.

The 25 K. W. plant has also a four cylinder, four cycle motor, with a four and one-quarter inch bore and a stroke of six inches. The dimensions are thirty-eight inches in length, thirty-nine inches in width and sixty inches in height. It weighs 5,030 pounds.

Number three will supply current at 32, 110 or 130 volts. Its motor may be run with gasoline or kerosene fuel.

Tucker and Davis Contribute to the Discussion on Theatre Improvement

WHILE commenting, last week, on Arthur Hancock's suggestions regarding the betterment of an existing house, we suggested that other exhibitors give voice to their own views on the subject. We are in receipt of the following communications from Henry Tucker, Tucker

Theatre, Liberal, Kansas and L. O. Davis of the Virginia Amusement Co. operating the Virginia and Perry Theatres of Hazard, Kentucky and the Family Theatre of Combs, Kentucky.

This is a live subject and we would be mighty glad to have other readers chip in with their suggestions.

Moving Picture World:—Our theatre is fifty by one hundred and thirty, designed by Carl Boller & Brother, Kansas City, Mo. Seating capacity, 961; lobby in center, twelve by sixteen; box office at side of lobby; has two stores, sixteen by sixteen, one on each side of lobby for rent; front is two stories, having four office rooms over lobby and stores. Balcony seats 251, with 705 on main floor. Stage twenty-four by fifty with loft fifty feet. Heated by fan circulator, which also acts as ventilating system in winter. Cooled by twin Typhoon in summer.

Now as to changes: For small towns under ten thousand would eliminate loft, but would equip stage for light vaudeville use. Our seats are in three sections, two sevens against walls, and one section of thirteen in center. This leaves only two aisles.

Would eliminate part of these seats so as to have at least four aisles. It is next to impossible to fill all seats with such large sections. Would place box office in center of lobby instead of side. Would make dressing rooms and furnace and coal rooms practically fireproof.

Would also urge anyone contemplating building in smaller towns to pay special attention to cooling system. If necessary cut out the fancy decorations and spend your money on blowers that will blow the inside of it out. A cool house in summer means more than a fancy interior.

HENRY TUCKER,

Tucker Theatre, Liberal, Kans.

Moving Picture World.

"In accordance with your request for description of features that I would incorporate in a house that I should build will say that there is one feature I have added to my house now that I find very good.

"Build the manager's office directly across from the projection room where it is possible that there can be a small window in the side of the wall near his desk chair that he can have a view of the screen and the picture at all times."

All that I have to do to see the picture while in my office at work is merely turn my head and if there is a bad light, misframe or the projection is not what it should be it is there for my inspection at the turn of my head the whole day through.

"By having ones office near the projection room and where one can obtain a view of the screen at all times it keeps one in closer touch with the projection end of the business which is the most important in the picture game as what you are selling are PICTURES."

Better Projection Inevitably Pays; See That Your Patrons Get It

By HERBERT GRIFFIN

General Sales Manager, Nicholas Power Co., Inc.

WE have used the phrase, "Better Projection Pays," to a considerable extent in our advertising and, of course, under such conditions we are referring to our own product, but on this occasion a more general meaning will be given to it.

I would like to have the entire motion picture industry adopt the phrase and then put it up to the manufacturers of equipment to prove which particular machine actually gives the best results under all conditions.

The larger theatres throughout the country are as a rule particular about the kind of projection they give their patrons and to this end employ good men, get the best equipment in the market, keep it in good shape and replace with new machines from time to time.

The large theatres watch expenses in the same way the smaller theatres do or at least do not usually indulge in needless expense, and it seems obvious that they must find it profitable to spend money from time to time to keep up the proper standard of projection.

Some small theatres, of course, are very particular about projection and may even set an example to the larger theatres, but in many, altogether too many, small theatres there is a woeful indifference to the advantages to be derived from improving projection.

"Getting By" Is Not Good Policy

A motion picture projector, of course, can be made to last for a good many years and show a picture which will get by in about the same manner that some old worn out, aged and decrepit automobiles "get you there and get you back." Such automobiles are frequently used as taxis and they get the business just so long as there is no competition.

When a new, up-to-date machine comes along the majority of people will use that taxi in preference to the old one. It is in just this way that some theatres seem to be getting all the business there is to be had, but what they are actually doing is inviting competition. Soon or late someone is going to see that the field presents an opportunity for a good house, and when this is built the old one goes out of business. The exhibitor who watches everything which relates to the proper showing of films to his patrons will not infrequently be in a position to make his theatre pay even though he gets pretty stiff competition from the big theatre.

Rah for Richardson

F. H. Richardson, in my opinion, has been responsible for raising the standard of projection and he is constantly emphasizing this idea in all sorts of places through the spoken word and in all sorts of publications by the written word.

In a recent number of the Moving Picture World he refers to a man who claims that he has been able to "pack his house" in spite of what seems to be outrageous conditions in his projection room. This man claims that he is getting the money with very inferior equipment and admittedly very poor projection.

From a business standpoint it would appear that this exhibitor is under no obligation to spend any money to improve conditions in his theatre, but Richardson points out that by the judicious expenditure of a little money this man might be able to pack his house at higher prices.

Apart from the fact that better projection in many instances can be made to show an immediate financial return to the exhibitor,

I think that in the long run any business man should realize that it is a good policy to improve the quality of the goods he is selling whenever he can do so.

It is unreasonable to ask the exhibitor to spend money needlessly, but any fair-minded theatre owner who gives some attention to this matter will surely come to the conclusion that "Better Projection Pays."

Automatic Devices Co. Releases a New Model

The Automatic Devices Company, of Allentown, Pa., has just announced the release of a new improved A. D. C. automatic curtain control equipment based upon the result of long experience and exhaustive tests.

The How and Wherefore of the American Reflecting Arc Lamp

IN the American Reflecting Arc lamp, as manufactured by the American Reflecting Arc Corporation, of 24 Milk street, Boston, Mass., the lamp itself has been designed along lines that make it readily adaptable to American standards of design and operation. Its base and supporting bed are of cast iron. All working parts are of brass.

The reason for selection of brass is twofold; first because of the peculiar design of the lamp being such that most of the current carrying is done by the parts of the lamp itself, brass is one of the best metals procurable for this purpose. Secondly, because of the fact that all parts of the lamp are manufactured to a standard to permit interchange of parts, brass was again selected because it lent itself to accurate machining. Ample provision against wear has been taken into consideration so that the lamp should give years of perfect service.

Automatic Feed Control

Early in the development of this lamp, the American Reflecting Arc Corporation engineers realized the necessity for an automatic feeding device. This was doubly apparent because of the necessity for maintaining a perfect crater and unvarying arc length in order to realize to the full extent the possibility of maximum illumination with the minimum of current consumed.

The result is an arc control perfect in its operation on either alternating or direct current.

The arc control consists of two units—a driving mechanism consisting of a universal motor operating a train of reducing gears to the feed screw of the arc lamp and a regulating device.

It is in the regulating device of the arc control that this accuracy of performance is obtained. The functioning of this apparatus is secured through the utilization of both the ampere and voltage characteristics of the arc. This device is so designed that a perfect balance is maintained and a zero operating point established. Any departure from this zero point, which represents the arc gap, is transmitted to the driving unit and adjustments of the carbons mechanically by the driving unit is secured.

The perfect functioning of these two de-

Long known as manufacturers of an automatic curtain control, embodying a most simple device for this purpose, the Automatic Devices Company has constantly striven to improve its product to conform with the requirements of modern exhibitors.

The new improved type of machine eliminates all belts and pulleys and is strengthened in all parts. An automatic disc clutch has been made a part of the machine as a safety feature for emergency purposes.

Should any condition arise which would impose an undue strain on any part of the machine, the clutch will immediately function, thereby protecting the entire equipment. Helical gears cut from special material are used and the entire machine is fully enclosed to conform with all underwriters, state and municipal requirements.

Outlets are provided on both sides of the machine to accommodate either flexible or rigid conduit through which the entrance wires are connected.

It is becoming more and more evident to theatre owners that a steady and even operation of screen and proscenium curtains controlled by push buttons in the orchestra pit or projection booth, makes a distinctly favorable impression on the audience and adds materially to the proper showing of pictures by allowing the curtains to be opened at exactly the proper time and speed and closed at exactly the right moment.

vices operating in synchronism with each other secures a perfect operation of the arc lamp and a resultant perfection of the projected image on the screen.

In the matter of accessories is included a specially designed Arc Lamp Housing to enclose the Arc Lamp and provide support for the arc control driving mechanism. A specially designed stereopticon housing attachable to the Arc Lamp Housing has also been developed. These are manufactured by the American Reflecting Arc Corporation.

The necessary regulating devices, rheostats and transformers, are manufactured for the American Reflecting Arc Corporation. The rheostats by the Ward Leonard Electric Company and the transformers by the American Transformer Company.

The mirror or reflector used in conjunction with the Arc Lamp is of special design and manufactured by the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company according to specifications of the American Reflecting Arc Corporation.

While the American Reflecting Arc Corporation is interested only in supplying the Arc Lamp and Arc Control mechanism as a unit with a lamp house supporting base by means of which the unit is adaptable to any standard projector and makes possible the using of the customer's present carbon arc lamp house, it can supply their special lamp houses and regulating devices to those who desire a completely assembled outfit.

Tony Gaudio Invents a Money Saving Substitute for Exterior Night Shots

A SAVINGS of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year by the elimination of night exterior filming has been made possible for the film industry as the result of a process perfected by Gaetano ("Tony") Gaudio, veteran screen cameraman.

Prediction that the new invention will revolutionize night filming was recently made by Producer Joseph M. Schenck, following a practical test. Gaudio, who is shooting Norma Talmadge's Joseph M. Schenck drama, "Dust of Desire," used his process during three days, in which night scenes of an Algerian village street were taken during the day.

The saving in electric equipment, current and wages of electricians for the three days, according to Schenck's production records, amounted to $25,000. Four thousand dollars was saved in the rental of extra equipment alone.

More than the monetary saving, the producer declared, is the superiority in results given by Gaudio's process. Artificial night lighting has never given entire satisfaction, says Schenck, who looks forward to the adoption of the invention by the entire industry. While the invention was perfected after only five weeks of experiment, it is based on Gaudio's experience extending over twenty-four years of camera work. It can be applied to any camera, having few attachments. The working principle rests in the preparation of the raw film.

"My invention, I believe, is superior to the two former methods of filming night effects," said Gaudio. "There have been attempts to get night effects by tinting the positive of films taken during the day, but the tinting of the sky in positives has failed because the dissolving of the silver leaves a transparency to which cannot be applied, and the sky on the screen, consequently, shows up very light. The actual filming at night, on the other hand, is not satisfactory, because artificial illumination is not even throughout a set, and, to illuminate a deep set, costs much money.

"My process is designed to overcome these defects and to give a more natural effect, and to save money. The negative I used on 'Dust of Desire' was put through a special coloring solution. This gave silhouettes with both depth and contour, while previously figures registered as mere profiles.

Process Cuts Production Costs

"From the financial side it does away with electric power and equipment and the cost of keeping electricians in attendance. It may even be developed to a point where night interiors can be made under open stages."

According to John Considine, General Manager for Joseph M. Schenck, at whose suggestion Gaudio and Ray Binger, his assistant, began their money-saving experiments some time ago, the new process gives a black sky, a light foreground, a clearly defined sky line, perfect silhouettes and stereoscopic relief with high visibility, to figures both in close-ups and even until their disappearance on the sky line.

In addition, the shadows of figures walking in the moonlight are strongly outlined. For overcast day effects, snow storms, sand storms and any gradation of light from twilight to deep night the new process is ideal. Moonlight cloud effects are particularly beautiful.

When "Dust of Desire" was begun, Considine pointed out to Producer Schenck that about $5,000 a day would be necessary to shoot the night scenes of the Algerian drama. This sum would be required for electricians, electrical equipment, skids, generators, tractors, etc.

Great Expense Avoided

It was pointed out that only one set up could be made in a night and that no real long shots could be obtained unless all the electrical equipment in California were secured at tremendous expense.

Realizing that tinting the film would not do inasmuch as by this method the tinted sky shots would not match up with the scenes already made at night under artificial light. Producer Schenck called in Gaudio.

The latter, who had been working for many months to perfect his process, left Los Angeles for the desert with a few actors and tried out his new process. The results were so amazingly good that last week Gaudio announced that he was ready to stake his reputation on it.

The trip of more than 400 actors and technicians to Oxnard where the trial was made cost Producer Schenck a small fortune. There was some trepidation at taking a chance of losing from $30,000 to $40,000 in the event that Gaudio's new process failed but Producer Schenck gambled with his veteran cameraman—and both won out. When the film was developed and printed in Los Angeles the results created somewhat of a sensation.

J. H. HALLBERG, for more than fifteen years a leading designer and manufacturer of electrical machinery and specialties for Motion Picture Projection and for studios has moved his manufacturing plant from 209 West Forty-eighth street to Corona, Long Island. Mr. Hallberg personally supervises the design and sales and all correspondence should be addressed to J. H. Hallberg 445 Riverside Drive, New York.

Besides this connection Mr. Hallberg still has his separate transformer and motor generator plants as in the past but all of the smaller specialties are manufactured in the above mentioned establishment.

Mr. Hallberg has assumed the experimental directorship of a new research laboratory now nearing completion at Alpine, New Jersey where research will be conducted in all branches of science and particularly in connection with the electronic and similar treatment and diagnosis of disease. On account of the wonderful laboratory facilities placed at Mr. Hallberg's disposal we expect that he will contribute new developments and apparatus to the motion picture art and he promises to disclose through our pages new inventions from time to time.

A Milestone of Progress

Mr. Hallberg has been exceptionally successful in producing very efficient motor generators, Economizers, Mazda lamp transformers, portable projectors, arc controllers, electric speed indicators, rheosats, gasoline electric light plants and kindred apparatus for the motion picture trade and his name stands as a milestone in the progress of the motion picture industry.

We referred in a recent issue, to an interview with Mr. Hallberg in which he disclosed to us a project for several modern motion picture theatres which were to be established in New York City more than twelve years ago and it is interesting to note that at that time his conception of what a modern motion picture theatre should be anticipated what is being done today and some of his ideas at that time are still in advance of the present age and we hope to have the pleasure in a later issue to give a complete outline with plans of the above referred to project as we believe that information will be of advantage to those who contemplate new theatres in the future.

In 1912 about the time that S. L. Rothapfel came to New York and formed connection with the Motion Photo Play Co., a subsidiary motion picture branch of the B. F. Keiths interest, Mr. Hallberg did much towards securing perfect projection and furnished many special and new devices as used at that time by Mr. Rothapfel.

There stands to Mr. Hallberg's credit many of the most important motion picture theatre equipment installations in this country and we feel sure that the trade will be glad to know that he is still with us and promises to produce new and useful devices to improve motion picture projection.

Combined Heater and Ventilator—for Moving Picture Theaters

Many moving-picture theater owners who have thoroughly investigated heating and ventilating systems have unqualifiedly chosen Skinner Bros. Heaters. These heaters are so unusual in design and operation that their performance really astonishes everyone—they combine effective heating and ventilating in one unit.

From a box-office standpoint this means everything to you—when you install the Skinner Bros. Heater you keep your theater at a comfortable temperature and rid it once and for all of the stuffy, foul atmosphere that keeps so many patrons away.

No outside pipes or ducts are used in the Skinner Bros. System—no coils hanging on your walls—no fittings block your aisles—no smudge or dirt on your decorations—no fire hazard.

Performance of these heaters is guaranteed when installed as directed by our Engineers. Investigate—right now—send for Catalog B-8 and the names of moving-picture theater owners who have installed this heating system.

MERE reimbursement for dark house losses comes a long way from balancing the actual damage.

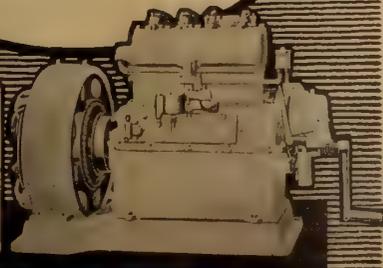

That's why hundreds of foresighted exhibitors are buying "dark house insurance" in the form of steady, dependable Universal lighting plants. Then, when the dreaded shutdown of power line current does come, a flick of the switch starts a smooth flow of even, flickerless light.

Four-cylinder power and ample 4 K. W. capacity—backed by 23 years of experience—account for the fact that more Universal Electric Plants are used by theatres, traveling shows and circuses than any other kind.

A Simplex Projector Is Included in the Equipment of U. S. S. Colorado

WITH the placing in commission of the U. S. S. Colorado at the Camden Yards of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, there was added to the United States Navy one of the greatest fighting units yet developed in marine engineering.

Included in its electrical equipment is a Type "S" Motor Driven Simplex Projector installed just prior to the commission date. This Simplex equipment is of the regular commercial type and in the opinion of the engineers who decided upon the Simplex as part of the equipment in this remarkable ship, the commercial Simplex without any specially constructed devices cover all requirements, which is indeed a tribute to Simplex engineering.

Increase in Size of Equipment

It is said that the Colorado while presumably a battle unit, represents also a milestone in engineering progress, and according to the New York Telegram "She need never fire a shot at an enemy in order to earn her huge cost many times over." She can justly be regarded as a vast experimental marine laboratory in which all electrical marine equipment can be tested and developed and the result of these tests will be given to American Shipbuilders.

Carries Crew of 1403

An idea of the Colorado's size can be best digested when one realizes that this huge floating fighter is 624 feet in length carrying a complement of 1403 officers and men. Her speed of 21 knots is obtained through oil burners that generate steam in her 18,000 horsepower turbines which in turn supply electric current for four 8000 horsepower motors which are attached one to each propeller shaft.

That the Simplex Projector was selected as one of the electrical units in this latest step of dreadnought building progress, speaks volumes for the progressiveness of the Simplex engineers and builders, and the industry no doubt will be pleased to hear that this machine, which is already found in every hamlet and city throughout the country is now included as an important unit on the worlds greatest floating laboratory and fighting vessel.

October Marked Eighth Anniversary of Birth of the Hertner Transverter

IN October, 1915, eight years ago, the Hertner Electric Company, of Cleveland, first placed on the market the Transverter motor generator for motion picture projection. It is the proud claim of its manufacturers that the Transverter was the pioneer device built to supply current to two projection arcs in series, and that before this date, all arcs were operated on a constant potential source with ballast resistance.

The advent of the Transverter may be regarded as a definite step in advance in the electrical phase of the motion picture art, for since this time the constant current type of motor generator has continually grown in favor.

It is of interest to note the gradual increase in size of equipments of this kind concurrent with the growth in the size of the theatre from the then usual 35 and possibly 50 ampere arcs to the call today for 75, 100 and 125 ampere capacities. Again it is interesting to see an apparent reversion today to a machine even smaller than the 35 ampere size; in fact, as low as 10 to 15 amperes in some cases, used in connection with the new type of reflector arc, which is coming into use extensively and which causes the manufacturer of a motor generator set to produce machines of from 15 to 125 or 150 ampere capacity in order to have a complete line and fill every demand.

It is the belief of the Hertner Electric Company that the carbon arc is destined to play a permanent part in motion picture projection and that while other light sources are being used and something else may some day be discovered that will supersede the arc, the recent advances along the lines both of the high intensity and the reflector would indicate that the ultimate in efficiency and projection of this light source has not as yet been reached and that future development may be expected.

Typhoon's Engineer Explains How to Secure Best Results in Ventilation

NOT always do the results of theatre ventilating systems work out as expected," says Engineer Dailey of the Typhoon System. "The cause of this may generally be traced to the lack of sufficient additional heat radiation to take care of the fresh air supply.

"A logical method of installation would be to use a fresh air supply fan to work in conjunction with heat coils. The air is warmed to a comfortable temperature and forced into the theatre. This permits a material reduction of the direct radiation around the walls.

"With the system as designed by the Typhoon Fan Company, there are additional advantages. The heating unit is placed above the organ loft or ceiling and the air forced out is that near the entrance doors. A considerable saving in coal is effected by forcing out this air (at a temperature of 70 degrees) instead of exhausting 90-degree air at the ceiling. Another point of economy is that the Typhoon used in heating the fresh air can be made a part of the summer Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, thereby cutting the equipment cost.

"Also deserving of mention is that, with recirculating ducts, the theatre's atmosphere can before performances be rotated through the heaters several times.

"In this way the house can be heated to a comfortable temperature in twenty minutes or less. The recirculating ducts play an important part too in extremely cold weather by allowing some of the warmer theatre air to mix with the fresh cold air, thus saving on the coal pile. True, this means a slight deficiency from the ventilation standard set, but it would be utilized only during the very few short periods that the outside temperature is sub-normal.

"Summer cooling remains the big profit-payer that the Typhoon System has made it. Nearly 2,000 theatres are now cooled by Typhoons, and keep their business at top level all through the hottest summer weather."

"Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing"

"Should be acceptable in any house"

Says the M. P. News

Here is one of the most beautifully photographed film plays it has ever been our pleasure to view. We have seldom seen such crystal-clear work, while some of the sepia printing is highly artistic.

The production marks the return to the screen of our favorite, Mae Marsh, and her work as Paddy is a distinct achievement. As the vivacious, mischievous, fun-loving little Irish hoyden, Miss Marsh contributes to screen literature one of its most appealing characterizations. Donned in a large blonde wig and acting against some of the most beautiful scenic backgrounds we've seen in many moons, a new Mae Marsh comes to the screen. It is a thoroughly refreshing bit of acting. Miss Marsh went to London and Ireland to act in this one, so that the supporting company is 100 per cent. English. But in this case this fact will not detract from the picture on this side of the pond.

The picture has its moments. There is a thrilling horse race, which shows Mae to be a regular jockey. The fog scenes toward the end of the picture have their thrill and offer some more of the above-mentioned wonderful camera work.

"Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" will surely meet with the approval of mothers' clubs. It is the quintessence of cleanliness.

Classification.—A picturization of stage success in which Peggy O'Neill, Eileen Huban and others have appeared.

Production Highlights.—The crystal-clear photography. The artistic subtitles. The quaint old Ireland backgrounds. Mae Marsh's characterization of the title role.

Drawing Power.—Should be acceptable in any house.

"A Good Box-Office Bet; Should Satisfy Any Type Of Audience"

"A colorful, highly interesting and finely mounted production that promises well for the new Associated Authors. "A picture that should appeal to and thoroughly satisfy almost any type of audience. Also, it should, because of the great interest aroused in the character of Richard, the Lion-Hearted on account of the fine performance of Wallace Beery, appeal particularly to all who saw 'Robin Hood.'

"Beery's work in the title role is admirable and will be a revelation because of his excellent work in the lighter comedy moments of the picture.

"Whether your patrons have seen 'Robin Hood' or not makes no difference for we believe that both classes will like this picture and that it will prove a good box-office bet."—M. P. World.

"Star And Title Will Put It Over" "Clever Comedy Touches"

"Here we have a picture which may in some respects be called a sequel to 'Robin Hood' in that it discloses the adventures of King Richard in the Holy Land. The colorful character of the English king is depicted in all his glory by the same actor who interpreted him in 'Robin Hood'—Wallace Beery.

"There is a splendid flavor of comedy in relief which exploits the swaggering king in intimate scenes in his bath.

"Mr. Beery and the title will put this over.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Someone Shouts "Fire!"

TRAMP! Tramp! Tramp! The parade marched steadily down the street—past warning signals, disregarding "Stop" signs, forging ahead at double time.

Then some one up near the head of the procession got a flash of inspiration and said, "I don't know as this parade is getting anywhere in particular. Guess I'll sit on the curb and watch it a while."

Now the parade is disorganized.

Some are marching on, some are running back; most are just standing around talking, and attempting to decide between the choice of the curb and the middle of the street.

Business of catching a second breath. And a sober thought.

* * *

THE action of Famous Players in deciding on a temporary production shut-down is sane, intelligent, and courageous.

Famous is well supplied with productions for its release schedule; there need be no worry about product now, or for many months to come.

Indeed, the situation throughout the industry is one of over-stocked warehouses and sluggish selling. Stopping the machines in the factory is the accepted first step in remedying such a condition.

But—if all the studios in this industry were to shut down tomorrow, it would not help fundamental conditions one iota if, when production is resumed, they re-embark on the cut-throat, senseless, extravagant, and blind production competition that has produced the present situation.

Paste that in your hat.

And read it over again a year from now.

LET'S examine into the causes of the current deadlock.

The goat in the situation is, and has been, the distributor—the sales machine. Not the producer, as we are told so often, nor the exhibitor. For the latter has the weapon of a "buyer's strike" at his command at all times.

The distributor is the goat.

On the one hand he has faced manufacturers who rush ahead with factory production blindly and utterly disregarding what the market would pay for their goods.

It is admirable and worthy of commendation to say, "We'll make the product bigger and better;" it is idiotic to say, "We'll make it so good and so costly the retailer will just have to buy."

The retailer won't. In many cases. That is the answer.

The curse of the distributor has been the producer belief that a "Quota" was a penciled figure on a piece of paper, to be altered or increased at will.

The grim, hard fact is that a "Quota" is a number of individual dollar bills, extracted by slow and painful work from retailers who, at least, know their own pocketbooks.

THERE are more deeply fundamental reasons.

Principal among them is the fact that, with a few distinguished exceptions, the manufacturers in this industry have never CONTROLLED the process and cost of manufacture.

When the producer wanted a big story—he went into the market and BID against a half a dozen fellow producers.

When the producer desired a sure-fire cast—he went into a market limited to some score of players and BID.

When the producer sought to estimate the cost of production he made calf-eyes at his director, mumbled a prayer or two, and then doubled the guess that he was given in response.

As an industry, we have failed to develop new creative brains, potential histrionic lights, broader executive vision, and—playing the "surething" game to the bitter end—we have found ourselves compelled to place the RESPONSIBILITY for the cost of our goods on "conditions."

You can't hire or fire "conditions."

A DINNER given to Ernest Fredman, of The Film Renter, London, occurred the day of the Famous Players' announcement.

Our usual procedure with unsuspecting British editors is to lure them to a banquet table under subdued lights and then spend two hours or more giving them ADVICE.

But, strangely, the two hours of the Fredman luncheon were spent by our leading film executives in making CONFESSIONS.

Marcus Loew, Richard Rowland, Samuel Goldwyn—three of our most frank and consistently interesting magnates—took occasion to commend Adolph Zukor on his courageous action and to voice their own agreement with his view of the necessity for stern measures.

Confession, we are told, is good for the soul. Confession with reformation, in the present case, might be good for the pocketbook.

But, it struck us, there was a hopeless, despairing air about the confessions.

Something like this:

The patient admits that eliminating red meat from his diet is proving very beneficial. Is even considering giving up eating altogether for a time. But he knows darn well that just as soon as he gets the price again he is going to fare forth on a grand and glorious meat debauch—and, gosh, how he dreads it!

* * *

Not all the blame for a dyspeptic industry can be placed on the doorstep of the producer.

Marcus Loew, in his remarks at the Fredman luncheon, took particular pains to mention the cost of distribution as a factor in the situation.

The Loew-Metro financial statement issued a few days later supplied a follow-up to his remarks. The cost of film distribution is placed in the statement at a figure close to three million dollars.

Something approximating fifty-seven thousand dollars a week as the cost of conveying just one organization's product to the market!

Multiply that—and get an idea of what the box offices of the country must pay, not for the manufacture of our goods, but for SELLING them.

Could any industry, not singularly blessed by the Fates, withstand such proportions in the division of its dollars?

* * *

THERE seems to be a tendency on the part of producers to sum up the remedy for the industry's illness in the declaration:

"If the exhibitors can't pay for the bigger and better pictures—we must stop going forward and start moving backward."

The inference being that WORTH WHILE pictures are synonymous with COSTLY pictures.

The truth is—this industry cannot go back in point of quality. Judging from an average month's entertainment at an ordinary picture theatre—there is still room to go very far ahead.

The problem is—how to put more BRAINS into pictures; to the end that brains mean quality and brains mean efficiency.

The necessity is—the creation of more real "producers"; production executives.

The past has given a definition of the word "producer" that runs something like this: "A man who has the money to make a picture, who can promote the money, or who is related to the money."

The man answering this definition has then had to turn around and give the spending of the money into the hands of those having no RESPONSIBILITY for it.

With the picture made, he has gone to the distributing organization and said: "It cost me so-much, the QUOTA will have to be twice so-much."

And now we are fast convincing ourselves that we have been making pictures that are TOO GOOD! What bunk!

Just because it isn't possible to induce the public or the exhibitor to pay for the money-lender's bonus, the producer's ignorance, the director's extravagance.

We can't go back.

We MUST go ahead.

And do it on a profit-making basis.

Adolph Zukor Curtails Production; Cochrane and Rowland Praise Move

SPECULATION has been rife in all business circles regarding the statement last week of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that the corporation "has completed the production program for this fall that was outlined in its announcement several months ago. We are now curtailing production in our studios to the greatest possible extent and we will not resume the making of any further new negatives until production costs have come down to a common sense basis."

The effect of this announcement on the stock market was immediate and marked, for it followed testimony at the Federal Trade Commission hearing that Mr. Zukor's Paramount stock holdings are not in his name. The error of a reporter caused newspapers to say that he held none of his own company's stock. This stock, after closing at 65½ on Thursday, October 25, opened Friday with an overnight loss of 5½ points. Later it rallied to 62½, but on heavy offerings it dropped to 52½ and closed at 53¼. A total of 49,000 shares changed hands during the day. On Wednesday, October 31, the stock had recouped to around the 55 mark.

Universal to Follow Suit

Newspapers carried long stories on how "movie costs halt production," to quote the New York Times headline, and interviews with different motion picture executives. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, said: "Mr. Zukor is right. Production conditions are and have been outrageously abnormal. It would be a great thing if all studios could close their doors until the people who have been forcing costs skyward have a chance to wake up. The only reason why the Universal has not closed its studios is because it would leave us with so many unfinished negatives on hand that we would risk a loss of over $1,000,000. When these negatives are finished, we intend to shut off production as close to the complete stopping point as our releasing contracts will permit."

Associated First National denied it would spend $3,500,000 on films in the next two months, refuting a story from Los Angeles, and declared an intention to retrench as much as possible. "The move of Famous Players in temporarily shutting down is right," commented Richard A. Rowland, general manager. Other companies say they will continue according to schedule. Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation, believed that the situation has little effect on the business.

Many Negatives on Hand

E. J. Ludvigh, secretary and treasurer of Famous Players, is quoted as follows: "The shutting down of production means that our outlay for films is complete and no further production expenses will be necessary for months to come. We are going to turn the negatives into cash. We have $15,000,000 worth of films on hand, the best part of a year's production, mainly made during the late spring and summer, when costs were low. These will be shown this winter, and returns are expected to be very satisfactory. We expect this year's earnings, based on the ten months' showing, to be about the same as last year. There has been no suggestion of any change in the dividend policy.

"Shutting down should remove the chief criticism against Famous Players that we lay up too large inventories. Films in stock include such features as the 'Ten Commandments,' receipts from which are expected to exceed the 'Covered Wagon'; also new films by Pola Negri, Glenn Hunter, William S. Hart and the first picture made by Douglas Fairbanks, Jr."

It was explained that the curtailment means that 200 employes, such as carpenters and electricians, will be laid off, besides 700 persons who have been working in the Hollywood studios. The highly paid stars and directors under contract will be retained. The actors will receive half-pay during the period they are not working.

Rowland Denies Story

Absolute denial of the announcement from Los Angeles that Associated First National Pictures would spend $3,500,000 on film productions in the next two months is given by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of the company.

"To say that First National will spend $3,500,000 on productions in the next two months is incorrect. On the contrary, we intend to retrench as much as we possibly can with the pictures we ourselves make. Our contractual relations with independent producers compel us to continue, however, insofar as their product is concerned. But we will spend no more than is absolutely necessary to carry these contracts through. Mounting production costs and a reluctance by producers to face the truth about possible returns, make drastic action imperative.

"The move of Famous Players in temporarily shutting down is right. We are in sympathy with them, and if we were placed in a similar position, if our contracts did not call for fulfillment, there is no question but that we would have taken the same step. What the solution is I don't know, but I certainly do not believe that activities can be resumed on the former basis, or assume former extent until a complete reconstruction of ideas in regard to costs has taken place."

Goldwyn Sitting Pat

F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, said:

"The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will make the same number of pictures as originally planned and the studio at Culver City is running on schedule and will continue to do so. If over-production is the case with any other company, it is not the case with Goldwyn, which is operating on a carefully thought out and carefully arranged schedule. The entire Goldwyn Cosmopolitan distributing program, which includes Cosmopolitan, Distinctive and Goldwyn pictures, will go forward in a normal course."

H. M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, said: "While rumors are rife everywhere con-

Paramount Release Schedule to Be Unbroken, 'Tis Said

INQUIRY at the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky and information gathered from other reliable sources reveal the fact that the company has completed, or nearly completed, nineteen of the twenty-two productions listed for release after November 1 in the announcement made two months ago.

These nineteen pictures will find Paramount's releasing schedule on a basis of a picture a week up into March and, while nobody at Famous Players was willing to discuss the reopening of the studios, it is understood readjustments in production will be completed in time to enable new pictures to be made so that there will be no break in the Paramount releasing schedule after March 1.

Fourteen of the listed pictures are entirely finished and the five others—three at the West Coast studio and two at the Long Island City plant—are now being completed. The shut-down, it is understood, will be in full effect at both producing centers immediately following the completion of these five productions.

The full list of the company's pictures actually in sight for release, one a week, starting November 4, is as follows:

Sam Wood's production, "His Children's Children."

"The Light That Failed," a Melford production with Jacqueline Logan and Percy Mar- mont.

"Stephen Steps Out," a young Douglas Fairbanks' first star picture.

"The Call of the Canyon," the second of the Paramount Zane Grey productions.

"Around the World in the Speejacks," the six-reel special made by A. Y. Gowan on his two-year motor boat adventure.

Glenn Hunter in "West of the Water Tower."

"Wild Bill Hickok," which signalizes Bill Hart's return to the screen.

"Big Brother," an Allan Dwan production with Tom Moore.

"Flaming Barriers," another Melford production.

"To the Ladies," a James Cruze production.

Gloria Swanson in "The Humming Bird," produced by Allan Dwan.

"Holiday Love," produced by William de Mille.

"The Heritage of the Desert," another Zane Grey production.

"Pied Piper Malone," which Thomas Meighan is now making at the Long Island studio.

"My Man," a Pola Negri picture produced by Herbert Brenon.

"The Stranger," with Betty Compson, Richard Dix and Lewis Stone.

"The Next Corner," a Sam Wood production, with Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney and Dorothy Mackail.

"Singer Jim McKee," Hart's second.

Just how long the Paramount studio shut-down will last is not known, for Mr. Zukor and his associates will not say definitely. However, it is understood the readjustment is already in operation and, with the backing of all factors in the industry, will be pushed through until costs return to a common sense basis.

M. P. T. O. A. Committee to Be in National Capital

UNITED action on the part of Motion Picture Theatre Owners in the country to handle legislative matters at Washington in the next session of Congress was agreed upon at a meeting of national officers and Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Hotel Seneca, Rochester, N. Y., October 31. To further this project and render it entirely effective, it was agreed that the next meeting of the national officers and Board of Directors be held in Washington in December, while Congress is in session.

From this meeting a national legislative committee will be evolved with headquarters in Washington during the entire session of Congress. The special work of the committee will be to care for the interests of the motion picture industry in the nation, effect a repeal of the admission and seat taxes, and also prevent the passage of legislation inimical to the welfare of the theatrical business.

The campaign in this relation throughout the nation will be conducted along the most constructive and advanced lines possible. Every congressional district will be canvassed and flying squadrons of theatre owners and others will be at the service of the national committee to deliver addresses and handle any other line of work necessary to the consummation of the general purpose of the committee. This is the greatest line of action yet projected along legislation lines by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and is destined, it is said, to give the theatre people a line of protection not heretofore attained.

Those present at the meeting in Rochester, aside from the local theatre owners invited to attend, were National President Sydney S. Cohen, New York; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; C. E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore; R. T. Woodhuil, Dover, N. Y.; John Schwalm, Hamilton, Ohio; Ernest Herstmann, Boston; Samuel Bullock, Cleveland, Ohio; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Penn.; William Bender, Indianapolis, Ind.; George Aarons, Philadelphia, Penn., and E. M. Fay, of Providence.

cerning the closing down of different plants, it is only fair to the exhibitor and to the public to issue the statement that the Warner organization intends to keep the different production units working at full blast, with no changes in the elaborate plans we have made for the future.

"When the news broke concerning the move of Famous Players, Hollywood was thrown into apprehension, and this has rebounded in all directions, affecting every organization in the producing business. I have not been aware that conditions are below normalcy and I see no reason to fear for the future as far as our own productions are concerned.

"We announced that we would produce eighteen Warner Classics for the season of 1923-24, and a number of special productions as well. Our announcement in this regard is unchanged in spite of the action that has just been taken by this contemporary organization."

"A Mental Condition"

Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation, says:

"The present situation is largely a mental condition. Actually, the dimes and quarters are coming into the box office windows just the same as they have been doing for months and years. Theatres are running full blast; the exchanges are busy, and there is nothing in the present situation to indicate a change of this condition.

"It is undoubtedly true that some producers have spent enormous sums for production and are now forced to stop, look and listen, until such time as the pictures can be put to work and a revenue received to replace these excessive production costs. At every turn we see a big effort being made to justify these costs. Some producers have been on a wild orgy of spending, a carnival of extravagant costs. There had to come a time when top-heavy production costs would tumble over of their own weight. We have now reached that point.

"All the public and all the exhibitor have ever demanded is clean, appealing entertainment. As far back as June, 1921, the National Convention at Minneapolis of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America passed out to producers a warning that production costs were too high, and again in May, 1922, at the National Convention in Washington, the same statement was made. Yet the producers failed to heed the warning. Ridiculously high salaries of stars and executives continued. One unit pitted its resources against another, thinking to win favor by the lavishness of their productions."

Ince Foresaw Action

The production schedule for 1923-24 at the Thos. H. Ince Studios will continue just as it was planned many months ago. The problem of readjustment which has caused a temporary shut-down of some of the studios was foreseen, it is said, and dealt with by Mr. Ince almost a year ago.

Early this season Ince announced that he had made a decided change in his plans for the coming year and would offer not more than four or six pictures during the year—about half the number usually made at his studios during a season.

"There always is an audience for big pictures, I have found in my fourteen years' experience," declares Mr. Ince. "Magnificent picture houses going up everywhere offer a setting for fine productions, and require them. There are certain expenditures necessary and legitimate in the making of a picture. Others, such as exorbitant salaries, which have reached a ridiculous figure, can be curtailed through just such a readjustment as is occurring today."

Cosmopolitan Will Build Three More Studios in New York City

UP to the present time the Cosmopolitan Corporation has been making pictures in various studios located in different sections of New York City. This is in addition to its own studios at 127th street and Second avenue. Five of these, most utilized by Cosmopolitan, are the 44th Street studio, the Pathe, the Jackson Avenue, the Tec-Art and the Biograph.

While these are admitted to be good and well equipped studios the Cosmopolitan Corporation has found their total capacity unequal to its growing need of big stages to accommodate the elaborate sets for the important historical and other special features on its production schedule for the near future.

Accordingly, Cosmopolitan Corporation has acquired the necessary real estate and will immediately rush the building of three big new studios, all in New York City, and one of them to have the greatest capacity of any Eastern studio, except that of the Famous Players on Long Island.

William Randolph Hearst, president of the company, in authorizing the above announcement, said: "There is an enormous advantage in making motion pictures in New York City. One of the most important of these is that New York is the centre of stage play production. Consequently here is where famous actors and actresses of the stage are most immediately available for both stage and screen engagements."

Reports Decrease

Admission Tax Returns Show Late Summer Business Slumped

Washington, D. C.—A decided reduction in the receipts of theatres and other places of amusement during the late summer is indicated by tax returns just made public by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which show that collections from that source for the month of September totaled $4,932,527, as compared with $5,560,748 for the month of August. The September collections, however, were slightly better than those of the corresponding period of last year, when $4,789,391 was reported. The figures just issued by the Internal Revenue Bureau show that, during the first quarter of the current fiscal year, ended with September, a total of $15,633,781 was collected from the admission tax, an increase of more than $1,500,000 over the collections for the corresponding period of the preceding year.

During the month of September a total of $134,660 was collected from the special tax on theatres, museums, etc., as compared with $402,344 for the preceding month.

All for K. G. Organization

Fred H. Chase, Vice-President, to Devote All Time to K. G. Corporation

Frederick H. Chase, recently elected vice-president of the K. G. Picture Corporation, brings an interesting personality into the motion picture colony. Banker, gold miner, big game hunter, Arctic explorer, writer, political organizer and heavyweight athlete, Mr. Chase's various experiences would furnish plot stuff for half a dozen thrillers. Mr. Chase has dabbled in pictures from time to time, but now he has promised K. G. to devote his whole time to organizing its activities, letting his outside interests lapse.

Mr. Chase is probably best known in New York for his work as secretary of Col. Roosevelt's Progressive party. During the war he earned the title of "100 per cent. Chase" for his unequalled record in selling Liberty Bonds.

Prof. Arkatov Here

Prof. Alexander Arkatov of the University of Moscow, for twenty years a film producer and founder of the Russ Film Company, has come to this country to interest American producers in filming subjects based on classics by such Russian writers as Tolstoy, Dostoevsky and Andreyev. He claims new methods of production gained in Europe. Prof. Arkatov is living with I. S. Richter of 628 West 114th street, New York, who is collaborating with him in his work.

Commission Suddenly Decides to Prolong Paramount Query

Fuller's Wire from Capital Adjourns Indefinitely Government Case

By TOM WALLER

COUNSEL for Famous Players-Lasky, on the verge of preparing a defense for presentment within the following thirty days, did not attempt to conceal their surprise when, late on the night before the Federal Trade Commission had announced it would rest the plaintiff case, W. F. Fuller, chief of the Government probers, wired from Washington that the Commission had further evidence to enter on the record. Concluding the examination of an expert witness Mr. Fuller left the then finishing touches for Attorney Gaylord Hawkins, and hurriedly departed for the capital. Late that night Famous attorneys received word that the Government investigation was incomplete. The trial on October 26 was abruptly halted by Mr. Hawkins, announcing the taking of an indefinite adjournment.

A belief expressed that the protraction might have been due to the Commission feeling it had insufficient evidence to close its case at this time was disclaimed by an opinion voiced off the record by Mr. Hawkins. This was that the Government was satisfied it has established a case.

That the next place of the resumption of the trial, which so far has been recorded in many parts of the country, will be at Los Angeles, Cal., was expressed by Bruce Bromley, of the Famous legal battery. There, it is believed upon good authority, the Government may endeavor to ascertain the sentiments of certain prominent actors and directors, whose standing in the industry was the important point of several witness called during the last few days of the inquiry here.

Mr. Hawkins expressed ignorance when these points were brought to his attention. He said he did not know when and where the trial will be resumed, but was inclined to believe that the plaintiff side would be closed with the entering of a few stipulations upon the record.

Expenses of the litigation so far have totaled close to $500,000, of which both litigants are said to have had an even break, with the heavier burden possibly on the Government's shoulder. It will mean at least another $200,000 or more, it was advised, if the investigation is adjourned to the coast.

Since July last the Commission has had six different lawyers in the case and up to the present date has had before it 152 witnesses, whose expenses incurred in railroad fare, etc., have had to be defrayed by the Government, it is learned from an authoritative source.

Famous No Monarch, Says O'Reilly; Warners First in Season's Product

"Paramount does not dominate the market in the city of New York today," testified Charles O'Reilly, head of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Commission's last hearing. The chief official of the organization, embodying several hundred of Greater New York's most prominent exhibitors, rated Famous Players-Lasky as fourth on the list in grade and quantity of product this season. Warner Brothers comes first in this respect, according to Mr. O'Reilly's opinion, followed by Goldwyn and then First National. Paramount, in O'Reilly's estimation today has no monopoly of the movie mart.

A bitter attack against the block booking system was launched by the T. O. C. C. head in the course of his testimony. He predicted that unless it is utterly eradicated it will, within the next few years, mean the survival of the fittest; in other words the big circuit owner will flourish at the utter ruin of the Independent exhibitor.

The buying power of the circuit prohibits the individual from purchasing a picture even with more money than he would take in at the box office, declared the witness. House against house instead of buyer versus buyer was O'Reilly's sentiment for hitting the nail on the head for all around satisfaction and insurance for the safety of every one in the industry.

To solve the problem, the T. O. C. C. witness frankly admitted the only thing he could see on that horizon was what in substance would mean the breaking up of the circuits and the producer shunning such a big customer for the little fellow. In the long run O'Reilly prophesized that such a method would net the manufacturer bigger money than the lump sum he now receives for an exclusive first run booking to a theatre chain. As it now stands, he said, exhibitors of his own organization often have had to pay more for second runs than circuits have paid for first runs.

Circuit owners never fight, the witness said. They respect one another's treasuries. Marcus Loew, in O'Reilly's opinion, is a good enough business man to know the proportions of the Keith gold mine; and that Keith could give him just as good a run as he could give Keith.

As an illustration of the circuit control of picture prices the witness said that Loew bought the first Harold Lloyd picture for $18,000. It proved to be what the public wanted and Keith purchased the next one for $50,000. Loew acquired the third Lloyd offering for a still higher price. The witness believes that as far as New York is concerned important product, almost in its entirety, is given first run in either of the houses of these circuits, and sometimes in both.

"Producers should not bow to Mr. Loew's slogan: I'm first run or nothing," exclaimed O'Reilly. He added that if they continue to do so it will eventually lead to the extermination of the Independents.

Two resolutions expressing adverseness to block booking system, as passed by the T. O. C. C. at an August meeting, were identified by O'Reilly and then entered into the record.

One attested opposition to the present system of purchasing pictures while their production is only in the stage of contemplation. The desire to review the finished product, the right of individual selection and single instead of the compulsory group purchase were other sentiments included.

The second approved draft contained the statement that during the past two years attendance in picture houses has decreased considerably. This was taken by the organization as an illustration of what forcing the exhibitor to contract for pictures he has never seen, until flashed on the screen of his house, will do.

Under cross examination by Attorney Swaine the witness stated he is acquainted with the new Paramount policy and that such reorganization was brought about shortly after the adoption of the two resolutions.

The new policy, he said, seems to cope with the needs of the exhibitor, but it will be a long time before the other companies will follow suit. Eventually, however, Mr. O'Reilly expressed the opinion that producers will follow in this direction the steps of Famous.

D. I. Berman, general manager of the foreign department of United Artists told of Famous conditions in Canada while he was manager of the corporation there. Most of the time he was on the stand was taken up in explaining the policies of different Canadian theatres.

Independent History

Veteran Attacks Block System; Says Makes Exhibitor Goat to Public

The history of the movies, as it particularly pertains to the early fight of the Independents, and why the block booking system today, in his estimation, is the greatest menace to the industry, were gone into in much detail in the five hours that F. Tom Moore occupied the stand as a witness for the Federal Trade Commission. Mr. Moore, operates the Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C. He was one of the first to enter the industry and one of the first to foresee filmdom's prospects.

In 1904 Moore, then in the prime of life, was blowing the bellows and wielding a hammer on a blacksmith's forge as a means of livelihood. That same year he put aside the leathern apron to later acquire the big diamond which reposed on one of his big fingers the other day. At that time Moore began as a singer with a vaudeville troupe. Then he established his own skit company. But one reel films were coming into vogue in the early part of the century and it was for them that the witness established the Imperial Exchange in Washington two years later. This he sold to the General Film Company in 1910.

About 1917 some twenty-six Independent exhibitors were finding it difficult to obtain pictures of special note being released by

Major Thomson in Control of F. B. O.—Next Season's Policies

MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON, who succeeded P. A. Powers as managing director of the Film Booking Offices at the instigation of the capital represented in the corporation, stated that there would be no drastic changes made in the personnel of the F. B. O. forces or policies and that the "open booking" principle adopted by the company at its inception will be carried through, but on a much larger scale, and with a greater variety and assortment of productions for the exhibitor to select from.

"The principles of showmanship," said Major Thomson, "that the F. B. O. have been following in the twenty months it has been in existence has proven itself a worthy one.

"It is not the idea of the F. B. O. to load itself with overspent productions and then pass the burden along to the exhibitor. It is the purpose of the F. B. O. to make productions that the exhibitor can sell to his patrons at a reasonable profit to his theatre.

"The first consideration of the Film Booking Offices and Robertson-Cole Company will be the amusement of the public, then the profit of the exhibitor. Every production made at the Robertson-Cole studios will be made from an angle of showmanship and not from the angle that it is good publicity to say a production cost a million dollars to produce.

"To the exhibitor, it is not what a picture cost in production that he is mostly interested in, but he does want to know about the finished product and what it will bring into his box-office.

"The pictures I have in mind are such as 'The Third Alarm,' 'Westbound Limited,' 'In the Name of the Law,' 'Human Wreckage,' and a score of other F. B. O. pictures. None of these productions I have mentioned cost a million dollars to produce or even a half million dollars. Coupled with a campaign of real showmanship these pictures have brought business to the exhibitor at a price to him that was well within his reach.

"It is the purpose of the F. B. O. to continue to sell the product twice. First to the exhibitor and then to the public. Our publicity and promotional departments will continue to function as they have in the past with a wide free hand to help the exhibitor.

"The program plans of the F. B. O. were announced some time ago and there will be no drastic changes in these with the possible exception of changing a release date here and there as the occasion may demand. Our plan is to give the exhibitor who uses our product one very big picture each month in addition to two very good ones. As a start along these policy lines the next big F. B. O. special will be Chester Bennett's 'The Lullaby,' starring Jane Novak. The next special to follow this will be Emory Johnson's 'The Mailman.'"

To Continue Paramount Investigation

some of the big producing companies. For the purpose of combining the purchasing power in this respect of such first class exhibitors the First National Exhibitors Circuit was formed. Members were allotted territories, under a franchise, on a percentage basis. To get the better class of product the witness, who said he then owned about seventeen houses in the Washington territory, joined the organization.

The circuit, he said, inspired the Independents to put forth a better product and also supplied for that product an outlet in the open field. Under his new agreement the witness was also a distributor for such material. First National, he stated, was organized primarily to offset the block booking system. The circuit was made up of them, he said, who desired the best on the market and were on the "dark side" as far as Paramount product was concerned. The object of the new association was to match as closely as possible the Paramount product.

A Texan exhibitor and a director of First National about this time sold his franchise. It was to determine whether he could sit on the Board of Directors and why he had disposed of his holdings that the organization in the fall of 1919 was called into session in New York City. The exhibitor said that he had been "squeezed" and had to sell.

At that time, Moore said, it seemed obvious that Paramount was desirous of controlling First National by making inroads on the stars and directors which the Independents developed. The price of Famous films was fixed at a ratio which was far beyond the reach of the average Independent, he testified. The product of the Independent market had thus dwindled. Famous offerings were the big attractions and the Independent exhibitors were doomed unless they could present a product which would match in some respects such films.

The meeting terminated in the holding of another at which the topic of how to overcome such difficulties was discussed. Other meetings followed when it was finally decided that a sub-franchise plan would be of the greatest assistance to the "squeezed" exhibitor. Under this plan, Moore stated, the scope of the Independents' chance to get good product was broadened, as was the opportunity for a greater outlet of these films.

At such meetings the block booking system, and how to combat it, was constantly discussed. While in session in Chicago in April, 1920, the working out by First National of a national booking plan was considered.

At this meeting Jules Mastbaum was a speaker. He referred to the Stanley Booking Company as a successful machine and said that First National, according to Moore, with its large membership should accomplish wonderful things.

A committee was formed to go into the merits of the establishing of a booking company for First National. It was explained, the witness testified, that if such a project

Denny Recovering

Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," "The Abysmal Brute" and "The Spice of Life," who was seriously injured when his motor car turned over on Sunset boulevard in Hollywood, is reported to be recovering at a satisfactory rate. His injuries were severe and he will be in a cast for several weeks, but attending physicians state that his unusual strength and all-around fitness are making his recovery easy.

Horace T. Clark, formerly Oriental representative for David P. Howells, has become associated with First National in the same capacity.

met with success the sub-franchise proposition would automatically prove unnecessary. The enthusiasm of the organization was goaded by Mastbaum's comment, according to Moore, that all producers would be "eating out of" First National's hand within six months after such a plan was put into operation.

This committee went to Philadelphia to get a perspective there of the working basis of the Stanley company. Stanley directors were present at this conference at which, Moore said, it was made plain by them that the best policy to be followed would be to have First National merge with them on the booking proposition. Under such a merger Stanley, due to its experience over the new organization, would retain its seniority in the business, Moore said.

Moore stated that he refused to accede to such a plan. When others of the committee disagreed with him and told him that during the session he had assumed the attitude of a prosecutor in cross examining the Stanley directors, the Washington theatre owner tendered his resignation and advised members of First National that such a merger would be unwise.

"The kid gloves of the business," is Moore's expression for describing Paramount quality and quantity. In Washington, however, Moore said he got the Paramount pictures that the Loew theatre discarded. Time and time again Moore testified he endeavored to get an even break on the Paramount product. Lots of promises were made but in the long run the old policy prevailed, he stated.

In 1922 when he received a letter from Paramount that the 50-50 proposition with Loew on dividing the films of the company was off, Moore remarked: "After I received that I told my brother I was worn out on the booking of pictures and that he should do it. He has looked after the booking end of the Rialto ever since."

The elimination of the block booking system, testified this expert, would mean reducing to an insignificant basis boards of censorship all over the country. Preachers of the gospel, under such a change, would then less frequently be able to conduct tirades against the industry. Last but not least the exhibitor would not be the goat in the unknowing public eye. Such a condition will be brought about only when the exhibitor has the right to use his own judgment in selecting what films shall be flashed on the screen of his house, Moore emphasized.

A light in this direction is breaking over the movie horizon, Moore soliloquized. The "sausage" system of turning out product is ending the stage of its dominancy. Individuality is gaining strength in the industry more and more. Stars are entering the independent field and putting into their product their own singular and artistic ideas.

Movies in Hongkong

American Films Most Popular in Chinese City, Consul Says

Washington, D. C.—American films are very popular in Hongkong, according to the American consul in that city, who has just reported to the Department of Commerce that there are eight large theatres in his community, four of which cater to Europeans, Americans and the better class of Chinese. The total daily attendance at all theatres at Hongkong is placed at 10,000, and the admission prices range from 20 cents to $1 gold.

The largest proportion of films shown are of American manufacture, it is stated, and the local theatres which cater to the European trade prefer films produced by the best artists and covering a wide range of subjects. Those catering to the native Chinese trade prefer serials and films of a lurid or sensational nature.

Forty Exhibitors in Washington Discuss New Organization Plan

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Initial steps were taken at the opening meeting of exhibitors from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and of the District of Columbia for the formation of a zone organization which is also to embrace the State of Delaware. About forty exhibitors gathered at the Arlington Hotel on October 30 to discuss a plan previously outlined by Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va. Harry M. Crandall was chosen temporary chairman of the meeting, and Samuel Boyd, his secretary, was selected as secretary of the meeting.

Mr. Crandall explained that the desire is for closer co-operation between the exhibitors of the states named, and including the District of Columbia, they having the same interest in a single exchange center. The idea is to form a sort of model zone organization which would later be taken up by the rest of the country, each zone representing a film exchange district, there being twenty-six of these throughout the United States.

The Plan Sketched

Mr. Crandall further explained that each of the zones would be entitled to one or more votes as might later be determined upon in the formation of a national organization, it to be very much like the Senate of the United States, wherein each state has equal representation and equal voice in the legislation for the whole country. The headquarters of the organization would be in Washington, where it would be free from domination of state association interests, and its affairs would be in the hands of a paid manager, assisted by such office staff as might be found necessary, the whole work being supervised by the representatives from the zones who would come to Washington at stated periods at the expense of the national organization to attend to its affairs.

Mr. Crandall condemned the M. P. T. O. A. for "its lack of activities that would benefit the individual exhibitor." He declared that at the last convention of the association the entire three days were spent in electioneering.

He urged the formation of a real business organization, at least in this territory, with the hope that the scope of its work would be extended in a national way, and he added that he expected that from this meeting different suggestions would be obtained which would help in the formation of a national association.

Present at the opening meeting, in addition to representatives from the states named, were representatives of the exhibitors of Michigan, Texas and South Carolina, where a great deal of interest has been exhibited in the proposal for the formation of a new organization. These men were given an opportunity to express their views and the members of prospective Zone 1 were greatly heartened by their promises of co-operation.

Jake Wells, of Richmond, reviewed the meeting of the Virginia exhibitors held at the Arlington Hotel several weeks ago, at which this plan was broached. He gave credit to William Brandt, of New York, as the originator of the plan. He criticized the present M. P. T. O. A. for its "do nothing" policy.

"I have seen the efforts of the national organization, and I am not here to say anything disparagingly about it," said Mr. Wells, "but I think I express the opinion of everybody here that it is not functioning to advantage. You can go to one of these national conventions and you find that the whole time is taken up with who is to be president, etc. At the convention here a slate was all made up, and the only question was of railroading it through. There was some opposition, but the time was devoted to doing away with that opposition rather than conducting other business. Personally, I think Sydney Cohen is one fine fellow and that he has done well. It is not Mr. Cohen who is wrong, because it would be the same if we had Mr. Smith, of California, or Brown, of Texas, as our president. It is the principle which has come to exist and which does not work out."

Mr. Wells pointed out that attendance at the national conventions was limited very largely to members living within a small radius of the convention city. The proposed zone system would do away with that condition because there would be but twenty-six delegates, and their expenses would be paid by the national organization from a budget made up by the zone organization, which would assure strictly a national and not simply a local representation. There would be no electioneering because the delegates would be selected by the organizations in the zones, for there is no desire to do away with the present state associations, and this governing board would simply select its chairman in much the same way as a business corporation would act.

Wants a Lobbyist

"I want to see this organization taken out of New York and put in Washington, where legislation which we are all interested in originates," added Mr. Wells. "I want to see a paid, competent executive on the job in Washington at all times to hobnob with the members of Congress and create a goodwill for the industry."

He explained that the finances of the national organization would be raised by contributions from the state units through the respective zones in much the same way as the country is divided up by the producers. The zone in which Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia would be the constituent parts, would be a 3 per cent. territory, and the theatre owners in this zone would be called upon to make up 3 per cent. of the annual requirements of maintaining the national organization and its Washington headquarters.

Throughout his talk Mr. Wells endeavored to make it plain that there was no desire on his part, or those interested with him, in the formation of a zone system for the elimination either of the existing state organizations, or the M. P. T. O. A. He declared that the state organizations are necessary because they would take up local matters, and the zone unit could co-operate where there are exchange district interests at stake. He expressed the hope that once the zone organizations began functioning, the M. P. T. O. A. would be remodelled so as to conform to those units.

Max Bryant, president of the recently-formed South Carolina Exhibitors' League, endorsed the move proposed by Mr. Wells and stated that he would go back to his fellow members and try to "sell" them the idea.

"I think you can feel reasonably assured of the co-operation of North Carolina and South Carolina in this move," he said, "because I have also been authorized by President Henry B. Varner, of the North Carolina League, to pledge his co-operation. We hope to form a two-state organization within the next two or three months, and are very much interested in your plan."

Col. H. A. Cole, president of the Texas Motion Picture Theatre Owners stated that his association stood ready to join any movement that gave evidences of being able to accomplish something. He complained that the national association had been very lax in its legislative activity, and also that it had failed utterly in any effort to properly organize the exhibitor organizations of the various states.

"No Antagonism"

President Frank Durkee, of the Maryland Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, while expressing favor for the proposed formation of a zone which would include the states named, strongly opposed the overthrow of the present national association and declared that most of the things of which the exhibitors complain resulted from the lack of co-operation of the state organizations. Mr. Wells took occasion to say that there is no antagonism toward the present organization, but rather an indifference on part of the state organizations which has resulted in the lack of co-operation complained of by Mr. Durkee.

E. T. Crall, of Newport News, president of the Virginia exhibitor association, declared himself to be very enthusiastic over the idea advanced by Mr. Wells.

After the conclusion of the remarks, various state presidents and others in the room were asked to give their views. Judge Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel for the past two years of the Michigan State League, who is in Washington as a delegate to the Investment Bankers Convention, brought the greetings of the Michigan organization.

"The opportunity for organization has been criminally neglected and wasted in this country," he charged. "I was at the Washington convention and saw the very high-handed tactics that, in my judgment, would have disgraced any corner political gathering."

He suggested that the exhibitors get reports from the national organization and analyze them, and also get reports on the operation of the "Movie Chats."

The speech of Judge Murphy was followed by a resolution by I. Weinberg, of Lexington, Va., authorizing the temporary chairman to name a committee to formulate a concrete plan to be presented to the meeting when convened on October 31, the plan to include a rough outline of the by-laws providing for the formation of a zone organization to include Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The committee named by Mr. Crandall included President Frank Durkee, of the Maryland league; Louis Rome, of Baltimore; President E. T. Crall, of the Virginia league; Jake Wells, of Richmond; Maurice Davis, of Washington, and President Harry M. Crandall, of the District of Columbia league.

City Officials All Over Country Enthusiastic About Movie Day

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announces that the past week has been marked by definite accomplishments in the campaign for National Motion Picture Day on November 19. Various state units of the national body have begun to show concrete results from the preliminary meetings which have been held during preceding weeks and the entire country is pointing toward November 19 as the biggest day in the year as it relates to the public's contact with the industry.

Following the mass meeting of theatre owners in Pittsburgh, at which ways and means were mapped out, Hon. William A. Magee, mayor, urged the proper observance of National Motion Picture Day in a public proclamation, dated October 19, as follows:

"For the creation of a fund to be devoted to the efforts to secure a united organization for the betterment of motion picture entertainment, Monday, November 19, 1923, has been set aside throughout the United States as National Motion Picture Day. Many of the theatres have pledged twenty-five per cent. of the gross receipts of the day to such fund. The marvelous motion photography, now become universal in its scope, has done great things for the enlightening and education of the people, besides having always responded as an advertising agency in all patriotic and social movements. The leaders of the motion picture enterprise are ambitious to go forward, improve their art and their standards, perfect their organization and bring about a greater degree of co-operation in order to further advance this instrument of public entertainment and public good. The appreciation of the public will be of great aid in this effort. I call the attention of all of our people to this important movement, recommending support of it and urging attendance at the motion picture theatres in such significant numbers as will encourage the leaders in their praiseworthy and far-reaching enterprise."

Another endorsement of national importance has come from Hon. James J. Davis, U. S. Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C. Mr. Davis is also Director-General of the Loyal Order of Moose. He states: "I am glad to endorse National Motion Picture Day. The Loyal Order of Moose has employed motion pictures as a means of education in many of its activities. A greater use of this agency will bring wonderful results."

In New York City, following the announcement of last week, a meeting was called by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce and the following letter sent to committee members: "You have previously been advised by National Headquarters of your appointment on the committee for National Motion Picture Day, designated to be held on Monday, November 19. You are now summoned to attend a meeting of this committee at the Hotel Astor, Room K, on the 8th floor, on Friday, October 26, at 2 p. m. sharp.

"You will realize that the time between now and November 19 is very short and a great deal must be accomplished by the committee to make National Motion Picture Day a huge success in this territory.

"This office is advised by National Headquarters that the response of exhibitors throughout this country and Canada is very great and it would ill become the exhibitors of New York City and adjacent territories to fall behind the outlying states and territories of the United States. We must show the rest of the country that we have not merely endorsed National Motion Picture Day by a written resolution, but by action.

"It is therefore incumbent upon you to figuratively roll up your sleeves and get to work with vim and vigor and show the rest of the country what the Empire State can do to make National Motion Picture Day a genuine success, from a civic as well as a financial point of view.

"President O'Reilly will not take 'no' for an answer for your non-attendance at this meeting. A roll call of the committee will be called and it is hoped that your name will be among those present."

The meeting was held as announced and it is reported every member of the committee was present. Sydney S. Cohen, national president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided and called attention to the aims and constructive purpose of National Motion Picture Day. After Mr. Cohen had concluded his address, Mr. Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, a member of the National Board of Directors, was called upon and told of the very practical way in which affairs were being handled in Western Pennsylvania. Mr. Davis stated that Mayor Magee, of Pittsburgh, and the president of the city's Chamber of Commerce, representing five thousand business and professional men, had issued separate proclamations of approval and endorsement for National Motion Picture Day, urging attendance at the theatres on November 19. He told of this co-operation between official and civic heads of Pittsburgh as being of an entirely mutual character, as both recognized the great value of Pittsburgh motion picture theatres as institutions for community service.

Following Mr. Davis, Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, voiced his enthusiastic support of the movement and urged all New York theatre owners to get behind it and make a record of which they could be proud. J. Arthur Hirsch and Hy Gainsboro also spoke in favor of National Motion Picture Day, as did Charles Steiner and Sol Brill.

Following their remarks, reports were read outlining the plans and campaigns which are being followed in other sections of the country. A special committee was then announced to act as points of contact between the exhibitors and the general committee and to take care of the special exploitation of the celebration. Comprising this committee is: Borough of Manhattan—J. Arthur Hirsch, chairman; Charles Steiner, Sol Raives. Borough of Brooklyn—John Manheimer, chairman; H. Rachmill, Samuel Sonin, Charles Schwartz. Borough of Bronx—Joseph Jaime, chairman; Henry Suchman, Benjamin Knoble. Borough of Queens—Hy Gainsboro, chairman; J. Goldberg, A. Suzzo. New Jersey—Joseph Seider, chairman; Louis Rosenthal, Joseph Stern, David Kaiserstein.

It was also arranged at this session that a monster mass meeting of all theatre owners of Greater New York be held at the Hotel Astor on Monday afternoon, November 5. Two meetings of the committee in charge of this mass meeting are being held this week. Also, for use in the Greater New York territory, special auto banners, as well as lobby signs, are being prepared and 10,000 extra one-sheets are being printed. The entire city is being districted into zones, with an exhibitor captain in each zone, who is given a set of cards, with each theatre in his zone on a separate card. For the purpose of lining up every theatre and securing from each a pledge of support, these exhibitor captains are visiting the various theatres in person.

The activities on behalf of National Motion Picture Day are constantly checked up and furthered in Southern California by means of a weekly meeting, held every Monday at Los Angeles. The latest report from that state announces that Mr. Robert A. McNeill is actively behind the movement in San Francisco and that plans are culminating for the complete success of the celebration on November 19.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri met on October 19 at St. Louis and endorsed National Motion Picture Day one hundred per cent. Plans were immediately formulated for Missouri's participation. About seventy-five theatre owners attended the meeting, which also unanimously passed a resolution favoring the repeal of the Federal Admission Tax. Among those present were: I. W. Rodgers, J. D. Reese, Charles S. Goodnight, J. E. Smith, Mrs. M. J. Moore, Richard Stemple, L. C. Hehl, Fred Wehrenberg, Charles Warner, Joseph Mogler, Joseph J. Walsh, W. O. Reeves, John Gentner and Joseph Wagner.

Cohen Meets Rochester and Toronto Exhibitors

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, left New York on Monday, October 29, for Rochester, to meet with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York.

A meeting of the board of directors of the national organization is also being held at Rochester and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is presenting an engraved resolution to George Eastman in recognition of his public spirit and service to the industry.

From Rochester Mr. Cohen goes to Toronto to meet with the Ontario Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada, which meeting is also being attended by the officers and board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The Canadian organization is being presented with an engrossed charter of affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Varner Opens N. C. Theatre; Many Send Congratulations

Never was a metropolitan city theatre opened and dedicated with more fitting ceremony nor more wholesale demonstration of good wishes than that which attended the formal opening of Colonel Henry B. Varner's wonderful new theatre in the thriving little town of Lexington, N. C. Colonel Varner has long been a telling power in the industry, but not until the flowers, telegrams (and personal attendance) from all over the United States began to pour in did the Colonel really know in what high esteem he is recognized and held by the entire industry.

The Lexington is a monument to the progressiveness of Colonel Varner and his pride in his home town, and would do credit to a town ten times the size of Lexington. Constructed along the most modern lines, with a seating capacity of 1,500, it is, with possibly three or four exceptions, the most gorgeously and completely equipped theatre in the South.

For its formal opening, exchange, distributor and exhibitor representation from more than half the states in the Union were present. In addition, more than 200 expressions of good wishes in the form of flowers, telegrams and letters were received. Among those who sent congratulatory messages were the following: Richard A. Rowland, E. A. Eschmann, Louis B. Mayer, Maurice Tourneur, John Francis Dillon, John McCormick, Sylvia Breamer, Virginia Browne Fair, Colleen Moore, John McDermotte, Robert Leiber, Joseph M. Schenck, Buster Keaton, Richard Walton Tully, H. B. Schwalbe, E. M. Saunders, Adolph Zukor, Earl J. Hudson and Carl Laemmle, in addition to almost every prominent exhibitor and exchange man in the territory.

What is perhaps the outstanding feature of the opening is the fact that the clergy, represented by two able Lexington ministers, set the seal of their approval on the theatre by attending and taking part in the formal dedication.

Another monument to the industry is to be erected in the Old North State, according to present plans of the Ware-Simpson-Estridge Company, who have announced that they will erect, starting on January 1, 1924, in the town of Gastonia, N. C., one of the most modern theatres in the state. The company is composed of J. W. Ware, J. E. Simpson and James E. Estridge, and marks a combination of the interests which are at present operating the picture theatres in Gastonia. J. E. Estridge, junior member of the new company, being manager of the Gastonia Theatre and secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina M. P. T. O.

All district supervisors for Southern Enterprises theatres have now been placed. Ford Anderson, formerly in charge of Carolina theatres, goes to the Atlanta office; Arthur J. Amm remains in Florida; E. R. Rogers retains the Tennessee territory; Montgomery Hill, formerly of the booking department, becomes Carolina supervisor; E. L. Perry goes to Oklahoma and A. E. Fair remains in Texas. A. C. Cowles, who has been Public Relations representative since the resignation of Turner Jones, becomes booker in the Charlotte office; John Thomas, formerly manager of the Vaudeville, Atlanta, will be with Mr. Rogers as booker; Loyless Kennedy, formerly with the Howard, Atlanta, will book for Florida theatres, and DeSalles Harrison remains in Atlanta as booker. The real estate department, of which Louis Cohen is head, will maintain offices in the Howard Theatre building, Atlanta, for some time yet.

The Orpheum Theatre, Memphis, was destroyed by fire Tuesday night of last week, the loss being $100,000.

W. D. Patrick, of Florida, was in Atlanta the past week buying service for the New Palace, at Dothan, Ala.

Among theatre men in Atlanta the past week were Clyde W. Cheek, of LaGrange, Ga.; John Snyder, Bessemer, Ala.; Montgomery Hill; Louis Kalbfeld, Palatka, Fla.

Baltimore

Because eight picture theatres were opened to the public on Sunday night, October 21, and benefit performances were given to help raise funds to build the new West Baltimore General Hospital, an attack upon having such picture shows given on Sunday was made by the Maryland Baptist Union Association which was in convention at the Eutaw Place Baptist Church, and a petition was sent to the police commissioner of Baltimore City asking that he stop future performances of the kind. Approximately $2,500 was realized on the eight Sunday performances. Commissioner Gaither refused to listen to the protest of the Baptist Union.

Due to the efficient management of U. S. Brummell, house manager of the Century Theatre, Baltimore, the audience viewing the performance at that playhouse was unaware of a fire which occurred next door and caused four alarms to be sounded and twenty-six companies to respond, on Wednesday night, October 24.

Mr. Brummell ordered all the storm doors closed to keep out the sound of the arriving engines and allow no smoke to penetrate to the auditorium.

Two motion picture machines were wrecked by some unknown person at the Arcadia Theatre, 320 South Broadway, managed by James Legrande, on Tuesday night, October 23.

Washington, D. C.

Lawrence Beatus next week will celebrate the fifth anniversary of Loew's Palace Theatre, of which he is manager. In anticipation of a special program which will be put on that week, he has arranged for the re-decoration of the theatre. A handsome new carpet has been laid over the entire floor space, and five musicians have been added to the already large orchestra. An order has been placed with a local florist for the further decoration with chrysanthemums, autumn leaves and fall flowers.

In appreciation of his efforts on their behalf, the members of the Managers' Association of Washington, D. C., last week presented to Charles W. Linkins, who operates the Strand and other theatres in the District of Columbia, a handsome gold watch and chain. The presentation was made by Roland Robbins, manager of Keith's Theatre, at a luncheon tendered to Mr. Linkins at the New Willard Hotel. Twenty-six members of the association, which includes the managers of both the motion picture, vaudeville and legitimate houses, were present.

"Bob" Long, manager of Moore's Rialto Theatre, came prominently into the limelight October 23 when the Washington Post carried nearly a column giving a biographical sketch of this popular manager. This story was the fourth of a series of introductory sketches of the men who furnish entertainment to the Washington public. It divulged the fact that "Bob" Long, christened Robert Everett Long, has been in the amusement game twenty-three years, although he has not yet reached his 37th birth anniversary. He joined the Moore enterprises in 1918.

This story makes known the fact that Bob Long wears a wrist watch. There is a story attached to the timepiece which endears it to him, and makes it a matter of interest to his friends. On the back of the watch there is inscribed, "Robert E. Long, from Woodrow Wilson, December, 1920." It is a Christmas gift from the former president in appreciation of Mr. Long's many kindnesses in providing Mr. Wilson with movie entertainment during the serious illness with which he was afflicted toward the end of his term. Mr. Long visited the White House every morning at 11 o'clock with reels of films with which to entertain Mr. Wilson.

This Community Theatre a Success

DENISON, IOWA, has an opera house owned by a corporation in which the citizens of Denison and the farmers for miles and miles around own stock. This opera house, costing $125,000, was built ten years ago and has been a success from the first day, according to Phillip A. Schlumberger, one of the directors who was in Omaha recently on business. Picture shows are conducted there almost every day, dropping out only occasionally for a day to give place to a road show or musical comedy.

"By throwing our money together and organizing a big corporation," said Mr. Schlumberger, "we were able to build a big opera house, something that is really a credit to our town, a town of 4,000, and we are now able to get the big pictures that are shown in the metropolitan cities, something the little houses in the small towns do not get."

When the organization of this corporation was first spoken of and popular stock subscriptions were solicited, naturally there were plenty of "Doubting Thomases," but time has shown that it was a wise move, for during the ten years the opera house has been in existence, it has steadily paid a small dividend to the stock holders and has every year made a small payment on the indebtedness.

Thirteen Southern Minnesota exhibitors who attended a regional conference arranged by W. A. Steffes last week at Windom went on record as being opposed to any general increase in admission prices at this time. Mr. Steffes, speaking before the conference, which was held in the Wonderland Theatre, said that reports of admission increases in the East were grossly exaggerated and that if any changes are to be made the prices should be lowered.

Exhibitors who attended the conference were: Redding and Stroud, Wonderland Theatre, Windom; W. L. Nichols, Strand, Fairmont; J. J. Casselman, Colonial, Tracy; F. M. Robinson, Comfrey and Grand, Springfield; A. C. Goodman, Star, Madelia; F. J. Armantrout, Lyric, Lakefield; George J. Ehlers, Grand, Worthington; R. E. Benson, Princess, Adrian; F. J. Pacific Northwest Booming; Exhibitors Are Optimistic

"What is one man's loss is another man's gain." The terrible earthquake disaster in Japan, followed by the disastrous fire in Berkeley, Cal., has given added impetus to the already booming lumbering industry of the Pacific Northwest. Lumber mills are all working on twenty-four hour shifts. There is no unemployment save of the voluntary variety. New mills are opening up, employing more men. Towns of 300 and 400 population have in many cases doubled and redoubled their growth.

This naturally means for Mr. Motion Picture Exhibitor an era of prosperity. It does not mean that the situation will remain permanently, but business at the present time in these districts, particularly in Washington and Oregon, is good enough to wring a smile from the most hardened pessimist. E. A. Lamb, traveling for Selznick Enterprises out of Seattle, is just back from a swing around all the key towns of Southern Oregon. He confirms the situation as told above and states that exhibitors are reporting excellent business. A new house has just been started in the Coos Bay district and will be rushed to completion.

The Manhattan Theatre, Charleston, Wash., which has been closed for many months, is reported sold by E. E. Wright to Dr. P. G. Schmidt.

Construction on the D. & R. Theatres Company's big house in Aberdeen is progressing rapidly. Dolan and Ripley are announcing a Christmas Eve opening with "The Green Goddess."

Managing Director S. K. Wineland of the Strand Theatre has secured the services of John Henry Lyons, who is proving a popular drawing card in connection with the first of the "Sing Them Again" series, "Close Harmony." The irresistible song leader is making the house ring with harmony, and sending 'em out in high spirits.

And speaking of music, the Coliseum Theatre is welcoming Osborne Putnam Stearns as its new orchestral conductor, succeeding Jacques Beaucaire, resigned.

It is further reported that Jack O'Dale has left the console of the Strand Theatre, where he was organist, and that Ernest Russell, who shared honors as organist with the renowned Oliver Wallace at the Liberty, has resigned. Mr. Russell will go to Tacoma for the Moore Amusement Company, the Tacoma J. & V. Company.

Heralded as probably the largest single deal of the year in this locality comes the announcement that Jensen & Von Herberg have contracted for the "Eighteen Specials" of the Warner Brothers for the coming season, for their entire circuit of Northwest theatres. L. K. Brin, of Film Classics, Inc., handles all distribution of the Warner product in the Pacific Northwest. The Classics will be given lavish presentation in J. & V. houses.

J. J. McIntyre, owner of the Columbian Theatre, Columbia City, Seattle, has sold out to Wm. Petrie. Mr. Petrie plans an exploitation campaign to put himself and his house on the map. Amateur nights and country store nights will be part of the program. The Columbian was opened last May.

Robert W. Bender, popular newspaperman, exploiter and graduate of the University of Washington, this week succeeded Harold E. Daigler as manager of the Columbia Theatre. Mr. Daigler resigned but is not yet ready to announce his plans.

John Danz and O. T. Klawitter have consolidated their south end theatres, the Florence, Gem and Star, under one organization. The Danz houses are second runs. Mr. Danz has just announced the acquisition of the Educational short subjects 100 per cent. for his chain of five houses.

A rumor states that R. H. Glenn, who owns Glenn theatres in Newcastle, Burnett and Black Diamond, sustained a loss in the looting of the box office of the Black Diamond house last week.

The Film Theatre, Craigmont, Idaho, C. A. Warnacutt, is again telegraphing exchanges: "Discontinue service as I am no longer in business."

J. G. Beckman of the Rialto, Wenatchee, "where the big red apples grow," spent Tuesday in Seattle. It was visible that the mighty director tried to speak with repression and due modesty of his locality, yet admitted with alacrity that the bumper crop of magnificent apples is not only a sight worthy of coming miles to see, but spells success for the farmers and ranchers of the district. As Beckman is not himself a ranch owner, his enthusiasm is even more contagious. Incidentally while you are in Wenatchee, he will show you a capital program of pictures at his house.

W. H. Catherman of the Lyric Theatre, Huntington, Oregon, died last week. Mr. Catherman was also the express company's agent. The house is continuing, but no details of the present management have been received here.

The Coliseum Theatre is to have the first of the new Paramount pictures sold under the demonstration plan. It will open November 17 for an extended run. Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer" is the picture and it will be thoroughly exploited in co-operation with H. C. Eagles, Paramount exploiter for the local territory, who will devote his entire time to this picture.

Manager LeRoy V. Johnson has promised a wild time for Hallowe'en patrons of his High Jinks at the Liberty Theatre on October 31. A genuine high jinks with trimmings will start promptly at 11 o'clock. Lots of the best features are being kept a deep, dark secret, but it has leaked out that a twenty-minute minstrel show, a free-for-all apple bobbing contest, and prizes for the best costumes and Hallowe'en pranks of all kinds, are on the list. Tickets are being sold in advance, up to seating capacity only.

Montana

Butte's pictures theatres have been dark since October 1, when the musicians and projectionists walked out after the managers had declined to consider their demand for wage advances. The new scale proposed an increase for orchestra men to $57.50 a week from $42.50, and $77.50 for leaders; the stage hands and projectionists asked $57.50 a week, an increase of $5. The houses made no effort to operate after the date set in the ultimatum of the employees. The doors were locked and have remained so, with signs explaining the situation.

Since the closing of the theatre doors there has at no time been any indication that either side would get together and adjust their differences. Clearly the theatre managers cannot afford to run the playhouses at a decided loss. On the other hand, the musicians claim that they cannot and will not return on the old schedule of salaries. It all points to a long deadlock.

The dance halls have signed up on the new schedule of salaries demanded by the union and the Empress Theatre likewise has complied. The Empress is a stock company and is benefiting by the local conditions. The theatre loving fans of Butte are visiting Anaconda, thirty miles from here, for film entertainment.

Connie Eckhart, manager of the Marlowe Theatre, was in Butte last week in conference with Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company.

Baumann in Hospital

Walter F. Baumann, who recently resigned as executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin after three years of service with that organization, was injured several days ago when his automobile collided with another machine. Mr. Baumann at present is convalescing at the Deaconess Hospital in Milwaukee, where it was found he had suffered severe injuries to his spine and lacerations and bruises to his face and head. Just when he will be able to leave the hospital it is impossible to say, according to the attending physicians.

Mr. Baumann, upon leaving the exhibitor organization, announced that he was entering the advertising field and he was laying his final plans for activities in that direction when the accident occurred.

Milwaukee

A move to name an attorney as successor to Walter F. Baumann, who resigned recently as executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, has been started by Fred Seegert, president of the organization. Although Mr. Seegert denies that he has anyone in particular in view for the post and insists that the association will take its time about naming the new secretary, he has announced that he is fully convinced that it will profit the organization to have a lawyer in the office.

Since Mr. Baumann's resignation Mr. Seegert has combined the presidential duties with those of secretary and as a result speaks from personal experience when he declares himself in favor of such a step.

"An executive secretary of our organization is continually called upon for advice in regard to contracts," he declared. "Knowledge of law plays an important part in such matters. Besides, some knowledge of law also is required in dealing with the railroad rate and the industrial commissions. Lobbying is another argument for an attorney."

"By hiring an attorney for the post we would not only get the services of a secretary but at the same time would obtain the services of a lawyer, thereby killing off two birds with one stone."

With betterment of the entire industry as their aim, sixty-five members of the Film Board of Milwaukee participated in a dinner meeting on the night of October 22, discussing such subjects as the uniform contract, salesmanship, arbitration, co-operation with exhibitors, and bicycling. It was one of the greatest rallies of exchange men ever held in the city and demonstrated clearly the growing power and closer unity of the seventeen offices in Milwaukee.

Leading the discussion were George B. Levine, president of the organization and head of Universal in Milwaukee; William Aschmann, head of Pathe; Harold Fitzgerald, in charge of First National, and Attorney Ben Koenig, who has been retained as secretary of the Film Board.

When Zev walked away from Papyrus and crossed the tape a winner in the international sporting event, it ended one race but marked the beginning of another. As a result of the second race, Milwaukee was able to see movies of the Zev victory two days after it took place. International News, it is claimed, reached the city slightly ahead of Pathe. The first was shown at the Garden Theatre, managed by Leo A. Landau, and the latter was at Ascher's Merrill, managed by Roy C. MacMullen.

Saxe's Strand Theatre in Milwaukee, managed by Eddie Weisfeldt, took on the appearance of a real circus during the recent showing of Jackie Coogan's "Circus Days." Everything from the circus ticket wagon to the clowns was there, the clowns being members of the Strand's famous Synco-Symphony orchestra.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

McManus Says That Opposition Should Be an Incentive to Do Better Exploitation

DURING the past few years we have used a number of stunts from Charles F. McManus, who manages the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., for H. T. Moore, whose theatres are in affiliation with the Jensen & Von Herberg circuit. Most of these have been sent in by the press agents, chiefly the First National, since the house uses that product as the backbone of its program.

The other day Mr. McManus licked the stiffest opposition he has had, and he made such a thorough job of it that he was moved to pass the ideas along. And while he was doing this he dipped into so many other angles and handled them so intelligently that we are not going to try to better his own language, but quote his letter intact, feeling that it must be of real help to other managers.

Note what he says about opposition. That should be in a frame over the manager's desk in every picture theatre in the world—not merely the United States, for opposition has defeated more otherwise good men than all the other causes combined.

Mr. McManus says:

Last week we featured First National's The Isle of Lost Ships. During this time the Western Washington State Fair was held in Puyallup, which is only 15 miles from here. The attendance at the fair was 200,000 and as the population of Tacoma is at present 125,000, this week was looked upon as a "jinx" by the local showmen. Notwithstanding this fact, I had a hunch that if the right kind of exploitation was used business could be done during this week.

I have always gone on the theory that the tougher the weather conditions are, or opposition is, these things can be overcome to a great extent if the right kind of exploitation is used. I have always maintained that if the right kind of good pictures were released during the summer months that the average theatre could make money. To supplement this statement, I could say I played the West Bound Limited during the month of July, in one of the hottest weeks of the year, and broke all box office records for the past twelve months. Of course this meant a lot of work and the right kind of exploitation, but it proved time and money well spent.

Started in Early

Coming back to my original subject, our business on The Isle of Lost Ships during the fair week was excellent and as far as our receipts were concerned it might never have existed. Of course to put this over meant a lot of work, but I opened up on the picture a month in advance, using a full page in our monthly announcement to announce it. Starting last June, I have announced the block of pictures to be shown each month at the beginning of the month. It seems to me that this group announcement makes a lasting impression.

The second week in September I ran the regular trailer which is exceptionally good.

The week before the opening of this picture I used a display on each side of the stage which was illuminated during the intermissions and ran a special trailer I had made. The foyer contained three atmospheric displays while I used the regular 30 x 40 oil paintings and four compo-boards cutouts that I had made in front of the theatre. From time to time I have heralded the coming of any special picture by sandwiching announcements of the production with the front I was using on the picture I was playing. When I first started this I received comments that this might hurt business as it would detract from the bill that I was running, but I have found that it does not do so because by marking everything clearly with the words, "Coming Saturday" (the Jensen & Von Herberg week starts on Saturday instead of Sunday or Monday.—Ed.), it creates a desire to see and an interest in the coming attraction.

Advance Is Best

One day of advanced exploitation is worth two while the picture is playing, so I always try to have my window displays in place at least four days before the picture starts. Also when I use a float I find that the same rule applies, so on the Wednesday before the opening of The Girl of the Golden West six window displays were in place and the float on the street.

In regard to my front: If a nice sales front is put out on the average production and the big spreads reserved for the bigger pictures, the people know that a big front means a big picture and come flocking in while our regular patrons and those sold on the star value or the title of the average production do not hesitate to come anyway. The inclosed picture of my front will give a fair idea of the display.

I think that nothing creates a better atmosphere than to costume the ushers, which I do whenever possible, as this breaks the monotony of the regular uniform and also makes a setting for the feature.

Another exploitation angle which I think helps is the using of a wall of an old building that is being torn down to make way for a new hotel. This building is situated on the main business corner of our city and very valuable. Through a special arrangement with the contractor I am enabled to hang a twenty-four sheet display without any cost to us except passes for his family.

Played Up the Pups

Police dogs for exploiting pictures have been old since Strongheart, but police puppies are still better. That's what H. C. Farley, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., discovered.

He had the proud parents chained to a cage containing a litter of police puppies and he did not really need the atmospheric lobby he threw in for good measure.

TWO STUNTS WHICH MEANT TANGIBLE DOLLARS TO THE BOX OFFICE OF THE COLONIAL THEATRE, TACOMA

On the left is a float which helped to offset the effects of a local fair of unusual importance. On the right is a sign on a blank wall next the new hotel which is the most interesting thing to residents of Tacoma just now. Getting this location ensures that a large proportion of the population will see it, most of them daily. Opposition never scares Mr. McManus.

Six Day Sales Are Help to a Feature

"Six Day Sales," with one special bargain for each day, was a real helper in selling Six Days in Washington, Pa.

Floyd Morrow, of the Regent Theatre, tied the leading stores to the idea and arranged to let them have single passes to give with each of the bargains, getting it back, and more, on the special advertising they did for the sale and the Elinor Glynn feature, not to mention the window displays.

This is a simple stunt and can be worked without the ticket angle, if desired, but where the ticket is included, these can be laid off at half price and charged to advertising, with the realization that most of them will bring in one or more full paid tickets.

Rush Campaign Was Financial Success

Because The Meanest Man in the World was a rush booking at Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Irving Lesser, of Principal Pictures, sent Harry D. Wilson over to help out M. A. Malaney on the job, though Malaney generally manages to put things over whether or not he has assistance.

Wilson found the stage nicely set, for George M. Cohan, from whose play the picture was made, was appearing at a nearby house in The Song and Dance Man while Lytell, the star, was a feature at Keith's Palace, not far on the other side of the State.

For a starter Wilson got out some teasers in one, three and eight sheet sizes, stating that the meanest man in the world was to be seen on a specified date, without telling the house. That is old stuff, but it never yet failed. At a proper time these were covered with block paper telling that he would be at the State, and giving plenty of space to both author and star.

The hotel where Lytell stopped was bannered in welcome and for a lobby kicker there was a bulletin board on which were displayed twenty-five telegrams from other picture stars wishing Lytell a big week in person and on the film.

Twenty thousand rotos were put out in the house the preceding week, and line drawings were used for teasers. A whirlwind campaign put the picture over to big business.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

ON the program of which "The Fighting Blade" was the feature picture were three stage presentations, one orchestral number, the Papyrus-Zev race pictures and the Topical Review, the whole running two hours and eight minutes, the average time for this house. Of these, one of the stage numbers was put on for the first time in any theatre other than the legitimate, it being from "Up She Goes," by permission.

The number from the musical comedy was "Journey's End," a ballad duet for tenor and soprano, for which Hyman used in addition eight girl dancers. It opened with a set-piece cottage center stage, backed up by a cut wood drop. Window flower boxes at the large double windows of the cottage. With this set lighted by blue borders, amber foots one-quarter, an amber spot, an orange spot and two pink spots from the sides, the eight girls came on and went through the verse and chorus with an eccentric symphony dance. At their exit the vocalists came on from opposite side, the soprano going through the number first and then the tenor, with both finishing the second chorus in duet, the girl having gone into the house, lighted the windows and opened them while the tenor was going through the verse. For the finish the girls came on with prop banjos as if to serenade the couple. As the amber foots went to blue, the blue borders dimmed off and the orange and one pink spot were dimmed out, the lights at the window were switched off and a second later a light appeared at the upstairs window, and the shade on it was lowered as the curtains closed.

Strip lights were used at these windows, the bottom one being augmented by an orange box lamp. A long string tied to the blind of the upper window lowered it.

The Symphonized Jazz introduced "Marchita," "Bonnie," "I Love You," "Saw Mill River Road" and "Foolish Child." The silver draw curtains were closed on the small stage, and on these were blue foot lights, magenta x-rays across top and two Mestrum booth floods of light green. Two flood lights from the dome of 150 amperes were color blend on the orchestra. The transparent columns at each side of the stage were green from the top, with magenta in the base.

The Prison Scene from "Faust" was preceded by a special trailer on the screen, announcing the cast and a brief synopsis of the scene. At opening the amber foots were on one-quarter, revealing the prison interior for which a back drop was used. On a bedding of straw to the side Marguerite was seen, asleep, under a straw spot from the side. Later the blue borders came up. Four Mestrum floods, two from the booth and two from the dome, were deep blue on the orchestra and side drapes. This number ran 15 minutes, with soprano, tenor and basso.

The dancers alone were put on in the Meditation from "Thais," with the silver cyclorama as background. Over this was draped the plush cyc so that the silver showed through. The ballet was costumed in white tarletan, wore red wigs and carried bouquets of red roses. At opening the llama cloth curtains at proscenium arch were closed, opening as the dance progressed. The concert-master playing the obligato was picked up by light blue overhead spot. On the dancers were light pink, rose pink and light blue spots. Magenta floods from the booth on the orchestra and sides, and rose pink floods from the dome on the orchestra only.

Hail to the Chief!

Most of the exploitation on The Midnight Alarm at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., was supplied by the Chief of the Fire Department. He not only loaned Frank J. Miller a spare fire engine for a perambulator, but he made an interesting exhibit of duplicate apparatus in the lobby on the grounds that it would help advertise the fire department. It was costless and very effective exploitation.

Improved Amateurs

Bettering the crude "amateur night," Cliff Denham, of the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., is using in its stead "discovery night." In this the idea is to try out three or four artists on a specified night with the idea of obtaining an attraction for the following week, and the plan is useful in that it gains the support of the music and dancing teachers, who are naturally anxious to place one of their pupils for the advertising advantage accruing.

ANDREE'S FEET MUST RUN PRETTY FAR UP HER LEGS

The press agent refers to the centrepiece in this display from Pantages, Kansas City, as a picture of Trilby's feet, but why argue just where the foot ends and the leg begins. It was the centre of an effective display that got the cash. Enough!

Brought in a Claque for Special Showing

One of the drawbacks of the average special showing is the lack of applause. Special guests somehow seem to feel that to betray a real interest in a picture is unworthy of their high estate and the punch which comes from applause is lacking.

Called in the Kids

Frank Woolen, publicity agent for the Garrick Theatres, Minneapolis and St. Paul, stages a special showing of Enemies of Women in both theatres, inviting the usual officials and officers of women's clubs. In the balcony were a bunch of newsboys who for ten days had been wearing a special button badge reading with the title and theatre. These badges were their admission tickets.

Plenty of Accessories

Their enthusiasm warmed up the bunch down stairs and as a result the important guests went away with a better idea of the audience reaction to the picture than if the house had been left to them alone.

In the line of regular work 10,000 blotters were distributed along with as many powder puffs and 15,000 mailed postals. There were 40 24-sheets used and 1500 stock one sheets and 1,000 block specials. In addition three dozen dolls were displayed in as many windows with free slips on which anyone could estimate the weight of the doll and a dozen showily dressed girls distributed "we dare you to give this to your wife unopened" envelopes.

Suited One Kid

A voting contest that suited one small boy was held by the Farragut Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. The voting was limited to those who purchased tickets for Penrod and Sam and the properly registered candidates were permitted to invade the lobby and ask for votes so long as they did not get to be too much of a nuisance. Some 40,000 votes were cast, which gives the low down on the business the Farragut did on this picture.

The prize was—how did you guess it?—a Penrod suit contributed by the manufacturer.

Another "Largest"

Fred Miller, of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, is the latest to come forward with the "largest" billboard. He threw three 28-sheet boards into one for Marion Davies in Little Old New York, achieving an 84-sheet board. It made a tremendous flash, but it is by no means the largest on record. England still seems to hold the record.

A Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Release

HERE IS THE LARGEST SIGNBOARD IN THE WORLD, NO. 728

It is an 84 sheet board, made by throwing three 28 sheet spaces together, and was used to announce the coming of Little Old New York to the California Theatre, Los Angeles. It is not really the largest, but it proved plenty large enough.

Goes Up to Corner After the Patrons

Because of a change over to another theatre, Inspiration Pictures are going strong after the casual theatre-goer. One of the stunts is the banner across Forty-ninth street, at Broadway, which tells that the Lillian Gish picture is "right here on 49th street." Net banners are reasonably new, though Harry Reichenbach is going to spit fire if he ever reads the press agent's declaration that "never before in the history of motion pictures" has a similar banner been used.

An Inspiration Release

THE DIRECTION BANNER

As a novelty the banner simply isn't, but there is reasonable novelty in going up to the corner after patronage, though Eddie Collins did it down in Texas a long time ago.

Selling Jackie

A circus tent of compboard, guaranteed against blow and washdowns, was built on the marquee of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., just because they had Jackie Coogan in Circus Days.

In front of this cutouts from the Coogan and other lithographs were formed into a circus parade so realistic you could almost hear the calliope. It got all the kids who were able to walk whether in first or second childhood and of course the adults horned in with the usual excuse that the kiddies needed looking after.

Uses Reichmarks as Matinee Souvenirs

The Hippodrome Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., has found a new use for the reichmark. Most houses have used them on money titles, but the Hip builds matinee business, as explained in a three seventeens.

In a nice display it announces that it has purchased one hundred million marks and will give a 10,000 mark note ("formerly worth $2,400") to all who attend the matinee on the argument that while the evening crowds have to stand until seats are vacated, there are always a few empties at the matinees. The conclusion runs:

"We are not even suggesting that they will ever be worth more than they are now, but they make an attractive souvenir, book-mark or what not, and perhaps some day your children can buy a gallon of gas for the old flivver or even a Rolls Royce, who knows?"

Marks are cheap and a novelty and they work better as souvenirs than as advertisements.

Boomed the Second

Figuring that if exploitation helped a first run it might be just as valuable to a second time, Earl Payne, of the Kentucky Theatre, Louisville, offered a bright shawl to the amateur scenarist who wrote the best new ending to the Barthelme-Gish production. Of course he tied it to a newspaper and got a front page break for more than a week, and The Bright Shawl proved that its colors were not dimmed by age.

When more second-run managers get over this first run nonsense, more houses will make more money.

A Blanket Policy

Now the laugh insurance policy has invaded England. Horace Judge, who went to London to look after First National publicity in the United Kingdom, has taken out a blanket policy with Lloyds for £500 for each death directly caused by laughter at the antics of Douglas MacLean in The Hot-tentot. The insurance runs for six months.

A Fox release

SAYING IT WITH FLAGS OVER IN NEWARK

This is how the Fox Terminal Theatre put over The Silent Command. The use of the flag is questionable even for a picture dealing with the Navy, but the house surely made a flash. Because of the flatness of the photograph the lobby looks more crowded than it is.

Style Show Ballyhoo

Realizing that his style show would bring an unusually large patronage to the house, George A. McDermit, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., arranged to ballyhoo for the next attraction.

With the house lights all down and a white spot on the runway, a mysterious looking man in a voluminous cape and a slouch hat walked on the stage and down the runway while the orchestra played creepy music.

Well down the run, he drew from beneath his coat a large sign written "There is romance in Strangers of the Night. Next week." For a one-timer it beat out trailers or any of the usual stunts.

Played His Cards

Buying two dozen packs of playing cards, H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., overprinted them "A gamble for big stakes—Life—in The Spoilers" with house and date. This gave him 1,248 throw-aways that were handed out to persons on the street away from the theatre. The cost was about $10, but the results justified the expense.

In painting a 20 foot banner, Mr. Farley selected a location exposed to the sun, lettering in a bright orange against a dark ground. It made a flash that could be seen much further than usual because of the color scheme and because the entire space was given to the eight letters required to spell out "Spoilers." More text would have brought him far less in the matter of advertisement.

One Third

Denying the old adage that it takes nine tailors to make a man, George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, S. C., points out that he made A Tailor Made Man with only three tailors.

He had this somewhat aged First National and persuaded the three leading tailors to donate a window apiece to a display of unusual models and stills from the play, a sort of window fashion show in three acts.

Then he cut out the one sheet posting and used instead 200 window cards, which seemed to give him better results than the posters. With no special investment in exploitation, he did a nice business.

Took the Trolley

Hooking in to the annual Wheat Show in Wichita, through the United Commercial Travelers' Association, who are really behind the Kansas annual, the Kansas Theatre, Wichita, got the use of the Toonerville Trolley reproduction which, true to its type, met all trains and spent the rest of the time circulating the city streets with the Skipper and Katinka.

At the mere cost of writing the numerous signs Charles H. Barron was able to do a big week's business when similar opposition usually kills it off.

A SIMPLE AND YET VERY EFFECTIVE FRONT FOR JACKIE

Planned by Larry Richardson, of the Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, for Circus Days. The little girl who impersonated Jackie was a professional, but the other children were amateurs who managed to get over an effective and pulling ballyhoo.

Good Display Is Not Satisfactory

Writing from the Rialto Theatre, Clinton, Iowa, Harold D. Barnes sends in a couple of displays and writes that it is seldom that the compositors give him what he aims at, even though he may mark the copy and then revise the proofs. Sometimes the printer ignores the revision marks completely. Either Mr. Barnes is sending in some super-exceptional results, or he is difficult to please. Any man, small town or big, who can coax as good as this display from a printing office should go out on the housetops and sing paens of joy. We can see that improvement can be made in this layout. The title can be displayed in a better face, perhaps the body type is not the precise best, but the present result is so much better than most managers get that we think Mr. Barnes is too difficult to suit. It has been a long time since better work has come from a town the size of Clinton, and Mr. Barnes does not know how truly fortunate he is. His second example is a pair of displays for Children of Jazz, evidently the two setups from the same copy by the two local papers. This is a more ambitious job. The example shown is merely three tens, with simple cut placement. The other pair drop the full length of three columns and advertise Jazz Week in conjunction with the Paramount title. Each employs the same layout with six stock cuts from the press book which admirably serve to advertise both the title and the week. In each the display is good, though not the best possible, but Mr. Barnes could get very little better in a big center. The two ads break about 50-50 in display, but both are above the average—well above—and if Mr. Barnes wants to sob on our shoulder, he will have to bring in more harrowing examples. We regard these as distinctly good, even though one printer does refer to a "spasam." We think that Mr. Barnes would get even better results if he would jolly the compositors instead of fighting them. Evidently he has two papers with better than average job men. He should put in a couple of weeks in—say Boston, and he would realize then how fortunate he is.

High ideals are good things to have, but it is a saner thing to pitch the ideals closer to possible accomplishment and not try magazine standards on country newspaper offices. Mr. Barnes writes good copy and can do good work both with a running style as is shown in the reproduction and in the detached lines. He seems to be equally at home with either style. We would like more of his samples.

Shot a Dog

Borrowing a musket, said to have been the one from which the first shot was fired in a local riot some years ago, got Frank J. Miller a good dog story when To the Last Man was played at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga.

The history of the gun was written on a card for a lobby display and the additional facts supplied the reporter.

For additional lobby work a shadow box in the form of a log cabin was employed. This had a gauze window back of which a cutout was placed in the act of firing a gun through the window, lighted for a silhouette effect.

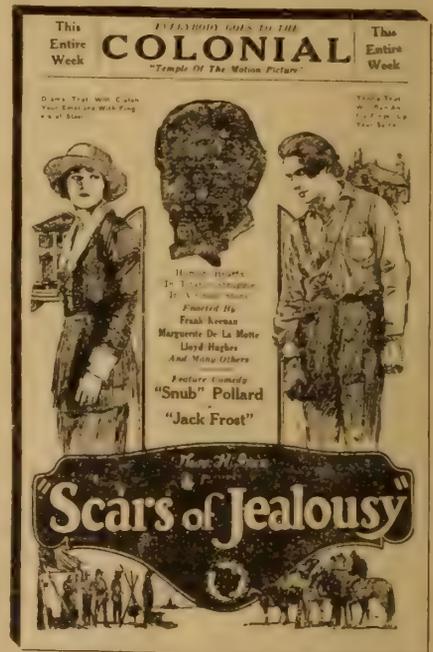

If Winter Comes Helps Fall Trade

Fifteen merchants co-operated with the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on the world premiere of If Winter Comes, in the campaign of Oral D. Cloakey recently described in this department. Naturally the fur companies came in on the catchline, for this was made to order for them, but some of the other hook ins are more unusual. A restaurant advises that when winter comes you will enjoy their hot meals, and phonographs are offered as an entertainment for Winter evenings. A business college will be open all Winter, and automobile batteries need closer attention in cold weather. It made a fine flash at small cost to the house and was useful in that it helped to surround the picture with the suggestion of the unusually important. If Winter Comes, released in the early Fall, is a decided aid to advertising managers and if you do not care to go to the trouble of organizing a page or a double truck, pass the idea along to the advertising manager of the newspaper. He may be interested, if you are not, and will probably be willing to go out and round up the merchants himself in consideration of the additional space he will sell. We think, however, there are few managers who have not trained their merchants to an appreciation of the hook-up. This is a splendid starter for others.

Most of the halftones for The Isle of Lost Ships seem to have been made on the wrong screen. This looks like an eighty screen, where it is probable that even a sixty would have been a little too fine. It tries to crawl through the paper and succeeds in getting only half way through. This example is from the American Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, a town which should give fairly good press work, but this is muddy and uninviting, saved only by the unusually good copy which the locale and story make possible. If you read the type, and it is planned so that the larger lines lead you into the six point, the chances are that you will desire to see the production, but the line cut is not going to help much. It would be better to burnish the cut down into a silhouette—at least it would then be a decent black instead of this grey blotch. It would have been much better to have shot the cut in favor of a larger type face for the selling talk, sinking the line cut to the extreme bottom of the space and moving the type

Type and Line Cut Good Combination

Building up a supplied cut with type gives James Hart, of the Rex Theatre, Oshkosh, Wis., as nice a display as he could ask for, and the house does not have to slap on a mortgage to pay an artist's salary. This is because Mr. Hart has arrived at an understanding with the compositors and has explained to them that if they do not get the bulk of the space too black, they can get good display for house and title in what a great many printers would insist upon using for body type. He knows that it is not the actual size of the letter, but its relation to the rest of the type that makes for display, with the result that medium size letters yield a better display than would let-

Proper selection of type faces gives Mr. Hart a quarter page average display value from an investment in thirteen inches—a two six and a half—and helps to keep down the paper shortage. More than this, Mr. Hart does not stop with type, but he gets careful copy. In this instance he starts off with a challenge—"You'll want to see Driven because." You read on to see what makes him so positive, and you stand a pretty fair chance of being sold on the argument. The Fashion Show Delights Atlanta

Because it followed Hollywood, on which considerable extra effort had been expended, Howard Price Kingsmore put on a fashion show with Lawful Larceny and distributed reichmarks in conjunction with a prominent drug store.

The window of the store was turned over to a display of the marks with an offer to give one to each purchaser of goods worth a dollar or more. A blower kept the marks in circulation and gave basis for a sign reading to the effect that marks were "up in the air." Each bill was overprinted with "If anyone steals this from you it is Lawful Larceny. Do not report Lawful Larceny to the police. Find out why at the Hoard Theatre, September 10." The marks worked so well that the store cut the dollar limit, and made a more generous distribution, figuring that here was something that would not be thrown away.

The fashion show was in three parts, displaying sports clothes, afternoon frocks and evening gowns. The first two used exteriors and the last a handsome interior with a gilded stairway down which the models made their entrances, later promenading down a runway through the center aisle. The show added considerably to the volume of press work, the co-operating stores bringing their advertising pressure to bear on the dispenser of free space to help out the theatre.

True to Tint

Using a blacksmith in the lobby of the Rialto Theatre gave Frank J. Miller, of Augusta, Ga., both sight and sound attractors on The Village Blacksmith. The entire lobby was masked in with a board structure about ten feet high with a door giving on the box office. A real anvil, a portable forge and a smith who struck the anvil with a sledge hammer were the accessories.

To preserve the color unities Mr. Miller used a black smith, though possibly his consideration was the fact that a darkey could be hired more cheaply than a white man.

Shocking

Even a man with an absolutely quiet conscience is apt to be a little startled when he opens a letter and a diamond engagement ring drops out—and that in spite of the fact that the diamond is decidedly yellow and rather glassy. And when he fishes out a letter telling "Dearest" that the writer is returning the ring and must never see you again those with guilty memories are apt to wonder what time the next train leaves. It takes a turn over the page to discover that it is a decidedly clever advertisement for Maytime.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

WHAT of the trailer as an advertising medium?

Should it merely announce, or tease, or sell with "reason-why" titles as well as with pictures, or should it do all of these things? Is there danger of a trailer showing too much and thus taking the edge off the picture itself? What is the ideal length of a trailer?

These and countless other problems confront the man who is preparing a trailer on a forthcoming production. We don't presume to be able to answer all of the foregoing queries, for there is no definite and final answer that will suit all cases and occasions. We merely bring them up because this is a department for discussion—discussion whose ultimate aim is the betterment of every advertising aid.

EVER since the trailer developed from its predecessor, the slide which still holds its important place as an advertising medium, the advertising brains of the industry have been competing with each other in efforts to devise trailers of such seat-selling power as to make a cash customer of every person who sees one. We have seen some mighty good trailers in our day—and some mighty poor ones. The good ones "sold" us absolutely—more so, perhaps, than we would have been sold by any other form of motion picture advertising; the poor ones made us glad that we had been forewarned of what to expect "next week." And after seeing the poor trailer no amount of newspaper advertising or any other kind of exploitation would have made us go to the theatre. And we think we are just about the same as most everybody else.

IN the film trade the trailer may be likened to the sample package of a manufacturer of a standard commodity. It is a free sample and, like most other free samples, is virtually forced upon the recipient. Thus it must first of all overcome a natural sales resistance. If the sample is good, the fact that it was "forced" on a person while that person was expecting only to be entertained otherwise is readily overlooked. Resistance is broken down and the sale is closed. If the sample is poor, not only is a prospective sale lost, but the picture patron is made sore—peevish because something was "forced" on him that he did not want to see and which was not worth looking at anyway.

BECAUSE it IS a sample, the trailer is the only form of advertising of which we know which has the power of KILLING sales unless it is good. For proof, consider, for example, a sample of soap. If the sample of soap is good, one will probably buy a cake of the soap, knowing what to expect. If the sample of soap is poor, certainly one will steer clear of soap the same as the sample. That's simple merchandising, isn't it?

Thus the sample is a more powerful, if not a more far-reaching medium than any other form of promotional publicity. A newspaper ad, a poster, a lobby display, an exploitation stunt may have the power to sell a picture, but seldom the power to unsell. It is only the sample that has that power—and in the case of motion pictures it is only the trailer which has such power.

AND, important as the trailer is in selling the picture to people ready to buy, vital as it is—especially to the neighborhood house with a "house" and not a "picture" clientele—it still remains the "houn' dog" of the advertising department. With its brother, the slide, it is allowed to shift for itself in most cases. The advertising man is "too busy" to bother with it. Rather would he spend more time in making newspaper ads or posters or something else that he can show the boss.

The fact is that, in nine cases out of ten, the advertising man seldom even sees a trailer on the production he is advertising. So the preparation of the trailer is left to some outsider—some one who may know a whole lot about cutting film and nothing at all about what constitutes the selling points of a motion picture. Often the trailer is prepared not by any individual connected with the company releasing the picture, but by an organization whose only function is the distribution of trailers.

Notice the extreme effectiveness of simplicity in both these twenty-fours. Merely further proof of the argument that over-many credit lines, tasteless display and a lot of other useless junk on a stand make it look like an order of scrambled eggs mixed with a crazy rainbow. Neither of these black and white reproductions do justice to the power of the color scheme in each.

That this procedure is radically wrong from the standpoint of the exhibitor who uses the trailer is only too obvious. For instance, a picture may have a Western angle, a thrill, a sentimental angle, a spectacular angle and a pictorial angle. Is any one who doesn't KNOW going to be able to combine all of those selling points in a trailer? And does any one who hasn't had real advertising experience in the film business know what is and what isn't a seat-selling angle? We leave the answer to those very advertising men who are in the practise of shoving off the work of getting out a trailer on some one outside of their department and organization.

We don't argue for one minute with the established practise of a separate organization distributing the trailer. That's sound and sensible. But we do register a most emphatic "kick" against the practise of allowing any outsider to prepare a trailer.

IF you, Mr. Advertising Man, do not think the trailer is one of the most important advertising aids for the exhibitor, just consider a case something like this:

A crowded house—say seating about 600. Your trailer advertises a Western picture. You have included the big thrill and just a taste of the dramatic action. Conceded, now, that you have "sold" every man and boy in the audience. What about the women? Were there not just one of two flashes that you could have included that would be particularly attractive to women? Wasn't there a shot showing some new gowns, some sentimental bit, some touching, softer moment?

Think it over when next you think of a trailer.

IT is our belief that the length of a trailer, too, has a great deal to do with its success or failure. With the over-long features and long programs today many exhibitors believe that their schedule of performances does not give them time to use trailers. Yet many of these same exhibitors permit a "stage wait" of a few moments between shows. It is our opinion that it is a much better plan to run a trailer between shows, while persons are leaving and entering the theatre and seats, than to have nothing at all going on except, perhaps, an organ solo.

Then, too, there are the exhibitors who overdo trailer and slide advertising. For instance, in some three-a-week-change houses the managers will run three trailers one after the other. Instead of closing a sale on any one of the three forthcoming productions this procedure most often succeeds only in making one or more patrons impatient for the regular show to go on. And one impatient person wriggling in a theatre seat can start a whole crowd wriggling and coughing, and put them in such a state of impatience that it takes a mighty absorbing picture to get them concentrated and quiet again.

Clips from the supplementary "news" trailer put out by First National, showing Anna Q. Nilsson being shorn of her beauty locks to play the part of a "youth" in "Ponjola." This is a darned good idea and should prove a good curiosity arouser.

BUT we digress. This is not a department on how to conduct a theatre. We were speaking of trailers. And, speaking of trailers, we hand the bouquet this week to Bob Baxter, of First National. In his own words, here's why:

"Trying to sell a feature to the public on a news-basis trailer is the new angle worked out by First National in connection with the release of 'Ponjola.'

"The plan accords with the stress laid by pictorial services and roto-gravure sections upon 'news' stills and, like this branch of publicity and advertising, advocates that the public can be sold on a feature by news pictures through a trailer as well as through the newspapers.

"The theory has taken substance in a three-hundred-foot trailer prepared on 'Ponjola,' showing Anna Q. Nilsson having her hair cut to take the role of a youth in the picture. Outside of the fact that it represents an incident that probably never will be repeated, the sight of the screen star being shorn of her beauty locks has already attracted nation-wide attention, as has been evidenced by the demands made for stills of the clipping process.

"The trailer (which is illustrated in these columns) shows Miss Nilsson arriving at the barber shop, the preparations incidental to the operation and the final shearing of the locks. The humorous angle, combined with the unusual news angle, has made this trailer of unusual interest, especially when it is shown immediately following the showing of the regular news reel.

"The present plan of distribution is to have theatres show this special trailer about two weeks before the 'Ponjola' play date, and to follow it up, the next week, with the regular trailer on the picture."

NEWs" trailers, as differentiated from production trailers, have been used before with excellent results. But seldom has the news angle been as interesting to fans as the story of a star having her long locks actually clipped. More trailers with as interesting news subject matter would be welcomed by exhibitors and public alike.

We feel quite safe in saying that among the most elaborate and beautiful advertisements ever issued for motion pictures are the "de luxe" books furnished exchange managers by Warner Brothers. We have just received from Lon Young de luxe books on "Tiger Rose" and "The Country Kid."

"Long Live the King"

Jackie Coogan's First for Metro Is a Big Spectacular and Unusually Entertaining Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Jackie Coogan's initial Metro production, "Long Live the King," based on Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel of the same title, is a big spectacular picture extremely rich in pathos and human interest with delightful comedy touches, which should pack any theatre, please the grown-ups and prove a delight for the kiddies.

Dealing with the story of a little prince, it has been produced on a lavish scale with big street scenes involving large mobs. There is a magnificent set of the exterior of an enormous castle, and gorgeous interiors befitting the type of story. Both from the standpoint of production and audience appeal it is one of the big pictures of the year.

Mary Roberts Rinehart's story provides an excellent vehicle for little Jackie, as the poor little orphan prince bereft of a mother's love and so surrounded by court formality and precedent that he is deprived of childish joys, the companionship of other children or even a puppy being denied him. He is a pathetic little figure and your heart goes out to him and when he eludes the palace guards and meets a typical American boy you enjoy with him his brief pleasure.

The adventures of the little prince are interesting and the melodramatic intrigue to prevent him from ascending the throne and thus bring about a revolution will hold your attention. This is enhanced by the truly fine acting of little Jackie and an excellent supporting cast. Jackie's handling of the situations, his body movements as well as his facial expression are convincingly natural and register with a bang. As an actor he again proves himself the superior of many grown-ups. His comedy moments are delightful and he seems to be enjoying them himself. Throughout he is just a real, lovable little lad, and this picture should increase many fold his already enormous following.

Victor Shertzinger, under the supervision of Jackie's father, has finely directed the picture and there are a number of clever touches. Particularly pleasing is the manner in which the comedy is used to offset the strong pathos, as for instance in the scene where Jackie is rescued from the conspirators. In an effectively melodramatic manner Jackie's guard overcomes one after another of the band in snappy hand-to-hand combat until you are inclined to feel it is being overdone, when Jackie himself takes a hand and the manner in which he puts several men out of business by breaking wine bottles over their heads will get many laughs; also tremendously effective comedy has been introduced in the scenes showing the little prince after he ascends the throne, giving orders that will make everybody happy. This comes as relief after the pathetic scene showing the lonely little boy being proclaimed king while a vast populace kneels in the street, and it leaves the spectator in a pleasing frame of mind.

Notwithstanding the magnitude of the production and the fine work of the cast, including Rosemary Theby, Vera Lewis,

"Woman-Proof"

Paramount Presents Thomas Meighan in Highly Amusing Production Based on Story by George Ade
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Excellent entertainment is provided by Thomas Meighan's newest Paramount picture, "Woman-Proof." With the same author, George Ade, and the same director, Alfred E. Green, who were responsible for one of Meighan's best vehicles, "Back Home and Broke," it would seem that "Woman-Proof" should duplicate the box-office success of that picture.

There is nothing especially original in the theme, which revolves around a provision in a will that the hero must be married by a certain date, but in characteristic style George Ade has complicated this situation and provided numerous opportunities for effective situations by making the inheritance of the fortune contingent on not one but four persons being married by the specified time. The title and the motive for the action is dependent on the fact that the hero is apparently utterly unmindful of the predicaments of his brother and sisters and pays no attention to their frantic efforts to produce a suitable wife for him. Add to this the plotting of a lawyer who would benefit if the hero remained unmarried and you have the plot.

The picture has many amusing moments and the subtitles, many of which are in George Ade's best style, are rich in humor and provide many laughs. The result is a production that while not to be taken too seriously gets you in a pleasant frame of mind, holds your interest and will make the average spectator leave the theatre entirely satisfied. Two characters who contribute largely to produce this effect are a sour old bachelor and his friend, who unceasingly seek to warn the hero of the perils of entering into the state of matrimony.

Thomas Meighan is excellently cast in the leading role and Lila Lee does good work as the girl who finally wins him, for of course he does not turn out to be really "woman-proof." Charles A. Sellon gives a fine performance as the sour old bachelor, and the remainder of the cast, including John Sainpolis as the lawyer, Mary Astor, Robert Agnew, Louise Dresser and Mike Donlin give good accounts of themselves.

Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in Entertaining Selznick Drama

Selznick's picturization of Robert W. Chambers' novel has much the same entertainment value as has been widely accredited to the book. The love affair between the artist, son of one of the first families of New York, and his model is alluringly presented, with an undercurrent of caste conflict to add to its intensity. Its box office appeal seems assured with Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in the chief roles, and Bryant Washburn, Elliott Dexter and Harry Myers in the supporting cast.

The action proceeds smoothly against backgrounds that are exceptionally beautiful. Director George Archainbaud has made any number of rich selections for the studio, apartment and residential settings. With this advantage the story, which of itself has at least average appeal, should give the fans what most of them are searching for.

Corinne Griffith is a good choice for Valerie West, the model. She gets away from a familiar fault in the scene where she is introduced to the artist. It soon develops that she is bluffing and has had no experience in posing, but instead of the usual extreme naive innocence she has a note of wistfulness and sincerity that is more effective. Her performance, which calls for nude posing, is discreetly and artistically handled. A possible inconsistency is her elaborate wardrobe and apartment, which is pleasing enough but not commensurate with her position. Conway Tearle plays with feeling and other prominent roles are well interpreted by Elliott Dexter, Bryant Washburn, Doris May, Wally Van and Harry Myers.

"The Temple of Venus"

Allegorical Fantasy Released by Fox Has Wonderfully Beautiful Scenes But Story Misses Fire

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Temple of Venus," a Henry Otto production, Fox Film Corporation is offering a picture of unusual pictorial beauty. The story is an allegorical fantasy dealing with the quest of Cupid at the bidding of Venus to find if romance still exists on the earth. Cupid starts out in a swan boat and visits a humble cottage. Then unfolds a love idyl involving an unsophisticated young girl who falls in love with an artist, a rugged fisherman who is also in love with her, and an extremely worldly-wise woman, a devotee of ultra-modern jazz, who seeks to win the artist.

Into the modern romance is introduced a series of scenes where the artist, painting a picture of Echo, tells the girl the legend of how Echo, once a beautiful maiden, came always to have the last word. In filming this portion of the picture there are magnificent woodland scenes of the goddess Juno and her court, of Diana and her huntresses, of Thetis, the daughter of Neptune, and her rivalry with Juno for the love of Jupiter. It is doubtful if more gorgeous outdoor scenes have ever been pictured than these, especially the ones in a subterranean grotto, the court of Thetis with a large number of her maidens clad in filmy draperies, of the scenes showing these girls on the seashore sands or on the rockbound coast. These shots are a delight to the eye, and artistically beautiful without being really risqué or daring. Some of the scenes are in color, many are beautifully tinted, the most magnificent spots on the Pacific islands have been magnificently photographed.

It would seem that the producers of this picture have staked its appeal on the strikingly idyllic angle and the presence of large numbers of beautiful girls scantily clad who indulge in wonderful diving from the cliffs or execute classical dances in beautiful surroundings, and that the modern romance has been used largely as a basis of contrast for these scenes. There is a consequent lack of interest or strongly dramatic moments. No great enthusiasm is aroused in the romance despite the excellent work of Mary Philbin, in fact this part of the picture somehow misses fire. Possibly this is due to the allegorical nature of the story which does not carry conviction and it is aided by the introduction of so many elements which, while attractive, serve to sidetrack the continuity. There are scenes at an ultra-jazz ball where the men unhook their partners' evening gowns, revealing bathing costumes beneath, there is a snappy beach party with many attractive women in up-to-the-minute bathing suits, there are striking shots of rocky coasts with myriads of birds, and of rocks on which there are hundreds of seals. These scenes with the seals introduce sequences in which the killing of a mother seal leaving her young helpless provide pathos, and the chase of the poachers over the rocks is accompanied by thrills. There are also moments of pathos in the development of the story and some thrilling action.

On the whole it would seem to be a production that will not satisfy the sophisticated, but for those who can enter into the allegorical mood of the picture, those for whom the beauties of the production outweigh its weak story, or patrons who may be attracted by the presence of a myriad of attractive girls in diaphanous draperies or snappy bathing suits, the picture should provide satisfactory entertainment. Certainly it is a picture which lends itself to advance exploitation and showmanship, and if properly handled, an exhibitor should have no trouble in getting them into his theatre.

Venus sends Cupid to earth to find if romance still lives. He goes to the humble home of Dennis Dean, whose daughter Moria is loved by Nat, a fisherman. Moria meets an artist, who tells her the mythological story of Echo and scenes in the court of Juno. Thetis, the daughter of Neptune, and Diana are pictured amidst beautiful surroundings. Then the story changes to a modern ultra-jazz ball with the women in bathing costumes. The hostess, Constance, by her lack of modesty disgusts the artist, who returns to the forest and paints Moria's picture. In the following sequences Nat learns that Moria loves the artist and, after tying him to the wave-swept rocks, goes to free him and bring him back to Moria. Cupid returns to Venus and reports that romance still lives.

"The Country Kid"

Warner Brothers' Feature With Wesley Barry Has Heart Interest That Means Success

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Wesley Barry and his two small confederates give the public something in this Warner Brothers picture that always meets with a warm response. They are the three orphans in a human interest story of many laughs and a few tears. Nine out of ten will be unable to resist the appeal made by the famous juvenile star, supported by "Spec" O'Donnell and an adorable youngster, Bruce Guerin.

Director William Beaudine has emphasized the sympathetic and humorous values of the story in many incidents that make a vivid impression. The story is of children unwillingly sent to an orphan asylum from which they eventually escape. There are intensely dramatic situations, such as the two youngsters taking refuge in the attic when the county wagon comes to take them off, and being quite safe until the dog gives them away. Again when they steal the warden's lunch and escape from the asylum on the old family nag.

These are the biggest moments in a picture of many minor thrills. One of the most amusing scenes shows them consuming quantities of dried apples. Result—castor oil and tears. There are plenty of laughs, and little Bruce Guerin's facility in making faces, wry and otherwise, counts high in this respect.

Probably some will object slightly to Wesley Barry's role as being too serious and "motherly" to be typically boyish. It is true that he is given very little opportunity to be anything but pathetic. But the majority will be moved by his performance of the big brother role and anyone will grant that he has unusual appeal. The adult characters are all in capable hands, as George Nichols, Helen Jerome Eddy and Edward Burns play these parts.

Their Uncle Grimes is left sole guardian, and, anxious to get the children's farm, he sends them to an orphan asylum. Ben rescues them and takes them to the court house where the uncle and the head of the orphanage protest against their escape. But Ben has made two strong friends in Arthur Grant and his sweetheart who decide to get married so as to adopt the whole family.

"Big Dan"

Good Entertainment Provided in Fox Production With Charles Jones Attractively Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Charles Jones' standing as a screen star has increased with each recent picture and "Big Dan" is no exception. It shows what he can do with an average role because of his naturally pleasing manner and good taste in acting. He has the ability not common with his type, of appealing decidedly to both sexes. As this particular picture plainly illustrates, he can be "the strong man" whenever the occasion demands, without ever seeming to flaunt this physical fitness, and without losing a subtle emotional appeal that is greatly in his favor.

His scenes with the children in the boys' training camp should please any audience. The pugilistic atmosphere felt in much of the picture is a popular note and the fight which is postponed until the end will be a thrill for the majority.

The love interest is perhaps the weakest feature. It will no doubt not interfere seriously with the picture's appeal because of the other important features. But the character of the heroine is not convincingly drawn. The sentimental angle has been exaggerated and the idea of the girl being so pathetically dependent upon a perfect stranger, getting into the most direful predicaments and fainting always at the critical moment seems too much like the old-fashioned melodrama, and not up to the standard of the rest of the picture. Marion Nixon however plays this part in a sweet and charming manner.

"Big Dan" is a fine vehicle for Charles Jones and is good entertainment for any program theatre. It has been very well photographed.

He rescues a homeless girl from a man who is insulting her and gives her shelter at the camp. His wife's health is so impaired that she is sent to Arizona, where Dan, pitying her, pays her expenses. A young fighter falls in love with the girl, Dora, and Dan is jealous. Another woman tells Dora that Dan is married but in the meantime he has received word of his wife's death and after a dramatic pursuit of Dora who is taken away, he wins her and tells her he is free to marry.

"Blow Your Own Horn"

F. B. O. Version of Owen Davis Stage Play Provides Good Entertainment for Average Patron
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on a stage play by the well-known dramatist, Owen Davis, the F. B. O. production, "Blow Your Own Horn," tells the story of a discouraged young man who achieves success and wins in the game of love by following the advice of a millionaire and "blowing his own horn" and not hiding his light under a bushel.

The picture has been produced in a peppy manner with plenty of action and should provide satisfactory entertainment for the average patron even though the working out of the plot introduces situations which test the credulity of the spectator and seem at times rather far-fetched. It belongs to the type of productions that are built to entertain and whose themes will not bear too critical analysis along the lines of probability.

Effective comedy touches which have no direct bearing on the story have been introduced in the enmity between the tough little country lad and the pampered little wealthy boy; there are also several amusing situations arising from the efforts of the hero to "play his part" as a millionaire though he really hasn't even a cent. There is a melodramatic climax where the man of wealth who is responsible for the hero's line of action, finds himself being beaten at his own game and cuts the electric power wires, causing the intricate electrical machinery to short-circuit and nearly electrocute his own daughter.

Warner Baxter is capably cast as the hero and Ralph Lewis is effective as the millionaire who has achieved success by taking advantage of all opportunities and letting everyone know how clever he is. Derelys Perdue is attractive and entirely satisfactory in the leading feminine role. The remainder of the cast is adequate.

Story

Returning from the world war, Jack Dunbar, unable to land a job, is discouraged. On a country road he meets Nicholas Small, a war mill onaire, and fixes his auto for him. Out of gratitude, Small tells Dunbar the way to succeed is to "blow your own horn" and tell everybody how great you are. Later, Dunbar wanders into an estate where Small is a visitor. To demonstrate his theory, Small introduces Dunbar as a millionaire. So successful is Dunbar in keeping up his end and adapting Small's slogan that he succeeds in convincing capitalists that young Jolyon has a great thing in his apparatus for the wireless transmission of power, helps him to perfect it and despite crooked work on the part of Small to prevent it, finally demonstrates its success. He also wins the love of Small's daughter, saves her from an explosion which Small's villainy has brought about and even wins Small's consent to the match despite the fact that Small has other plans for her.

"Forgive and Forget"

Good Suspense Is Outstanding Feature of C. B. C. Attraction with Well-Known Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Most of your patrons should find this to be fairly absorbing entertainment. Because of its compact dramatic construction, there is good suspense throughout and because of the general idea and style of the production it has audience appeal.

The fate of a packet of love letters carries the interest through some rather involved situations. There is nothing new in the idea of a wife trying to get hold of letters which she fears may shock her husband or the general public. But it has been handled here with some new twists. The letters are stolen, there is a quarrel, a murder and the woman's husband is arrested. Following this is a game between the woman and the blackmailer which is unusually interesting. It has a melodramatic ending in which the effect of the blackmailer's falling to his doom from a high window ledge is well managed.

It is good program entertainment and the performances are interesting from a box-office standpoint. Estelle Taylor has any number of smart costumes which she wears in a way that feminine patrons will admire.

She photographs pleasingly and has some appealing moments. Philo McCullough as the blackmailer, Wyndham Standing as the husband and Vernon Steele as the sweetheart all give well sustained performances. The picture has been capably directed and photographed.

"Men in the Raw"

Universal Production With Jack Hoxie has Lively Action but Meagre Plot

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

As this Universal production plays almost entirely upon your patrons' susceptibility to spectacular thrills, its appeal can best be estimated by the individual exhibitor. There is practically no story. It is a series of stunts, all of it rather obvious and not constructed so as to build up an actual drama.

Most of it seems to have been based upon the assumption that Jack Hoxie's greatest forte is as a thrill-provider. He is cast, somewhat fantastically, as a cowboy notorious for prevaricating and his own account of his skirmishes takes up a large part of the picture. What actually happens to him and what he relates of his past is rather confusedly unravelled. But, regardless of the dramatic construction, there are a number of entertaining scenes.

Among these is his fight with the heavy in which amusing photographic effects show his opponent soaring and tumbling through the air; the fight in mid stream, the slide down the snow bank, the grapple with the steer and many scenes of swift riding. Exciting action is plentiful and the smaller theatre patronized especially by men should find this a profitable attraction.

Moral tone excellent; indeed it is suitable for Sunday!

Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

Is the exhibitor who plunks out ten or fifteen bucks for a day's feature entitled to a print anywhere near as good, in physical condition, as the boy who dishes out fifty silver cart-wheels for the same feature earlier in its life?

Well—it depends on whether the producer figures to continue in business with the confidence of his public.

You can pay a heap of money for Turkish towels—and then you can buy them in the ten-cent store. BUT Mr. Woolworth didn't build a fortune on selling towels with holes in them, edges frayed out, full of torn pieces.

The public is still buying towels at Woolworth's. How long will it continue to pay for picture entertainment that isn't all there?

VAN.

VANITY FAIR. (7,668 feet). Star cast. For those who had read "Vanity Fair," this was a treat, to those who had not read it, this was two hours of misery. Luckily those of our vast audience had read the story else all would have been bored to a finish. Hardly a safe bet for the picture show man. Not suitable for Sunday nor any other day. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WALL FLOWER. (5,500 feet). Star cast. Played this on family night, entire family forty cents. Would class it as a good program picture, sold at a fair rental. The new Oklahoma branch furnishes brand new prints on all their pictures and their prices are fair. Draw all classes in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Quinton, Oklahoma.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. One of the oldest pictures we have shown, and one of the most entertaining according to our audience. Used this one to open the fall season and made a clean-up with it. Used lobby, newspaper. Had fine attendance. Draw working people in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

YOUTHFUL CHEATERS. (5,700 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Stay off of this. Not very harmful but insipid. Glenn Hunter can act, but he'll have to get scenarios; this isn't. Usual advertising brought poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FIGHTING MAD. (5,436 feet). Star, William Desmond. An old one but a good one. Supporting cast helps make this western thriller a success. Nothing exceptional, but will please most of 'em. Has poor moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. An exhibitor's picture in every sense of the word. Cast splendid. A rural comedy-drama that pleased ninety-five percent at increased admission. Extra advertising yielded good attendance. Draw rural and small town class, town of 286. Admission, usually 10-25, raised. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN OF BRONZE. (5,643 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. A good heavy drama. Clara is getting old but she's still good, although she overdoes the emotional scenes in several places. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Draw rural and town class, small town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

YOUR FRIEND AND MINE. (5,700 feet). Star, Willard Mack. Can't give this much in the way of praise: it just came and went and created no ripple of excitement either on the screen or the box office. Buy it accordingly. Usual advertising brought poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. This would have been a one hundred percent picture if the reflection to primitive man had been much shorter. Had this picture come in about eight reels instead of ten it would please far better. My patrons enjoyed it very much with the exception of the dragging of the part which reflects to primitive man. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,000. George E. Neel, Crescent Theatre, Woodville, Texas.

BEAUTY'S WORTH. (6,751 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Was well liked by the women. Had some good humor in it and would class it as a good program offering. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,131 feet). Star, Betty Compton. Fair program picture that pleased the majority. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This picture registered a complete box office success, and on the whole pleased everyone. The only kick was to the effect that the story did not correspond with that of the book, but to my estimation the snow scenes are far more beautiful than the swamp scenes that would replace them, were the book followed to the letter. The price was right and had there been fess fairs in this vicinity, I would have cleaned up more money. A good feature for Sunday or any day in the week. Moral tone is splendid. Had good attendance. Used slide heralds, billboards. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A wonderful picture. Broke records with this. It is suitable for Sunday. Had extra good attendance. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

Preferred

ARE YOU A FAILURE? (5,700 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. Played this on a Saturday night. Larry Evans the author lives here and that was all that was necessary. He's a big favorite and his friends could and did fill the house. A neutral review on my part (aside from friendship for Larry), is that it is a clever idea that went wrong in the direction. At that it's a good picture and properly set on the proper day you can do well. It has some inconsistencies but as before stated that's direction. Buy this right and play it. Usual advertising brought big attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Best since "Birth of a Nation." Everyone well pleased. Suitable for any day. Had extra good attendance. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

SALOME. (6 reels). Star, Nazimova. Did not think much of this one. Served as a good filler on a vaudeville program and brought some who wanted to see the star in "crazy" stuff as they call it. Picture is not worth running as a special feature. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,323 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good picture with fine cast. Reginald Denny fast gaining popularity. Life drama of a fighter, suitable for Sunday (in some communities). Fine attendance, drawing middle and lower class in residential district of a big city. Admission 15 matinees, 25 evenings. J. F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,260 seats), San Francisco, California.

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star Reginald Denny. This is a wonder picture of the class, as good as "The Flirt" from same firm. Denny has the making of a great popular star and in this, his first real picture, scores immense. Mabel J. Scott was also fine in this. Story has everything that appeals to the typical movie followers—humor, punch, action and romance. Good moral tone, suitable for any day. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. The best Mayo picture since "The Brute Breaker." Old, but it pulled them in and pleased close onto a hundred per cent. Had a great prize fight scene which is realistic—and punchful. Good moral tone; suitability for Sunday depends on community. Above average attendance, drawing family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

BOLTED DOOR. (4,126 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. This star is popular here and all of his pictures go over well. This is not his best, nor his worst—about average. Drew us a large, pleased Sunday audience. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Above average attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

BURNING WORDS. (4,944 feet). Star, Roy Stewart. A fine Mounted Police story. The cast is good throughout. Roy Stewart looks like a good bet for exhibitors. Pleased ninety percent (rest, too sad). Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw rural and from town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

DON QUICKSHOT OF THE RIO GRANDE. (4,894 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Jack sure looks like a real find for Universal. A good comedy, western drama. Pleased ninety-five percent. Has fair moral tone. I ran it on Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

DRIVEN. (5,400 feet). Star, Charles E. Mack. Here is a picture that contains the best character portrayal of any that has ever played our house. Very little padding in this one. Used posters, heralds, window cards. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,300. Admission 10-25-35. A. O. Jones, Grand Theatre (250 seats), Burlington, Washington.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,508 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A one hundred percent program picture; a little extra expense would easily have made a special out of it. Had many favorable comments. It also made several new patrons for us. Very good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Above average attendance drawing family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

FLIRT. (8 reels). Star, Eileen Percy. This show went over nicely. The men thought it was wonderful; the women were inclined to think the heroine got off easier than she deserved; but they were all interested. Al

C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FLIRT. (8 reels). Star, Eileen Percy. A fine picture that went over in our town with a bang. The author's name draws them in, and the cast will do the rest. A good picture for Sunday, and one that has an excellent moral tone. Used slide, ones, threes. Played to a good attendance. Be sure to get a good print on this and you're all set. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

GALLOPING KID. (4,783 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Lay off this one, boys. My patrons knocked this one to pieces. Those that are strong on Hoot said it is a shame to put him in a picture like this and Hoot can't make much friends if he gets into too many of these. Fair attendance of general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GOSSIP. (4,488 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A dandy little flapper picture that seemed to hit the spot with our patrons. Story does not amount to much, but it had Gladys who is popular here. Played it with Baby Peggy in "The Kid Reporter" and stood them up. The kid probably did it. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Big attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). Very good. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). Not as good as Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's "Big Game" picture. Too long, too many scenes about the natives, not enough about big game. If I had shown this before I did the Johnson's picture would have pulled better, while this was a good picture of its class it could not come up to the Metro picture of the same kind. Had fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). We put this over to good business and pleased them, but we came out flat and told them what it was, practically an educational and a personally conducted tour through Africa while they were seated and comfortable; I can see where this picture, if handled differently and they were not told that there is no plot, no story, might disappoint; as it was it satisfied both the audience and the box office. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A very good melodrama. Print in poor condition and lost money. Price a little too high and had a rainy night. Had poor attendance. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

KINDLED COURAGE (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A good "western" program picture that pleased all. Lots of action with plenty of humor. Well directed and photographed. Hoot very popular with the younger set. Moral tone good; suitable for Sunday. Drew fair attendance of general class in town of about 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOVE LETTER. (4,426 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. As nice a little picture as anyone would want to see. Used ones, threes, newspaper. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

McGUIRE OF THE MOUNTED. (5,020 feet). Star, William Desmond. This is above the average for a R.N.W.M.P. story. Cast is good. Believe Desmond is going to stick for us. Has fair moral tone and not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Audience went wild over this one. Made money on this one, as I always do with Universal pictures. Have yet to run a sorry one and the rentals are always fair. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,958. R. T. Wade, Palace Theatre, Morehead City, North Carolina.

SAWDUST. (4,800 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A nice little program picture if bought at a program price you'll not regret. Pleased here with the addition of a Larry Semon comedy which gave the program good balance. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SELF MADE WIFE. (4,960 feet). Star cast. One of their "box office" melodramas but did not work in that capacity for us. This type does not do so well as the star series that Universal puts out, yet they put this one in a higher price class. Just an ordinary movie story. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk Grand, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

TOWN SCANDAL. (4,604 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. Very enjoyable picture. You will be glad if you run this one. I had read the story in Cosmopolitan and was more than pleased with the pictured version. Some very delightful comedy touches. A good lesson for old reprobates. Suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

Vitagraph

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This picture went over for us in good shape; it has story, plot and action; that's what they want, these common folks of a rural town. I sense a disgust and resentment sometimes when we show a picture that is all sets and society. The farmers in the last two years have it in their heads that they are largely footing the bill for the extravagance shown as being the life led by upper strata picturized. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

NINETY AND NINE. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A very good picture with plenty of action that pleased. Very good fire scene. Film in good shape. Ran Larry Semon in a "Pair of Kings" and my patrons did not hesitate to say it was an excellent program. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Warner Bros.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Harry Myers is himself in the comedy role; he can be depended on in anything he plays; makes his role stand out. This is a whizz of a feature, nothing better in its line have we ever shown and that is not judging it from "Take." The trouble with these good pictures, the exchange holds the price too high to be shown by a small town house until the flush of the first run advertising has died, it is then hard to put them over for a profit adequate to the rental paid. Of course the film salesmen try to tell you that a picture is not old until it has played, but anyone who has tried it knows different, especially if you are against a larger city. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

MAIN STREET. (9 reels). Cast includes Florence Vidor, Monte Blue, etc. A good picture, well acted and directed. Does not follow book but is an improvement on book. It has more drawing power (and will satisfy) than anything released in months. It's humorous, also dramatic. Advertising slant, give wide publicity to title of book. Draw farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

ROLLING STONES. (Educational). This was good, especially after running Christie's "Pair of Sixes" with its bunch of tragedians. Lloyd Hamilton has any of the Christie bunch beat by a mile or two. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SATURDAY MORNING. (Pathe). A good enough comedy. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SOLID CONCRETE. (Vitagraph). The poorest one to date for us. Nothing but a couple of chases about alike. Will go over if feature is strong. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

SOME CLASS. (Universal). Star, Brownie. This is one of the two best dog comedies we've ever had from Universal. Print poor; but say, Brownie is some dog! Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class, town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

VAGABOND. (Chaplin Pict.). One of Chaplin's old ones, but still liked by everyone. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

STREETS OF NEW YORK. (Arrow). Star cast. (7 reels). Audience confuses it with the Fox story of a similar name, but this is a much better picture. Story runs easily and seemed to please the many who saw it. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Lubitsch Finishes Warner Film

According to reports received from the Warner Brothers West Coast Studio, Ernst Lubitsch has completed the filming of "The Marriage Circle," his first production under his contract with the Warner organization. The Warner Classic is now going through the cutting, editing and titling process under the skilled hands of the famous producer-director himself.

"The Marriage Circle" has aroused unusual curiosity, as the nature of the production is different than anything that Lubitsch has heretofore undertaken. The photoplay is the first production the famous producer has ever made in America using a modern setting, and it does not call for the usual massive settings and mcb scenes for which Ernst Lubitsch is noted.

Viola Dana Given Powerful Vehicle

Metro will present its popular star, Viola Dana, in "Revelation," as the first of a series of elaborate dramatic productions as announced by the organization a short time ago. This was decided upon partly as a reward of merit to Miss Dana, whose Metro pictures have proved unusually successful, and partly because of hundreds of requests from exhibitors in all parts of the country that Miss Dana be starred in more pretentious offerings.

"Revelation" is an adaptation of Mabel Wagnell's novel, "A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," and will provide Viola Dana with a role that should prove the finest this capable actress has ever portrayed on the screen. The story concerns Joline, a dancer and model of the Latin Quarter, who learns that she has a soul and finally poses as the Holy Mother with such realism as to make a monk believe he has seen a miracle.

The story is one of the most enthralling ever written, absorbing and dramatic with a leading character that lifts it far above the ordinary run of screen offerings. Metro announces that "Revelation" will be given an elaborate and painstaking production, in short, everything possible will be done to surround Miss Dana with the very finest in settings, locations and a supporting cast of well-known players. Monty Blue is the only player thus far cast.

Under Water Views in Ince Film

After experimenting for several weeks a new method of photographing under water, work has been evolved by Thomas H. Ince for his new comedy special, "The Galloping Fish," which has just gone into production for First National. Some of the novel "punches" of the story come from shots made of "the fish" played by Freddie, a trained seal, in a mammoth tank which has been specially constructed for the picture.

Louise Fazenda, as "Undine," the diving beauty, merrily disports in the tank with Freddie, while Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin also have unlimited opportunity to display their aquatic skill in shots of the picture made in flood waters.

New Players Added To Metro Cast

Several new players have been added to the cast of "The Fool's Awakening," the Metro picturization of William J. Locke's brilliant novel, "The Tale of Triona." The entire cast of principals now consists of Enid Bennett, Harrison Ford, Mary Alden, Alec Francis, Harry Northrup, Arline Pretty, Lorimer Johnston, D. R. O. Hatswell, Lionel Belmore, John Sainpolis and William Humphrey.

The title of "The Fool's Awakening" was announced previously as "The Living Past." The new title strikes more emphatically at the heart of the story and incidentally avoids confusion with a novel, recently published, which by a strange coincidence was given the earlier title.

Sam Wood Starts "The Next Corner"

Sam Wood has launched the filming of his new production for Paramount, an adaptation by Monte M. Katterjohn of Kate Jordan's novel and play, "The Next Corner." "Trust to luck! Be a gambler!" This, the advice a mother gives her daughter in the story, is exactly what Director Wood is not doing. Instead of relying on fickle fate plans for the picture have been worked out with extraordinary care.

Conway Tearle, in the leading masculine role, has the part of Robert Maury, globe-trotting mining man who leaves his wife to the destinies of Paris for three years. Dorothy Mackaill, former Follies beauty who is making her Hollywood debut in the production after notable appearances in stage and screen plays in the cast, is the wife. Lon Chaney, renowned delineator of unusual types, has a leading part in the character of Serafin, intriguing foster brother of Don Arturo, a Spanish Apollo who plays upon the hearts of women and pays dearly.

Others in the cast are Louise Dresser, Ricardo Cortez and Remea Radzina.

"The Country Kid" Has Premiere

The new Warner Classic, "The Country Kid," starring Wesley Barry, had its world's premiere at the Rialto Theatre, New York, opening on Sunday, October 28. The feature is one of the Warner Classics which has been booked by the Paramount houses and other important theatre chains throughout the different territories.

Hardly had the play date been set when the Warner Bros. Exploitation Department started work making exploitation tie-ups with prominent stores and shops dealing with the different merchandise that is included in the many commercial tie-ups with Wesley Barry.

To Appear in Person

Kenneth Harlan, who plays the title role in the Preferred Picture, "The Virginian," will make personal appearance throughout the two-week run of that production at the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit, beginning November 11. The arrangement for the personal appearances was made by Phil Gleichman, proprietor of the Broadway-Strand, with B. P. Schulberg, producer of "The Virginian." Harlan has prepared an effective act, appearing in his "Virginian" costume.

Sets New Records

"If Winter Comes" continues to set new records for attendance and length of runs all over the United States. The Fox-Washington Theatre in Detroit is among the houses to extend the original engagement of the picture. It is now in its third week in the Automobile City.

December Date on Schertzing Film

Victor Schertzing has completed production on "The Man Life Passed By," one of the Premier Features on the Metro 1923-1924 program. The production is now in the cutting rooms, where it will be edited under the personal supervision of Mr. Schertzing who, aided by Winifred Dunn, wrote it.

Mr. Schertzing gathered a notable cast for his picture. It includes such famous names as Hobart Bosworth, Cullen Landis, Eva Novak, Percy Marmont, Jane Novak, Lydia Knott, Gertrude Short, Lincoln Steadman, Andre de Beranger and William Humphrey.

"The Man Life Passed By" is scheduled for a December release. The adaptation of it was made by Winifred Dunn and it was photographed by Chester A. Lyons. J. J. Hughes, who was associated as art director with Mr. Schertzing when the latter directed Jackie Coogan's Metro picture, "Long Live the King," acted in the same capacity for "The Man Life Passed By."

Jane Novak was loaned for this production by Chester Bennett.

Good Reports

Grauman's million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles, Gordon's Capitol and Olympia, Boston, and Fay's, Providence, are among the many first-run houses that have reported good business with the Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran." Gene Stratton-Porter's picturization of her novel of the same name.

Claire MacDowell Added

Claire MacDowell, whose screen appearances are without number, has been added to the cast of Fred Niblo's new production, "Thy Name Is Woman," which is now in the early stages of production under Mr. Niblo's direction. The cast now includes Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Wallace MacDonald, Claire MacDowell and William V. Mong.

Opens in Wisconsin

"Down to the Sea in Ships," Elmer Clifton's whaling picture, begins its premiere engagement in Wisconsin at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, next Saturday. John K. Edwards of the Hodkinson Publicity Department, left Monday for Milwaukee, where he will assist Leo Landau, manager of the Alhambra, with his exploitation and advertising campaign.

Morris and Lesser Enthusiastic After Visit to Warner Studios

Upon their return to New York, following their visit to the Warner Brothers' West Coast Studio, Sam Morris, of the Warner organization and Myer Lesser, advertising director, manifested the greatest amount of enthusiasm for the future in all matters where Warner product is concerned.

During the visit of the Warner officials, conferences were held with H. M. Warner concerning important matters for future consumption, such as distribution, future product, advertising schemes and general discussions concerning the productions that are now facing the cameras, or are about to go into production.

"I do not believe I have ever been filled with such great enthusiasm as I am now after this visit to the studio," declared Sam Morris upon his return. "Never before have conditions been so clearly brought home to me and never before has the realization come that we are building such a splendid foundation for the future.

"In the first place, the beautiful Warner Studio impressed me as a colossal monument—a monument dedicated to the accomplishments of the present and future of an organization that has sprung to the foremost ranks in an unusually short time. Then to step inside and see the marked efficiency, the different facilities that have been established to aid production, the set upon which the master hand of Ernst Lubitsch is guiding a big production and the set that John Barrymore can be found on from 8 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night, putting every ounce of his energy in making 'Beau Brummel,' a picture that will live forever—naturally, it all creates the greatest amount of enthusiasm.

"Perhaps my most impressive moments were spent on the 'Beau Brummel' set with John Barrymore, and on 'The Marriage Circle' set with Ernst Lubitsch. Barrymore is throwing everything aside to make 'Beau Brummel,' under the direction of Harry Beaumont, his greatest picture. The same can be said of Lubitsch, who works like a human dynamo with his players. Monte Blue, Florence Vidor, Marie Prevost, Harry Myers, Creighton Hale and Adolphe Menjou are all contributing remarkable characterizations.

"Exhibitors can also look forward to a fine picture in the Sidney Franklin production, 'Tiger Rose,' starring Lenore Ulric. And the Harry Rapf production, 'Lucretia Lombard,' starring Monte Blue and Irene Rich, promises much. I witnessed previews of both of these Warner Classics in Hollywood and can say that they are two of the very finest productions I have ever seen. 'Daddies,' the screen version of David Belasco's famous play of the same name, also will be an outstanding screen contribution. Under the direction of William Seiter, Mae Marsh and Harry Myers are working like clockwork together and the different flashes I saw of them at the studio made me extremely enthusiastic, and eager to see the finished product."

"Fashion Row" in Hands of Editors

Several new players, not announced hitherto, were added to the cast of Mae Murray's latest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," while it was in the course of production. The entire cast appearing in support of Miss Murray now consists of Elmo Lincoln, Earle Fox, Freeman Wood, Mathilde Brundage, Sidney Franklin, Madame Rosonova and Craig Biddle.

"Fashion Row," which Miss Murray completed last week, is now in the cutting rooms where it is being edited for an early eastern premiere. This new production follows close upon the heels of "The French Doll," which now is one of the big current Metro successes. Another production, the third Mae Murray picture of the Metro 1923-1924 program, is "Mademoiselle Midnight," which probably will go into production within the next several weeks now that Miss Murray has completed "Fashion Row."

"Fashion Row" is scheduled for December release. It was written for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman general manager.

Schulberg Busy Again in West

B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures, left New York last Sunday for Los Angeles after several weeks in New York discussing distribution and producing plans for Preferred Pictures Corp.

As soon as Mr. Schulberg reaches his studios in Los Angeles, he will start work on "Poisoned Paradise," the Robert W. Service novel to be produced by Gasnier. This production, the story of which is laid in Monte Carlo, will be one of the most pretentious of the Preferred Fifteen. The screen adaptation has been written by Waldemar Young. Casting is now under way. One of the principal roles will be given to Clara Bow, who has recently completed work in "Maytime" and "Black Oxen."

As soon as "Poisoned Paradise" is under way, work will begin on "The Triflers" and "White Man." "The Triflers," adapted from the novel by Frederick Orin Bartlett, will be a richly mounted production with its locale in Paris and the Riviera. "White Man" is a thrilling adventure story laid in the jungles of Africa.

Off At the Flash

People stood for over an hour waiting to secure standing room in the Cameo Theatre last Sunday night when "The Drivin' Fool," a Hodkinson picture, began its New York premiere. Not only the public but the critics agreed that it is one of the speediest pictures of the season.

Ingram Has Arrived In Egypt

Rex Ingram, whose "Scaramouche" is making Broadway talk these days through its sensational popularity at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, arrived safely in Cairo, Egypt, according to a cablegram received at the Metro offices last week. Mr. Ingram's journey to Cairo was by way of England, from which point he turned into Ireland, where he visited his father, and then through Paris, where he spent several days gathering equipment.

With Mr. Ingram are Alice Terry, his wife, who plays the leading feminine role in "Scaramouche"; Marian Burton, noted scenario writer, and Curt Rehfeld, Mr. Ingram's production manager. Several noted European experts are to join Mr. Ingram in Cairo, where the entire party will make special researches for Mr. Ingram's next several productions for Metro. He and his party will return here around the first of the new year.

Smith Completes Cast

David Smith, who is directing "A Tale of Red Roses," the picturization of George Randolph Chester's novel of American city life, has completed the cast. It had already been announced that Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller had been engaged for the leading roles.

Others in the cast are Niles Welch, William Norris, Edith Yorke, Sidney De Grey, Violet Palmer, George Webb, Margaret Landis, Miles McCarthy, Milton Ross and Charles Meakan.

Vitagraph Prints Arrive

Vitagraph laboratories are printing "The Man from Brodney's," the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's famous romance, produced by David Smith and shipments are being made to the branches.

With Mr. Kerrigan in the cast are Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley, Miss DuPont, Pat O'Malley and Kathleen Key.

"Why Worry" Fills Each Inch of Standing Room

Reports reaching the Pathe Home Office from various sections of the country continue to relate how "Why Worry," Harold Lloyd's latest release for Pathe, is gathering them in at leading motion picture theatres.

Following the opening of "Why Worry" at the Adams Theatre in Detroit, John Kunsky wired the Pathe Home Office as follows: "Delighted to say that 'Why Worry' attendance on the opening day of engagement greatly exceeded the opening attendance for 'Safety Last.'"

I am hoping for record business."

Another showman who hails "Why Worry" as a "veritable sensation," is Sam Harding, of Kansas City. After the opening of Lloyd's feature comedy at the Liberty Theatre in that city, Sam Harding wired the following dispatch: "Why Worry" at the Liberty Theatre has proved a veritable sensation. Opened to the biggest receipts ever taken in at this theatre in any one day. Look for all records to be broken this week."

Vitagraph to Film Sabatini's Latest

World rights to "Captain Blood," the latest novel by Rafael Sabatini, now being presented on the screen and on the legitimate stage on Broadway have been purchased for production by Vitagraph.

The purchase of "Captain Blood" was among the European missions planned by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who arrived in London last week. The transfer of the rights to the story was completed through the New York agents of Sabatini, Messrs. Brandt & Kirkpatrick. The announcement of the purchase was made on a cabled permission of Mr. Smith.

The price paid for "Captain Blood," it is reported, exceeds that of any novel or play purchased for the screen in the last year.

Big in Los Angeles

Tom Forman's latest Preferred Picture, "The Broken Wing," is playing to big business in Los Angeles where it opened last Sunday at Lund's New Broadway Theatre. A report of the picture's success was received by B. P. Schulberg in New York in a telegram from Larry Lund, who said:

"The Broken Wing' opened in my theatre last night. Business more than satisfactory. Packed house. Critics mightily pleased with production. If 'Broken Wing' is criterion of what 'B. P. Schulberg Presents' means then the coming season spells success in large letters for both exhibitors and your organization."

"Gentle Julia" Done

The William Fox screen version of Booth Tarkington's story, "Gentle Julia," has been completed at the producer's West Coast Studios, under the direction of Rowland V. Lee. Bessie Love plays the title role.

Fine Tie-up for "Michael O'Halloran"

That the W. W. Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran," Gene Stratton-Porter's screen adaptation of her popular novel of the same name, offers unlimited possibilities to the exhibitor for tie-ups of nation-wide scope, was demonstrated recently at Springfield, Mass., when the Kiwanis Club unanimously indorsed the picture and voted it one of the most entertaining productions of the year.

The occasion was a special meeting of the Kiwanis Club held in the Important Announcements Coming Regarding "Birth of the West"

Important announcements regarding author, star and cast of "The Birth of the West" are expected to be forthcoming within the next few weeks from Frank J. Carroll, of the Colorado Pictures Corporation. Mr. Carroll is now on his way to Denver for a series of conferences, after which he is likely to proceed to Los Angeles to complete contracts in connection with the Colorado organization's initial production.

Regarding "The Birth of the West" Mr. Carroll declared to a representative of Moving Picture World:

"The picture business has reached a stage where it is dangerous to divulge too much of story and theme until a production is actually on the screen.

"For that reason I have little to say at this time about 'The Birth of the West.' Film men who remember 'The Cavell Case' and 'For the Freedom of the World' will appreciate, however, that when I start to work on a production bearing so valuable and important a title as 'The Birth of the West' that I have in mind a picture that will measure up in every way to its wonderful possibilities.

"I have always been a believer in box office names, and when announcement is made in the near future regarding the identity of author and players I feel certain that exhibitors will grant that I am holding true to my policy.

"The rest had better remain unsaid until the picture is on the screen. You hear so much these days about spectacular scenes, effects involving thousands of people, thrilling climaxes, and so on, that the words mean little.

"When it comes to selling the picture to the exhibitor, and the exhibitor's problem of selling the picture to the public, it is the screen that gives the answer. I am willing to let the screen tell my story."

The Colorado Pictures Corporation, with headquarters at Denver, Col., is composed of many of the most representative business men of the Rocky Mountain metropolis.

Dwan Cutting

Allan Dwan is busy these days at the Paramount Long Island studio cutting and titling "Big Brother," Rex Beach's story, which he finished filming recently. Tom Moore, Edith Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Joe King, Charles Henderson and Mickey Bennett have the principal roles in the production.

Large Organization Is Going to Make Picture

While a complete list of the artists who will accompany Director Edwin Carewe to Algeria to make exteriors for "A Son of the Sahara" has already been announced, the production, technical and business staff has only just been rounded out.

Louis M. Jerome will have charge of the business of the company. Robert Kirrle will be chief cameraman. Wallace W. Fox, Mr. Carewe's brother, will act as his assistant. Adelaide Heilbron, who prepared the scenario on "A Son of the Sahara," will be with the company in Algeria. Miss Heilbron prepared "Mighty Lak a Rose" and "The Girl of the Golden West" for production. Rene Plaisetty will act as Mr. Carewe's co-director. Al Greene will act as second cameraman and Dick Easton will accompany the troupe as second assistant director.

Three Hodkinson Book Week Films

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Puritan Passions," all Hodkinson releases, have been listed by the National Committee for Better Films as "better pictures having a book source" and suggested for use especially during Motion Picture and Children's Book Week, November 11 to 17th.

The committee has urged exhibitors to show book-films during this Nayasset Clubhouse. The speaker of the evening, Dr. Juniper of St. Petersburg, Florida, took as the subject of his discourse, "Be Square," the theme of "Michael O'Halloran," and emphasized the importance of this principle being brought home to every boy in America.

After the showing, the Kiwanis Club, by a viva voce vote, gave Joseph O'Sullivan, special exploitation man who effected the tie-up, a letter of indorsement and thanks to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

week and suggested that they confine their showing to only book-films. When this was done last year, they state, it attracted a great deal of attention besides obtaining fine audiences.

Motion Picture and Children's Book Week offers a fine opportunity for tie-ups with schools, libraries, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations, book dealers and newspapers.

"Puritan Passions" Drawing Big Crowds

During the second week of its engagement at the Cameo Theatre, New York City, "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," did even more business than during the first. Hundreds of people were turned away the first night of the second week.

This increased business was due largely to the tremendous amount of word-of-mouth publicity the picture received and to the lavish praise of the critics. The distinctiveness and beauty of the production, Glenn Hunter's admirable acting of a role different from anything he has ever done, the weird and haunting musical score written especially for the picture by the eminent composer, Frederick S. Converse, not only brought new patrons, but brought many back the second time.

Sells Preferred Pictures Abroad

The foreign rights to all Preferred Pictures produced in the past and to all those produced in the next five years are acquired by Ben Blumenthal, president of Export and Import Film Co., Inc., as the result of a deal completed between Mr. Blumenthal and B. P. Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann of Preferred Pictures Corporation. Export and Import Film Co., will be selling agents for Preferred Pictures Corporation in all countries except the United States and Canada as a result of this important contract.

"I have acquired the rights to a group of pictures of unusual box-office value," said Mr. Blumenthal, "and I have absolute faith that B. P. Schulberg will continue to deliver pictures of the type of 'The Broken Wing,' 'Mothers-in-Law,' 'April Showers,' 'The Virginian' and 'Maytime.'"

Vitagraph Will Release Blaney Stage Successes

Vitagraph announces that it will release for the screen a number of the Charles E. Blaney stage successes. These productions are made under the personal direction of Mr. Blaney, who recently organized Charles E. Blaney's Pictures Corporation. The first to be screened is "The Love Bandit."

Doris Kenyon, Victor Sutherland and Cecil Spooner are featured players in the cast which Mr. Blaney assembled for his first picture. Dell Henderson was chosen as director and the continuity was written by Lewis Allen Browne.

Blaney's stage successes include "Little Church Around the Corner," "More to Be Pitted," "The Curse of Drink," "Dancer and the King," "Across the Pacific," and "Nell of the Circus."

Pathe Official Back; Extols Companies' Coast Activities

"The production boom which hit the Los Angeles producing center some time ago continues, as far as the Pathe production units are concerned, with no immediate signs of diminishing," declared Victor Shapiro when interviewed concerning his observations during his five-weeks' business trip to the Pathe producing plants on the West Coast.

"The 'Girl Expert,' Harold Lloyd's first independent venture, will be about two months more in production and should be ready some time in January. This will introduce Lloyd in a new type of role.

"Under William R. Fraser, secretary and general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, affairs at the Lloyd plant have gotten away to a brilliant start. The same staff that has assisted Lloyd in his previous work has been retained, including John L. Murphy, Sam Taylor, Fred Newmeyer, Tim Whelan, Joe Reddy, Ted Wilde, and others. Tommy Gray, prominent among Broadway vaudeville circles, has been engaged by Lloyd as a gag man.

"At the Hal Roach studio I found things moving at a fast pace under the pressure of getting out one single-reeler and one two-reeler a week in addition to the feature comedy drama activities on which Hal Roach is just starting, the first subject being 'The Fighting Family.'" Mr. Roach will shortly announce the elevation of Charley Chase to stardom to be co-featured with Blanche Mahaffey in a series of single-reel comedies.

"Will Rogers is now adapting his wit and humor of the stage to the screen, and at the time of my visit to the Roach lot was starting work on 'Uncensored Movies,' the third number of his two-reel series. It will be a novelty innovation. Mr. Roach said that due to the success attending the 'Dippy-Doo-Dads' this series would be continued in more lavish form, special stories being prepared that will embody parodies on conventional dramatic plots, the human roles being enacted by monkeys, ducks, geese, dogs, etc.

"One of the most striking personalities that I met during my entire trip was Bob McGowan, director of the 'Our Gang' comedies. In the handling of this bunch of kids Bob displays a genius of a unique order. The 'Gang,' under McGowan's direction had just completed a pirate story with the action laid along the San Pedro coastline and aboard the U. S. Battleship California. This promises to be one of the most hilarious numbers of the entire 'Gang' series. Mickey appears in this offering as the blood-thirsty chief of the pirate band. McGowan talks of his diminutive players with as much enthusiasm as a Broadway producer does of his world-famous stars. Among other things, he tells the cross-orbed world that in Farina he has the greatest colored actress on the screen.

"Fred Jackman had just completed the direction of 'Rex, King of Wild Horses,' a story written by Hal Roach. One of the few survivors of the almost extinct breed of wild horses of the Northwest was secured by Roach for the principal role. This production is now being cut and titled and should be shipped East about the middle of November. Additional announcements concerning the Hal Roach plans are forthcoming upon the return of W. B. Frank, Roach's newly appointed Eastern representative, who leaves for the coast on November 1st.

"Sennett is now breaking in Harry Langdon, who will be featured in a series of two-reelers for Pathe release. At the time of my visit, the Sennett comedians, Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan, and Madeline Hurlock were at work on a lighthouse location, a novel background for comedy incident and situations. Alberta Vaughn, Mack Sennett's seventeen-year-old find, is being developed with a view of making her a featured comedienne in the near future. Irene Lentz has been elevated to the position of featured player and has been cast opposite Ben Turpin "Dick" Jones, director of Mabel Normand, has just started work on a new Normand feature titled "Marianne."

"The preliminaries for the production of a serial version of the James Fenimore Cooper's 'Leatherstocking Tales,' under the direction of George Seitz, have been completed, and Mr. Steitz will leave shortly for Great Bear Lake to film exteriors on that location. This chapter-picture will be in ten reels with Harold Miller and Edna Murphy in the leading roles. The continuity was prepared by Robert Dillon. Another serial story in preparation is 'The Fortieth Door,' to be adapted from the novel of the same title. Allene Ray will share stellar honors with Harold Miller in this episodic production."

Ruby Promoted

O. J. Ruby has been appointed branch manager of the Pathe office at Cleveland. He began with Pathe seven years ago as assistant cashier. In 1917 he became cashier and served in that capacity until he was made a salesman in 1920, except during the period when he was abroad with the A. E. F.

Universal Making Two Elaborate Productions

Within thirty feet of each other on one of Universal City's big stages, two of the most elaborate productions which will be offered by Universal Pictures Corporation in the coming year are well into production. These are "My Mamie Rose" and "The Turmoil."

"My Mamie Rose" is the first starring vehicle of the "Merry Go Round" girl, Mary Philbin. Irving

Cummings is directing the filming of the Owen Kildare novel.

"The Turmoil" is the Hobart Henley production which will follow "A Lady of Quality" on the screen. It is Booth Tarkington's novel, which will be produced with the purpose of making it twice as big a success as "The Flirt," another Tarkington story which Henley made some time ago and which was an exceptional success.

Palmer Photoplay to Get Wide Publicity

Palmer Photoplay Corporation intends to have a staff of high-caliber men doing pioneer advertising and publicity work in every important center throughout the country, months before the release of its first production, "Judgment of the Storm."

Fifty-seven of these skilled publicity ambassadors are already in the field, operating out of forty-two leading cities from coast to coast. Directed by a capable, experienced field director from his office in Los Angeles, each one of these men is making an intensive drive for business at the local box-office.

Not only are they in close personal contact with Palmer Photoplay Corporation's big army of 281,000 ambitious screen writers, who are already boosting "Judgment of the Storm" as an example of an everyday individual success through taking the Palmer course in photoplay writing, but, with the numerous social facilities at their disposal, they are arousing the curiosity compelling, human interest of the general public in the persevering little woman who wrote the fine scenario for the picture. The value of this extraordinary advance publicity service to exhibitors will be apparent to every live-wire showman, Palmer Photoplays say.

Laurel Burlesques Big Features

In the new Hal Roach series of two-reel comedies starring Stan Laurel, a novel note is struck. In each a popular screen production is burlesqued. The first, "Roughest Africa," released September 30, has proved a success. It is a travesty on H. A. Snow and Martin Johnson's jungle adventure pictures.

The second, "Frozen Hearts," is a burlesque of Ibanez' "Enemies of Women," and is scheduled for October 28, while the third, "The Soilers," is a laughable travesty on the Rex Beach story "The Spoilers." The hero's remark, "I broke him with my own hands," is said to have been made the basis of genuine laughter. It will be released November 25.

Turns to Schools

To secure suitable material for the series of Century Comedies starring Buddy Messinger, Julius Stern has sent a hundred letters to principals of schools in New York inviting the boys and girls to send in idea themes or names of stories which they believe would make good vehicles for the thirteen-year-old star.

WILLIAM R. FRASER

Secretary and general manager of Harold Lloyd Corporation, under whose management the independent Lloyd producing organization has gotten away to a flying start.

Order Extra Prints on "Critical Age" Six Cosmopolitan Pictures Ready for Release Through Goldwyn Co.

In order to meet the anticipated demands on the W. W. Hodkinson exchanges for "The Critical Age" during Children's Week Ernest Shipman has ordered extra prints of that picture for all branches.

This picture, which is based on the well-known Ralph Connor story, "Glengarry School Days," is especially suited for the special Children's Week programs. It is a picture of children, with swift, stirring action throughout.

Made true to the Shipman type, it is a clean, wholesome story, with a real nature background. "The Man from Glengarry" and "The Rapids," two other Shipman pictures, which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is distributing, are said to be of the same type.

"Mitsi" Bought for Mary Philbin

Universal announces the purchase of "Mitsi," the celebrated French novel by Dely, or Marie Petitjean de la Rosiere, published last year by Ernest Flammarion. "Mitsi" is scheduled as a vehicle for Mary Philbin.

Begin Gibson Film

Work has been started on Hoot Gibson's new special production, "Hook and Ladder," at Universal City.

With photography on "Mary of Burgundy," Marion Davies' next big super feature, practically completed, the Cosmopolitan Corporation now has six pictures for release through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan in the ensuing few months. This sextet of new films is in addition to "Enemies of Women," the Cosmopolitan production featuring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, already released through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan.

Of the six new pictures, "Little Old New York," starring Mariön Davies, has had a brilliant pre-release showing at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, where it played twelve consecutive weeks, and is now playing record-breaking engagements at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago; the California Theatre, Los Angeles, and the Empire Theatre, London. "Unseeing Eyes," a screen version of an Arthur Stringer story, is now playing a pre-release engagement at the Cosmopolitan Theatre. In the latter film Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen are featured. E. H. Griffith directed from the scenario by Bayard Veiller.

The remaining four pictures, in addition to "Mary of Burgundy," include "Under the Red Robe," "The Daughter of Mother McGinn" and "Cain and Mabel."

"Mary of Burgundy," the next Marion Davies special, is a picturization of Charles Major's historical romance, "Yolanda." It is said to be the biggest thing that Miss Davies has done for the screen, and, in lavishness of production, beauty of settings, historical accuracy and excellency of acting, is said to excel Miss Davies' epoch-making "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

The same combination which created the latter film is responsible for "Mary of Burgundy." In addition to Charles Major as author and Miss Davies as star, this combination includes Robert G. Vignola, director; Luther Reed, scenario writer, and Joseph Urban, scenic designer. The cast includes Lyn Harding, Holbrook Blinn, Ralph Graves, Maclyn Arbuckle, Leon Errol, Johnny Dooley, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Mary Kennedy, Ian MacLaren, Paul McAllister, Roy Applegate, Martin Faust, Gustav von Seyffertitz and Thomas Findlay.

"Under the Red Robe," a picturization of Stanley Weyman's famous story of the same name, has as its featured players Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens. Alan Crosland directed from the scenario of Bayard Veiller, and Joseph Urban designed the settings. The supporting cast includes William H. Powell, Sydney Herbert, Genevieve Hamper, Ian MacLaren, Evelyn Gosnell, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Andred Dillon, Rose Coghlan, Otto Kruger, Mary Mc-Laren, George Nash and Charles Judels.

"The Daughter of Mother McGinn," filmed on the Coast, is a picturization of a Jack Boyle "Boston Blackie" story. Colleen Moore is featured and the cast includes Forrest Stanley, Tom Santschi, Eddie Phillips, George Cooper, Margaret Seddon, Carmelita Geraghty, Wade Boteler and Kate Lester. George Hill directed under the supervision of Frances Marion, who adapted the story to the screen.

"Cain and Mabel," from H. C. Witwer's story of the same name, is described as the most thrilling sporting picture ever filmed. It has been filmed on a big scale and in addition to its prize-fight, includes a stirring horse race, a musical comedy in which the famous Ziegfeld "Follies" chorus appears, a realistic fire and numerous other high-lights. Luther Reed made the screen adaptation and E. Mason Hopper directed. Joseph Urban designed the settings.

Anita Stewart is featured with T. Roy Barnes and Oscar Shaw. The cast also includes Dore Davidson, Tom Lewis, Hal Forde and others. Many famous sporting and literary celebrities appear in the film, including Tex Rickard, Johnny Gallagher, who refereed the Dempsey-Firpo fight; Joe Humphreys, H. C. Witwer, Irvin Cobb, Damon Runyon, "Kid" Broad and "Bugs" Baer.

Phil Gleichman has booked "Little Old New York" for a minimum of four weeks at the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit, starting November 25. Tom Moore has booked "Little Old New York" for his Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C., beginning November 18. C. E. "Little Old New York" has been booked at the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, for ten days, opening on Thanksgiving Day.

"Six Days" has been sold to the A. H. Blank circuit. After doing a big business at the Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, "Six Days" opened the Blue Mouse Theatre in Portland, where it had a most successful week. It played two weeks in Seattle, and has been retained for a second week in Portland. It was retained for a second week at Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, where it broke all records for week-day receipts. It has closed a big booking at the Empire Theatre in Syracuse.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan have just sold Distinctive's "Green Goddess" to Nicholas Schenk for the Loew Circuit in New York City. Balaban & Katz have booked it. This production was recently shown at the Metropolitan Theatre in Atlanta, where it did a big business. It has just closed two big weeks at the Capitol Theatre in New York, where it did a record business after a five weeks' showing at advanced prices at the Sam H. Harris Theatre.

"In the Palace of the King" has been booked at the California Theatre in San Francisco, beginning November 10.

Rawlinson Finishes

Herbert Rawlinson and Robert F. Hill have finished their first team product at Universal City, "His Mystery Girl." This is the first time that Hill has directed Rawlinson. Rawlinson's next will be in the film version of "Clay of Ca'lina," which Calvin Johnson wrote. L. G. Rigby has prepared the continuity.

By arrangement with the executive board of the Boy Scout Foundation of Greater New York, the Distinctive Pictures Corporation's production, "The Steadfast Heart," will be given a special showing for Scoutmasters and Assistants of the entire Metropolitan district. There are nearly 2,000 of these young men who exercise command over 25,000 boy scouts of Greater New York. The showing will be held at the Town Hall, New York City, on November 8.

Arrangements for the larger showing of this picture were made after a private showing given to representatives of each of the five borough councils of the Foundation. The executives assembled to view the picture were so impressed with the outstanding quality of it that they requested a showing be arranged for the entire leadership of the city.

Shortens Title

The title of the Metro picture heretofore announced as "The Man Whom Life Passed By" has been shortened to "The Man Life Passed By," according to a Metro announcement. This is a Metro Premier Feature production, written by Victor Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn and now in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Mr. Schertzinger.

Desmond Starring in New Universal Serial

Universal announces the commencement of production this week on a new chapter picture starring William Desmond. The new serial will be called "Hands in the Dark." William Craft will direct it.

Helen Holmes will take an important role in "Hands in the Dark." She has not been seen in Universal pictures for several years.

"Hands in the Dark" probably will be ready for release late this year. It will be in 15 chapters of two reels each.

To Be at Cameo

Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O. special, "The Mailman," has been booked into the Cameo Theatre, to open November 25 for an indefinite run.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Weiss Releases Big Biblical Film on Independent Market

Max Weiss, vice-president and general manager of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that his organization will release their big Biblical production, "After Six Days," on the independent market. This announcement may come as a complete surprise to those in the industry due to the fact that this production has been rumored at different times, as being ready for release by at least three of the large chain organizations.

The picture is unique in film history, having taken several years to produce at a cost of several million dollars. Starting with Adam and Eve it ends with the immortal Songs of Solomon.

Mr. Weiss, when questioned regarding this move by Artclass, said: "We have taken some time to arrive at this decision, due mainly to the many propositions that we have had offered us by distributing organizations, and also on account of our desire to investigate the condition of the state right market at the present time. The several propositions we had with the chain organizations, while attractive, left some doubt in our mind regarding the financial advisability of this move and, after investigating the condition of the market, we came to the conclusion that if this set of exchange men were offered something really big and attractive, they not only would be willing to pay for it but had the money in hand to finance this undertaking.

"Immediately on our announcement we closed three very exceptional deals for the release of 'After Six Days'; namely, for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory to the Kerman Films; for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Standard Film Attractions, and the Dominion of Canada to Charles Lalumiere of Montreal. In addition, we have received propositions from almost every territory throughout the United States, aside from having sold every foreign territory with the exception of South Africa, India, Burma, Ceylon and the Strait Settlements, and the territory of Australia, New Foundland, Tasmania and New Zealand, all of which gives us added encouragement and leads us to believe that we have made the right move.

"The Kerman Exchange in New York is doing the most exceptional business with this production that has ever been known for an independent. They have closed some very astounding contracts both for runs and the price received.

"It has been invariably shown in over ninety per cent of the cases where the picture was booked for a given number of days, it has either been held over for an equal number of days of the original booking or booked for a return engagement and played to more money on the return than the original showing.

"The production has also demonstrated itself as the most exceptional box office record-breaker of all time. As an instance of this, the first showing of the picture in Brooklyn was held at the Premier Theatre. After the Sunday opening, Mr. John Turtle decided that the only way possible for all the patrons of his theatre to see it was first to extend the booking from a week to two weeks and secondly to add three extra shows each day. Mr. Turtle started his first show at eight o'clock in the morning and began his last at twelve o'clock midnight.

"The result was that more people visited this theatre during the run of this picture than ever before in the same number of days. This house seats over twenty-five hundred people and he ran seven shows a day.

"What is happening to the Kerman Exchange in New York is repeating itself in Eastern Pennsylvania. David Starkman, manager of the Standard Film Attractions of Philadelphia, wired me last week for five extra prints, due to the tremendous amount of business placed on his books by the exhibitors in his territory.

"It is the intention of Mr. Charles Lalumiere of Montreal to organize five road shows for this picture, dividing the Dominion in five zones, having each of the shows play every city, town and hamlet. All told, I think we have made a very wise decision because there is no question that this year is the year for big pictures and big profits, and in "After Six Days," we have one of the greatest productions from every point of view that has ever been offered on any market, particularly the independent market.

Naomi Childers Back To Screen

Naomi Childers returns to the screen in a leading role with Doris Kenyon in C. C. Burr's society melodrama, "Restless Wives," which is being directed by Gregory La Cava at the Burr Glendale Studio.

Miss Childers began her screen career some years ago at the Vitagraph studio and appeared in prominent roles for this company.

Burr McIntosh in C. C. Burr Film

Burr McIntosh, one of the best known personages of the screen and stage, has been engaged to play a prominent role in C. C. Burr's new society melodrama "Restless Wives," with Doris Kenyon, now in the making at the Burr Glendale studio under the direction of Gregory La Cava.

Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Goes to Coast with Normal Negative Cost Plan

For the past six months Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation have been collecting data as to the actual earning power of motion pictures throughout the United States, primarily with a view to bringing the cost of pictures to a level with the actual rental earning possibilities of productions.

These data were secured for the object of eventually setting all the facts gathered before the directors and stars at the coast to show the fallacy of the policy of inequitable prices for salaried stars and indiscriminate expenditures on the part of directors, irrespective of the possible returns for the money they have spent.

Mr. Cohn left for the coast last week with this data in hand to confer with Harry Cohn. He will first arrange a meeting with the directors who are now making pictures for distribution by the C. B. C. Corporation. Then Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to convince his actor and director friends, who have known him and worked with him for a period of twelve years, that their present attitude on salaries is responsible for the present uncertain situation in production.

There is no intention on the part of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to change its present plans of engaging the best possible star for every picture it makes, and to have its other producing units do the same, but Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to convince both stars and directors that they are killing the goose that lays the golden egg by continuing the costs that have prevailed.

Several big pictures which the C. B. C. have planned for the balance of the season are ready to go into work, but Mr. Cohn believes that his personal chats on the coast will at least bring about a tendency to deflate the salaries of stars and engender a more business-like attitude on the part of directors toward expenditures for the production of pictures.

It is Mr. Cohn's intention to confer not only with those stars and directors who are engaged by C. B. C. and the producers distributing through C. B. C. but also to effect a clearing house at the coast whereby the actors will receive a fair wage for their work and a steady one.

Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to show the producing factors at the coast that the way to normal conditions of productions throughout the year is to get salaries and productions down to where they belong instead of having abnormal costs and seasonal periods of production activity.

Mr. Cohn believes unhealthy costs can be avoided if the matter is handled on a basis whereby directors and actors are made to understand the normal amount of money a picture can earn.

Providence Premiere of "The Unknown Purple"

The world's premiere presentation of "The Unknown Purple," directed by Roland West and adapted from the stage-play by Mr. West and Carlyle Moore, took place on Monday, October 29th, at the Strand Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

Manager Reed of the Strand Theatre used an extensive exploitation and advertising campaign in putting this picture on and at the time of going to press reports the most phenomenal business of the year in Providence. Besides using space in all the newspapers Reed made an entire change in his lobby, predominating it with purple hangings and purple rays from baby spots, in keeping with the theme of the picture, distributed over fifty thousand pieces of literature and devised many tie-ups throughout the city.

"The Unknown Purple" is enacted by cast including Henry B. Walthall, Alice Lake, Stuart Holmes, Helen Ferguson, Ethel Grey Terry, James Morrison, Brinsley Shaw, Frankie Lee, Richard Wayne, Johnny Arthur and Mike Donlon. It was produced by Carlos Production and is being franchised on the independent market by Truart Film Corporation. M. H. Hoffman, vice president of Truart, and William Shapiro, of the Franklin Film Corporation, Boston, who control the Truart franchise for the New England territory, arranged the world's premiere showing at Providence.

Editorial Praise for Ben Wilson to Release "The Santa Fe Trail" Ten Thru Grand-Asher

The Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a copy of the Sunday "Observer," Charlotte, N. C., date of October 14, wherein that publication praises, in its editorial columns, Arrow's serial special, "The Santa Fe Trail."

In a letter accompanying the article, Arthur C. Bromberg, president of Progress Pictures, which is distributing "The Santa Fe Trail" in the South, says: "For your information, the Charlotte 'Observer' has been the 'Bible' of a great many showmen. It has been their policy in the past to recommend and endorse very few shows or motion pictures and this editorial on 'The Santa Fe Trail' is therefore extremely interesting."

The editorial says in part: "Motion picture producers are fast coming into appreciation of what the people are demanding. The frivolities of the screen are being educational. In the Ottoway, last week, there was begun a historical story of the blazing of the Santa Fe Trail, in which the hardships of the pioneers are depicted and in which the progressive development of the country will be staged. It proves a fine school of instruction."

Carrying in his pocket a signed contract with Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation for ten more all-star features, which he will produce following the completion of the present ten, Ben Wilson has just arrived from New York.

"I cannot help feeling optimistic," declared Mr. Wilson, "following my discussions with numerous exchange men. It seems to me that the coming season belongs to the independents. All of my productions will be based upon the principle of common sense. The stories will be good, the pictures will be well made, the casts will be the best that I can get, and the character of the stories will be widely varied. They will be made with a view to a reasonable price."

It is understood that Bryant Washburn, Elliott Dexter, Mabel Forrest and others of the Grand-Asher organization will leave Boston the latter part of the present week and on their arrival in Hollywood will resume activities.

Burr's Latest Binney Film in Boston Debut

"Three o'Clock in the Morning," the new C. C. Burr production starring Constance Binney, has been booked at the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston by Samuel Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc. This double booking of an independently produced picture is interesting, as Jake Lowry's houses in the Hub center have long been considered the criterion of what is best in pictures.

The C. C. Burr organization produced and distributed "I Am the Law," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes,"

"Sure Fire Flint," "The Last Hour," "You Are Guilty" and others that made picture history in the high spots. But big as these pictures were they were not considered big enough for the Lowry houses in Boston.

Therefore, with the booking of "Three o'Clock in the Morning" in these theatres the officials of Mastodon Films, Inc., feel they are proving their contention that their productions for the 1923-24 season would be of the first quality as to story, stars and production.

F. Heath Cobb Back from Boston with More Plans

F. Heath Cobb, director of publicity for the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, who has been in Boston for the past two weeks with Samuel V. Grand, president, and Elliott Dexter, Bryant Washburn, Mabel Forrest, etc., has returned to New York City. Here he will carry to completion negotiations for a very well known story to be used by Elliott Dexter in a large New England feature shortly to be made for Grand-Asher.

While the Grand-Asher executives and stars were in Boston, R. William Neill, director for Elliott Dexter, toured the entire Boston district to decide upon possible locations to be used in the feature. He seemed well satisfied with the ground and believes that those places of outstanding historic interest will add to the atmosphere of the picture.

The picture will be the second Dexter has made for Grand-Asher. The first is named "The Way Men Love," from a story by Adam Hull Shirk. Cutting and titling have just been completed and that film will have a special trade showing at the Grand Ballroom of the Astor Hotel on Wednesday morning. In this picture, Elliott Dexter is supported by Mildred Harris, Anders Randolph, Grace Carlisle, De Witt C. Jennings, Sydney Bracey and Jeanne Carpenter.

Semon Prepares to Film Truart Picture

Larry Semon, who has been in New York for a number of weeks completing final arrangements for the filming of his first production under his contract with Truart Film Corporation, has left for Los Angeles to commence shooting immediately. While in New York Semon conferred with M. H. Hoffman, vice president of Truart, with reference to cast, direction and all other production details.

"The Girl in the Limousine," adapted from the A. H. Woods stage success of that name, written by Wilson Collison and Avery Hopwood, will be Larry Semon's first picture. It will probably be ready for release about January 1.

"Superstition" Widely Discussed in Industry

Speculation is rife in film circles as to what distributing organization will release the big independent production, "Superstition," now being cut and edited at the Hollywood Studios where it was filmed by Creative Productions.

According to W. H. Carr, general manager of Creative Productions, the picture, which is from I. W. Irving's original story, "Trapped," is one of the most lavish and entertaining independent films created this year and several offers have already been made for the negative. "Superstition" boasts of an all-star cast, including such well-known names as John Bowers, Margaret De La Motte, Cesare Gravina, Edward Burns, Joseph Dowling, Claire McDowell, Sheldon Lewis, Spottiswoode Aitken and Martha Marshall.

Has Canadian Premiere

Hepworth's production, "Lily of the Alley," had its Canadian premiere at the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, the week of October 15. It is being released in Canada by Regal Films, Ltd., under the title, "In the Shadow of Whitechapel."

Associated Exhibitors Announces Great Lineup of Productions

By ARTHUR S. KANE,

President of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

With pride and gratification Associated Exhibitors invites attention to its fall schedule, revealing what we consider one of the greatest lineups ever presented.

In two and one-half years experience in marketing Harold Lloyd's we have found that the big picture is "the thing." In keeping, we have been moved to get big pictures of the calibre of those named in our announcement, Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry?" Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" and Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" are the kinds of attractions we are proud to sponsor.

When it started on its career as a purveyor of screen entertainment, the reorganized Associated Exhibitors declared its determination to obtain and serve the very cream of independent production. It pledged itself to study closely the wants of the public and to exert itself to the utmost to merit the public's approval.

We have kept the faith. The theatregoer has given his answer in a way that can be neither mistaken nor misconstrued.

We have grown consistently. Each succeeding season has seen a steady, logical advance in the quality of Associated Exhibitors product, just as we promised it should. Our productions during the season of 1921-22 were good; those in 1922-23 showed a decided forward step. Now, in 1923-24, we are going far beyond anything that has been before.

The overwhelming success of each of the offerings named in our current announcement—and every one that has been released has been put to a fair test—is evidence that they have struck the popular chord, that they are meeting the wants of the public in full measure.

We realize the extreme difficulty of surpassing this fall's attractions. Yet we feel that with Harold Lloyd's mid-winter picture, Douglas MacLean's "The Yankee Consul," and Mabel Normand's "Mary Anne," following the current successes of these stars, together with other big product which we hope to negotiate, the season's supply will be a group of pictures as high in quality and as big in box-office possibilities as any in the market—if they are not, indeed, actually higher and bigger than any others.

Charles Ray's tremendous success on the speaking stage is at once a source of deep gratification and a promise of yet greater film triumphs. Everywhere Mr. Ray is being acclaimed as one of our greatest actors. I confidently believe that his next picture for Associated Exhibitors will reflect a further advance in his artistry, that he will return to the screen refreshed by his experience in other fields, with new and valuable ideas and a surer grasp of his great art. And, even aside from his present helpful experience, "The Courtship of Myles Standish" would, in itself, have inspired him to greater things.

In the meantime, while realizing that quality production is making a deeper appeal than ever before, and striving earnestly and—admittedly—with success—to make our contribution to that high quality, Associated Exhibitors has recruited a live, capable, enthusiastic sales force which, working under the efficient, energetic direction of Mr. J. S. Woody, our general manager, has placed this organization at the top of the heap in marketing also. Hence we have a double reason for facing the future with entire confidence.

Throughout the motion picture industry the movement is definitely forward. Great attractions will continue to be the rule rather than the exception, for in the main the producer and the distributor are in perfect accord with the exhibitor in his fixed determination to meet the public's wants. The high standard reached in recent years will be more than maintained. It will be surpassed. And the advance will continue, gathering impetus as it goes on.

In this definitely forward movement Associated Exhibitors, proud of its success and deeply appreciative of the many manifestations of approval which have met its past efforts, confidently expects to keep well in the van.

Mabel Normand Scales New Artistic Heights

It was in July last that a contract was signed under which Associated Exhibitors was to distribute the future Mack Sennett productions starring Mabel Normand. Immediately the prediction was made that with this affiliation Miss Normand would rise to new heights as a universally popular comedienne. This has been justified in overflowing measure by the reception accorded "The Extra Girl," in her first picture under the new management.

While therefore Mabel Normand had adhered closely to the portrayal of light dramatic and comedy roles, in "The Extra Girl" she demonstrates her right to be classed among the foremost emotional actresses of the screen.

This is the testimony of the critics.

"The Extra Girl" was written as well as produced by Mack Sennett, who prepared it especially for her, with her particular abilities in mind during the time of writing. It tells the story of a "movie-struck" country-town girl who seeks fame and fortune in Hollywood, only to find disappointment.

All the attendance records for the Mission were smashed, not only on the opening night of the indefinite run, but consistently during the ensuing week, though the picture encountered uncommonly strong competition. The newspaper comments were unanimously favorable. "Mabel is at her best," wrote Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Times. "She has, for her, a perfectly believable role. It's one that matches her personality much better than Suzanna, and she doesn't have to act." "The whole play is built for entertainment," said Florence Lawrence in the Examiner, while Guy Price declared in the Herald, "You're going to thrill over Miss Normand."

Mabel Normand is much more than a comedienne in "The Extra Girl." That is one of the points that the reviewers have united in emphasizing—that she shows in her new characterization her ability to follow the laughter of one moment with tears the next. Especially in the home scenes, and again when the family is faced with disaster, there are tugs at the heart-strings, and in such situations Miss Normand rises to heights which she had little opportunity to attain in her earlier pictures.

The contract between Mack Sennett and Associated Exhibitors calls for two, but not to exceed three productions a year, these to be pictures of the super-type exclusively. "The Extra Girl" was directed and produced under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, Mack Sennett's production manager.

The second of the Normand features for Associated, which is now in course of production, is "Mary Anne," which also is by Mr. Sennett and in which Miss Normand is again to have a role giving opportunity to her irresistible personality to force itself yet deeper in the affections of screen fans.

Associated Exhibitors Pictures Are Based on Public Demand

By J. S. WOODY,
General Manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Gone is the day of the make-it-and-see-a-market-later class of motion pictures. The present is the time when the public is making its wants clearly known to the exhibitor, when the exhibitor transmits that information to the distributor, and the distributor, in turn, orders from the producer a picture to be made after given plans and specifications—for an already prepared market.

Associated Exhibitors is proud to be playing a part in this process. We believe we are giving the picture fan what he desires most. We base this belief partly on the fact that we cause to be made for distribution by us the character of production that the exhibitor avowedly requires. And the exhibitor buys pictures simply and solely on the basis of values and box-office returns.

That the public does know what it wants, that the exhibitor is heedful of the popular demand, and that Associated's policy is the correct one we consider amply attested, moreover, by the box-office reports on those of the productions named in our current announcement which already have had showings: Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," and Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry?" Each of these has met a reception from theatre-goers and critics such as is accorded only an outstanding attraction of the very first order.

Associated is proud—justly proud—of this array of product. It is product in keeping with the policy we are sedulously careful to follow—to offer no production that is lacking the stamp of either character or quality. It is gratifying to know, too, that it is just such big time entertainment as this that the public insists upon having.

J. S. WOODY

The advantage of the process followed by the independent distributor and which is the fundamental basis of the Associated Exhibitors policy are many and manifest. Our close contact with the exhibitor, maintained through a carefully-selected and well-organized field staff, enables us to know exactly—or with as close an approach to exactness as is humanly possible—what kinds of pictures the exhibitor requires. It is our constant aim to keep our hand on the pulse of the man who runs the theatre. Thus, we are in a position to transmit exhibitor opinion and preference to the producer, to supply him with a vast fund of information and data of very great value to him.

In other words, we hand the producer a pattern to cut out and make up into a finished garment—in this case a motion picture whose character is in accordance with the consensus of exhibitor opinion throughout the country. Then we endeavor to exercise extreme vigilance, to the end that all mistakes may be detected and corrected while the picture is in the progress of making. Close supervision of whatever is made for us is essential to assure our receiving and delivering to the exhibitor what he wants. In the final analysis, then, the product is virtually exhibitor-made.

The adoption by many leading first run exhibitors of the policy of indefinite runs—retaining a film as long as it continues to attract—is only one demonstration of the independent distributor's importance to the industry as a whole. For it is obvious that only product of the highest quality can be used profitably in an indefinite run, and that product is most certain to be found in the wider field of selection which the independent distributor offers.

It is an axiom in our industry—in every industry that has to do with the furnishing of public entertainment, indeed—that close association with the exhibitor is based upon confidence. That we enjoy this confidence—as evidenced by results—is a source of deep and lasting gratification to us. Confidence is predicated on delivery of the goods, on achieving results, on making good.

So, Associated Exhibitors believes that in following consistently and steadfastly along the lines it early set out for itself and to which it has always adhered it is performing a service of very real value to the industry of which it is a part; to the exhibitor; without whom the business could not exist, and to the great pleasure-loving but thoughtful and discriminating public, to which, after all, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor alike must look for continued life and prosperity.

Harold Lloyd Working on Another Big Comedy

The Harold Lloyd comedies are progressively popular. That is to say, each succeeding one of his attractions proves a greater drawing card, a bigger money-getter than the one just before it. As "Why Worry?" is Mr. Lloyd's latest it might be said to have brought him to the climax of his fame,—had he not scaled to climactic heights several times before, and were he not even now at work on another production which, too, is certain to be a world-beater.

"Why Worry?" was the feature at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, during Labor Day week, and it packed 'em in so thickly and regularly that it was held over for a second week to accommodate the overflow. It caused Don Allen to observe in the Evening World: "Take it from us, if you see Harold in this, his most uproarious farce for months, you won't have a cause to worry."

The Evening Telegram's reviewer found "Why Worry?" Mr. Lloyd's "greatest humorous achievement to date," though he recalled "such admirably fine works of laughter as 'Grandma's Boy,' 'Dr. Jack' and 'Safety Last.'" The Evening Mail described the picture as "another of the successes which this gifted comedian is using to climb the ladder of fame to a place all his own in film comedy."

Such comments as these are typical of thousands which are uttered throughout the country during the triumphal march of the Lloyd picture. All the Lloyds enjoy the unique distinction that they excite no adverse criticism anywhere. Not only that, but it is doubtful if any ever read a Lloyd review which was merely lukewarm in its praise. Announcement of the coming of one of Harold's films is the signal for a run on every reviewer's stock of superlatives.

Just to cite one or two instances of "Why Worry?" triumphs, in addition to that on Broadway, New York, it should be said that this latest of big comedy features smashed every known record of Eastman Theatre, Buffalo, with a total attendance for a single week of 64,923 paid admissions. And at the West End Lyric, St. Louis, it opened to a capacity house, with an overflow crowd of two thousand, and the capacity houses and the overflows continued every day of the entire run.

But while each succeeding Harold Lloyd offering sets a new high water mark, the appearance of a new Lloyd never means the rejection of others which have gone before. Each of them possesses "lasting" qualities. Thus even now, while "Why Worry?" is approaching the zenith of its popularity, "Grandma's Boy" released more than a year ago, and others of his successes continue to smash records.

For one thing, the Lloyd pictures are all "different"—so different that frequently they inspire editorial praise in leading newspapers, which, except in the case of this superlative player is almost unheard of among picture actors. Perhaps the chief reason for this is that Harold does not resort to cheap humor of the slapstick, pumpkin pie variety to put his offerings across. Each of his screen plays is based on a real story, a definite purpose. In this connection it is interesting to note that it was Harold Lloyd who gave real comedy a definite place as the feature offering in theatre programs. None of his pictures is presented as the comedy supplement to a feature of another character. It is the whole work.

Mr. Lloyd is now at work on another production. All that is necessary to say of it is that it will be typically Lloydian—hence a mirthquake.

Title Changed

The title of the William de Mille Paramount production, which, filmed as "Everyday Love," features Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Nita Naldi, Theodore Kosloff and Rod La Rocque, has been changed to "Holiday Love."

Charles Ray Achieves Ambition of His Career

CHARLES RAY

In producing "The Courtship of Myles Standish," the most ambitious effort of his career, Charles Ray satisfied a life-long ambition. "I have had my heart set on just such a venture as this for a long time," he confided shortly before the premiere of this super-production, "and I am getting immense satisfaction out of the prospect of giving the public a picture it will remember longer than anything else I ever attempted."

No longer as a barefoot boy does Charles Ray appear on the screen, deeply as he endeared himself to the public in that very human and appealing characterization. He has attained full stature as the central figures in one of the colossal productions of all time.

In "The Courtship of Myles Standish" Mr. Ray has entered the limited realm of independent producer-stars who are seeking to draw from the art of the silver sheet the highest expression of its powers. Based on Longfellow's epic poem, in which America's first love story is told in the legend of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins, it unfolds a thrilling chapter of American history, the Great Adventure of the Pilgrim Fathers. The picture might aptly be titled, "The Founding of America."

"The Courtship" took Los Angeles by storm at its world premiere in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles. The house was packed to capacity, the audience gave audible demonstration of its pleasure, and crowds continued to besiege the box-office at all subsequent showings.

"When you see the brilliant and dramatic film which Charles Ray has constructed out of the old Longfellow poem you will stand amazed," declared Florence Lawrence in the San Francisco Examiner. "It will thrill every spectator. You will like Ray in his new characterization." "There is plenty of suspense," wrote L. B. Fowler in the Daily News. It is most thrilling. Don't miss this production. Don't pass it up."

The greatest thriller in the picture is the series of sea storm scenes, showing how the plucky little Mayflower was all but lashed to pieces in her memorable voyage to an unknown land. Such realistic scenes, declare the reviewers, never before were shown. The Mayflower, by the way, is an exact replica of the original, save that it is of steel construction, and represents a cost of $64,000. This "set" the most expensive of its dimensions ever built, is such a remarkable work of art that patriotic societies have urged that it be purchased and placed in a Los Angeles city park as a permanent memorial. From seventy to 100 men were employed for eleven weeks in this single construction.

"The Courtship of Myles Standish" is many-sided in that it makes a stirring appeal to every element of the picture-loving public. Its entertainment lure has been thoroughly attested by the newspaper and magazine reviewers. Fred Niblo, one of the most able and best known of picture directors, declared in a telegram to Arthur S. Kane that "In story, production, action, direction, it surpasses anything else in recent years."

As a literary, historical or educational document of value it probably has never been approached. Delegates to the convention in California of the National Educational Association, after witnessing a preview, acclaimed it the greatest educational work ever produced in film, and students of New England colonial history declare it shows the beginnings of America as they have never been revealed elsewhere, either on the printed page or on the silver sheet. And to the chorus of approval from students is added the testimony of the everyday picture-going layman, who finds in it a series of amazing thrills which arouse the enthusiasm of every onlooker. Frederic Sullivan, who had proved his genius in earlier offerings, directed the production.

Announcement that Charles Ray Production, Inc. had decided to make a number of super-productions, all of which would be placed with Associated Exhibitors for distribution, was one of the important news events of the past year in picture circles. Production work on "The Courtship of Myles Standish" was then well under way, and enough was known of the prodigiousness of the enterprise to give assurance that Associated had captured the picture prize of the last twelve-months. This was confirmed with the picture's premiere, in Los Angeles, a few weeks ago. The original announcement then proved of secondary importance only to the presentation of the production itself.

Douglas MacLean's Popularity on the Increase

The recent rapid rise of Douglas MacLean as a young comedian of considerable ability and deep appeal has been so marked as to attract the almost universal attention of picture-goers. He caused somewhat of a sensation in "23½ Hours Leave," and there was yet wider recognition of his sterling worth when he achieved an even greater success in "The Hottentot."

The announcement a few months ago, therefore, that he had organized his own company and was about to start independent production was greeted with enthusiasm, the public recognizing the broader opportunity to develop his ideas and give expression to his talents. Almost simultaneously came the news, likewise welcomed, that the young star had enlisted under the banner of Associated Exhibitors.

Accompanying these announcements was the information that Mr. MacLean's productions would be big comedy specials of the type of "The Hottentot," picturizations of successful plays or well known stories by noted authors. To this policy the young actor has adhered, his first independent production being a screened version of the Broadway musical comedy hit, "Going Up," and his second, now under way, being adapted from the equally popular stage success, "The Yankee Consul."

What Mr. MacLean has accomplished with "Going Up" is perhaps best attested by Frank Craven, star in the stage production, who, having seen the screen offering declared: "I want to tell you how thoroughly I enjoyed my preview of 'Going Up.' All the old laughs and situations were there and your additions to the comedy as we played it really add."

The story concerns the young author of a book about flying who is forced through a chain of comic circumstances actually to make a flight, though he has never been in an airplane. The high point of the stage drama was reached where the young author was up in the air, risking his life in a 'plane which he didn't know how to bring back to earth. Stage craftsmanship proved incapable of showing the aviator up among the clouds, trying to control his machine—side-slipping, whirling into spinning nose-dives and breath-taking loops.

In the screen version, on the other hand, Douglas MacLean is shown braving the dizzy heights of thin air, making a thousand hair-breadth escapes in a series of aerial manoeuvres which leave the spectator dazed with excitement. Thus, in his first production he not only has proved himself a star of the first magnitude but has gone far to win a decisive victory for the silent drama in the long controversy over the respective merits of stage and screen productions.

The Free Press, of Detroit, where the MacLean picture recently closed a highly successful run in the Madison Theatre, declared: "Going Up" is one of the most delightful of recent pictures and will endear this clever young actor-producer to screen producers everywhere." John H. Kunsky, the Madison's owner, added even more enthusiastic praise, inspired in part by tremendously gratifying box-office report.

In New York "Going Up" enjoyed a remarkable run and blase Broadway was demonstrative in its approval. "The laughter almost drowns out the work of the musicians," wrote the reviewer of the New York Times. "Going Up" is a better picture than it ever was a play or musical comedy," said Harriette Underhill in the Tribune, and Robert E. Sherwood, picture critic of the New York Herald and of Life described Mr. MacLean as "one of the few adroit farceurs of the silent drama. He is suave, graceful and well-finished in his methods, he can get along comfortably without the aid of obvious gags. He is excellent all the way through."

Jack Partington wired to J. S. Woody from San Francisco: "Going Up" is far better than 'The Hottentot' or '23½ Hours Leave.' It gave us one of the most successful weeks, artistically and financially, in the Granada's history. You have a winner." From Pittsburgh, Kansas City, every city and town, indeed, in which "Going Up" has shown, have come equally demonstrative expressions of approval—all of them affording convincing evidence that Douglas MacLean made the ten-strike of his life when he struck out as his own producer.

Mr. MacLean's selection for his second production, that other well knockout musical comedy, "The Yankee Consul," will be remembered as the vehicle which brought fame to Raymond Hitchcock.

DOUGLAS MacLEAN

A. S. Kane Goes to Los Angeles to Negotiate for New Product

To look after matters affecting productions now being handled by his organization, and to negotiate with producers who have in mind the making of new product of the same high calibre, is the double purpose of Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, who is leaving for Los Angeles in a few days. Mr. Kane expects to remain in California several weeks at the least.

"I have long coveted the opportunity to devote more time to production affairs," said Mr. Kane yesterday. "This has been made possible since the acquisition by Associated Exhibitors of Mr. J. S. Woody as general manager.

"Associated Exhibitors is immensely pleased with the reception accorded the 1923-24 attractions it has so far placed before the public. 'Going Up,' now appearing in every territory of the country, has given to theatres that have shown or are showing it their best weeks of the season so far.

"With Charles Ray in 'The Courtship of Myles Standish' well launched on an indefinite run in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, and Mabel Normand indefi-nately at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, in 'The Extra Girl,' these two great features have started their careers in a wonderful way and proved themselves among the outstanding hits of the current season.

"Harold Lloyd in 'Why Worry?' is enjoying the greatest success ever attained by this remarkable comedian. 'Tea—With a Kick!' meanwhile, and Leah Baird in 'The Destroying Angel' are off to a great start. These attractions illustrate the standard Associated Exhibitors has set for itself and which it is determined to maintain."

HAROLD LLOYD

Who is working on another big comedy

"Going Up" Scores at the Big Eastman Theatre in Rochester

Everyone who has seen Douglas MacLean in his super-flying comedy release for Associated Exhibitors, "Going Up," agrees that it is his outstanding success to date and one that will take a lot of trying to produce a better, says Associated Exhibitors, and bidding for first runs among exhibitors throughout the country has been extremely keen.

During the run at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., recently, the manager arranged with the Eastman School of Music to lend him some of its pupils for the occasion, and several of the melodies from the musical comedy, "Going Up," were sung as a prologue to the picture.

William P. Costello said of the picture in a review in the Rochester Journal: "Mr. MacLean is splendid, as usual. Here is a young comedian who amuses quite consistently."

R. F. said in a New York letter to the Christian Science Monitor, Boston: "Played by marionettes, 'Going Up' would still be a comedy prize. Now that it has reached the screen, with the added serial adventuring that the camera makes possible and the infectious pleasantries of Douglas MacLean to boot, the film version is particularly rich in kindling humors."

F. N. Phelps Praises "Tea—With a Kick"

The Hennepin-Orpheum Theatre, in Minneapolis, is known throughout the country for the high quality of its offerings and the astuteness of its management. There is very little that gets by such a live-wire showman as F. N. Phelps, the manager. In a letter to Associated Exhibitors he praised "Tea—with a Kick" highly.

Gives Big Praise to "David Copperfield"

Under the heading, "A Model of Condensation," the Minneapolis Journal of a few days ago warmly praised the showing of Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield" at the Hennepin-Orpheum Theatre, and declared: "If we were Will Hays we would sentence every maker of 12-reel films to a weekly viewing of this picture." The Journal said in part:

"To film David Copperfield in sufficient detail to satisfy the confirmed reader of Dickens would be to produce a photoplay of inordinate length; even a production which included in its scope all of the numerous characters in this book strikes one as impractical, even if not inconceivable.

"The photoplay at the Hennepin-Orpheum this week has condensed in seven reels the life of David Copperfield, and because there are so few sins of commission in the picture we can readily forgive those of omission—even the excluding from the film of Little Em'ly.

"We regard the picture as a model of condensation; a picture which, if memory of the book has grown rusty in years, will pleasantly recall the characters that once sprang from its pages in flesh and blood—David, Micawber, Peggotty, Dora, Agnes, Uriah Heep, the Murdstones and others. The simplicity with which the film has been produced is admirable; big scenes and lavish sets have been entirely subordinated to the more important task of character delineation.

Darnton with Fox

Charles Darnton, who has been dramatic critic on the New York Evening World for the last twenty-one years, has joined the scenario department of Fox Film Corporation, and is now at the West Coast studios of the company.

Charles Ray Triumphs in "The Girl I Loved"

Three weeks ago Charles Ray opened his stage tour of "The Girl I Loved" at the Spreckles Theatre in San Diego, and was hailed by the newspapers as a genius in the role he portrays as the bashful farmer boy. So great was the ovation at the premiere that it almost reached the magnitude of a Broadway opening.

From San Diego Mr. Ray moved on to the Broadway Theatre, Denver. The reviewers for the papers also were flattering to Mr. Ray and the stage presentation, and the Denver audiences were more than enthusiastic. How greatly the play pleased the critics is shown by the following reviews from Denver papers:

George Loons in The Denver Express: "Charles Ray is a magnificent actor. His is the art of pantomime developed to the highest degree. But besides this he has a voice that takes its color from the situation as subtly as do the muscles of his body and the expression of his face. 'The Girl I Loved,' too, is a poignant, poetic and exquisite bit of romance. It is a faithful presentation of youth and youth's love as they used to be before youth was slain by the war. Ray's style tends toward the simple, the pathetic, the unsuccessful. And he is an artist."

F. E. W. in The Denver Post: "At the Broadway is 'The Girl I Loved,' in which Charles Ray gives one of the finest and most original exhibitions of acting I have ever seen. It is well worth seeing just for Ray's acting. * * * It is after he has grown to man's estate and has to convey to the audience, without the aid of words, the torment of his secret that he is masterful. Such pantomime I have never seen! * * * His work is probably prophetic of a new and convincing style of acting that the movies may give the stage."

Helen Black in The Rocky Mountain News, Denver: "There are certain interpretations of an awkward, shy youth who, even when he grows up, never quite achieves poise that will always be associated with Charles Ray, and the character of the farmer boy provides him with an opportunity to display all of these in addition to a dramatic ability which is best disclosed in the half-mad dreams of the half-crazed youth. Charles Ray is the whole show."

Added to Cast

Immediately after the completion of Universal's "Lady of Quality," Earl Foxe accepted the offer of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to play the light-heavy in "Innocence." He will therefore appear opposite Anna Q. Nilsson, who was secured for the principal female role in this production.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

First of "Secrets of Life" Leads Educational's November Schedule

Included in Educational's November schedule which calls for four two-reel comedies and five single-reel subjects, is "The Ant," the first of the new series of single-reel subjects recently acquired from Principal Pictures Corporation. This series issued under the general title of "Secrets of Life," is the work of Louis H. Tolhurst, a young inventor who perfected a "cool" light process which has enabled him to secure wonderful microscopic pictures of insect life. At previews in Los Angeles and New York these single-reel subjects received great praise from the press because of the manner in which they have cleverly combined entertainment and instruction and it is predicted that they will find a ready welcome with all classes of patrons. "The Ant" will be released the first week in the month.

The four two-reel comedies are as follows: Two Christies, "Fool Proof," starring Neal Burns, released first week of November, and "A Perfect 36," released the third week of the month, starring Bobby Vernon; a Mermaid Comedy, "Uncle Sam," which is the second of this brand featuring Lee Moran and a star cast including such well-known comedians as George Ovey and Hank Mann; and a Tuxedo Comedy, "No loafing," featuring "Poodles" Hannefor, the celebrated Hippodrome clown, who was so well received in the first Tuxedo "Front." It will be released the last week in November.

In addition to "The Ant," the single-reel comedies include two Cameos, "Hang On," released the second week, featuring Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, and "Hot Sparks," for the last week featuring the same players. There will also be a Lyman H. Howe "Hodge Podge" entitled "The Bottom of the Sea," for release the final week, and the fourth of the "Sing Them Again" series under the title, "Memories," for the third week in November.

Julius Stern Here

Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, is in New York for consultation with his brother Abe particularly with reference to Baby Peggy features. The two brothers are also arranging details for their contemplated cross-country tour of exchange centres. Mr. Stern will remain in New York for an indefinite period.

Pathe Announces New Comedies

Pathe announces that Will Rogers' newest comedy will be "The Two Covered Wagons," a travesty on "The Covered Wagon." Rogers has a dual role, appearing in the widely different roles portrayed by J. Warren Kerrigan and Ernest Torrance in the feature.

"Ten Dollars or Ten Days" is the title of the latest Mack Sennet comedy for Pathe, starring Ben Turpin, who appears as a soda dispenser in a department store. Harry Gribbon is cast as a ribbon clerk.

Another Mack Sennet comedy for early Pathe distribution is "The Light-House," which was filmed around light-houses on the coast, and offers thrills as well as laughs. Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon and Kalla Pasha are in the cast.

Hodge-Podge Praised

Educational reports that the series of Lyman H. Howe "Hodge-Podge" single-reelers is meeting with great success in England, and is receiving praise from the trade press. The "Film Renter and Motion Picture News" said regarding a portion of one of the issues which showed "A Hurry-Up Excursion to Washington, D. C.," it is even more exciting than a "Ride on a Runaway Train," which it resembles, and which played six times on Broadway, New York. "A more striking and entertaining short feature series has never been offered to the trade," says that publication.

Injects Novelty

Louis H. Tolhurst, whose series of single reel "Secrets of Life" are being distributed by Educational, states that the fourth subject in this series will show the most unusual scenes ever screened—that of a caterpillar transforming from its worm-like form into the cocoon stage.

Unusual Feat

In search of novelty F. B. O. has injected a pirate sequence into Episode 9 of "Fighting Blood," while in number eight of this series there is a barge fight fashioned after the historic barge battles between Corbett and Joe Choyniski and other fighters.

Grantland Rice Making Series of One-Reel Sport Films for Pathe

Another instance of Pathe's expanding activities in the short subject field is the announcement that plans have been completed for the distribution of a series of single-reel sport pictures to be known as "Sportlights." They will be produced by J. L. Hawkinson from stories by Grantland Rice, the well-known newspaper and magazine writer on sporting activities and editor of the American Golfer.

It is stated that these pictures will be different from any previous sport films and will present such phases of the different sports as are characteristically thrilling and dramatic, at the same time presenting in constructive fashion the technique that has made champions.

"Sportlights" will be released every two weeks beginning with

December 16. The first will be "Wild and Woolly" which visualizes a typical western rodeo. The second which will appeal particularly to the women is "The Super-Sex," which in a humorous and thrilling manner contrasts the girl of yesterday with the amazingly dashing and vigorous and robust out-door girl of today.

The third, "The National Rash," deals with golf, shows Sarazen, Bobby Jones and various women "champs" in action and traces the development of the game from its origin in Scotland until the present day. The fourth, "Taking a Chance," presents thrilling moments in football, horsejumping, etc., and aims to demonstrate the value of nerve at the crucial moments in creating champions.

The fifth is "Great Competitors" and shows Devereaux Milburn and Thomas Hitchcock in polo, Babe

Ruth and Frank Frisch in baseball, Tilden and Johnson in tennis, Max Marsten in amateur golf, and Alma Mann in swimming. The sixth, "Stadiums and Solitude," affords flashes of quiet and secluded outdoor sports like hunting and fishing contrasted with frenzied arenas of football and baseball.

Extensive newspaper co-operation is planned to assist in exploiting this series. Mr. Rice's articles are syndicated under the title applied to the series and his newspaper "Sportlights" have won a large following. This should prove of great value in winning new patrons.

Pathe's exploitation department is also preparing elaborate campaign material, and tie-ups with local sport writers will be effected in the key cities. A syndicate mat service on "Kings of Sport" will be another feature of the campaign.

Four Century Two-Reel Comedies Scheduled for November Release

For November Universal will release four Century comedies. Each is the product of a different director, and are said to be characterized by fast action and numerous original and decidedly humorous touches.

"Golfmania" heads the list as the first release. In this comedy Earle is assisted by Billy Engle in his golf antics. Both are would-be champions, who meet with a variety of comedy adventures.

"Down to the Ship to See," starring Pal, the dog comedian, was directed by Al Herman, and is said to be an exceptionally suitable vehicle for Pal. Roscoe Karns plays the leading human role in this two-reeler

"She's a He" is Buddy Messinger's offering for the month. Buddy is cast as a plumber's assistant and he also appears in a girl's garb in certain scenes. Several of Century's popular comedians are in the supporting cast.

"Miles of Smiles," starring Baby Peggy, is said to be her most unusual offering.

"All-Stars" Liked

Hodkinson reports that enthusiastic reports have been received from exhibitors throughout the country on the series of thirteen All-Star Comedies produced by C. C. Burr, starring Charles Murray. Each of these two-reelers is based on a real plot, around which is woven comedy incidents, and continued heavy booking attest their popularity, says Hodkinson.

Novelty in "Topics"

Beginning with No. 42 Pathe announces that "Topics of the Day" will present each week a "Sketchograph" by Julian Ollendorf, the celebrated artist and creator of screen novelties. They will deal with items of timely interest.

"Heads Up"(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

In this single reel Cameo comedy distributed by Educational there is, as usual, an abundance of rough and tumble action and though there are some familiar stunts the comedy throughout should prove entirely satisfactory to the average audience and get many laughs. Cliff Bowes appears as a clerk in a general store with George Ovey as the storekeeper and Ruth Hiatt as his pretty daughter. There is a good comedy sequence involving a little negro and a can of glue, a trio of village musketeers who do stunts around the store stove and a chase between the villain, who has kidnapped the girl, and the hero on a motorcycle.—C. S. S.

"Golfmania"(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Amateur golfers are guilty of amusing blunders in this comedy on the pursuit of the elusive white ball. The caddy willingly loses a loose tooth while one of the men learns while the other one has to do some deep sea diving to recover his ball. The game ends in the appearance of a big, black bear who creates havoc in the country club. The subject should be particularly appealing to some, and the treatment is entertaining, on the whole. Billy Engle and Jack Earl are featured.—M. K.

"Southbound Limited"(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

The business of concealing a dog from a train conductor's watchful eye produces a lot of fun in this Monte Banks comedy. Our hero boards the train with neither fare nor ticket, but grafts his way easily enough, until a pretty young woman hands over her dog to his charge. There are a good many laughs in this one and a vivid train wreck as a closing thrill.—M. K.

Hustlin' Hank (Pathe)
Lucky Rube (Grand-Asher)
Mark It Paid (Grand-Asher)

So Long Sultan (Universal)
Southbound Limited (Grand-Asher)
Twilight Trail (Universal)
Up in the Air (Fox)
Uncle Sam (Educational)

"So Long Sultan"(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

While this is rather obvious amusement, the harem scenes carry some appeal and Chuck Reisner's buffoonery will bring a few laughs. He disguises himself as a dancer in order to break into the Sultan's domain and gets material for a story on the paper which he represents. His deceit is detected but a "Detroit baby" comes to his rescue.—M. K.

"Do Women Pay?"(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

The favorite theme of the innocent girl being lured away by a villain who locks her in a lonely cabin and then proceeds to get drunk is handled by Paul Terry in exceptionally vivid style. The mouse and his sweetheart are finally reunited after no end of melodramatic feats. All of it, including the aeroplane finish, will recall the usual screen thriller and its powers of amusement should be great.—M. K.

"Up in the Air"(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Thrills and laughs are rather abundant in this Imperial Comedy in which Charles Conklin and Harry Sweet do most of the stunts. Falling down elevator shafts and balancing on a narrow edge of a high building, they provide some highly sensational moments. The comedy has been well directed and will keep the average fan amused throughout its entire length.—M. K.

"Lucky Rube"(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

Sid Smith makes the best of the material here which is only fairly amusing. It is the story of the country blacksmith, who goes to the city on a mission for his sweetheart's father and comes back with new clothes and ideas. Under his reformed sway cowpaths are discarded for motor thoroughfares and the smithy goes out of business. It has a few laughs and Sid Smith's pantomime is a great help.—M. K.

"Dear Ol' Pal"(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

"Snub" Pollard and Paul Parrott in Alphonse-and-Gaston roles are the polite rivals in a love affair. The number has some good comedy and some vigorous action after the girl's pearls are stolen, and the two rivals, tied for a one-legged race at the picnic, start after the thief. The general mood is rather different and should go well.—M. K.

"The Twilight Trail"(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Universal is offering the usual amount of entertainment in this Western which features Margaret Morris. The plot concerns a frame-up on a rancher who fights an honest duel but is accused of murder when his opponent is mysteriously shot. There is good riding, fair suspense and a pleasing heroine to make it interesting.—M. K.

"Uncle Sam"(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Lee Moran makes his second appearance in Mermaid comedies in this number in which he appears as the favorite heir of a wealthy relative who feigns death to get a line on his would-be heirs. Through the timely assistance of an onion, which another "heir" is eating, Lee weeps and wins out. The picture has an unusual comedy cast from a box-office standpoint, for in addition to Moran, Han Mann, George Ovey and Brownie, the well-known dog, have prominent roles while Ruth Hiatt appears as the girl. There are a number of clever subtitles and situations that the majority of patrons will enjoy and this comedy should prove a good box-office attraction.—C. S. S.

"Hustlin' Hank"(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Will Rogers scores again, this time as camera man to a feminist determined to get some photographs of wild life. The scenes where he pursues the bear in an effort to get his picture are hilarious, as are some of Rogers' esthetic poses and his manners at the first tea party. It is all very good entertainment, well marked with the star's distinctive personality and talent.—M. K.

"Mark It Paid"(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

Joe Rock comes to the rescue of his sweetheart's father (who is going broke in the hotel business) with a clever scheme for attracting guests. He circulates the report that a fortune is concealed in one of the rooms. A rival hotel manager loses all his guests, but holds a mortgage on the prospering establishment, which our hero pays at the last minute after a hazardous journey. Billy Rhodes supports the star in this number which is lively and amusing.—M. K.

Showmen Use Big "Ad" Space for Educational's Comedies

More and more are exhibitors demonstrating their faith in the pulling power of short subjects by playing them up in their exploitation and newspaper advertising. Press critics are also devoting more space to reviews on the one and two-reelers. As an example of this, two Educational comedies recently came in for their share along this line.

Loew's State Theatre in Cleveland in its newspaper advertising featured the first Tuxedo Comedy, "Front," with "Poodles" Hanneford above the feature production, while the Allen Theatre in the same city divided its newspaper space fifty-fifty between the feature and the Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "The Optimist," and the same comedy got an even break with the feature in the electric signs for Loew's State theatre in Los Angeles.

In addition, "The Optimist" received not only an exceptional amount of space in the newspaper reviews in Cleveland and Los Angeles and other cities but also received high praise. The Cleveland Plain Dealer says it cinches Hamilton in place in the trio, Chaplin, Keaton and Hamilton, while the Los Angeles Record calls it a priceless snatch of a whimsical burlesque.

"Leatherstocking" Serial Is Under Way

Pathe announces that all preliminaries have been completed for production of the serial which C. W. Patton will make, based on James Fenimore Cooper's "Leatherstocking Tales." George Seitz will direct, and Robert Dillon has prepared the scenario. Harold Miller, who played the lead in the new Seitz serial, "The Way of Man," will have the lead in this picture with Edna Murphy playing opposite. Vernon Walker is the photographer.

Two Educational at Broadway Houses

The current week finds two releases of Educational on the programs of prominent Broadway houses. "By Lantern Light," a Bruce Wilderness Tale, accompanies "The Drivin' Fool" during a run at the Cameo, while the Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "Extra! Extra!" is on the bill with Wesley Barry in "The Country Kid" at the Rialto Theatre.

Will Rogers Two-Reeler on Pathe List for November 11 speed and energy under the stimulus of a champion of progressive feminism.

The Ruth Roland serial "Ruth of the Range" brings the heroine to an exotic island where the constituents of the coal substitute are in a pit of lava. New perils await her here. Another of the new series of single-reel comedies starring Snub Pollard is "Dear Ol' Pal," in which Paul Parrott and Snub appear as friendly rivals for a girl, with each one determined to remain gentlemanly toward the other at all costs.

The current Aesop Fable gives an amusing version of the question, "Do Women Pay?" Pathe Review 45 shows "In the Land of the Ojibways," a study of the American Indian; "Storing Energy," dealing with the storage battery, a color section "The Craggs of the Barons" and two sections, "A Singer in Siam" and "Pussy Poses" which are picturesque and distinctly humorous.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Measuring Condensers

Wilbur J. Camlin, projectionist, Paramount Theatre, Connellsville, Pa., has the following to say:

Have been a reader of your department for three years and am interested in the advancement of motion picture projection. I want advice upon a very simple, yet to me a perplexing question.

The supply house in Pittsburgh where we get all our parts and accessories does not send the condensers we order. At present I am using a 6½-7½ plano convex combination. The 6½ lens seems much heavier than the other, and now that the preliminary explaining has been done I will get at the question which is bothering me, viz.: Is there any way in which I can measure a condenser to find its proper size? Please advise me through the department.

I had the latest edition of the handbook (Bluebook) and gave it away as a present. Have sent my order for another. It is, I think, the most complete work ever written on projection. Thanks for its help; also for the aid the department supplies.

Friend Camlin, the fact that one lens is heavier than the other is as it naturally would be, since the 6½ plano convex lens is thicker than is the 7½, hence has greater weight of glass. See figure 32, page 134 of the Bluebook, or page 96 of the Third Edition for explanation. Moreover, you may find that the 6½ lens has a thick edge and the 7½ a thin one, or vice versa, which means nothing optically, except that there will be a bit more light absorption in the thick-edged than in the thin-edged lens. See page 167 of Bluebook. It does mean, though, that there is unnecessary surplus of glass, hence added weight; also that the very thick edged lens won't fit the holder rightly, and in some holders will be held too high, so that its center will be above the optical axis of the lens system.

As to measuring the lenses separately, which is what I presume you mean when you say "measure the condenser," there is no method I know of by which you can measure them with absolute accuracy, because of the great amount of spherical aberration contained in the beam from such a lens. You may, however, measure with accuracy so close that the error is negligible by following the plan described on pages 153-154 of the Bluebook; also they may be measured by the method described on page 151, which is as follows: Select a room with only one window, or else darken all windows but one, leaving this one open. On the wall opposite the open window pin a sheet of white paper. Hold the lens to be measured in front of the paper screen thus established, with its flat side towards the screen, and very carefully focus some DISTANT object, such as a building or tree, on the paper screen. Be careful to hold the lens as nearly as possible square with the screen.

Having focused the object as sharply as possible, measure the exact distance from flat side of lens to screen. Next reverse lens so its curved side is toward the screen, re-focus the same object, and again measure from flat side of lens to screen. Add these two measurements together and divide by two. The result will be the focal length (NOT "size," Friend Camlin, but FOCAL LENGTH) of the lens under consideration, as closely as you can measure it by this process. If you have focused the object care-

Notice! Notice!

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the Spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear, keep away and keep his hands off the name "projection room."

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "projection room" and disapproves "projector room." One local, Rock Island-Moline No. 433, has officially endorsed "projection room" and objected to "projector room." I would like to see other locals come to life and do the same, remembering that the nomenclature adopted by the S. M. P. E. will become standard.

Wake up, men, and show your interest. Write your endorsement of "projection room" on a separate sheet—as an entirely separate letter, which may be sent in the same envelope with another letter, if you wish. GET BUSY!

fully the result will be near enough for all practical purposes.

Glad you like the book and the department, but remember that the book is NOT to lay up on a shelf, but to STUDY. A good plan is to start in on those questions in the back and learn the right answer to every one of them.

Weaver Douser

J. M. Jacobs, Box 484, South Boston, Mass., writes to ask the address of the maker of the Weaver Douser, described on page 870 of the Bluebook. Also what advantage I think accrues from its use.

This illustrates the difficulties encountered in the making of a book. The Weaver device looked good and was practical. It seemed that something of the sort was needed to take the place of the various make-shift devices now generally used, so, on the positive assurance of the sponsors of the Weaver that it would be promptly marketed and vigorously pushed, I allotted space to it, since which I have neither seen or heard of either the Weaver Douser or its makers.

The advantage of such a device as against the various arrangements now in use is dependability, efficiency and LOOKS. This latter is of importance in high grade installations.

Replying to friend Jacobs' question as to the address of the makers of the Weaver, I have not the slightest idea where they now are or if they now are.

Values It Highly

Allen Potts, projectionist, Strand Theatre, Miles City, Montana, orders a lens chart and says:

I just can't get along without your lens chart.

Evidently he had the old one and knows how much it helped. The new one is really a wonder in its completeness. At the late meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, one of the engineers said to me: "Richardson, that new lens chart is a wonder. It works out to perfection." I am sorry I did not make a note of his name, for I am sure it was one of the optical men.

Boulder, Colorado

E. C. Caywood, projectionist, Curran Theatre, Boulder, Colorado, shakes his fist under the editorial nose as follows:

Members of local 608 and the Boulder theatre managers read the article, September 8 issue, headed "Dangerous Outrage," with much interest.

For ten years past I have been projectionist in this theatre. In all that time I have no recollection of any film fire, or "explosion," which has even so much as excited the audience of any Boulder theatre. I thoroughly agree with you that the publication of such a misleading statement constitutes a dangerous outrage, especially in the magazine which I have subscribed to for a number of years because of its truthful projection department! (Wham! O golly, what a jolt!—Ed.)

As regards shop-worn projection equipment, we have no such animal in our fair city. Here in the Curran I have two late type Simplex projectors, a G. E. series arc M. G. set and a Westinghouse mercury arc rectifier.

The Isis Theatre projection room, which has been in charge of brother L. Brazda for a number of years, has two Motlograph De Luxe projectors and a Westinghouse M. G. set.

Will you kindly print the complete article you have from a paper published in Boulder, or else inform me as to the name of the paper? I do not remember having read any such article in any of our papers.

I begin to think friend Caywood is imbued with the idea that I've taken the truth by the neck and slammed its head against a tree—that no such article was published, and the worst of it is that I am unable to prove him wrong.

For years I kept every bit of correspondence on file for a year. It was an immense job, took lots of labor and space, and not one letter in a thousand was ever referred to. Of late years I have retained only such letters, etc., as seemed to have probable value for future reference, which the Boulder matter did not appear to have. It therefore went into the discard.

As I remember it, the facts are as follows: A paper, or one sheet of it, came from Colorado. It WAS a Boulder paper. I used the headlines of the explosion article merely as illustrative of the danger arising from such idiotic writings.

I glanced through the article. Now I am not sure—I may have the Boulder article confused, as to particulars, with another somewhat similar thing sent in in the form of a newspaper clipping some while back—but it seems to me the story was that there was a fire in a small theatre in some small town in that section, and that the fire was "covered" by a new reporter, or a space-writer rather, who happened to be there. Mind you, I am not certain as to this, but I think that was the Boulder publication story.

Anyhow, I am certain the fire in question was not in Boulder, and I agree that I should have said so in my article. Pardon the slip. It evidently did not occur to me that every one would assume the fire to have been in your city, and that you would not exactly approve of that.

I would give ten perfectly good dollars if I had that danged clipping now, just so I could rub it under brother Caywood's nose and tell him to go chase himself. For I do object to have a friend suspect me of lying when there is nothing to be gained by it. If I stood to accumulate, say, $111,111.00 or so by warping the truth slightly—well, that might be something else again.

The whole thing was bona fide, brother Caywood, though I should have noted the fact that the fire in question was not in your city. The publication certainly was.

Generator Wanted

C. D. Rawlins, projectionist Chrystal Theatre, Gilmer, Texas, says:
Dear Mr. Richardson:—Though I have been an interested reader of your department for several years, this is my first letter to it. The Chrystal Theatre, where I am employed, is considering the installation of a motor generator set—gasoline motor—to supply current for the entire theatre. If I have calculated correctly this will call for an eight (8) KW. output. The management has called upon me for advice.

Not having been previously interested in equipment of this type, I do not know where to obtain same, hence ask that you will turn a bit of light in this general direction.

I have rather lost track of this class of equipment of late, but will refer your letter to where it should get intelligent attention. There once was a number of outfits such as you want on the market, but they all seem to have dropped out of sight, presumably for the reason that there was not sufficient demand for them in the industry to make it pay.

If any of our readers has anything of value to suggest to friend Rawlins let them address him directly and at once.

Help for Wildwood

John A. Maurer, Projectionist Lincoln Theatre, Massillon, Ohio, says:

Forgive me for butting in again. Have no desire to monopolize attention, but feel that the letter of Ray Phillips, Wildwood, New Jersey, Sept. 29 issue, deserves attention, though considering delay in publication, etc., it will probably be too late to help him. However, others may have the same difficulty.

Obviously the trouble in his case is that his crater is too large to give him a spot of proper diameter at the distance at which his small diameter projection lens compels him to place his condenser. Looking over his data I note that he is using 3/4 inch positive carbons for fifty amperes D. C., which is, in any case, inefficient, as may be seen on pages 378-387 of the Bluebook. In this case the inefficiency is aggravated by the fact that fifty amperes will form a decidedly larger crater on a 3/4 carbon than it would on a 5/8 or a 9-16. In other words, in addition to being inefficient in itself, this arc is making it difficult to devise an efficient condenser combination.

By way of making a practical test I burned craters on carbons of the three sizes named for fifteen minutes each, with the ammeter constantly at fifty amperes. I believe this is amply long to determine the final crater size. You will find impressions of the craters resulting attached hereto.

Don't Blame Phillips

I do not blame Phillips for what he is doing because, for some reason to me incomprehensible, most carbon manufacturers recommend 3/4-inch positive for fifty amperes. I believe if he will try one of the smaller sizes, and take the time and trouble to get used to handling an arc with the smaller carbon (it tends to act in a different way), he will be able to do much better with the whole proposition.

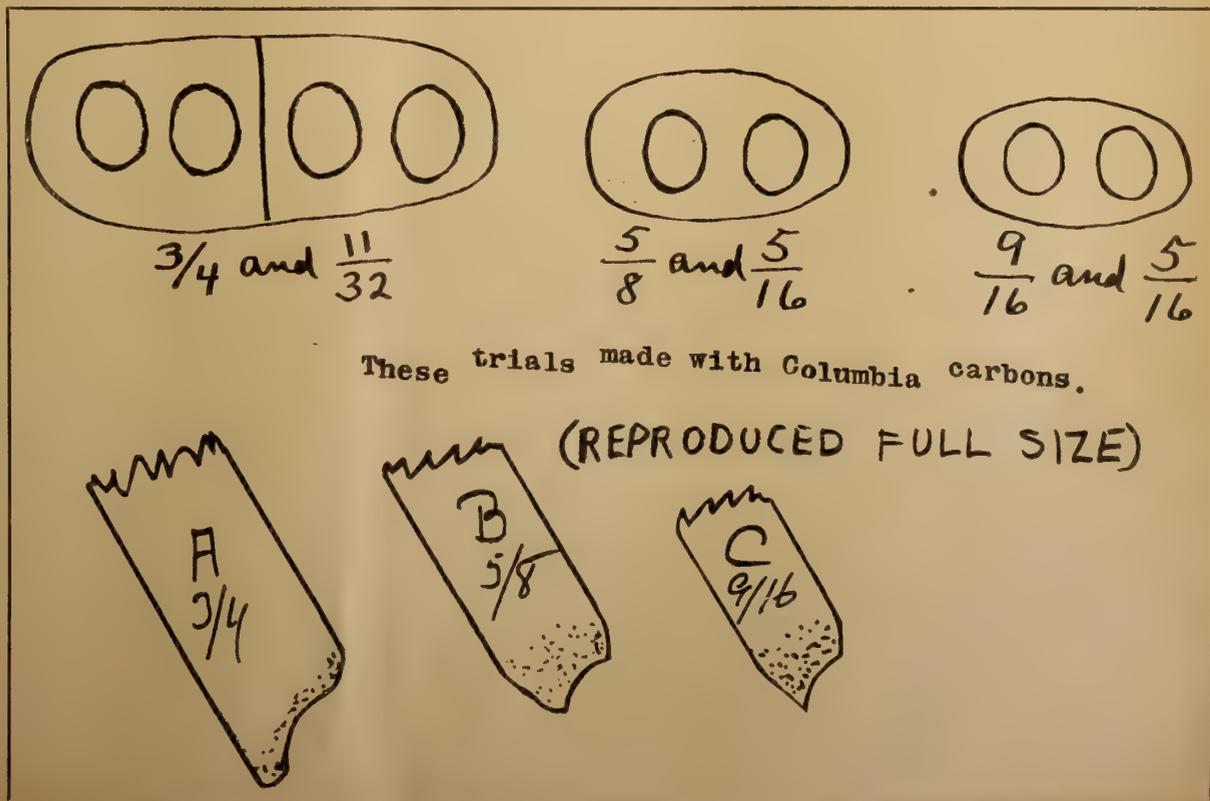

Under the condition he describes I would try a 9-16 positive and a 5-16 metal-plated negative, with a 6 1/2-7 1/2 M. Bi-C condenser placed 18 inches from the aperture. This should give a crater 19-64ths of an inch in horizontal diameter, and a spot of nearly the right size. He might even find that he will get better results by using 45 to 48 amperes and the 9-16 positive, than with the full fifty amperes and a 3/4 positive. This latter is suggested in case he is unable to make the 9-16 carry the fifty amperes, though I think he can with the type generator he is using.

No man need fear "butting in," because he can't when he says something I believe to be of interest to our readers, and by golly a man who writes this sort of dope should have space.

As to the crater diameters, I am myself surprised. This thing has never been brought up in quite this way before, and it is exactly the way it should have been presented years ago. I wish we might have had an outline drawing of those carbon tips. I think the lesser diameter shown by the smaller carbons is due to what I have shown, or tried crudely to show in the sketch I have made at A-B-C. My own contention has always been, and it has been borne out by tests, that the unnecessarily large carbon produces a lowered crater brilliancy per unit area by reason of the large amount of comparatively cool carbon immediately adjacent to it.

As to the other phase of the matter, I think we would all welcome discussion from men who feel competent to help. Griffith might well give up his views, and there are others we would be glad to hear from. You have, it seems to me, opened a path we may well explore to its end. It is not a new one, but you seem to have shown it in a new light.

Exact reproduction of diagrams of carbon craters obtained through practical tests by Projectionist John A. Maurer. Brother Maurer burned craters on three sizes of carbons as indicated for fifteen minutes each, with the ammeter constantly at fifty amperes.

These trials made with Columbia carbons.

A Message from An Organ Builder. A Great Little Theatre. Putting Up a Good Front.

IN our issue of October 27, we published a communication from an exhibitor who wanted a small organ at a moderate price.

Here is what an organ manufacturer who read that letter writes.

I am interested in the letter from the Honduran exhibitor. It is in line with my views, and I am becoming more convinced that my views are correct every day and incidentally more disgusted with the modern method of advertising, so far as it applies to the theatre organ business.

* * * An organ can be produced for the smaller house that will be a real musical instrument without a fancy price. Lots of builders do it, but exhibitors are all frightened off by the published high prices of organs.

* * * I know you fellows are out to get business and doubtless you will get more money from those fellows than you would out of advertising of the builders of legitimate organs, but you would in the end get the organ business on its feet in way that the buyer would be protected.

Never mind the builder, he hasn't any rights at any rate but this method of advertising and throwing the "bull" hurts the small exhibitor.

If the conditions in the organ business, today, are as bad as the writer of the above believes them to be and if the exhibitor is delaying putting his name on the dotted line of a contract because he wants an effective musical instrument of low cost, it would appear that there is considerable business awaiting the manufacturer of moderate priced organs who will advertise them.

In fact, if our organ builder correspondent would come right out and, over his own signature in the advertising columns, tell his story to our readers in language as straightforward as his letter, we believe that he would do much to remedy the conditions of which he complains.

So far as "we fellows" of the trade press being out to get the business is concerned, none of the motion picture trade publications has ever carried any undue amount of organ advertising, which may possibly account for the fact that an exhibitor's idea as to what an organ installation would cost him in actual dollars and cents may be somewhat out of plumb.

The remedy for this is quite obvious and we will welcome most cordially to the advertising columns the organ manufacturer who will hand out the straight goods regarding prices in an announcement over his own name.

Not because we are unduly mercenary in the matter, but we feel that a campaign of this nature is something for which the manufacturer and not the editor should make himself responsible.

GIVEN all the money that he asks, an unlimited plot of ground and an order to plan a house of several thousand seating capacity, the average picture theatre architect has a comparative cinch. But when he is up against a proposition of a fifty by one hundred foot plot, and a six hundred seat house, he must do some pretty close figuring of the kind that requires experience back of it.

It is a much harder task to plan a good small house than a good big one and that's why we congratulate architect Davis on his achievement of the Peerless Theatre, which we describe in this issue and also the Messrs. Newman for giving the architect an opportunity to show what he could accomplish.

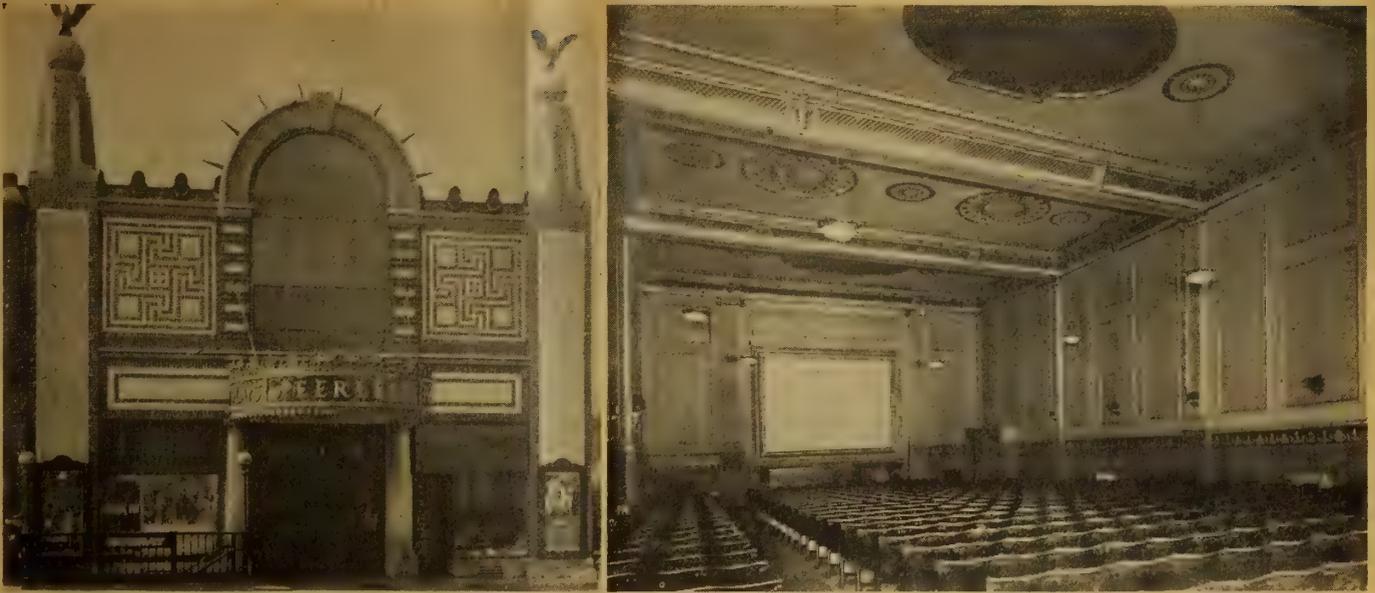

We will bet that these plans will be consulted by our readers for a long while to come.

SPEAKING of new houses, the proprietors of the St. Helen's Theatre Chehalis, Washington, the new one hundred thousand dollar eight-hundred seat house, the building of which we announced in our issue of September 8, have just shot us a photo of the architect's wash drawing so that we can get an idea of what the theatre will look like on completion.

It is such a good looking front that we believe our readers will admire it as much as we do, and, as they may find some valuable suggestions in same, we are reproducing it elsewhere.

SOME time ago, we made a few feeling remarks anent the renovation of a picture house and an expenditure for foyer chairs which was out of all proportion to that devoted to the projection room equipment.

To offset this sad state of affairs, we are joyfully spreading the glad news that we have been tipped off to a new house in which not only is the projection room a real room, but that five—yes, FIVE—projectors are installed.

TWO VIEWS OF THE PEERLESS THEATRE

Showing the attractive front and the well planned interior of the new 600 seat house of the N. & P. Amusement Company, recently erected in Borough of the Bronx, New York City.

Plans of Bronx Borough's Peerless Show Well Arranged 600-Seat House

THE interest in plans suitable for small houses is so great that we are more than glad to be able to present to our readers the lay-out of the six-hundred-seat Peerless Theatre, recently erected on One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, West of Alexander Avenue, Borough of the Bronx, New York City.

The Peerless was planned by Albert E. Davis, 258 East 138th Street, New York City, for the N. & P. Amusement Company, of which Benjamin Newman is president, Daniel B. Newman, vice president and Aaron Newman, secretary and treasurer.

As will be noted, by referring to the floor plans, the architect had at his disposal a lot fifty feet wide by one hundred feet deep. The theatre occupies the full depth of the lot and forty-two feet eight inches of its frontage. The remaining seven feet four inches being utilized as a passage way to the exits, which are located one at the front and one at the rear of the auditorium.

Seating in Three Sections

The seating is arranged in three sections with two aisles separating the sections. There are twenty-six rows of seats down the centre of the house and twenty-four rows along each of the side walls.

A central lobby, with a pair of doors at front and rear, gives access to foyer space behind the seating. At left and right, respectively, are the manager's office, and a store which latter has been rented to a confectionery. Back of the manager's office is a lavatory and stairways which lead upward to the projection and down to the basement, in which the heating apparatus is installed. A second lavatory is back of the candy store.

Typhoon Ventilated

The floors are of cement, squared off in red for the aisles. Good ventilation is assured by a ceiling twenty-five feet high and a Typhoon cooling and ventilating system, situated in a pent house on the roof, and which operates through ornamental circular ventilating panels in the ceiling.

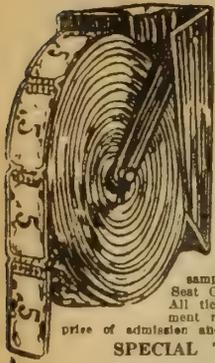

Directly in front of the screen is an orchestral organ which reduces the size of the orchestra to one man. The organ grilles are located at each side of the screen.

As the illustration shows, the Peerless is an extremely attractive house. The entrance is flanked by lime stone columns and, at either end of the street facade, rise square towers changing to octagon above the roof and surmounted by stone spheres and copper eagles. There is a circular marquee over the main entrance and above this a circular head steel sash, within a lime stone arch, from which radiate copper sun-rays. Between this central feature and the towers are illuminated panels of unique Grecian design in olive green, old gold, pale blue, Pompeian red and white enameled brick and tile. The panels are crowned with a limestone cornice and copper cresting.

An Attractive Lobby

The lobby and auditorium are of attractive design, beautifully decorated in maroon, mauve and ivory, robin's egg blue and moss green, rose and lavender, silver and gold. The seats are of mahogany black and gold and arranged on the arc of a circle with a gradient of four feet to the screen, affording a good view from each seat. In the projection room, which is located above the lobby, are two Power's, 6-B projection with governor type control and a double 70 ampere transverter.

Seattle Supply House Puts Over Good Stunt

The quarters of the Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle, Power distributors, has recently been improved with the installation of new private offices. Increased business made this expansion necessary.

Lewis and Barthel, partners in the company, report prospects excellent for the coming season.

A neat bit of advertising put out by the Theatre Equipment Company was in the form of a card bearing addresses and telephone numbers of all film exchanges, theatres, railroad depots, costume, poster, cameramen and allied interests.

While the card itself was not a new idea, the letter that accompanied it was cleverly worded in that it announced the new card as being the last word since the telephone company had made changes in many numbers, due to the installation of dial telephones, and requesting that the patron destroy "all our previous cards as they are worthless and out of date." This naturally insured the elimination of all competitive advertising of a similar na-

THE TRUTH IS —

THE new pictures which Paramount announced to the trade last August have now been completed.

¶ They will be released at the rate of one a week beginning now.

¶ Prints of the first four, "THE SPANISH DANCER," "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN," "THE LIGHT THAT FAILED," "STEPHEN STEPS OUT" may now be seen at Paramount exchanges.

¶ Demonstration runs on "THE SPANISH DANCER" have proven, in all sections of the country, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that this Pola Negri picture is one of the greatest box-office draws ever released.

¶ Demonstration of "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN" in New York marks this picture as sure-fire. It is marvelously acted, sumptuously produced, has an engrossing story and is full of strong, human-interest drama. It has tremendous pulling-power. We are confident demonstrations of "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN" in other sections of the country will show the same result. We ask that exhibitors watch closely its success in demonstration theatres.

¶ "THE LIGHT THAT FAILED" we believe is another great big picture. It has in it the romance, the drama, the story interest and the superlative acting that only big box-office attractions can hope to have. It has already received the Board of Reviews' endorsement as one of the two best pictures of the month.

¶ "STEPHEN STEPS OUT" speaks for itself. Is there any one who doubts the interest of the entire American public in the name "DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR."?

¶ The others of the 19 new Paramount Pictures which we listed in full in this paper last week make up an output of product that is absolutely revolutionary in motion picturedom. Such stars, featured players and supporting casts, such great stories, such magnificent productions of proved in advance box-office merit could come only from Paramount.

¶ Exhibitors may rest assured that the Paramount Pictures in the months to come will be the greatest line-up Paramount has ever released.

After receiving the final cutting of the print of "The Gold Diggers," I was deeply gratified, as it assured me that it was possible to faithfully portray a legitimate comedy upon the picture screen.

It made me realize there was much already accomplished in the way of better productions to bring the screen nearer to the theatre.

The characters are all clean cut and distinctive.

J. Lourie's houses in the hub center have long been considered the criterion of what is the best in pictures and it is harder to break in there with an independent picture than anywhere else in the United States.

We produced or distributed "I Am the Law," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Sure Fire Flint," "The Last Hour," "You Are Guilty" and others that made picture history in other key points, but we never had one they considered big enough for these houses until "THREE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING."

Dear Friend:-

I want to say a few words to you with regard to PONJOLA. It is very seldom that I have much to say about the products coming into my various houses, but I want to say that PONJOLA was one of the biggest successes that has ever been in the Capitol Theatre. The business has gone way beyond my expectations, and there is no doubt in mind, but that PONJOLA will be one of the outstanding successes of the year.

Sincerely,

John H. Kunsky

A First

What you think—what we think—what a dozen men may think about the box-office possibilities of any picture is nothing compared to what the box-office proves it to be through actual demonstration.

“Ponjola” went into four big cities a possible big money getter—it came out a Tremendous Money Getter. There is an argument that cannot be turned aside easily.

That’s proof—ironclad—decisive—conclusive. There is no showman in the world who can dodge or shut his eyes to such facts. “Ponjola” has definitely demonstrated to the industry, by this test, that it is One of the Biggest Ticket Sellers of the Year.

Mr. Kunsky’s letter shows what it did in Detroit, at the Capitol Theatre. At Loew’s State, Los Angeles, it broke the house record. At the Warfield, San Francisco, it broke another and its performance at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, clinched the argument.

“Ponjola” has proved itself. Now it’s up to you.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

HERE's a strange condition:

The industry is faced with this situation: Shelves are overstocked with product. Or, rather, completely stocked, and selling is sluggish.

The logical remedy is more selling, faster selling, better selling. Synonymous with: More advertising, better advertising.

But what is happening?

The first move: "Let's close down the factories." The second step: "Let's cut down the trade paper advertising."

Can you beat it?

Well, yes. Here's a stranger order:

"Don't touch the national advertising. That must be kept up in full force."

* * *

THE above is a condition that is peculiarly "taken for granted." It is something that we never stop to analyze or question. But supposing we do:

The most prosperous years that ALL BRANCHES of this industry have ever known were those following upon 1918—when trade paper advertising reached its greatest heights. When national advertising was a seldom-tried experiment.

In the last two years national advertising has been given a one hundred per cent trial. Nothing has been stinted; neither in brains nor in money.

Fine copy has been seen; consistent space has been used; appropriations have climbed to the six-figure mark.

National advertising, we have been told, creates consumer demand; even more important, it AROUSES RETAILER INTEREST, and moves the goods.

BUT THE GOODS HAVEN'T MOVED!

And we are starting to shut the factories down.

* * *

IN these same years trade paper advertising has been an orphan step-child. Like the word "quota," the phrase "Trade paper advertising" was something that went into the distribution contract "for no particular reason."

The attitude has been:

"Use just enough trade paper advertising to get the publicity by and to let the salesmen know that we are still in business. When we get some real cash we'll take up advertising seriously and go into national magazines."

AND THE GOODS HAVE FAILED TO MOVE!

Think it over—a long, long time.

* * *

WE don't mean to discount national advertising as something less than zero. That would be as idiotic as the attitude of the many who consider trade paper space a "necessary evil" rather than an efficient merchandising weapon.

The difference in attitudes is that national copy is considered ADVERTISING, bought and sold as such; the definition of trade paper space in many quarters ranges all the way from a "sop" to a "nuisance."

But here is a thought:

Get away from the spell of the rounded phrase, the impressive statistics, get away to this important point: In any business where the retailer can handle only ONE MANUFACTURER'S PRODUCT AT A TIME your chief problem is to sell the retailer.

In this business, the RETAILER MUST BE SOLD.

Well, think over this:

I defy any man to spend seven thousand five hundred dollars IN ONE WEEK on trade paper advertising for a single picture and not find his goods moving from the shelves.

I know of a lot of seventy-five-hundred-dollar pages that haven't disturbed a speck of dust on the shelves.

Think it over.

Why Loew's Resignation Was Accepted and Fox's Declined

By TOM WALLER

IF "Enemies of Women" had been the only picture in this world, I would rather have had my houses in darkness than have played it, knowing the circumstances as I now do." This statement, the substance of which was embodied in the resignation which he tendered, is credited by an authoritative source with being the primary factor which moved the Board of Directors to decline the offer of William Fox to withdraw from the ranks of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Fox interposed no defense. Neither did Marcus Loew a few weeks ago, but his resignation was accepted the same afternoon it was tendered. Such outwardly similar conditions of these two big producer-exhibitor violators of an organization ruling on the Cosmopolitan picture, and such outwardly discriminating decisions have aroused considerable curiosity in the industry, especially throughout Greater New York.

First-hand information regarding these executive sessions of the Board of Directors is out of the question. As is generally known, the word "executive" closes the doors of the meeting room to the press. Such news, in this respect, countenancing any credence, is that emanating through authorized channels.

Accordingly, we learn that, although Mr. Fox and Mr. Loew both pleaded guilty to the T. O. C. C. indictment charging them with showing "Enemies of Women" under a Goldwyn contract, instead of giving preference to holders of Famous contracts, as the first distributing agency for that picture, the explanation in Mr. Fox's proffered resignation is termed "1000 per cent. better" than that of his brother producer.

Fox's statement is described as "wonderful"; as one which placed him outside the pale of all the other violators. In it he is said to have resorted to nothing which could be interpreted as suggestive of subterfuge. He personally, it is said, claimed he knew nothing of the preliminaries leading to the booking and playing of the film at his Washington Theatre, New York. The fact that a producer-exhibitor of his magnitude entered such a humble plea had great weight with the directors, it is gleaned.

When Loew appeared before the Board of Directors he is credited with having justified the T. O. C. C. in its stand against him; "but that business interests in which he was involved caused him to act accordingly."

The quotation is an excerpt from a story concerning the acceptance of Loew's resignation which appeared in a recent issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

The T. O. C. C. has sought the aid of Will Hays in the contract situation of "Enemies of Women."

Laemmle Optimistic

Closing of Studios Merely Annual Occurrence, He Says

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York from the West Coast early this week in an exceptionally optimistic mood. He said:

"If it is true that a pessimist is a man who has to live with an optimist, you may now turn pessimist because I think it is time for a little optimism in the moving picture business. Just at present there seems to be tremendous stir because the industry is trying to curb expense. Every Moses outside the industry has been telling us we are guilty of extravagance, but as soon as steps are taken to stop extravagance, a thousand different meanings are read into the action, and the result is the tempest in a teapot. It's a case of damned if you do and damned if you don't.

"The closing down of studios is not new. Many companies have done it almost every year, especially during the California rainy season. By that time of year, the average producer has plenty of pictures on hand and it is a highly profitable thing to shut off expense and coast along for a time while cashing in with goods on hand.

"But as for the solidity of the business as a whole—and I can speak freely because Universal stock is not on the market—let me tell you how it is viewed by one of the keenest bankers in New York. This banker knows the picture business thoroughly. He said to me:

"You producers have always spoken of your business as more or less of a gamble. Perhaps an individual picture is a gamble, but a going concern with a regular output of pictures and a proper distributing organization looks to me more like the safest business in the world than a gamble. I'll tell you why. When a grocer or a merchant liquidates his business, he sells out his stock and then he is through. He has nothing left to sell. But when a picture company wants to liquidate, it does not sell its pictures. It leases them. Then after a period of time it takes the same negatives, makes new copies and re-leases them or, as you term it, re-issues them. You still own your goods after you have sold or leased them. If other lines of business could do that, business failures would drop low in the percentage columns."

National Motion Picture Day Finds Official Approval in New York City

THE support and co-operation of the public in making National Motion Picture Day on November 19 a celebration of widespread importance is urged by Murray Hulbert, Acting Mayor of New York City, in a public proclamation issued from City Hall on Monday.

By this action official recognition has been given the event of the theatre owners, which promises to outstrip in magnitude any event ever sponsored by any part of the industry. Elaborate plans for a giant parade and pageant are under way, with special programs in all theatres and added attractions which direct attention to the progress of the motion picture theatre as an institution for civic and social progress. The last word from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America states that the entire country is similarly aroused, and, from the largest cities down to the small towns and villages, National Motion Picture Day is being celebrated by theatre owners energetically and enthusiastically.

Mayor's Proclamation

The proclamation follows:

"To the people of the City of New York: "The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have performed a distinct public service in designating a particular day upon which to concentrate public attention upon the significance of motion pictures and in particular the value of this form of expression in the work of social and community welfare. Monday, November 19, 1923, which has been set apart as National Motion Picture Day, is worthy of widespread observance.

"No one will deny that the motion picture has made a decided contribution to the entertainment of the people through the cinema of some 16,000 theatres throughout the United States. The possibilities of still greater usefulness of the motion picture through co-operation with public and private, social and civic agencies must receive an acknowledgment no less sincere.

"What the city, the state, the nation and the world are doing, and the advancement of science in harnessing the forces of nature to the need of man are information to which the public is entitled. But it is information that should be imparted in an attractive way. As this is the announced purpose in the celebration of National Motion Picture Day my official recognition and endorsement are cordially extended.

Our Public Service

"Undoubtedly what the people need is recreation of a decent and proper kind. The movies have met this requirement commendably and efficiently. That the type of entertainment has been unmistakably welcome is attested by an ever-increasing patronage. The people are morally minded and if the movies did not measure up to this popular standard in providing diversion they would long since have been headed toward oblivion.

"But there is an educative as well as a recreative side to the motion picture. The quickest way of communicating ideas and knowledge is through the eye. An impression good or bad is immediately registered on the brain through that organ. Of what immense potential good, therefore, from a social as well as a cultural standpoint is the motion picture? To the boy and girl ready to receive impressions that may affect their value as individuals and as citizens and to all adults who would know of the happenings in Smith's Corner, their own city or in any quarter of the globe, the movie is the great teacher whose service is within the compass of everyone's time and purse.

"Attendance at the movies on National Motion Picture Day should be the effort of all the people in this city. There will be given a demonstration of the wider sphere of usefulness of the motion picture that should prove very appealing. As particular emphasis will be placed upon the public service possibilities of the movie, and the educational authorities through the United States have been enlisted toward this end, I would suggest that every co-operation be extended by the public. If an additional reason for attendance were necessary I would add that it is planned to have special programs of entertainment in all motion picture theatres on that day that will transport one as by a magic carpet to the temples of delight."

Circuits Line Up

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, returned to New York this week with glowing reports of the special meeting held by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York at Rochester. National Motion Picture Day was endorsed unanimously, with every theatre owner present pledging his written support to participate in the country-sweeping celebration on November 19. Another high light of the meeting was the speech of Congressman MacGregor, in which he promised to reintroduce his Admission Tax Bill. Congressman Snyder in a spirited declaration pledged his aid to the bill amid the applause of the body.

A meeting of the national officers and board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. was likewise held at Rochester. This body presented an engrossed testimonial to George Eastman in appreciation of his services to the industry. It was voted to hold the next officers' and board of directors' meeting at Washington, D. C., in December at the time Congress convenes. This meeting will also be attended by state leaders and prominent theatre owners.

Another development of importance occurred during the past week in which several men of national standing in the industry, who control circuits of theatres, pledged their support to National Motion Picture Day and agreed to turn over to the national treasury of the M. P. T. O. A. 25 per cent of the day's receipts from all their theatres. This list includes, among others, Wilmer & Vincent with twenty theatres, Rowland & Clark with twenty-five theatres, M. E. Comerford with fifty theatres, Robert A. McNeill of San Francisco with thirty theatres, Charles E. Whitehurst with all the representative houses of Baltimore; Poli's Circuit with approximately twenty theatres in New England and W. C. Hunt with a string of houses in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Various Mass Meetings

A giant mass meeting of theatre owners of all New England is being held in Boston on November 8 for the purpose of centering on a definite campaign the enthusiasm which animates the theatre owners of New England. This will be attended by President Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A., Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, C. E. Whitehurst of Baltimore, R. F. Woodhull of New Jersey and E. M. Fay of Providence, R. I., officials of the national body.

A similar gathering is being held in Cleveland on November 9. A telegram signed jointly by David L. Schumann of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio and O. E. Belles, president of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Associa-

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

Whereas, it is a matter of much gratification and pride to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to have associated with them a man of refinement and business acumen

George Eastman

Resolved, that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in their South National Convention in the city of New York, New York, on November 12, 1923, have unanimously and joyfully elected George Eastman to the position of President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the year 1923-24.

Engrossed testimonial presented by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to George Eastman in appreciation of "his announced determination to make Motion Pictures reach the very highest position as a medium of expression." Mr. Eastman designated William Fait, manager of the Eastman Theatre, to accept it in Mr. Eastman's absence on an extended trip.

CHARLES SCHWARTZ

Owner of several large motion picture houses in Brooklyn, who, as chairman of the National Moving Picture Day Publicity Committee, has worked strenuously to make that day a pronounced success tion, has been received by Mr. Cohen which states: "All exhibitors in Northern Ohio heartily co-operating in National Motion Picture Day movement. Hope to have you at Winton Hotel meeting Friday, November 9, afternoon." Mr. Cohen is attending this meeting together with Mr. Davis, John A. Schwalm of Hamilton, Ohio, and other national leaders.

Work is under way to duplicate in Boston and Cleveland the campaign which has been put over in Pittsburgh, where Mayor William Magee has endorsed the day by public proclamation, and the Chamber of Commerce is campaigning on behalf of the theatre owners, in recognition of their service in promoting movements of civic importance.

New York's Campaign

The giant campaign in New York will overshadow all other events on November 19. A meeting of theatre owners was held at the Hotel Astor on Monday, November 5. In New York the campaign is being taken direct to the public on behalf of the theatre owners, whose participation is assured by the active work of a "Flying Squadron," appointed by the committee in charge, to cover every theatre in the territory, which is organized into zones and districts. Arthur M. Hirsch is chairman of the general committee and Charles Schwartz is in charge of the exploitation end, creating the parade.

With the co-operation of the exploitation men of the various producers and distributors, who are working at top speed on behalf of the exhibitors, a monster street parade is planned for November 17, consisting of bands, floats representing the advance of the industry, representations from all divisions of the industry, banners and all similar exploitation. This parade will be the biggest thing of its kind ever held in New York and probably a mile long. Free prints of the parade will be furnished all exhibitors for use on Motion Picture Day. During the week preceding National Motion Picture Day news of the event will be broadcast daily from all of the sending stations in and near New York City and talks on motion pictures will feature their programs.

In addition a corps of speakers from the American Legion will visit the various theatres and deliver short addresses on the importance of the motion picture and the purpose of National Motion Picture Day. Canvas banners for the backs of automobiles will be furnished all theatre owners, as well as a special supply of one-sheets and window cards. Stickers will be used on taxicabs and all vehicles.

For the actual show on November 19 the theatres are preparing special programs of outstanding excellence. Many will present an "Old-Fashioned Movie Show," in which the presentation of a complete show of ten years ago will be contrasted with a typical program of today. Old-time single reels, with all the accompanying methods of years gone by, will be used again. Lobby displays will likewise contrast the old and the new. As far as it is possible, depending upon their presence in New York, several stars will visit the theatres for personal appearances. Music publishers will provide special musical programs of novel interest.

New Jersey is showing great progress. Mass meetings of theatre owners are being held in every county of the state and special plans of participation are being formulated there, as in practically every section of the country.

Messages of Support

Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, who has endorsed the theatre owners' movement in glowing terms, this week wrote President Cohen as follows:

"The work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the advancement of many movements for the betterment of mankind is worthy of the highest commendation. The screen has come to be an important factor in our national life, particularly in relation to the education of the people. National Motion Picture Day will, I am sure, do much to emphasize the importance of the film theatre in the daily life of America. A great opportunity lies before the motion picture theatres of the country for public service. I am sure they will take advantage of it."

Messages of support and the reassurances of active participation have come from various state units. Billy Connors, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Indiana, wired as follows: "Indiana solidly behind you on National Motion Picture Day. Pass the good word to Bill Bender."

Jay Allen Glenn of Hendersonville, N. C., who is directing the destiny of National Motion Picture Day in that state, has written a letter to every theatre owner urging them to write their Senators and Representatives and to support Motion Picture Day as a part of the campaign for the repeal of the admission tax.

Letters to Congressmen

The attention of theatre owners is being definitely directed to the campaign for the repeal of the admission tax and, as a definite part of the campaign for National Motion Picture Day, every theatre owner in the country has been supplied with two suggested letters with the idea that each owner of a theatre copy one of the letters on his own letter head and mail it immediately to his Congressman.

The letters call attention to the evil which is brought about by the admission tax and directs the attention of Congressmen to the importance of their support in the coming legislative session. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have instituted a sweeping campaign and have stimulated the interest aroused by National Motion Picture Day into a plan of definite action against the admission tax.

Following are the letters which theatre owners are asked to mail to their Congressmen:

Dear Sir:

I am sure that you, the representative of your large and important constituency, will appreciate the position which I, in my small way, occupy as representative for the public in the community which composes the audience at my theatre.

To serve my own interests, I must serve them, and in serving them faithfully, I win their commendation, support and approval.

So it is that at this time I am addressing you regarding the Admission and Seat Tax laws.

These two levies were made against the theatre owners of the country as war measures. They were passed at a period when every interest in the United States was keyed to a high pitch of patriotism and no individual or body disputed the wisdom of any tax law which would bring to the government the revenues then required.

As you know, many emergency levies and war taxes have been repealed. The two affecting Admission and Seat Taxation are still in force. With the changing conditions of our industry since the laws were passed, I can definitely assure you that they are proving increasingly burdensome upon motion picture theatre owners as a class, and increasingly irksome to the general public, with which we are in close and continuous contact.

I appeal to you to give this important matter careful scrutiny before it is brought up in the next session of Congress. I would deem it a favor to be permitted to supply you with facts, figures and informative data and to keep you informed regarding all current developments. I am satisfied to rely on your fairmindedness in giving careful consideration to our cause and to your legislative judgment in lending your valuable influence toward bringing about the repeal of these measures.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Sir:

Two of the remaining war taxes affecting millions of Americans in an adverse manner are the levies on theatre admissions and on theatre seating capacity.

It is the purpose of the theatre owners of the United States, if possible, to effect a repeal of these taxes as the same are now of a burdensome nature and bear so heavily upon theatre owners and public as to materially reduce the attendance at our theatres, and in many instances has forced theatre owners to close their establishments.

I know that you realize and appreciate the importance of the motion picture theatre as a community service institution. Its great utility in all communities in advancing progressive public programs and otherwise providing entertainment and relaxation for the people is certainly very obvious to you, and I feel sure that you will do all you can to keep this line of service intact by enabling theatre owners to remain in business, so that this great service institution will remain with us.

An effort will be made in the next session of Congress to bring about relief from the Admission and Seat Tax Laws. I respectfully solicit your consideration in this matter with a view to helping the theatre owners in bringing this result about, if the same meets with your approval.

If you need any additional information on the subject from our viewpoint or would like to communicate with our national office, I would be pleased to make arrangements accordingly, so that we may have the benefit of your very best judgment on this matter as a Member of Congress.

Sincerely yours,

In a statement issued this week William Brandt, president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, denies that the organization has placed the seal of approval on National Motion Picture Day, saying that it is not committed "to any policy or action with regard to this matter in any form."

Beauty Contest Aids Movie Day

One of the best of inducements for a box-office line-up on movie day is advanced by Joe Jame, owner of two theatres in the Borough of the Bronx, New York City. His plan, which met with great enthusiasm when outlined at the Hotel Astor mass meeting this week, is a beauty contest.

Bronx exhibitors already are accumulating the photos of all the pretty girls in their respective neighborhoods, placing them on display in the lobbies. This contest opens on November 19. Every patron going in any of these theatres gets as a starter 100 votes to ballot for his or her choice. This Jame said, is bound to secure record attendances at all Bronx movie houses on the industry's big day.

But the contest does not stop on November 19. It keeps right on until Thanksgiving Day when the winner in each theatre is announced. She assumes the name of the theatre with the prefix "Miss" until the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce ball. On that occasion all of the winsome "Misses" assemble at the ball and pass in review before a Board of Governors composed of Bronx exhibitors. The board picks the winner and she is announced Movie Queen of New York's home section.

New M. P. T. O. Organization May Be Outcome of French Lick Meeting

OFFICERS, directors and congressional district representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana will act as hosts to the officers and directors of exhibitor organizations in Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota at a joint meeting at French Lick Springs on November 14 and 15, it was announced this week. The meeting, which was arranged by the Hoosier exhibitors, is expected to be of national importance.

Although called primarily for the purpose of perfecting plans for fighting some of the taxation now imposed on the exhibitors, it is reported in Indiana moving picture circles that the conference likely will lead to the formation of a Middle Western exhibitor organization. The exhibitors in the states of the Central West are said to feel that their problems are different than those of exhibitors in other localities and in view of this should have their own individual organization. It is probable that if a separate organization is formed it will affiliate with the national body but will conduct its own affairs as it sees fit to do so.

The meeting at French Lick will be open only to the officers and directors of exhibitor organizations in the states named and to the officers, directors and congressional representatives of the Hoosier organization. The visiting exhibitors will be officially welcomed to the meeting by Lew Shank, mayor of Indianapolis, and now a candidate for Governor of Indiana.

The Hoosier exhibitors say the admission, seat and music taxes will be among the principal matters discussed. They regard the admission tax as an evil that is causing con-

Organization Named

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Alliance Formed in Washington

The second day's session of the exhibitors in convention in Washington, D. C., last week produced a name for the new organization. It will be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Alliance, Washington Zone, and its announced intention is "to establish a closer co-operation among the members of the motion picture exhibitors' organizations of the states of Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia." The time of meeting is set at every six months, "or oftener," and the executive council will consist of nine members. This will meet the last Wednesday of every month in Washington.

Because of the distance from Washington and the fact that distributing companies are beginning to transfer service for its theatres to Philadelphia, it was decided not to include Delaware in the Washington zone, leaving the state free to join Pennsylvania, where its interests are more directly centered. In much the same way North Carolina was left to affiliate with South Carolina. President Henry B. Varner, of the North Carolina exhibitors, said he would effect the organization of the two states in zone No. 2.

Among important matters discussed at the sessions were non-theatrical competition, excess footage, admission taxes, seating capacity taxes and the music impost. The convention wound up with a banquet at which Harry M. Crandall was toastmaster.

siderable damage to their business and they hope the proposed meeting will result in a definite plan of action against the tariff. The levy imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers under the copyright law for songs written by members of the organization and played in theatres, also will be given considerable attention at the meeting.

"This levy is the bane of our existence," said one Indiana exhibitor. "We are not opposed to a tax for the composers, authors and publishers, but we believe it is in the wrong place. We feel the tax should be on sheet music. As it is now it appears to us that we are being unjustly discriminated against."

The government seat tax also will be discussed with a view to taking definite action toward its elimination, it was said. Other matters, including the proposed uniform contract, lower film rentals and final plans for observance of National Motion Picture Day, to be celebrated November 19, also will be discussed at the gathering.

Plans for the affair at French Lick were discussed at a meeting of officers and members of the board of directors of the Hoosier

Watch Admission Tax Returns!

Washington, D. C.—Strenuous action is to be taken by the Bureau of Internal Revenue to stamp out the practice of exhibitors and others making improper admission tax returns, according to officials of the bureau, who declare that a large number of business men have made it a practice to send their returns in in such a way that they could not be accepted. They believe, it is said, that this is done sometimes innocently, and sometimes for the purpose of delaying payment.

It has been announced that hereafter, where a return is accompanied by an unsigned check, and a properly signed check is not received prior to the expiration of the legal period of payment, a penalty of five per cent. will be imposed.

The bureau will not accept tax returns sworn to by the name of a company or firm, but the oath must be made by an authorized individual, who should follow his name by some descriptive word such as "owner," "partner," "treasurer," etc. When a return received within the legal period is returned to a taxpayer for proper execution and the necessary action is not taken within the period of ten days, a penalty of 25 per cent. will be imposed if the corrected return, when received, is delinquent.

organization at the Hotel Severin in Indianapolis, Wednesday, October 31. The officers of the Indiana organization are Frank Heller, of Kokomo, president; William Connors, of Marion, secretary, and Gustav G. Schmidt, of Indianapolis, chairman of the board of directors.

According to plans outlined at the Indianapolis meeting, National Motion Picture Day will be fittingly observed by exhibitors in every section of the state. With "Indiana leads—others follow" as their slogan, the Hoosier exhibitors are preparing to see to it that the day is celebrated in a big and constructive way.

"We have used our screens and theatres in assisting practically every campaign or public movement of any kind since the beginning of the war," said an Indianapolis exhibitor, "and we feel that National Motion Picture Day can be made a day whereby those who have profited by what we have done for them can reciprocate. We regard it also as an excellent opportunity for perfecting a closer and more cordial relationship between the exhibitor and the public."

Additional plans for carrying out the campaign will be perfected at another meeting to be held at an early date. The national organization of theatre owners, which is sponsoring the event, will assist the Hoosier organization in building up public interest.

Loew-Metro Ball Splendid Event

With all the glorious glitter and gorgeous splendor of an old-world Court Ball, the Fall film social season opened on Thursday night, November 1, at the Hotel Astor. The occasion was the first annual ball of the Loew-Metro Club, and any one of the three thousand or more persons who took part in the festivities in the Grand Ball Room that night—and the following morning—can bear witness that the affair was the greatest sendoff that any season ever had.

One could tell in a very few lines who, in any branch of the industry, wasn't there; one couldn't tell in three volumes who was there.

Dancing to the irresistible pulsations of two unbeatable jazz orchestras began early in the evening. Supper proved a delightful forerunner to one of the most elaborate entertainments ever presented, in which Broadway celebrities by the score took part.

Need more be said—COULD more be said?

Elder Joins Universal

Herbert E. Elder, formerly assistant sales manager in the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and who worked with the legal department of that company as sales expert during the Federal Trade Investigation, has been engaged by Universal to be special representative for E. J. Smith, general manager of sales.

Drying Pennsylvania

Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, apparently inspired by Presidential aspirations to seek to make the state thoroughly "dry," and thwarted in his crusade, now turns his attention to "drying up" motion pictures. The censors hereafter will ban film scenes of bacchanalian festivities, the symmetrical wine glass, the plug-ugly beer stein and pictures in which any mention is made of artificial exhilaration. That is why a flask-breaking scene in a recent Chaplin picture was snipped. It must afford the governor a poor consolation.

"Birth of the West" in the Real Settings

The Colored Motion Picture Corporation's production of "The Birth of the West," which is to be made with Frank J. Carroll holding the reins, will be staged in the country that is actually part of the story's action.

After starting for Los Angeles last week to complete contracts in connection with the production Mr. Carroll left the train at Denver and is now on an automobile trip through the Colorado and Wyoming country arranging for locations for the production.

Many of the best known figures of Western history will be concerned in the story and the cooperation of scores of prominent citizens is being given Mr. Carroll in his preparations.

Again Director General

Cecil DeMille Resumes Duties He Gave Up

A joint statement, issued recently by Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, announced that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had signed a new agreement with Cecil B. DeMille covering all his future productions. The agreement, which has no time limit, provides also that Mr. DeMille shall resume active duty as director-general of the company, duties which he was relieved of three years ago at his own request.

To Honor Reichenbach

The many friends of Harry Reichenbach, in recognition of the service he has rendered to the industry on many occasions, have decided to give him a dinner on Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, November 28, 1923, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, in the Crystal Room.

Kann Opens Offices

George E. Kann, whose resignation as head of the foreign department with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, became effective on Nov. 1, now is engaged in launching his new enterprise, the George E. Kann Corporation, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street. The corporation will deal in the international distribution of negatives, a field in which Mr. Kann is unusually well grounded.

Sails for Europe

Ike Blumenthal, special representative of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed for Europe on the Majestic Saturday, November 3, to resume his duties abroad after a visit of several months in the United States. He will divide his time among the Paramount offices in London, Paris and Berlin.

Will Build Theatre

Adolph Zukor in a newspaper announcement denies that Famous Players-Lasky will abandon its plan to erect a $2,500,000 Broadway theatre, thus stilling a rumor that a decline in the value of the corporation's stock and the suspension of production make the theatre impractical.

"We have no intention of abandoning the plan to erect the new house," said Mr. Zukor. "Plans for the new structure have been completed by Rapp & Rapp, architects, of Chicago, and it is our intention to go ahead with the construction as soon as the last lease on the property expires on May 1, 1924."

It's a New "Eternal City"

Samuel Goldwyn's latest production, "The Eternal City," was shown privately Thursday morning at the Strand Theatre, New York. It's a new "Eternal City" that George Fitzmaurice and Ouida Bergere have evolved in collaboration with Sir Hall Caine. World War events, the Fascisti and other modern trends in Italy have been made use of to serve as backgrounds for the same love conflict and drama. Mussolini, the dictator, appears in a real part; King Victor is seen for a moment. The production has been staged lavishly, it is pictorially dazzling, and reaches real heights in the whirling mob scenes. Barbara La Marr's portrayal of Roma will be remembered as a triumph of emotional work.

ROBERT E. WELSH.

Off to Japan

Tom D. Cochrane, in charge of the distribution of Paramount pictures in Japan, will leave New York November 11 to return to Kobe, where new Famous Players-Lasky headquarters were opened following the earthquake. En route home he will visit relatives at Toledo and Chicago and will sail from Seattle on November 22, arriving in Kobe about December 6.

Paramount Policy Unchanged

Famous Players-Lasky, an official announced today, November 8, with the exception of a few readjustments, has no intention of changing its newly announced policy.

Demonstration centers, in conformance with the new Famous edict, are now in some fifty key cities. The informant stated that Paramount has experienced no lack of co-operation from the selected houses in smaller cities, excepting that a few of them have made some changes in their original basis for receiving Famous product. These, however, he said, are in a very small minority.

Famous has no intention of eliminating the smaller towns as demonstration centers as long as they perform in accordance with the new policy, it was emphasized.

Wisconsin

Roy C. MacMullen still holds the record in Milwaukee for two-week runs. Thus far this fall, no less than four pictures at Ascher's Merrill, of which he is the manager, have had to be repeated, so great has been the demand. The latest one to start a two weeks' run is "The Green Goddess," starring George Arliss. In view of such business, Mr. MacMullen predicts that all records for Milwaukee attendance will be shattered when "Little Old New York" is shown at his house late in November.

Walter F. Baumann, injured in an automobile accident near Milwaukee shortly after his resignation as executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, has recovered sufficiently to be removed to his home.

Frank Fisher, of the Fisher chain, with headquarters in Madison, Wis., is reported to have completed arrangements for the erection of a 4,500 seat house in Janesville, Wis.

More than 200 Milwaukee orphans were the guests of J. H. Sillman, manager of the Downer Theatre, recently at a Halloween theatre party. Scarecrows, goblins, ghosts and the whole category of Halloween creatures were on hand to entertain the little folk. In addition, the regular Downer program was presented.

Fred Seegert, president of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, has recovered from an attack of ptomaine poisoning which kept him confined to his bed for several days.

George Fischer, manager of the New Milwaukee, is doing everything in his power to omit no convenience for the benefit of his patrons. His latest venture in this direction is the publication of a motion picture review, containing a synopsis of coming attractions and news and gossip concerning the film world of interest to theatregoers. In his first issue he conducted a misspelled word contest and out of the 5,000 copies of the paper distributed, approximately 500 replies were received.

The Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee is cleared of all blame for the collapse of the theatre it is constructing in Janesville, Wis., in a decision handed down by the Wisconsin State Industrial Commission after a lengthy probe. The house is being rebuilt.

Indiana

Permission to issue $600,000 of preferred stock to finance the construction of a new picture theatre on Monument Circle, Indianapolis, was granted the Market-Circle Realty Company this week by the Indiana Securities Commission. The Market-Circle Realty Company, a holding company for Famous Players, has asked permission to issue the preferred stock, which was to be secured by Famous Players, in order to finance the construction, and a protest against the project had been filed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana.

The commission stipulated in its order that Famous Players purchase a minimum of $450,000 of common stock of the company in addition to funds already put into the project. By this action of the commission, Famous Players will be interested in the project to the amount of more than $800,000. The company, it was said, had previously put up $209,500 in cash and a lease on the Circle property valued at $100,000. M. P. T. O. of Indiana feel the commission's decision in the case in reality was a victory for them. They had protested that the previous security of Famous Players was insufficient for the issuance of the amount of preferred stock which the holding company desired to issue.

Damages to the amount of $5,000 were awarded to the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in its suit against the Blackstone Theatre Corporation of South Bend this week.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Are Fined for Using Child Labor

Managers of four New Castle, Pa., theatres were arraigned before Alderman Walter T. Hamilton last week on charges of violating the child labor law and the licensed operator act, to which they pleaded guilty. The charges emanated from investigations made by Inspector John B. Wakely of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry.

Messrs. Capaline and Passias, managers of the Star Theatre on Washington street, pleaded guilty to the charge of violating the child labor law and the moving picture standard, the latter requiring licensed operators in the projection booth. A fine of $100 was imposed.

Manager W. G. Marousis, of the Dome Theatre, was fined $75 when he pleaded guilty to like charges, that of maintaining an operator who was unlicensed and with having employed a boy under the legal age in the booth.

For the Regent Theatre, Marousis and Freeman were fined $75 for the violation of the female labor law and the moving picture standard. The management pleaded guilty to these charges.

A fine of $75 was also imposed upon the management of the Penn Theatre after a plea of guilty was entered to charges of violating the state law requiring licensed operators.

Mr. Wakely, of the State Department, announced that contrary to his wishes Alderman Hamilton had been quite lenient in the fining of the managers, and said that in most cases the maximum is very high. The inspector is making a tour of the western part of the state. His offices are maintained in Meadville.

Mike Rosenbloom, of the Majestic Theatre, Charleroi, is running for school director. That explains the less frequency of his trips to Pittsburgh's Film Row.

M. A. Scranio is the new manager of the Liberty Theatre at Madera, Pa.

G. B. Myers, of the Gem Theatre, Derry, recently played "Down to the Sea in Ships" and says he hung out the S. R. O. sign for the first time in six months.

Chalmer Coupler is back again in Washington, managing his dad's Court Theatre there, after a three months' auto trip which took him to the West Coast. Chalmer says he had a grand time, but that he's mighty glad to get back home again. He cited instances where he paid as low as 6 cents for a gallon of gasoline, and on another occasion he paid 45 cents for a similar amount.

Elmer Strang Dies at Camden; Head of New Century Company

Elmer Strang, president of the New Century Amusement Company, which operates several suburban picture theatres near Camden, N. J., and who was president of Strang Electrical Company, Philadelphia, died at his home, 2903 Westfield avenue, Camden, following a two weeks' illness from heart disease. He was 58 years of age. Mr. Strang was well known in Camden, which had been his home for thirty-three years. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, president of the New Jersey lodges, Shield of Honor, and was active in building and loan societies. He leaves, besides his widow Rebecca, a son, William, and a daughter, Mrs. Marylod.

Wedding bells pealed last Wednesday for the marriage of Dr. Samuel Morris, proprietor of the Model Theatre, Sixth and South streets, and Miss Ruth S. Fineman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Fineman, 5425 Woodcrest avenue, Wynesfield, near Philadelphia. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents by Rabbi Samuel Levinthal, with the groom's sisters in attendance and his brother, David Morris, who is associated with him in the picture business, as best man.

Manager Joe Dougherty of the Grand Opera House, picture theatre, Broad and Montgomery avenue, is organizing a minstrel team composed of boys and girls who are employed in the industrial plants of Northeast Philadelphia and who will be seen at the house as soon as the talent is trained. Costumes are to be furnished by the management and the talent will be paid just as regular professional artists are salaried.

Transfer of the newly erected Earl Theatre, which was opened but a month ago, to A. W. Becker for $83,000 was made during the week. It was sold by Burton C. Simon.

Vibration of a passing truck brought the entire fire department of West Philadelphia to the William Penn Theatre at Lancaster and Fairmount avenues last Sunday night, when it sounded the fire alarm without damaging the private fire alarm box.

The Lyric Theatre at Lincoln, Neb., has closed. This is one of the houses owned by the Hostettler Amusement Co.

Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Changes to Two Shows a Day

November 18 will see the introduction of a new policy at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, when that house changes from continuous performances to two a day, with reserved seats. It also marks the advent in Cleveland of the higher priced pictures, which have been awaited a long time. The first will be Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," which is expected to run four or five weeks, and the second will be "The Covered Wagon." Other pictures to follow will be "The White Sister," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "The Ten Commandments."

The Stillman has long been the leading theatre of Cleveland, so far as presenting the best attractions. Every big picture in years has been shown there, some having two, three and four weeks' runs. But they have been shown under a continuous policy, six performances daily. Two exceptions there were, however, "The Four Horsemen," which was presented twice daily with reserved seats, and "The Three Musketeers," which ran but one week under such a policy and then rather suddenly finished out its engagement on the continuous show plan.

Of course, the change on November 18 means higher prices. The best seats evenings will sell for $1.50 plus tax; afternoons $1 plus tax. There will be a few balcony seats at 50 cents plus tax.

The Stillman recently celebrated its seventh anniversary. It was built by E. Mandelbaum and associates, later taken over by Marcus Loew, and now is operated by Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc. It has a capacity of over 1,800 seats.

The Jewel Theatre, one of the Shuman-Fine and Kramer circuit in Cleveland, has been enlarged and remodeled and is now open again. This house is situated in a busy east end section and is very popular.

Dave Avery, formerly of Findlay, Ohio, has purchased the Victory-Strand Theatre, East 89th street and Superior avenue, from Bill Onie. The house has been redecorated and will have a few vaudeville acts in connection with its picture program. The Superior Theatre, almost opposite the Victory-Strand, also has been reopened after having been redecorated. Frank Gross and Frank Benach operate it.

Cleveland within the last year has seen the growth of two more theatre circuits. The latest are the Flanigan-Nolen-Steele group, which comprises the Monarch, Penn Square, Marquis and Terminal theatres, and the Max Lefkowitz circuit, which includes the Gaiety, Bronx, Tivoli, Keystone and Strand. The last named was just recently added to Max's string.

Other circuits in Cleveland are the Ohio Amusement Co. with nine houses; the Seville-Essick-Reif circuit with seven theatres; the Washington circuit with eight houses; and the Loew houses, which number eight.

A horse was given away by the State Theatre, Lorain, in connection with the showing of "Little Johnny Jones." The laughable part of the stunt was that the winner considered himself in hard luck, because he had a family of six and it meant one more hungry mouth to feed, according to Mark Greenbaum, owner of the theatre.

Piccadilly Opens in Toronto; Home for English Pictures

A picture theatre of the English type has been opened in Toronto, Ontario, this being the Strand Theatre, one of the best known of the large downtown houses for years, the opening date under the new auspices being Saturday, November 10. The name of the theatre has been changed to Piccadilly Theatre and, while, the house has been reopened under the direction of the Allens, it is intimated that an English theatre corporation is behind the project. The Piccadilly now gives the Allens of Toronto a first run house for their many English and Preferred pictures which are being marketed through the new Allen exchange in Canada, the Dominion Films, Ltd. Naturally, the English angle to the proposition has caused quite a stir in Ontario film circles.

The Piccadilly has an orchestra of 12 pieces. Popular prices have been adopted, matinee admission being 25 cents and for evening shows, 35 and 50 cents. The policy of the theatre will be to change programs weekly.

Famous Players' "Big Time Moving Picture" theatre in Toronto, the Tivoli, opened Saturday night, November 3, with the presentation of "Scaramouche" at $1 prices, the policy of this house being to have two definite shows daily for indefinite engagements. The Tivoli was formerly the parent theatre of the chain of houses operated by Jule and J. J. Allen.

Oakville, Ontario, a fine little town with an aristocratic flavor just midway between Toronto and Hamilton, is to have a splendid picture theatre of modest size at last. Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Gregory of Oakville have built the Gregory Theatre there which is to be opened shortly.

Montreal, Quebec, has more new neighborhood theatres. One is the Diana Theatre, which has been opened in Maisonneuve by Joseph Rufriange. George Lazinas has also opened the Operascope in Rosemont, the latter making the third community house in the north end of the city of Greater Montreal.

Announcement is made that the Moving Picture Theatre Owners, Canadian Division, is now distributing Urban Movie Chats throughout the Dominion at the rate of one per week. The physical distribution is being handled by Burpee & West of Montreal.

Los Angeles

Roy Miller has arranged for the world premiere of Goldwyn's "In the Palace of the King" at his California Theatre this week, succeeding "Little Old New York," which had an extended run of eight weeks at advanced prices.

"The Covered Wagon" now is in its thirtieth week at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre and has broken all the long distance records for a continuous run of any theatre on the Pacific Coast. Sid says he is going to take the picture off in four weeks unless he again changes his mind.

T. L. Tally has booked the Fox picture, "Soft Boiled," to succeed "If Winter Comes," which will play its fifth and final week starting Sunday.

"Why Worry?" opened at Grauman's million Dollar Theatre and is doing a tremendous business.

Are you going to observe
NATIONAL MOTION PICTURE DAY?

Cincinnati

The proposed new picture theatre, exclusively for colored patrons, for which the Paul Lawrence Dunbar Theatre Syndicate acquired a site at the corner of Beecher street and Gilbert avenue, is to become a reality. Shortly after the project was launched there was a storm of protest raised by residents of the neighborhood, as also officials of the Salvation Army Maternity Hospital, which is located in the vicinity, the protest being based on the claim that the theatre would be in the midst of a residential and not a commercial district. The local building commission refused a permit when the residents agreed to purchase the lot and erect an apartment building. The proposed purchase, however, failed to materialize, and upon renewed request for a permit to build the theatre, same was granted and work will be started at once. The preliminary plans call for a very pretentious house with large seating capacity.

The Capitol Theatre, under management of I. Libson, although not designated in the various trade paper advertisements, has been selected as one of the Paramount demonstration theatres, and last week showed "The Spanish Dancer."

Alice Brady, starring in the stage play, "Zander the Great," at the Grand Opera House last week, was a guest of Manager Ike Libson of the Lyric Theatre during her engagement, to witness the picture, "Drifting," in which she was featured when the play was originally produced in the speakies several years ago.

J. D. Kessler, manager of the Alhambra Theatre at Canton, Ohio, put over one of the biggest exploitation stunts ever pulled in that city, the feature being Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days." In the midst of Saturday afternoon's busy shopping rush a circus parade, more than half a mile in length, with bands, wild and domestic animals, open cages, floats, horses, clowns and even the traditional bucking mule, appeared in the prominent downtown streets, much to the complete surprise of the public.

John A. Schwalm, of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, attended the meeting at Rochester, N. Y., last week, and reports everything "all set" for National Motion Picture Day.

Louisville

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Majestic Amusement Company, has recently become a Kentucky colonel, Governor Morrow having conferred the honor in appointing Mr. Dittmar a colonel on his staff, in recognition of excellent work done by "The Colonel" on the State Tuberculosis Commission and in the interest of cleaner and better moving pictures, he having been head of the state association of exhibitors for some years and a leader in the local association.

Fred J. Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, is chairman for the State of Kentucky of the National Motion Pictures Day. The local exhibitor association has arranged to fully support the movement here.

Mike Switow, head of the Switow Amusement Company, and operator of a chain of big as well as small theatres in Louisville, Lexington and various points in Southern Indiana, is president of the Clark Building Company, which has remodeled a former hotel building and opened the Clark Hotel at Jeffersonville, Ind., where about $75,000 has been spent in remodeling and furnishing.

Joseph L. Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Co., operating the Walnut and several other theatres, and Walter Davidson, head of the Walnut Orchestra, went east a short time ago and booked several features for use in connection with the Rainbow Gardens, operated by the Steurle interests, and for which Davidson is furnishing the music.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

Do Not Permit Recent News Stories to Adversely Affect Your Local Patrons

RECENTLY the daily press has given widespread publicity to the shutting down of production at some of the West Coast studios, and as might be expected, the reporters have failed to handle the matter knowingly. They have seen only that studios have been closed, and have given widespread publicity to the interviews in which the production heads have stated that the shutdown has been made because salaries and production costs have risen beyond the point of profit.

Naturally this has served to give the reading public the suggestion that the picture business is going to the deminution, bow-wows, and even persons who might be supposed to be better informed have taken this viewpoint.

All this would be unimportant were it not for the fact that the impression is created that motion pictures are in a bad way as applied to current releases.

Public is Sensitive

The amusement public is sensitive to suggestion. It is apt to get the impression that we are about to enter upon an era of cheap and unworthy productions, and to apply this belief to the current presentations, in spite of the fact that the production average this season is higher than it has ever been in the history of the pictures.

And when patrons get this impression, they are apt to stay away from the theatres in the belief that the offerings are unworthy.

The wise manager will at once take steps to offset the harm done by these newspaper announcements, not alone through his house organs, but through acquainting the local editors with the real facts in the case.

Go straight to the editor and tell him that the shut downs are in no sense due to lack of interest or to the failure of the public to support the pictures, but that having made up a sufficient number of pictures to supply the demand for several months to come, the producers are taking a vacation until their current releases are disposed of. With the idea of throwing a scare into the actors and producers, the rising costs have been given as the reason for these closings, whereas it is merely a matter of waiting until the present product is disposed of before starting in to make more.

Good Pictures Assured

The production of those who have closed down is assured for months to come, but instead of going on making more pictures which cannot possibly be released until well into the spring and tying up seven figure sums for several months, they are taking the more rational course of letting the current business bring in the money to finance the coming pictures.

The shut downs will relieve the studios involved of the strain of enormous salary rolls, but they will not to the slightest degree affect the quality of the pictures already made and held for release during the coming months, and the sooner the local managers communicate these facts to their publics, the better it will be for the local business.

Played the Races

Driving hard on the Papyrus-Zey race pictures, Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, got out 2,000 paddock tickets in simulation of those used at local tracks. Of these some 500 were sent out by the Royal Connaught Jockey Club to its membership and the rest handed out by a peddler dressed in silks, or hung on door-knobs.

Stress was laid on the fact that the picture was brought to Montreal by airplane.

Making the Most of It

Midnight matinees have generally been held for New Year's Eve, but the management of Jensen and Von Herberg's Liberty Theatre, Seattle, did not see any good reason why the midnight show should not be an even greater attraction on Hallowe'en, so a special performance was given that evening, starting after the regular night performances. Tickets were sold only to comfortable capacity. No overcrowding.

For this a special program was planned, with a brief minstrel show, an apple bobbing contest, costume prizes and all sorts of pranks appropriate to the occasion.

This sort of occasion not only makes money for the box office the night of the show, but the after effects of a well planned entertainment are even more valuable though they cannot be stated in definite dollars and cents. People will associate the extra good time they had with the house.

If you have a theatre, why not make it work for you to its limit instead of merely giving stated shows? Even the most loyal picture fan appreciates a change now and then.

Painting Plus Card for If Winter Comes

That merchants "eat up" the hook-in possibilities for fall advertising in If Winter Comes is again shown in this window display from Watsonville, California. This simple card covered the introduction of a two-wing panel of paintings with a card stating that it was to be seen at the California Theatre, and all it cost C. L. Ties Fashion Show Up to Cameo Kirby

Some picture titles seem to be made especially to carry fashion shows, but others can be made to fit, and S. J. Stebbins, managing director of the Fox Oakland Theatre, actually made a virtue of the fact that Cameo Kirby was of the vintage of the '60s. He made that the excuse for contrasting the styles of 1860 with the fall and

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

BEFORE Brooklyn audiences had time to settle down to the new banjo and saxophone players in the orchestra for the Symphonized Jazz, we shook them up again by putting on his new chorus of eighteen feminine voices, and by adding a marimbaphone soloist to the orchestra who can double on the saxophone. These were brought forth with "Richard the Lion Hearted," the chorus being used in a tabloid opera and in "In a Persian Garden," and the marimbaphonist doing his stuff in the symphonized jazz.

The syncopated classic, opening the deluxe shows, introduced "Kind of a Girl Men Forget," "Last Night on the Back Porch," "Havana" and "Moonlight Kisses," the special orchestration bringing out in solo at least ten instruments. The lighting scheme called for two booth Mestrum spots of 150 amperes on the silver draw curtains, amber, with x-rays overhead light blue and purple and with purple foots. Two dome floods in amber were on the orchestra, with green foots on big stage and borders same color. The transparent windows were light green, with fabric columns at either side at proscenium arch lighted green from tops and amber from bottom.

"In a Persian Garden" had a neutral blue back drop upon which were thrown two light blue open box lamps, these lamps being in front of the curtain shooting upward. They were hidden by set piece Oriental wall and house, with rugs, drapes and suitable props here and there. From the sides were six spots, three to a side, colors being amber, orange, light blue, light green and magenta. The chorus served as atmosphere and had two numbers to sing. On a throne left stage was seated a tenor in Oriental garb, who sang "Ah Moon of My Delight" while premier danseuse and ballet did some veil stuff center stage, and chorus joined in refrain. A baritone and a soprano were other principal vocalists, and songs used were "Come Fill the Cup," chorus; "Myself When Young," baritone and three of ballet; "Each Morn a Thousand Roses," Soprano. The front lighting included one deep blue booth flood and one deep purple on sides of orchestra cyclorama; one deep blue and one purple dome flood on musicians; light blue transparent windows, green tops in columns, entrance spots, one magenta and one green, crossing on ceiling pineapple cloth drapes above orchestra.

The condensed opera was "Cavalleria Rusticana," with five principals, the chorus and four members of the ballet as Italian street urchins. It ran twenty-two minutes, preceded by special film trailer giving cast and synopsis of story. The continuity of the opera, in special set as used at Metropolitan Opera House, was carried through as follows: "Prelude" by the orchestra; "Siciliana," Everett Clark, tenor; Introductory Chorus, by the chorus; "Coachman Song," Jac son Kinsey, baritone, and the chorus; "Prayer," Rosa Desrosiers, soprano, and chorus; "Romance," Miss Desrosiers; duet by Miss Desrosiers and Joseph Turino, tenor; "Lola's Song," Louise Fraer, mezzo soprano; Intermezzo, by the orchestra; "Drinking Song," Mr. Turino and chorus; duet, Kinsey and Turino, and the finals by ensemble.

On the presentation stage for this opera were four amber spots from one side and four orange from the other, with amber foots and light blue borders. For the front: Two deep blue floods from the dome on orchestra, which changed to orange when the musicians took up the Intermezzo and went back to light blue on the final strains. Entrance spots flooding side drapes purple. Blue borders on large stage.

winter styles of 1923. To quote from the program, the revue took the spectator "from crinoline and hoop-skirts to bobbed hair and sandals."

One of the leading stores supplied the modern costumes and also paid a portion of the cost of the models, all of whom were professional entertainers who introduced their specialties at some point in the performance. A novelty was the use of a closed car from which the models made their entrance in demonstration of outdoor toilettes.

One side of the stage carried the numerals of 1860 while the other showed 1923, and the appearance of the new model gowns was balanced by the showings of costumes similar to those worn in the play.

The cost was small.

Turned Out the Band

A naval band was placed at the disposal of the Colonial Theatre, Indianapolis, during the showing of Masters of Men, and a machine gun was also loaned for sidewalk display. The recruiting service, as usual, was glad to hook into the pictures, and naturally the Colonial appreciated the expensive aid.

PANELED PICTURES HELP PUT OVER DADDY IN CANADA

Found New Ideas on Bluebeard's Wife

Harold Horne worked a good one on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. He made a foyer display of the more or less "original" costumes worn by Miss Swanson, and advertised it liberally. This not only helped the coming play, but since people had to purchase tickets to get into the foyer, it made additional business on the previous attraction. To get the last possible kick out of it, Mr. Horne added the Zaza stills to the display, to boom the next Swanson as well.

Something that will commend itself was the use of hat boxes over the bracket lights, each cut out for the title, with colored paper pasted over the letters. When the house lights were on these illuminated signs made a brave showing at a very small cost, since the boxes were donated.

These were the high lights of a comprehensive campaign along more usual lines, which included the store arrows and a set of teasers which worked in advance to put over title, star and the gowns.

It was a two weeks' help to Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis.

Still Working

The "original" shawl given to Dorothy Gish by the Cuban government in recognition of her work in The Bright Shawl is still hard at exploitation. It turned up recently in Oakland, Cal., where the T. & D. Theatre put on all the frills, including heavy thief and fire insurance, an armed guard day and night, and its display in a window with a showing of the novel and a painted background.

And the papers bit right into it without being half asked. It was a good story and if it was not free of suspicion, at least it was good reading, so everyone read about it.

Now It's Penrod

The reminiscent contest, originally started by the late Max Doolittle for The Great Moment was adapted by the Madison Theatre Peoria, Ill. On the proposition that Penrod and Sam took you back to the days of your childhood, prizes were offered by one of the newspapers for the best kid memories from the local citizenry. It gained seven or eight columns of publicity at a small cash cost.

The free Penrod suit was given for the best slogan for those garments and a cut-up-puzzle on a throwaway had a 50-ticket prize distribution. It all helped to influence the business in a northerly direction.

Used the Twenty-one

Using the 21 puzzle scheme from Eddie Bonns yellow helber on Three Wise Fools was the chief exploit for that feature at the Abdallah Theatre, Leavenworth, Kans. Manager John Topper displayed the puzzle on a large card in a window and announced that card copies could be had inside for the asking. This was better than throwing them out since each one went home and was worked over.

The only other special stunt used to put the picture over to good business was a thousand letters to residents and the officers at the Army post.

Had Two Forms of Heavy Opposition

Most managers would find it difficult to decide as to whether a circus or a minstrel show was the worse opposition. C. W. Irwin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., not only got both but had to buck Potash and Perlmutter, the local premiere of Tess of the Storm Country and two road shows. And he was opening his Greater Movie Season! Tough luck!

He did not lose his head and spend a lot of money trying to get over. His total excess was only $33, and yet he did better than usual with Harold Lloyd in Why Worry.

He utilized the circus by tagging the parade with an impersonator attended by a couple of bill throwers and took an additional two twos for four days before the opening to tell the newspaper readers. An electric stage box and one in the foyer told the previous week's patrons and for the second time this season he posted a 24-sheet.

He not only got an increase, but the popularity of the star pulled a permanent price increase along with it. He could not break records with all that opposition, but holding business more than up is something of a record in itself.

Good Copy

Simple and effective advertising was done by H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. He used spare tire cards on a brand of taxis, each reading: "You can avoid Strangers of the Night by riding in our yellow cabs." Along the same lines all roads leading into town warned travelers to beware of Strangers of the Night unless they were found at the Empire on specified dates.

It helped to get extra good crowds for a picture well worth while.

Sol Harris, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock is another manager to get a double truck out of Why Worry. He found 27 firms willing to tell why readers should not worry so long as they were doing business, and it made a very pretty splash. Why Worry seems to have won more hook-up pages than any other comedy to date.

HOW THE RIALTO THEATRE, CHATTANOOGA, USED CUTOUTS

C. B. Stiff based his lobby display on cutouts from the Metro posters and got not only a variety of poses, but attention compelling tableaux. Some day someone is going to make a prop dinosaur for a Buster cutout to navigate on.

Says It Is His

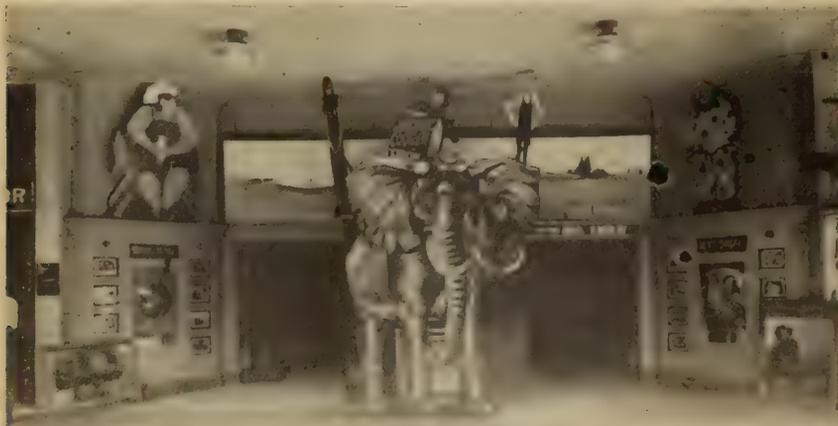

David Rector, manager of the Hawthorne Theatre, Hawthorne, California, writes that in a recent article a Paramounteer is given credit for having originated the weekly "Shopper's Advertiser," published in the interests of the theatre, with the advertising of local merchants and using the Paramount and other roto sheets. Mr. Rector says that the idea was originated by himself and that the Paramounteer's only connection was to edit the first two issues.

The paragraph was supplied through the Paramount publicity channels and the wrongful placing of the credit was doubtless due to a misreading of the exploiter's report. It is no part of the Paramount exploitation scheme to assume undeserved credit. To the contrary.

Mr. Rector writes that the stunt has doubled his business and that he is trying to have the idea legally protected. This is not possible, since the idea is by no means new other than that it uses the roto sheets and makes them pay for their own cost.

Tickled the Town

Just as soon as the Saturday Evening Post printed its recent Paramount advertisement which was illustrated by a picture of the Miller Theatre, Stanley Newton Chambers hustled it into a 200 x 5 (about a five fourteens), to tell the pleased citizens that "Paramount paid $8,500 for this page in the Saturday Evening Post to 'tell the world' about the Miller." Across the top he ran "Not only the finest in Wichita, but one of America's greatest." The entire town shared Chambers's pride.

We just want to run one of each and then stop, but this display from the Empress Theatre, Kansas City, is so much apart from the others that it simply has to go in. The elephant is a home-made cutout, but it is a nice piece of drawing.

ONE OF THE MOST AMBITIOUS LOBBIES FOR CIRCUS DAYS

This was planned by Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, and masks in the box office with a ticket wagon front that adds to the realism. It cost more than some of the fronts we have shown on this production but Kansas City needs more than a small town asks.

Numerous Newsies

Advertising a newsboys' matinee on Circus Days, Frank L. Browne, of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., was amazed at the number of alleged newsboys this Angelian suburb could boast.

Some of them were very clearly retail dealers in the happenings of the day, but there were little girls in white lace dresses and small boys in Penrod suits with their faces washed and some who had not been so particular, but Browne just smiled and said "Come in, fellers," even though they bulged the walls of the 3,000 seat house.

It all helped the story which the collaborating newspaper ran, and it helped the Jackie Coogan play to a close to record business.

Came Back

If it's old and it works, it's good if it is old. H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., used the old sidewalk spelling bee for Circus Days, and it helped to make the 25% increase in receipts that this picture brought in.

He planned for a clown rube and to give him something to do he provided cards lettered to spell out "Jackie Coogan in Circus Days at the Empire."

He would drop these on the sidewalk in a confused mass and sort them out while the crowd gathered. Their interest was proven by the way they sought to correct his supposed mistake when he purposely put some of the letters in their wrong places. Long before he had them properly set the crowd knew the message, but they hung around to make sure the job was properly done, and all the while the message was sinking still deeper into their minds. Then the clown would pick off the cards and go on to a fresh pitch.

Mr. Farley also found that many persons would accept and keep a herald handed by a clown where they would not take them from an ordinary bill passer. That's something else to remember.

Repeated an Ed.

When the editor of the Topeka State Journal wrote a glowing editorial on Penrod and Sam, the Isis Theatre promptly took extra space to reprint the comment to connect it with the house.

One paragraph from the editorial is well worth reprinting here. It reads: "The picture is advertised as a 'juvenile' feature. This is a mistake. It is of more genuine heart interest to father and mother than to the children."

This is where many managers have failed. They have appealed purely to the children, to their own hurt as well as injury to the patron in that they keep some of the latter from a delightful picture for adults.

Still Good

Solemnly assuring the revenue men that he did not want to make moonshine, H. C. Farley, manager of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., borrowed a small still they had seized.

This he set up in the lobby with the worm running into the spout of a teapot instead of a retort.

You can have three guesses as to the title of the picture. If you guess Tea with a Kick, you win.

An Extra Column Is Helpful to Display

Here are two examples of the use of the same press book cut, showing that a three column cut does not always work best in a three column space. These two are practically the same length, but the wider will seem to be the smaller in the reduction, because reduction of the width will pull in the length. The first shown is that of the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, using the cut in the three column space for which it was intended. This is 132 lines long and three columns wide. There is little selling talk other than the two blurbs carried on the bell. The space is not crowded and it makes a good looking display. Most of the confidence of the management is placed in the announcement of the star and the play. The example from the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, is four columns wide and 135 lines deep, a difference of less than a quarter of an inch. Here the First National trademark has been routed out and replaced with a type line in the lower left hand corner. The cast has been moved down to just above this credit line and the authors are stated in the space used for the cast in Baltimore. There is some selling talk on the right and slogans on either side of the star name, up above. It makes a more attractive space chiefly because there is the lighter touch of proper white space; though the cut does not really crowd in three columns. However the larger white spaces give an even better effect and also increase the display value of the cut, which would be lost were the design to be increased to a four column width. The moral seems to be that a two column cut works better in a three column space than a three, or in the last analysis, the white space helps more than it costs. Look the pair of them over and draw your own conclusions.

a change in the cuts. Evidently the original was drawn as shown in the larger of these reproductions. A plate was made and a second negative was made, this being cut to let in the single figure which replaces the tableau in the larger example. The main title and smaller announcements are left in, and the simple change of one cut gives what seems to be an entirely new display so that those who see one form on Saturday, read precisely the same thing with renewed interest when it comes out on Sunday in the morning papers. It is cleverly and effectively done with small cost for the change. Opinions may differ as to whether it is better to use the same style display for the value of iteration or a change to get a new approach. This form seems to combine the best points of each. It is a new approach and yet sufficiently like the other to have the advantage of the repeat, as well. This seems to be a combination display and not a single plate, for the type lines, while very similar, are in different faces and one takes a smaller full face line than the other. It is apparently made up of two or three cuts and not on a single plate. It is an interesting study in method, and it has yielded good results.

One Cut Layout Is Good for Huntress

Here is the first advertising display on The Huntress we have found that does not carry a half-tone of the star that does not help the sales to any extent. This is apparently a press book design worked up for a paneled display, and if we had a house and could get material like this, we would let all the half-tones in the catalogue run for the well-known Sweeney. It is 140 by two, or a two tens; rather deeper than is always good practice and yet the precise proportioning for this cut, and it makes one of the prettiest displays Mr. Malaney has given the Park and Mall Theatres, Cleveland, in a long time. It is a nice harmony of cut and display with the selling talk as well done as the attractor and with an attractor that will help to sell the selling talk. It is seldom that we get as hard a working display, and yet it is only twenty column inches. If Malaney wants to swell his chest out a couple of inches, he has every reason for doing so. This is a pretty thing to look display was worth the extra cost involved. It wanted to ensure that the cuts would be used and that the caption was precisely what the theatre wanted, so it paid to get just what would help the house most, and we think it was a profitable investment, since excess receipts were reported on this picture. This is the Times layout and a similar strip was used in the Post, but with a change in the layout of pictures, though the caption remained the same. This is a more useful form of display than straight type in a paper where layouts are employed, and probably can be taken over to the straight display page at no additional cost unless there is a charge for breaking column rules. Some newspapers still retain this almost obsolete graft. In this layout the outside photographs are given the vaudeville acts, the three central pictures showing the Vitagraph stars. It is a clever and useful form.

Poorly Planned Cut Runs Up the Costs

Here is another example of the line and halftone cuts on The Huntress in which a better effect could be achieved by routing the halftone. This is 175 by 3, approximately 13½ inches deep, for the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore. About three inches across, or nine inches in all could have been

If this sort of thing can be done with a little art work, the same thing can be done almost as well through mortising the plan-book cut, lining with three or six point rule, to get panel and setting in the type. And yet we find on this subject a lot of good line cuts which almost invariably are complicated with an indifferent halftone. Halftones are better than line cuts about once in each thousand times, and yet managers almost habitually play the 1000 to 1 chance—and lose. Take another look at this delightful example of what can be done with line, and swear off halftones, forever.

It may have looked all right in the plan book, but it was printed on a cylinder press on poorer paper, and it is not so good when it is on the job. At best this is not a good choice of the material offered. In its worst aspect it is a dead waste of costly space.

ALICE ADAMS. (6,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. I made more friends and more money on this picture than almost anything I ran previously. The Associated Exhibitors give me real value and I always make good with their products. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

F. B. O.

FLYING DUTCHMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Ella Hall. A fair program picture. Ran "Ocean Swells," Educational comedy, with this, also good, which made nice little program for me. Print in A-1 condition. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission 10 cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. (6,126 feet). Star cast. This picture should be shown in every theatre in the state and everybody should see it. Teaches a good lesson and all should abide by it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

MARY OF THE MOVIES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. How they can get away with a film like this and ask us exhibitors to pay money for it is a puzzle to me. I took it off after the first show. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star cast. Ran this as a fireman's benefit and satisfied a fair crowd. The attendance was not what we expected being for the firemen, but this was not the fault of the picture. A one hundred per cent. show. Fire scenes excellent. Ran this with the Dan Mason comedy, "The Fire Chief," which was very appropriate and satisfied. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochran Theatre, Cochran, Wisconsin.

First National

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). Star cast. This looks like an attempt at a burlesque comedy melodrama which later had the more ridiculous parts cut out and was sent out as a straight melodrama. It is a regular serial thriller and hard to take seriously, particularly with so many of the slapstick comedy stars in the leading parts. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star, Milton Sills. The bird who sees this and says it's no good and the like—yes, he sure is a dumbbell. Had good attendance. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star cast. A very good picture; do not be afraid to book this picture more than one day. Booked this one for Sunday and Monday. We had very good attendance for the two days we played the picture. Draw good class. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A picture that will cause much favorable comment, although it did not draw well for us; cast of practically "unknown" players may have been the reason. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students and railroad class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-15, 10-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (800 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. A dandy. Do not be afraid of this; it holds interest from start to finish. I wish all pictures were as good. Patrons very profuse with good comment. Advertising slant, a real American drama. Good attendance, drawing farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Out of the ordinary pictures. Made good and made money. You can't go wrong on this picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre (900 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. I loved this picture probably because I have heard the voice from the minaret in Turkey and other Oriental countries. All seeing the picture liked it, and no kicks registered. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star cast. This picture is really a very good picture but is not the biggest special of the year as they try to sell it to you. Book this picture but do not pay too much. Book this one for more than one day. Photography is very good in this picture. Had very good attendance. Draw good class. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star cast. I would say first class entertainment. This one has a wonderful moral and should be advertised big as it will please. It failed to draw, however, but no fault of the picture. Posters yielded fair attendance of neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Above the average. Good for all classes. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,034 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. An excellent picture from every angle. Pleased here immensely. Positively the best picture that Miss Talmadge has produced in months. Her last few pictures here were practically "flops" but this is a classic. Get it, play it, incidentally see if you can't arrange to get it at a price that you'll have something left, after the smoke clears away. Usual advertising brought excellent attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good picture. Jones well liked. Picture was well enjoyed. Fritzi Brunette gives fine support. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Very good picture. Should have had more attendance. Print in fine shape. Everyone came out pleased. Advertised it good. Used large heralds, ones. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had one hundred for attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,100. Dan Samek, Victory Theatre, Sulligent, Alabama.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Very good picture, enjoyed by all who saw it, but the working class stayed away. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very pleasing program picture. Everybody enjoyed it. Shirley very popular here, and would advise small town exhibitors to try her out. She always brings a crowd to my house. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A picture that satisfied because of its fast action, also because Jones is a favorite with kids and men. Ladies do not care very much for him. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SNOW DRIFT. (4,617 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A dandy. Jones always good and takes just as good as Mix here. The last reel has got the Carpentier-Dempsey fight stuff. Pleased one hundred per cent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

STEPPING FAST. (4,608 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good picture with plenty of action. It's just what you expect in a Tom Mix picture. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

STEPPING FAST. (4,608 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good picture, but Mix is not the drawing card that he used to be. Would be better if features he was in were entirely western. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD. (10,461 feet). Star cast. Picture that should appear in week runs. One to three days not sufficient to excite public with the truthfulness displayed. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

Goldwyn

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). Star cast. This surprised everyone. Our audiences were convinced they would see some cut-and-dried "gag" comedy and when the story was unfolding they lost themselves in wonder and amusement. Great small town picture. Usual lobby, lithos, brought good attendance. Draw factory people in town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GIMME. (5,769 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Story too light and over the heads of country patrons. Did not give general satisfaction here, but probably would go over well in the larger communities. Don't pay too much for it, for it is far from the special class. Moral tone O. K. and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

GOLDWYN FEATURES. Have proved consistently good. Never get a bad print from Goldwyn and they don't hold you up on the price. Pictures satisfy. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

LAST MOMENT. (6 reels). Star, Henry Hull. This is a creepy picture on which the opinion was very much divided as to merit. The cast was good and inasmuch as I knew the type of film it was, I got a rip roaring comedy and made 'em forget the "shivery" stuff. Candidly this can be played, buy it reasonable. There is nothing that means anything to the small town exhibitor as far as exploitation is concerned but it is a little different and if you balance your program, I think it will please. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK. (4,804 feet). Star, Tom Moore. A fine picture of the 80's. Acting and photography are very good. Enjoyed by everyone; at least I heard no kicks. Used threes, slides. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SIN FLOOD. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Those that saw it called it good. Had bad weather. Had only fair attendance. Draw small town

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

An exchange that looks at the bad print from the standpoint of what the exhibitor pays for his service is all wrong.

If the exchange doesn't care a hang about its duty to the exhibitor, to the producer, to the public, the man in charge ought to think something of his wife and himself and perform his duty in a fashion calculated to prolong his job.

With all the talk about high production cost and excessive rentals, refusal of audiences to pay increased admission, and so on, this print condition is a factor that ought to get attention.

Of course audiences aren't going to pay more when they have been stung with half a picture so often in the past and are being stung today.

And how can the exhibitor feel willing to pay high rentals in face of an apathetic public and the risk of a punk print?

A little more care on the part of producers in seeing that their exchanges deliver decent prints will go far toward bringing about co-operation on the part of exhibitors.

VAN.

and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. Wonderful entertainment. Not a giant but good, from every angle. Pleased ninety percent, including "Yours Truly." Zane Gray stories are well liked. Usual advertising brought full house for attendance. Draw best patronage. W. B. Dobbs, Liberty Theatre, Reform, Alabama.

VANITY FAIR. (7,668 feet). Star, Mabel Ballin. As a classic it is better than to be expected. While not big, it will please at 10-25 cents. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had light attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Very good. Attendance fair. Not a two day, small town picture. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

MAN FROM GLENGARRY. (5,800 feet). Star cast. Fairly good picture. Five reels would have been better than six. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Metro

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Another Metro high priced picture that failed to draw. I don't see how they've got the nerve to ask more this year. Mae Murray is the only star they got that pulls but they ask for more than my gross receipts if the house was filled to S. R. O. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

HEARTS AFLAME. (8,110 feet). Star, Frank Keenan. All that has been said of this one is true. One of the very best of the good pictures. Will satisfy all sane people. It has the greatest forest fire of any yet. Good, wholesome comedy, a rattling story all the way through. Book it. Has splendid moral tone and is suitable for Sunday or any other day. Had big attendance. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star cast. It is wonderful. It's sad but true: it was nearly too good for our regular patronage. Stars are just right, scenes are amazing. Photography good. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A high priced picture that drew only half of the expenses. Picture, though, was very good of its kind. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

SOUL OF THE BEAST. (5,300 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. Very good and well liked, especially by the kiddies—they literally "ate it up." Love drama, suitable for Sunday. Fine attendance of middle and lower class in big city. Admission 10-15 matinee, 10-35 evening. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SUCCESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. It might have been a success for others, but not for me. A bum title and not an overly strong drama. Cast good. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 386. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9 reels). Star cast. This proved to be good. Did not find fault with the story. All the pictures that Rex Ingram gives out are one hundred per cent. Should go good for society class. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 15-25. Joseph L. Katz, Lyric Theatre (350 seats), Woodbine, New Jersey.

Paramount

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Star cast. Patrons say this the best picture in a long time. You can't go wrong on this one. Boost it. Used ones, threes, slides. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An unusual and excellent story gorgeously set and splendidly cast lends itself especially to fashion tie-ups and other exploitation. We played it for an extended run with gratifying results. Has good moral tone; am doubtful whether it is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre (1,100 seats), Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gorgeous gowns and settings, scenes and sensational climaxes in every respect a big production. So good you'll want to see it over again and

I did. Book this one and no mistake can or will be made. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best thing this star has turned out to date, opened good but fell off on the end of the week due to heat. Local censors passed without cuts. Has spicely moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw high class in city of 75,000. Admission 28-40-55. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre (900 seats), Pasadena, California.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Personally, I consider this a conglomeration of nothing. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Eight reels. Sorriest picture we have had for some time. Lay off this one. Many like this one would kill a horse. Used ones, threes. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. (5,601 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very well liked feature which was interesting all the way through. Film in good condition. Draw mixed class. Admission 15-25. Had full house. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

CHILDREN OF JAZZ. (6,800 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. Not at all like one would infer from the title. A fine little picture, entertaining throughout, with an honest-to-goodness laugh supplied by Snitz Edwards. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CHILDREN OF JAZZ. (6,080 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. Production is well done. Interesting and will please providing you get them in. Displays will not get them in as patrons do not demand this type of picture. Good print. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Draw better class and university students, city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. (4,918 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. A weak program picture for us. A fairly good comedy helped save the show and also our old reliable International News helped also. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An entertaining picture. Much better than Holt's "Tiger Claw." Holt, as usual, is good. So are Sigrid Holmquist and Frank Nelson. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HEART RAIDER. (5,075 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Good picture while it was an improbable story, it held the interest of my patrons, and pleased them all. Had fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Not a great picture but entertaining due to the fact that it's different from the usual run of pictures. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. This is a big time production for the theatre that likes something different from the movie melodrama. It pokes fun at a little of everything including the exhibitor and the audience. Tells a smooth story that gets the sympathy of the audience. Introduces all the big time stars in a natural manner. Good business three days. Suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

How About You?

"Please find enclosed my report on "Steelheart." I have been reading a long time at the expense of my Brother Exhibitor, and this is my first to report on."—E. R. Hacker, Colonial Theatre, Gorin, Missouri.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Not what it should be. Pleases fifty-fifty. They either like it or they don't like it. See it and get others' opinion before booking. Has a good story and plot and is better than the other "Star" production put out by other companies. Good print. Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Poor attendance, city of 35,000. Draw university students and better class. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

HUMORESQUE. (5,987 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. Put this on with violinist, pianist and cello and made an excellent program and made a little money for a change. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star cast. Without a doubt one of the finest pictures I have ever seen. It's a pleasure to show this kind. Business good both days. Used posters, heralds, mail. Good attendance of neighborhood patronage in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Miss Dalton was good in this one. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NOBODY'S MONEY. (5,584 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Fair program picture but not one to be played during the warm weather as it does not move quickly enough to hold one's interest under this condition. Wanda Hawley appears very attractive. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. No sign of the genius that marked that other Hurst-Borzage-Cosmopolitan hit, "Humoresque" is visible in this ridiculous conglomeration. Pleased about forty per cent. Moral tone fair only. Not suitable for Sunday. Average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

NE'ER-DO-WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. An excellent picture in every respect, and should draw well. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star cast. Old for us but very good business with this one. One of the very finest pictures; tell me one who does not like Theodore Roberts. Just put in your program that he is the star and that is O. K. Had big attendance for hot night. Draw good class. Victor D. Stamitis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. To begin with, in fairness to the picture, I will say that it is entertaining, well acted, ably directed and flawlessly staged. As a rule those words would indicate that it is a decidedly superior attraction but I most emphatically do not consider it so. Here is a good picture that is likely to do inestimable damage to the small town theatre showing it. It preaches a moral that will widen the breach existing already between the church and the screen. There is not an immoral or suggestive scene or word in it, but the lesson it teaches is vicious. I am not in the least narrow, but in the smaller cities, under twenty-five thousand, we have somewhat bridged the chasm between our theatres and our churches. By strict living, ourselves, and a vigorous elimination of all vulgar, obscene and offensive matter in the pictures, we have developed a following amongst men and women who are generally called "church people." We even succeed in bringing the ministers into our houses occasionally and the habit of preaching against the picture theatre has almost disappeared. Imagine, then, what damage this picture, with its glorifying of dancing and holding up to ridicule those devout church lovers who oppose it, may do in a community where the two great Protestant churches that oppose and forbid dancing, predominate. No matter what my own opinion of dancing may be, the majority of my church going patrons oppose it. Call them narrow if you will, but I must have their patronage if I am to live. If the cause of dancing and "jazz" in general must be championed let someone in a safer refuge than the screen take up the cudgel for it. No producer has the right to use my screen to preach such a doctrine. Mr. Exhibitor in a small city, see this one before you buy it. If your patrons have no objection to seeing a dead minister's wife indulging in extreme gaiety, against the wishes of her strictly reared children, if you play to few churchgoers or if you do not care for the opinion of church going people, this picture is good, but it is dangerous in a community where the exhibitor has, by hard work and strict care, earned the friendship of the churches. E. W. Collins, Jonesboro Amusement Co., Jonesboro, Arkansas.

ON THE HIGH SEAS. (5,050 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture and received many comments on this one. Will please one hundred percent. Used ones, slide. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Didn't think very much of this one. The pink gods were too pink. Some liked the picture and some didn't. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. Bad title. Frightened people off, but the show itself was passable. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Stars, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts. Very good picture with fine cast. Modern jazz drama but suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing middle and lower class of residential district in big city. Admission 15 matinee, 25 evenings. J. F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,260 seats), San Francisco, California.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. From stage play "Dear Me." Just fair picture. Business just fair. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw wealthy and medium class in city of 75,000. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre (900 seats), Pasadena, California.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,754 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A program picture that has good points and will please the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw university students and better class in city of 35,000. Admission 15-25-30. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre (610 seats), Champaign, Illinois.

RUSTLE OF SILK. (6,947 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Drew good for us, but oh my! What a panning we received from the younger element. They said too much mush. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RUSTLE OF SILK. (6,947 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Just thought to be a so-so picture here, neither raved over it, nor did they seriously condemn it, and that's about what the writer thought also. Average entertainment, nothing more. Had fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Just another 49'er but done big. A clever company and producer. Our audience lied it, but no one said much about it. Draw family class in town of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. When the stage-coach galloped into the muzzle of guns and the mammals of quick-trigger men; when the vigilantes were the law, and a rope and a tree brought swift justice, when the west was a world of wild adventure. That's the setting of this vivid story by the greatest of Western writers, Bret Harte. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TIGER'S CLAW. (5,297 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This story is one that is out of the "beaten path" and was well received. Used usual advertising and played to splendid house. Has splendid moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in suburban town. Admission 10-15-20. J. L. Stallman, Darby Theatre (900 seats), Darby, Pennsylvania.

TOLL GATE. Star, William S. Hart. Good western picture. Better than the usual Hart pictures of late. He does less posing and more action. Has fair moral tone. Suitable for Sunday in some places. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 400. Admission 10-35. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (140 seats), Kadoka, South Dakota.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,675 feet). Stars, Mary Miles Minter, Antonio Moreno. Good: much better than many of Paramount's specials. Ernest Torrence stands out in the role of Miss Minter's father. Had extra good attendance. Miss Minter always draws well for me. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This picture drew very well for us. Biggest Wednesday night in months. Picture is good of its kind but is much longer than necessary. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Paid the highest rental, used the most advertising of any picture I have played, but it has drawn the biggest crowd, and pleased them at fifty cents and twenty-five. A picture worth paying a second admission to see. Used slide, photos, heralds, windowcards, boards. Had excellent attendance. Draw farmers, summer visitors and townspeople in town of 800. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Dave's Late Ones

APRIL SHOWERS (Preferred). Stars, Kenneth Harlan, Colleen Moore. Pleased here very much; but didn't pull. Personally, a picture that you can get back of. Nothing big—maybe a shade above program average—but it will please at regular prices and with a nice set of fillers.

ELEVENTH HOUR (Fox). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A slam-bang melodrama of the ten-twenty-third type with every known type of thrill thrown in. Pretty well produced, and if you tell your patrons just what it is you'll get no squawks. The highbrows will ridicule it—but the galler es will "eat it up." It's a good picture. They call it a special, but I'd buy this carefully; it's no "Miracle Man."

Both these reports sent by our good friend, Dave Seymour, having a patronage of health-seekers and tourists, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A very good picture with beautiful settings and all the things that go with the star. If you can buy this right, you can make money. Had good attendance, drawing rural class and from town of 1,100. Admission 10-30-40. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Montana.

WHILE SATAN SLEEPS. (6,675 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Consider this one very good. Rather sad ending. Not much like the old edition of the same story with Dustin Farnum. Good moral tone, possibly suitable for Sunday. Drew good attendance of student and family classes in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THE WHISTLE. (5,359 feet). Star, W. S. Hart. A good drama. Bill looked good in his new role, but story seemed a little too sad to please majority. Print old and badly patched up. Regular advertising gave poor attendance. Draw rural and town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

United Artists

I ACCUSE. (5,000 feet). Star cast. A real honest good picture that pleased one hundred per cent. Can be bought right. Print excellent. Patrons pleased as it was quite refreshing to break away from the usual run of pictures. Used two ones, one three, one six, one set 11x14. Had good attendance. Draw small town class. William L. Eddy, Star Theatre, Bristol, Rhode Island.

Universal

BROAD DAYLIGHT. Star cast. Just fair, but Universal sells 'em right. You don't have to take in a fortune. Used to head variety night. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte City, Michigan.

DEAD GAME. (4,819 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. The usual Hoot Gibson picture, neither good nor bad. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,508 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Fair. Not up to Mayo's standard. Will likely please the majority, but don't expect too much. Used one three, one one, 11x14. Had good attendance. Draw rural class in town of 125. Admission 10-25. George J. Heller, Pastime Theatre (125 seats), Kanona, Kansas.

HEADIN' WEST. (4,548 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Fair. Can't hand it much, though. Moral tone O. K. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

VICTOR. (4,880 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Played this on a Saturday night and it went well. Plenty of scrap in this and it was ideal for the night I played it. It was just the kind that the kids wanted and they didn't hesitate to make it known. Candidly a good program picture that will make good every program promise. Possibly a little inconsistent. But get it and buy it right. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHAT WIVES WANT. (4,745 feet). Star cast. Did not see this one but my patrons said it was below the average for Universal. Pleased about fifty per cent. Below average attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE. Star cast. Fair picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE. Star cast. Old but good for small town patronage. Big revival meeting going on in town but drew average business. Print in good condition and bought it reasonable. Regular advertising brought average attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Comedies

BACK TO THE WOODS. (Christie). An excellent comedy in every respect. Scenery very beautiful also. It will please. It has many novel stunts among big pines and around lumbering camps. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

CAPTAIN KIDD'S KIDS. (Pathe). Star, Harold Lloyd. A fair picture, not up to the Lloyd standard. Advertising slants, Lloyd. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FROM HAND TO MOUTH. (Pathe). One of Lloyd's funny slapstick comedies. Reissue. A laugh every minute. Film first class. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FROZEN NORTH. (First National). Keaton always goes over good here. "Frozen North" the best we have run to date. Draw small town patronage. M. T. Waugh, Empress Theatre, Grundy Center, Iowa.

IDLE CLASS. (First National-Chaplin). The usual Chaplin comedy. Couldn't make much money the day I ran this one because the comedy cost me a small fortune and after paying for feature broke about even. Wish I had run a Lloyd reissue instead. Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance of general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LADIES MAN. (Metro). A good comedy, which although reckoned old had never been shown here, so it was as good as the latest one out. Got a good print too. Draw farmers, summer visitors, townspeople in town of 800. Admission varies, usually 10-

25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

POP TUTTLE'S LOST NERVE. (F. B. O.) Star, Dan Mason. Our first Plum Center; and give us more like it. Film in good condition. W. T. Waugh, Empress Theatre, Grundy Center, Iowa.

ROLL ALONG. (Christie). Another good comedy by Christie. Plot very funny. Black-face comedians is the cast. They did excellent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. H. J. Longa er, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SENNETT REISSUES. (Paramount). These reissues compare very favorably with many of the new comedies on the market, and are superior to any others at the same price. A brand new print is enough to make you happy, and when you have a good snappy comedy on it, everything is all to the merry. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

SKIPPER'S LAST REPORT. (Educational). If any one laughed at this I failed to hear them. A burlesque on serial pictures and country shows. It would no doubt please the reformers that never miss an opportunity to ridicule the picture shows. Draw all classes in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum (300 seats), Quinton, Oklahoma.

TEN SECONDS. (Universal). The best Lee Moran we've run. Got a few laughs for us. Has fair moral tone. I ran it on Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

THOSE COLLEGE GIRLS. (Keystone). This is my first one, and was a dandy. Went big. They are reissues. The old Keystone comedies that were made years ago. If they're all as good as this one, will be satisfied. They are sure in fine shape on the screen and the price is right. Draw middle class. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

THREE MUST GET THERES. (Allied Distributors). Star, Max Linder. (3,800 feet). Some knockout also some "walkout." This is one of the latter mentioned. Moral tone "A flat." Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TROPICAL ROMEO. (Fox). Average comedy as compared with the rest of A1's comedies. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jac Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

WHEN SUMMER COMES. (First National). Good, pleased all. All of the First National Ben Turpin two reel comedies are the best we ever ran excepting one Chaplin. Draw best class in city of 53,000. Admission 10, 25, 30. J. A. Fournoy, Criterion Theatre (569 seats), Macon, Georgia.

Serials

HAUNTED VALLEY. (Pathe). Did not draw for me. Advertising slants mystery element, star. Had poor attendance. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

PERILS OF THE YUKON. (Universal). An excellent picture with great drawing power. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

FRUITS OF FAITH. (Pathe). Got the surprise of my life with this, the first short reel program I ever tried out. Patrons just flocked in and on their way out told me to do it again. In my advertising I emphasized that it was a "Laugh Show." Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

ROPED AND TIED. (Universal). Very good. Business fair. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

STRIKE OF THE RATTLER. (Universal). The usual program picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WONDERS OF THE SEA. (F. B. O.). A good educational picture without a story. Pleased about twenty-five percent of the people, if played with another feature it might be O. K., not otherwise. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

State Rights

CRIMSON GOLD. (Elfelt Prod.). Star cast. (5,000 feet). The usual program picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DANGER TRAIL. (K. E. S. E.-Selig). Star, Violet Hemingway. (5,000 feet). Good picture and business. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GUN-SHY? (5,000 feet). Star, Franklyn Farnum. This is one of the best western pictures we have had in some time. Don't be afraid to book this one. Boost it to the sky. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

HILLS AFLAME. (Russell Prod.). Star, Mary Wynn. Fair picture and business. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JUDGMENT. (World Film Corp.). Star cast. If your patrons like old time costume pictures of the Mary, Queen of Scots time give them this. Very fine (personal opinion). Our patrons do not like this kind, except the highbrows. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MONEY MONSTER. (Peerless). Star, Henry Victor. This picture is absolutely worthless, nothing to it. Would not advise anyone to book it, like all English pictures it's slow like a tea party. Has bad moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

WHEN it comes to completeness of a campaign to put over a picture Goldwyn must be reckoned away up in front with the leaders.

For not only does Goldwyn issue the usual advance press sheet; they go one better and, a short time after the picture has played a few first runs, issue a supplementary "yellow" sheet, in which is incorporated additional exploitation ideas, most of which have proved successful by experience before being suggested to exhibitors.

Thus the exhibitor gets both advance suggestions and the benefits of successful experience.

THE men behind the guns on Goldwyn campaigns are Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns. To them and their staff of capable assistants goes the credit for promoting Goldwyn pictures in a highly successful way.

AS typical of the completeness of the campaign issued on every Goldwyn picture, let us consider the campaign on "Six Days."

FIRST of all, the usual advance press book is published. While it is by no means particularly remarkable as such, it more than holds its place with the best of them, and contains a wealth of good stuff.

The keynote of the entire campaign is the "kiss." This is a darn good sales angle for this particular picture, and it has been carried out in almost every newspaper ad, poster, etc. Of course, the thrill angle has not been forgotten, nor has the straight drama of the plot been overlooked.

THE front cover of the advance press book is an exact-size reproduction of the window card. As explained in a type note, the window card itself is lithographed in four colors. This idea is good, and we believe it to be original with Goldwyn.

The inside front cover of the advance press book contains two-color reproductions of the posters, all of which accentuate the "kiss" idea.

Next follows a page containing the story of the play and pictures of the cast, together with a sales message to the exhibitor.

The newspaper ads are many and varied, most of them being so designed that they are elastic enough to permit of decreasing or increasing their size. Then too, the pictorial parts of the ads are such that the illustration can be reproduced in any size desired. The entire line of newspaper ads is so laid out that the exhibitor who knows even a little bit about engraving can make up his own ads from the illustration and copy contained therein.

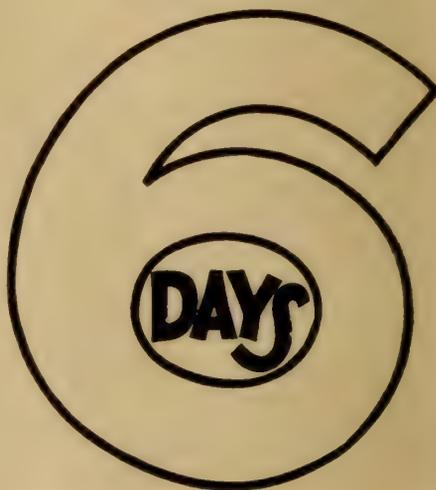

The publicity stories are of the usual calibre, and are printed on pages with blank backs, making them handy to clip. It is worth mentioning that the Reproduction of front cover of advance press sheet. Original is an exact-size reproduction of window card, which idea kills two birds with one stone. Cover itself can be used for display purposes.

FREE PASSES for "SIX DAYS"

TO NEXT BEST CONTRIBUTIONS DURING WEEK STARTING SEPT. 16

One of the stunts in the supplement. $6.00 first prize and passes given contestants who write greatest number of 6's inside the figure six. Inexpensive, simple, effective.

Set of attractive teaser ads drawn by John Held, Jr. They lend themselves particularly to enlargement as illustrations for bigger-space ads. Good stuff.

The "kiss" keynote of the entire campaign. A selling idea carried out in almost every piece of promotion. Just the sort of angle to put an Elinor Glyn story over properly.

publicity cuts have no hand-lettered captions—merely type captions that can be changed or deleted by newspapers at will, without the trouble of sawing or cutting a plate.

Exploitation ideas are fairly plentiful in the advance sheet, which also contains two-color reproductions of the lobby displays, herald, slide, etc. A few stills from the trailer also are shown.

All in all, the advance press sheet is a representative one, and the exhibitor who runs the picture before the "yellow" supplement has been issued has more than enough material with which to work.

THE "yellow" supplement is the exploitation compendium par excellence. Its sixty-odd mimeographed pages contain just about as much seat-selling information as it is possible to crowd into that much space. Its early pages sum up the success the picture already has attained, and the following pages show why—and HOW.

In showman's language it helps the exhibitor understand what he has to sell. For instance, one sub-head rightly states: "Love Theme Your Biggest Bet," and continues: "Six Days" is saturated with powerful 'love' situations." Build up your campaign on that basis, because when your patrons see your advertising containing Elinor Glyn's name along with a peppy love story you have an unbeatable promotion asset."

There may be exhibitors who disagree with the foregoing but we are inclined to the belief that it is true in the majority of cases.

WITH each "yellow" sheet is a sample of the two-color herald, as well as samples of almost every other piece of printed matter that it is suggested be used. A fashion show is suggested, and a sample layout given of what should be an effective throw-away on "How to Win a Husband in 'Six Days.'"

An especially good idea, we believe, is the plan of reproducing the newspaper ads. used during the run of the picture at the Capitol Theatre, New York. As explained in the supplement, the cuts in these ads. were made from illustrations in the advance sheet, and any exhibitor who desires can duplicate them at his local engraver's.

WHILE space limitations prohibit a detailed description of every exploitation idea contained in the supplement, we want to register the opinion that just about every inch of ground has been covered. Merchant tie-ups are explained; a large sheet contains a variety of cuts in differing styles and sizes which may be used in co-operative merchant advertising in almost any size newspaper space; the pages show how to conduct various inexpensive and effective contests, and a host of other things.

No exhibitor in the world could be expected to go in for every stunt suggested, but any exhibitor in the world should be able to gather, from the pages of the advance press book and the "yellow" supplement, more than enough ideas and aids to suit his own particular needs.

IN comprehensiveness the campaign on "Six Days" is the same as that evolved on every Goldwyn release.

Other companies from time to time have issued ultra-comprehensive press sheets on particular pictures, but no other company than Goldwyn, to our knowledge, issues an advance press sheet and a supplementary sheet on every release.

We believe it to be an excellent idea, and one that might profitably be put into operation by others, especially on special productions whose life is fairly long. We feel certain that results would more than compensate for the time, trouble and comparatively slight expense involved.

"His Children's Children"

Many Well-Known Players in Paramount's Screen Version of Popular Novel by Arthur Train

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Arthur Train's widely read novel of great wealth and its unhappy effect on a family in high society has been used as a basis for the Paramount production, "His Children's Children." The picture is elaborately mounted in keeping with the financial status of the leading characters and it is portrayed by a cast of well-known players.

With all the resources at his command, however, Director Sam Wood has produced a picture which never reaches any great heights of drama and in fact only partially succeeds in holding the interest of the average spectator. Apparently there was a big idea behind the novel, that of the baneful influence of the great wealth of old Peter Kayne not only on his son but on his son's three children, but this idea is not clearly brought out in the screen version.

It would seem as if the director tried to do too much with the limited footage at his command. The story demanded that not only should the career of the old man and his fifty-five-year-old son be followed but also the career of each of the three daughters which lead along a different pathway. In doing this there is a wealth of detail in seeking to bring out each character with a resulting overplus of incident and a consequent lack of dramatic force. This is enhanced by the fact that in the constant switching from the career of one principal to another and back again the continuity is broken and the effect of the central theme weakened.

The story is told more as a narrative than as drama. It is in reality a character study of several divergent types and the effect of wealth on each, and while the individual character drawings are well done there is a lack of cohesion in dovetailing them. In bringing out the author's idea there is a noticeable restraint and endeavor to get away from situations that with little twists could easily have been made melodramatic. There is also considerable moralizing. The climax of the story is the most dramatic scene, but its effect is largely psychological, for the picture ends not with the old man saving his son from ruin, as many will expect, but in having the old gentleman as he falls dead tear from the walls a tapestry revealing the motto which seems to be the keynote of the story, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

The large cast all acquit themselves creditably with the limited opportunities at their command. The burden of the story falls upon Hale Hamilton as the father and George Fawcett as the grandfather. Both give good performances, especially Fawcett. Bebe Daniels has the leading feminine role and does satisfactory work in a role for the most part quite different from her usual type and in which she had little chance for effective scenes. The same is true of Dorothy Mackaill, James Rennie and several of the others.

The nature of the plot brings out the unpleasant sides of each member of the Kayne family and their weaknesses, which while entirely plausible, have the effect of not producing any intense sympathy for them. It is not a happy nor an ideal family that is dissected in this instance and several disagreeable facts about them are brought out. As a result, while the picture will probably appeal to those who have read the novel, it seems to be lacking in the elements that go to make up satisfactory entertainment for the majority of patrons.

Story

Rufus Kayne on his fifty-fifth birthday receives from his father Peter the old man's check for his last $100,000. Peter was a forceful old chap with aggressive methods and was known as the Old Pirate. He was never reached in society, but Rufus gained this goal and was known for his eminent respectability. He was president of a big trust company. Rufus at his birthday feast noted the absence of his three children. Diana was away with a duck-shooting party, Claudia was unhappily married to an Englishman and Sheila was with a jazz party. Rufus, feeling the emptiness of it all, allows himself to become infatuated with a chorus girl, Mercedes, and backs a questionable theatrical venture which fails. He is unable to prosecute his associates because of a threat of blackmail and shoulders the burden, bringing ruin on himself. Diana has recognized the error of her way and finds happiness in rescuing Sheila from her questionable habits and associates and eventually agrees to marry Maitland, an idealistic young attorney, who has helped her. While old Rufus is ill from a breakdown, the Kayne house and contents is sold. Rufus, coming down stairs, finds out what is happening and falls dead, tearing from the walls a tapestry revealing the legend, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

"Let's Go"

Richard Talmadge's First Truart Picture Offers Light, Peppy Entertainment

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Truart's first production for Richard Talmadge is a light comedy drama with plenty of action and a good cast. It is slightly more pretentious than the star's previous vehicles. The leading role is more flattering to him, and the general quality of the production and style of performance has more prestige.

It should help to establish a more definite impression of Richard Talmadge's distinct place as an entertainer. His physical agility is exploited in many amusing and spectacular feats and those who are anticipating his stunts will not be disappointed. He makes many daring leaps and does some hazardous climbing all with his usual speed and pep. He excites interest at the start by jumping into a car from a third story window and in numerous pursuits, hops from one roof to another and supplies various thrills that add to the suspense of the story.

Aside from this angle, the plot is fairly amusing and dramatic. George Nichols, with his usual skill depicts a new type of character for him—a kind-hearted village marshal who can't bear to put persons in jail and is always giving them another chance. Eileen Percy makes her small part effective and Al Fremont supplies some more comedy. On the whole there is a good vein of humor, interesting physical action, and enough suspense to hold the attention of the average fan. "Let's Go" has been smartly titled by Ralph Spence and should be a satisfying program feature.

The tramp agrees and obtains some evidence that incriminates the mayor. Meanwhile real thieves appear, and Barry, after an excited chase, trails them and hands them over to the town marshal who is nominated for the new mayor. "Innocence" Finished Word was received from Harry Cohn, producer of C. B. C. productions that "Innocence" in which Anna Q. Nilsson and Earl Foxe are playing the leads, has been finished and a pre-view at one of the Hollywood Theatres has been arranged. The cast also includes Wilfred Lucas, Marion Harlan, William Scott, Kate Lester, Freeman Wood, Jessie Arnold and Vera Lewis.

Legrand's "Bill" Will Go Through Red Seal

In line with the recently announced plan of the Red Seal Pictures Corp., to supply exchanges and public with unusual and distinctive pictures, Edwin Miles Fadman, president, announces that he has just closed a contract with the Legrand Films giving the Red Seal the distribution rights to the five-reel picture entitled, "Bill." This is the same picture which recently created such a sensation at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway that the New York Times, in an article October 14, named it as one of the two best pictures of the year.

It is expected that the picture will be ready for release via the state-right market in about two weeks. A book tie-up has already been arranged with Dodd Mead & Company, publishers of the novel by Anatol France, from which the picture was taken.

Thinks Brown Product Good Independent Bet

"I am more thoroughly convinced than ever that the Harry J. Brown Productions, starring Fred Thomson, will meet the full expectations of all state-rights buyers and all exhibitors as well," remarked Andrew J. Callaghan, after screening the first picture of the series of six, "The Mask of Lopez."

The cast also includes: Wilfred Lucas, Hazel Keener, David Kirby, Frank Hagney, George Magrill, Dot Farley, Dick Sutherland, Pee Wee Holmes, Bob Reeves and the horse, Silver King.

"The one great, big point that is of interest to all state-right buyers is the cost to them of this series. We are handing out quality plus reasonableness in cost," concludes Callaghan.

Red Seal to Distribute All Inkwell Comedies

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of the Red Seal Pictures Corporation, 1600 Broadway, announces that he has closed a deal for his company whereby the Red Seal obtains the United States, Canadian and foreign distribution rights to the popular "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies."

Negotiations between Out-of-the-Inkwell Films Inc., producers of these comedies, and Fadman's organization, have been going on for several months, but it was not until this last week that the final get-together was accomplished.

The Red Seal announces that it will continue to distribute the 1924 and succeeding series of these famous animated comedies in the same way they have been distributed in the past, via the state right market. This is the second big distribution deal closed by the Red Seal within the week, their previous announcement having carried the news that they had closed for the national distribution of "Bill," the five reel feature.

Providence Likes "Unknown Purple"

The world's premier engagement of "The Unknown Purple," the Truart Production, with Henry B. Walthall and Alice Lake, at the Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I., proved a sensational success. Shortly after the opening days Manager Edward Reed of the Strand wired M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Truart as follows:

"'Unknown Purple' opened today with capacity business. The picture has caused positive sensation. Audiences were held spell-bound by its gripping mystery and said so. You have sure-fire, exploitable box-office attraction if ever there was one. It backs up anything you say about it because it is honestly different."

Manager Reed went out after patronage on "The Unknown Purple," using mainly his newspapers, with specially prepared advertisement all using fairly large space. In addition to concentrating upon the dailies, 50,000 pieces of literature were distributed. In all the exploitation the theme of it was keyed about the phrase: "What would you do if you could make yourself invisible?"

Manager Reed also tied up the repeated brearing of windows in the business section of Providence which proved to be a mystery to the city officials. In big headlines the theatre's advertisements asked: "Who is the mysterious window smasher?"

Agnes Ayres in Leading Role

The popular Paramount star, Agnes Ayres, is to play the lead in "Souvenir," Halperin Productions' second big feature for Associated Exhibitors distribution, special arrangements having been made with Jesse L. Lasky. Miss Ayres, recognized as one of the most beautiful and talented of screen stars, achieved a marked success in "The Sheik," with Valentino; "Raving Hearts," "The Love Special," "The Heart-Raider" and many other big photoplays.

Exploitation Matter For Vitagraph Film

The accessories prepared for the exploitation of "The Man from Brodney's" by Vitagraph includes a four page rotogravure section showing action stills and portraits of this forthcoming David Smith production.

The portrait stills of J. Warren Kerrigan, Alice Calhoun, Miss Du Pont, Wanda Hawley and Pat O'Malley, as well as scenes from the hand to hand battle between the Orientals and the whites in the chateau are particularly attractive.

Warner Film Making Big Success

According to reports from the Franklin Film Company in Boston, franchise holders for the Warner Brothers throughout the New England territory, the Warner classic, "Where the North Begins," starring the police dog hero, Rin-tin-tin, is meeting with great success everywhere that it is being shown. Indications from all other sections also are proving that the Warners have a big box office winner in the dog picture.

Hodkinson Prepares New Press-Book

In accordance with its policy to make accessories of the greatest possible aid to the exhibitor, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an unusually helpful press book for its desert picture "Shifting Sands."

Instead of having a separate exploitation sheet, a press sheet and a press book, they are all incorporated under one cover.

Tully Signs Nilsson

Richard Walton Tully has engaged Anna Q. Nilsson to play the part of the heroine of Rex Beach's novel, "Flowing Gold." This is his forthcoming screen production of that story which he will film for First National.

"The Acquittal" a Big Success in Chicago

"The Acquittal," Universal's Super Jewel production of Rita Weiman's celebrated mystery play, had its world's premiere last Sunday in the palatial Chicago Theatre, Chicago. It was hailed as one of the greatest pictures ever made, Universal states, and heralded as one of the biggest successes of the year.

The Chicago is the big first run show house of the Balaban & Katz interests, the first-run franchise holders for First National pictures in Chicago.

"The Acquittal" will be shown in two other Balaban & Katz houses following its week's run in the Chicago Theatre. The newspaper reviewers present in the Chicago Theatre paid unbounded tribute to the high qualities of the production, as well as to the excellent acting of Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry, the principal figures in the cast. The production was directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Saenger Gets Quota of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans has booked the full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the current season for its entire circuit of theatres in New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi. The contract was signed by Messrs. Dureau and Gueringer for the Saenger Amusement Company on their recent trip to New York. J. R. Grainger and Sam Eckman, Jr., acted for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in closing the deal.

The full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases will be shown at the new theatre just being completed in Long Beach, Cal. Its opening attraction will be Marion Davies in her new Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York."

All of the current Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases have been booked by the Nathanson Strand and Amusement Co., which controls the Strand and the Modern theatres in Providence, R. I.

Mary Pickford Film Makes Hit in Chicago

That Mary Pickford's "Rosita," the United Artists release, pleased both Chicago public and critics when it opened at the Orpheum Theatre, is evidenced by the Jones, Linick and Schaefer announcement of the biggest opening business in the history of the house, and the tenor of the newspaper reviews.

The exhibitor announcement concerning "Rosita" from a box-office viewpoint came in the form of a telegram from Jones, Linick and Schaefer to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists. The message read: "Mary Pickford in 'Rosita' opened at the Orpheum Theatre November 3 to the largest business in the history of the theatre. As the Orpheum has been in existence for seventeen years, this is an achievement of which Miss Pickford can be justly proud."

As for the critics and their reviews, the following excerpts tell the story: "Put 'Rosita' among the year's best pictures," said the Tribune. "'Rosita' is eight reels of golden entertainment," said the Evening American. "There is everything pictorial about 'Rosita,' something vast, and in that vastness something inspiring," wrote the Journal.

Completes Filming of "Flaming Barriers"

George Melford has just completed the filming of his latest Paramount production, "Flaming Barriers," most of which was made on location near Sonora and in the mountainous district of Tuolumne County in Northern California.

"Flaming Barriers" was written for the screen by Byron Morgan, author of the Wallace Reid automobile stories, who watched its production on location. Jacqueline Logan, Antonio Moreno, Walter Hiers and Charles Ogle are featured, with Luke Cosgrave and Robert McKim prominent in the support.

Cutting "Drums of Jeopardy"

"The Drums of Jeopardy," Elaine Hammerstein's second production of her series for Truett Film Corporation, is completed and being cut and titled. This is the second offering of the series of Truett Productions which have already been franchised to independent exchanges throughout the country. The third has already been decided upon and work of casting has been begun. "The Drums of Jeopardy" will be released about December 1. It was adapted from the novel of the same name by Harold MacGrath, which also appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Arrangements are under way for a photoplay edition of the novel which will be released concurrently with the release of the motion picture.

"Green Goddess" in Chicago

Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" has been booked for the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, beginning Monday, November 19. This photoplay, starring George Arliss, will be seen at the Royal Theatre, Kansas City, on November 11. It will play the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, on November 25.

"The Green Goddess" did so well at the Merill Theatre in Milwaukee that it was held over for half a week. The play has also just finished a successful double engagement at the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston.

Ray L. Hall Returns to Kinograms

Ray L. Hall, one of the organizers of Kinograms and for three years its managing editor has returned to the staff as Associate Editor, after an absence of two years in other moving picture activities.

New Universal Star

A new star was added to the group of popular Universal stars during Carl Laemmle's sojourn at Universal City. She is Laura La Plante for many months one of the most popular leading women in Universal pictures and who has supported Roy Stewart, William Desmond and Hoot Gibson in many of their most successful pictures.

Miss LaPlante is taking the place of Gladys Walton on Universal's release schedule. Miss Walton has retired temporarily from the screen.

Saenger Books All Goldwyn Releases

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans has booked the full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the current season for its circuit of theatres in New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi.

The contract was signed by Messrs. Dureau and Gueringer for the Saenger Amusement Company on their recent trip to New York. J. R. Grainger and Sam Eckman, Jr., acted for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in closing the deal.

Hal Roach to Amplify Pathe's Feature Production Activities

An announcement this week from the Pathe Home Office to the effect that Hal Roach will produce for distribution by Pathe a feature-length comedy drama heralds the further expansion of Pathe's feature-production activities. The heavy production schedule already decided upon for the one and two reel comedy output at the Hal Roach Studios will sustain no set back or diminution as the result of the new feature plans, the Pathe statement emphatically declares.

The feature length comedy drama to be started in the near future by Hal Roach will head a possible series of two a year. This expansion of production activities at the Hal Roach Studios has been made possible by the recent reorganization of this producing company, which has placed the management in the hands of Warren Doane, general manager; T. J. Crizer, editor; and Harley Walker, title writer. The new administrative arrangements recently effected will afford Mr. Roach more time to devote to promotion work that he has been contemplating for some time past.

Relieved of a considerable portion of the arduous task of actively managing the studio forces, Mr. Roach intends to engage personally in the writing and directing of these comedy dramas. This has been his ambition, which circumstances hitherto have made impossible of fulfillment. The young Pathe producer has for a long time wished to bring before the public in the form of screen entertainment some novel and original ideas in comedy making. With the Hal Roach Studios on the smoothest running basis the company has ever enjoyed and the productive capacity of the plant still untaxed, the opportunity for creative effort long sought by Mr. Roach is at last at hand.

The first of the Hal Roach series of comedy-dramas will bear the title of "Somewhere in Kansas" and, according to advance reports from the Coast, will be a distinctive innovation with surprise comedy twists predominating. The action of the story is laid in the historical period intervening between the Gold Rush of '49 and the Civil War. Blanche Mahaffey, the celebrated Follies beauty, and Glenn Tryon will play the leading roles. A supporting cast of notable talent is being assembled for the production.

The second production in the series will be a comedy drama, the story of which will be laid in New York. No title has as yet been selected. The cast personnel will be announced in the near future.

A complete exploitation campaign, reflecting originality and out-of-the-ordinary production slants, will be embodied in the extensive advertising and publicity campaigns that will accompany the offerings in this series. It is expected that "Somewhere in Kansas" will be ready for distribution in about three months.

In addition to the series of comedy dramas contemplated, the Hal Roach Studios will release two novelty features a year to be made along the lines of "The Call of the Wild," now playing to capacity business in first-run theatres throughout the country, and the forthcoming "Rex, King of Wild Horses," directed by Fred Jackman from a story by Hal Roach and presenting a wild stallion in the featured role.

With Throttle Opened Warners Deaf to Industrial Rumblings

As proof that there will be no let-down as far as productions are concerned at the Warner Brothers' studio on the West Coast, Harry M. Warner, President of the Warner organization, arrived in New York this week to formulate production plans for the coming season. With him are Sidney A. Franklin, producer-director of "Tiger Rose," and other Warner Classics, and Harry Rapf, whose latest production under the Warner banner is "Lucretia Lombard."

Mr. Warner declared that work at the Warner Studio is going on at top-speed in spite of the great flurry which was caused on the Coast by the closing up of some of the big studios. At the present time, "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore, is facing the camera—the most pretentious production ever undertaken by the Warners. "Daddies," a screen version of David Belasco's play of the same name, starring Mae Marsh, is also undergoing production. Among the photoplays just completed, the Ernst Lubitsch Production, "The Marriage Circle" is the most important, with others being prepared for shipment East.

During his stay in New York, Mr. Warner intends to buy up the screen rights of big plays and successful literary material for forthcoming Warner productions. Sidney Franklin will assist him in purchasing story material which he will make productions from. Harry Rapf is also looking for story material on which he will base his future productions for the Warners.

While most of the eighteen Warner Classics for the year 1923-24 have been completed, preparatory work is now going on for all forthcoming productions. Ernst Lubitsch and his staff are taking up the necessary research work for "Deburau," which will be the next production which Lubitsch will make for the Warner organization. It is also understood that the successful musical comedy "Irene," will be listed among the popular plays and stories which the Warners will present in the season of 1924-1925.

Finishes Editing "Maytime"

Editing of Gasnier's production, "Maytime," has been completed at the Schulberg Studios and the first prints will soon be in exchanges of Preferred Pictures Corporation. The picture is based upon Rida Johnson Young's play which has already run six consecutive seasons under the management of the Shuberts.

Run Three Weeks

Two current Metro productions, "Strangers of the Night" and "The Eternal Struggle," enjoyed London triumphs recently when, through popular acclaim, they each ran for three consecutive weeks at London's greatest picture house, the Tivoli Theatre. This sets a new mark not only for native English productions but for American pictures in London as well.

"Light That Failed" Shown in Los Angeles

George Melford's Paramount production of Rudyard Kipling's famous story, "The Light That Failed," one of the new pictures listed by Paramount for showing in the demonstration theatres, had its premiere at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, last week, and was enthusiastically received. The newspaper reviewers were agreed that it was Melford's best picture, even in face of the fact that one of his earlier productions, "Behold My Wife," has been included in many symposiums as one of the ten best pictures ever made.

In its criticism the Los Angeles Examiner said: "Notably present are (1) sincerity, (2) forthright story telling, (3) utterly convincing drama."

Harris Heads Cast

Frank Mayo and Mildred Harris head the cast of "The Shadow of the East," the screen production being made from E. M. Hull's novel. George Archambaud is directing this version of the successor to "The Sheik."

F. B. O. Closes Canadian Deal for "Wreckage"

As a result of a four-cornered conference in Toronto last week between Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of Film Booking Offices, J. L. Hunter, general manager of United Exhibitors of Canada (Canadian distributors of F. B. O.), N. L. Nathanson and Colvin W. Brown, representing Thomas Ince, announcement is made of the contracting for "Human Wreckage," the big F. B. O.-U. E. Special, for the entire Nathanson circuit.

In conjunction with this deal,

Mrs. Reid will tour Canada for several months, visiting the Nathanson theatres and carrying on her dramatic expose of the narcotic curse. Mr. Berman was highly elated over the entire transaction and spoke in glowing terms of the progress Canadians are making in the picture field.

Attractive Herald

The Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an attractive herald for "Shifting Sands."

First National Production Schedule for Next Six Months Definitely Set

First National's production program for the next six months is definitely set. The schedule as announced by John McCormick, Western representative, after a telegraphic conference with Richard A. Rowland, the company's general manager, includes the picturization of the best efforts of the literary world and of the stage. The program is to follow the First National announced plan to produce only that class of pictures worthy of showing in the highest grade theatres.

Enhancing the program of production to be made by the various independent producers releasing through First National is a series of comedy and dramatic plays by the company's own producing units, which are directly under the supervision of Earl J. Hudson, production manager of those units. First in this list is "The Swamp Angel," a screen version of Richard Connell's story of the same title, now in production, featuring Colleen Moore and directed by Clarence Badger.

Also in production now at the East Coast studios is a Norma Talmadge feature, "Secrets," a picturization of the sensational New York stage play. Joseph M. Schenck has intrusted the direction of this dramatic gem to Frank Borzage, who during the past two years has piloted several First National pictures to success. A screen version of "Romeo and Juliet" also is included in Miss Talmadge's forthcoming schedule.

Another stirring feature in production is a Maurice Tourneur special, being produced by M. C. Levee. This is William Dudley Pelley's "Torment," with Owen Moore and Bessie Love in the leading roles.

A Thomas H. Ince offering is a farcical comedy, "The Galloping Fish," featuring Louise Fazenda. From that same unit also will come a historical epic, "The Last Frontier," a drama of the West dealing with the building of the first transcontinental railroad.

The Principal Pictures program to be released by First National comprises "The Meanest Man in the World" and "When a Man's a Man," a screen adaptation of Harold Bell Wright's famous story.

A second production of the First National's own units is to be a picturization of William Hurlburt's emotional stage drama, "Lilies of the Field," featuring Corinne Griffith. John Francis Dillon, who handled the directorial reins on "Flaming Youth," will direct it. Another dramatic type of picture to be made by the same organization is to be "The Woman on the Jury," a version of the play which proved popular on Broadway.

A fourth in the series will be the history-reflecting epic of the fast-fading cattle country, "Sundown," written by Earl J. Hudson. To film this picture the company will go into Mexico, where most of the scenes will be taken on the largest fenced-in ranch in the world.

Constance Talmadge, who just finished the star role in "The Dangerous Maid," is to be seen in two brilliant screen comedy dramas. These are "Alias Nora O'Brien" and "The Mirage," both adapted from outstanding stage successes.

Frank Lloyd, whose first independent production, "Black Oxen," co-featuring Conway Tearle and Corinne Griffith, is being edited and titled, will produce "The Sea Hawk," Raphael Sabatini's glorious tale of romance and the sea, a book which for months has stood as one of the six best sellers of fiction.

Rex Beach's story of the oil fields, "Flowing Gold," will go into immediate production by Richard Walton Tully. Joseph De Grasse will direct it and the two principal parts will be in the hands of Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nilsson.

From the Edwin Carewe unit will come "A Son of the Sahara" and "Snake Bite." The Los Angeles producing director is to make the former in Algiers. A company, including Bert Lytell, Claire Windsor, Walter McGrail and Rosemary Theby, will leave for Africa within two weeks to begin on this virile story of the desert.

Eastern studios also will make a conspicuous contribution to the program. George Fitzmaurice, just returned from Rome after filming Hall Caine's masterpiece, "The Eternal City," is to immediately begin "Cytherea," a highly dramatic feature, at the Fort Lee Studios.

The Richard Barthelmess offerings include "Twenty-one," now being completed; "The Enchanted Cottage" and a historical feature, "Nathan Hale."

Will Direct 5

John Francis Dillon has been placed under contract by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. to handle the directorial reins on a series of five future productions. His first will be a picturization of "Lilies of the Field," the William Hulbert emotional play, which was one of last season's successes on Broadway.

First Runs Resumed at Clune's Theatre

Clune's Broadway Theatre, where many Los Angeles first nights were held before the house was given over to second runs, resumed a first run policy last week. The Preferred picture, "The Broken Wing," recently completed by B. P. Schulberg, held the screen as the feature. Its premiere was a brilliant affair.

Cosmopolitan Expansion Endorsed by Profession

Cosmopolitan Corporation's announcement of the building of three big new studios, all in New York City, was hailed by Holbrook Blynn, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Robert B. Mantell, Rose Coghlan, Lowell Sherman, William Collier, Jr., Charles Judels, Gustav von Seyffertitz as a move which would give the screen a far greater scope in the important detail of casting for big productions.

"Most of America's prominent players," said Holbrook Blynn, "are centered on Broadway. While playing on Broadway, however, they are generally open to screen engagements in and near the metropolis." Lionel Barrymore: "One cannot minimize the screen's need of the leading players of the speaking stage in the casts of photoplay productions."

"Most of the leading players of the stage are available only in New York City," said Otto Kruger.

Lowell Sherman: "The leading artists of the stage have their permanent homes, or are accustomed to congregate in New York." "The screen has need of the best artists of the stage," declared Robert B. Mantell, "and the majority of them can accept motion picture engagements only in New York."

These new studios will double the capacity of the five studios in the metropolis which Cosmopolitan has been utilizing for the making of its pictures. The new studios will have bigger stages to accommodate pretentious sets for the important historical and other special features on its production schedule in the near future.

Edeson Is Engaged for Metro Picture

Robert Edeson, celebrated actor of the American stage, is the latest addition to the cast of Fred Niblo's newest production, "Thy Name is Woman," which Mr. Niblo now has in production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. Mr. Edeson will play the important role of the Commandante of the Spanish Army—a role which those will remember who saw the Broadway production of this play several years ago with Jose Rubens and Mary Nash in the two other prominent roles.

Mr. Edeson has been under consideration for this role since the time Mr. Niblo first began to plan his production, but negotiations were only completed just prior to this announcement. The cast now consists of Mr. Edeson, Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Claire MacDowell, Wallace MacDonald and William V. Mong. Other additions will be made later.

Bess Meredyth made the adaptation of "Thy Name is Woman" from Benjamin F. Glaser's adaptation to the stage. Ben Carre is art director and it is being photographed by Victor Milner

'The Hunchback' Lauded by Baltimore Critics

The unusual success of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in Baltimore, where it recently opened, is due to a large extent, as in New York, to the exceptional newspaper reviews it received. An idea of the esteem in which "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is held by the Baltimore critics may be had from the following excerpts:

The Baltimore American: "If Victor Hugo were alive today would he take off his hat to Carl Laemmle's screen version of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame?' I'll say he would!"

The Baltimore Evening Sun: "The Audience that sat down with doubts in their minds came very near rising with cheers on their lips. That's the kind of a picture 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' is."

The Baltimore News: "Perhaps the highest praise I can pay 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' is that not once during its unfoldment on the screen did I wonder what time it was."

The Baltimore Daily Post: "Picturization of Victor Hugo's great novel could, of course, be nothing but superlative. Mechanically, the picture equals anything yet attempted in the films. Reproduction of the great medieval cathedral of Notre Dame—antedating Columbus' discovery of America—alone is a colossal feat. All settings and costumes are historically correct."

Connelly Added

Edward Connelly, veteran screen actor, has been added to the cast of "The Fool's Awakening," the Metro picturization of William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona," which is in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Harold Shaw. The entire cast now consists of Harrison Ford, Enid Bennett, Alec Francis, Mary Alden, Edward Connelly, Lionel Belmore, John Sainpolis, Harry Northrup, Evelyn Sherman, Pauline French, D. R. O. Hatswell, Mark Fenton, Arline Pretty, and Lorimer Johnston.

F. B. O. Buys Story

The Film Booking Offices announce this week the purchase of a new story for Jane Novak entitled "The Dance of the Chained Slave." The story is an original from the pen of Garrett Elsdon Fort and is a modern society drama with a novel theme.

"The Temple of Venus" Declared Colorful at Broadway Premiere

The fifth special production from Fox Film Corporation to be presented on Broadway this year, "The Temple of Venus," had its initial presentation at the Central Theatre, New York, last Monday evening, October 30.

The theatre was crowded to capacity by an audience that included, in addition to prominent officials of various producing and distributing corporations, leading critics of all New York newspapers and representatives of the various trade magazines.

Henry Otto staged "The Temple of Venus." The theme combines mythology, fantasy and modern American drama. The leading role is played by Mary Philbin. Phyllis Haver, David Butler, William Boyd and Leon Barry also have prominent parts in the production. A special musical setting by Erno Rapee added to the evening's entertainment.

The majority of the New York critics apparently were unanimous in their opinions of the production. The Evening World said: "As a spectacular feat of photography, a venture into color effects, 'The Temple of Venus' is a masterpiece. It has been many a day since New York movie audiences have had a chance to witness such a riot of color effects on the screen."

The New York Telegram critic wrote: "Combining modern drama, fantasy and magnificent studies of wild life and aquatic growth, the picture is probably the most artistic achievement of its kind ever developed." New York American: "The story is finely photographed. The subterranean views are shown in rich colors, and the colorful decoration is carried through the modern revels splendidly." New York Journal: "There are enough young women in gauzy garments, flitting, skipping, hopping, prancing, leaping, diving and swimming about the rocky edge of the California coast to make even Flo Ziegfeld rub his eyes."

New York Mail: "'The Temple of Venus' is a glorified movie 'Follies,' with 1,000 American beauties and a star cast." New York Journal of Commerce: "Phyllis Haver and Alice Day acquitted themselves admirably under Mr. Otto's excellent direction, while charming Mary Philbin is very reminiscent of the late Olive Thomas, both as to beauty and winsomeness of manner."

Hodkinson Reports Many Bookings

"Fun From the Press" continues to be proclaimed by exhibitors an ideal addition to any program. Among recent important bookings, Hodkinson reports the following: Caldwell Amusement Company, New Orleans; Stahl Amusement Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Grant, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Strand, Elmira, New York and the Grand, Terre Haute, Indiana.

To Double Prints

Buster Keaton's second Metro feature length comedy will be known as "Our Hospitality" instead of the single word "Hospitality," by which name it has been known hitherto. Profiting by the lessons learned after the release of Keaton's first Metro feature length comedy, "Three Ages," double the usual amount of prints will be made of "Our Hospitality" to meet the early playdates which exhibitors are asking all over the country. It is set for release November 19.

No Indication of Slowing Up in Production of Vitagraph Films

There is no indication of let-up at the Vitagraph Studios in Hollywood. David Smith is rushing production with all speed on "A Tale of Red Roses," a picturization of George Randolph Chester's novel in which Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller have leading roles.

The announcement that President Albert E. Smith had purchased the world rights to "Captain Blood," by Rafael Sabatini, created unlimited gossip in the picture colony. David Smith, in filming "Masters of Men," the great sea story adapted from Morgan Robertson's novel, is said to point to him as the probable producer of "Captain Blood."

Progress on "The Beggar of St. Sulpice," the special now in making by the French unit of Vitagraph, is proving satisfactory to Albert E. Smith, who visited the studios in Paris.

With David Smith utilizing all the resources of the Hollywood studios, J. Stuart Blackton directing "Let Not Man Put Asunder" at the Brooklyn plant and work going ahead in Paris, Vitagraph producing plans are being carried forward with all zeal. In addition to these units, which are under the personal direction of President Smith, the Whitman Bennett organization at Yonkers, which delivered two specials, "Loyal Lives" and "The Leavenworth Case," is active, and in addition the Charles E. Blaney Picture Corporation has delivered "The Love Bandit" and will soon have ready another feature.

"Pioneer Trails" follows "On the Banks of the Wabash" on Broadway and will be seen at the Rialto Theatre November 11. "The Man From Brodway's," a big production adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is now in the hands of Vitagraph branches.

Three Larry Semon comedies are ready and the fourth, to be released by Vitagraph, will be announced shortly. "The Gown Shop" has been released for first runs and "Lightning Love" and "Horseshoes" are ready for booking.

"The Drivin' Fool" Has Successful Run

"The Drivin' Fool" has completed a successful two weeks' run at the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, a Universal house. Hodkinson reports that business was excellent during the entire run.

Collaboration

Frances Marion and Kenneth B. Clark are collaborating on the continuity of "Sundown," Earl J. Hudson's epic of the cattle country, which is to be made by First National in Mexico. Atmospheric scenes, showing the driving of 250,000 cattle are finished.

More High Praise For "Main Street"

Another award of merit has been handed the Warner Classic, "Main Street," the screen adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel of the same name, by the National Board of Review in its monthly publication, Exceptional Photoplays. In the review of the picture, tribute is paid the Warner Brothers for their sincerity displayed in the screen adaptation. Director Harry Beaumont is commended for his splendid treatment of the story, and Monte Blue and Florence Vidor receive their share of the praise.

The National Board of Review also has included "Main Street" and a number of other Warner Classics adapted from popular novels as suitable literature to be used by different localities during National Book Week, which has been set for November 12. This gives a splendid opportunity for the exhibitor to indulge in a little extra exploitation by tying up with his local book stores and libraries with displays and advertisements during the occasion. Besides "Main Street," the National Board of Review has sponsored other novels from which the Warner Brothers have based pictures on are "Brass," "Dangerous Adventure," "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street."

"The Governor's Lady" Heads Fox Latest List

"The Governor's Lady," a screen version of which has been made by Fox Film Corporation, is listed for release on October 28. Originally this picture was a David Belasco stage production and was written by Alice Bradley. It had a successful career while behind the footlights. Harry Millarde directed the film version. The leading roles are played by Robert T. Haines and Jane Grey, respectively. Other members of the cast are Anne Luther, Frazier Coulter and Leslie Austin.

Additional releases for the week are the Tom Mix picture "Mile-A-Minute Romeo," the Clyde Cook comedy "Wet and Weary," the Imperial comedy "The Monkey Farm," and the Educational "Cloisters in the Clouds."

"Mile-A-Minute Romeo" is said to be just what its title implies—a fast moving picture with all the usual punch. It was adapted from the Max Brand story "The Gun Gentleman," and was directed by Lambert Hillyer. Betty Jewel has the leading feminine role.

The Imperial comedy "The Monkey Farm" introduces those remarkably talented simian actors whose funny antics have enlivened so many Fox comedies.

"Wet and Weary" brings Clyde Cook in a comedy that shows him in his drollest and most entertaining mood.

"Cloisters in the Clouds" is an interesting educational devoted to the monasteries built in Greece about a thousand years ago in which to safeguard religious relics from the Turks.

Big Universal Demand for Pathe Horse Film

Showmen all over the country are registering their appreciation of the box-office value of Pathe's motion picture record of the international horse-race between Zev and Papyrus at the Belmont Track, October 20th, by booking the production for week stands and launching special exploitation and presentation for the showing of the picture to their audiences.

A remarkable instance of the reception accorded the picture is the arrangement made by the Skouras Brothers of St. Louis. Booked solid with features up until November 10th, the Skouras Circuit found it impossible to present the Pathe special immediately after release.

However, Spyros Skouras, head of the circuit, was so impressed with the box-office value of the production that he closed immediately for the picture, arranging to present it the week of November 10th with special exploitation and advertising features in advance of the showing. A special musical score is also being arranged for the Skouras Brothers presentation of the subject.

Clift to Direct

Denison Clift, the American director, who made the screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "This Freedom," and has directed a number of pictures in England, has been selected by William Fox to make the John Galsworthy play, "Loyalties"; "A Bill of Divorcement" and "Mary, Queen of Scots." Mr. Clift has been put under a long-term contract by Fox.

Owen Moore to Play in "Torment"

M. C. Levee has announced the engagement of Owen Moore, popular leading man, to appear in Maurice Tourneur's next production for First National, "Torment." Mr. Moore will be the featured player in this production, heading a cast of prominent players.

Many Governors See and Laud New Blackton Film

"On the Banks of the Wabash." J. Stuart Blackton's feature inspired by Paul Dresser's song, was honored at the Fifteenth Annual Governors' Conference at West Baden, Indiana, during its sessions Oct. 17-19. It was not only selected for the social evening program of Oct. 18, but was praised by governors in attendance. The song of this title has been made the official state song of Indiana.

The Governor of Indiana commended Producer Blackton's conception of Indiana life. "Very beautiful and colorful. Depicts Hoosier life faithfully," the Governor said at the conclusion of the showing which was attended by more than a hundred members of the official families and about six hundred of invited guests. Other comments by executives throughout the country were:

er, Governor of Louisiana. "A charming story beautifully portrayed."—Thomas G. McLeod, Governor of South Carolina. "Exceedingly good and extremely interesting throughout."—Percival P. Baxter, Governor of Maine. "Educational; entertaining, pulsating. A praiseworthy picture full of pep and punches."—Alexander J. Groesbeck, Governor of Michigan.

"Beautifully expresses the lofty sentiments in Southern lore. It is most delightful in all aspects."—J. A. O. Preus, Governor of Minnesota. "Action is rapid and exciting. Exceedingly good entertainment."—C. M. Walker, Governor of Georgia. "A captivating and thrilling picture."—Scott C. Bone of Alaska. "Splendid production; spectacular, exciting."—E. Lee Trinkle, Governor of Virginia. "Highly enjoyable."—N. E. Kendall, Governor of Iowa. "Thrilling, gripping. Very unusual scenery."—Miles L. Riley, Secretary of Governors' Conference. "Delightful, splendidly photographed. Represents a real idea and is wholesome."—W. R. Farrington, Governor of Hawaii.

"Palace of King" Goes to Theatres

Goldwyn's spectacular medieval production, "In the Palace of the King," an Emmett Flynn picture based upon the F. Marion Crawford novel, was released to the exhibitors of the country this week. It will receive its New York presentation at the Capitol Theatre at an early date. The first Pacific Coast showing will be at Herbert L. Rothchild's California Theatre, San Francisco, beginning November 10.

"In the Palace of the King" was adapted to the screen by June Mathis, editorial director for Goldwyn, who has made the adaptation of "Ben-Hur" and who will go to Europe to advise with Director Charles Brabin throughout the filming of that gigantic photoplay.

The cast is entirely in keeping with the magnitude of the production. Blanche Sweet has the leading role of Dolores—the part which furnished Viola Allen one of her greatest stage creations. Edmund Lowe plays opposite her in the role of Don John. Others are Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Star'e, Sam deGrasse, William V. Mong, Aileen Pringle, Charles Clary and Lucien Littlefield.

Metro Heads See Jackie's Latest Film

After months of production, weeks of editing and an aroused expectancy on the part of the general public, Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," was thrown on the screen here in the East for the first time last week when it was shown privately before a group of Metro officials and invited guests.

Among those present at the showing were Marcus Loew, W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation; J. E. D. Meador, director of publicity, and other Metro officials. Among the distinguished guests present was David Warfield, noted actor. Mrs. Jack Coogan, who came east a few days ago with a print of "Long Live the King," was there and she was the happiest of all as her little son's genius was displayed on the screen.

Jackie's picture made a distinct, remarkable impression. Metro took care that Jackie's first Metro picture, as indeed all that are to follow, should receive the finest production possible. The sets were delicately beautiful. The well-knit story, the subtle direction, the beautiful costumes, and the intelligent playing of the various members of the huge cast contribute, it is said, to make "Long Live the King" a truly great picture. Mr. Warfield said, "Jackie Coogan is the greatest genius of us all."

Hawks to Prepare Sea Story Continuity

J. G. Hawks, one of the screen's premier scenario writers, has been selected to prepare the continuity for "Women Who Wait," the production which Reginald Barker will make under the auspices of the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, Mr. Hawks' appointment is one of the most important current assignments of the coast and marks a selection concerning which there was a great deal of speculation.

"Women Who Wait" will be a screen version of the famous New England classic, "Cape Cod Folks," written several years ago by Joseph C. Lincoln. It is considered the one book that best depicts the soul and heart of New England. It is full of action and vivid with the dangers and hardships which are the daily lives of the fishermen who are the "Cape Cod Folks."

Mr. Hawks is thoroughly familiar with the sea, its dangers and the influence it has on men's lives who spend months on the high seas year in and year out. For three years he shipped before the mast on trading schooners and visited well nigh every corner of the world. He has spent years living in New England and has spent much of his time in the very section where the story is laid.

Pearl White to Star in Film Made in France

The announcement comes from Paris that Reginald Ford has his first production already under way starring Pearl White. "Terror" is the title of the new production and it is reported that Miss White is receiving the largest remuneration ever paid by any European concern to an American screen star. Mr. Ford was recently in the United States, and during his stay he disclosed interesting facts regarding his producing organization in Paris.

Mr. Ford then declared that his enterprise is the first ever known composed of an entire American unit with American players, directors, scenario staff, cameramen and technical staff that is financed entirely by French capital. These productions which will be undertaken are all to be made for the American market.

Edward Jose is the American director who is supervising the direction of Miss White's first starring vehicle, "Terror." It is said to be an absolute innovation in motion pictures, as it is the first time that Pearl White has ever faced the camera in France; and the production will be the first serial picture ever made which carries the action through in one performance. The intimate life of real Paris will be disclosed in the photoplay and some of the most thrilling scenes take place in the Paris sewers, much the same as in the current Broadway stage production, "Seventh Heaven."

Special interest has been aroused concerning "Terror" as permission has been granted Mr. Ford by the French Government to utilize a number of historical chateaux, parks and monuments in the picture.

Rehearsing Players to Appear in "Torment"

Maurice Tourneur has started rehearsing players to appear in "Torment" and plans to start actual "shooting" the early part of next week.

Among the players thus far engaged are Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Maude George, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper.

"Torment" is heralded as the most ambitious film by Tourneur since he became associated with M. C. Levee in the production of First National pictures. The scenario is an adaptation from an original story by William Dudley Pelley and has just been completed by Fred Myton.

Seeing the World

Frank Mayo is the record globe-trotting hero of the movies. He played juvenile "leads" in half of the large cities in the world before going into pictures. He is now acting the hero in "The Shadow of the East," which George Archainbaud is directing at the William Fox West Coast Studios. As Harry Cravan, he becomes a globe trotter again, starting off in India, going to England and then to the Desert of Sahara.

To Write the Titles

Robert C. Benchley, dramatic critic of Life, has been engaged by the Distinctive Pictures Corporation to write the titles for "Second Youth," by Allan Updegraff, the production of which was recently completed. The cast includes Mimi Palmeri, Alfred Lunt, Jobyna Howland, Lynn Fontanne, Walter Catlett, Herbert Cortell, Winifred Allen and Faire Binney. Albert Parker directed the production and the adaptation was by John Lynch.

Barker Film a Hit in San Francisco

Reginald Barker's latest production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, "The Eternal Struggle," was the winning picture in San Francisco last week where it was presented for its western premiere at Loew's Warfield Theatre. Not only did "The Eternal Struggle" come in for enthusiastic praise from the newspaper reviewers but it had the hearty support of the public, whose mouth-to-mouth advertising kept the Warfield playing to capacity all through the engagement.

"If you want to be thrilled, go to the Warfield this week," wrote the reviewer of the San Francisco Bulletin. "The Eternal Struggle" is packed with thrills."

"The Eternal Struggle," wrote the critic of the San Francisco Call, "is a real picture. Its reality consists of its substantial characters and the beauty of its setting. Renee Adoree, in the leading feminine role, gives expression to an unaffected play of emotions that is refreshing to behold."

"Those who crave incessant action and red-blooded heroes will not be disappointed in 'The Eternal Struggle' at the Warfield," wrote the critic of the San Francisco Daily News. "The most beautiful scenery on the Rockies forms the background."

"Some of the most beautiful Canadian scenery ever utilized for motion picture drama forms the background for 'The Eternal Struggle,'" agrees the critic of the San Francisco Examiner. "Realism both as to settings and actions of the players is its dominant characteristics. In Renee Adoree the screen has developed a new dramatic actress whose faculty for emotional expression seems unlimited."

Frank Lloyd Finishes Filming "Black Oxen"

With the return of Frank Lloyd and his cameraman, Norbert F. Brodin, from a second trip to Big Bear Lake, California, last week the filming of Mr. Lloyd's first independent production, "Black Oxen," to be released as a First National Picture, was completed.

The Atherton story which has been adapted to the screen by Frank Lloyd and Mary O'Hara is now being cut, edited and titled and it is expected that it will be ready for delivery to First National within the next three weeks. It is expected that "Black Oxen" will go to the exhibitor in eight reels or about 7,500 feet. Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle are featured.

Vidor in New York to Film Exteriors

King Vidor, who has been engaged by Metro to direct Laurette Taylor in "Happiness," arrived in New York last week with several members of his staff to film many important exterior scenes here. Mr. Vidor will remain in New York for six weeks or more, after which with his staff and Miss Taylor and J. Hartley Manners, author of the play, he will go back to Hollywood to complete production.

After Miss Taylor has completed "Happiness," she will appear before the camera in "One Night in Rome," also written by Mr. Manners, who is Miss Taylor's husband. Both these plays are rated among the most successful ever produced on the American stage. With Miss Taylor as the star, "Happiness" and "One Night in Rome" have played up and down the length and breadth of this country and abroad.

Mr. Vidor's choice as director for Miss Taylor is a logical one since it was he who so successfully directed Miss Taylor in the Metro picturization of "Peg O' My Heart," another of Miss Taylor's and Mr. Manners' spectacular successes.

"The Dangerous Maid" Has Been Completed

Constance Talmadge has finished "The Dangerous Maid," a Joseph M. Schenck production, directed by Victor Heerman for First National release. It is a romantic comedy-drama of merrie olde England, in which she has the role of a madcap little rebel who dons a cavalier's sword and costume, and engages in a thrilling series of adventures with the officers of the king.

The story gives Constance her first opportunity to play a dramatic role, and the picture, though it is said to contain many humorous situations of a side-splitting nature, is reported to be replete with romance and love interest.

Conway Tearle, who was Norma Talmadge's leading man in "Ashes of Vengeance," also is featured in support of Constance in "The Dangerous Maid."

"The Leavenworth Case" Named as Most Popular Mystery Story

Whitman Bennett recently sent to one thousand exhibitors a request that they advise him what character of pictures had sure-fire entertainment values. Of the replies received, 80 per cent. of the theatre managers declared in favor of mystery stories, provided the mystery was sustained to the end of the picture. The three qualities that go to make a mystery picture a box office success, according to the exhibitors, are love interest, environment of wealth, and keeping the solution unknown until the end.

Mr. Bennett asked for these opinions when he contributed to Vitagraph his second super-feature, "The Leavenworth Case," a picturization of the famous novel by Anna Katherine Green, which has been booked for a week's run in the Granada Theatre, San Francisco. Mr. Bennett had chosen this classic of all detective novels as being the most ingenious in plot of any mystery story ever written. Mr. Bennett and his director, Charles Giblyn, and his continuity writer, Eve Stuyvesant, directed all efforts in adapting the story for the film to sustaining the mystery as skillfully as Miss Green had done.

The questionnaire sent out by

Mr. Bennett made no reference to "The Leavenworth Case." It asked the exhibitor to name the most popular detective story. Of the 650 replies received, 300 of them referred to "The Leavenworth Case."

Little Theatre Films on Way

Little Theatre Films, a newly organized group of active workers and artistic sympathizers with the so-called "non-commercial" motion picture, have just completed a contract for the nation-wide distribution of their first picture. Through arrangement made with the American Kreuger and Toll Corporation, agents of the Swedish Biograph Company, Little Theatre Films will release "Mortal Clay," written and directed by Victor Seastrom.

The Little Theatre movement of the screen originated in Hollywood last spring and has now been permanently organized for the purpose of providing through existing Little Theatre groups, university dramatic societies and women's clubs a practical and national release for those artistic films which cannot always find a place in the commercial theatre.

The advisory board of the organization is composed of Hugo Ballin, Paul Bern, Ralph Block, Charles Chaplin, William DeMille, Howard Dietz, Walter Prichard Eaton, Douglas Fairbanks, Clayton Hamilton, Rupert Hughes, Rex Ingram, Charles Lapworth, Horace Liveright, Ernst Lubitsch, Warner Officials Laud "Tiger Rose"

"A superb picture—a photoplay that we, or any other organization, would be proud to present."

That is the consensus of opinion of the Warner officials following a private showing of "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric, the screen adaptation of David Belasco's famous stage play of the same name.

"Woman-Proof" Scores A White Way Triumph

"Woman-Proof," Thomas Meighan's latest for Paramount, opened at the Rivoli Sunday and shortly after the opening of the evening's second performance it was necessary to stop the sale of tickets.

"It is extremely well acted—by Thomas Meighan and the rest—and its continuity runs smoothly," said the critic for the Herald. "Simplicity and naturalness are its chief charms," said the Tribune reviewer. The Times reviewer said: "The acting in this film is especially good. Any one wandering off Broadway into the Rivoli will find that this production will make him think better of motion pictures."

"'Woman-Proof' is an entertaining story," said the World, "acted flawlessly, without a solitary attempt either to stop and teach a lesson or to sidetrack and put on a fashion show." And the Evening World: "After years of picture-going we have never found a more popular male star than Tommy, both with the men and womenfolk."

To make way for Sam Wood's production, "His Children's Children," the second of Paramount's "demonstration" pictures, which is scheduled for the Rivoli next week, "Woman-Proof" will be transferred to the Rialto Sunday.

J. S. Woody Happy Over Coast Runs

The week of October 20 was Associated Exhibitors Week in Los Angeles. It was not officially denominated as such but it was true, nevertheless, and the fact was commented upon by the newspapers and men high in picture circles.

In Los Angeles are six long run houses: The Mission, Grauman's Million Dollar, the California, Miller's, Talley's and the Criterion—and in the downtown district, six weekly change houses: Grauman's Metropolitan, Pantages, the Loew State, the Hillstreet, Clune's and the Symphony.

Of these twelve, Associated Exhibitors features occupied four, which caused J. S. Woody, general manager of the organization, to comment: "One-third of the premier theatres in the motion picture capital packing 'em in with this Associated product. Not so bad, my boy, not so bad."

The world premiere run of the Mack Sennett Associated Exhibitors attraction, Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," was in full blast at the Mission, and Charles Ray's big hit, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," was continuing its indefinite run, which also was a world premiere, at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre. Douglas MacLean's "Going Up," his first independent starring production, opened most auspiciously at Grauman's Metropolitan, and Leah Baird in "Is Divorce a Failure?" was playing to packed houses at Pantages.

First National Film Is Finished

"Her Temporary Husband," the First National picture, with one of the largest casts in the history of the movies, is finished.

The farce-comedy was directed by John McDermott.

Goldstein Goes to Coast

E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, left New York several days ago for the Coast to look after affairs at Universal City during the absence of Julius Bernheim. Mr. Bernheim was suddenly called to the bedside of his mother, who is dangerously ill in Laupheim, Germany.

England Welcomes the Film "Trilby"

If the report of one of England's foremost reviewers of motion pictures, Bowler Reed, regulates the sales of the Associated First National picture, "Trilby," starring Andree Lafayette, the film version of this famous play is destined to meet with unprecedented success throughout the United Kingdom. There is, perhaps, no better way of telling of Mr. Reed's views of "Trilby" than to print a few excerpts from his report:

"'Trilby' is one of the very few plays that will stand revival and I have been so much impressed by a private view of this production that I am inclined to urge you to secure a date at once. Richard Walton Tully has made a fine scenario and production of the late George du Maurier's famous novel and play. Also, he has discovered an ideal Trilby in Andree Lafayette, a Parisian actress who not only has beauty and charm but acts the part to perfection. She is the best Trilby I have seen—and I have seen many. The direction of James Young is entirely satisfactory and the casting is generally good.

"The photoplay has but few sub-titles, no unnecessary ones; the photography is completely satisfactory. The best effect of the film is that the great story is so smoothly and intelligently screened, it is as interesting and convincing as the book, it is more lifelike than any stage performance could be."

Rogers on Coast

Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution of Mastodon Films, Inc., has gone to the Pacific Coast on a sales trip in behalf of the organization's 1923-24 series of C. C. Burr productions. He will also visit the exchange centers in Oregon and Washington.

Fox Corporation to Spend $27,000,000 on Production and Development

New Studio Plant to Be Built in Beverly Hills—Many Books and Plays Purchased

WILLIAM FOX

BUILDING upon the firm belief that this country is entering upon a period of solid prosperity, and planning upon the conviction that people the world over in the coming year will attend motion picture theatres in greater numbers than ever before and will be willing to spend more money for motion picture entertainment than ever before, provided the quality of their entertainment is distinctly improved, Fox Film Corporation will spend $27,000,000 between January 1, 1924, and January 1, 1925, in a great, expensive and ambitious program of production and business development.

This is the substance of an announcement made recently by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, which is one of the major motion picture organizations of the world. Of the $27,000,000, more than $20,000,000 will be spent on new productions to be made in the Los Angeles and New York Studios; $2,000,000, at a conservative estimate, will be invested in plays and books from which high class pictures designed to appeal to the constantly improving taste of theatregoers, and $5,000,000 will be expended in the new studio and grounds in Los Angeles.

Mr. Fox, in reply to definite questions, made a brief statement explaining precisely why he has resolved upon his tremendous program for 1924.

"Close study of the situation has convinced me," said Mr. Fox, "that the amusement business of America, Canada and the world at large is on the threshold of an era of the greatest prosperity we have ever enjoyed. I most earnestly believe that our country is finally settling down to work and to stable sensible productive effort in all lines of work. There have been times in the past when I felt pessimistic, but this is the time when I am most distinctly optimistic. However, it is not sufficient to be merely optimistic. In order to enjoy one's shares of the business that is plainly in sight one must give the people who are willing to buy the kind of entertainment they want to buy. That is what I propose to do in the coming season. That is why I am willing, with my board of directors, to spend $27,000,000 in productions and expansion. People will no longer flock to the theatres and spend their money to see inferior motion picture entertainment.

"As is their right, they are demanding the best—the best stories, whether originally written for the screen, or whether taken from book or play; the best direction, the best acting and the best possible settings. My judgment is that if a motion picture concern of first rate equipment and facilities can provide the people with this class of screen entertainment in large quantity, that concern need not lie awake at night worrying about investment.

"Our production program must not be taken to mean that we are going to indulge in extravagant salaries and exorbitant, reckless expenditure. Many persons seem to have an idea that profits in the motion picture business are fabulous and that the business can continue in an orgy of extravagance. That is not so at all. It requires rigid economy and tireless energy to obtain a satisfactory revenue without injuring the exhibitor. This has been our motto from the day we began business. There is no use making a contract that will pauperize the theatre owner, just because a director decided to use 3,000 persons in his cast when 300 would have answered every purpose."

At the present time, according to the announcement authorized by Mr. Fox, his corporation has now actively at work in Los Angeles and New York sixteen dramatic production companies and nine comedy production companies and in addition Fox News, Educational Division and Industrial Division maintain a constant, regular production output. These various producing organizations are employing 2,500 persons, and a weekly expenditure which stands now at a little more than $300,000 a week will be increased to between $400,000 and $450,000 immediately after January 1. The general expansion of production work will run the cost up to approximately $20,000,000 for the year of 1924, Mr. Fox states.

Among the new plays and books purchased by Fox Film Corporation for high class motion picture production such as Mr. Fox foresees must be had to meet the desires of a public which is weary of inferior pictures are "The Fool," by Channing Pollock; "Loyalties," by John Galsworthy; "The Man Who Came Back," which was dramatized by Jules Eckert Goodman from a story by John Fleming Wilson, and for which the record cash price in such motion picture investments was paid by Mr. Fox; "The Warriors of Virginia," David Belasco's play; "It Is the Law," by Elmer Rice; "Strathmore," by Ouida Bergere; "The Hunted Woman," by James Oliver Curwood; "Hearts of Oak," by James A. Hearn, and a score of other plays and books aggregating a $2,000,000 investment.

Possibly one of the strongest and most substantial evidences of Mr. Fox's confidence in American prosperity and improved world conditions generally is the new studio plant to be erected in the Beverly Hills-Westwood section of Los Angeles. This property of 444 acres is between the City of Los Angeles proper and Santa Monica on the Pacific shore. It is bounded on the north by the Los Angeles Country Club and on the south by the Rancho Golf and the Hillcrest Country Club, and is skirted on one side by the Pico Boulevard and on the other side by the Santa Monica Boulevard, the two main thoroughfares from the heart of Los Angeles to the Pacific Ocean. All of the studio buildings, which will soon be under construction, are of the mission type of architecture, and are of concrete fireproof construction. The stages will be among the largest cinema stages in the world, and the general equipment of the new Fox productions plant will be of the best obtainable.

In connection with his new Los Angeles studio plant, Mr. Fox is erecting also what is designed to be the largest and best equipped studio laboratory in the world. The total cost of the new plant will exceed $5,000,000, as has been stated. When this plant is completed and in full operation the present New York studios and laboratory will also continue under full operation, Mr. Fox's policy being to increase and expand production both in Los Angeles and in New York.

In the near future the original Fox studio and grounds will be dismantled to make way for the advance of Los Angeles business and homes toward the Pacific. The grounds will be cut up into lots for banks, a theatre, department store, a hotel and other business enterprises, but production work will not be interrupted or lessened in any degree. Mr. Fox will go personally to Los Angeles on January 1 to supervise the construction of the new plant and to oversee the larger details of his whole $27,000,000 program.

Mr. Fox pointed out in the course of a general talk on the film situation and his own plans that since September 1, in accordance with his policy of expansion, he has extended his business into every country in the world except Russia. Since September 1, he said, he has opened distribution offices and business agencies in Japan, Spain, Austria, Germany, India, Mexico, Cuba, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Holland and Czecho-Slovakia.

Calling attention also to various items of his confident and ambitious program for the future Mr. Fox stated that he will open on November 19 a new theatre in Philadelphia, where he has established a sixteen-story building and motion picture theatre seating 3,000 people, and that he has recently opened a new theatre in Oakland, Cal. He said, too, that he has acquired, as the headquarters for his European business, a new building in London at 13 Bernera street, which, during the war, was the Canadian Army headquarters.

"I believe in the future of motion pictures," said Mr. Fox. "I am building on that belief. That is all there is to it."

Fox Films a Morris Story

Among the William Fox productions for the 1923-24 season is the adaptation of the story by Gouverneur Morris, entitled "You Can't Get Away With It." Percy Marmont has the principal role.

Supporting Marmont are Betty Bouton, as the girl, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruz. Rowland V. Lee directed the picture with rare technical ability.

SCENES FROM TOM MIX'S LATEST FOX PRODUCTION, "NORTH OF HUDSON BAY"

Fox Announces Eight Great Specials, Setting a New Standard for Screen

Prominent in the list of productions arranged for the 1923-24 season by William Fox are eight specials which are expected to establish a new high standard for pictures. Most of them are from original stage plays or widely known stories.

The list includes "Six Cylinder Love," "You Can't Get Away with It," "North of Hudson Bay," "Temple of Venus," "Hoodman Blind," "The Net," "The Shepherd King" and "Gentle Julia."

Ernest Truex, who played in the stage production of "Six Cylinder Love" which pleased Broadway two years ago, has the leading role in the Fox picture. The original play, written by William Anthony McGuire, ran for fifty-three weeks in New York and then furnished the whole country with a series of laughs on the road. Truex seems to have met with the same success in pictures that marked his work on the stage. He is ably supported by Florence Eldridge, Marjorie Milton, Harold J. Mann and Thomas Mitchell. The picture was directed by Elmer Clifton.

Adapted from the story by Gouverneur Morris, the film version of "You Can't Get Away With It" has for its star the remarkable Percy Marmont, whose work in the Fox production "If Winter Comes" has made his name internationally known. He is surrounded by a capable cast consisting of Betty Douton, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruze. Rowland V. Lee directed the filming. The story, a typical Morris product, points to the strength of the moral code and the necessity for world conventions, in a striking way.

several reasons, but primarily because it places the "irile western star in an entirely new type of role. Instead of playing as a broncho-busting, hard-fighting, quick-shooting cowpuncher, Mix appears as a prospector in the frozen country beyond the last trading post. The picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman. In the cast are Kathleen Key, Eugene Palette, Will Walling, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh and Fred Kohler.

"The Temple of Venus" opened at the Central Theatre in New York on October 29, scoring an immediate success. Directed by Henry Otto on Santa Cruz Island in the Pacific Ocean, this picture becomes one of the most spectacular novelties of the screen. Mary Philbin, winner of beauty prizes, is supported by a cast of a thousand west coast girls selected for their remarkable good looks. David Butler has the masculine lead. While the plot of the story is based on the love element, the entire production is a phantasy, featured by underwater photography, fantastic scenes.

"Hoodman Blind," adapted from the venerable success of the vintage of Wallacks, 1885, is a new Fox production which promises to be one of the best of the year. Written by Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett, the play opened in London and came to New York in the same year. David Butler has the masculine lead. The picture is replete with extraordinary fight scenes, flashes of terrible ocean storms and shipwreck. A capable cast lends the principals strong support.

Another picture which promises to rank with the season's leaders is "The Net," from the play by Maravene Thompson. J. Gordon Edwards directed the production, the cast in which consists of Barbara Castleton, Raymond Bloomer, Albert Roscoe, Peggy Davis, Arthur Gordoni, Helen Tracy and others. The story tells of the folly of youth and points to the price that eventually is paid. The stage play was such a decided success that the picture, in the belief of the producers, cannot be less and is more than likely to be even greater.

There is a noticeable tendency toward the spectacle picture in the Fox list this year and none of them is believed to excel in this respect his production "The Shepherd King," another special directed by J. Gordon Edwards. This picture also is an adaption, having been taken from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, produced by William A. Brady. Violet Mersereau has the principal role in a cast of European performers, the same group, incidentally, which appeared in the spectacle picture "Nero." The Shepherd King" was filmed in the Nile country, where Director Edwards used thousands of extras, recruited from the wanderers of the desert and the hordes of Cairo.

No list of adaptations could be complete without at least one from the pen of Booth Tarkington. Accordingly, among the Fox specials is "Gentle Julia," with petite Bessie Love in the title role. This touching story of juvenile sweethearts, with its humor and pathos as real and tragic as any that come in the lives of adults, promises to become one of the most appealing pictures of the year. The picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee. A large cast presents the story with the natural ease which marks the writings of the Hoosier author.

Harold Goodwin enacts the role of Noble Dill, opposite Miss Love.

This list of eight specials, in the belief of the producers, will assure the public one of the most interesting picture seasons in the annals of the industry.

"Gentle Julia" a Good One

Listed prominently among William Fox screen adaptations from the 1923-24 season is the Booth Tarkington story "Gentle Julia," Bessie Love has the title role and Harold Goodwin is the juvenile. Rowland V. Lee directed the picture.

The balance of the cast consists of Frank Elliott, Charles K. French, Clyde Benson, Frank Norcross, Harvey Clark, Emma Tansey, Harry Dunkinson, Jack Rollins, Frances Guant, Bill Irving, Mde. Sul-Te-Wan, Agnes Aker, William Lester, Gypsy Norman, Frank Farrington, Virginia Johnson, Mary Arthur, Richard Billings and Edwin Johnson.

"Six Cylinder Love" Speedy Film

Remembered for its success during a run of fifty-three weeks on Broadway, the play by William Anthony McGuire called "Six Cylinder Love," promises to exceed its own speed record as a picture produced by William Fox. Ernest Truex who played the leading role in the legitimate production, has the same part in the picture.

Florence Eldridge, Marjorie Milton, Harold J. Mann and Thomas Mitchell give characterizations of the principals.

Clifton and Truex Produce Ideal Picture

Seldom indeed does circumstance permit the joint efforts of a director and leading actor in the same production when their exact types are essential to the success of the finished task. This unique combination was realized in the William Fox production of "Six Cylinder Love," which was directed by Elmer Clifton and starred Ernest Truex.

Adapted from the original stage success by William Anthony McGuire, "Six Cylinder Love" required a director whose sense of humor would incorporate in the picture all the fun of the play, as well as the technical elements necessary in any good production. And it was essential that the lead be handled by a man who could actually live in his role.

Accordingly, Elmer Clifton, director of the great Fox picture "Down to the Sea in Ships," was selected to direct "Six Cylinder Love." Ernest Truex, who played the lead on Broadway for a year, took his familiar place on the studio set as the hero. The result was a picture as near perfection as could be expected, it is stated.

One of the first remarkable feats performed by Clifton was an innovation used in "shooting" lavish cabaret scenes with a marine background. In the foreground a scrim was stretched taut across the dancing floor. Upon this netting was painted a deep sea scene in rich colors. Beneath the powerful studio lights the background of the set was blotted out. When the front lights were extinguished, the dance hall came to view, showing the dancers in silhouette, with the backdrop apparently miles away. The result was a marvelous study in perspective and composition. To enhance its beauty, the director used girls from George's White's Scandals and the Follies.

In arranging the various sets Clifton went the limit, using 250 stage mechanics, sparing no expense or trouble in getting exactly what he wanted.

Immediately after he completed "Six Cylinder Love," Clifton was assigned to direct the new Fox Civil war picture from the David

Belasco success, "The Warrens of Virginia."

Ernest Truex first entered the picture field in "The Good Little Devil," with Mary Pickford, after having played in the David Belasco stage play in the same role. He is 34 years old and has been acting for 28 years. His real screen career was launched with his appearance in "Six Cylinder Love," which also proved to be his greatest work on the stage. Fourteen New York critics saw his work in this piece and every review was favorable.

It is obvious then, that with these two men at the wheel, "Six Cylinder Love" was certain to run smoothly and take the hills on high.

"Temple of Venus" Hailed as Screen Innovation

In presenting "The Temple of Venus" as one of his 1923-24 special productions, William Fox offers a unique picture. The picture is frankly called a veritable "screen follies," with its cast of beautiful girls in bathing costumes, its under-water photography and its general air of spectacular elaboration.

Directed by Henry Otto on Santa Cruz Island. "The Temple of Venus" was first presented at the Central Theatre in New York on October 29, to an appreciative audience. Mary Philbin, noted on stage and screen for her beauty, heads a cast of 1,000 bathing girls recruited from the ranks of the most beautiful performers to be found on the West Coast. David Butler has the masculine lead.

The story is a love idyll with all the fantastical elements of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The crystal grottos of Santa Cruz Island, the incomparable calm of the Pacific and the tropical beauty of the island itself, combine to present a picture more dazzling than the most luxurious set of a Broadway extravaganza. Considerable trick photography and some actually remarkable under water shots, add to the attraction. And above all, there are girls, of every type and all of them formed appropriately to be inhabitants of "The Temple of Venus."

In support of Miss Philbin and Butler are Phyllis Haver, Celeste Lee, Senorita Consuella, Marilyn Boyd, Lorraine Easton, Helen Virgil, William Walling, Mickey McBain, Alice Day, William Boyd, Leon Barry, Robert Cline, Frank Keller and an enormous cast of extras.

In order to provide adequate lighting facilities for many of the scenes, Director Otto found it necessary to have a cable constructed from the mainland to Santa Cruz Island. This was one of the many heavy costs of the production, aside from the usual payroll expenses.

While the plot of the story is serious and the acting of the principals is excellent, little attempt has been made to emphasize anything other than the spectacular beauty and bizarre elaboration of the scenes. "The Temple of Venus" is, it is said, distinctly different in every phase, from any motion picture ever produced and there are those who believe that it will open the way to ultimate "motion picture musical comedy."

Fox Early Releases Meet with Success

Returns from all sections of the country and in some instances from abroad, indicate the success which has attended the first series of William Fox specials released earlier in the current season, according to that company's announcement.

Leading all of this group is the Fox picture version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's novel "If Winter Comes," directed in England by Harry Millarde, with Percy Marmont in the leading role. This picture opened on Broadway early in September and still is showing to capacity audiences, with indications of an indefinite run. It also is showing in England and has been presented in more than 100 leading cities of America.

"Monna Vanna," from Maurice Maeterlinck's work, is another Fox special which was acclaimed. This production made a good impression in New York and met with equal success when it was presented elsewhere.

Few pictures of the year were more effective than "The Silent Command," a J. Gordon Edwards production with Edmund Lowe, Martha Mansfield, Betty Jewell and Alma Tell. Opening on Broadway in September, this production has received praise from critics and public wherever it has played. A tribute to the American navy, the production was included in many cities as a part of the program on Navy Day, Oct. 27, which also was the anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt.

Hailed throughout the country as a great thriller, the Lincoln J. Carter picture called "The Eleventh Hour," is meeting with the same success beyond New York which attended the premiere on Broadway.

Another early Fox release was the Tom Mix comedy special "Soft Boiled," introducing the western star as a timid shoe clerk. It provides a good laugh.

WILLIAM FOX PRESENTS "THE NET," STARRING BARBARA CASTLETON, RAYMOND BLOOMER AND ALBERT ROSCOE

SCENES FROM "YOU CAN'T GET AWAY WITH IT," A COMING FOX PRODUCTION

Tom Mix Appearing in a New Type of Role

Tom Mix in furs instead of chaps, on snow shoes instead of on Tony, his wonder horse—mushing through dreary white wastes instead of cactus desert—that, in a line, is the William Fox production "North of Hudson Bay." The picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman.

In support of the western star are Kathleen Key, Eugene Palette, Will Walling, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh and Fred Kohler.

"Billeda" is a drama of the vast. The story relates the experiences of a youngster who tracked from his little home in Canada into the desolate north country in search of gold. His elder brother, a successful prospector, had struck a rich vein but while the boy was enroute to meet him, the older man was shot and under the rude justice of the north country, the man believed to have been his murderer was sent on the journey of death.

This journey of death is a sentence to strike out into the waste without food, arms or fire. The boy, meeting up with the luckless victim of this sentence, fed him and for his act, he too was sentenced to take the long trail. A crooked factor, or governor, was responsible for the sentence, having in mind the rich ore left by the older brother.

But it develops that the murder actually had been committed by a man other than the old prospector who was sentenced. But this phase of the mystery goes undiscovered until the younger brother escapes from the journey of death, returns to the settlement and after a series of hair raising experiences solves the problem. Of course, there is a girl. She loves him before she knows that he is the owner of the gold mine, so they really marry for love and everyone left alive is happy.

The story is different from any in which Mix has played before and he performs with his usual ability, it is said. The cast is exceptionally adequate.

Spectacular Scenes in Coming Fox Picture

Filmed in the Holy Land, within easy camel ride of the Valley of the Kings where Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb was found, the William Fox production of "The Shepherd King," promises to be another spectacle of exceptional merit in his 1923-24 releases. The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, Violet Mersereau has the leading role. With the exception of Gordon McEdwards, the cast consists otherwise of continental artists most of whom appeared in the Fox picture "Nero."

"The Shepherd King" was adapted from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves and produced by William A. Brady. It established a notable success as a legitimate production. The picture "shot" in the shadows of the Sphinx and the pyramids, shows thousands of desert Bedouins in their native element, hundreds of camels and as many tiny donkeys used as beasts of burden over the burning sands of the Nile country.

The story tells of the love of David, the shepherd king, for Princess Michal, daughter of Saul, the king of Israel. Warfare, intrigue, dramatic moments of intense power, all combine to make one of the most spectacular pictures of the year, it is stated. The battle between David and Goliath, the giant of the Philistines, was filmed in detail. Samuel Belastra was cast as Goliath and his proportions are said to warrant the selection.

The march of the Children of Israel, being led out of Egypt by Moses, required 5,000 desert Arabs, an army of camels and donkeys and long days of steady work beneath a desert sun.

Supporting Miss Mersereau, who has the role of Princess Michal, are Nerio Bernardi, Guido Trento, Edy Darclea, Ferruccio Biancini, Ernesto Tranquili, Virginia Lucchetti, Adraino Bocanera, Alessandro Salvini, Amerigo Di Giorgio, Samuel Belestrea, Eduardo Beltsamo and Gordon McEdwards. Most of the European performers in the cast starred in "Nero," which will be remembered as a notable Fox special a year or two ago.

Director Edwards and the American performers spent weeks in the desert before he felt that his work and been completed.

Fox Spectacle Filmed in Shadow of Pyramids

J. Gordon Edwards has not contented himself with making the William Fox production of "The Shepherd King" an impressive spectacle. He has made it a vivid page from ancient history with its incidents reenacted in the actual scenes where they first took place.

Of the millions who will see the picture, there are doubtless some who would be perfectly satisfied with those brilliant illusions created in the studio by elaborate sets and clever photography. But

Mr. Fox has planned to please also the discriminating who insist on reality and whose taste is flawless.

Those who have traveled in the East and those to whom it is a dream of future travel will sit enraptured while all the beauty and colorful charm of Egypt and Palestine unfold before them.

In making "The Shepherd King" Director J. Gordon Edwards and his company spent nearly a year in the shadow of the pyramids. Lavish settings of ancient temples were erected on the desert. Vast hordes of picturesque, dark-skinned Bedouins were employed for the mob scenes. Thousands of camels were pressed into service. The Sphinx, the lazy Nile—all the colorful backgrounds of the desert go into the making of this great film.

The principle male roles are played by Continental actors and Michal—Saul's youngest daughter—is played by Violet Mersereau who scored such a success in Nero some time ago. All the characters are cast in strict conformance to type. There is not a single false note, it is stated.

The story itself has been called the strongest love story ever told. When it was produced as a play in 1904, it was given the highest praise by New York critics and later, when it went on tour, by critics throughout the country. All the dramatic power of the play has been retained in the picture, and added to it is the tremendous advantage of the natural settings and native cast.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Pathe Offers Big Two-Reel Animal Film "Why Elephants Leave Home"

Pathe will on December 9 release a special two-reel production "Why Elephants Leave Home" which is said to be unique in the field of nature films. According to the announcement it "is not a sex picture, neither is it a tale of unrequited love nor a romance burdened with a perpetual triangle" but is described as an amazing adventure depicting for the first time on the screen the thrills and perils incident to the hunting and capturing of wild elephants and training them to the service of man.

Pathe points out the fact that the picture has been cut to two reels from its original length of 6000 feet thereby condensing the action and getting away from a criticism of too great length, also that there is nothing that would repel the most sensitive in the audience, as there is no killing, bloodshed or evidence of cruelty. Further that the method of its presentation follows a humorous, smile-provoking order and every effort has been made to get away from a plain matter-of-fact treatment. The subtitles which are by Katherine Hilliker will, it is said, win a smile and a laugh while the action is provoking a thrill.

The Pathe statement contains the following description of the production: "In India and Ceylon wild elephant herds multiply to such an extent that wide stretches of cultivated areas are devastated by the beasts during their foraging expeditions from the jungle. To prevent these depredations, the Government conducts an "Elephant Kraal," in which thousands of natives participate, the native being qualified by agility and experience to cope with the hazards entailed in the perilous task of corraling the thousands of untamed pachyderms.

"The action of the kraal in 'Why Elephants Leave Home' was taken in Ceylon. Every phase of the perilous round-up is entertainingly shown with an abundance of thrills and human interest sidelights. Tamed elephants are used as decoys and eventually as the actual captors in these kraals. How these domesticated animals, responding to the demands of their masters, lead their untamed fellows into the great stockade and then complete the capture by pulling them to the anchorage of the jungle trees is one of the most interesting and thrilling chapters contributed to the screen's record of wild-animal life in its native haunts."

It is announced that "Why Elephants Leave Home" will be accompanied by a full compliment of accessories including one and three sheets, eight 11x4 sepia views of thrill scenes, five 8x10 black and white stills, slides, ads, cuts and mats. Tie-ups are also being arranged with natural history museums and sportsmen's organizations.

Century Signs Baby Dawn O'Day

Julius and Abe Stern announce the following new players have been engaged for Century Comedies; Dawn O'Day, Lillian Hackett, Harry McCoy and William Irving. Dawn O'Day is a charming little actress just five years old who has already won praise for her work in "Moonshine Valley" and "The Spanish Dancer." She will make her debut with Century in "The Poor Little Rich Pup" starring Pal the dog and in this connection it is interesting to note that Baby Peggy made her Century debut in a comedy starring the dog Brownie. The other players are known for their work with Sennett, Jack White and Christie.

Heavy Exploitation for Doyle Film

Prominent theatres are heavily booking the Pathe two-reel special "Is Conan Doyle Right?" and are said to be making unusually extensive plans for exploitation as the nature of the subject admirably lends itself to this. Among recent bookings are Stanley Company, Jensen and Von Herberg, and Ike Libson for his houses in Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and Indianapolis.

Educational's "Secrets of Life" Prove Popular on Pacific Coast

Educational's new "Secrets of Life" series of single reel subjects is meeting with great success during pre-release showings at leading theatres on the Pacific Coast which bid fair to establish it as one of the most popular series on the market.

The first of this series of Louis H. Tolhurst's microscopic films dealing with insects, "The Ant," was shown at the new Criterion Theatre in Los Angeles and Manager H. B. Wright reported to Educational in part as follows: "After looking over nearly forty reels to get a reel suitable for the opening of the Criterion Theatre with the premieres of Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris" under our new policy of two de luxe shows daily at $1.00 and $1.65 I finally selected the Educational film "The Ant." I am mighty glad I did, for this little picture has been a riot at every show. The audience applauded vociferously each time it was shown."

It is also announced that "The Bee" met with the same sort of a reception during its run at Loew's State in Los Angeles, and as a consequence was booked for Loew's Warfield in San Francisco. It was accorded exceptional reviews by the press, some classing it as the real feature of the program.

The popularity of this series with theatre patrons is believed to be due to the fact that Louis H.

Tolhurst, the scientist who produced these films has been able to present these interesting microscopic pictures in such a manner that they provide real entertainment for all classes and offset prejudices which certain exhibitors and patrons have against subjects of an educational nature on the theatre screen.

Big Pathe Bookings

Following the record made by "It's A Gift" which was the only short comedy on Broadway last week, another Pathe single-reeler "The Knockout" one of the Dippy-Do-Dad series is being shown at the Strand during the current week. Pathe two-reel product has strongly invaded Philadelphia's theatrical stronghold on Market Street with "Asleep at the Switch" at the Stanley, "Frozen Hearts" at the Carlton and "Jus' Passin' Through" at the Victoria.

Centuries Finished

Three more Centuries have been completed recently. Arvid Gilström has finished "Boys Will Be Boys" starring Buddy Messenger; Bobb Kerr has filmed "The Process Server" featuring Jack Earle the giant and Noel Smith has completed a Century Follies Girls two-reeler.

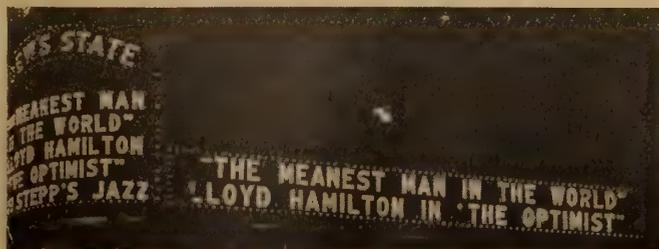

Our Gang in "Derby Day" on Pathe List for November 18

For release during week of November 18, Pathe offers a variety of subjects. Heading the list is an "Our Gang" comedy, "Derby Day," which is said to set a rapid pace for uproarious fun. It shows the little rascals staging a race-track event in which a wide assortment of "steeds" participate including a cow, pony, mule, several breeds of dogs and even a tricycle jockeyed by Farina.

More adventures are introduced in the Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range," which is in its sixth episode. Stan Laurel appears in a single reel comedy, "Save the Ship," in which a staid married man takes his family for a holiday on the rolling deep and encounters sword and flying fish.

The Aesop's Fable, "Farmer Al Falfa's Pet Cat," shows the havoc wrought by the mice when the cat temporarily deserts the homestead. Pathe Review 46 including a group of photographic gems, picnicking near the crater of a volcano, Chicago as photographed in the lens liar series, and a fishing section, "trolling for blues," and a pictorial section in Pathecolor.

GETTING AN EVEN BREAK

Loew's State in Los Angeles gave the two-reel Lloyd Hamilton Comedy, "The Optimist," a fifty-fifty split with the feature in the electrics. Don't be afraid to do this with your own house.

"Down in the Ships to See"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)
 Pal, the clever Century dog is featured in this two-reel comedy in which he is assisted in the fun-making by Roscoe Karns as his master who meets with varied experiences ranging from a near-thrashing by a man whose tent he has wrecked, a flirtation in which the girls chaperone takes a hand and finally a number of sequences on shipboard where Pal's master is chased all over the ship by an irate sailor. There is not much plot and the various incidents are but slightly related however there are several amusing situations and the canine star does some clever work as usual.—C. S. S.

"Derby Day"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)
 The "Gang" has its own race track and its own collection of back yard thoroughbreds as the contestants in this number which has the usual large measure of delicious comedy. In the first reel, the gang runs a hot dog stand beside the race track and a real race furnishes the thrills. In the second, they have their own race track and the various members mount dogs, the mule, a bull and a goat. Little Farina rides a tricycle. It is amusement that all patrons will enjoy and features the famous gang to fine advantage.—M. K.

"Hang On"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)
 Ending with the thrill of a runaway rescue, this Cameo comedy gives the final impression of being satisfactory amusement. A "goose" chase and an exciting dinner scene showing the fiery effects of tobasco sauce are the best features of the number which is not unusual on the whole.—M. K.

"The Idea Man"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)
 Not only is the theme of this comedy developed in an out-of-the-ordinary manner but it also presents the star Bert Roach in several characterizations quite different from his familiar tramp role. As a tramp with bright ideas to sell he explains them to a possible buyer and acts them moment there is excitement elsewhere. Downstairs the mother is conducting a Mah-Jong party and in another part of the city the child's father is terrifying the girl whom he has relentlessly pursued and whom he has at last cornered. Here the primal motive of the picture is at its height. It will probably not meet with approval everywhere, as it is an extreme touch. The child is shown calling for her daddy and this is repeated over and over again in the subtitles to show the strength of the message which is commuted mentally through the faith of a man of saintly character. Her father feels the urgency of the call and leaves for home. Later the child is restored by the same man and her father is

"A Comedy of Terrors"

 Round Seven of the second "Fighting Blood" series is very good entertainment. The interest is turned into slightly different channels this time, as a misunderstanding between the prize fight-

"Lightning Love"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)
 As the title implies, lightning plays an important part in this Larry Semon comedy. Larry appears as the suitor for the hand of a charming young lady whose father favors a big rough guy. Almost the entire action takes place inside the home of the girl during a severe electric storm. The manner in which Larry and the other principal are being continually struck by lightning and the way the lightning follows Larry all over the place, up and down stairs and around corners, is cleverly done and will bewilder the average patrons.—C. Bruce Coming East With Many Negatives

Robert C. Bruce, creator of "Wilderness Tales," which are released in single reel lengths by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has finished his season's work among the beauty spots of the Pacific Coast and is now en route to New York where he will superintend the final editing and titling of the large quantity of material which he secured during the last six months.

Three Circuits Book Pathe Two-Reelers

Pathe reports that the Sanger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, controlling over sixty motion picture theatres in Louisiana and Mississippi has contracted for the entire 1923-24 series of Pathe two-reel comedies. The signing of contracts for the entire series by the Marx and Goodman Theatres on the West Side of Chicago and by the Nirdlinger Circuit in West Philadelphia is also reported.

Century Working on 1924 Productions

Century Comedy directors are at work on the first of the new releases for 1924. Al Herman is producing "The Poor Little Rich Pup" starring the dog Pal; Arvid Gillstrom is busy with the Buddy Messenger comedy "Boys Will Be Boys"; and Bob Kerr is producing "The Process Server" featuring Jack Earle. The other two directors, Noel Smith and McCoy have chosen their stories and casts and will begin active production within a short time.

awakened to a higher standard of living.

This point will naturally be subjected to criticism in some houses. But regardless of whether the "miracle" angle is accepted or not, the production has a great force and unusual emotional depth. Elliott Dexter plays with an understanding of the unusual appeal which the chief character makes. He gives the picture something entirely new, so that it can be said honestly that the picture is not ordinary. Mildred Davis's performance is of real support to him. The heavy is played by Aders Randolf, who makes his character convincingly bestial.

"The Way Men Love" is within the understanding of the average person and has sufficient color, dramatically and pictorially, to be both stirring and entertaining.

"A Perfect 36"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A familiar idea is put to surprisingly effective use in this Christie comedy featuring Bobby Vernon. To escape detection, he wears girl's clothes, pretends to be the bride of his best pal, goes on a yachting trip, finding and making much trouble because of two girls with whom his pal and he are in love. There is constant action and amusement as well as a number of hearty laughs.—M. K.

"The Gown Shop"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this two-reel Vitagraph Comedy, Larry Semon goes in for elaborate settings and beautiful backgrounds representing the interior of a swell Fifth Avenue gown shop, and there is a fashion parade of models in gorgeous gowns. The comedy, however, is the same rough-and-tumble and slapstick type with which Semon has been identified; the only difference is in the backgrounds, for there are revolving doors, knocking over of columns, etc., and a general mix-up as usual. There are a number of amusing situations and plenty of action and this number should prove entirely satisfactory to Larry Semon fans.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 46"

A group of finely photographed scenes called "The Misting Hour" opens this number. PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Why It Is

Sam R. Truedon, Gainsboro, Illinois, is puzzled. He sets his trouble forth as follows:

I am home on the first real holiday I have had for four years. Have been projecting in a small town near St. Louis, using two Powers projectors. What puzzles me is this: When the framing carriage of the right hand projector is clear down there is travel ghost. When it is either clear up, or even half way up there is none. Why is this?

The gearing of the projector is, I think you will find, pretty badly worn. When the framing carriage is clear up, the toggle gear between the pinion on the flywheel shaft and gear 680, figure 237, page 636 of the Bluebook, meshes more snugly than when the carriage is clear down. Examine it carefully and you will, I think, understand. When the framing carriage is clear down you will find that you can rotate the shutter more when the flywheel is held stationary than you can when the carriage is up, and that is the answer. There is just enough additional lost motion to allow of travel ghost.

Better have the projector thoroughly overhauled and new gears installed.

Sprocket Changing

C. V. Danielson, Allerton, Missouri, inquires:

I have had an argument with my friend the Boss as to how often an intermittent sprocket should be changed. Will you be good enough to tell us how often the sprocket ought to be changed? We have two projectors and run every evening, with Saturday matinees.

No, friend Danielson, I could not tell you that, but can tell you how to tell when a sprocket needs changing. It is very simple indeed. Once a week, using a condensing lens as a magnifying glass, carefully examine all sprockets on your projectors. The moment there is the slightest indication of "undercutting" (A, Figure 226, page 602 of Bluebook) they should be changed.

For the information of the newer men who may not have a Bluebook, undercutting is the cutting or wearing of a small notch at the base of the sprocket teeth on their working side. This notch should NEVER be allowed to become deeper than to be barely perceptible when a magnifying glass is used, see page 602 of Bluebook.

Simplex Users

Charles E. Travis, projectionist, Barcli Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., orders two lens charts, one for himself and one for the president of the Schenectady local, who is projectionist at the new State Theatre, and says:

I ought not to speak to you, as you went through our fair city on Nancy Hanks and stopped over night in Albany (that was a year ago.—Ed.) and I do not recall anything I ever did to you to deserve such treatment in return.

Well, I guess I'll have to forgive you, as you probably had some good reason for snubbing Schenectady and tenting in the Home of the Politician.

The following is for the benefit of users of Simplex projectors, though I think it surely will apply equally well to all makes of projector. Set the sprocket idler rollers one (1) thickness of a film away from the sprocket. This dope is from the Simplex company, and works fine. I had trouble with the lower loop and this stopped it.

With best wishes and hoping that you will Notice! Notice!

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the Spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear, keep away and keep his hands off the name "projection room."

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "projection room" and disapproves "projector room." One local, Rock Island-Moline No. 433, has officially endorsed "projection room" and objected to "projector room." I would like to see other locals come to life and do the same, remembering that the nomenclature adopted by the S. M. P. E. will become standard.

Wake up, men, and show your interest. Write your endorsement of "projection room" on a separate sheet—as an entirely separate letter, which may be sent in the same envelope with another letter, if you wish. GET BUSY!

be able to stop that fast express you ride, on your next trip through Schenectady, I am yours for better projection.

The time Travis speaks of was on my return from the Rochester meeting of the S. M. P. E. last fall. Friend daughter was along and we had made a trip to Toronto, Hamilton and Kingston, Ontario, had been gone nearly two weeks, and the weather was getting frosty. We were both tired, and thought of little else than home and rest about then, except that we hoped to get there before icicles formed on our noses. A mile was a mile then, brother Travis, and Albany was several of them closer to our hearthstone and fires. I certainly will stop next time I pass through Schenectady.

As to the idler roller, I have for many years (see "Sprocket Idlers," page 606 of Bluebook, or 466 of Third Edition) advised the setting of sprocket idlers two thicknesses of a film away from the sprocket. One thickness would be right, were it practicable to so adjust the idler that the roller would just barely touch the film, without pressing upon it. My advice is to place an extra thickness of film over the sprocket and lower the roller until it rests on the film, setting the holder so that the roller just rides the two thicknesses of film. When the extra thickness is removed it will be found that the roller will just barely clear the surface of the single thickness when the film hugs the sprocket, and that is exactly what is wanted.

There is no more prolific source of film jumping the sprocket than being pinched by the sprocket idler rollers, especially if the idlers be not in perfect alignment with the sprocket. If the bracket spring be a strong one, this is especially true. I have found the two-thickness adjustment to be more certain of giving satisfaction than the single thickness, though mind you, the latter is alright if VERY carefully and intelligently done.

A Little Stunt

E. K. Shirley, projectionist, Woodbine Theatre, Homer, La., says:

Here is a little thing which might help some of the men working in a small town, as I am.

For a brake for my rewinder I took an old spindle from the upper magazine of a projector—the complete spindle, I mean—and placed same on dummy part of my rewinder, placing a leather washer between the spring and the dummy to help eliminate wear on end of spring. Find that with this I can get the exact amount of brake tension I desire, merely by tightening or loosening the nut.

Here is a brother who meant well. His intent was to be of assistance, and we all appreciate that, BUT he should have told us what kind of a rewinder he has, and what make of projector he subtracted the magazine spindle from. With the kind of rewinder he has, the kind of spindle he has works just fine, or so he says. With some other sort of rewinder, or some other sort of magazine spindle it most likely wouldn't work at all. All this is to draw your attention to the desirability and necessity of giving full details when describing things. We appreciate the intention of the good brother, but his performance of that intention leaves things to be desired.

Important

John Griffith writes:

Dear Frank: I see, October 6 issue, you ask for more definite explanation with regard to flexibility of crater position when using the new Cinephor condenser. When I mentioned the fact that the crater position is flexible when this condenser is used I merely stated what I had observed while trying out the Cinephor.

In connection with this statement I did not advise that any change should be made in laying out the projector optical system as per the lens chart. The only thing to do when using Cinephor is to gauge the correct crater position by the screen illumination, and not by the spot at the cooling plate. It is not so much a question as to whether or not this feature of Cinephor has any practical value, as it is to know why it is so with Cinephor and is not so with plano convex condensers. The reason is that there is no ghost zone on the beam from Cinephor, whereas there is in the beam projected by plano convex or meniscus bi-convex.

With Cinephor the crater position is not critical because of the fact that a clear field will be projected to the screen, regardless of what the position of the spot may be ("spot" as here used means most narrow point of cross section of light beam), because the light is evenly distributed at any cross-section of the beam, and the discoloration action shown in figure 45, page 178 of the Bluebook is absent.

With plano convex the crater position is critical, because of the fact that the light is only evenly distributed in cross sections of the beam at or near the spot, hence a slight alteration of the crater position will cause unevenly distributed light at the aperture plane, which unevenness will, of course, be focused on the screen.

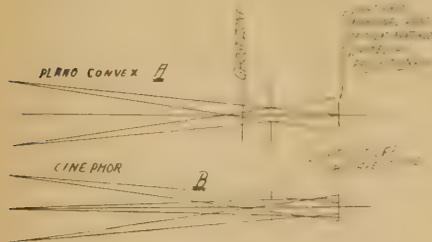

IMPORTANT

One important thing I forgot to mention is that, when using the new chart to adjust the projector optical system with Cinephor condenser, distance Y must be measured from face of the converging lens to spot position, instead of from face of converging lens to aperture. This makes distance Y two inches less than lens chart distance Y reads.

Lens Diameter and Cinephor

Maximum screen illumination is obtained by advancing the spot (narrowest point of light beam) through the aperture towards the projection lens. The smaller the diameter of the projection lens the further must the spot be advanced in order to get maximum screen illumination, BUT the maximum screen illumination is less for a small diameter lens than it is for a lens of larger diameter, with a light source of given area and an equal working distance.

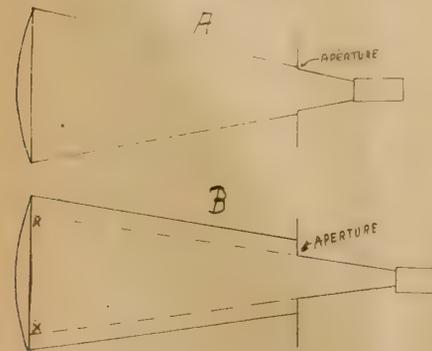

That last seems to me to be the one big, important thing we must thoroughly understand. According to my understanding, it is quite possible to get the entire light beam which passes through the aperture into any diameter projection lens at any working distance, but it may only be done at the expense of, in effect, reducing the condenser diameter, as shown in the diagram I have drawn. At A the entire beam enters the lens; also it does at B, but there is not nearly so much light because of the fact that by shortening distance Y we have enormously enlarged the spot (light beam at the aperture). Perhaps I am in error in this. If so, I shall be glad to know exactly in what my error consists.

Later, Griffith has the following to say with regard to my comments, which were submitted to him before publication:

Dear Frank: Accompanying diagrams are to show that your comments and diagrams do not quite cover the situation. In figure B you will see that as you advance the "spot" (most narrow part of beam) the aperture begins to cut off some of the light from the marginal zones of the condenser, gradually cutting into the center zones. Were you to advance further than shown in diagram B you would begin to cut light from the center zone of the condenser.

The beam cannot be reduced in cross-section less than the diameter of the spot, no matter how far it is advanced.

Darn Griffith anyhow! I wish he had the same ability in expressing his ideas as he has in understanding them himself. I don't think one of you will "get" him in that last sentence any better than I do. I presume what he has in mind is that the minimum diameter, or cross section of the beam, is fixed, no matter what its location, and this point he calls the "spot," which it is not. The spot is the spot at the collong plate. I don't know just what we might call the most narrow point of the beam, which is not at the spot with Cinephor, but some name must be evolved for it. Image of the light source won't do, because the image, in some cases, covers a distance of several inches.

Vision

I am amused when I read of an orchestra of anywhere from six to sixty men demanding and getting as much as sixty to seventy dollars a week per man, whereas the projectionist would, except in comparatively few places, drop dead of heart failure were he to be offered seventy dollars for a mere week of his time. When a man speaks of the projectionist getting sufficient money to make the projection of pictures a really worthwhile job, the exhibitor promptly counters with: "I can't afford it. If there was only one of them I could, but look! There are two, and in many cases four!"

But he, at the same time, is paying a dozen or more musicians and is not ruined at all.

In the purchase of such things as the labor of musicians or projectionists it is largely a matter of vision, both on the part of the employer and employee.

The employer has the musician right before both his own eyes, and the eyes of the audience. He can estimate the effect excellence of music has on the audience. He has vision to believe that an investment in plenty of high-grade musical skill will pay—that the sale of tickets will be increased by reason of the fact that there is a large, high-grade orchestra.

And he is right, too. But when it comes to the projectionist, the audience cannot actually see him perform, hence does not so keenly sense how much of its enjoyment it owes to the man or men back there in the dark. Also this out-of-sight thing has its effect on the mind of the manager, and somewhat in the same way.

In this case the theatre manager must have vision. He must sense the fact that it is just as necessary to back up the drawing power of "Our Mary" by having her put before the audience at 100 per cent. value as it is to supplement her drawing power with a good orchestra. He must sense the fact that a high-grade feature for which he has paid much real money will have far greater drawing power if it is put on the screen by high-grade men in a high-class way, than it possibly could have if it were put on by a low-grade man in a low-grade way.

Perhaps I might better amend that last, in this way: The theatre which puts on its pictures at 100 per cent. value of projection will have much greater drawing power, using the same subjects, than the theatre which puts on its pictures in a low-grade way. It is just as useless to dispute that as it would be to dispute the fact that the sun rises in the East. You may dispute either proposition, but that does not in the least degree alter the truth.

The projectionist, on the other hand, also must have vision. He must be able to understand that the path which leads to success is swept by the winds of toil—that there is no primrose path to excellence in anything. He must sense the fact that because he studies and tries hard and meets with no approbation from a square-head employer is no reason on earth why he should get discouraged and quit trying.

You, or most of you, say that Richardson has "succeeded"—whatever that means. I wonder how many of you realize that my "success," such as it may be, came only after THIRTY YEARS OF TOIL, all more or less, as I can see now—preparatory. And yet the great mass of projectionists who start out to really learn their profession get tired and discouraged and quit after anywhere from a month to a year of more or less desultory effort, because they have not seen tangible results.

Have a little vision, men! Don't think the boss is altogether a fool. By and large he knows that what you actually do is not worth, as things go, any very large remuneration. You are not listened to when you offer advice about screens, auditorium lighting, motor generators and a dozen other matters, because you have not been able to, or have not convinced the boss that you have anything more than a very sketchy knowledge of those various things.

The musician has vision. You, friend projectionist, have vision too, but it is of one thing only,—pay night. Of course there are exceptions, and the exceptions grow more numerous as the years pass. But of the great mass it still is true that "pay night" is the one vision they bother with.

Let Me Prophesy

Let me prophesy that when the great mass of projectionists wake up to the real importance of their profession in the motion picture industry, and SET OUT TO MAKE THEMSELVES WORTH REAL MONEY, they will get it; also the paying of it under those conditions will be a blessing to the exhibitor, because it will increase his income three dollars for every dollar paid out.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Stewart Says That We've Started Something. Why He Wants Mail Order Service. Economy of Isolated Plants.

IN practically the same mail we received a statement from a correspondent that the Benn Theatre of West Philadelphia had installed a $24,000 organ, and the following letter from a North Carolina exhibitor:

Spruce Pine, N. C., Oct. 30, 1923.

Mr. E. T. Keyser,
Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Keyser:

In a recent issue of The World you had the nerve to inform the little fellows of the country that some progressive manufacturer was turning out a small organ, suitable for small theatres, and that the cost would not exceed that of the building and a lifetime monthly payment—or something to that effect. Anyway, I would certainly appreciate the address of the concern and enclose a stamped envelope for your convenience. I believe you have started something this time sure, so please take a few minutes of your time and shoot some names along.

Thanking you for your interest and with all good wishes for Equipment Department, I remain.

Yours very truly,

A. G. STEWART,
Piedmont Theatre.

We advised the correspondent to go back and look over the organ installation again and also to ascertain from the manager of the theatre how much of the $24,000 quoted was real and how much stage money.

To the North Carolina exhibitor we sent an illustrated catalog of a manufacturer which contained the description of an instrument, the cost of which is well within his means.

We agree with Mr. Stewart that the Moving Picture World has started something. Some day the organ builders themselves, who are now kicking so strenuously against the press agent tactics of their competitors in boosting paper prices, may start something also in the way of telling, in plain United States language, just what they have to offer the average exhibitor and what it will cost him.

AND here is another communication, which, because it constitutes something of an indictment of the methods by which the supply business of his city is conducted, we suppress the writer's address:

October 31, 1923.

Editor, Equipment Section,
New York City.

Will you be good enough to give the names of one or two reliable houses which handle motion picture supplies, issue catalogues and make prompt deliveries by parcel post, a la the mail order houses?

Our needs are not extensive, relating exclusively to the motion pictures of one religious denomination, but even these needs can't be met here satisfactorily. It seems that virtually nothing is kept in stock. I had to wait two weeks for a film waxer, and then didn't get what I wanted. I waited the same length of time for a humidifier, and then was given a fireproof reel cabinet. I should have preferred a different type of rewinds than what I have.

This is the sort of equipment in which I'm chiefly interested now. Can you give me a lift? I'll appreciate it very greatly indeed.

Respectfully,

DWIGHT H. FEE.

We have suggested that the gentleman get in touch with the Howells Cine Equipment Company of New York City and Erker Bros. of St. Louis, Mo.

From time to time we have heard criticisms, expressed more or less courteously, by supply dealers of other supply dealers who invaded their territory.

If conditions, such as described above, are at all prevalent there seems to be a good reason for the aforesaid intrusion.

ON another page we publish a communication from a Long Island exhibitor who describes the trouble which he has experienced in connection with his local light service and who furnishes concise and definite data as to his requirements.

His case is typical of that of so many exhibitors that a large percentage of our readers will be interested, not only in Mr. Edwards' complaint but in the remedy which we have prescribed for same.

The fact that his initial expenditure for an independent lighting plant would be a trifle less than the amount of his current bills for two years, to say nothing of what he is losing each year through defective light service, constitutes a strong argument for the economy of the isolated lighting plant.

THIS is evidently the day of the good, moderate sized picture house.

Last week we described the six hundred seat Peerless of the Bronx. In this issue we jump across the continent to Bandon, Oregon, whose Hartman, a house of seven hundred seats, constitutes another illustration of the beauties which are embodied in the modern theatre of modest seating capacity.

The picture is the thing, and always will be, but the up-to-date exhibitor realizes that the patron of the small house likes to be comfortable while viewing the screen, and the Hartman's cry room would appear to make for peace and quiet of all concerned.

MENTION of the Peerless reminds that some one pointed out that we had neglected to mention just how much that attractive house had set its proprietors back financially.

As others are probably interested in that rather important point, we take this opportunity of informing them that the total damage to the bank roll was forty thousand dollars—quite moderate when one considers what they received for their money.

A CONVENTION of the Eastern Zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America, Inc., will be held at the Hotel Astor November 12-13.

It is expected that President Oldnow and Secretary Barth will be present at the convention, at which matters of importance to distributors, supply dealers, and manufacturers will be discussed.

The territory of the Eastern Zone comprises Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York State, including New York City and the state of New Jersey, Scranton, Pa.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C.

Attention of Mr. Harry Blumberg

Dear Mr. Blumberg:-

I want to take this occasion to thank you for your co-operation and the service you rendered in completing my projection installation at the Benn Theatre.

It is hardly necessary for me to call attention to the perfect picture which the Powers Projectors are showing on my screen. You know my opinion of the Powers as the one machine best adapted to furnish the kind of projection which a theatre of the size and importance of the Benn requires. My fourteen years' experience with projectors in the various theatres I have operated have taught me that the Powers is the projector of the greatest satisfaction and the least worry.

Very truly yours,

Marcus A. Benn

A SIDE WALL OF THE HARTMAN THEATRE

Showing the method employed in decorating the panels into which upper portions of walls are divided.

The Hartman, of Bandon, Oregon, Is a Credit to Its Community and Owners

BANDON, Oregon, is the proud possessor of a modern theatre, beautifully decorated and appointed, equipped to handle any sized road show as well as motion pictures. The theatre, which is named the Hartman, and is the property of Mrs. E. A. Hartman and Son, occupies a plot 52 feet wide by 125 feet deep. It has a double lobby, a foyer, main auditorium and balcony and has a seating capacity of 741, with twenty-four velour upholstered loge seats in addition.

Construction is of reinforced concrete, made as fireproof as possible. The building has an asbestos roof. All wiring is in conduits. Lighting fixtures consist of two large lights at either side of the ceiling of main auditorium. These fixtures have indirect center bowls of etched opaque glass. An iron rim around the set holds twelve amber globes. This is further augmented by six etched indirect bowls in the back of auditorium and over balcony. In the foyer, amber lanterns, with a center light of iron and polychrome add an artistic touch. The etched bowls, close to ceiling, give lobby lights.

Color Scheme French Gray and Old Rose

The color scheme is French gray blended with old rose and purple in sufficient degree to give a tone of warmth. Walls are French gray throughout the house. Drapes are of mulberry velour, trimmed with dull gold galloon. Walls in the main auditorium have art panels of Gobelin tapestry effect. Flower gardens give an attractive finish.

The stage dimensions are 52x24 with proscenium opening of 24 feet. Full stage equipment, lighting effects, scenery is installed with the purpose of attracting road attractions, and modern dressing rooms insure convenience and comfort. An asbestos drop curtain, over-draped with velour curtains, completes the stage appointments.

Fotoplayer Supplies the Music

A number 46 Fotoplayer, installed in an organ pit, directly in front of the stage, supplies the music.

Projection equipment includes two projectors, a motor generator, Bausch & Lomb Stereopticon. The projection room is placed in the center of the balcony.

The ticket office is in the center of lobby, with French doors at either side, leading into the inner lobby, which in turn leads to the foyer by means of six one-panel doors. Wiring has been installed for a marquee and electric sign which will be added later.

The loge seats occupy three rows across the front of the balcony. Twenty-four seats in the front row are of upholstered velour, the balance of upholstered leather. All are of Heywood-Wakefield manufacture.

A modern, well-appointed women's rest room, men's smoking room, lavatories and office help to round out the beauty and comfort of the house. A feature of the service is the sound-proof glass room situated over the women's rest room and entered through it by a stairway. Here mothers can take their crying children and still enjoy the show without spoiling any one else's pleasure.

Opera chairs and all interior decorating were done by B. T. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle. The house is attractive and is a credit both to the community and the family whose name it bears.

A Concrete Example of the Economy of an Independent Generating Plant

THE following communication illustrates a condition which is common to many picture theatres throughout the country. And the fact that Mr. Edwards has, in his first letter, definitely described his requirements and his present current cost puts us in a position to be just as definite in suggesting a remedy.

What Mr. Edwards Writes

East Hampton, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1923.

Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Upon reading the Moving Picture World of November 3, on the independent generating plant for motion picture theatre service, I immediately became interested.

I have considerable trouble with my light service which costs me quite a sum of money each year. Only last week I was without light service for three consecutive nights and am unable to get any rebate from the light company.

Would like very much to find out how much it would cost me to install an independent generating plant, in my theatre capable of running the whole plant.

I have a throw from the Powers 6A machines to the screen of 137 feet. Have two machines and silver sheet screen. I use 110 volts and 60 amperes.

Loses $300 Per Annum

I also have a one horsepower organ motor and six electric fans and about thirty-five house lights.

During the month of August, 1923, I used 516 K W hours, at 14 cents an hour, costing me $70.07. I am open six days a week, run two shows a night.

As near as I can tell I lose about $300 per year due to failure of light service.

The yearly cost of furnishing my theatre with electricity is $630.88 per 1922.

Any information that you can give me on this subject will be more than appreciated.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Very truly yours,

L. A. EDWARDS,

Manager, Edwards Theatre.

The Remedy

What we would prescribe would be a 7½ K. W. 110-volt direct current generating plant.

Such a plant can be obtained consisting of a 4-cylinder 4-cycle motor, direct connected to a standard compound wound multiple pole generator.

The entire outfit, the shipping weight of which is approximately 1,350 pounds, is mounted compactly upon a heavy base, with radiator, fan and switchboard and muffler all mounted on the motor, making for economy of space occupied. Such an equipment would cost approximately $1,200, and, with kerosene as fuel, would cost approximately 21 cents per hour, with fuel at 14 cents per gallon, or, operated on gasoline, at 22 cents per gallon would cost 33 cents per hour, when operating the plant to its full capacity.

Pays for Self in Two Years

It will be noted that, at an annual cost of $630.80 per annum for current cost, a two years' electric bill would practically pay for the outfit.

Hammons' organization. But this is a darb, for you know what that means. For those who are in ignorance concerning the show definition of a "darb," the writer ventures to say it is to the picture theatre box-office what the shekels passed over at a world's series booth is to baseball. A corking good two-reeler worthy of being featured on any bill and illuminated out in the electric lights. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Let's Quit Talking

MAYBE something is going to be done about it! That is the chief thought that comes to us as we conclude reading the statement by F. J. Godsol, elsewhere in this issue.

There is nothing bomb-like in the declaration that production costs must be curtailed by individual courage and efficiency; nothing startling in the proposal that joint distribution is the solution of the producer's selling problem.

But there is an attitude of goaded desperation; the suggestion of a brave decision that something must be done about these words from Mr. Godsol:

"Today, in the motion picture industry the real vital issue is whether or not the producer is to receive fair and reasonable prices for his pictures. . . . Why do not the producers take action—not talk—to destroy this danger, the greatest menace to the picture industry!"

There, flatly and plainly, is an invitation to action; a challenge, if you prefer it that way.

Will there be a response? In deeds—not in further talk?

* * *

IT is our belief that Mr. Godsol's interest in his own statement is confined entirely to the probable reception accorded the few words quoted above.

Mr. Godsol, in our mind, set out to extend an invitation to action, nothing more, nothing less.

Assuredly, he can have no hope that his words will make a dent in the hides of the exhibitors whose control of their territories has brought about the present situation.

For so many moons that the beginning has been forgotten we have had our few pet evils to complain of in this business. Sometimes we talk ourselves up to the point where we see naught but EVIL and no BUSINESS.

And for as many moons we have had as many favorite and pat panaceas to solve those problems.

Mr. Godsol's attitude is that of a man who has grown weary of the drone of complaint and suggestion—dreary to the point of arising in meeting, banging the table, and saying:

"Well, gentlemen, LET'S DO SOMETHING! Or call the gab fest off and go back to our jobs."

* * *

IT is not for us at this moment to comment on the pros or cons of the problem of stabilizing production costs; nor to discuss and analyze the many angles to the joint distribution bubble.

But we would like to see a half dozen of our better-known film men get around a table and thresh out the joint distribution argument face to face. And, maybe, settle it for once, and for all.

At any rate, it would clear the air—and save a lot of time for work back in the individuals' own offices.

Through the medium of a trade paper statement issued this week by Mr. Whoozis, a commentary the week following by Mr. Whatzis, a criticism the next from Mr. Whichiz—and the whole operation repeated three months later—we are getting nowhere.

And wasting a lot of time, considerable breath, and much white paper and printer's ink.

Who will be the first film man to write Mr. Godsol:

"Your invitation received. Am not sure whether I care to go to your party or not, but at least you interest me. Suppose we get a bunch of the boys together for dinner some night next week and talk it over?"

Mr. Laemmle? Mr. Rowland? Mr. Loew? Mr. Fox? Huh?

"The Hunchback" is going to the exhibitor pretty soon, according to our tried and true friend, Dame Rumor. If true, we think this is one of the wisest moves yet taken by Messrs. Laemmle, Cochrane, et al. "The Hunchback" has shown on Broadway that it is a real money-getter. And with the air full of shut-down talk the exhibitor is ready for money-getters as never before. He has heard a lot of talk about the big and bigger pictures of this season—now he'd like to see one at work for his box office.

Don't get the events for Thanksgiving Eve confused. It is at Madison Square Garden that Rudolph Valentino will choose the winner of the National Beauty Contest, and at the Ritz that the film industry will dine Harry Reichenbach.

The only trouble about giving the Silver King a dinner is that you can't very well ask him to be his own toastmaster. And a film dinner without Harry handling the gavel will have its drawbacks.

Harry's best line in a year was his introduction of Samuel Goldwyn at the Fredman luncheon. "I wish to introduce the man who is my partner in the film business"—then sotto—"He owns a ninety-five per cent. interest in my pictures."

Will some one please page the two-thousand-a-week actor who has consented to alter his contract to read seven hundred and fifty a week? We read about him in the daily papers. Jesse Lasky is understood to be his discoverer. We would like to see this rare bird. We have known of actors to walk the streets until their names were forgotten before they would take a ten per cent. reduction—and the fellow who at the first sign of storm drops from two "thou" to seven-fifty must have come from a museum. Or at least deserves a niche there.

Got an interesting slant the other day from a man who has considerable contact with the financial district and money interests generally:

"The one happening of the past year that has done more than anything else to scare capital away from the picture industry," he declares, "was the announcement that Jackie Coogan was to receive oodles of millions a year."

And he concluded sadly: "You can't cram that down the neck of a sixty-year-old banker who still considers a fifteen-thousand-a-year man a valued and adequately paid executive."

Nor does it make for a friendly attitude on the part of a nationally known newspaper editor who has probably slaved some forty years in a half dozen countries to reach the munificence of ten thousand a year.

Let's have it understood: That the press agent who can't break on the first page except by talking of million dollar salaries or million dollar pictures is just laying down on his job. Taking the line of least resistance—and most harm. That the press agent who is barred from using this means will just expend a few hours more thought on the job and evolve an idea really worth while.

Travel note—Ben Amsterdam is now making weekly trips to Philadelphia. Inmates of the Hotel Astor have heard a rumor that Ben runs an exchange in Quakertown.

Had a few words with Henry Ginsberg during the week. And found the Preferred atmosphere perking up. It ought to—with a picture like "Maytime" on the horizon, and a few other bets of the calibre of "The Virginian" in the neighborhood.

If ever the "reg'lar fellows" in this industry did any rooting, now is the time. There is a hundred per cent. good will and loyalty cheering section on the job rooting for those two boys, Benny Schulberg and Jack Bachmann.

Earl Hudson is in town. Hope to shake hands at least before he gets away. But he's a busy boy. Always was, for that matter. The chorus will now sing, "And that's why he is where he is today."

F. J. Godsol, Jesse Lasky and Richard Rowland had a merry scrap during the week for the top of column first page positions. Naturally, the newspapers disregarded the meat of Godsol's statement—the distribution problem—and hit on the more popular angle of production costs. Then Jesse stepped up to say that the trouble was all settled as far as he was concerned; his players are acting nicely. Dick Rowland came in at the end of the discussion and said the most important words as far as production goes: "Put in the time and brains on the continuity—where you are only paying one salary and no studio rent."

Ben Grimm dropped in to see E. J. Smith, at Universal, and found him snowed under contracts. Literally. Here is one sales executive who buries himself in the job at hand—hard work and lots of it.

Developments in the trade paper field. Leaving only one real "edited, published and printed" in New York paper. The esteemed Moving Picture World. We now have papers at Chicago, Stroudsburg, Pa., and one about to move to Albany.

Ricord Gradwell has always said: "The job of the distributor in this business is to sell seats for the exhibitor." Then steps forth to practice what he preaches with the big national contest announced elsewhere in this issue.

The panic is on. If you don't make daily calls on some of the film companies you are seven moves behind in checking up the roster of employees.

And as for keeping track of film salesmen and exchange managers—it just can't be done.

When the storm is all over, some one will say, "Who shouted 'Fire!'—Let's lynch him."

ROBERT E. WELSH.

The Fight Has Only Begun

DAY to day developments in the Admission Tax situation are rather trying on those publications that prefer to take their views in inspired doses.

One day we are told that there isn't a chance in the world that Washington will look with favor on the repeal of the Admission Tax. The gloom lies in thick, heavy clouds.

"No one is working," we are told. Then in the next breath, "The fellows who are working so hard are making too many mistakes." It's a contradiction that can only be swallowed if you are hypnotized by the importance of being with "the inner circle."

Then no less a personage than the Secretary of the Treasury comes forth with a flat recommendation that the Admission Tax be lifted in its entirety.

The same columns that so recently dispensed the globules of gloom now tell us that the outlook is rosy and bright. The same "inside sources" that provided the initial reliable information rush a telegram across the country that seems to say nothing in particular but is essentially a shoddy bid for a seat on the band wagon.

And—shucks—there isn't any band wagon yet.

The fight has only begun!

* * *

DAY to day it is one thing; but day in and day out we get this chorus:

"There is too much politics in exhibitor ranks. We must eliminate the politics and banish the glory-seekers."

It was a good song—the first time we heard it. But many years on the fringe of the picture business have taught us that the Film Man's Dictionary puts it this way:

"Politics—Activity on the part of anyone who is not in our crowd. 'The Exhibitor Politician'—the fellow whom we don't like at the particular minute. 'The Exhibitor Leader'—the same fellow when he consents to play in our yard."

That sums it up.

And the chorus is getting tiresome.

It strikes us this way:

If you want to play baseball—GET IN THE GAME. If you don't like the other fellow's game—start one of your own. But we have never heard of anyone who won a ball game SITTING IN THE GRANDSTAND bawling out the players on the diamond.

That's straight talk; meant sincerely and without another thought than to clear the air.

Switching the metaphor to football we say: It's about time to stop wrangling over who will give the signals and—GET IN THE GAME.

* * *

ALL this is aside from the consideration or concern of Mr. Average Exhibitor.

Many hundreds of that species included among our own readers have been busy for months with personal appeals to their Congressman and Senators—by word of mouth, by letter.

They haven't waited for signals, nor have they needed them. Unless it can be said with all due modesty that the humble efforts of Moving Picture World have constituted the signal to action.

To this multitude we wish to reiterate:

The fight has only begun!

Keep up YOUR fight! Hew to the lines that you have followed to date. Let the "star players" work out their own method of getting into the game. YOU STAY IN THE GAME.

The nation will take care of itself.

Your concern is your theatre, your town, your Congressman, your Senator. See that YOUR people know the facts in the amusement tax situation.

Nothing more will be asked of you; nothing more is needed.

Take care of your own situation; and if impelled to further action, lend the cheer of your support to the fellows who have been IN THE GAME. From the first inning.

Above all, don't slump NOW. Don't prepare to count the fruits of victory. Lots of good work has been done; miraculous work to those who know past efforts in this industry.

All the more reason to take a second breath now and KEEP ON FIGHTING.

Robert E. Welsh

Spurred by Mellon Tax Proposal, Cohen Urges Immediate Action

THAT Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, favors the repeal of the Admission Tax was definitely assured by his statement appearing in the newspapers of the country on Monday, November 12. The portion of his remarks of especial interest to theatre owners as well as to the entire motion picture industry was:

"8—Repeal the Tax on Admissions. The great bulk of this revenue is derived from the admissions charged by neighborhood moving picture theatres. The tax is, therefore, paid by the great bulk of the people whose main source of recreation is attending the movies in the neighborhood of their homes."

Commenting upon this declaration from the Secretary of the Treasury, Sydney S. Cohen, as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, issued the following statement:

Famous Well Fixed, Says Saunders

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation earnings this year will be somewhat parallel to those of the past annum and, with the present economies in mind, the position of the company should be a strong one by March 15, states Controller R. W. Saunders. This statement refutes reports that Famous was in need of new financing or recapitalization.

Advances going on for more than a year caused Famous to "take the bull by the horns" relative to stars' salaries. With material on the shelf to provide for releases during the next few months the company was in a position to take its present stand, the statement reveals.

The statement also discloses that Adolph Zukor now holds, but not in his own name, more stock than he did in 1920. The recent listing of 14,228 shares of the company's common stock was to provide for the acquisition of one-half of the capital stock of the Hill Street Fire-Proof Building Company of Los Angeles and one-half of the capital stock of the New York and Pacific Coast Amusement Company, also of Los Angeles. This makes the corporation the sole owner of these two companies, it was explained.

Leaders in Congress are not showing any favorable enthusiasm over Secretary Mellon's tax-relief recommendations. The general trend of thought seems to be that the side-tracking of the Soldiers' Bonus is not a move calculated to arouse public approval. Some there are who prefer to believe that the income tax relief offered by the Mellon proposals would redound to the chief benefit of big capital and not to the pocketbook of the average working man. However, little has been said of the amusement tax individually. To most members of Congress the amusement tax is merely a small part of the whole; to YOU—and to the great mass of theatregoers, it is the most vital point in the whole proposition. See that YOUR Congressman knows your attitude AT ONCE. Strike NOW, while the iron is hot—WRITE THAT LETTER THIS MINUTE!!!

"We have seen the public statement issued by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon with respect to the recommendations for the repeal of the Admission Tax in the coming session of Congress.

"We are much gratified with the decision reached by Mr. Mellon in this regard, as it is in entire conformity with the purposes of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and our campaign for the repeal of the taxes which have been so oppressive to motion picture theatre owners.

"The writer, accompanied by National Secretary George Aarons and M. J. O'Toole, visited the office of the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington early in October and laid the case of the motion picture theatre owners with respect to the repeal of the Admission Tax before the Treasury Department officials, and our statements in this relation, which were supplemented by our brief, are reflected in the public statement just issued by Secretary Mellon.

"While the recommendation of Secretary Mellon is in itself a great step forward in our campaign for the elimination of the Admission Tax, theatre owners must realize and appreciate that the unified and concerted effort of motion picture theatre owners in the United States is still required with their representatives in Congress, so that the relief sought will become a reality in the next session of Congress."

The foregoing statement has been sent from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to all theatre owners, and supplements a campaign which has been carried on for weeks past. Already the theatre owners of the country have been supplied with a series of three suggested letters to be sent by them to their Congressman, together with other ammunition stressing the position of the theatre owners, and reflecting the attitude of their audiences, toward the burdensome Admission Tax.

It is of supreme importance that every owner of a motion picture theatre in America should appreciate the necessity for quick and concerted action. The time remaining for their concerted action upon their Congressmen is short. The attitude and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury for the repeal of the tax makes the presentation of the theatre owners' case to their Congressmen at this time a matter of supreme importance. It is the duty of every theatre owner to make the effort. By unified, concerted, constructive work, the advantage thus far secured must be followed up if the desired repeal is to be secured.

This necessity is further emphasized by a telegram received by the president of the M. P. T. O. A. from John A. Schwalm, a national director of the organization, at Hamilton, Ohio. Mr. Schwalm says:

"Congratulations are due you and other Eastern leaders on Secretary Mellon's article in newspaper this morning regarding admission taxes. Exhibitors should not think this is a settled matter. You and other leaders know that the fight has only begun. It will take concerted effort to get the Secretary's recommendation through Congress. Suggest you advise exhibitors immediately to write their Congressmen and Senators to support the recommendation of the Secretary."

Ray Visits New York

Charles Ray, Associated Exhibitors' star, is now paying his second visit to New York, expecting to remain in the East for several weeks. He is accompanied by Mrs. Ray, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., general manager of Charles Ray Productions, and Frederick Sullivan, who directed the production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

Fredman Returns

After a visit here of several weeks Ernest Fredman, editor of the Film Renter, published in London, returned home Saturday, November 10. During his stay here Mr. Fredman met many of the leading lights in the industry.

Godsol Calls Exhibitor Control Industry's Real Menace

Production Evils a Matter for Individual Care He Says in Statement That Mincing No Words

By F. J. GODSOL

I HAVE always refrained from giving interviews or issuing statements about the picture industry as I feel the public is not interested in what I might have to say. Besides, nothing that has appeared in the press about the ills of the industry has helped to cure them.

I have again been asked for a statement and I now feel like expressing my views, although with very little hope of any good resulting.

Much has been said about the present high cost of production. High cost of production exists and should be remedied. But nothing will be gained by any plan so far suggested.

Cost is simply a question of supply and demand of material and labor.

There are too few leading film artists, outstanding directors, continuity writers, art directors and others for the yearly production of pictures, with the result that all producers are continually bidding for the same people.

This cannot be remedied by temporarily shutting down studios because as soon as the studios reopen, the producers will again start fishing out of the same pond and salaries will again soar.

Another fundamental factor entering into high cost is the unnecessary extra time taken by directors in the production of their pictures. This is and has been difficult to control because of the arbitrary attitude assumed by the present day director of importance.

There are also the large carrying and overhead charges which can only be fairly absorbed by greater instead of lesser production.

In my opinion, high cost of production is not an issue for the industry collectively but for each producer to individually solve and it can only be accomplished by the individual developing unknown artists and by the employment of uncelebrated directors on reasonable terms who will agree to and will "shoot" their pictures within a limited number of days.

Today, in the motion picture industry, the real vital issue is whether or not the producer is to receive fair and reasonable prices for his pictures.

If rental prices come down with a reduction in costs, the producer will be no better off than now.

Exhibitors have merged their interests in a great many cities with the result that all the theatres are in the control of one man or one group of men. In many other centers they have formed booking combinations. All to force the producer to accept rental prices arbitrarily fixed by the exhibitor.

Why do not the producers take action—not talk—to destroy this danger, the greatest menace to the picture industry!

At present there are a few so called competitive points where the exhibitor is required to pay more than the true value for pictures to partly make up for the producers' forced underselling in other towns. This is unfair to that exhibitor and is unsound business.

Pictures should be sold everywhere for what they are worth—no more and no less—and to enable the exhibitor and the producer each to make a fair profit on their respective investments.

At present there are exhibitors in dozens of large controlled cities getting pictures at a mere fraction of their value.

This serious situation is well known to all producers and, in my opinion; it is only the vanity of the heads of the larger producing companies which permits this condition to exist and will permit it to continue until it strangles them. It seems to me these executives are sitting back, each thinking they will weather the storm, and that all their competitors will go bankrupt, when they will then single handed stamp out this evil.

Another important element is the cost of distribution. Why should there be ten offices in each of thirty cities with thousands of employees selling the same kind of merchandise to the same customers? Others have already made suggestions to remedy this.

The cost of distribution can be reduced one-half and the saving applied in reduction of film rentals.

All of these unsound conditions can be remedied if three or four distributing companies, or more if others should choose to join, distribute as one.

Joint distribution would put an end to the dictation of prices by exhibitors. If a sufficient number of pictures were in the hands of one distributing agency, exhibitors who persisted in their present strangling methods would soon find themselves facing a shortage of good pictures and they would then be willing to deal on a fair basis.

A joint distributing organization should agree to supply pictures to all exhibitors throughout the United States on a percentage of the theatre's gross takings, the percentage to be fairly arrived at by an arbitration committee composed of exhibitors and producers. Such percentages must allow each exhibitor a fair profit and also permit each producer a fair, even though proportionately smaller, return.

What I have here expressed will probably bring an avalanche of protests and reproaches from producers, exhibitors, artists, directors and everyone connected with the industry, but I am stating my honest belief.

Mine is not a cry of personal distress. In fact, I feel that with the warm personal friendships of many leading exhibitors and with the powerful co-operation of Mr. W. R. Hearst, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan is better able to cope with the situation than some of the other companies.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is stronger today than ever in its history. Its pictures are good and the exhibitor's demand for them is greater than in former years. Its sales have never been so large. Its financial condition is sound.

I have been asked why, if these are the facts, Goldwyn stock is quoted so low. My reply is that I am building up the Goldwyn business and not the stock market. Our accountants' (Price, Waterhouse & Co.) last audit shows that the book value of Goldwyn stock is forty dollars per share, excluding good will. Nevertheless the fact remains, we are not getting adequate rentals for our pictures in a great number of territories.

Taught by Movies

More than 3,000 pupils are now receiving lessons by motion pictures in Crandall's neighborhood theatres, Washington, D. C., as part of an experiment undertaken this year by the Washington school board. The experiment is being watched with a great deal of interest, not only in Washington, but in other cities where visual instruction is under consideration.

Throw Out Your Chest

By Carl Laemmle

I am proud to be in the moving picture business.

Once upon a time I was anything but proud of it. I considered it a game, a gamble, a good way to make money. Others felt the same way.

We called it a game. We felt it was a make-shift, a good one while it lasted, but we didn't expect it to last very long. There wasn't anything institutional about it. It looked like a case of "gather ye roses while ye may." So we gathered. And in gathering, we now and then nearly ruined the bush. We never thought much about fertilizing it. We thought but little of its future growth. We were sure its future was almost past.

Then, in spite of our carelessness, the blamed thing grew and flourished and gave off a more beautiful flower than ever.

Today it is giving rare flowers to the world—Beauty, Happiness, Entertainment, Education, Development!

Let's quit calling it a game and thinking of it as such. Let's think of it as one of the most solid institutions in the whole world of business. Let's talk of our pride in it and of our love for it, and let's do so at every opportunity.

Let's quit apologizing for it!

Think! What other business has a greater right to live and to command respect? Think of any line of business. Compare it with the moving picture business. How does it stack up? Is it more necessary? Is it doing a greater good? Is it a source of satisfaction to more people? You'll have a mighty hard time finding any line of endeavor more worth while.

Our business has had its detractors. The trouble is that we have not fought back hard enough. We have let them hammer at us for years and we have put up all too feeble a resistance.

Let's spread the gospel about our industry. Let's make the knockers put away their hammers.

Let's start with ourselves. Let's quit belittling our own work. Let's quit befouling our own nest. Then let's spread out from our own circle and tell our friends about our business. Call it propaganda or what you will. Let's show the world that we are not a trifling set of easy-virtued men and women.

We've gone through the throes of the birth of a new art or business long enough. We've learned to crawl. We've learned to walk. We've learned to run and we are hitting a pace which commands the wide-eyed wonder of men in other lines of industry.

If you're in this business, you don't have to back water for anybody, anywhere, anytime! You're an important piece of work. You're in one of the biggest things in the world.

Throw out your chest!

Industry Not Hurt by Salaries Paid to the Stars, Says Brandt

B. P. SCHULBERG, of Preferred Pictures, says that his experience as a motion picture producer does not coincide with the recent statement made by William Brandt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, that the difficulties now being felt by the film industry can be traced to the enormous salaries paid to screen stars.

"I do not doubt for a moment Mr. Brandt's discovery that, on one production cost sheet, he found salaries constituted two-thirds of the expense. But I do feel that the picture he mentions must have been an unusual case—the exception, not the rule.

"In my own experience salaries average ten per cent. of the cost of producing. At this rate I think almost any one will admit that to put names of players who are proven successes into a picture is added insurance against failure, not extravagance by any means.

"To my mind the biggest difficulty seems to be in expenditures made to serve the purposes of a selfish or conceited director or producer who puts thousands of dollars into a picture that will never register when it reaches the screen.

"When I study production costs I can't help but feel that most of the high-salaried players today earn every cent they make. They could not command the salaries they do if they didn't bring that much in at the box office."

Business on Upgrade

Pathe Branch Managers Report Prosperous Conditions

Reports of good film business have been brought to Pathe's home office from two branch agencies in widely separated territories. Reports from these agencies do not state that Pathe alone is enjoying prosperity, but that the motion picture business in general is on the upgrade.

Pathe's branch manager at Cleveland, Oscar J. Ruby, who has been in conference with home office officials in New York during the past week, reports business in the Cleveland territory to be on the upgrade and the outlook decidedly encouraging.

"Business generally in the Cleveland territory is on the upgrade," declared Mr. Ruby when interviewed this week. "Conditions at Akron, O., a stronghold of the rubber industry, and at Youngstown, the steel center, are unsettled at the present time, but in the rest of the territory prosperous conditions prevail, and the picture market reflects the era of good business."

The continuance of prevailing prosperous conditions in the Milwaukee territory is confidently anticipated by exhibitors and film men in that part of the country, declares W. A. Aschmann, Pathe's Milwaukee branch. Mr. Aschmann, who is at present on a business trip to the Pathe home office in New York, points to the extensive theatre building operations in that territory as indicative of the confidence of local theatre men in the future.

"There has never been a wider distribution of screen product than right now in this territory," Mr. Aschmann stated.

J. S. Woody on Tour

Associated Exhibitors' Official Visiting Branch Sales Offices

John S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, left early this week for a tour of branch sales offices of that organization. He expects to go as far west as Chicago, making several stops and conferring with the branch managers of Associated and important exhibitors at centers between that city and New York.

Since he became general manager Mr. Woody has reorganized and considerably increased the company's field staff, and placed it upon a basis of greater efficiency than ever before. It is understood that the present swing around the circle is only the first of a series of trips which will bring him in close touch with Associated representatives and leading theatre managers. These travels will cover many weeks, with only brief returns to New York.

Before his departure Mr. Woody expressed complete satisfaction with the present business of Associated Exhibitors and the excellent prospects for the new season.

Goldwyn Club Dance

Annual Event Promises to Be Brilliant Affair

The Goldwyn Club will give its annual dance in the grand ball room of the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, Friday evening, November 23. The Dance Committee has been hard at work for nearly a month preparing for the event and it is a foregone conclusion that their efforts will be crowned with complete success.

Vincent Lopez will be there with his famous Pennsylvania Hotel Orchestra. The Capitol Theatre entertainers will participate. Many prominent screen players will attend. Marion Davies, Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson are among those who have accepted invitations.

Lull Affords Good Opportunities

An example of the bigger casts now available soon will be seen in the Gasnier production of "Poisoned Paradise," a Preferred Picture from the novel by Robert W. Service. B. P. Schulberg, who had listed the players to take part in the picture, immediately discarded the early selections with the announcement of the studio shut downs.

"I am delaying the selection of players because I am sure I can find a better cast, not only for the principal roles, but for the minor parts as well, than ever before has been possible," said Mr. Schulberg. "The list of genuine favorites now available for any big picture makes it possible for the careful producer to give theatre goers a thing they seldom have seen—all-star productions that are all-star in fact as well as in name." Clara Bow will enact the leading feminine role.

National Changes Hands

National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., which has been in operation over two years, has changed hands. The interests formerly owned by Harry Levey, Louis Weiss and Don Carlos Ellis have been purchased by a group of men who were financially interested in the company for the past year.

The newly elected officers are: F. C. Pitcher, president; C. M. Strieby, vice president, and W. J. Bold, secretary and treasurer. Francis M. Hugo, formerly secretary of New York State, is chairman of the board of directors. In addition to the above gentlemen, the following comprise the board of directors: Mark E. Gillis, Rose E. Tapley and J. B. Pitcher.

Wants More Pictures

Kane Going West to Encourage Production

The visit to Los Angeles of Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, is likely to provoke somewhat of a stir, from the fact that, while other distributors are taking steps to curtail production, his avowed purpose is to encourage production.

On the eve of his departure from New York Mr. Kane announced that Associated is in the field for more pictures of the calibre of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," which are now being distributed by that organization, and Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry," for which, as well as all the other Lloyd feature comedies, Associated is selling agent.

Chase Heads Branch

Maurice A. Chase, one of the veteran sales executives of Universal, has been placed in permanent charge of Universal's Minneapolis exchange. The vacancy in the managerial chair of the Minneapolis exchange was caused by the selection of J. E. Rosen, the former manager, for special Universal sales work.

Waste Eliminated, Says Lasky; New Production Plans Forming

OUR movement to eliminate waste in the production of motion pictures has already borne fruit in a new frame of mind in Hollywood. This change of attitude is extremely vital, because the waste of the past was largely due to the mental attitude with which the studio people approached production. Because of this mental readjustment I am confident that in the future we shall be able to make pictures at a cost less than the present price levels—and we'll make better pictures. So confident am I, in fact, that we are preparing for the production of additional pictures which, released on a schedule of one a week, will carry us through to next September."

This was the word brought back from Hollywood this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose recent pronouncement against extravagance in picture-making caused a furore in the picture business. Mr. Lasky, having seen the effect of the closing order on the studio forces, declares half the battle against soaring production costs has already been won.

"Some people got the idea that we were not going to make any more pictures," said Mr. Lasky. "This is silly. There will be no curtailment of production, but there will be a curtailment of waste. Others are construing the move as a step back to cheaper pictures. This is equally ridiculous. Pictures are not good enough now—probably never will be good enough. And it is our job to make them better and better.

"We are simply determined to make every dollar spent in production return us a dollar value on the screen—and we will make better pictures.

"Since we announced our determination to curtail extravagance in pictures there has been a great deal of loose talk. Some producers said they were going to follow our lead; others said they were going to spend more money than ever. Some people blamed the actors; the actors blamed the directors and there was a wonderful exhibition of passing the buck all around. Now the facts of the situation are extremely simple and should not be cloaked in mystery. They are as follows:

"For a long time production costs have been mounting. This nobody can deny. Everybody agreed something should be done about it. But, as in the case of the weather, it was all talk and no action.

"Having been the pioneer in pretty nearly every movement looking to the betterment of this business, Famous Players decided to take the bull by the horns and, regardless of what anybody else did, make some move that would eliminate the waste that was the besetting sin of this business. We were able to do it, because we had foreseen that some such action was inevitable and had prepared for it by getting far ahead of our release schedule.

"Our action does not mean that there is anything radically wrong with the picture industry. The picture business is sounder now than ever before; and if there be anything wrong it is entirely because of lack of co-operation among producers. All actors are not overpaid, but some actors are. All directors are not extravagant but some directors are. When salaries of actors and directors are out of proportion you can attribute the condition to the unethical and foolishly shortsighted competition among producers.

"We realized all this before we made our decision. We realized that some producers would attempt to make capital out of our action and make us the goats. But we decided that, whatever any other company might do, we were going to set our own business straight.

"So far as we are concerned the remedy for the condition which grew up is in the reorganization of our studio forces and methods to the end that directors, writers and players will have more time to map out each production thoroughly before turning the camera. Waste has been caused to a great extent by the rush in production. By giving each producing unit time to figure out its continuity, its sets, its camera schedule and its costs we shall get infinitely better pictures at a cost which will represent 100 per cent. value for 100 per cent. expense.

"That's the meaning of the whole thing, and that we are going to be successful has already been proved to me by the change of attitude on the part of the people in the production forces."

Censorship Must Be Endured for at Least a Year Longer

ALL hope of throwing off the shackles of motion picture censorship in New York State for at least another year vanished on Tuesday, November 6, when the results of the election revealed that the Republicans had not only again secured control of the State Assembly, but that the majority of six of last year had been increased to an even dozen.

While censorship was not made an issue openly in the campaign, it figured in many instances in certain of the Assembly districts. Without any ostentation exhibitors quietly worked beneath the surface in certain sections of the state in their endeavor to bring about the election of the Democratic candidates for the Assembly.

In a few instances they were successful; but, on the other hand, the usual Republican majorities upstate manifested themselves in a degree that resulted in the Republican majority in the lower house being materially increased. Walter F. Clayton, of Brooklyn, who introduced the censorship bill in the Assembly two years ago, and who fought tooth and nail for its passage, was among the Republican group of re-elected Assemblymen.

Last year when Governor Smith assumed office there was some talk that censorship might be abolished in New York State. It is a well-known fact that Governor Smith does not believe in motion picture censorship, and has frequently characterized it as un-American in the fullest sense of the word. There is little or no question but that, if Governor Smith could have his way the coming year, with a Democratic Senate and a Democratic Assembly, he would have found a way of eliminating censorship.

Ibanez to Pen for Films; Says Movies Excel Books as Outlet

By TOM WALLER

V. BLASCO IBANEZ embarked today, November 14, for France where he will spend the next few months at his country place in Mentune. According to impressions he seems to have made at Will Hays' office, the writer of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is firmly convinced of the great power wielded by the movies. This conviction has been fortified by his intensive survey of the American industry which he temporarily adjourned for the homeward trip. Such a limitless scope is covered by the camera that the great author is understood to be thinking seriously of relinquishing his novelizing to a secondary position in order to make way for stories exclusively adaptable for the screen.

Mr. Ibanez, with his secretary acting in the capacity of an interpreter, spent over an hour in the Hays' sanctum. This visit with the president of the industry thus closed the writer's tour and study of America's cinema field. Through the interpreter Mr. Hays sounded the author on many points relative to the American product.

Thus Mr. Hays learned officially that the Spanish author is delighted with the skillful manner in which local producers have handled many of his works of fiction. Accuracy of detail and truthful interpretation seemed to be literally engrained in practically every American director who has translated his novels to the screen, Ibanez is said to have commented. Proportionately, the American scenario writers, who adapted such fiction into film material, were extolled by the writer.

The dean of the industry here enthusiastically coincided with an observation of the author that the movies by far constitute the greatest outlet for graphic and constructive ideas. Whereas thousands of people have read and are reading his books, millions of people throughout the entire world have seen and are seeing the film versions of the ideas so expressed in type.

The reasoning of Ibanez in this respect

Says It Straight

If anybody wonders what is meant by Reader Confidence, or why MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S circulation is constantly increasing among worthwhile exhibitors, this letter, unsolicited, will remove all cause for speculation:

"Glad to see Moving Picture World 'way ahead of the other trade magazines in spite of what the others are doing to improve themselves.

"Their NEW FEATURES read like 'old stuff' to us World fellows. Best regards." H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

would seem to be that many of the globe's citizenry, lacking in imaginative genius, either fail to appreciate or to construe correctly the ideas and motives which to them are obscure in book type. Another argument along this line is that many are easily exhausted or discouraged in page turning.

The percentage, therefore, of those who visualize the true movements and climaxes of penned thoughts is comparatively small to the vast populace that would sit back and have such interpretations reviewed in film life before their eyes.

Accordingly, the Hays' office understands, the author of so many vividly colorful narratives and masterpieces will devote considerable of his time in the future to writing stories which will be equally illuminating, only that they will meet in plot and action with all of the conformities of screenland.

Fifty Exhibitors to Serve on F. B. O. Advisory Board

AS a first move to better productions for their coming schedule the Film Booking Offices are establishing an exhibitors' advisory board to pass on all stories and production possibilities before the actual production has been started, according to a statement made this week by J. I. Schnitzer.

The idea of a film board is an entirely new one in the industry and marks the first step to be taken by producers and distributors to co-operate with the distributor and the public to supply them the kind of production they want. "The exhibitor," stated Mr. Schnitzer, "will now be able to say what kind of pictures he can sell and we will know in advance what pictures he is willing to buy."

The board will consist of fifty of the most prominent exhibitors in the country and they will serve in this capacity without pay. A story that has been selected by the scenario department will be copied and the fifty copies scattered broadcast with a printed

Mabel Condon Marries

Russell Juarez Birdwell, "Bird," magazine writer for Mary Pickford, formerly newspaper writer, has taken Mabel Condon, manager for a group of motion picture stars, as his bride. The couple were recently married in Hollywood at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, the Rev. Father Stack officiating. Attendants were Cherie Valentine, the groom's sister and famed Kosloff dancer, and Charles R. Condon, the bride's brother and well known writer on film subjects.

Declares Dividend

At a meeting held Monday afternoon the Board of Directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the common stock, payable January 2, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business on December 15, 1923. The books will not close.

questionnaire which the members of the board will fill out. These will be returned to the F. B. O. home office and the advice they contain will be acted upon.

"It will be our endeavor," continued Mr. Schnitzer, "to supply the public what they want in the way of pictures and the only way we can feel the pulse of the public is through the exhibitor. For this reason we have established the board and to date a half dozen very prominent men in the exhibition field have volunteered their services. We will abide by their decision; they know what the public wants and we are willing to take their advice."

Over 200 letters have gone forth from the F. B. O. to exhibitors throughout the United States asking that they serve on the board. Of these fifty will be selected from the principal cities. They will be non-salaried and will serve solely for the purpose of bettering of pictures.

With this in view, salesmen, branch managers and divisional chiefs of the F. B. O. forces have been instructed to place the proposition as it stands before the theatre owners with whom they come in daily contact.

Valentino Signs New Contract with Ritz; Ready for Production

RUDOLPH VALENTINO is back from Europe, having signed a new and longer contract with Ritz Pictures and is now ready to proceed with production. There remains to be settled the contract situation with Famous Players-Lasky.

Mr. Valentino returned on the "Aquitania" with Mrs. Valentino, after a tour of England, France and Italy.

Three pictures have been definitely decided upon and the scripts are in preparation, one having been fully completed. The locale of this completed story is in the Mediterranean. I. D. Williams, president of Ritz, went to England for the purpose of arranging the new and longer contract with Mr. Valentino and the document was signed shortly before the star sailed for America.

Mrs. Valentino has already left for Los Angeles to attend to business affairs and Mr. Valentino will remain in New York for several weeks. On November 28, at the Madison Square Garden, Mr. Valentino will award the prizes in a beauty contest, in which eighty-eight comely young women, from all parts of the United States, will compete. This service will complete Mr. Valentino's activity outside of pictures and end an employment which he was forced to undertake for a livelihood after the break with Famous Players.

"I am ready for an amicable settlement of the Famous Players' contract, but my attorney advises me that under no circumstances will I be hampered after next February. What I really want is to get back to the screen. Circumstances made it necessary for me to earn my living and I have done so, but the screen is my sole ambition," stated Valentino.

Motion Picture Day Campaign Wins Theatre Owners Support Everywhere

Big Mass Meetings in Boston, Philadelphia, Seattle, Cleveland, Newark and New York City

THE campaign for National Motion Picture Day, sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is sweeping to a triumphant climax. The enthusiasm which has marked the campaign from the day it was begun has mounted to tremendous heights during the past week. As November 19 draws near, the theatre owners of the entire country are co-operating to an extent never before secured for an individual campaign. Their enthusiasm is being directed along comprehensive lines of action with the result that National Motion Picture Day is sure to be the biggest achievement of its kind in the history of their organized body.

Boston Holds Big Mass Meeting

Giant strides were made in New England as a result of a giant mass meeting of New England theatre owners, held at the Hotel Lenox, Boston, Mass., on Thursday, November 8. A banner turnout marked the session which was presided over by Ernest Horstman and Jacob Lourie, as chairmen. Addresses were made by Harry Davis, president of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania; R. F. Woodhull, president of the New Jersey unit; David Adams, president of the New Hampshire body, and Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Their remarks were received with great enthusiasm and every theatre owner in the big crowd present signed a pledge card to participate in the observance of the day, and to turn over 25 per cent. of his receipts on November 19 to the national treasury.

Matters of organization were then taken up and as a result of this discussion, Massachusetts has been divided into districts with a special committee in each district to secure pledge cards and facilitate the exploitation plans of the various theatres. In addition to the local committees, a general committee of three men was touring the state outside of Boston, consisting of Stanley Sumner of Newton, George Ramsdell of Malden and E. D. Rhind of Attleboro.

It is expected that Mayor Curley of Boston will issue a proclamation on National Motion Picture Day and efforts are being made to secure a similar endorsement from the Governor of Massachusetts. Mr. John H. Casey, representing Mayor Curley, was present at the meeting and promised the active co-operation of the city's chief executives and department heads.

Mr. Adams and Mr. Bean, Jr., representing the M. P. T. O. of New Hampshire, pledged the fullest support of their state and returned home with pledge cards and exploitation material for distribution among theatre owners.

Cleveland Meets

On Friday, November 9, a similar mass meeting was called at Cleveland, under the auspices of the M. P. T. O. of Cleveland, of which O. E. Bellis is president and William J. Banks is business manager. Also active in the arrangements for the meeting was David Schumann, a member of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, and Martin G. Smith, president of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio.

Mr. Bellis introduced Mr. Smith, who gave a comprehensive report on the activity of the state on behalf of National Motion Picture Day. He stated that pledge cards were coming in rapidly, that splendid co-operation is evident everywhere and that the theatre owners of Ohio are heart and soul behind the movement. As a case in point, the following wire was read from John A. Schwalm, a member of the National Board of Directors, who was at the moment touring the southern part of the state: "There is so much to do here and so little time to do it in, I thought I would be able to serve the organization better by staying here on the job. With men like Dave Schumann, John Urbansky, Martin Smith, Harry Davis, Sydney Cohen and other leaders at the Cleveland meeting I do not doubt the results. Retail merchants here have endorsed our movement. Tonight we will endeavor to get the endorsement of the trades council. We will spend five hundred dollars in this district advertising National Motion Picture Day. Cincinnati is going fine. Have arranged a pep meeting for Middletown for Monday. Success is written all over this event. Southern Ohio challenges Northern Ohio on results for Motion Picture Day. Regards." Mr. Schwalm's telegram was sent from Hamilton, Ohio.

The challenge was accepted by the theatre owners of Northern Ohio and the race is on. As an opening gun the Cleveland contingent read an official proclamation from their Mayor, as follows:

Cleveland Mayor Endorses Day

"Monday, November 19th, has been set aside throughout the United States as National Motion Picture Day. During the week of November 19th, educational motion pictures will be shown in all the moving picture theatres, all of whom have pledged 25 per cent of their gross receipts of Monday, November 19th, to endow a fund for said purpose. The marvelous motion picture photography has become universal in its scope, both as entertainment and education, and has done many enlightening things, including patriotic and social movements for the country. The leaders of the motion picture enterprise are anxious to go forward and improve their art. The appreciation of the public will be of great aid in this effort.

"In calling attention to this important movement, I recommend the support of it and urge attendance at the moving picture theatres to the extent that it will encourage the leaders in their far-reaching enterprise."

The above proclamation is signed by Fred Kohler, Mayor of Cleveland.

Music Tax Discussed

Following this, George P. Aarons of Philadelphia discussed the music tax situation and a heated controversy developed between him and a representative of the American Society of Authors and Composers, Mr. Frankel, an attorney of Cleveland.

The theatre owners present agreed to a man to unite in their legal campaign against the American Society because of unfair and oppressive tactics pursued by its representative in the Ohio territory. Mr. Aarons pointed out that theatre owners in Philadelphia, through litigation with the American Society, have paid no license fee to the society in over three years and are paying none at the present time. He states that the theatre owners would take their legal battle to the highest court in the land to secure relief.

The discussion of National Motion Picture Day was then resumed and definite plans arranged. All present signed pledge cards and guaranteed their support. The State Headquarters has sent to every theatre owner in the territory a four page folder, outlining the purpose and importance of National Motion Picture Day and stating the various tie-ups, contacts and endorsements which have been secured. It also contains suggestions for a definite campaign of participation and announces the State Committee of Local Chairmen, comprising 200 active workers from every section of the state. It is signed by John A. Schwalm and Martin G. Smith.

"Go-to-Movie Week" in Hamilton

Fred S. Meyer of Hamilton, Ohio, accepted appointment in the following wire, as announced by national headquarters: "I herewith accept your appointment as Chairman of National Motion Picture Day for Butler County and will put forth every effort to make it a success. Hamilton theatres, acting as a unit, will make week of November 19th "Go-to-Movies Week." Have already procured unanimous endorsement of Merchants' Association and will ask other civic organizations for backing."

Cincinnati in Line

The National Motion Picture Day Committee for Cincinnati and Southern Ohio met on Tuesday, November 6th, at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati. J. A. Ackerman, president, and Godfrey Kotzin acted as secretary. All plans for the day were endorsed and the theatre owners present agreed to celebrate the event and signed cards to that effect. Committees were designated to carry on the work.

Washington Endorses Day

The Far West is also active. The first step of the newly formed M. P. T. O. of Washington, which is actively affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A., was to give the hearty support of the body against war tax measures and in favor of National Motion Picture Day. A wire received at National Headquarters from Ray A. Grombacher, trustee, M. P. T. O. of Washington, reads in part as follows: "Association went on record to affiliate with national organization, giving their hearty support against war tax measures. Also their support of National Motion Picture Day, November 19th. Slides will go on screens and advertising in newspapers immediately all over the state. Appointed entire Board of Trustees sub-chairmen for state. Immediate action will be taken to secure every possible theatre in state to give support and twenty-five per cent. of receipts to national organization. Keep your eyes on Washington organization."

Clemmer Heads Washington Organization of Exhibitors

THE first annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of Washington, held November 7 and 8 at Seattle, went on record by its first resolution to affiliate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and to endorse the policies and principles of the national body, including its activities against the admission tax and in favor of National Motion Picture Day.

Howard S. Clemmer of Spokane was elected president of the new unit; L. A. Drinkwine of Tacoma, first vice-president, and J. M. Hone of Bellingham, secretary and treasurer. The following theatre owners constitute a board of trustees: Ray A. Grombacher, Spokane; L. A. Drinkwine, Tacoma; G. G. Johnson, Kelso; C. A. Swansen, Everett; J. A. McGill, Port Orchard; W. H. Bruen, Seattle; F. B. Walton, Bellingham; W. F. Flint, Arlington, and John Danz, Seattle.

A telegram received by Sydney S. Cohen, national president, from Ray A. Grombacher, a trustee of the new association, reveals the interest which the State of Washington is taking in National Motion Picture Day. He says: "The association went on record to affiliate with the national organization, giving their hearty support against war tax measure. Also their support for National Motion Picture Day, November 19. Slides will go on screens, advertising in newspapers immediately all over the state. Appointed entire board of trustees-sub-chairmen for state. Immediate action will be taken to secure every possible theatre to give support and 25 per cent. of receipts to national organization. Keep your eyes on Washington organization."

is expected that the Postman's Band will also be in line. Both in scope and originality this parade is expected to outdo anything of the kind ever attempted.

Eastern Pennsylvania Active

A mass meeting was held on Friday, November 9th, at the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, by the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania. Addresses were made by Harry Davis of Pittsburgh and M. E. Comerford of Scranton. The large gathering of theatre owners present promised that their territory would be up among the leaders when the returns are all in and pledged their cooperation to the movement.

Kentucky Busy

Kentucky is hard at work, according to a letter received by the National Headquarters from Fred J. Dolle, Chairman of the drive there. He states, "In connection with Motion Picture Day, we have secured the cooperation of the various civic departments in the city of Louisville, also that of the four local dailies, and we are now giving our attention to the state of Kentucky. Cards are being mailed to every exhibitor in the state, soliciting their cooperation on this day and we expect to get a great deal of results therefrom."

Maryland, Too

Word has likewise come of a big drive in Maryland, where Frank G. Durkee, President of the M. P. T. O. of Maryland, in connection with W. E. Stumpf, Secretary and with Thomas Soriero and C. E. Whitehurst, the campaign is arousing much interest. Over one half of the theatre owners of the state are signed up already and by November 19th it is expected that practically every man will be in line. The committee recently sent a hurry call to National Headquarters for additional trailers, slides and one sheets.

New Jersey Meeting

Wednesday, November 13th, was the date of a big gathering of New Jersey theatre owners, at Achtel-Stetter's, 840 Broad Street,

Newark. Harry Hecht and Peter Adams lined up the Passaic County theatre owners: D. J. Hennesy and Louis Rosenthal those of Essex County; David Kaiserstein, Hudson County; and Henry P. Nelson, Union County. R. F. Woodhull, President of the New Jersey unit, was present on behalf of concerted action for National Motion Picture Day. Joseph Seider, Chairman of the New Jersey Motion Picture Day Committee, is touring the state and reports that theatre owners already are advertising the event and

Wins First Suit

Knickerbocker Theatre Co. Not Liable for Musician's Death

The first suit for damages to be tried as a result of the collapse of the Knickerbocker Theatre in January 28, 1922, resulted in a directed verdict in favor of the Knickerbocker Theatre Company. Suit was brought to recover damages for the death of George S. Freeman, a member of the Knickerbocker orchestra. Justice Frederick L. Siddons directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant on the ground that a servant could hold his employer liable only by showing a specific act of negligence and that Freeman's administrator had failed to show evidence of such negligence. It was announced that the attorneys for the administrator will appeal from the verdict.

The action of the court in directing a verdict for the theatre company, it is pointed out, will not establish a precedent for the decision of other suits, because the points at issue in the Freeman suit involve only the relations between the theatre, as an employer, and its injured servant. Patron rights are under a different rule.

Thus it appears that all over the country, theatre owners are aroused to the importance of the big celebration and are realizing that extra effort must be put behind it. They are getting behind the day as they would the biggest pictures they ever have shown and are turning their showmanship to good account in accomplishing the desired results. They are co-operating in every way; securing endorsements from Governors, Mayors and public officials; tying up with merchants and establishing valuable connections with civic and social organizations of all kinds.

Monday, November 19th, is established already as the one big day of the theatre owners' calendar. Every exhibitor in the country, large or small, should do his share in accomplishing the object of the day in furtherance of his own interest and the progress of the industry.

Big Guns' Ulterior Motive Is Amalgamation, Fairbanks Tells Commission

IN unmistakable language Douglas Fairbanks told the Federal Trade Commission that the big boys of the industry, despite their external pacification, are internally centered on one big ulterior motive. That, he said, is amalgamation.

This started with a bang the commission's inquiry into Famous Players-Lasky at Los Angeles to where it had been adjourned at the previous session a few weeks ago in New York City.

Pending the outcome of this investigation Fairbanks said he has postponed all action on his next production. Existing conditions, he testified, give him no assurance of the financial outcome of his picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," which, he stated, will cost him close to $2,000,000.

Advises from the coastal hearing are that Mary Pickford, succeeding her husband on the stand, attacked the block booking system with vehemence, claiming that it would ruin the business and force her retirement if it and other conditions continue to exist for much longer. The actress maintained that key cities constitute two-fifths of the returns and that the block system will eliminate those endeavoring to make big films.

Attorney Robert Swain, chief of Famous counsel, attempted to learn how Miss Pickford had been damaged by the so-termed combinations. In this respect he sought to disclose her earnings as a producer. Commission Counsel Fuller objected and Examiner Alvord reserved decision. Should he over-rule, Famous will endeavor to obtain this information when the Commission returns to New York City.

The next session will probably take place in Jacksonville, Fla., in January.

Baby Peggy visits Carl Laemmle, Universal President, during her stay in New York. While at the Universal home office she perched on Laemmle's knee and saw the screening of her first big feature production, "The Darling of New York," a Universal-Jewel production soon to be released

Rupert Hughes' new Goldwyn picture is to be called "Reno," instead of "Law Against Law," which was the tentative title it bore while in production.

While "Law Against Law" fitted the theme of the story which deals with the different divorce laws of our various states, it was felt that "Reno" was even more fitting, inasmuch as Reno is the big divorce colony of this country.

Battle Over Film Contract Nears Amicable Settlement

By TOM WALLER

ONE of the most bitter litigations over contractual rights of a picture ever recorded in the annals of movie history will doubtless be amicably settled and as such relegated to the files by the time this edition reaches you. The trouble, which had its inception in a mere squabble last April, took form with such rapidity that it soon developed into a lawsuit, after all attempts at covered mutuality and closed conferences had failed. The plaintiffs were headed under the title of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the defendant was the Cosmopolitan Productions and Goldwyn as a distributing agency. But who actually owned "Enemies of Women," around which the fuss centered, no one knew and no one could find out. Thus recourse to the courts was futile.

Matters looked hopeless for the plaintiffs even a few weeks ago when Will Hays arrived from Europe. Charles O'Reilly, head of the T. O. C. C., unloaded the entire situation to Hays for a verdict on the next move. Hays promised to address the organization, according to reports, but at the time in question was unable to attend.

Things seemed to have died on their feet,

Films Eliminate Sectionalism, N. Y. Mayor Tells Exhibitors

THEATRE owners at a meeting championed by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in the Hotel Astor on November 14 had a distinguished speaker in Acting Mayor Hulbert of Manhattan. This official enthusiastically expressed his approval of National Motion Picture Day. The movie, he emphasized, has become wedded to American life.

Dr. William L. Ettinger, Superintendent of Schools in New York City, also endorsed filmdom. "Many motion picture theatre owners cooperate with the school authorities and throw open their show houses mornings to pupils of the schools when educational pictures are shown," he stated.

In addition to their educational value, the speaker remarked, movies are fast growing to rival travel, since travelogues depict all and more than many a traveler in foreign lands would observe.

In introducing Dr. Ettinger, it was brought out by Charles O'Reilly that the Superintendent had taught more than one of those present at the dinner how to read and write.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, unabashed by the pointed remark, bared the point when he arose and said that Dr. Ettinger had inculcated in him the problems of mathematics. "I did not know there were such things as motion pictures in those days," Cohen laughed.

The big parade along the White Way two days prior to Movie Day was discussed at length. Prints of this manifestation will be in the hands of exhibitors all over the country to show in their houses on November 19.

Acting Mayor Hulbert's speech, which was the feature of the meeting, in part follows:

"Motion pictures have accomplished such splendid results within such a comparatively few years that one hesitates to predict their potentialities of the future for fear of underestimation rather than exaggeration.

"As a popular form of entertainment, the movies have become wedded to our American life and given a spur to latent enthusiasms that have been productive of individual as well as civic advantage. The human reaction from the delimiting atmosphere of the loft and the office, from the grind of poverty and from the ennui of monotonous existence finds measurable compensation in the flickering film which touches life at every angle with an influence at once basic and beneficent.

"As a means of visual education the motion picture occupies a unique place. The current happenings of the world now appear before our eyes. The past lives again with vividness and reality, the mysteries of the sciences are made comprehensible to the most unlettered, the great panoramas of history, colorless within the covers of a book, are bathed in a flood of illumination on the motion picture screen, and the wonders of nature in its countless manifestations become the instant possession of all.

"The City of New York is easily the greatest amusement center in the world. We are all glad to observe, however, that the resentful attitude toward New York by reason of its priority in things theatrical is rapidly subsiding before the smoothing influence of the cinema. The smallest towns enjoy first-run photoplays at the very moment that we are being thrilled.

"At least the motion picture has been one instrument for the removal of animosity and sectionalism that should help to a closer understanding and a better feeling of friendship between this city and the rest of the country."

"Romeo and Juliet"

Inspiration to Make It Abroad With Lillian Gish and Barthelmess

"Romeo and Juliet," with Richard Barthelmess and Lillian Gish in the leading roles, will be produced by Inspiration Pictures, Inc. The production of Shakespeare's immortal drama of love and passion will be made in Italy. The city of Verona where the feud of the Capulets and Montagues brought the romantic love of Romeo and Juliet to a tragic ending, will be utilized as a setting.

Actual filming of "Romeo and Juliet" will begin soon after the completion of George Eliot's "Romola," in which Lillian and Dorothy Gish are now working in Italy. In the meantime, the announced version of "Joan of Arc," starring Lillian Gish, will be deferred until after the completion of "Romeo and Juliet."

on the open market until the latest adjustment is effective.

As the number of resolution violators, exhibitors who played the forbidden fruit under a Goldwyn contract in territories where a Famous signature had the precedence, total but between five and ten per cent. of the Chamber's entire membership, it is obvious that the financial casualties caused thereby are comparatively few.

as far as interested exhibitors were concerned, when an announcement today, November 15, sprung the startling surprise. This was that as the result of a secret powwow yesterday among Hays, O'Reilly, Nathan Burkan, counsel for Cosmopolitan, and Senator Walker, attorney for the Greater New York organization, a compromise agreeable to them all was effected.

It remains for some 100 exhibitors to sanction this armistice among officials before it really can be put into a working capacity. That meeting is scheduled for November 16 in the Hotel Astor.

Unquestionable advices as to the nature of the compromise is that Goldwyn recognize Famous contracts for both "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York."

At the very outset when Cosmopolitan changed its distributing source from Famous to Goldwyn the Theatre Owners Chambers of Commerce adopted a resolution invalidating all other contracts for the two pictures except for those obtained through Famous. This condition, naturally, did not extend beyond the bounds of Greater New York, but was such as to attract universal attention.

"Enemies of Women" has occupied the center of the stage, as so far only contracts relative to it have been violated. "Little Old New York" has had an exclusive run at the Cosmopolitan, New York, until a short time ago, when it was transferred to the Capitol here. Accordingly, up to the present time it has not been in a position to further the agitation and will not be flooded Incorporation papers for the Grand Theatre, Alton, Ill., were taken out the past week by John Karzan, John Pano and John Janakopolis. Each carries $1,700 stock in the company. Karzan also operates several theatres in St. Louis, including the Casino, Olympia and Lincoln.

Charles LaPee is building an addition to his house in Sullivan, Mo., and when completed it will accommodate 500 persons. Present capacity is 250.

Mrs. I. W. Rodgers of Popular Bluff and Cairo was a visitor of the week. Henry Lowry of the Palace, Highland, Ill., was seen along Picture Row. A Siegfried of the Bijou, Decatur, Ill., called on Barney Rosenthal of the Universal Exchange during the week.

Reports from Memphis, Tenn., state that Famous Players will shortly close the Strand Theatre which has been operating for eighteen years. With Sunday closing and lack of patronage during the week days, it has been found advisable to reduce the number of houses in the Southern city. Famous Players also control the Palace and Majestic theatres in Memphis.

E. R. Ship recently purchased the New Empress Theatre, Springfield, Ill., from George Koehn. The policy of the house will be unchanged.

Visitors of the week included Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jones, American Theatre, Cambria, Ill.; Leo Deloney, Monroe City and Shelbina, Mo.; Jim Reilly, Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Steve Farrar, Harrisburg, Ill., and George Hamilton, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill.

Tony Serara has opened his new theatre in Pawnee, Ill. His opening feature was "Human Wreckage," which he showed on Wednesday, November 14. Lew Bent succeeded in selling him all of the F. B. O. product for the current season.

The Kansas Sunday Labor Law

W. J. Gabel, owner and manager of the Grand Theatre at Beloit, Kas., was acquitted 11 to 1 of violation of the Sunday labor law recently and the case against him dismissed. It was explained that the accusation against Mr. Gabel was not that of keeping open or operating a picture show on Sunday, as neither the law of Kansas nor city ordinance of Beloit forbids such practice, and attorneys agreed that the law invoked in this case was passed in 1868, and is found in section 3661 of Kansas statutes, forbidding unnecessary labor on the first day of the week.

The evidence failed to disclose that on Sunday, Oct. 14, Mr. Gabel labored himself or compelled others to labor in any capacity whatsoever at the Grand Theatre. Those of his employes who admitted that they were active at the theatre on that date deposed that their services were entirely voluntary and uncompensated. Patrons of the theatre on that date stated that they simply deposited their tickets in a box and found their seats in the theatre, while combined testimony for the plaintiff failed to establish positive, personal or actual knowledge of occurrences within the Grand Theatre in support of the allegation.

Thousands Attend Opening of New National, Richmond, Va.

The greatest advance reservation of seats ever recorded in the opening of a theatre in the South will attend the formal opening of the new National Theatre, Richmond, Va., which is scheduled for November 12 and will be a matter of history before this is in print. Handsomely engraved invitations of a formal nature have been mailed not only to the entire Richmond mailing list but to thousands all over the South, and four days before the opening date it is believed that the reservations far exceed the entire seating capacity. From all over the southeastern states hundreds will attend, and the affair will be the most extravagantly and handsomely staged formal opening ever held in this state, if not in the entire South.

The National, which has been two years in the building, is by long odds the finest theatre in the South. It is owned by the same interests who built and operate the National Theatre, Greensboro, N. C., and who are extensively interested in many other theatrical properties, each, however, operated under its own separate corporation title.

The most important step of the Hays organization as affecting the South, and one that it is believed will cause a better feeling to exist as between the Southern exhibitors and the national producer-distributor organization, was the appointment two weeks ago of DeSales Harrison, formerly of Southern Enterprises, as Southern representative of the Better Films Committee, which is being sponsored nationally by the Hays office. He will be directly under the supervision of Colonel Jason S. Joy, and his work in most respects will be similar to that carried on by the Southern Enterprises department supervised by Turner Jones.

Philadelphians Rally to Aid National Motion Picture Day

Co-operation with and by the civic and federal authorities was pleaded for at the meeting of the M. P. T. O. A. in an all-day rally held during the week at the Hotel Vendig and the high light of which was furtherance of the financial and artistic success of National Motion Picture Day on November 19. Harry Davis, a director of the national body, made an inspirational address. Applause greeted his statement that in Pittsburgh 100 per cent. co-operation of the picture houses has been assured.

Charles M. Rapoport, national representative of the district comprised in the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, suggested that a committee of seven be appointed to urge Mayor Moore to issue a proclamation on the event. Those appointed were George P. Aaron, David Barrist, Robert Lynch, Michael Lessey, Mr. Rapoport, Lewelyn Pizor, William Hunt.

Reports indicated that there will be a minimum of 65 per cent. co-operation of all the picture houses in Philadelphia. The Stanley Co. of America did not report.

Building operations at the Fox Theatre, 16th and Market streets, Philadelphia, are nearing completion and it is proposed to have the $1,000,000 theatre building ready for opening by the early part of December, although an announcement had been previously made stating that the first showing at the theatre would be made on November 19. Erno Rapee, former conductor of the orchestra at the Capitol Theatre, New York, has been appointed managing director. He also will conduct the orchestra.

All Southern Enterprises district offices now are in operation, with the final moving of head offices to New York. F. L. Metzler, T. L. Varnon, of the legal department, H. L. Robinson, auditor, and eight members of the auditing department have gone to New York in the final operation of moving the Southern Enterprises offices to New York City. The last car of files and furniture has gone.

Headquarters of the district office will be in the Cone Building. Montgomery Hill has gone to Charlotte as district manager, taking with him A. H. Frazier, formerly in the auditing department, as booker. Loyless Kennedy left Saturday for Jacksonville to act as booker in that office under District Manager Arthur J. Amm. E. R. Rogers, Tennessee district manager, will remain in Chattanooga instead of moving his office to Memphis as was originally intended.

Frank Bell, formerly connected with the Howard, Atlanta, Ga., came over to Atlanta from Memphis last week. He is assistant to Manager Harold Horne, of Loew's Palace, Memphis.

Joe Burton, the well known Toccoa, Ga., exhibitor, was in Atlanta last week en route to a meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge in Macon.

C. D. Stanbaugh has taken over the Pastime at Cornelia, Ga. He operated a theatre at Demorest, Ga., some time ago.

Homer Edenfield, son of the late R. G. Edenfield, who has been operating the Dreamland, Augusta, since his father's death, was in Atlanta the past week.

Albert Hill, formerly in Jacksonville, has gone to Miami to become assistant manager of the Fairfax Theatre.

Word was received from Trenton of the seizure by the Government of the pictures of the Dempsey-Firpo fight in New York, which were shown at the Palace Theatre in the Jersey city last week. Warrants were issued for the arrest of Walter Reade of New York, owner of the theatre, and others. Charles Stemmerman, a film salesman of New York, was arrested and held under $5,000 bail.

The Lyric Theatre of Allentown, which heretofore has been a legitimate theatre, has changed its policy to a frequent change of program including moving pictures in the future. A very modern and complete picture equipment has been installed under the management of Philip Levy.

Nebraska

E. A. Harms, who owns and operates the Apollo, Mueller and Hippodrome theatres in Omaha, took a vacation touring Europe the past summer.

A. W. Knight, Belgrade, Neb., has installed a lot of new equipment, including a Power 6-B improved projector, a screen, and a General Electric Mazda unit.

Exhibitors from Platte county and adjoining counties in Nebraska recently journeyed to Columbus, Neb., for the express purpose of having a meeting with Edgar Howard, congressman-elect from that district, and discuss the proposed repeal of the admission tax. Mr. Howard assured the men that when the bill for the repeal comes up in congress he will do all that is honorable in an effort to obtain the repeal.

Baltimore

Louis A. DeHoff, booking manager for the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century, New, Parkway and Garden theatres and Century Roof in Baltimore, Md., has resigned his position with that company. Mr. DeHoff has been associated with Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Interests, off and on, since Mr. Whitehurst operated the Red Moon Theatre, now extinct, way back in 1908. Mr. Whitehurst and Mr. DeHoff were two of the pioneers in the film business in Baltimore. Prior to his association with Mr. Whitehurst, Mr. DeHoff was an electrician. Rumors are rife that Mr. DeHoff has gone to Harrisburg, Pa., or Washington, D. C., to manage theatres, but no definite information can be gained as to where he has located at present. But whoever gets Mr. DeHoff will get an A-1 film man and manager.

Through the efforts of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland, by its committee of four members including Louis Schlichter, chairman; Charles E. Whitehurst, Frank Durkee and Frank A. Hornig, all the members of the league have agreed to heartily endorse the celebration of National Motion Picture Day on November 19.

Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century, New, Parkway, Garden and Century Roof in Baltimore, seems to be out for Gene Sarazen's laurels as a golfer. The distance between to the ninth hole on the Baltimore golf course is 150 yards and Mr. Whitehurst did it in one stroke, dropping the ball in with a mashie.

If the Keith interests take over the Loew interests in the Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore at Eutaw street, Baltimore, after February 1, 1924, within a few months after that time a new Loew theatre will be under construction, according to N. T. Granlund, a representative of Mr. Loew in New York, according to a dispatch to the Baltimore Sun. F. C. Schanberger, Keith representative here, says there is no move pending which may result in the Hippodrome Theatre being operated under the Keith management.

Texas

A fire recently damaged the Queen Theatre, Sweetwater, Tex., a Robb & Rowley house, the loss being estimated at $15,000. This was covered by insurance.

The Orpheum Amusement Company of Okmulgee, Oklahoma, with a capital stock of $250,000, has been incorporated by W. J. Peterson, Albert Shelton and P. J. Shelton, all of Okmulgee.

Dallas men have purchased the Best and Gem theatres at Palestine, Texas, from Southern Enterprises, Inc. E. J. Callahan and S. T. Ray of Dallas will have charge of the Palestine houses.

Southern Enterprises, Inc., have contracted for the Universal output in 124 southwestern houses. The final details of the contract were arranged between Harold B. Franklin, director of theatres, and S. E. and Ned Depinet, assistant sales manager of Universal, who went to New York from Dallas to close the deal.

W. F. Box of Dallas, Texas, has leased the Temple Theatre, owned by the City of Temple, Texas, which was acquired for an auditorium. Mr. Box is interested in a number of theatrical ventures over the state and states that he will reopen this theatre and bring some of the best attractions to it.

The Park Amusement Company of Dallas, with a capital stock of $10,000, has been incorporated by A. A. Chateaux, Jr., Tom Scurry and L. R. Hogg.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,288 feet). Star cast. A real photoplay. Absolutely clean. A one hundred percent picture and at the right price. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,822 feet). Star cast. A good drama. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 13,000. Admission 10-30. O. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

F. B. O.

CANYON OF THE FOOLS. (5,180 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good. Lots of action, that's what they want. Ran it two days, to very good business. Picture little too dark in some of night scenes. You can't go wrong on Carey if you can buy them right. Have run three so far all good. Will please any Western fan. William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

First National

DANGEROUS AGE.—(7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Here you have another fine production. Satisfied everybody. You will receive many favorable comments when you show this. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. (6,000 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. Why can't we get more like this one? Pleased one hundred percent. One of the best I have played this year. Should please any audience. Admission 20-25. Used ones, threes, slide, photos, heralds. Had good attendance. Draw best patronage. W. B. Dobbs, Victory Theatre, Gordo, Alabama.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. A true to life picture of small town domestic squabbles. It's hard to tell which one does the best acting. They are such natural kids. Leave your grouch at home when you go to see this one or you will lose it. Everyone liked it. Said they laughed, shed a few tears, and had a good time. Had a fair crowd. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SMILIN' THROUGH. (8 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. Splendid. Had big comments on this one from most of my patrons. I personally enjoyed it also. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all kinds of people in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

SONG OF LIFE. (6,920 feet). Star cast. Consider this a good one, if you don't pay too much. Domestic drama. Had good attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A fine picture. Barthelmess is my idea of an actor. He is versatile and entirely lacking in the conceit some of the male stars fail to conceal. How the kids and men did yell. No need to ask if they liked it. It was written on every face.

The Index to Reports appears in this issue and includes all reports published since the beginning of July.

With the Index which appeared in the last June issue, this gives you a complete list of all pictures reported since the beginning of 1923.

Save it—USE IT!

There are some of my audience who are scared to death lest they should not be the first ones out of the theatre, and start out before the end, but they all sat still last night. It was a genuine tribute to the picture. Although an old picture, the print was good. Attendance good. Good for week days, but a little too strenuous for the Sabbath. Moral tone is excellent. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

TRILBY. (7,321 feet). Star, Andree Lafayette. Had a weak crowd for this one and glad of it. The star is unknown and, as my patrons say, she needs practice. Would lay off if you don't want to lose money. Rental too high for this sort of junk. Regular advertising brought poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Fair picture for this star. Kind of slow in the first five reels. All the action lies in the last few reels which saves the picture from being called altogether too slow. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

Fox

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This picture was well liked by our patrons. Personally Mix does some of the most impossible stunts I ever saw but, the kids eat it all up. Used wild west ballyhoo. Had very good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, matinee; 10-25, evenings. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Star, Estelle Taylor. A so-called special that was nothing more than a good program picture. Those who saw it liked it but kicked over raise in prices. Photography good, but these old vampire stories don't draw the crowds any more. Sad ending to picture caused a good deal of disappointment. Play it as a program picture, not as a special. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Positively one of the best program pictures I have shown this year. Patrons held their seats for this one, not a single walk out. John Gilbert can surely deliver the goods. He doesn't act, he lives his parts and his following is surely growing. This picture is a good, clean western with fine photography and a splendid plot. All this with the star's personality made a one hundred percent hit. Has good moral tone and you bet it is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,910 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Some picture, fine. Ran it two days. First day good. Second day bum. For some reason Mix and Buck don't get by in my house. But can't say anything against the stars, as they are all good. This one is better than William S. Hart. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Good program offering a little above the average. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. About the same as the usual run of Tom Mix westerns. No better and no worse. Seemed to please and brought excellent business for three days. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

SECOND HAND LOVE. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good little picture. Something different. They want Jones in Westerns, as some of them told me so on going out. Ran this for two days to a poor business. The title is against this picture for my house. Only reason we did not do any business. Not a picture for my house, as we play mostly Westerns. This is a good picture; if you want that kind, O. K. Ran "Dandy Dan," Sunshine Comedy, with above picture. Comedy also good. Good program, no business. Has good moral tone and is a good Sunday picture. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Almost broke my Saturday box-office record with this. The best Jones since "West of Chicago." In fact, consider it the best Jones I've yet shown. Quite a few thrills and spills. Lura Anson an attractive leading lady. Had very good attendance. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Here is an automobile story that has any auto race that Paramount ever released with Reid and Roberts beat a mile, and I used them all; yet, with Reid I would pack my house and on this one just did take in enough to pay film rental. But it sure is not the fault of the picture. Every one went out boosting. The trouble is, they start out advertising "Buck" Jones, then it's "Charles" Jones, then it may be a western or a society play, and the public never knows what to expect. Business poor. Small town patronage, all classes. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Goldwyn

SPOILERS. (8,028 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A big picture, produced and well acted, every foot of the film. One of the greatest knock-em-down-drag-em-out scraps between Milton Sills and Wallace Beery ever screened. I played the other "Spoilers" some years ago and it was a "pippin" and they haven't forgotten it, and they shouldn't. When all is said and done I don't know candidly that this picture is any better. The business was good the first day, but fell off—way off—the second, and I don't know how to account for this, for the picture is "There." But exhibitors, I would give a sober thought to this rental, if it's too big, be careful or you may do as I did, just about break even. Used everything possible for advertising. Did not have big attendance considering the rental. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre, Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Picture not what it is cracked up to be. Should be cut down to five thousand feet. Patrons get tired of too much the same stuff. Had fair attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

Metro

HER FATAL MILLIONS. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A "darb" of a comedy drama. Story is very humorous in places. Good cast. Good print. A good small town bet. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

JAZZMANIA. (8 reels). Star, Mae Murray. Little comedy and good setting, but the people are still wondering what it was all about, but they turned out good though. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

Paramount

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gave general satisfaction to all Gloria Swanson fans. Consider it her best effort to date, Business fair, but paid too much to realize any profit. Has fair moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-22. Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre (960 seats), Liberal, Kansas.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just an average program picture; doubled it up with another to get rid of it. Suitable for Sunday?—no day. Poor attendance of family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Fair picture not as bad as I thought it would be. Miss Minter very pretty in this; that is about all I can say about her. Attendance fair. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Minter. Viewing it from my own angle it was rather far-fetched but our audiences liked it immensely. Star best I have ever seen her. Production is rich and story aside from a few glaring inconsistencies, is good. Did more than average business. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

EXCITERS. (5,939 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This one gave good satisfaction for us. Played it with views of a local convention which appeared in Pathe News and drew big business. Picture pleased all and helped second day. Nothing big about it, but satisfactory in every way. Advertising slants, Moreno is a good bet. Had big Haynes, Keep Coming!

"I was glad to see Mr. Haynes' name once more among the faithful ones. The list he submitted was good. I have played or contracted for nearly all of the list.

"I don't use them very fast, but am glad to report on the few I do use."—Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty Theatres (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

EXCITERS. (5,039 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fine; pleased all. Another good one from Paramount, which is the usual thing, of course. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. This was very well liked by our audience. Had three stops in second reel due to film being wound on a very poor reel at the exchange causing interruption in our show. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just a fair picture which relies to some extent on the locations and photography. It's a "Bootlegging Affair" and that's that. A mediocre offering if that. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. This picture proved seventy-five percent entertainment to our audience. Dalton is a good drawing card for us and this picture was better than some of hers I have seen. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased here. Tom has had better and much worse, but his pictures here have been of good average value and consequently has established a following. Would say of this that you can promise good entertainment and send every one home satisfied. Used usual advertising. Had good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. This one failed to register even. Walter may be a star but he failed to twinkle even one little twink in this. "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" made all of us wish we had our dime back. Oh well, life is short at the best. "Sixty Cents An Hour" was much better than this one. Had fair attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased thoroughly, as most of this star's pictures do. This is better than his average and should do fairly well anywhere. Advertising slants, Meighan, Lila Lee and the author. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

NE'ER-DO-WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Furnishes delightful entertainment of a high standard. It is worthy of extra effort on the part of every exhibitor and considering the author, Rex Beach, it has wonderful exploitation possibilities. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star cast. Had a wonderful first night on this, but on the second night due to rain played to the smallest house in our history. A great picture for rural patronage. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance first night, poor attendance second night. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. My patrons thought this great. Not a showy picture, but very effective and along original lines. I was out of town but that's the report of some of my "hard boiled eggs" and so I know that "Only Thirsty Eight" must be there. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. (6,634 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Excellent picture and excellent business prevailed. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. We have had better pictures with Meighan. Only a very ordinary program offering. Fairly well liked by female portion of audience. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. A well enough produced film, but was not thought to be anything worth while here and the attendance proved it. Usual advertising brought very poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A good picture but does not please everyone. Readers of the story will like it exceedingly well. Personally thought it above the average production. Print excellent. Will probably be suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw university students and better class. Admission 15-25, 15-30. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre (610 seats), Champaign, Illinois.

SIXTY CENTS AN HOUR. (5,632 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Played this on a Saturday and had a clever supporting program and got by. Can't really say much for the picture, and it isn't Walter Hiers' fault at that. He does all that is asked. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. A good hot weather picture. Ran it when the thermometer registered around 90 degrees; still its ice and snow scenes couldn't entice them in. The few that saw it were pleased. Poor attendance, drawing mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,731 feet). Star, Betty Compson. We liked this one. Not well enough to rave about it under stand, but it was pretty and passed muster very well. Draw society class in town of WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A good program that pleased all my patrons. Moral tone okay and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A winner for us. Two nights to very good business, although we didn't have to ante over any extra percentage to Pathe under our buying arrangement. Our opinion: As good as Grandma's Boy. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

Preferred

HERO. (6,800 feet). Star cast. You won't miss anything by passing this up. Very ordinary. Had fair attendance. Draw family and students class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A wonderful picture that shows every dollar supposed to have been spent on it and a one hundred percent box-office production. Will also please any audience. Don't overpay for this. Charge fifty cents and they'll be pleased. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Universal

BLINKY (5,940 feet), and OUT OF LUCK (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. In one picture Hoot Gibson is a sailor and in the other a soldier, which is the only difference between the two. Where he is liked, both are great pictures. Our crowd falls for Hoot and big audiences greeted and applauded both pictures. They are good ordinary action movie melodramas. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This picture is six reels of laughs mixed in with a good plot. Audience like the star in this type, although they came expecting to see him in a western. Excellent program picture. Ought to take anywhere. Was afraid at one time during screening that some of the ex-sailors in the audience would have to be carried out on stretchers. They laughed so much. All went out holding sides. Has good moral tone and it is indeed suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Drew general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SHOCK. (8,758 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Do not pass up this one. A very vivid crook melodrama which should please any class of people. Chaney at his best. T. H. Whittemore, California.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Just fair. Moral tone O. K. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

SHOCK. (8,758 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Of course this is a wonderful picture, but our patrons don't like the type. Too much tragedy to suit them. We had a pretty fair crowd. Just got by and that's all. The earthquake and fire was well done in the manner shown with the "Shock." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw country people and small town class in town of 2,200. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (7,785 feet). Star, Rockcliffe Fellows. They all lived the ball game along with the actors and almost roared the roof off in the ninth inning. Pleased one hundred percent and they told us so. Packed the house for two nights. Made good money on it. Another good Universal. Has good moral tone and may not be suitable for Sunday on account of ball game. Had fine attendance. Draw country and small town class in town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (490 seats), David City, Nebraska.

Vitagraph

DIVORCE COUPONS. (5,249 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. This is different thanks to Vitagraph. The addition of the fourth angle to the "Eternal Triangle" is bound to be attractive. Pleased eighty-five percent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. (7,130 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Very good and very interesting from start to finish. You can buy this reasonable. Book it, you cannot go wrong. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

FORTUNE'S MASK. (4,975 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Fair program picture. Pleased seventy-five percent. Earle Williams is a good star, but this picture did not give him a good chance for using his talent. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Iowa.

ISLAND WIVES. (5 reels). Star, Corinne Griffith. A very good program picture that seemed to please all classes. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

ISLAND WIVES. (5 reels). Star, Corinne Griffith. South sea stuff. How much more of that stuff do the producers think they make us swallow? A bit tiresome and cheerless, still some people said it was wonderful. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

MAN OF MIGHT. Star, William Duncan. If you want thrills and lots of them book it. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino, Richmond, Iowa.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A good one. Run this one as soon as you can as it will please I believe anywhere. Had many favorable comments on this one. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre, (246 seats), Irvington, California.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Good. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Drawing all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

MASTERS OF MEN. 6,800 feet). Star cast. We agree with all the other exhibitors who have run this. It is one sweet picture and it pleases. Did not like the costumes of the period and while they were faithful to the times they got a laugh all through where it was not intended. Had big attendance. Draw general class in town of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. (7,650 feet). Star cast. Don't see how any one can find anything in this picture to make any noise about. Used regular paper and heralds. Draw local patronage. Had fair attendance. Ernest M. Cowels, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

NO DEFENSE. (5,700 feet). Star, William Duncan. This is a good outdoors picture. Duncan and Johnson make a good combination. Ran Semon in "Solid Concrete" with this and made a good card. In fact, Larry has them all cheated when it comes to slapstick. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

SILENT VOW. (4,600 feet). Star, William Duncan. Good acting, fairly good program, but many said not as good as other Duncans. Not enough of Edith Johnson in it. Drew good crowd, rental fair. Draw mixed class in mining town. Admission 15-25. J. Clewa Jr., Enterprise Theatre (150 seats), Glenalum, West Virginia.

WILD CAT. Star, Alice Calhoun. "Wild Cat" was surely a fine picture. Miss Calhoun surely done some fine acting in this one. Book it by all means. It's a one hundred percent picture in every way. Film in good shape. Has fine moral and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Iowa.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Makes Prospective Patrons Blow Hard on a Simple and Good Ballyhoo Stunt

ABOUT every so often someone comes along with a stunt that is destined for a place in the advertising Hall of Fame, and often they do not seem to realize that they have hit something better than usual.

Lawrence William Carroll, of the Princess Theatre, Berlin, N. H., is almost casual in a report of a stunt he worked on Are You a Failure? recently, and yet it has the makings of a winner for anyone who wishes to figure out a connection with a title. Mr. Carroll worked it on the failure story, but a little thought will hook up to almost any title.

How He Worked It

Mr. Carroll set a box beside the box office, wired to a switch inside the office. Within the box was a card for the title and in front of this a red globe.

From the bottom of the box protruded a length of hose and an additional card as read: "Are You a Failure? See if you can light the lamp by blowing into the tube. A free ticket if you can."

This stunt was used for two days in advance of the picture, and scores of persons came into the lobby just to try the lamp, having heard of it from others. The lighting of the bulb was controlled by the cashier, who used her own judgment as to the number of persons who succeeded.

The stunt drew such large crowds that it was necessary to discontinue the ballyhoo at the rush hours, partly because the cashier could not attend to the switch, but more because the crowd blocked the lobby.

Work It Outside

We think this stunt will work even better in the lobby, with some attendant to handle the switch, and the crowd it will draw will be worth the salary paid the attendant, who should be a reliable person.

We believe, however, that this stunt will find its greater value as a window attraction. In this event the tube should be placed outside the window and the lamp within. This does not necessitate the cutting of the window, the tube can be affixed to a block set on the window or just below, or, where there is a ventilator, run through the opening, ostensibly to run up through the flooring inside the window.

Wherever it is placed, there should be an apparent join to a tube inside the window and running to the box on which the lamp is set, and which apparently conceals the mechanism.

Jazz It Up

The stunt can be worked up by having a number of lights of different colors and different values, a red lamp carrying one ticket, a green two and an amber a box or a limited season ticket.

In this case the lights should be worked so that the red lamp can be lighted first and held in while the blue comes on, and perhaps the amber, to convey the suggestion that the greater the inflation the larger the number of lights set in.

In any event the switches should be handled by someone in the window with a black scrim lookout which will permit the operator to see out and yet conceal him from the crowds.

Properly worked, this can be run into a local sensation even in the smaller cities, and it can upset a small town. Of course in window work the outside tube should be disconnected except at stated hours.

Be generous in the number of single tickets given out. It's a good stunt, be willing to pay for the crowd co-operation.

Here's a Hint

From the program of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, O., which we read even to the advertising, we note that in an effort to boom a comparatively new business street, the Third Street Business Boosters organized a dancing party for Hallowe'en Night, providing two bands and street illumination. The stores were all lighted to display the bargains to be placed on sale the following day.

Here's a chance to horn in on a similar local movement, if you can find or create one. Get them down to the new street, and get your share of the advertising in what amounts to a municipal event.

If it is too late in the season for street dances in your locality, remember the idea again next spring.

In Search of Youth

A novel contest is being worked in New Orleans by the Item and the theatre which has booked Black Oxen. The Item will run the novel serially and to put it over is offering prizes for the youngest looking old man and woman. Of course this calls for an explanation about the Atherton novel and the First National play, and is getting the town all worked up for the engagement.

The start was a showing of stage stars over fifty who do not look it, including, of course, Edna Wallace Hopper, upon whom the mantle of Lillian Russell seems to have fallen.

Dan Is Fixed

Dan Roche, one of the original exploitation staff of Paramount, hired to put over The Miracle Man, and who since then has been in charge of exploitation in the Chicago district and who has achieved some wonderful results, was let out along with most of the others in Claud Saunders' department in the recent Paramount housecleaning.

He was immediately engaged to put over The Hunchback of Notre Dame at the Sam H. Harris Theatre, Chicago. Having put over The Covered Wagon in Chicago, Dan feels a natural pride in his connection with the two outstanding hits of the current season and he says he is going to hammer it over to a fare-ye-well.

Dan doesn't get his name in the papers much, but he pulls some wonderful stuff. He was the first to invade a judicial court in his campaign for What's Your Hurry, when he got one of the slogan banners into the traffic court, right over the judge's head, and we believe that he was the first to get a 24-sheet bill into the window of an occupied store.

Universal is to be congratulated upon having added Dan to its string. He is out to beat his Covered Wagon record, which will be going some.

Continuous

First National's publicity hound, Walter Eberhardt, writes that Jackie Coogan's birthday "is getting to be a national event." What he should have said is that it is a continuous performance.

Earle Hall Payne, of the Kentucky theatre, Louisville, had one the other day to put over Circus Days and invisted 2,000 youngsters to a special performance.

Jackie's press agent is a good sport and willing to vouch for a birthday 365 days a year. Wise managers, however, will limit Jackie to not more than three birth dates in any one year. The thing can be overdone, of course.

A Goldwyn Release

WE HOPE OUR SINS WILL FIND US OUT IF THEY ARE LIKE THESE
The Dance of the Seven Sins which decorated the panel above the entrance to Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, for Slave of Desire. This panel is put to as good use as the foyer in the Howard Theatre, Atlanta.

Eight Page Special Was for Main Street

Getting a double truck on Main Street is so common as no longer to attract attention, but L. J. Carkey, exploitation agent for the Schine theatres in Upper New York State, horns into the news with a stunt commanding respectful attention.

A Warner Brothers Release

THE MAIN HEADING

Hooking in as usual to the local Main street, he tied the paper to a special Main Street Section of eight pages, chiefly devoted to merchants doing business on that thoroughfare, but carrying some other advertising and general news as well as special stories for the feature, but the newspaper gave the entire front page of this section to the Warner feature, and Carkey was satisfied with that, being no hog.

Who is going to "see" Carkey's eight and raise it to a sixteen?

Balloon Banner Is Effective Novelty

Joel Levy, of the Capitol Theatre, Reading, Pa., worked something different when he had Penrod and Sam. He provided a light cloth banner with the name of the attraction and the house, and tied this to a couple of gas balloons. Waiting for a light wind, he released it and watched it go floating down Main street.

That was all there was to the idea as it was originally planned, but Fate took a hand and played billposter. A cross current at the local four corners slammed it up against the cornice of a hotel, and it was two days before they took it down. Meanwhile the legend was clearly displayed to all who

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

BECAUSE If Winter Comes is too long to permit a varied program, only an atmospheric prologue could be used in conjunction with this Fox release. For this reason the prologue was made more elaborate than usual to combine the elements of music, tableau and setting that the patrons of the Mark-Strand have been led to expect.

At the opening a tenor in smoking jacket was disclosed seated in a library chair before a glowing fireplace, center stage. The fireplace was backed up by a deep blue plush cyclorama, and directly above the fireplace was a transparency picture frame ten feet deep by eighteen feet across. This, at opening, was dark, attention being drawn to the tenor by a lighted floor lamp which stood beside the chair and by an orange spot from the side and two orange spots from the embers of the fire. The tenor sang the first verse and chorus of the song, "If Winter Comes," and as he finished lights came up in the big picture frame showing a winter scene, with four drapery-clad girls as the spirit of winter. An electric fan furnished the wind, and a snow bag overhead showered down the paper snow as the girls went through various poses to the accompaniment of a few bars of "Holy Night." As this dimmed out the Mark Strand Chorus off stage went through the refrain, the tenor dozing in his chair. Then a soprano off stage went through the verse, and the lights again came up in the picture frame, showing the four girls in a summer scene, with a profusion of blossoms. The orchestra accompaniment for these poses and tableau was Mendelssohn's Spring Song.

At the close the first scenes of the picture were projected, showing winter and summer landscapes similar to the atmospheric presentation.

Two back drops were needed in the big picture frame, the first being a winter landscape and the second one of spring. The change was made, as described above, while the chorus and soprano went through the song. Front lighting was a combination of deep blue, purple and green, from Mestrum floods and foots, these being up through the presentation and until the film went on the screen.

At appropriate places during the running of the picture, the chorus off stage sang the theme-song, each time in a different way to avoid monotony of repetition. At the final clinch of the story the chorus swelled its collective tones to a mighty crescendo, the final note ending exactly as the title, "The End," flashed on the screen. This effect was good for applause at every deluxe performance.

cared to read while they ran. They could read it and walk, for that matter.

And of course Levy ran a hook-up with the Penrod clothes. It's a business maker, if you avoid the lottery feature in awarding the suit. The best way is to make it a voting contest, or offer it as a prize in a composition or impersonation contest. You may get away with a lottery, but you can't ever tell when some post office inspector will happen along and just utterly ruin your day for you. Play it straight.

Wore It

When the "original" gown worn by Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengeance was loaned Julius Hopp, of the Forst Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., he put it in a store window where it could walk around and show itself off. The motive power was supplied by a girl model inside the dress. It got much more attention.

Copied

Over in Philadelphia the Bulletin gave Potash and Perlmutter such a corking good notice that the Stanley theatre made it the copy for a larger than usual third day advertisement in all the papers.

The notice was doubly valuable because the Bulletin does not rave over amusements, and the opinion of its critic carried additional weight.

Here's Another

Now it's the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, which got a double truck on If Winter Comes, with seventeen merchants telling how useful their wares will be If Winter Comes. Just to be different, we are going to switch and report only those instances wherein a theatre did not get a hook-up.

A Metro Release

TALK ABOUT YOUR LONG, LOW RAKISH CRAFTS! OLD CAPT. KIDD NEVER HAD ONE LIKE THIS

This piratical pullman was constructed by Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, for Strangers of the Night, and was sailed up and down Peachtree street and held up the trolley cars. Just above the cornice you will see the lower edge of a pictorial banner. This was used in the foyer the week before, as shown in the second illustration.

A Universal Release

TWO SAMPLE DISPLAYS FROM KEITH AFFILIATEES ON THE "MERRY-GO-ROUND"

That on the left is from Moss' Regent Theatre, and on the right is shown the flashy display on the marquee of Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, both in New York City. Most of the theatres appreciated the motion possibilities.

Donated a Feature to Children's Week

For the recent National Children's Week George J. Schade, of the Sandusky theatre bearing his name, suggested a filming of Oliver Twist for the opening of the local observances, and donated the picture, getting his reward in good will and the moral value of this hook-up with the schools.

Stunts like this do not bring in direct money, but in the long run they will prove more profitable than the returns from any single stunt on a particular picture, since the effect is far more lasting. It is worth more than the expense to become identified with a prominent local movement, and no one knows this better than the astute George J.

Add Browning

Add Tod Browning's name to the list of managers who have profited through the presentation of style shows with Potash and Perlmutter. It did not cost him a penny extra, and the co-operating store even threw in the "Miss New Haven" of the recent Atlantic City contest as the star of the show.

About $300,000 worth of gowns, golem figures, were shown during the progress of the well-rounded little prologue, and the only reason Browning did not make more money was that the fire department would not let him.

3,000 for $37.50

One of Bill Saal's ideas for the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, was a contest on "Should a Wife Be a Silent Partner, and Why?" You could taken either side of the argument but you were limited to 25 words. There were $5 prizes each day for five days. The Times liked the idea so well that it paid half the value of the prizes, which gave the Missouri more than 3,000 lines for $37.50, or a little more than a cent a line, which is pretty reasonably cheap for reading notices. Of course the play of that name was the attraction at the Missouri.

Scared the Cow

Joseph T. Emerling, Paramounteer out of Omaha, drifted into Norfolk, Neb., to help Fred Webster, of the Grand Theatre, put over Hollywood.

He hired a cow for a family pass to the show, and used it for the no-bull stunt, dressing the boy who led her as a farmer, which required very little make-up.

That's old stuff, but noticing that the cow was s. itish, Emmerling chartered a motor cycle with a powerful honker and when the boy and cow had reached the main street, he came up from behind and scared her into a runaway. It put a new kick into the antiquity.

Of course if the cow had run down anyone or had gone through a plate glass window, the stunt would not have been so good, but an exploiteer has to take some chances.

Merry Go Round Is Smartly Exploited

Mark A. Luescher, former manager of the New York Hippodrome, and now exploitation manager for the Keith and affiliated theatres, reports that Keith managers have made better than average use of the exploitation possibilities of The Merry Go Round, and in one house the manager put it over so well that it had to be booked for an immediate return. Harry Mandel and John Bryan, of the Keith forces, and Joe Weil, of Universal, collaborated. Practically every house in the metropolitan district played to S. R. O. each night.

The general billboard campaign followed so closely upon the general campaign of Universal on this picture that the effect was practically continuous. The individual houses hooked up to this general campaign in their own sections. Several hundred thousand heralds, of various sorts, were provided by the campaigners.

What Moss Did

Harry Mandel, of the Moss theatres, split his 24-sheet stands. The Universal six sheets were posted either end of the 24-sheet space and the central twelve sheet space was given to the vaudeville and to dating the picture. This made an effective stand at less than the usual cost.

Four theatres, the Fordham, Franklin and Coliseum in New York, and the Keith Theatre in Jersey City, used a miniature merry-several of these operated in New York at a penny a ride, and one was chartered for these showings, the owner being provided with a clown costume. Passes for free rides were thrown out.

At Proctor's 125th

Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, New York, used a very elaborate mechanical display, and the Hamilton, New York, and the Prospect, Brooklyn, were among others to employ animated displays. The Jefferson used a "follow the green line" stunt, starting the line down the sides of the marquee, under the canopy and up to the box office, and Moss's Regent used a number of devices including a fanciful billboard shown in the cut, and a miniature of the Prater.

All of the houses used serpentines, balloons and flags to give the lobby a carnival aspect and helped the picture make one of the biggest clean-ups of the season.

THIS KEPT BUSINESS UP FOR A TWO-WEEK RUN

This looks like an old castle front made over for "Why Worry," but it was imposing, and for two weeks the Main Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., did a fancy business, and the first week broke the house record, while the second week was close to that.

BETTER THAN A WINDOW IS THIS DEPARTMENT STORE LOCATION
 This improvised studio was located in Indianapolis' largest department store. If you thought you looked like Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengeance and the photographer agreed with you, he took a few feet for a film for the Circle Theatre.

Resemblance Contest Used Motion Camera

If you lived in Indianapolis and cherished an idea that you looked like Norma Talmadge, all you had to do a few weeks ago was to go to the largest department store and if the photographer thought you thought correctly, he would grind down a few feet of film for a showing at the Circle Theatre. About half of the feminine population of the town tried to crash the gates, but only those who had one per cent. of chance got a shot.

Ace Berry, manager of the Circle Theatre, had tied the Times to the contest idea, to help along Ashes of Vengeance, and for a couple of weeks the Times ran a daily story with one or more pictures of the contestants. Then the assembled film was run at the Circle and the winner was put into the "original" costume worn by Miss Talmadge and permitted to do some of the scenes in which the star appears alone, and this was also shown at the theatre. Beside the kudos of looking most like Miss Talmadge, the winner was given a gold wrist watch.

When the "original" costume was not working on the winner of the contest, it was displayed in a store window with a dummy of the leading man also wearing an original costume. The window was nicely dressed and got a lot of attention.

The pair of stunts were all that were needed to make exceptional business for the popular star.

It's Nice for John But Tough on Gloria

When John Harris, who runs the Central Theatre, "for colored," down by the railroad tracks in Dallas, Texas, hooked on to the Paramount service, he was so pleased that he took extra space in the negro paper to tell the world. This is what he told:

Pictures Were Passes

Modifying an old scheme, Sid Lawrence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., tied the local paper to a circulation scheme in which passes to the Regent were given all persons whose snapshots were printed in the Sunday picture section.

Only women were photographed and the photographers snapped many blank exposures to increase the interest, but only those whose pictures were used were given passes. Of course the paper played up the Regent and its attractions.

A SIMPLE SETTING FOR A PENROD AND SAM PROLOGUE

Used by B. W. Bickert, of the Isis Theatre, Houston, Texas. The fence was low enough to stand while the picture was being projected, the back drop, carrying the foliage, being taken up to disclose the screen at the end of a vocal interpolation.

Has a Questionnaire to Make for Interest

Tod Browning, of Gordon's Olympia Theatre, New Haven, has a local paper tied to a series of questionnaires along the prevalent lines, and to make it really interesting, Tod refrains from loading it down with questions about First National stars and attractions, though these are what he is putting over in a way that keeps even the suspicious unaware that it is an advertising stunt. Some days there is nothing about First National, and there is even advertising for other companies.

Worked in this fashion you can keep the stunt going indefinitely and retain the interest, shooting in questions about your own stars and attractions at the times when this will do the most good. Browning supplies a set of twelve questions daily, the answers to the previous day's questions being given. A sample set of questions may give the idea better: (1) What dancer is regarded as America's best dressed woman? (2) What screen actress is called America's sweetheart? (3) Who is regarded as America's greatest coloratura soprano? (4) What American girl won most fame singing among the troops in France? (5) Who made the first American flag? (6) Who founded the Christian Science Church? (7) What woman won fame as the Maid of Orleans? (8) Who wrote the play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin?" (9) What actress is said to have the most beautiful back in the world? (10) What woman ruled as Queen of England for sixty years? (11) What famous actress died recently at the age of 76? (12) Who was the fair maiden who yamped Marc Antony? Ticket prizes are given.

Splashed a Short

Because the First National comedy, Bow Wow, was in only two reels seemed no good reason to the Palace Theatre, Fairfield, Maine, why it should not be exploited. Twenty dogs were given cardboard blankets and paraded through the streets, and twenty dogs make a wonderful parade in the town at the other end of the Waterville car line.

Schade's New Tags

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, worked a change on the tag stunt for Within the Law. He had printed up about 3,000 tags bearing the legend: "Warning! Keep Within the Law." These were not only tagged on automobiles, but on the bridles of horses and on bicycles. On the automobiles the string loop permitted them to be slipped on radiator caps, which is better than on the steering wheel or the door handle. It made an excellent title fixer and helped the picture to a good business.

Just goes to show that the traffic summons is not the only idea.

Human Wreckage Is a Business Builder

Following a campaign largely taken from the plan book, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., took a notable business on Human Wreckage.

This first step was a special showing before the city Health Commissioner, the head of the welfare department, the Better Films Committee, ministers and a few leading citizens.

The Health Commissioner, who is the only woman holding such a position, gave an endorsement which was quoted in a special circular letter with matched personal addresses instead of "Dear Patron," and was confined to a limited list likely to pay a return on such careful preparation.

The Salvation Army was interested and the value of the picture brought to the attention of religious and educational leaders. Then a couple of press stories which dealt with drug habits and were apparently pure news were slipped into the paper to get an indirect, but none the less forceful, effect.

Many ministers announced the showing of the picture during their pulpit announcements and one or two worked the announcement into their sermons.

Likes Lingerie

It is strange that The French Doll is the first of the Mae Murray pictures to be tied to lingerie, since dress—and undress—are so liberally featured in most of these productions.

It's strange, but it is true, and now managers are making up for lost time. A hosiery concern has been tied up to the idea through the Metro and free stockings have proven a powerful puller, but many managers have gone further and have hitched to lingerie with excellent display results.

Charles Morrison, of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, grabbed a wonderful window in a specialty shop on the strength of the lingerie poses in the stills, and most of the women who lined up in front of the window later appeared through masculine proxies at the box office. Get the women and they will bring the men.

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., geared a small organ to the platform and mounted cutouts from The Merry-Go-Round paper for riders. With the illumination on a flasher it made a tremendous box office appeal.

Had a Live Lloyd and Dummy Giant

Making a "production" of Why Worry in a window next the theatre was one of the means the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, took to put over the comedy.

Getting an impersonator of Lloyd was a simple task, but there was no giant the size of Aasen looking for a job, so they had to make an extra large suit of clothes and stuff it with straw.

Cuts Down a Mat to Fit a Space

Recently Ben Grim has been discussing the cut material available for the exploitation of short comedies, and Educational contributes a display from the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, in which the house makes the material fit the space with the simple application of the saw.

An Educational Release

MAKING A FIT

The half tone is a column cut originally four and one-half inches deep, which was too long for the space. Cutting off the horse's legs and the foreground does not detract from the attention value of the display, and does effect a considerable diminution of space costs. The other cut is used "as was" since it is a proper fit. One of these is supplied with each Educational.

The comedy gets one-quarter of the entire space, with Ashes of Vengeance for a leader.

Told the Ladies

Exploiters have to be general handy men to get a picture over just so. M. Barry, working for Fox out of Cleveland, went into Lima for If Winter Comes and not only delivered a lecture on the story before the women's clubs at the local library, but he wrote a rhymed review for the paper. He also put on a ballyhoo with a 16-piece band and boys carrying banners and turned a few odd tricks in his spare moments.

Competing Theatre Used Six Day Idea

When the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., ran Six Days it used the large figure six idea advanced in the press book for the announcement with "6 Days" as the big line; the figure crowding the space.

An opposition house liked the idea so well that it used a similar figure six with "days more" and the title of the feature it was showing. John Hamrick, of the Blue Mouse, did not utter loud shouts of joy over the imitation, but he found that the opposition was really helping him put over his attraction, for people read on to find that Six Days was not at the other house and came to the Blue Mouse.

Local Telegram Is Very Nicely Worked

One of the best telegram campaigns is reported by A. B. Crawford, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Taft, Calif. He did not merely hand out telegrams. He took the trouble to do it so as to get the best results.

He offered to buy forms and envelopes from the Federal Telegraph Co., for use in the stunt, but the offer was turned down. At the printer's he found a mat used by some other advertiser and abandoned in the office. It showed two towers with a large-lettered "Radio Broadcasting" and was just what he wanted. It could not have been better had he caused it to be drawn.

He filled in the mortise with Courtesy United Electric Co., Taft, Calif., and got something that looked really official, though the United Electric was merely the company from which he had borrowed a radiola.

The heading was printed in black and a message extolling The Cheat was printed in blue in typewriter type with the office check letters and all the rest, and it was signed by Pola Negri.

These messages were distributed by the Western Union Service, boys with "United Radio" hat badges. The messages were not personally addressed, but the boys were given slips which the recipients had to sign, which gave them the weight of a personal message with infinitely less work. This was the nicest touch and seems to be original with Mr. Crawford.

Hooking up to this, a radiola was set up in the lobby, at no greater cost than credit lines on the card which announced that they hoped to pick up a message being broadcast by the star. Of course they did, the same that was sent out on the blanks and which was sent out through local broadcasting.

With very little money and a lot of brains the picture was sold to unusual effect.

FOUR PRETTY DISPLAYS FROM THE PALACE THEATRE, EL PASO, ON PARAMOUNT PLAYS

These were planned by William E. Paschall and executed by the house artist, Guterrez, who fully lives up to his reputation with these fine showings. The top row shows the displays for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife and Only Thirty-Eight, while below are the attractors for The Exciters and Hollywood, that for The Exciters being unusually good with real water for the dive.

Simple Animation for Mounted Star

These figures are cutouts from the 24-sheet, and in the lobby a real rope ran from the rider's hand to the fiure of the girl. The photograph is too dark to show the details, but the figure is mounted on tripod of which two legs run to the platform below while the third extends to the rear. These support an upright which terminates just above the waist of the rider, and the cutout is pivoted just below the point of the vest, permitting free motion.

Back of the pedestal is a fan motor geared to three wheels to reduce speed. The first belt runs from the hub of the motor to the circumference of the first wheel. The hub of the first wheel is belted to the circumference and the third wheel is connected the same way.

This third wheel has a peg near the outer rim to which is fastened a short rod connecting with the hind feet of the horse and as the wheel revolves the horse moves up and down, like a hobby horse.

It is very simple, yet it gives a far better attractor than any still pose cutout, and the rig can be used for many similar animations. The rod should be pivoted to the horse's hoof, to permit the swinging of the connection as the wheel revolves. This is simply done with a bolt with a washer between the rod and the cutout to allow free play.

hundred dollars, than had been done on those days for the last couple of years.

A special showing, plus the reclame of the Greater Movie Season, did the trick.

The lobby was nicely set with a mounted 24-sheet overhead and a three-piece banner with four legs enclosing the lobby.

Don't forget to plan a free matinee for the poor children at Christmas and another for your regular clientele.

Why Worry Banner Had Them Worried

One of the stunts used by F. H. Dowler, Jr., to put over Why Worry? at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, was a novel roadside banner, apparently placed on the Lookout Mountain Drive.

The mandatory notice attracted attention and a lot of persons read the sign, more through curiosity than because they felt that they were compelled to. They merely wanted to see what it was all about, and it was all about the Harold Lloyd showing at the Tivoli. This was roughly lettered on a letterhead of the bill posting company to make it look different.

He had ten of these along the various drives for which Chattanooga is noted.

He also got out 1,000 windshield stickers bearing merely the title, and a number of cards with both star and title. These last he posted in the most conspicuous places, including the front of the newly constructed eight-story office building of the Tennessee Electric Power Company. The business section of the town is so small that everyone saw it.

With a thousand stickers and as many goggles, he built up a business that was close to the record.

He Had Lights

Because the failure of the water power through lack of summer rains caused a rationing of the electric service in Johns, N. B., the Queen Theatre found a fine local angle for a Norma Talmadge play.

The bulk of the advertising in newspaper, on the boards and in windows was to the effect that: "Whether the Hydro Service works or not, we have The Eternal Flame for three days."

Eternal flames sounded mighty interesting to a town where they had to go to bed by candle light to save the juice, and it added materially to the business the star's popularity would have pulled in anyhow. It served to make good business better, if you get the idea.

Wasted Space Marks Chicago Advance Ad

It looks as though someone had wasted 54 lines in this opening grind for Monna Vanna at the Harris Theatre, Chicago. That bottom cut is 27 lines deep and we do not think that it sold one half of one percent of one admission. The whole space is a bit soggy, but this bottom cut seems to be throwing money down the sewer. That fancy title is pretty poor, too, but people might study that for a while, though it will not get the man who is most desired: the man who is not looking for amusement and who is caught as he turns the page in search of something else. That title will never reach out and grab his eye as it travels over the page, but it may interest the amusement hunter. The waste cut might have been made to do double duty had the practice followed in the top cut been used. Had this been mortised to let in a type, not a hand lettered, "Scene from Monna Vanna" it would have been the best selling element in the entire space, for the man interested in the rather shadowy picture would have looked around for Monna and have discovered that the white streaked lozenge above told about her. Type would have stood out and would have carried out the title to the eye where the decorative plate is more decorative than informative. Even so small a thing as setting the limited selling talk in type would have helped more than a little, but the space is entirely hand lettered, though other spaces prove that the Chicago papers have a good dress of display in various sizes. The usual explanation of the big town agents is that only through hand lettering can they get the effects they desire, but that is an alibi rather than a real excuse. New York gives real results in type and any city office will give as good if the agent is persistent, but he sends down a few type layouts, does not get just what he wants, and turns to the deadly hand lettering forever after. It's laziness, not display, that forms the real reason.

Pittsburgh All Type Is Neatly Disposed

Pittsburgh, the home of the poorest amusement advertising in the country, can occasionally come through. This is an 85 by 2, or about two sizes, for the Cameo Theatre there, and it is as nice an example of clean typesetting as you can ask for. It is not only clean, but it is good display,

Rose Blooms Again in Full Page Size

Just to prove that his home town of Burlington, N. C., is no slouch of a city, W. C. McIntire shoots a page to announce the reopening of his Rose Theatre in that miniature metropolis of the South. Northern managers will be interested in the announcement that the Rose is to be exclusively white. He even draws the line at negro nursemaids. We gather that the Rose has previously opened a negro gallery. At any rate it is white enough now to please even a klansman of the K. K. K. There is a lot of reading in this space, but there is more time to read, and most subscribers who get the four page paper will have to read all of this to get their money's worth. Mr. McIntire is a red hot local patriot and he probably would not care if he lost a little on Fairbanks so that he might brag that his town had the big-city pictures. If all of the town had the same blacks and a yellowed print paper give a negative result. That white rose is worth a dozen scene cuts, and the title works in better than where there are figures to distract from the attention. The slogan, over to the left, sinks in a little, but Griffith's name comes out fairly strong and for a change of pace this forms a decidedly good appeal. It is hardly something to be worked week after week, but it is good for once. We particularly like the way the signature is worked in at the top. The first three letters of the house name solder the sig to the plate. More white space there might have cut the signature off, but this is a part of the plate without actually running into it.

Circle Still Wastes Its Display Spaces

While the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, turns out some very good advertising, we think that it wastes a lot of space down at the bottom of its advertisements. It strings out the smaller features to undue length and increases the space bill beyond the point where the extra space can possibly tures, but it is just as wasteful to take too much space for these smaller details. By doubling up the small stuff could be as well carried in an inch or an inch and a quarter instead of the two and a half inches required here, so that some 50 or 60 lines are added to the cost without compensating return. It would even be better to pull in the space and add white above and below, since that would at least add to the attractiveness of the display.

Cut Waste Saved by Well Placed Title

This cut for Scaramouche in the display for the Chicago opening at the Woods' Theatre, does not give a very good reproduction. You can make out the figures and the crowds, but there is nothing sufficiently distinct to do real selling, though the cut does serve efficiently as attractor to the space and the title is so well played up in a reverse strip that it gets over with both feet. Often a reverse title wastes money but here it is a real display and gets the attention for the smaller matter. It is all hand lettering, but it is fairly legible. Probably it looked like too much of a job to set type in all those motifs, but type could have been set to fit and then pasted onto the line layout with comparatively little trouble once some printer is educated to the idea. Nelson Bell often does this for the Crandall houses in Washington with unusually neat results, and if he can, anyone else can.

A Full Display Is Still Attractive

By the best standards of advertising, this space from the Temple Theatre, Toledo, is too full of type and cut. There is too much talk and too little white space. That's according to the rules, but as a matter of fact the rule is shot to pieces because there is good display in spite of the apparent overcrowding. This is largely because the title and star are segregated from the rest of the space by the cuts, and yet joined through the type run-down from the title to the support display below; a layout, by the way, which gives the fullest display to the star and yet permits equal capital to be made of the well-known support. This is about the only excuse for the smaller cut over to the left. It probably will sell few tickets, but it serves its purpose in playing up Arliss and the drama, and probably does this better than would white space with this particular arrangement. It just helps to prove, if proof were needed, that there is no rule that is so hard and fast it may not be disregarded if this is done as intelligently as in the present instance. The placement of the larger cut is a little awkward. The star has his back turned on his space, which is poor practice, and yet, if the cut were shifted to the left he would not come into the space much better, so it is just as well to let the title run into the cut as to let the cut look at the title. Ordinarily it would be better to put the cut over to permit the eye to pass over the cut to the title since all reading is done from left to right. A considerable space saving is effected through cutting the foot of the girl into the border. It gives a full quarter inch to the entire space since the foot sticks out a half inch beyond the rest of the cut.

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

UNIVERSAL always has had the reputation of giving the exhibitor just about everything he needed to put over a picture properly, and recent issues of Universal campaign books do nothing to impair that reputation. In fact, some of the books published in the past few months, especially those on Universal "Super-Jewels," add further laurels to the crown of Universal showmanship.

We have made an intensive and extensive study of press books, and it strikes us that the campaigns prepared by Universal are about as top-notch as any.

Last week we stated that Goldwyn was the only company, to our knowledge, issuing a supplementary promotion book. The statement still stands, but we forgot to mention that Universal publishes the Universal Weekly, in the pages of which are reproduced many of the stunts that have been tried and proved by exhibitors playing Universal pictures. But this periodical is mailed to all exhibitors, and deals with no picture in particular. The Universal Weekly carries advance promotional dope on all of Universal's product, including short stuff.

GETTING back to press books, let us consider those issued by Universal on "The Acquittal."

Here is a complete compendium of ideas that ought to furnish any exhibitor, small-town or big city, with enough material to help sell seats in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. Not only is the general run of stuff practical, but also there is such a variety of ideas as to suit any showman.

The keynote of the whole campaign on "The Acquittal." The elements of suspense and mystery have been retained in almost every piece of promotional matter. Good showman-psychology that should sell plenty of seats.

THE campaign is included in three parts. A four-page, two-color plan book, a section devoted to newspaper ads, and a publicity clip sheet. Each is separate from the other, but together they form a whole.

THE front cover of the campaign book is a selling talk to exhibitors, and it contains a layout that might be adapted to a newspaper ad. Several of the cuts that form the layout are available at U exchanges—pictures of characters in the story. We might suggest here that it would have been a better plan to print this cover in red and black instead of blue and black, as has been done. The blue makes it more difficult to reproduce any of these illustrations direct from the press book.

The inside pages of the campaign book contain information regarding the picture, as well as exploitation ideas and suggestions and reproduction of the heralds. Heralds on the "Acquittal" are made in three different styles—one a teaser "coming" throw-away, another a novelty "Injunction" ordering the recipient to "court," and the third a four-page, two-color miniature newspaper. Incidentally, these miniature newspaper heralds seem to be growing in popularity.

The back page contains two-color reproductions of the posters, lobby displays, etc. The line of paper includes one 24-sheet, two 6-sheets, three 3-sheets, three 1-sheets and a window card.

An unusual lobby-card idea is also presented, a sample of which is reproduced in these columns. As the press book says, "Order the whole set of 11x14s and use the six which show in the lower left hand corner inserts of the principal characters.

"Get six pieces of compo or heavy matt board, one-sheet size (28x42). Make one opening for an 11x14 lobby card in each. Paint the whole board an even neutral background color for lettering, as shown in the illustration."

The layout is dense with text and includes a small illustration of a woman's face.

element of suspense and mystery. The idea may also be adapted to other pictures.

THIS element of suspense and mystery is the keynote of the whole campaign. It's good showman-psychology to advertise "Don't tell your friends how it will turn out—they'll never guess."

The suspense and mystery idea have been carried out in virtually all of the newspaper ads., which are found in a separate four-page section of the complete campaign. There is a plentiful assortment of newspaper ads., both as to number, subject-matter, type and style. Twenty-four ads. are reproduced, exclusive of seven teasers. This, we believe, is more than the number usually prepared by most other companies.

One thing we like particularly about the assortment of ads. is that several samples of strong type ads. are given; one thing we don't like about the ad. line-up is that our old bugbear, "credit lines," is very much in evidence.

THE publicity clip sheet on "The Acquittal" is indeed comprehensive. It contains stories of all description—reviews, notes, advance stories, etc., and one or two very good feature stories. One little thing we notice in the publicity clip sheet is that the scene cuts, of which there are quite a number, have hand-lettered captions, Universal's "A Lady of Quality" press book contains some mighty good newspaper ads, especially as regards art work. The illustrations are uniformly high class and are mostly from the pen of Mon Randall, who has done some of the best things in this business, in an advertising art sense.

which have to be cut off by newspapers if they do not care to use the caption prepared.

We haven't swerved in our conviction that it would be better to have these captions set in type, and just one added reason is that, for instance, in one one-column cut we observe, the cut itself is three inches deep and the caption takes up almost another inch of space. These days extra inches mean a lot in newspaper pages, and we believe that all scene cuts would get a bigger circulation if not encumbered by hand-lettered captions—if not handicapped by that "extra inch."

IT'S not an easy matter to exactly place the credit for Universal press sheets. There's P. D. Cochrane, George Brown, Paul Gulick and others who all probably have a hand in preparing each campaign; not to forget Joe Hirt and Ben Wells, poster artists; Henry Clay Bate, Don Walk, Paul Perez and others. Anyhow, they're a gang of good showmen!

THERE'S a story which may be told, but which the advertising men of this business will appreciate particularly. Here it is: A certain film magnate was looking over a one-sheet prepared by his advertising manager. "Huh," he said, "that's no good. I'll write you copy for a one-sheet!"

So the magnate wrote two closely typewritten pages of copy and showed it to the advertising man.

"Fine," said the ad. man. "What we can't print on one side we'll run on the other side."

"You're fired," said the magnate. "Such ignorance. Anybody knows that one side of a poster is pasted against the wall."

"Under the Red Robe"

Cosmopolitan Offers Magnificent Version of Historical Novel of France in the Days of Cardinal Richelieu

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Heralded as what is believed to be the first motion picture costing $1,500,000 to produce, Cosmopolitan is presenting "Under the Red Robe," an adaptation of Stanley Weyman's popular historical novel, for an indefinite run at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York.

With what is said to be absolute accuracy to the original, whole blocks of Paris streets of the seventeenth century have been duplicated together with rooms in the palace of King Louis XIII at Fontainebleau, even including two famous paintings by Rubens, as well as the magnificent exterior and the entrance hall and grand staircase of Cardinal Richelieu's palace and the interior of another famous palace. Against such backgrounds are large numbers of women gorgeously gowned according to the elaborate mode of the period when the king thought more of the grandeur of his court than he did of statecraft and when Richelieu even undertook to surpass him in the grandeur of his entourage. There are also a great many men-at-arms in the gorgeous liveries of king and cardinal with their coats-of-arms, magnificent laces and embroideries that vie with the gowns of the women.

The story is one of intrigue which involves the plotting of the king's brother to secure the throne, and of the king's family to end the almost despotic sway of the powerful cardinal. Through the assistance of a dashing soldier of fortune, the cardinal succeeds in winning out against his enemies. The romantic interest is supplied by a love affair between the hero and the sister of one of the plotters. The title refers to the cardinal's garment.

It will be seen that the story follows along somewhat familiar lines for historical costume romances. While interesting, it somehow does not seem to develop any very great punch or powerful hold on the spectator, although there are several effective individual scenes, as for instance the running fight of soldiers on horseback in a shallow stream; the attempts of the faithful retainer to save his master, ending in the servant and a soldier plunging over a high cliff; and the touching scene where Richelieu, temporarily shorn of power, finds himself deserted by his army of sycophants. It would seem that greater stress has been placed on the magnificence and accuracy of the production for its drawing power than upon the dramatic values of the story, but by no means is the story uninteresting. This same idea would also appear to be responsible for the fact that in bringing out the other elements of the picture so much footage has been used that the hold of the story is weakened, with the result that there is an impression of too great length, which judicious cutting would improve by tightening up the action.

A newcomer, John Charles Thomas, well known as a singer in concert work and in light opera, has the role of the swashbuckling hero and creates a good impression. Alma Rubens in the leading feminine role, with quite limited opportunities, does ef-

Story

Just at the time that Cardinal Richelieu had risen from an obscure priest to be prime minister of France under the weak, foppish King Louis XIII, Gil de Berault, an impecunious gentleman noted as a swordsman, disregards the Cardinal's orders against dueling but is given the chance to save his life if he will capture de Cocheforet, who is plotting against the king. Gil sets out on his mission and captures de Cocheforet, but, falling in love with his sister Renee, sets him free and returns to the Cardinal to take his medicine. "The Leavenworth Case"

Vitagraph Offers Absorbing Entertainment in Screen Version of Famous Mystery

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

During her long career as an author of mystery stories which have achieved great popularity, Anna Katherine Greene has probably written none which is more baffling than one of her earliest works "The Leavenworth Case." This story has been transferred to the screen with unusual fidelity by Charles Giblyn as a Whitman Bennett Production and is being released by Vitagraph.

Almost at the first flash you find yourself face to face with a seemingly unsolvable mystery and from then on, with no waste footage, your interest is held tensely until the final and thoroughly satisfactory solution. The tremendous suspense of the original story has been even increased in the screen version, with the result that you find yourself continually on the alert, watching the unfolding of the story and waiting intently for the explanation of how and by whom the mysterious murder was committed. Few will be able to guess with any degree of certainty the identity of the guilty party. Here is absorbing and exciting entertainment for all who like a good detective-crime-mystery story—and who does not? No matter if it does follow along somewhat familiar lines.

Credit should go to Director Charles Giblyn for the manner in which he has handled this production; there is excellent continuity and a heightening interest, with no side issues to divert your attention from the main problem. Seena Owen in the leading role, as the niece under suspicion, gives a fine performance and Martha Mansfield is satisfactory in the unsympathetic role of the other niece. Wilfred Lytell as a mysterious character and Bradley Barker as the hero do good work. Paul Doucet as the secretary is, however, at time camera-conscious and inclined to overact.

Don't overlook this one as a box-office bet, if your patrons like mystery stories.

Story

When Ira Leavenworth, a rich old recluse, fails to appear for breakfast, his two nieces, Eleanor and Mary Leavenworth, with the aid of his secretary, Harwell, break into the sound-proof study and find Leavenworth dead, a bullet hole in his head. Suspicion points to Eleanor and then turns to a mysterious visitor who had spoken with Leavenworth before he was slain. Raymond, Leavenworth's attorney, and who is in love with one of the nieces, intercedes with the District Attorney and gets him to delay making of arrests. He then engages one of the most famous private detectives in New York to conduct an investigation. Eleanor is cleared of the crime and the real culprit confesses.

Lesser Obtains "Captain January" for Baby Peggy's First Principal

"Captain January," by Laura E. Richards, now in its 52nd printing and with a circulation of more than 600,000 copies, will be Baby Peggy's first screen vehicle as a start for Principal Pictures Corporation. This announcement has just been made by Sol Lesser, president of Principal.

Work on "Captain January" will be started January 21, three days after Baby Peggy returns to the coast from her tour of the East and Middle West, during which she met thousands of people. The child star left New York City on Nov. 9, went to Boston and surrounding cities as the guest of the Boston Post and then proceeded to Chicago. In Baby Peggy Mr. Lesser believes he has a "find" that will prove equally as great as Jackie Coogan, whom he developed, and he considers "Captain January" the ideal story with which to introduce her to the public in a big special production.

Irving M. Lesser, vice president of Principal Pictures, conducted the negotiations by which the screen rights for "Captain January" were purchased from the publishers, L. C. Page & Co., of Boston. Sol Lesser is now actively engaged on the Coast in arranging to produce the picture on an elaborate scale.

Boston Enthusiastic in Lauding "Going Up"

The picture reviewers of staid Boston, as well as the fans, used many superlatives to express their enthusiasm over Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," when this Associated Exhibitors attraction played Gordon's Olympia last week.

In the course of his review in the Herald, "E. G." said: "Going Up" is one of the funniest films that we have seen, and Douglas MacLean is a delight. On the stage, 'Going Up' was, of course, a good comedy, but on the screen it is as ridiculously funny as an animated cartoon."

George C. Mackinnon wrote in the Advertiser: "Simon-pure farce of the genuine 'screamingly funny' brand is 'Going Up,' now dispensing rounds of hearty laughter at Gordon's Olympia. It makes side-splitting entertainment."

The Hartford, Conn., papers also gave warm praise to the comedy during its run at the Palace in that city. "MacLean's experiences in this picture," says the Times, "give one enough laughs to last a week. It's one of the peppiest films that has struck a local film for some time."

Robert E. Sherwood wrote in Life, New York: "Douglas MacLean, a graceful comedian and accomplished farceur, has had no opportunities in recent years so favorable as those that are presented to him in 'Going Up.' That he makes the most of them is greatly to his credit, because usually, when a movie star hears opportunity knocking, he mistakes it for the uproar of the destructive critics."

William Fox presents Tom Mix in "North of Hudson Bay."

This Modernizes Barthelmess

Richard Barthelmess returns to a modern role in his next picture, "Twenty-one," his new First National Picture, after almost a year in which he has played nothing but character parts.

Dorothy Mackail plays her second role opposite Barthelmess in "Twenty-one." Ivan Simpson, Joe King, Dorothy Cumming, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Bradley Barker and Elsie Lawson and a large cast of flappers and society belles play in support of Mr. Barthelmess.

Record Smashed by "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" is a popular current Broadway, N. Y., attraction. On Sunday of last week "Scaramouche" broke the 44th street house record for the third successive time.

In Washington it is said that very few of the high governmental officials failed to review it.

Completed

"Cupid's Fireman," the latest Charles Jones picture completed at the William Fox West Coast studios, is founded on the Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl." The girl is played by pretty, dark-eyed Marion Nixon. William Wellman directed.

Unusual Day and Date Run for Pickford Film

Unusual is the day and date run in two big Pittsburgh theatres this week of Mary Pickford's "Rosita," the United Artists Corporation release.

Beginning Monday, Nov. 5, this Mary Pickford attraction began showing to capacity audiences at Clark's State and Blackstone theatres, both in the downtown section of Pittsburgh, their advertising stating that it was the first time anything of this kind had been done in these two houses on any production. The fact that the two theatres are directly adjacent to each other makes this exceptional booking all the more interesting from a sales point of view.

The announcement that "Rosita" would play day and date at the State and the Blackstone not only caused comment among film men but aroused a good deal of interest and gossip with the Pittsburgh fan public as well.

"Blackmail" Completed Universal Announces

Universal announces the completion of camera work on "Blackmail," the big Jewel production being made by King Baggot from Rita Weiman's stage play, "The Co-respondent." It is a special cast production.

Heading the list of players are: Ruth Clifford, Niles Welch and Buddy Messinger, Charles Clary, Herbert Fortier, Arthur Howard, Joe North, William B. Lawrence, Mary Mersch, John Merkyll, Emily Fitzroy, Jane Starr, Hayden Stevenson and Carl Stockdale.

One of the outstanding features of the picture is said to be a graphic illustration of what one should do when faced with "blackmail" threats. This lesson was woven into the picture at the advice of executives of the Los Angeles police department.

To Film Scenes in Three Countries

Motion picture scenes for Maurice Tourneur's newest production, "Torment," will be taken amidst locales in three countries, according to arrangements perfected by M. C. Levee, who is at present in New York.

The story, an international crook drama, is laid in Russia, America and Japan.

New York Manager Likes "Tiger Rose"

Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York, was so thoroughly impressed by the Warner Classic, "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric, that he immediately set a booking date for the Sidney Franklin production following the special screening of the picture. "Tiger Rose" will open at the Rivoli Theatre December 2nd.

"I want to congratulate the Warner Brothers and Sidney Franklin on 'Tiger Rose,' Dr. Reisenfeld declared following the screening.

Exploitation in Omaha

Mail carriers in Omaha, Neb., with permission of the United States Post Office Department, distributed to every person in that city card heralds announcing "post office week" during the engagement of "Loyal Lives" at the Moon Theatre in that city.

The cards carried the post office slogan, "Mail early and often for service and efficiency."

Preferred Produces Balmer Story

"The Breath of Scandal," by Edwin Balmer, will be produced immediately by B. P. Schulberg as the third of the next series of Preferred Pictures which will include "Poisoned Paradise" and "White Man."

"South Sea Love" Is Released

"South Sea Love" with Shirley Mason as the star is the picture that William Fox released November 11. As the title indicates the scenes are laid among the islands of the Pacific and the picturesque life of the region has been woven into an interesting story by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. Shirley Mason plays the part of Dolores Mendina. Her leading man is J. Frank Glendon. The director was David Solomon.

"Universities of the World," an Educational, was also released November 11.

Announcement of Studio and Producing Plans Made by Levee

A new series of Maurice Tourneur productions for First National will shortly be under way at the United Studios.

Four carloads of furniture from the home of Mrs. George J. Gould will soon arrive at the United Plant and appear in future productions made in Hollywood.

Producing and general studio activities for the next three months at the United Studios will continue at a normal pace.

These are some of the news high-lights given out by M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios and producer of Maurice Tourneur pictures, on returning to his desk recently after a three weeks' business trip to New York.

The new producing contract signed by Mr. Levee in New York will become effective upon completion of "Torment," now in production under Mr. Tourneur's direction.

"We are not contemplating any suspension of operations at the United Studios," said Mr. Levee. "While we do not expect to experience the activities of six months ago, we do plan a continuance of normal production along sane lines.

"Studio improvements are going ahead at a rapid pace and all original plans for the increase of facilities and efficiency of United are being carried on. There is no slump evident on the part of the producers at this studio and a survey of production schedule indicates our plant will be one of the few to continue normal activities during the prescribed period of suspension of operations at many other plants."

As to the possible shortage of pictures resulting from the closing of studios, Mr. Levee said: "From my observations in New York I am confident that no shortage will be experienced. The distributors have enough productions on hand to keep them going for some time to come.

"There are few producers who will realize a profit on their pictures produced this year. Production costs must come down if the industry is to survive."

Ten Special Productions for Preferred's Latest Program

Plans for ten special productions, to be filmed as Preferred Pictures in the immediate future, are said to be making the Schulberg studios in Los Angeles the busiest spot on the West Coast. Three pictures are being filmed almost simultaneously. "Poisoned Paradise," from the Robert W. Service novel of that name has been begun by Director Gasnier, with an all-star cast headed by Clara Bow.

With the completion of continuities, now being prepared, work will begin on "The Breath of Scandal," from the novel by Edwin Balmer, and "White Man," a screen version of George Agnew Chamberlain's novel. Since the three stories are of widely different characters three armies of carpenters and technical men have been organized for the preliminary tasks that must be completed before cameras begin to grind.

"Poisoned Paradise" will be filmed amid the luxuries of Monte Carlo and the slum districts of Paris. In both cases photographic reproductions of the actual districts to be shown have been used in order to make as realistic as possible glimpses of Monte Carlo and the French metropolis.

"White Man" is a drama of the jungle. One of the most interesting of the feats that must be accomplished during its filming is the moving of one of California's famous big trees from its natural habitat to the Schulberg studios. Other settings include a genuine jungle, which has been located not far below the Mexican border, and a glimpse of the Metropolitan Opera House and its stage, in New York.

"The Breath of Scandal," based on Mr. Balmer's stirring story of modern society, required several elaborate American city backgrounds. The remaining pictures, seven in number, will be filmed as rapidly as the physical requirements can be met, in order to make possible the release on schedule time of the fifteen Preferred Pictures announced as the season's output by this organization.

"Pioneer Trails" a Gold Mine

J. A. Cooper, manager of the La Crosse Amusement Company, La Crosse, Wis., telegraphed Vitagraph the day after the opening of "Pioneer Trails" at its theatre: "'Pioneer Trails' opened Monday to a stand-out from one to eleven, breaking all house records."

W. V. Prentice, Manager of the Lyric Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, said: "Your 'Pioneer Trails' is a winner. 'Pioneer Trails' should be a gold mine."

New Hepworth Editor

Donald Buchanan has been engaged by Hepworth as editor-in-chief of their productions. He is now at work editing and titling "Lily of the Alley" and will start soon on "Strangling Threads."

Mack Sennett Studio Speeds Up to Meet Requirements of Pathe

While the trade and public press are carrying news of the curtailment of production by some of the industry's biggest companies and rumors are rife that studio work is to be further retarded in certain quarters, advices from the Mack Sennett Studios on the West Coast disclose increased production activities on the Sennett lot to meet Pathe's program of two-reel comedy releases for the current season.

Pathe's recently announced program of more abundant and better comedy product during the new season will suffer no setback by the slowing up of production work, declares a statement from the Pathe home office this week. The thoroughly sound business policy governing all production activities at the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett lots, whose output is being distributed by Pathe, the well-balanced policy of turning out types of production in popular demand with a minimum of expenditures and a total elimination of waste, which has been consistently followed heretofore, will continue to be enforced in the case of every producing unit releasing its product through the Pathe channels, declares the statement from the home office.

Richard Jones, supervising director and production manager of the Sennett Studios, has been busy during the past few weeks supervising the installment of new facilities and the acquisition of additional players for the several units producing under the Mack Sennett banner. At the present moment every department in the big plant is taxed to capacity and functioning one hundred per cent.

Samuel Goldwyn Buys "Cytherea" for Screen

Samuel Goldwyn last week purchased the screen rights to Joseph Hergesheimer's novel "Cytherea." The book was published two seasons ago and because of the adroit handling of an unusual theme attracted more attention than any previous work of this author. Other Hergesheimer novels which have already been picturized are "Tol'able David" and "The Bright Shawl," two Barthelme pictures.

Like "The Eternal City," this new independently-produced picture of Mr. Goldwyn's is scheduled for release through Associated First National Pictures. George Fitzmaurice, who took his company to Rome to make "The Eternal City," will direct "Cytherea" and is now in Havana in search of suitable locations.

Bob McGowan, director, is captured for the first time by the speed camera in a deep study on screen technique with "Farina," the ace-of-spades beauty, one of the chief players in "Our Gang" Comedies, produced by Hal Roach.

"Is Sure-Fire," Say Warners

"A sure-fire box-office attraction—one of the most thrilling and dramatic romances that has ever been filmed!" That was the consensus of opinion of the Warner officials following a private showing in the home office projection room of the Warner Classic, "Lucretia Lombard," produced by Harry Rapf. Irene Rich and Monte Blue co-starred in the production, and other prominent roles are interpreted by Marc McDermott, Alec B. Francis, Norma Shearer, John Roche, Lucy Beaumont and Otto Hoffman. "Lucretia Lombard" is a screen adaptation of the novel of the same name by Kathleen Norris.

"Scaramouche" Debut in Toronto

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" opened at the Tivoli Theatre (formerly the Allen) in Toronto last week and reports of the newspaper critics show it was given the same hearty reception it has received everywhere else. "A crowded house saw 'Scaramouche,'" wrote the critic of the Toronto Daily Star, "while a thousand people were turned away. Many of those who saw it pronounced it as the greatest screen drama they had ever witnessed."

Griffith Meets the President

D. W. Griffith recently was presented to President Coolidge by Representative Treadway. The noted motion picture director and producer showed President Coolidge several scenes of his forthcoming film feature, "America," a picture of the Revolutionary War. American soldiers of today, attired as were those earlier fighters, re-enacted the battle scenes. Many of the historic relics of those days were used in Mr. Griffith's scenes.

"Get Together Club" Holds Dinner

The "Get Together Club" composed of the executives and employees of the New York Exchange for Educational Films, Inc., held its first dinner at Keene's Chop House, Oct. 26. The "Get Together Club" is a social and welfare club, holding meetings at the exchange at 729 Seventh Avenue every week, where matters of social interest and welfare of the exchange are discussed. Charles A. Greenblatt is president of the club.

Finishes Job

Mildred Davis has practically completed her first Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher release, under the direction of Arthur Rosson. Carl Miller is also featured.

Tarkington Stories Are Ideal Screen Material

Twice winner of the Pulitzer award for fine American fiction, Booth Tarkington, creator of "Gentle Julia" and a host of other lovable juveniles, is rated high in modern American letters. His story of "Gentle Julia" has been adapted for the screen by William Fox, who gave Bessie Love the title role and cast Harold Goodwin as the awkward Noble Dill, her small town swain.

Booth Tarkington was born in Indianapolis, on July 29, 1869. He graduated from Princeton and almost immediately became a successful author of short stories. He published "The Gentleman from Indiana," in 1899 and thereafter, in remarkable succession, "The Conquest of Canaan," "His Own People," "The Flirt" and in 1914, began his Penrod stories with the first under that name. Then came "Penrod and Sam," "Seventeen," "Alice Adams," and between his novels were scores of masterful short stories and lesser books.

Among the successful plays Tarkington has written are "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Man From Home," "Cameo Kirby," "Your Humble Servant," "Mister Antonio," "The Country Cousin," "Up From Nowhere," "Clarence," "The Wren," "The Intimate Strangers" and others. He collaborated with Harry Leon Wilson in the writing of "Cameo Kirby," which William Fox has adapted for the screen among the 1923-24 specials.

Carewe's Force Sails from N. Y. on S. S. Paris

The second section of the Edwin Carewe company sailed Wednesday, November 14, on the French liner S. S. Paris. Those who left to join the director and to proceed to Algiers where exteriors for First National's "A Son of the Sahara" will be made included Claire Windsor, Rosemary Theby, Bert Lytell, Montagu Love and Paul Panzer beside the production and technical staffs.

The change in sailing date from Saturday to Wednesday was made necessary owing to the inability of Miss Windsor to finish her work out west in time to enable her to arrive in New York by Saturday.

Mr. Carewe has been abroad for a month now and has already looked over the desert locations in Biskra, Algeria. He reports everything in readiness for the arrival of the company and will meet its members in Paris and accompany them south to Marseilles and then across the water to Algeria.

Aside from the roster of players already mentioned Walter McGrail will be in one of the principal roles of the picture. He preceded the main party, accompanying Director Carewe a month ago.

Louis N. Jerome will have charge of the business management of the company. The complete personnel of the production and technical staffs is as follows: John D. Schulze, technical director, Robert Kurlle, cameraman, Wallace Fox, assistant director, Cleo Fox, secretary, Al Greene, second cameraman, Richard Easton, second assistant director, and Lawrence Coursier, laboratory expert.

Smith Ties Up Traffic

David Smith, who is producing "Red Roses," a super-feature for Vitagraph adapted from the novel by George Randolph Chester, effectively tied up all traffic at the junction of the main thoroughfares of Los Angeles last week.

Director Smith obtained permission from the police department of the southern California metropolis to stage some of the scenes in the heart of the shopping district. Scores of automobiles were used and when the congestion was at its height an ambulance came clanging down the street.

Doris Kenyon Stars in Blaney Film

Doris Kenyon has the leading role in Charles E. Blaney's production "The Love Bandit," which Vitagraph will release. Victor Sutherland and Cecil Spooner are also in the cast.

Production on the second of the Blaney-Vitagraph pictures will begin soon. The selection of the second super-feature has not yet been announced.

Extended Runs

Not only is "If Winter Comes" hanging up a new record for extended engagements all over the country but it is teaching a new set of patrons the path to the picture theatres. Columbus, Ohio, and Buffalo are two of the latest cities to acclaim the film version of the A. S. M. Hutchinson story by holding it over for a second week. Detroit ran the picture for four weeks, and Los Angeles will post a long run record with it.

Named Branch Manager

Vidor Directing Laurette Taylor Enthusiastic Reception Given "The Hunchback"

Work on the Metro picturization of "Happiness," J. Hartley Manner's great play, was begun last week with the arrival in New York of King Vidor, who was selected to direct Laurette Taylor, noted stage star, in the same role which won her such fame on the stage. It will take several weeks before Mr. Vidor and his staff, which arrived here with him from the coast, have completed the filming of several very important exterior scenes, after which, according to present plans, Miss Taylor, Mr. Manners, Mr. Vidor and the staff will return to the Metro studios in Hollywood to complete "Happiness."

"Happiness" marks the second of Mr. Manner's stage successes which Metro has picturized with Miss Taylor in her original stage role. The first was "Peg 'O My Heart," also directed by Mr. Vidor, which still is accounted a great screen play. After the filming of "Happiness" Miss Taylor will make for Metro another of Mr. Manner's plays, "One Night in Rome."

It will take several months before "Happiness" is completed. Miss Taylor will probably remain in Hollywood until after this and "One Night in Rome" has been picturized. A beautiful home in the Santa Monica hills near Hollywood has already been secured for the noted star and for Mr. Manners, her husband.

"The Chicago premier of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' at the Harris Theatre last week eclipsed even the world premier at the Astor Theatre, New York City," Universal announces. This marks another step in the phenomenal advance across the continent of Universal's masterful version of the Victor Hugo classic.

"Carl Laemmle started his career in the Windy City just seventeen years ago," comes the story of the Chicago opening as told by Universal representatives present, "and it appeared as though the entire city had combined to make the premier of Universal's greatest effort a gala event." The reception accorded "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was not merely one of sentiment, however, for newspaper reviews sang plenty of praise, surpassing in enthusiasm even the eulogies published by the critics of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, San Francisco, and other cities where the Victor Hugo classic is now playing to delighted audiences.

The advance sales are the largest in the history of pictures in legiti-mate houses, reports state. By Saturday at four o'clock every seat was sold for the Sunday matinee, and by two o'clock Sunday afternoon the house was gone for the night performance. Thousands were turned away both afternoon and evening.

Mr. Laemmle and his secretary, Harry H. Zehner, arrived in Chicago from the coast Sunday morning, and E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, came in from New York to attend the opening. Both were in the audience, together with a host of notables representing society, the theatrical and political world.

At the conclusion of the performance the audience stood and cheered Mr. Laemmle and the picture. It was impossible to clear the house for forty minutes as his many friends insisted on offering their personal congratulations.

Judging by the advance sale of the Chicago run Universal executives predict the Windy City showing will equal that of New York, where "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is about to enter its fourth month of continual sell-outs.

House Records Broken by "The Virginian"

Owen Wister's novel and play, "The Virginian," which has been filmed by B. P. Schulberg for Preferred Pictures, broke all house records at opening engagements in Denver and Detroit this week.

A. G. Talbot, manager of the Colorado Theatre, Denver, reports, in a congratulatory telegram to Preferred Pictures Corporation, that the amount grossed the first day of the picture's run surpassed all Sunday records.

According to Phil Gleichman, president of the Broadway-Strand, where the picture is now playing an extended engagement in Detroit, "The Virginian" is doing tremendous business, surpassing any picture booked by that house in three years.

The Detroit critics, who are among the first newspaper reviewers to render a verdict on the screen production, say: Detroit Times: "The Virginian" is a picture no Detroit can afford to miss. It is what we call a beautiful production, pictorially and dramatically." Detroit Journal: "The story of 'The Virginian' is just that thrilling type of material made to order for the movies." Detroit Free Press: "One of the finest westerns the screen has ever given us."

A November Drive

"Under the Red Robe" for Early Presentation

The Cosmopolitan Corporation announces that it will shortly present at the Cosmopolitan Theatre the greatest achievement in its history to date—a sumptuous screen version of "Under the Red Robe," from Stanley Weyman's famous romance bearing the same title. The leading characters in this drama visualize the most vivid period in the reign of Louis XIII of France.

The statement is made that "Under the Red Robe" represents the most careful regard for historical accuracy in all of the important features of settings and costuming. The picture was nine months in the making, and the total cost is upwards of $1,500,000.

All of the famous examples of the architecture of the period represented in the sets used are faithfully reproduced, it is said. The Palace Royal at Paris, formerly the palace of the great Cardinal under Louis XIII, is an instance, also the interior of the Louvre.

The cast is headed by Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens.

Davies' Film Back Again

After an absence of only three weeks, Marion Davies and "Little Old New York" will be back on Broadway. It had a run of nearly three months at the Cosmopolitan Theatre on Broadway and Columbus Circle and will be shown at the Capitol Theatre, beginning Sunday, November 11.

It is announced that its engagement was terminated at the Cosmopolitan only because of the fact that it was necessary to make way for other completed Cosmopolitan productions.

Campaign Launched for Special Pathe Series

Pathe has launched a special campaign for its current "Chronicles of America" releases in connection with the celebration of National Education Week from November 18 to 24 inclusive.

This nation-wide movement, sponsored and conducted by the United States Bureau of Education in co-operation with local school authorities all over the country, has already been widely publicized in the nation's newspapers.

"Columbus," which was released by Pathe on October 7, depicts the high lights of the colorful and adventurous career of the discoverer of America.

The second number of the series, which is also in four reels, is titled "Jamestown," and is concerned with that eventful period of American history in which the English and Spanish colonists struggled for supremacy.

These two subjects are the forerunners of additional thirty-one monthly releases being made by the Yale University Press for distribution by Pathe and picturizing the dramatic high lights of over 400 years of America's romantic development.

Cast Selected for New Mary Pickford Picture

The cast for Mary Pickford's next forthcoming production for United Artists Corporation release, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," has been completed, and, according to an announcement from Miss Pickford's studio, consists of even a greater assemblage of stage and screen stars than that which supported her in her current film success, "Rosita."

Miss Pickford in the role of Dorothy Vernon is again the grown young woman. The character, however, is wholly different from that of the little Spanish street singer so exquisitely portrayed in the attraction United Artists is now selling.

In the cast are Allan Forrest, Anders Randolph, Marc McDermott, Claire Eames, Estelle Taylor, Mme. Carrie Daumery, Eric Mayne, Lottie Pickford Forrest, sister of the star, and Malcolm Waite.

Billy Wehle Lauds Hodkinson Film

Billy Wehle, managing director of The Isis Theatre, Grand Rapids, Michigan, in a communication to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation said, relative to his showing of "The Drivin' Fool:"

"We wish to thank you for not only a good picture but a real business getter. For the first time in this theatre, since the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," a picture was applauded.

LEAD AND DIRECTOR OF "MAYTIME"
Ethel Shannon and Louis Gasnier. He is directing specials for B. P. Schulberg, President Preferred Pictures

"Maytime" Has an Ultra Novel Plot

A new story in motion pictures is a difficult thing to get, but Preferred Pictures has it in "Maytime," the Gasnier production presented by B. P. Schulberg, according to a statement by J. G. Bachmann treasurer of Preferred Pictures. "I don't think you'll find the plot of "Maytime" in any other picture, novel or play," says Mr. Bachmann, "and Gasnier, I believe, has turned out a production that will establish him as one of the five or six big directors in motion pictures.

"Phil Gleichmann, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit was so enthusiastic over 'Maytime' that he offered us a big price for the rights to show 'Maytime' in a legitimate New York house at $2.00 prices. Our contracts with exhibitors would not permit us to accept.

"No other Preferred Picture, not even 'The Virginian' has been received with such enthusiasm by our franchise holders. The Skouras Brothers in St. Louis, Ben Amsterdam in Philadelphia, Harry Charnas in Cleveland, Samuel Zierler in New York, Herman Jans in New Jersey and Harry Asher in Boston have already seen the picture and are planning big exploitation campaigns. Our other franchise holders will follow suit.

Davies Picture Debut at Capitol Makes Hit

"Little Old New York" had its first showing on Broadway at popular prices this week when it started an engagement at the Capitol Theatre. Greeted by capacity audiences at every performance on Sunday, the Marion Davies' feature gave early indications of creating a new record for the run of a film at that house.

On its opening day at the Capitol, "Little Old New York" played to 17,452 persons who paid $13,450.54 to see the photoplay. It evoked applause at every performance.

"Little Old New York" is embellished with the same musical features which marked its run at the Cosmopolitan. This includes the overture and "Little Old New York" waltz song by Victor Herbert, and the special musical score composed by William Frederick Peters, both rendered by the Capitol Grand Orchestra. Another feature is a prologue arranged by

S. L. Rothafel, presentation head. Meantime, "Little Old New York" is playing to capacity audiences at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and the California Theatre, Los Angeles. In its first week at the Roosevelt it drew $28,445. In London, it continues to be a sensational success as it begins its twelfth week.

"The Fool" Off

From the Fox New York studios comes the word that the script of Channing Pollock's stage success, "The Fool," is ready for the camera. The important task of preparing a scenario from this drama was entrusted to the capable hands of Edmund Goulding, who has completed his work not only to the satisfaction of the producer, William Fox, but with the approval of Mr. Pollock, the author of the stage play, as well.

Harry Millarde will direct.

N. Y. Mailmen Win F. B. O. Band Test

The nation wide radio band concert, held by F. B. O. in connection with the forthcoming Emory Johnson release, "The Mailman," closed this week with New York winning by a large margin. The contest was promoted among some fourteen letter carriers and postal clerks bands scattered throughout the country and was held on the evening of October 15. Prior to the contest 1,500,000 ballots were distributed, carrying the names of the band and the conditions of the contest. On the back of these was an ad for the photo production.

These ballots were distributed to every post office in the United States and were in turn distributed to people owning radio sets. In order to cast a vote the person voting had to write name and address on the ballot and mail it into the F. B. O. home office.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Paramount's thirteen-year-old star, who recently came East with his mother, Mrs. James Evans, Jr., for a few days' visit in New York, has received a telegram from his father, Douglas Fairbanks, congratulating him upon his fine performance in "Stephen Steps Out," the youngster's first picture.

The final editing for the young star's initial vehicle was completed two or three weeks ago and last week a private showing was arranged for Doug., Sr., at Hollywood. The result was the telegram, in which the father congratulated his namesake upon his achievement and added that he was proud of him.

Young Fairbanks will be present in person at the initial New York showing of "Stephen Steps Out" at the Rivoli Theatre next Sunday. The picture is an adaptation of a story by Richard Harding Davis, entitled, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent." It is a prep school tale, liberally flavored with exciting adventure which takes the young hero to Turkey. Edfrid Bingham wrote the scenario and Joseph Henabery directed.

"David Copperfield" at Cameo Given High Praise by Critics

Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield" made its bow in New York last week at the Cameo Theatre and the reviewers of the daily newspapers united in a chorus of praise. The attraction played to crowded and enthusiastic gatherings daily and was held over for a second week.

In the course of a review filling more than a half column, the New York Times critic said: "Just walk into the Cameo Theatre and see 'David Copperfield.' This is a picture which Dickens lovers will enjoy, as it is such a beautiful change from some of the stories that are bought, paid for and produced by film concerns. Take a trip to the Cameo and get a mental rest for an hour or so."

The Evening Mail said: "There came to the Cameo Theatre yesterday a motion picture so simple and dramatic in its presentation, so perfect in characterization, and so beautifully pictorial that we do not hesitate to recommend it to those who scoff at the films and to screen patrons. That picture is 'David Copperfield.'"

Said the Sun and Globe: "The film, to our way of thinking, captures the spirit, the atmosphere and the age of the story quite excellently. And those three qualities are peculiarly elusive. In our opinion this is a classic rendition of one of our favorite stories—let those who criticize it say what they may."

The Daily News said in part: "They've got a dandy 'David Copperfield' up at the Cameo this week. There's no need to say that the story is one to be enjoyed by youth and age alike, inasmuch as it follows closely Charles Dickens's widely loved novel."

Evening Journal wrote: "Quietly, with little advance notice, a picture was exhibited at the Cameo Theatre yesterday that ought to make every movie fan caper with joy. It is 'David Copperfield.' It is a revelation to find a group of players performing with such a uniformly high calibre of ability. Not only is the acting praiseworthy, but the settings, the natural views, the photography and the direction are as nearly perfect as one could reasonably expect."

Said the New York American: "Dickens' immortal 'David Copperfield' opened yesterday with a splendidly chosen cast, beautiful settings, capable actors and understanding direction."

Said the World: "The producers have selected capable players. Particularly was Micawber like an old friend suddenly come to life. It is a simple, tasteful and faithful photograph of the author's intention." The Tribune said: "There is much to enjoy in this presentation. The characters are Dickens' own to the life." The Morning Telegraph's said: "The production is treated throughout as a masterpiece should be treated—with the highest respect and honesty."

Production Finished on Pathe Feature

Pathe's feature release schedule will shortly be augmented by a new six-reel production, "Rex, King of Wild Horses," from the Hal Roach studios. The filming of this subject has just been completed and the finished picture is now being cut and titled preparatory to its shipment east about the middle of this month.

"Rex, King of Wild Horses," is the romance of an untamed stallion, written by Hal Roach.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reports that many first run houses throughout the country are booking "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," in which Glenn Hunter is starred. Among the important bookings listed are the State, New Bedford, Mass.; Jefferson, Muskegan, Mich.; Saenger Amusement Company, Shreveport, La.; Columbia, Baton Rouge, La.; Bijou, Woonsocket, R. I.

Portland, Ore., Likes This One

"Richard the Lion-Hearted" opened to exceptional business at the People's Theatre last Wednesday and is playing to capacity houses," telegraphed Jensen von Herberg, manager of the People's at Portland, Ore., to Hiram Abrams, president of Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

"Every one thinks 'Richard' fine entertainment and the audiences appreciate the fineness of the production. Congratulations to you for supplying us with a real picture," he concluded.

A Prediction

B. P. Schulberg's prediction that his screen version of Owen Wister's famous western romance, "The Virginian," would be one of the box-office sensations of the new season, is finding justification in the business which this Preferred Picture is doing in every key city played to date.

November and December Will Be Big Months for First National

November and December will prove to be the biggest months of the present year as far as First National productions go. Before the end of 1923 ten pictures, which include several heavily-campaigned specials from independent producers and from First National's own forces, will be issued. Nine of these pictures, are completed at the present moment. One is in production.

First National producers have passed through a period of intensive work during the past four months and the pictures now lined up ten weeks in advance are the result of the systematic and efficient policy under which the forces are functioning on the West Coast.

Drama predominates in the ten forthcoming First Nationals. "Flaming Youth" is a society drama adapted from one of the sensational novels of the year.

Colleen Moore is featured under the direction of John Francis Dillon.

Another novel in screen form will be Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," directed by George Fitzmaurice in Rome, with Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, Richard Bennett, Lionel Barrymore and Montague Love as principals.

Thomas H. Ince's "Anna Christie" will be the first of the plays of Eugene O'Neill, generally conceded one of America's most forceful playwrights, to reach the screen. Its principals are Blanche Sweet, William Russell and George Marion, of the original stage cast.

"The Dangerous Maid" will be Constance Talmadge's final contribution to the 1923 output.

Maurice Tourneur will offer "Jealous Husbands," a powerful dramatic story, presented by M. C. Levee. The leading characters are portrayed by Earle Williams, Jane Novak, Ben Alexander and Bull Montana.

In "Twenty One" Richard Barthelmess appears in a modern story with Dorothy Mackaill as his leading lady. John S. Robertson, director of "The Bright Shawl," is again at the helm.

Society drama with a colorful background is offered by John M. Stahl, director, in "The Wanters." The program of dramatic offerings is lightened by "Her Temporary Husband," Edward Paul-ton's stage farce.

Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" and Katherine MacDonald in "Chastity" complete the First National ten. The former is now in production under the auspices of Principal Pictures Corporation and the latter is the last of the Katherine MacDonald society drama series distributed by First National.

Universal Production a Big Hit in London

"Merry Go Round," Universal's sensational production featuring Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry, is making screen history in London, according to reports just received at the Universal home office. The London opening, in the Empire Theatre, Leicester Square, two weeks ago, was one of the most brilliant ever chronicled in the annals of British film-dom, and the success of the picture is astounding British film men.

A striking phase of the London opening was the turn-out of British notables for the premiere.

The Kerry-Philbin Jewel now is playing to capacity, according to Manager Edwin O. Weinberg of the Empire Theatre.

"Merry Go Round" will shortly move to another theatre to make room for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," scheduled to open at the Empire, November 19. Advance information from Marc Lachmann, London manager of the Victor Hugo classic, indicates that the Chaney Jewel will prove the sensation of Europe. An exploitation campaign of great magnitude is being waged by Lachmann to put over the production.

Old Time Stage Success to Be Screened by Fox

Another William Fox adaptation of notable stage plays comes in the production of "Hoodman Blind," from the success of 1885 by Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett. An actual shipwreck scene is one of the most realistic ever screened.

David Butler has the leading, masculine role, first played by Wilson Barrett in London and later by Kyrle Bellew at Wallack's Theatre in New York. Annie Robe, then played the dual role now handled by Gladys Hulette. Assisting the principals with interpretations of the various roles are Regina Connelly, Frank Campeau, Marc McDermott, Trilby Clark, Jack Walters and Eddie Gribbon. The director was John Ford.

Herbert as Major

Holmes Herbert will play the part of Major Hillgrove in John S. Robertson's production of "The Enchanted Cottage," Richard Barthelmess' next starring vehicle.

Warners Hard at It; Augment Star Roster; Motto Is Speed

During his visit from the West Coast to the Warner Offices in New York, Harry M. Warner disclosed many things interesting to exhibitors and promised a series of fine productions for next season. While in New York Mr. Warner looked over literary material and seeing successful stage productions with the idea of securing the screen rights for future Warner productions.

"I am sure that exhibitors are realizing that the Warner organization is accomplishing fine things for such an embryonic company," Mr. Warner stated. "For this season, we have already completed all of our productions for this year, including such as the Ernst Lubitsch production, 'The Marriage Circle'; the Sidney Franklin Production, 'Tiger Rose,' starring Lenore Ulric; and 'Beau Brummel,' starring John Barrymore under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

"We intend to carry on our plans with a series of elaborate productions in spite of alleged upheavals in the industry which seem to throw a scare into the less courageous. Our contract with Ernst Lubitsch calls for a series of pictures a year that will carry considerable weight with the exhibitor. At the present time Lubitsch is carrying on the necessary research work for the filmization of that stage success 'Deburau.' Sidney Franklin is another of our producers who can be reckoned on as a contributor of fine screen works under the Warner standards.

"I can promise that 'Broadway After Dark' and other Harry Rapf Productions, will come up to the finest standard of the photoplay. William Seiter is directing 'How to Educate a Wife,' from the story by Elinor Glyn. Harry Beaumont will handle the megaphone for 'Babbitt,' the screen adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel. The third picture we are now producing is 'Lovers Lane,' which Dorothy Farnum adapted from the well-known play by Clyde Fitch.

"Our long roster of stars will remain under contract and we expect to announce the acquisition of a number of new important screen personalities in the near future. We have always had the exhibitor in mind in making productions and we are continuing to make the best possible productions to bring a healthy condition to the industry and to the box-office."

Exhibitor Praises Hodkinson Film

Following is a quotation from a letter received by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from George J. Wehner of the Wehner Amusement Company of Brooklyn, New York.

"No matter what picture I bring to my theatres, it does not draw as well as the 'Hodkinson.' I have had more praise for your pictures than for any others I have run for a long time. I must say that your pictures have been giving the best satisfaction. I cannot call to mind a single complaint against any Hodkinson picture."

Four Big Productions Are for Metro Release During December

Metro announces the following big productions which are to be released during the month of December: "Fashion Row," "In Search of a Thrill," "A Wife's Romance," and "The Man Life Passed By."

"Fashion Row," Mae Murray's newest Metro picture will be released December 3. It was recently completed and is now being edited for an early Eastern premiere. Miss Murray is supported by the following cast: Earle Foxe, Freeman Wood, Mathilde Brundage, Elmo Lincoln, Sidney Franklin, Madame Rosonova, and Craig Biddle. It was directed by Robert Z. Leonard and is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro sponsored by Tiffany Productions.

"In Search of a Thrill" will be released the following week on December 10. It is Viola Dana's third Metro starring picture on the 1923-1924 Metro schedule. Miss Dana's first two pictures, "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code" were released earlier in the season, the first in September and the second in October.

"A Wife's Romance" will be released the third week, on December 17. It is a Harry Garson presentation starring Clark Kimball Young, and was adapted by Frank Beresford from the novel "La Rubia" by H. W. Roberts. It was directed by Thomas Heffron.

"The Man Life Passed By" will be released December 24. It was recently completed at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Victor Schertzinger and is from an original story for the screen written by Mr. Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn.

Producing for Warners Different Periodicals Rapf Outlines Plans Praise Hodkinson Film

During his visit to the Warner offices in New York, Harry Rapf, who is producing under the Warner banner, outlined his ideas for all future pictures which will face the camera under his general supervision. Mr. Rapf's next Warner Classic will be "Broadway After Dark," an adaptation of the play written by Owen Davis. The screen version will be thoroughly modernized, will feature an all-star cast of players and will be directed by Monta Bell, who assisted Charles Chaplin in his first serious screen achievement.

"I am trying to get away from the bizarre type of story because I think that exhibitors and their audiences are fed up on them. They are sick of seeing the impossible flashed before their eyes. What they want is a depiction of real life as they see it before them, somewhat on the O. Henry style," Mr. Rapf said. "I am also laying particular stress in producing pictures that will lend themselves to the greatest number of exploitation angles. That is, after all, what appeals to an exhibitor. He wants the kind of a picture that will appeal to his audience and he wants a picture that he can exploit in such a manner as to bring home the main points of the picture.

While in New York Mr. Rapf will make arrangements to photograph some of the famous dance palaces and after-theatre clubs for use in "Broadway After Dark."

House Takes Entire Metro Product

The Star Theatre at Austin, Minnesota, is added to the growing list of theatres arrangements for which have been made to play the entire Metro 1923-1924 schedule of big productions.

Raymon Brothers, managers of the big house, open the Metro season this week with the first presentation, "The French Doll," and are to follow this with the entire series as soon as the various productions are released.

That Hodkinson's "Puritan Passions" the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," in which Glenn Hunter is starred, is a picture that is universal in its appeal is proven by the laudatory reviews in two periodicals of widely different nature, yet both well-known in their respective fields. One is the national Jewish weekly "The American Hebrew," and the other, one of the foremost women's magazines, "The Ladies Home Journal."

"The American Hebrew" said: "The film has an especial appeal to Jews who can sympathize with the portrayal of intolerance in early New England days, when belief in diabolism and black magic held even such notables as Cotton Mather. All in all, we know of no better screen portrayal of the days of New England witchcraft."

The "Home Journal," in the department "When the Pictures are Good" stated: "Its underlying theme is that love renders all things human. . . . Glen Hunter, as Lord Ravensbane The Scarecrow, shows a depth and a poise in his acting which is new, with none of his old graces lacking."

London's Dog Film Well Booked

Pathe's picturization of Jack London's dog story, "The Call of the Wild," which was produced by Hal Roach and released by Pathe on Sept. 23rd, continues to be booked heavily by leading first-run theatres and prominent circuits in different parts of the country.

Among the important bookings closed during the past week was one with the Poli Circuit. This contract assures a showing of the Pathe feature in all the important key-cities of Connecticut, with special exploitation and presentation effects.

"Rosita" Makes Hit in Pittsburgh

"Notwithstanding the worst two days of weather Pittsburgh has had this fall our business on Mary Pickford in 'Rosita' at our State and Blackstone theatres justifies our holding the picture over in the Blackstone for a second week," read a message to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, from James B. Clark.

"Rosita" was booked to play day and date at Clark's State and Blackstone theatres, the first time anything of the kind has ever been done by these two houses.

Elmer Clifton and a company of William Fox screen players have arrived in San Antonio prepared to make the exterior scenes for "The Warrens of Virginia," which Fox is making from the famous Belasco stage success, and the Texas town made a big event of it. The creator of the motion picture version of "Six Cylinder Love" and "Down to the Sea in Ships" was received at the station by Mayor Tobin and his entourage of city officials, who welcomed the Fox company with the invitation to remain as long as they liked.

Mr. Clifton selected San Antonio as the locale for exteriors of this Civil War drama because of the wonderful natural advantages the district affords; its stately, picturesque old Colonial mansions, its beautiful southern atmosphere with rare historical landmarks, its great open spaces where battle scenes of the Union and Confederate armies will be staged, and the generally fine climatic conditions.

In the cast of "The Warrens of Virginia, who, with camera men and a big mechanical force make up the Clifton party, are Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Andrews, Harlan Knight, James Turfler, Helen Ray Kyle, George Backus, Dorothy Kingdon, Mrs. Frances Grant, Rosemary Hill and Jimmie Ward.

Assisting Mr. Clifton in making the screen scription of William deMille's stage triumph are George Richelavie, his assistant director; A. G. Penrod, cameraman, and Arthur DeTitta, Penrods aide de camera.

Martha Mansfield is playing the role of Agatha, the lead; Wilfred Lytell is the Lieutenant Burton, George Backus plays General Warren, the role created by Frank Keenan, and J. Barney Sherry is General Robert E. Lee. Rosemary Hill, a protegee of Mr. Clifton, essays the role of Betty, played on the stage by none other than Mary Pickford.

In welcoming Mr. Clifton and the Fox company, Mayor Tobin assured the director that the key to the city was his and that he could count upon all the co-operation at the command of the city administration in the use of historical cities, public places or any other of the city's resources.

Wiring to William Fox of his reception in the Southern metropolis, Mr. Clifton says: "Future looks bright here. Expect to make a picture you will be proud of. Mayor Tobin welcomed us with open arms and assured us every co-operation within his power."

The Fox party will remain in San Antonio about six weeks, within which time Mr. Clifton hopes to complete exterior work on the picture.

New Fox Special on Morris Story

"You Can't Get Away With It" is the up-to-date title of a Fox special ready for immediate release. It is taken from a story by Gouverneur Morris and should satisfy the demands of those who are asking for something different from the usual run of movie plots. The author is noted for the realistic way he treats contemporary life.

Rowland V. Lee, the director, has caught, it is said, the spirit of the Morris story and told the experience of its heroine in a series of screen episodes that reflect the character, atmosphere and uncompromising trend of events with force and true feeling.

The cast has Percy Marmont, the Mark Sabre of "If Winter Comes," in the leading male role. Others are Betty Bouton, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruz.

"Down to the Sea" Hit in Milwaukee

Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships" was given its Wisconsin premiere at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, commencing November 3. Through an extensive newspaper campaign in which the advertising predominated that of every other picture in the city, Leo Landau, manager of the Alhambra, secured such good business that he decided to hold the picture over for another week. Newspaper critics were unanimous in their lavish praise.

An elaborate presentation was given the film. It was introduced by a special prologue with unusual lighting effects. A big window display was secured on Grand Avenue, in the heart of the business section, and proved to be a fine business-getter.

This is the beginning of a campaign to be launched throughout the entire state of Wisconsin, including a simultaneous showing in Milwaukee in some twenty-five or thirty theatres.

"The Net" Is a Current William Fox Release

Presented by a cast of experienced performers the William Fox production, "The Net," from the Broadway stage success by Marjarene Thompson is directed by J. Gordon Edwards. The screen production retains the power of the original.

Barbara Castleton has the leading role. Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe are also featured. Others in the cast are: Peggy Davis, former Ziegfeld Follies star, Arthur Gordon, Cornelius F. Keefe, Helen Tracy, Elijah Nadel, Alexander Gaden, Guy Combs, Byron Douglas, Claire De Lores, Eileen Grout and William H. Tooker.

"Why Worry," a Gloom Chaser at Los Angeles

When Harold Lloyd's "Why Worry," opened in Los Angeles at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre the week of October 28th, the critics there lauded this work of Pathe's master comedian and his supporting cast.

"Don't pass this Lloyd picture if you want real entertainment," writes the Daily News critic. "Harold, as always, is clever. In 'Why Worry' he is a bit unlike his usual self and it is a relief.

His work is fast and interesting." The Examiner: "Why Worry" has thrills to be sure; but the thrills are incidental to the comedy. Harold is at his best. Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor, who directed, kept the tempo at a sustained pitch that should prove a good example to their fellow laugh-film megaphones."

Evening Express: "Why Worry" the foolishness is called. Nobody does. Everyone laughs immoderately instead."

Fox Releases for November 25 Week

The leading picture on the William Fox list of releases for the week of November 25 is "The Shepherd King." This is the J. Gordon Edwards feature that was made in the Holy Land and Egypt and which utilized the services of a large cast of principals, an army of extras and required more than a year to make. Adapted to the screen from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, it is called a marvelous reproduction of the land and history of the shepherd boy David, who became the ruler of Israel.

The story of "The Shepherd King" opens with a prologue showing Moses and the children of Israel going through Egypt on their way to Jerusalem. This vast army of people, with their camels, donkeys, horses and sheep, are pictured being led past the Pyramids and the Sphinx and only a short distance from the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen. Aside from Violet Mersereau, who plays the Princess Michal, and Gordon Mc-Edward, who plays an Egyptian, the cast consists of the pick of the Italian film actors.

"South Sea Love," the latest Shirley Mason picture, also will be ready for release on November 25. The story was written by Frederick and Fanny Hatton and was directed by David Solomon. The scenes took place among the tropical islands of the Pacific. As Dolores Medina, the clever star gives a novel and picturesque characterization.

"When Odds Are Even," a William Russell picture, will be released the same week. The story embraces the race of two rival mining companies to gain possession of a precious opal mine in Australia. The picture was directed by James Flood. Dorothy Devore is Mr. Russell's leading support.

An educational, "A Dutch Treat," completes the week's releases by Fox.

Boy Scout Audience Sees Goldwyn Film

"When you see or hear of a motion picture that is good, clean entertainment get behind it and make it worth while for the fellows who produced it and for the man who exhibits it. We hear all sorts of condemnation of bad pictures; that's all right when they deserve it, but the thing for us to do is to encourage people who put out the good stuff—so that they will feel warranted in giving us more and more."

Such was the message given by James E. West, chief national scout executive, at a special rally of scoutmasters and executives of the Boy Scout Foundation of Greater New York at Town Hall, New York, on November 8. The rally was arranged at the request of the officials of the Boy Scout Foundation in order that the 1,500 scoutmasters in the metropolitan area might see "The Steadfast Heart," a photodrama produced by Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

After Mr. West's talk Clarence Budington Kelland, author of the story; Miriam Battista and Joey Dewey, child stars of the piece, appeared. Assisted by the two children's questions, Kelland explained that he had been twenty years in the writing of this tale of how one boy, tortured and tormented by conditions of early environment, had learned to stand up for himself.

Barker Starts Production on "Women Who Wait"

With the completion of "Pleasure Mad" his second contribution to the Metro 1923-1924 season, Reginald Barker has begun active production on "Women Who Wait" which has been announced in preparation these last several weeks. Like his two former pictures this one will also be produced under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. It is a picturization of "Cape Cod Folks."

Heading the cast is Frank Keenan. Renee Adoree; Robert Frazer, Barbara Bedford, Joseph Dowling, Edward Phillips, Billy Eugene, Victor Potel, and Joan Standing have also been picked. "Cape Cod Folks" is the old

New England classic by Sarah P. McGreen which was published several years ago and was widely-read and also successful as a stage play. The book is in production under the tentative title of "Women Who Wait", but a new and permanent title is now under consideration.

"Women Who Wait" will take several months to complete. It is not unlikely that Mr. Barker may transport his entire company to Newfoundland and to New England later in order to get important scenes in the exact locale of the story. J. G. Hawks made the adaptation of "Women Who Wait" and it is being photographed by Mr. Bilburn.

Says White Way Verdict Spells Success or Doom

Are Broadway showings of motion pictures of any value to the exhibitor? This question is presented by the Fox Corporation and answered by that organization. Fox pictures of note follow the policy of first appearance along the Great White Way of Manhattan and the returns, after such productions undergo general releases show the wisdom of that plan according to the announcement. The Fox angle is this:

Foremost among the benefits to be derived by exhibitors from Broadway showings is the advertising value. To be able to tag a picture with the line: "Direct from a four weeks run on Broadway at $1.50" is a great advantage to the exhibitor. It means bigger business too.

Another phase of the benefits accrued by exhibitors from Broadway showings is the criticisms in New York newspapers. While newspapers in other cities may boast critics just as discerning, just as capable as those in the great metropolis, their judgment does not carry as much weight. These criticisms are syndicated to hundreds of newspapers throughout the country besides being quoted by many others and exhibitors have the advantage of being able to include in their advertising excerpts from the opinions of these writers who are considered the best in the land.

"Blood and Gold" Underway

Production of "Blood and Gold" is under way at the New York studios of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. Conrad Nagel has been engaged and is now on his way from the Coast to take the male lead in this picture, in which Jetta Goudal will have the feminine lead.

Scholarly Praise for Pathe's "Columbus"

A number of commendatory reports have been received at the Pathe Home Office, following the premiere showings of "Columbus" in various sections of the country. This gives promise of support to the entire "Chronicles of America" series, being produced by the Yale University Press for distribution by Pathe. Following are excerpts from some of the unsolicited letters of endorsement received:

E. E. Cortright, superintendent of the Board of Education of Bridgeport, Conn., writes: "I am unhesitatingly commending the film on 'Columbus' developed by the Yale University Press as a part of their contribution to the study of American history. Coming through this scrutiny, it definitely insures, of course, the historical accuracy." Humbert P. Pagani, Faithful Navigator, Indianapolis Fourth Degree of the Knights of Columbus, writes: "'Columbus' is entertaining, educative and instructive, and I heartily endorse it as presented through the Pathe Exchange."

The Sunday Observer of Charlotte, N. C., editorially: "The most notable departure in education on the screen, however, is that recently launched by the Yale University Press, whose players are now presenting pages of American history, the plays being staged in the original localities."

Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual instruction of the New York Board of Education, expresses the following opinion: "This is the type of film which has long been eagerly awaited by the educators of the country. As to this particular film, the story is vividly told, the acting is excellent, and the photography is of the very highest order."

"Flaming Youth" Given a Pre-Release Showing

This week for the first time in its history it is reported the New York Strand had a full house at 10:15 on a Wednesday morning. The occasion was a special invitation pre-release presentation of "Flaming Youth," Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the producer and distributor of the film, acting as host to the entire trade.

Film executives, exhibitors in the metropolitan district, newspapermen and trade journal critics filled the theatre and when the Strand orchestra took its place to render the musical score a most noteworthy audience was assembled to see the picture made from the novel by Warner Fabian.

"Flaming Youth" was purchased by First National for screen production shortly after its publication. Colleen Moore is in the featured role. "Flaming Youth" is a current First National release and is expected to have its metropolitan premiere in the near future.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Excellent

A correspondent, who asks that his name be withheld, writes from Richmond, Virginia, saying:

It seems to me that a description of the projection room of the new National Theatre, Richmond, Va., which is about to open its doors, would interest both yourself and your readers, so here goes.

To begin with, there are two Powers 6B projectors, equipped with 75-ampere G. E. high intensity lamps. There is one Powers Type E spotlight and one Powers dissolving stereopticon. Two Westinghouse 72-ampere motor generators supply current to the arcs. The switchboard consists of a black marble, dead-face 7x8 foot panel, to which the generators are connected in such way that they may be operated in parallel. This is, I believe, a radical departure in the matter of generator connection. The entire projection room equipment may be successfully operated on the output of these two generators, when connected in parallel.

Shutter Closing Device

Another device which is, I believe, the only one of its kind in use, is a motor driven magnetic clutch device for raising and lowering all port shutters with one operation. This is connected to the D. C. side of the generators in such manner that when a generator is started and any one projector switch is closed, the shutters will automatically raise. If for any reason a film fire should occur and burn a fusible link, a switch is operated (automatically, I presume.—Ed.) which releases the magnetic clutch and allows all port shutters to close instantly.

At night when the generators are shut down, the shutters will drop automatically as soon as the current is turned off.

All projectors are furnished with panels, supplied by the N. Power Company. Each panel carries an ammeter, a voltmeter and a speed-indicating instrument. In addition there is a speed-indicating instrument both for the organist and the orchestra director. The manager's office is equipped with a hard rubber panel and a mahogany panel box, upon which a voltmeter, ammeter and speed indicator are mounted.

The screening room, which is immediately at the rear of the projection room switchboard, is equipped with two Powers 6B projectors with G. E. incandescent lamp light source. There is a speed indicator for each projector and an additional speed indicator for the musical director's desk.

Other Features

The projection room is 18x33 feet (Wonder which is the 18 and which the 33.—Ed.) and it contains, besides what has been named, an enclosed rewriter, motor driven and built into the wall so that it is flush with the surface thereof. Directly beneath this rewriter is a twelve-reel film cabinet, also built into the wall. For the convenience of the projectionists there is a shower bath, toilet and wash basin, as well as telephone connections with the various parts of the theatre and with the outside world. The change-over device will be electro-magnetic, controlled by a push button at each projector. Chairs and other necessary furnishings will be supplied for the comfort and convenience of the projectionists.

Jack ReVile, who will be manager of this really wonderful house, is entirely responsible for the complete projection room equipment. He is so much interested in the projection equipment that he personally designed the port shutter device described. He took the projection room out of the hands of the architect entirely (SHAKE, friend ReVile, You're my friend for life. Most sensible thing I've known of lately.—Ed.) and I believe what he has done could not be justly criticized, at any point.

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason for this is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear and keep his hands off the name projection room, or so they think.

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "Projection Room" and disapproves "Projector Room." Up to date the following local unions have officially approved "Projection Room" as the correct term: Rock Island-Moline L. U. No. 433; Toronto, Canada, L. U. No. 173; Birmingham, Ala., L. U. No. 236; Louisville, Ky., L. U. No. 163, and Fort Wayne L. U. No. 1166. I am expecting to hear from other unions soon and already have a large number of letters from individuals. I would like to wake the S. M. P. E. up by handing them about ten thousand letters. It's your chance to make a real impression. Get busy.

I doubt if you yourself could or would find any fault in it, but Mr. ReVile is sending you an invitation to be present at the opening which I hope you will be able to accept.

In passing I might say that the gentlemen who have financial interest in this enterprise are of accord with Mr. ReVile with regard to the fact that what they will have to sell to the public will be a picture perfectly projected to the screen—which latter, by the way, is a Raven half-tone screen.

Most Unique Thing

In my opinion, the most unique thing about this entire theatre is the fact that STAGE DECORATIONS, GOLD LEAF BOX OFFICES, FIFTY-PIECE ORCHESTRAS AND THE LIKE ARE NOT WHAT THE PUBLIC REALLY PAYS TO SEE. They fully realize that these things fill their place, and are important, but that after all the picture is the thing.

The decorations and appointments of the theatre will be in keeping with strictly up to date ideas. I believe the decoration is in what is known as the Georgian period. The organ is a $25,000 Roberts-Morton.

Please treat this letter as being from one friend to another, accepting it in the spirit in which it is written—that of one projectionist to another, describing what is, to my mind, a really high class projection room and equipment.

Seems to be a mighty fine installation; but why in hallelujah didn't you name the projectionists, or are they not yet known? Have seen nothing of an invitation yet, and hardly think I can go anyhow. It's a long way from New York to Richmond, you know. There's lots of things I'd like to do, but they take time—also I'm no millionaire, and I can't afford to go gallivanting off to the corners of the earth like Laemmle and that bunch. Much obliged for the description. When things get going would like to have a photograph of the projection room and projectionists.

The magnetic port shutter control sounds good, provided the fuses are where they will "go" within one-half second of the time a fire reaches the upper loop.

My compliments to Manager ReVile. May his tribe increase.

Minnesota University

Chauncey L. Greene, College of Engineering, University of Minnesota, says:

Enclosed please find one dollar for the new lens chart. It is more than a year since I last wrote the department. In the interval I have acquired a copy of the Bluebook.

Richardson, the mere contemplation of the tremendous amount of work you must have done to produce a book covering so vast a field in such minute detail is simply staggering. Too bad it seems impractical to keep it revised and right up to date all the time.

There are several things I have wanted to write about. Am now editing them and hope to send them along soon.

As to revising the Bluebook, I expect to keep it fairly well up to date by having only five thousand printed at a time, and as often as seems necessary to eliminate dead matter and add new things. It seems to be the only practicable plan. It is now being followed out. One must, however, be very careful not to give space to things which are too new, because they may or may not be finally adopted into the industry. I've been fooled several times that way already. Glad to examine your writings when ready and to use such of them as seem to "fit in."

Fuses Blow

John Dickenson, Nashville, Tenn., has trouble with fuses blowing which he describes with quite sufficient briefness, as follows:

Am running a show shop in a small town not far from here. Take A. C. from service wires to drive a polyphase motor, which drives my generator. Have trouble with fuses blowing. Can you tell me what is the probable cause? Everything seems to be in good shape.

The probable causes which would result in blowing fuses on a polyphase motor circuit are as follows: (A) Fuses making poor contact, which induces heating and thus lowers the fuse capacity. Examine your fuse contacts and see that they are clean and tight. (B) Throwing starting switch or compensators from starting to running position too soon. Be sure the motor is up to speed before you throw the switch to running position. (C) Throwing switch into running position without its being placed in starting position at all. (D) Motor windings grounded. You may test by attaching one wire of a magneto bell to the frame of the moor and the other to the winding at some accessible point. (E) Excessive current due to low voltage, short circuits in the stator windings or single phase operation. (F) Starting switch being in running position when the current comes on after being off for a time.

I might add that a ground in the windings may blow one fuse and leave the motor operating on one phase of the line, under which condition the motor will heat, and usually make a growling noise sufficiently loud to be heard if the load is heavy. Usually, however, before there is much noise or heating the fuse carrying the active phase will blow, and thus stop the motor entirely.

Warning

If your motor heats unduly, test ALL fuses. Heating of polyphase motors is sometimes caused by the fuses of all phases blowing and stopping the motor. When it starts again after the replacement of the fuse of one phase only, it is assumed that all is well, whereas in reality the motor is operating on single phase, or perhaps on two phases, if a three-phase motor.

Your information is very meagre, hence I can only give you some of the usual general causes for fuse blowing with polyphase motors.

It Is to Laugh

An assistant projectionist in the Buckeye State says:

Recently I had an experience with a couple of New York "operators" who were here with the "Covered Wagon," which this theatre had the honor of showing the first time it was presented in the state of Ohio. % % ??!-!XX")??!! If I wrote all I think about them it would require at least one extra stamp to send this letter; also it would waste good paper. The senior of the twain said he had been "operating" in New York (What hospital?—Ed.) since 1903. I asked him, in an innocent sort of way, if he happened to have made the acquaintance of a man named Richardson. In the midst of the raving which followed, he made one lucid remark, viz.: "Why, if he came into your theatre and you happened to have a little brown edge on your picture he'd razz h out of you!"

Guess you must have caught him that way. If so I sincerely hope you did!

Well, brother, I am not in the least worried about the bellowing of such cattle. I value the friendship and respect of the really good men very highly. The others I don't bother my head about in any degree. New York has many high-class men; also she has some of the worst barnacles the profession is afflicted with.

That sort of man has no earthly use for me. He outrages audiences with his "brown edges" and similar punk work and they are helpless, unless a "Richardson" happens to be present. Then it is just awful because he is in position to raise hallelujah with him, and proceeds to do it.

As to Mazda

C. S. Shaw, one of the owners of the Le Boeuf Theatre, Waterford, Pa., says:

Am considering the installation of Mazda for projection. I get both good and bad reports about them, and do not wish to put them in unless I can be reasonably certain that they will prove satisfactory.

I have Powers machine (Projector, I presume you mean. The Powers company make other "machines" besides projectors.—Ed.), a screen 9x12 and a projection distance of sixty feet. I had the current tested recently. It varied from 107 to 113 volts, alternating current, sixty cycle, I believe. Can you give me any information or advise me in this matter?

One reason why you received both good and bad reports is because some Mazda installations are made under conditions where satisfaction may be expected, if the lamps be intelligently handled. The lamps are well managed and the results are excellent and satisfactory.

Other installations are made under conditions where there was no reason to suppose that Mazda would give satisfaction; also the lamp may have been unintelligently handled, which makes a very bad mess indeed.

As I understand you (I suppose your picture is 9x12, through you did not say so—a screen usually is considerably larger than the picture, you know) your conditions are such that you may expect very excellent results from Mazda. Don't imagine, however, that you can instal Mazda equipment haphazard, turn on the light and get even half-way decent results. It can't be done. Mazda is a temperamental son-of-a-gun, and must be treated as it wants to be treated or it just won't perform to your satisfaction, but if you, under your conditions, instal it, get a Bluebook of Projection and carefully and religiously follow the directions therein contained for handling Mazda and I am sure you will get uniformly better results than you now get with A. C. at the arc—decidedly better. Remember, though, that accuracy in adjustment is the thing that counts with Mazda AND do NOT force your lamps above their rated capacity by allowing an excess of current to pass through them. You can get all kinds of light that way, yes—while the lamp filament lasts, but that won't be for long.

Summed up, my advice is that you can get excellent results with Mazda, provided you handle it as it should be handled, and must be handled, to get maximum results.

His Difficulty

An Ohio projectionist writes:

Here is my difficulty and my line-up. Picture, 16 feet; projection distance, 120 feet; angle of projection, eight degrees and thirty minutes; screen tilted so as to be perpendicular ular to optical axis; projection lenses are nominally 6.5 inches E. F. and their working distance five inches; free diameter of back factor, 2.25 inches.

These lenses were purchased eight years ago, at which time they were supposed to be the best there was. They give perfectly sharp definition at either the center or corners of picture, and are quite free from flare—lack of contrast between whites and blacks—but—and here's the rub—they have a pronounced curvature of field. If a perfectly flat piece of ground mica is inserted in place of the film at the aperture, it is found that the lens can be so focused that a tiny circle a foot or two in diameter in the center of the screen is all that can be called perfectly sharp as to definition. If then, the lens be racked back from 1-16 to 3-32 of an inch, all four corners will be focused with exquisite sharpness, but the center will not be sharp.

Naturally the effect is not so pronounced when the film is in, but it nevertheless is there, and operates to injure the picture. The house is long and narrow. It seats 700 on the main floor, or a total of about 980 including the balcony. It is possible to so divide the focus that anywhere from fifty to sixty feet or more from the screen the picture seems acceptably sharp, but this still leaves about 200 seats at the front from which the picture lacks sharpness of definition to the critical eye. Whether for this reason or because in winter the front of the house is apt to be a bit cooler than the rear, most of our patrons avoid it, though some sit there regularly.

Wants to Know

What I want to know is, what may be expected in the way of flatness of field from the present-day projection lens? In other words, can you give us some standard by comparison with which the projectionist who has no access to a variety of lenses may judge of the performance of his own, always understanding that no lens can be expected to give good results unless it be intelligently handled?

Do you think that in my case the installation of new lenses, costing around sixty dollars each, would be a paying proposition? I am decidedly in favor of it, but my manager is not one to readily invest $120 to replace equipment which has been giving satisfactory service for eight years. By "satisfactory service" I mean that no one has ever kicked on the lack of definition. I could of course sharpen the definition by masking down the lens diameter, but that would mean prohibitive increase in current expense and, since the capacity of my M. G. set is limited, probably some decrease in screen illumination. For various reasons I think this letter had better be anonymous.

Frankly, I don't like those anonymous letters, though I know it is often, for any one of several reasons, necessary, or at least advisable.

Your question resolves itself into this simple query: Will it pay to work improvement in the screen result in a house having nearly a thousand seats to sell each show? Probably your manager has not considered it in just that light. For the information of your manager, the projection lenses (three of them, or is it four—I forget) in the Capitol Theatre, New York City, cost some HUNDREDS of dollars each. I do not at the moment remember the exact figure. Mr. Rothafel ordered these lenses to replace other lenses which also were high priced—each of them being worth MORE than both your present lenses or those you would get for sixty dollars, though none of his patrons had even dreamed of "kicking." Mr. Rothafel is so successful a showman that the Capitol made him a present of a bonus of ten thousand dollars last year, hence his judgment must be pretty good in most things.

As to whether or no it would be a paying proposition to replace those eight-year-old lenses, all I can say is that if I were manager of that theatre I would order new lenses BY WIRE, and have them sent special delivery.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Eastern Zone A. M. P. E. D. A. Holds Convention. Apple Would Eliminate Store Space. He Asks the World.

THE eastern zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America held a most enjoyable convention and two banquets at the Hotel Astor, November 12 and 13. President Oldnow, whom it was hoped would be in attendance, was obliged to send his regrets, but Secretary Barth was there in full force and explained in detail the benefits conferred by membership in the organization, and spoke hopefully of progress already made and of achievements yet to come.

Decision on many important matters was deferred owing to the desire of the association that the decisions made should be final and several important questions, which were brought before the association, were referred to committees appointed to take action on same.

Mr. Green, of the Precision Machine Company, expressed his views on the undesirability of charging a rental on loan mechanisms while projectors were being repaired, at least for the present. As a reason for this opinion on his part, he cited the fact that projector manufacturers were several weeks behind in repair work and that he did not believe exhibitors should be penalized for the delay.

Mr. Griffin, of the Nicholas Power Company, addressed the meeting with a clear and logical statement of the evils of the utilization for repair purposes of parts other than those manufactured by the projection machine builders.

The one jolt to the perfect harmony which prevailed at the meeting was provided by Mr. Katz, of the Crown Motion Picture Supply Company, who spilled the beans by inquiring "what in a repair man was going to do when he could not get a trade discount on parts from the projector manufacturer and exhibitors were yelling for quick repairs."

This is the second time that Mr. Katz, who is the official enfant terrible of the A. M. P. E. D. A., has asked embarrassing questions at the wrong time.

ON another page, the owner of Troy's American Theatre adds to the wealth of experience which exhibitors have been contributing to this department during the past month.

It will be noted that Mr. Apple would eliminate the store space which he is now renting out and devote increased area to house seating.

While at first sight, this might appear to constitute an indictment against the practice which is quite common, of devoting a portion of the floor space of moderate sized houses to rental purposes, with a view of diminishing the overhead, it actually proves that Mr. Apple is a good swimmer and does not need the life preserver which he wore when making his plunge into the industry.

Not every new house could be increased both in area and seating capacity to advantage within three years of its building and we still hold that for the average small house provision for reducing the overhead by rentals for store purposes is a wise financial precaution.

THE following inquiry is just another illustration of the fact that when anyone wants to know where to get anything, they come to the Moving Picture World for the information:

Denver, Colo., Nov. 7, 1923.

Chalmers Publishing Co.,
New York City.

Can you give us the name of the company who manufactures the "Fulco Gold Seal 2 in 1 Film Cement?" We would like to have the address of this company.

Very truly yours,
FORD OPTICAL COMPANY.
W. R. Yale.

Yes, Mr. Yale, we can tell you. The article in question is built by the E. E. Fulton Company, 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Incidentally, these people had a page advertisement in a recent issue of one of our contemporaries, which you must have overlooked.

FRED J. BIRD, for some time past with the Independent Movie Supply Company, of New York, City, has transferred his allegiance to the Raven Screen Company, 165 Broadway, New York City.

Mr. Bird, who was connected with the Nicholas Power Company for many years and left the late Motion Picture Equipment Corporation to go to the Independent Movie Supply Company, knows the equipment business from top to bottom. We don't know whether to extend our congratulations to Bird or to his new boss, but we are going to play safe and do both.

THE HAMILTON'S PROJECTION PROGRAM EXHIBIT

The Hamilton Palace Illustrates Program Achieved in Projection

EVIDENCE of what has been accomplished in the way of mechanical achievement in the art of projection, was furnished recently by the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

During an industrial celebration staged in that city, in which this theatre figured conspicuously, the management displayed in the lobby one of the early types of motion picture projectors, mounting it alongside a new 1924 model Simplex similar to one of the three which this house proposes to shortly install.

The comparative display, which is shown in the illustration, served to vividly exemplify to the public in general, and the movie fans in particular, that the present day projection equipment is as much of an improvement over that of bygone years as is the modern twin six over the old horse-drawn chaise.

The Ancient Amet Magniscope

The ancient projector used in the exhibit was the Amet Magniscope, made in 1898 by a man named Amet, who resided in Milwaukee and said to be among the best devices available for projection at that time. The film capacity was about two hundred feet as compared to two thousand feet at one loading of the latest style Simplex.

The early model projector did not carry fire-proof containers, magazines for films, the film being exposed to the sparks of the electric arc, and when the film came from the projector it was usually run into a sack or can, while the Simplex has fire-proof film magazines as well as a fire-proof housing around the arc.

The early model projectors carried no casings whatever, but were exposed to all the hazardous factors then recognized. They were supplied with gears constructed from a very cheap and inferior grade of brass, inaccurately cut by hand. Most mechanics of that day were unable to intelligently grasp the idea of motion picture projection, and comparatively few possessed the ability to assemble a projector so that it would be operative.

The earlier projectors were built minus a base. They were usually placed on a table or other improvised bases.

Illumination Methods Compared

The illumination was derived from two small carbons, each about the size of a lead pencil, and the energy consumed was approximately 15 amperes at 50 volts, or, roughly about 750 watts. The length of the carbon was somewhere in the neighborhood of three or four inches. The Simplex shown has a carbon arc lamp with a capacity of 200 amperes at a pressure of 50 volts, or approximately 10,000 watts, these figures being based on hourly consumption.

It is interesting to note that the first Amet Magniscope was built without an illumination source, and it was necessary for those desiring to view the picture to look through a small aperture, which was a part of the mechanism. In this manner but one person could view the picture at a time.

Later, the Bausch and Lomb Optical Co., developed a projection lens made up of a single glass. This gave a very indistinct picture, which caused much detail and high lights to be lost entirely. This lens served for a number of years, until finally a lens was developed with four factors, each one being ground to as near a perfect surface as human possibilities would permit. The price jumped from somewhere around $10.00 apiece for the single lens to $60.00 and $100.00 for the four element lens.

Another interesting comparison of the ancient and modern machines lies in the fact that the old ones made so much noise that they could be heard for a considerable distance, while the new models are practically noiseless.

This in itself is a vast improvement when one stops to consider that one could not fully enjoy a musical program which was offered in connection with the picture, by reason of the noise from the projection room being so plainly audible.

Burgert Reports Good Business in Florida

W. C. Burgert, of the Tampa Photo & Art Supply Company, of Tampa, Florida, reports good business in the picture theatre supply line. During the past two months he has sold complete equipment, including projectors and Heywood-Wakefield chairs, to the following Florida theatres:

The Sunset Theatre, Ft. Lauderdale; the Del Ray Theatre, Del Ray; the Liberty Theatre, Lake Worth; the Dixie Theatre, Ocala; the Avalon Theatre, Avon Park; the New Ware Theatre, Bartow; the New Imperial Theatre, Tampa; the Hillsboro Amusement Company, Plant City, and the Maceo Theatre, Tampa.

New Wisconsin House Will Open on Feb. 22

What it is claimed will be Milwaukee's finest and largest theatre, the Wisconsin, will open its doors to the public on Washington's birthday, if present plans are carried out. Although there still is a great job ahead despite the fact that the outside work is rapidly nearing completion, James A. Keough, of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, has announced that February 22 has been chosen as the tentative date for the opening.

In making the announcement, Mr. Keough gives official confirmation to the reports that have been prevalent for some time that the Saxons are to operate the new Milwaukee house, although this was at first stoutly denied.

In anticipation of the interior work that will now be concentrated upon, a conference has been called for next week at which contracts for an organ, draperies, sign and other furnishings will be let.

One of the features of the building will be a roof garden which will provide Milwaukee with what is promised to be the finest and largest dance floor in the city.

Other Houses Building for Saxe

While work is being rushed upon the Wisconsin, another crew of workmen is engaged in erecting the New Modjeska for the Saxe interests which will be to the south side of the city what the Wisconsin will be to the downtown section. It is hoped to complete the roof of the New Modjeska before the cold weather sets in and to have the entire house completed at approximately the same time as the Wisconsin.

The Saxe interests expect within the next three months to have completed the Janesville Theatre upon which construction was temporarily halted more than a month ago when a wall collapsed. Building operations there are going on while an investigation of the accident is being made.

Apple Would Shift the Lobby Doors Use Steam Heat and Banish Stores

If Benjamin Apple, owner of the American Theatre, in Troy, N. Y., ever builds another house it's a safe bet that he will profit from the experience which he has gained during the past three years from his present theatre. So far as location is concerned Mr. Apple is perfectly satisfied.

His house is in the business center of the city, and it might be said right here that Mr. Apple is a firm believer in the advisability of downtown houses in cities of from 50,000 to 75,000 inhabitants. He contends that the people naturally flock downtown on a night or a holiday, and, furthermore, that these houses stand a far better chance than even a nearby residential one in catching the transient trade.

But when it comes to interior arrangements of his theatre that is an entirely different question. Unfortunately, the architect who designed Mr. Apple's house made a rather bad mistake in that the doors opening from the lobby into the house permit not only light from the lobby to strike the screen, but also cause a stiff draught to strike patrons in the rear of the house as well as along the aisles, the doors opening directly opposite the aisles themselves.

Would Change Position of Lobby Doors

"My lobby is about twenty by twenty," said Mr. Apple in discussing his house with a World representative. "I do not like too large a lobby because if a picture is not drawing well it gives a barren appearance. Neither do I like too small a lobby, for that means that, on a rainy night, many people, if forced to stand outdoors in line, will go elsewhere. Unfortunately, my doors open directly opposite the aisles, and as a result light strikes my screen at very frequent intervals; and if it's a cold night a draught hits the patrons sitting along the aisles and some of those in the rear. I have placed curtains as windbreakers in the rear, but, of course, such would be impossible across the aisles.

Prefers Steam Heat

"My projection throw is about 105 feet, and appears to be about right for a twelve by sixteen screen. If I built another house I would use hot-water heat in preference to hot air. I am well satisfied that ventilation is absolutely necessary to the success of a theatre these days, and the blower system which I now have seems to meet with the situation, and I would not change it unless I used hot water, and then brought about ventilation by some one of the modern appliances.

Would Eliminate Stores

"All my lights are controlled from the projection room, which I think is advisable, although we have a main switch in the office as well. I made the mistake when I built this house of putting in a store next door to help meet the overhead. I would not do this again, but would depend upon the success of my house to meet the expenses and provide the profit, and in doing that I would increase my seating capacity by about 200, making my house one of a thousand seats rather than eight hundred.

"I have a fifty-foot frontage at the present time. I would prefer one of sixty feet. Pictures are here to stay, and, to my way of thinking, a theatre should be so well managed that it will not be obliged to look to this or that, such as small stores, pop-corn stands, and similar schemes, to make it a paying proposition—at least a business center house in a city of 75,000 population."

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

While the week ending November 10 brought the incorporation of one motion picture company, capitalized at more than a million dollars, there was a decided slump in the number of companies entering the industry in New York State, the records in the state's corporation bureau showing that but three companies of this character had been chartered.

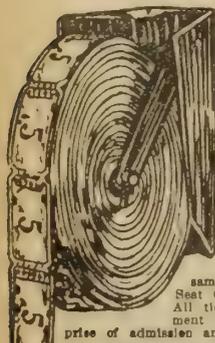

These companies included the Bray Screen Products, Inc., capitalized at $1,800,000, and the 180th Street Amusement Corporation, capitalized at $60,000, the amount of the capitalization of the Johnny Arthur Pictures, Inc., not being stated in the papers as filed. All of the new concerns will be located in New York City.

1,186,742 persons have seen it in New York, London, Chicago and Los Angeles since its world premiere on August 1, 1923 at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York.

—then it started at popular prices in the Capitol Theatre.

102,424 persons saw it last week at the Capitol—60,000 persons had to be turned away last week at the Capitol.

Its success in New York has made the hardest boiled showmen in the business sit up and gasp.

Its success in other cities is also nothing short of sensational.

—6th crowded week at Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

—13th crowded week at Empire Theatre, London.

—2nd crowded week at Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington.

—2nd crowded week at Imperial Theatre, San Francisco.

Other crowded engagements to follow next week in Detroit, Seattle, Milwaukee, Baltimore.

TELEGRAM FROM WASHINGTON, D. C.

Little Old New York opened today at Moore's Rialto playing to absolute capacity every performance. Crowds turned away every show. Picture is the talk of the town. This showing more than remarkable in face of such opposition as Hunchback of Notre Dame, Harold Lloyd Why Worry, Chaplin's Woman of Paris, and Ziegfeld's Follies. Monday night picture will show to the most distinguished audience in the country's history. Ex-President Wilson, members of the Cabinet, foremost Senators, foreign Diplomats have sent acceptances.

Here are the actual facts.

It is an unforgettable picture.

It is Marion Davies' greatest achievement.

When she jumped into "Pat O'Day" clothes she jumped right into the hearts of every man, woman and child lucky enough to see the picture.

She has the support of the greatest cast ever assembled for a motion picture.

A fine picture plus pep - and look at

Just because the Garden Theatre management, in Paterson, N. J., knew they had a fine picture in "The Wanters"—do you suppose they were content to sit back and let the picture do the work?

Nothing doing. They knew, as all real hustling showmen know, that an excellent picture possessing good public selling possibilities, such as are found in "The Wanters," means greater business and larger net profits provided—one takes advantage of the picture's possibilities and exploits them.

They told Paterson about the "The Wanters" and the results obtained more than justified their judgment as showmen.

What they did in Paterson— you can do.

Nine days in advance of the showing they used 1000 snipes, 14x42, with a teaser title—"Are You a Wanter?"

Seven days in advance—they made a tie-up with the leading paper with a "Wanters" solution problem, the paper giving a quarter of a page daily to this. Prizes being given to the best answers to the question—"What do you want?"

Seven days in advance—a teaser campaign connected with prominent people in Paterson. "Mr., you are a famous Wanter by the people of Paterson for the purpose of obtaining more schools."

Regular newspaper advertising started five days in advance with twelve inches—increasing daily to fifty on Sunday and twenty on opening day. Ten outside papers, covering the outlying districts around Paterson—42 inches.

Three days in advance—formed a "Wanters Club" by enlisting pupils of different schools. Each member being presented with a button reading: "R. U. A. Wanter?"

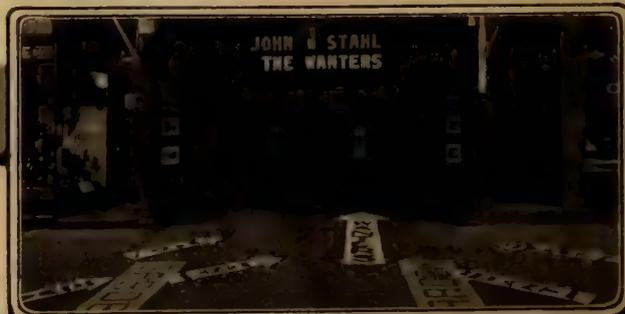

Lobby display—marquee cutouts and local store tie-ups completed the campaign.

STAHL ON "WANTERS"

The story of "The Wanters" is just what the title implies. It tells of the wanters in the world and there are millions of them. Who they are. What they want. You see them all in this picture. John Stahl could not have picked a better public appeal theme, and like "The Dangerous Age" he has treated it boldly with that human touch that makes big pictures.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

A Thing or Two

EVERY now and then it does us good to get away from the ponderous discussions and the impressive statistics and remember that this is the moving picture business. Not a brand new business—but, in many respects and in many sections, just the same old picture business, growing slowly, improving perceptibly, but still the same business fundamentally.

For example:

A Famous Players salesman walked into an Ohio town the other day. After some general discussion the exhibitor launched into a tirade against the prices of the "bigger and better" pictures.

"Why," he snorted, "I'll bet when you come back here to sell me 'The Covered Wagon' you'll ask fifty dollars or more.

"And you know I never paid more than ten dollars for any Warren Kerrigan picture in my life."

* * *

AN exhibitor in a small town in Illinois had a half hour or so to spare so he picked up his trade paper.

He found some interesting reading. An interview with Mr. Whoozis on "Service"—flowing phrases and heartrending sentiment. It tickled our friend the exhibitor because his attraction for the day was a picture from the Whoozis organization.

A stirring action drama of the West—the posters were out front, the lobby decorated with photos. The exhibitor is already counting his profits—because his town sure loves "action."

He will tell you: "When I have a society drama they stay at home with the radio."

The "boy-of-all-work" enters lugging the film can that has just been dropped at the station. A few minutes examination of the reels and then he informs the boss:

"They switched on us! Sent us 'Lady Cholmondeley's Fan.'"

The exhibitor looks at the trade paper interview before him. "Service! Aw, hell!"

A HIGH-POWERED salesman from one of our biggest distributors "put something over" about this time a year ago in a certain fair sized city.

He sold "Group XYZ" at three hundred dollars a picture—so far over quota that even the manager admitted he was good.

The exhibitor registered a loss on every picture in the group. When the same salesman returned this September he was told, "I can't pay you more than two hundred dollars a picture. That is my top." The opening was there to compromise at two fifty.

"Nothing doing!" snapped the salesman. "Three hundred or nothing."

The distributor's productions are showing this year in the Moose Hall down the street—at one hundred and thirty a picture.

* * *

BUT, speaking of the Moose Hall—here is another thought. And the incident cited is by no means exceptional.

A certain exhibitor in the Pittsburgh territory "had his top figure" and wouldn't budge above it for "The Birth of a Nation." He ran the only theatre in town—which gave him the right to laugh.

The result was that his patrons were fed some rather poor—and old—film entertainment.

The cure didn't come from within the industry. It was provided by the local druggist who saw an opportunity—and who was probably pretty tired of rotten pictures himself.

We met a salesman who was present the night the cure was first in evidence. Here is his story:

"When I got in the town and saw the Elk's clubhouse flaunting posters on a current worthwhile picture you could have knocked me over with a feather. But as the evening progressed and I watched the steady stream of patrons who actually seemed to be HUNGRY for good pictures—I knew that our old friend the exhibitor had a fight on his hands."

* * *

Yes, it is still the moving picture business.

Middle West Exhibitors Pick Hays as Admission Tax Leader

REPRESENTATIVES of exhibitor organizations in Central Western States conferred this week with Will H. Hays. This conference was the outgrowth of a meeting of heads and directors of these organizations at French Lick, Ind., on November 14 and 15, when it was decided that a concerted effort would have to be made to bring about the repeal of the admission tax. It was the opinion of the exhibitor leaders that the amusement business is severely handicapped by the admission tax, which they also view as a burden upon the general public to whom they are dependent. The visiting representatives chose H. M. Richey of Detroit as their secretary. Mr. Richey will remain in New York City for an indefinite period. The admission tax was discussed from all angles at the French Lick meeting and it was agreed that every effort must be made to have it done away with. It was the unanimous opinion of all exhibitors present that Mr. Hays should be asked to take charge of the situation and begin action for a repeal of the tax.

The following exhibitors telegraphed Mr. Hays their request that he act as leader and pledged their co-operation as a committee appointed at the French Lick meeting: Joseph R. Denniston, Michigan; Ludwig Siegel, Illinois; N. A. Cole, Texas; H. B. Varner, North Carolina; Jake Wells, Virginia; Harry Crandall, Washington, D. C., "per Wells"; R. G. Liggett, Kansas, "per S. A. Handy"; Gustave Schmidt, Indiana; W. A. Steffes, Minnesota, chairman.

Mr. Hays telegraphed William A. Steffes, at French Lick, that he would be glad to "consult by phone or in person at a very early date with your committee or with a committee of, say, three whom you might elect for that purpose, and in such consultation decide as to the best way to proceed."

Among the exhibitors from Indiana who attended the meeting were Gustave G. Schmidt, Edward H. Bingham, A. C. Zaring, Frank Rembusch and Charles Olsen, of Indianapolis; J. N. Wyckoff and S. P. Katzenbach, of Terre Haute; Nat Bernstein, of Michigan City; J. B. Stine, of Clinton; Frank Heller, of Kokomo; S. S. Schauer, of Valparaiso; W. F. Easley, of Rushville; Billy Connors, of Marion; E. M. Eggleston, of Seymour; O. I. Demaree, of Franklin, and Arthur Jackson, of Crawfordsville.

Other states represented at the meeting were Minnesota, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Texas, Wisconsin and Virginia. The other exhibitors present included Al Steffes, of Minneapolis; H. M. Richey and J. R. Dennison, of Michigan; Jake Wells, of Virginia; Joseph Rhode, of Wisconsin; H. A. Cole, of Texas; Judge Handy, of Kansas, and Ludwig Siegal, Glenn Reynolds, J. T. Dittman, Ben L. Bervey, G. E. Johnson and Julius Lamb, of Illinois.

Allan Holubar Dies

Los Angeles, Nov. 20.

Allan Holubar, the well known film director, died this morning after an illness of six weeks. He was filming scenes at Nashville, Tenn., getting atmosphere shots for his first of three pictures to be released by Metro, when he first became ill. Upon returning to Los Angeles he was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital and showed such a decided improvement that he went to his home after having a major operation performed. He had a relapse yesterday and began to weaken.

Holubar was 34 years old and was born in San Francisco. He leaves a wife, Dorothy Phillips, and a young daughter. His chief film successes included "Heart of Humanity," "Man, Woman and Marriage," "Hurricane's Gal" and many others. It was while appearing in Henry Savage's Play, "Every Woman," that he met his wife.

Calgary Citizens Form Company; Through Foreclosure Get Palace
for $306,000

As the outcome of the foreclosure of a mortgage the National Theatres, Limited, is now the owner of Allen's Palace Theatre, in Calgary, Alberta. The house had been in the hands of a receiver. The purchase price totaled $306,000, according to a report coming from Calgary.

The first mortgage of $176,000 was held by the National Trust Company. The remainder, the report states, seems to have been made up in a second mortgage of the combined claims of a group of Calgary creditors, city taxes and mechanic's liens.

The Palace will be run as an independent house.

Test Theatre Curtains

District of Columbia Commissioners
Contemplate Changes

Washington, D. C.—Fire resistance of fire curtains used in theatres is being investigated by the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, at the request of the District Commissioners, who contemplate changes in the regulations relative to theatre proscenium curtains.

Certain tests for strength when subjected to fire temperatures were made by the bureau some years ago, following the Iroquois Theatre fire in Chicago, which developed the fact that neither the plain asbestos cloth nor that reinforced with brass wires interwoven with the cloth were entirely satisfactory when subjected to temperatures of 1700 degrees Fahrenheit, it is stated in a preliminary report from the bureau. These findings show that cloth using alloy wires afford sufficient strength for the service required.

Binderup Wins in U. S. Supreme Court; Movement of Films Is Interstate Trade

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The movement of films from a producer or distributor to an exhibitor is declared by the United States Supreme Court to be in interstate commerce despite the fact that actual delivery may be made through a branch office of the former located in the same state as the latter. This decision was announced by the Supreme Court on November 19 in the case of Charles G. Binderup versus Pathe Exchange, Inc., of Nebraska, the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Company et al., and was handed down by Justice Sutherland. Of equal importance was the court's announcement that the forcing out of business of Binderup by the film men, as alleged by him, was a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Both these points were a reversal of the decisions of the courts below, and the case is remanded to the District Court for further proceedings in conformity with the Supreme Court opinion.

Binderup owned a picture theatre at Minden, Neb., and operated as lessee theatres in other places, to all of which, including his own, he supplied moving pictures and advertising matter connected therewith. In addition, he was in the business of selecting and distributing to a circuit of picture theatres, films and advertising matter accompanying them, under agreements with the various operators, some twenty or more in number, in various parts of the city. In other words, he operated a booking agency.

Some of the distributors entered into contracts with Binderup, by the terms of which they leased pictures to him, it is alleged, with the right and license to display them publicly at the theatre or theatres named. The individual defendants named were managers of branch offices or agents for the various distributors in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Minnesota. It is stated that the contracts by their terms were deemed made in New York, and were to be construed according to the laws of that state and provided that deliveries should be made to the exhibitor from the Omaha branch offices.

The complaint further alleges that these distributors controlled the distribution of all films in the United States, and that the films cannot be procured from others. The Omaha Film Board of Trade is a Nebraska corporation, organized for the purpose of promoting good will among those engaged in the picture business and for other purposes, its membership being limited to one representative from each company or person engaged in the film business.

It is alleged that the exhibitor's business was successful and profitable, and that the cupidity of the distributors being thereby aroused, some of them requested a share of his patronage and, upon his refusal, made threats to put him out of business by underbidding and supplying the various theatres constituting his circuit; that the Omaha Film Board of Trade was organized for the purpose of enabling these distributors to control prices and dictate terms to their patrons in Nebraska and other States.

It is further alleged that the business of the exhibitor had grown to large proportions; that he was procuring films from some of the members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, but had refused to buy from others, and that thereby a spirit of hostility was aroused against him on the part of the latter, who thereupon brought great pressure to induce those with whom he was dealing to cease doing business with him; that all the defendants in error thereupon illegally combined and conspired in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states, with the purpose and intent of preventing him from carrying on his said business, and with the intent to ruin him; that they caused false charges to be made against him before the Film Board of Trade and without his knowledge or an opportunity to be heard, placed him upon its blacklist, of which notice was given to distributors, who thereupon refused to transact further business with him; that those distributors who were not members of the Film Board of Trade co-operated with and approved the action of the board and conspired with others to ruin the business, credit and reputation of the exhibitor; that in furtherance of the combination and conspiracy the distributors have ever since refused to deal with him or furnish him with film service and have caused the unexpired contracts which he held with some of the distributors to be illegally and unlawfully cancelled, and that he has ever since been and still is deprived of such service, all of which allegations are recited in the opinion just handed down.

As the result of the foregoing, the court points out, the exhibitor asked judgment for three times the amount of damages which he has suffered as alleged. The jury trial resulted in a decision in favor of the exchanges, and the Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment for want of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of the United States does not concur in the findings of the courts below, and accordingly remanded the case to the latter for further proceedings, which means that the court will have to decide in favor of Binderup, in conformity with the Supreme Court's findings on the points in contest.

$750,000 for Binderup?

OMAHA, Nov. 21.

Charles G. Binderup hopes to collect $750,000 from his victory in the United States Supreme Court, according to his lawyers, Baxter and Van Deusen, of this city.

"Our client must now show damage," said Irving F. Baxter. "We can show damage of $250,000 and that, because the law awards three times the amount of damage, means we are entitled to recover $750,000.

"The immediate effect of this decision of the United States Supreme Court is to send our case to trial on its merits, but it also affects business in various other lines. In fact, it is almost revolutionary in its effect on business."

The Court remarks in its decision that the distributors acting separately could have refused to furnish films to Binderup without becoming amenable to the provisions of the anti-trust act, but in this case it is alleged that they combined and conspired together to prevent him from leasing from any of them. The illegality consists, not in the separate action of each, but in the conspiracy and combination of all to prevent any of them from dealing with the exhibitor. The Court states that the contracts with these distributors contemplated and provided for transactions in interstate commerce. The business which was done under them—leasing, transportation and delivery of films—was interstate commerce. The alleged purposes and direct effect of the combination and conspiracy, the Court states, was to put an end to these contracts and future business of the same character and "restrict, in that regard, the liberty of a trader to engage in business," and, as a necessary corollary, to restrict interstate trade and commerce, in violation of the anti-trust act.

"The film contracts were between the residents of different states and contemplated the leasing by one to the other of a commodity manufactured in one state and to be transported to and used in another," the Court relates. "The business of the distributors of which the arrangement with the exhibitor here was an instance, was clearly interstate. It consisted of manufacturing a commodity in one state, finding customers for it in other states, making contracts with them, and transporting the commodity leased from the state of manufacture into the state of the lessees. If the commodity were consigned directly to the lessees, the interstate character of the commerce throughout would not be disputed.

"Do the circumstances that in the course of the process the commodity is consigned to a local agency of the distributor, to be by that agency held until delivered to the lessee in the same State, put an end to the interstate character of the transaction and transform it into one purely intrastate? We think not. The immediate delivery to the agency did not end and was not intended to end the movement of the commodity. It was merely halted as a convenient step in the process of getting it to its final destination. The general rule is that where transportation has acquired an interstate character it continues at least until the load reaches the point where the parties originally intended that the movement should finally end."

The Court refers to a case of Swift & Company versus the United States where it was held that where cattle were consigned for sale from a place in one state, with the expectation that the transit would end after purchase in another state, the only interruption being that necessary to find a purchaser at the stockyard, and this was a typical, constantly recurring course, the whole transaction was one of interstate commerce, and the purchase a part and incident of it. It further appeared from that case that Swift & Company were also engaged in shipping meat to their respective agents at the principal markets in other states for sale by such agents in those markets to dealers and consumers; and these sales were held to be part of the interstate transaction upon the ground "that the same things which are sent to agents are sold by them and * * * some at least of the sales are in the original packages. Moreover the sales are by persons in one state to persons in another." This was held to be a parallel case.

Court Decrees Omaha's Empress Must Be Surrendered to Loew

THE World Realty Co., Omaha, owner of most of the larger picture houses in Omaha, which recently announced it had purchased the Empress, another of the large houses here, must give up that theatre to Marcus Loew, of New York, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, and head of Loew, Inc., according to an order from Federal Judge Joseph Woodrough. The decision was handed down in the Federal Court here this week.

Mr. Loew bought the Empress, he said, through an authorized agent, and the court held his purchase valid, although it was alleged a subsequent deal was made in Omaha by the original owner wherein the house was sold to the World Realty Company.

The Empress, one of the larger downtown theatres offering a combination of motion pictures and vaudeville, has been under the management of the World Realty Company of Omaha for some time. Attorneys for the company say they will appeal the decision to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The World Realty Company is the largest motion picture and theatrical corporation in Omaha and one of the largest in the West.

Loew, who was in Omaha as a witness in his suit to gain possession of the Empress, said that W. N. Ledoux, former owner of the Empress Theatre, contracted with Samuel A. Shirley, Omaha, district manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, on May 24 last in Chicago, to sell the theatre to the Loew interests for a total of $60,000, of which $25,000 was to be cash and the remaining $35,000 to be made in deferred payments. Loew said he went to Chicago to meet his own representative and Ledoux while the negotiations were in progress, and that he and Ledoux agreed upon the price. When Ledoux asked him about security, he says, he told Ledoux he would have to take his word as a guarantee of payment, to which, he says, Ledoux agreed. Loew says he went back to New York after it was agreed that the Empress owner and Shirley should attend to drawing the contract.

Mr. Shirley said the contract was drawn up by a lawyer in Chicago. He said the lawyer's name was Levinson. This contract was exhibited in court.

Attorney Levinson, of Chicago, testified that both Ledoux and Shirley signed the contract in Chicago and that nothing was said about the guarantee of payment. The lawyer said the terms of the contract gave Shirley the right to assign it to other persons.

Mr. Ledoux admitted he had negotiated with the World Realty Company of Omaha before refusing to carry out the alleged contract with Loew and Shirley, representing the Metro people.

Counsel for Loew asked that the sale contract between Ledoux and the World Realty Company be produced in court, but counsel for the World Realty Company replied that the terms of this contract were confidential.

Mr. Loew announced that he will show only Metro pictures at the Empress.

Georgia Theatres Threatened by Further 20 Per Cent. Tax

ATLANTA—Scores of Georgia exhibitors virtually face extinction if the latest proposed tax on theatres in this state becomes a law. Under the provisions of a bill introduced in the Georgia Legislature by Representative Elders, of Tatnall, free school books will be furnished to all pupils in the common schools in the first seven grades, and the money to pay for the books will be raised by a tax of 20 per cent. on the gross receipts of all theatres in the state. The proposed law would place this 20 per cent. tax during 1924, and thereafter a 10 per cent. per annum tax would be levied.

Close on the heels of the introduction of this bill came the first optimistic tax note the exhibitors of Georgia have had in some time. This was an amendment to the present Special State Tax through which the Special Tax on theatres was reduced as regards the picture houses in suburbs of cities of more than 50,000. This tax was reduced on these particular houses from $25.00 to $12.50.

Perry Spence, of Progress Pictures, Inc., points out that this amendment is most fair, inasmuch as it is absurd to make the small theatre pay the same amount of tax as the big houses downtown. He also suggests that it might be wise for some of the city councils in Southern towns to make similar amendments to their own special city taxes on picture theatres.

"The exhibitors in Georgia are getting together to fight the 20 per cent. tax introduced by Representative Elders," says Mr. Spence, "as they can see the 'handwriting on the wall' right now.

"It's a shame the way theatres in the South are taxed. Lawmakers seem to think a theatre is a gold mine. It's a wonder they don't take theatre and all. Then the exhibitor would at least have off his mind the worry of paying all the various taxes. Here we have the Federal tax of 10 per cent., the State Special tax, the income tax, the Corporation tax, the City Property tax, the Assessment tax—and now comes the proposed tax for school books.

"If this tax bill is passed I am afraid that the State of Georgia is going to lose heavily through it by losing the State Special tax, as the small-town exhibitors will close up and go to some other state where they will be free of this foolishness and uncalled for assessment."

Klan Film a Fizzle

Ohio Order Probably "Out" Cost of 18,000-Foot Picture

The Ohio Ku Klux Klan, which has for some time been endeavoring to enter the picture field with its own production, "The Toll of Justice," is reported to have encountered difficulties which spell failure for the proposition. The picture was started several months ago by the C. & S. Pictures Co., of Columbus, Ohio, but in the final week of production it was found necessary to effect a reorganization of the company which resulted in the Klan becoming sole owner and producer through reducing the company to the capacity of an employee.

The film, which had a footage of 18,000 feet, was subsequently completed, but when it reached the laboratory it was found that something had gone wrong with the lighting system and the interiors would have to be retaken.

A number of conferences between the Klan and the company was held, but the Klan and the company were held, but the last report received is to the effect that Corey G. Cook, who wrote the scenario and was directing the picture, is arranging to sail for Egypt soon to take up travelogue work. It is likewise stated on good authority that the general manager of the company will soon leave for California. The picture was scheduled for release early in September.

Publicity by Pictures

Canada Acquainting the World with Its Advantages Through Films

Canada is becoming better and more favorably known throughout the world by reason of the publicity its advantages are getting through motion pictures. For the past four years the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, which is connected with the Department of Trade and Commerce, has been letting the world know about Canada's assets and possibilities. A series of one-reel informative and educational type of motion picture called the "Seeing Canada Series," has been widely circulated both theatrically and non-theatrically through recognized film distributing agencies.

The Canadian Motion Picture Bureau, of which Raymond S. Peck is director, says that the work of the Bureau has been of great aid to the Department of Agriculture and many other departments.

National Motion Picture Day Proves to Be Great Success

THE industry's first National Motion Picture Day, which is to be an annual event, proved a big success last Monday. That much is known now, but details of its far-reaching scope will not be forthcoming until next week, when the territorial chairmen will report to National President Sydney S. Cohen.

Mr. Cohen issued a statement this week in which he said:

"The results of National Motion Picture Day are of a most gratifying character, with respect to public enthusiasm in the event and the reports to the national office from leading theatre owners and organizations throughout the country. The benefits of this celebration to the theatre owners and the industry will be manifested for some time to come, because of the good will built up and the increased measure of popular appreciation of the community value of the theatre which resulted from this co-operation of exhibitor and public."

Throughout the nation crowds attended the theatres on National Motion Picture Day, their attention having been forcibly drawn to the occasion by well-conducted publicity campaigns including published endorsements by the governors of states, mayors of big cities, high officials of the federal government and other prominent men and women who heartily aided the cause. In Hartford, Conn., twelve of the leading theatre owners had page advertisements of National Motion Picture Day printed in the newspapers. In the Hartford advertisement, the following important statement, which applies to all parts of the United States, was made:

"By impressing upon the public this powerful influence for good, the presentation of wholesome entertainment and its willingness to co-operate with civic and social organizations for enlightenment and uplift, the theatre has received the recognition and enthusiastic endorsement and patronage of the thinking people of America."

It is unnecessary to say that National Motion Picture Day was a rousing success in Hartford and other parts of Connecticut. Joseph W. Walsh, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut; W. A. True, Louis Sagal, Poli Circuit; C. M. Maxfield, Charles Repass and Jacob Alpert were the committee in charge of the campaign.

In the Western Pennsylvania district, where the theatre owners had inaugurated a very extensive campaign for National Motion Picture Day, there were a number of added attractions in the theatres, one notable supplementation of the program being the addition of the Musical Club Choral Society with 80 feminine voices under the direction of Charles N. Boyd. This is Pittsburgh's most exclusive musical and social organization. This chorus rendered several selections at different performances in the Million Dollar Grand Theatre on National Motion Picture Day.

A special form of exploitation indicative of the enterprise of the western theatre owners was presented in Denver, Col., under the direction of H. E. Huffman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Colorado. In connection with National Motion Picture Day there, the "Bluebird Weekly," a theatrical paper published by M. F. Lapham, devoted several pages to an endorsement of National Motion Picture Day and urged the theatre-going public to patronize the different theatres on November 19.

One element of the appeal made in Denver which is a worth while contribution to the literature of motion picture theatre's public service is as follows:

"The motion picture theatre, synonymous with public service, education and amusement, always has placed its screen at the service of national and civic constructive programs in war or in peace, and we now ask recognition of this great combination of all the arts, the motion picture."

In the Central West, especially in Ohio and Kentucky, great impetus was given to the observance of National Motion Picture Day through special lines of exploitation in newspapers, billboards and direct contact by letters from the theatre owner to his patrons. Several cities in Ohio, notably Toledo, Columbus, Cincinnati and Cleveland, took action in a combination of all the theatres in the matter of direct exploitation for National Motion Picture Day, and in every instance the response on the part of the public was of the most gratifying character.

With the endorsement of National Motion Picture Day by Mayor Magee of Pittsburgh, followed by similar action by the mayors of other Pennsylvania cities, Acting Mayor Murray Hulbert of New York City gave a most pronounced approval of National Motion Picture Day in a printed manifesto which was sent to all of the city departments and published in different newspapers.

This led to other developments along the exploitation line in the Greater City and brought to the front one of the most unique evidences of official and public approval of this event in a large parade which was headed by the New York City Police Band. This procession moved up Broadway, Saturday afternoon, November 17, from Twenty-third street and then into Central Park. The New York drive was under the direction of a special committee from the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, under the chairmanship of J. Arthur Hirsch, Charles Schwartz, Hy Gainsboro, Joseph Jame, Henry Suchman, J. Alton Bradbury, Sol Raives and Clarence Cohen.

In the New York Sunday News of November 18 a complete page was devoted to National Motion Picture Day in which National Education Commissioner John J. Tigert and others told of the wonderful advantages of National Motion Picture Day.

National Motion Picture Day will remain a definite institution among the theatres of the United States and will be celebrated annually.

Knickerbocker Exonerated

Washington, D. C.—The Knickerbocker Theatre Company is not responsible for the falling of the roof of the Knickerbocker Theatre on January 22, 1922, which resulted in the death of 98 persons and the injury of 103 others, under the verdict of a jury in the District Supreme Court in three of the many damage suits which have been brought against the corporation as a result of the catastrophe. The three suits covered by the verdict were for $10,000 each, two of which were for indemnity for death and the third for personal injuries. An appeal was noted from the verdict of the court.

In his instructions to the jury, the presiding justice pointed out that the theatre was to be held responsible if the jury believed it negligently maintained a dangerous situation which resulted in the damage to the plaintiff. It was the contention of the theatre company that it had accepted the theatre building in good faith from the contractors, following both Federal and District inspection and approval of the structure, and that it had no greater knowledge than any individual of any condition which may have existed and which resulted in the falling of the roof under the heavy weight of snow which caused the crash.

Claim Added Strength

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

The decision of the United States Supreme Court that the combination of motion picture companies to restrict distribution of films violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Law confirms the view of the Federal Trade Commission and will operate to strengthen its investigation of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, et al, according to a report from the commission at Washington, D. C.

The commission does not figure in the enforcement of the anti-trust law, but works under the law and under provisions of the Clayton Act, which was passed by Congress to supplement the Sherman law.

Last week the commission completed the taking of testimony in Los Angeles and the respondents now are to present their side of the case. The first hearing for this purpose will be in Jacksonville, Fla., but the date has not been set.

Hodkinson Urges Percentage, Decries Advanced Admissions

INCREASED prices of admission for motion pictures, advocated in some sections of the industry as a means of combatting the waste that has been characteristic of production, are not warranted under existing conditions, in the opinion of W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and a pioneer film man. Mr. Hodkinson said:

"I believe that any move intended to generally increase the admission prices of picture theatres at the present time, to offset the alleged waste in the industry, will result in failure. Pictures are having difficulty enough maintaining attendances at the present admission scale and it is my belief that increased quality in production is necessary in order to maintain even the present prices.

"As I discussed in a recent Colliers' article, there are four basic movements that must be made:

"First, the classification of pictures in theatres, and the movement to increase prices in certain houses on big pictures is in that direction.

"Second, a percentage basis of dealing between producer and exhibitor, whereby they are both concerned in what the product grosses from the public rather than engaged in the present efforts to 'sandbag' each other.

"Third, the abolishment of arbitrary lengths which cause the public to sit through five reels of padding in which the producer has an investment of $100,000, to see an idea expounded that could have been better gone in fifteen minutes with an investment of $10,000.

"Fourth, that some system of refereeing between the two factions, production and exhibition of the business, must be set up; whether it is a mere arbitration between producer and exhibitor; whether it is a big figure from outside the industry with integrity enough to equitably serve both factions and not be dominated by either, or whether it is a practical business organization functioning between the producer and exhibitor, is immaterial. The referee principle must be established.

Relative to percentage booking, it is undoubtedly true that only by the producer and exhibitor agreeing on the principle of percentage booking can future progress be made. It is interesting to see nearly all producing and distributing factions uniting on this principle, as well as the editorial minds.

"We are still a long ways from our goal, however, while the exhibitor so generally rebels against the acceptance of the percentage principle. However, he is not to be blamed nowadays. When we get some formulas worked out that are equitable to both producer and exhibitor then we can expect co-operation on the part of the exhibitor and real progress can be made."

Callaghan of Monogram Warns Exhibitors Against Impostors

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, has telegrams from a Minnesota exhibitor and a North Carolina exhibitor stating that "the representative of your concern has failed to return or even to advise us concerning our contracts made with him, and we desire definite confirmation at once."

Mr. Callaghan immediately got in touch with a leading detective agency and advised them of the facts, because Monogram sells to State Rights buyers only and at the present time has no road representative other than George H. Wiley. Evidently several impostors are taking advantage of the situation and Mr. Callaghan issues this warning that no one is authorized to take contracts for Monogram except himself,

Mr. Wiley or Mr. North of the home office.

"All Monogram pictures, inclusive of the Fred Thomson series of Westerns, are sold on the State Rights basis only," said Mr. Callaghan, "and each buyer will equip his representative with proper credentials, showing he is authorized to accept contracts and deposits on Monogram Pictures in his respective territory. We will go the limit in ferreting out these impostors and seeing that they are given the full extent of the law in the event of their apprehension. For the safety of all concerned, it is my earnest desire that every State Right buyer on whom these representatives call ask to be shown credentials before commencing any negotiations whatsoever.

"The buyers of the different State Rights will be announced as these rights are sold, and in this manner exhibitors will know who are the authorized representatives of the concerns in their respective territory and be guided accordingly."

Credit Association Formed to Curb Irregularities in Industry

THE Film Laboratories Credit Association, born at a dinner conference of laboratory executives and representatives at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, November 15, is described as a permanent contribution to the "safe and sane" drive now under way in the picture industry. It is the avowed purpose of the organization to check waste and put a curb on "wild-cat" producers, to the resultant benefit of the legitimate picture makers and distributors.

At the initial meeting, which was attended by virtually every important commercial laboratory interest, the name of the new body was selected and plans made for completing its organization by election of officers and adoption of a code of practice at a second gathering in the Astor Thursday, November 22. The association will begin functioning December 1.

The Film Laboratories Credit Association is the result of a spontaneous movement on Beware of Impostor!

David Bernstein, treasurer of Loew-Metro, issues the following warning:

"Someone posing as a representative of Metro Pictures Corporation has been circulating drafts drawn on the Harriman National Bank of New York, bearing the name of 'A. Bernstein, Comptroller,' and has apparently succeeded in obtaining the cash for these worthless drafts. Metro Pictures Corporation never issues drafts in payment of any obligations."

Shipman on Trip

Ernest Shipman has left New York for a three weeks tour of the southeastern states. No explanation of the trip was forthcoming at the Shipman offices but it is assumed that it pertains to his recent announcement that he intends to produce in the South.

the part of the laboratory men to protect themselves against unscrupulous promoters and distributors who order prints shipped C. O. D. and then refuse to accept them. Through these and other practices the laboratories suffer big losses annually, in addition to having their vaults jammed with many worthless negatives left as security for prints.

Charles B. Hoy, credit expert and founder of the F. I. L. M. clubs throughout the country, with Frederick H. Elliott, formerly executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, were requested to make a survey of the laboratory business and they reported to the meeting that their investigation revealed the imperative need of a credit rating system. Mr. Hoy outlined a plan whereby protection could be accorded the laboratories without interfering with the business policies of the individual companies, and a resolution was unanimously adopted favoring organization along the lines he suggested.

The association plan has, it is said, the indorsement of practically every important laboratory in the country, and at the outset will have a membership of about thirty concerns. The laboratories participating in the initial meeting, through official representation or telegraphic indorsement, were:

H. J. Stryckmans, Claremont; L. J. Sans, Craftsman; Harry Goetz, Erbeograph; Tom Evans, Evans Film Manufacturing Co.; J. Coenen and R. De Roberts, Filmcraft of Los Angeles; William D. V. Tucker, Urban.

MONEY-MAKING SECTION

Special Service Supplement to Moving Picture World, December 1, 1923

“Where the promise is performed,” is the slogan of a well-known New York advertiser.

It is a slogan that might well apply to that department of Moving Picture World—Straight From the Shoulder Reports.

For here is where the promise gives way to performance, where judgment gives place to actual results, where “maybe” is replaced by “it did.”

Moving Picture World has prepared the special section herewith in the opinion that no better service can be rendered the exhibitor than to point out to him features that HAVE DONE THINGS.

For here there is no guess work, here there is no doubt, here he need only weigh the words of other exhibitors, judge the applicability of results in their theatres to his own situation, and act accordingly.

“Every picture is a first-run attraction until it has been shown in your town.” Someone said that a long time ago. In most cases it is a true remark. And particularly is it true of comparatively recent productions such as are represented in this section, but which are at the stage where they may be termed “good buys” for most theatre owners.

We present our first “Money Making Pictures” section to exhibitors in the knowledge that the pictures represented herein, as shown by the Straight From the Shoulder Reports of theatre owners, constitute a list of definite, concrete profit-producing value.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent entertainment. Pleased all. Paid a little high, but made one of best net profit weeks. Had good attendance. Draw best class in city of 53,000. Admission 10, 15, 30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre, (569 seats), Macon, Georgia.

CIRCUS DAY. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent picture. Very entertaining, and Jackie's latest and best picture. Large patronage, all pleased. See it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CIRCUS DAYS (First National). Did not draw the adults as expected but more than pleased those who came. Made money at that; second night better than first. It's a very good picture and better than "Oliver Twist." J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

Let us write your "insurance policy" and let this trade-mark guard you against loss.

E. W. Hammons

The Kick Out (Educational), with Lige Conley.—Two reels. Boys grab this and talk about it as much as you want but be sure the premium on your tornado insurance is paid up before you let the youngsters get their eyes on the screen. Except where "polite" comedies are the most desirable, this one should be a bear, and I believe that some of the dignity of the better class might stray away for a while, at that.—Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. F. theatre, Grand Gorge, N. Y.—Small town patronage.

Rapid Fire (Educational).—Two reels. Here's a comedy that will get the laughs. This comedy saved the show, as we happened to have a bum feature. We find the majority of Educational comedies good.—Ben. L. Morris, Temple theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.—General patronage.

High Power and Choose Your Weapons (Educational).—Two reels. "Spice of program" is right. All are good, but some are best. High Power is better than Choose Your Weapons. These are some of the best two reels we get.—V. E. Sager, Southern theatre, Akron, Ohio.—General patronage.

Moving (Educational), a Cameo comedy.—This comedy is better than lots of the two reels. In fact, they are all good. I have not had a bad one this year. We look forward to a Cameo date for we will brace any weak feature. One reel.—Hugh C. Martin, American theatre, Columbus, Ga.—General patronage.

Navy Blues (Educational), a Christie comedy, with Dorothy Devore.—A snappy comedy with a little patriotic interest. Much favorable comment. Two reels.—John W. Hawkins, Capitol theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—General patronage.

That Son of a Sheik (Educational).—A Christie comedy.—A knockout and one that's a pretty good burlesque on The Sheik. Two reels.—C. W. Langacher, New Glarus theatre, New Glarus, Wis.—General patronage.

No Luck (Educational), with Lloyd Hamilton.—Has plenty of action and will get the laughs. I consider this one of Hamilton's best. Two reels.—Hobart Wickens, Dreamland theatre, Kiowa, Kans.—General patronage.

Back Fire (Educational) with Lige Conley.—One of the best. If you have this one booked, don't be afraid to get behind something wrong with them. Two reels.—Walter H. Musson, Queen's theatre, Hespeler, Ont., Can.—Small town patronage.

Close Harmony (Educational).—This is the first of the "Sing 'Em Again" series, a novelty reel introducing three old songs in which the audience is supposed to join. Our people were slow taking hold, but the reel went over big and drew applause at the finish. It is seldom that a feature is applauded here and when they applaud a single reel it must be good. One reel.—John W. Hawkins, Capitol theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—General patronage.

Ocean Swells (Educational), a Christie comedy.—This is a good comedy. The photography is splendid. It is a high class comedy that will please the kids as well as the adults. More of this class of comedy would be welcome. Most Christies are good. Two reels.—Ralph R. Gribble, Grand theatre, New Hamburg, Ont., Can.—General patronage.

Mile a Minute Mary (Educational).—Another good Educational short subject. Two reels.—C. W. Langacher, New Glarus, Wis.—General patronage.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Consolidated Co., Indiana, Goes Into Receiver's Hands

About the most startling bit of news in Indiana theatre circles this week was the announcement of the appointment of a receiver for the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, which owns and operates a number of picture theatres in some of the larger cities of the state. Fred A. Sims, of Indianapolis, formerly chairman of the State Tax Board, was named receiver for the company on a petition filed by the Hatfield Electric Company, which alleged the company is indebted to it in the sum of $1,000.

R. L. Martin, president of the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, said the company has ample assets to clear up the outstanding indebtedness, said to amount to about $60,000, but lacked enough money to meet its obligations at this time. He announced at the time the suit was filed that none of the theatres would cease operation.

The corporation owns and operates the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, the Murray and Murrette theatres in Richmond, the Capitol in Clinton, the Victory and Strand and the Sonntag hotel in Evansville, the Pantheon in Vincennes, the Orpheum in Fort Wayne, and the Strand in Kokomo. It also holds a ninety-nine year lease on the Park Theatre property in Indianapolis, and owns the Consolidated building in Indianapolis, a business site in Fort Wayne and a tract of land in Anderson.

Another suit asking a receiver for the corporation was filed in the Allen county superior court at Fort Wayne by Mrs. Carolina C. Schmidt, who claimed the company had failed to make payments for the last three months on property it had leased from her. It is understood that since the filing of the receivership suit in Indianapolis, Mrs. Schmidt will only ask for a receiver to take charge of the Fort Wayne property.

Following the filing of the Indianapolis suit the Strand Theatre in Evansville was closed by Frank Holland, manager, on order of Mr. Martin, president of the corporation. The theatre had been running a combined program of pictures and vaudeville. The receivership proceedings has not affected the operation of the Sonntag hotel or Victory Theatre in Evansville.

F. H. Gruneberg, Sr., of Chicago, was president of the company until a few weeks ago, when he suffered a nervous breakdown. On the advice of his physicians he retired from the company and was ordered to another climate for his health. He was succeeded by Mr. Martin, who until that time was secretary-treasurer of the company. A. P. Kester, of Sheridan, succeeded Martin as secretary-treasurer.

The Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, at the time it was organized, took over the Bankers and Merchants Theatres Company, which operated the Liberty in Terre Haute and the Orpheum in Fort Wayne. Since then other theatres were acquired and in the last few years the corporation has made some large real estate purchases, which, it is understood, required considerable ready cash to complete.

Fred Le Comte, manager of the Liberty at Terre Haute, is acting as general manager of all the theatres in the Consolidated chain, and temporarily at least all bookings of films will be made through him. It is planned to continue the operation of the theatres on an economic and business basis so that the outstanding indebtedness may soon be cleared up.

Offices in Terre Haute and Evansville, from which stock in the company was sold, were closed two weeks ago.

Photoplays and other moving pictures are to be produced in Indianapolis soon, it was announced this week following the filing of incorporation papers by the Cavalier Motion Picture Company, a newly organized Indianapolis concern. The company is capitalized at $1,000,000. The incorporators are Roscoe Carpenter, Lyons; William Eickenberry, Kokomo; Frank J. Hows, Indianapolis; Bert Hendren, Universal, and James T. Jeffers, Lyons.

According to C. C. Hendren, of the Hoosier Distributing Company, which will sell the securities of the motion picture concern, the company is to acquire ground somewhere in Marion county for the location of a studio. The Cavalier Motion Picture Company is a reorganization of a company by the same name now producing pictures in a studio in Jersey City. It was originally organized for the production of Bible pictures, but has branched out into the production of plays, news reels and educational films.

Ray Frisz, who resigned recently as assistant manager of the Liberty Theatre in Terre Haute, has been transferred to the Indianapolis office of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Company, which owns and operates the Liberty.

Henry A. Wallis, assistant treasurer of the Hippodrome Theatre at Terre Haute, is suffering from a badly sprained knee. Despite the injury he has been continuing his duties at the theatre.

Ben Van Borssum, proprietor of the Crescent, Majestic and Savoy theatres in Terre Haute, has added several new employes to his organization.

The Palace Theatre at South Bend celebrated its first anniversary last week. An enviable record of attendance has been established in the theatre's first year. It has operated continuously every day in the week since its opening.

The Ohio Theatre in Indianapolis has been redecorated and repainted. New Turkish carpets have been laid on the mezzanine floor and in the women's restroom. Harry Koch is manager.

The American Theatre in Terre Haute was opened last week under the management of Joseph Oten. It recently was extensively remodeled and redecorated.

New curtains and scenery will be installed soon in the Grand Theatre at Washington, Ind., according to an announcement this week by Guy Hammitt, manager.

Freuler Leases Milwaukee's Butterfly to La Crosse Man

A. J. Cooper, president and general manager of the La Crosse Amusement Co., of La Crosse, Wis., has taken over the Butterfly Theatre, downtown Milwaukee house, under a long term lease. The lease was obtained from John R. Freuler, owner of the building, who has operated the showhouse for several years.

With the arrival of Mr. Cooper and with the announcement that he would devote considerable time to his latest acquisition, Stewart Walker has stepped out as manager, a position which he held for more than a year for the Freuler interests. Just what his plans are has not been revealed.

The Butterfly under the new management will immediately switch from a policy of second run to first run pictures and as a result will likewise undergo an advance in admission price, Mr. Cooper has announced. The theatre will be renovated and it is likely that an orchestra will be hired. The staff will remain intact, with Henry Taylor as house manager.

The house contains 1,250 seats, including a balcony, and until several years ago was one of the leading houses in the city, it reaching its highest point under the management of Leo A. Landau, now director of the Alhambra and Garden theatres.

The La Crosse Amusement Co., besides the Butterfly, now controls the Casino and Strand theatres in La Crosse, Wis.

L. P. Charles of Chetek, Wis., has been elected president of the newly organized Northern Wisconsin Theatre Owners' Association, which includes in its membership twenty-two exhibitors. Other officers are: C. H. Edwards, Spooner, vice president, and Mrs. M. E. Zimmerman, Cumberland, secretary and treasurer. The annual meeting of the association will be held in May.

Milwaukee this week is being treated to the simultaneous presentation of two widely different pictures based on the same kind of story. While Eddie Weisfeldt is drawing crowds to Saxe's Strand with Pola Negri's "Spanish Dancer" as the attraction, Leo A. Landau, one block away on the same street, is running to capacity at the Alhambra with Mary Pickford in "Rosita." Meanwhile, because of the unusual situation, both pictures are drawing a special amount of publicity in the newspapers, with critics giving them joint reviews.

With the opening of "Little Old New York" scheduled for Nov. 23, Roy C. MacMullen, manager of the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, is laying elaborate plans for the big event. Working hand in hand with the Hearst publication in the city, Mr. MacMullen has arranged for a society night on Nov. 23, special invitations being extended to the best families in Milwaukee who are expected to attend in their full dress. For Saturday, Nov. 24, Mr. MacMullen has outlined plans for a children's party in the morning.

Local Lafs, patterned after the famous Fun From the Press, but confined to Milwaukee wit, is making a big hit with Milwaukee theatre patrons. Starting at the Strand and Miller theatres, two Saxe houses, several weeks ago, the Lafs now are also being shown at approximately a dozen theatres in the city, among them being the New Milwaukee, the Parkway, Regent, Colonial, Juneau and Tivoli.

Lafs are submitted through a leading Milwaukee newspaper which awards cash prizes to the winners in addition to putting the product of their funny bones on the screen.

The Goetz Bros., who control houses in Janesville and Beloit, Wis., have opened the Crystal Theatre at Watertown, Wis., which has been closed for some time.

Kansas

The Kansas City Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, at a recent meeting, unanimously endorsed Motion Picture Day, which is being sponsored by the M. P. T. O. of America. Other matters of interest taken up at the meeting of the association were: A plan of financing the organization through an advertising slide, and the music tax question. It was merely stated that S. A. Handy, who is legal counsel for the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, has been retained by the Kansas City Exhibitors' Association.

Charles H. Barron, who recently purchased full interest in the Kansas Theatre at Wichita, Kas., has purchased the Elite and Cozy theatres from John Callahan at Pratt, Kas. Mr. Barron announces his intention of closing the Cozy and concentrating on the Elite, which will be known as the Kansas.

T. C. Block is building a new theatre at Odessa, Mo., and will be finished about the first of the year. The house will be known as the Dixie.

Jay Means and F. A. Gibbons, owners of the Murray Theatre and Prospect Theatre, Kansas City, won their fight for an injunction against the picketing of their theatres by the Operators' Union and the local Musicians' Union. The decision was rendered in the circuit court of Jackson county, and stated that the owner of the theatre is also the owner of the sidewalk space in front and adjacent to the theatre, for the purpose of ingress and egress for himself and employes and his patrons, and for the use of pedestrians. The method of picketing was pointed out to be a violation of the rights of the theatre owner.

W. Dahler of the Cozy Theatre, Grove, Kas., is the proud possessor of a new son.

A. E. Lamkin of the Star Theatre at Stockton, Kas., severely injured his left hand recently. He is also the owner of the town newspaper and his hand was caught between two wheels on the press.

N. W. Huston is building a new theatre at Columbus, Kas. The house will seat 350 and will be opened about March. Mr. Huston will continue operating the Liberty Theatre also.

Out-of-town visitors seen this past week have been: M. W. Hubbell, Hubbell Theatre, Trenton, Mo.; Gus Kubach of Abilene, Kas.; Lloyd Ware of the Varsity Theatre, Lawrence, Kas., and L. D. Metcalf of the Grand Theatre at Ash Grove, Mo.

Cincinnati

For the third time within a year the Hippodrome Theatre, Newport, Ky., just across the river, was visited by burglars, who robbed the safe of $1,000, after knocking off the combination. The money stolen represented the day's receipts of the Hippodrome and Temple theatres, both of which are owned and operated by I. Frankel, of Cincinnati.

William James of Columbus, who recently took over the State and Vernon theatres to operate them in connection with the James, Broadway and Grand, has promoted Joe Wilson from assistant manager of the James to manager of the State. Harry Doyle, treasurer of the Broadway, will pilot the Vernon henceforth. Harry Eggar, exploitation man, has taken Wilson's place as assistant to J. Real Neth, manager of the James, while Earl Pepper becomes treasurer of the Broadway. Manager James reports that $50,000 will be spent in improvements on the State Theatre, which was never completed in its entirety by the former owners, the Deussenburys. A new $35,000 pipe organ will be installed at the Grand.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is being shown at the Cox Theatre for a five weeks' run, to be followed by a legitimate attraction. "The White Sister" is also booked for a showing in the early future.

Many Chicago Orphans Await Levine's Thanksgiving Treat

Manager Paul Levine of the Adams Theatre, near State and Adams, is arranging his annual Thanksgiving treat for several hundred orphans and this year will show them Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days." A large number of folks will lend their automobiles to take the little ones to and from the orphan homes, and with plenty of popcorn and peanuts the orphans are in for "some" holiday.

The Vitagraph Theatre of the Lubliner & Trinz circuit on Lincoln avenue has been redecorated and fixed up with a new electric sign that can be seen for several blocks.

Manager Guy V. Martin of the Illini Theatre at Bloomington, Ill., has booked "The Covered Wagon" for three nights and two matinees the last of this month, and will get $1.50 for his main floor and down to 50 cents for gallery seats.

Plans for the new Schoenstadt house to go up at Archer and Robey avenue will soon be ready for inspection and the boys will put $500,000 into the new structure.

Manager George Madison of the Kozy Theatre on Clark street, one of the pioneer houses of the Loop district, is using a cane these days, as he slipped on a wet sidewalk a few weeks ago and twisted his ankle badly. It takes more than a twisted ankle to keep George away from business.

B. J. Boyle has added the new Lyric Theatre at Walcott to his chain of houses and will improve the program.

Manager Jack Hoeffler of the Orpheum Theatre invited the orphans from the various homes at Quincy to be his guests at the showing of Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days."

Ned Holmes, well known here for his management of "The Four Horsemen's" record-breaking run at the La Salle Theatre, is here again as manager of "The White Sister" at the Great Northern Theatre, which opened this week to capacity business. C. S. Primrose is assistant manager and Joseph Giaranomi has charge of the orchestra of fourteen pieces with the production. A large chorus of singers is also used during the church scenes of the feature and the picture is booked here for an extended run.

The Bryn Mawr Theatre at Bryn Mawr avenue and the Elevated is celebrating its second anniversary. Manager Lou Weil not only provided a fine program for his patrons but bought himself a new automobile for the occasion and fixed the house up for the big week.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy are pushing work on the remodeling of the Caldwell Theatre at St. Joseph and the house is expected to be ready for reopening during the next few weeks. The improvements will cost $50,000. Work will also start soon on the new house to be erected by this firm at 145th and Center street that will cost $125,000. This firm has a large building program for the coming year and is optimistic over the business outlook in the picture field.

The report that a new theatre is projected for the new Palmer House block that is going to be erected at State and Adams street to take the place of the old Palmer House, now on that site, has been denied by the management of the hotel. The high cost of land in this part of the city would make the cost of any theatre prohibitive.

Charles A. Bengart has sold the Illinois Theatre at Champaign, Ill., to the Zenith Company, who will improve the house.

Several of the boys are interested in the new National Medical Film Company, organized last week at 736 South Wabash avenue with a capital stock of 150 shares of no par value. The principals are G. E. Moring, Morey Cohen and Harry A. Kyler.

B. Leo Steif, architect, reports he is not drawing plans for a movie theatre at 64th street and Cottage Grove avenue, as was reported.

Fred Hoffman has given up his plans to erect a movie house on Monterey avenue, owing to the high cost of construction.

H. T. Reynolds is having plans drawn for a new movie theatre he proposes to build at 345 Michigan avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Spencer and Miller plan to open their new movie theatre at Highland Park, Ill., next week, if the marquee and other equipment are installed in time.

Earl Williams has opened the Playhouse at Knoxville, Ill., and is featuring good musical programs with his pictures.

Manager Harry Greenman of the New Monroe Theatre is turning out a lively house organ under the name of The Loop Photoplay News. The management is laying plans for a new organ to be installed soon. Jack Capone is on the job as assistant manager. George Smith has been made display manager for the house and the lobby is now a most attractive spot.

McVickers Theatre management put over Comedy Week in a big way and Buster Keaton in "The Three Ages" brought plenty of laughs for the bill. Will Rogers in "Passin' Thru" helped the funny cause along and the house had good business for the seven days.

The big feature of the Chicago Theatre bill last week was the tie-up of the International News with the Armistice Day program. The crowds gave the old war scenes plenty of applause.

One of the most deplorable accidents in recent years was the death of John Prieske of the Milda Theatre at 3138 South Halsted street. He was changing the sign for the next day's show when through some unknown reason he grasped a live wire and was instantly electrocuted. His many friends in the trade extend sympathy to his family.

"If Winter Comes" is now playing the neighborhood houses and Manager Sam Atkinson of the Calo Theatre reports a fine business on the three-day booking at his house.

S. N. Graham has bought the Rex Theatre at LaGrange from Mrs. L. V. Cottrell and will improve the house.

Kentucky

Rumors to the effect that J. G. Brown, owner of the $7,000,000 new Brown Hotel, Louisville, Ky., would rebuild the unroofed Ha-Wi-An Gardens building with a theatre building, or fifteen story office building, were set at rest today when Brown announced that the building would be repaired and continued as heretofore for a period of two and one-half years at least.

It was reported from Newport, Ky., on Nov. 12, that safe blowers had wrecked a safe at the Hippodrome Theatre, early on that morning, and escaped with $1,000 in cash.

Harry Switow, son of M. Switow, head of the Switow Amusement Co., and himself manager of the Kentucky Theatre, one of the Switow chain, became father of a daughter on Nov. 5.

Fine open weather in Louisville is making for excellent attendance at the local theatres, and things are now rolling along in fine shape as a whole. Exhibitors are finding very little excuse for complaint.

J. W. Sayre Defends Screen in Seattle's Latest Controversy

Attacks made on picture shows and city playgrounds by Mrs. Elizabeth Harris, dance hall matron supervisor, in an address before the Commonwealth Club last week, brought swift announcement from J. W. Sayre of the Greater Theatres Company: "I defy Mrs. Harris to point out one picture show that has been shown in this town in recent years that had such an effect on the minds of the young folks as she intimated in her speech. "There is no basis for her attack on either the movie or the playground. There is no comparison between these two places. I have no objection to make to the dance halls, but I certainly do resent the reflection that has been cast on the shows and the playgrounds."

Frank A. Graham of the Grand Theatre, Centralia, Wash., reports that he not only broke every house record with Vitagraph's "Pioneer Trails" but also broke all records for any theatre in the town, in the face of very strong opposition.

The Proctor Street Blue Mouse held its formal opening Tuesday evening, November 13, in Tacoma, and was unhesitatingly pronounced one of the most beautiful suburban houses in the entire Pacific Northwest. Mayor Fawcett of Tacoma made the opening address before a crowd that filled the house. The opening attraction was "The Green Goddess." The house is under the direction of John Hamrick. A speed record was established by B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, who had the contract for complete furnishings, equipment, lighting and interior work, completing the installations in eight days.

Whittington and Smith have taken over the Liberty and Grand theatres in Bend, Oregon, formerly owned by J. B. Sparks. Mr. Sparks also owns houses in Redmond and Prime-ville. He will be in Seattle early next week.

The Heilig Theatre, C. W. McKee, resident manager, has installed a new organ with the announcement of its new feature photoplay policy.

William Morelock, who operates the Arcade Theatre in Cottage Grove, Oregon, will build a new 800-seat Arcade Theater costing about $75,000. The new house will be ready about January 15. He will close the old house upon completion of the new.

Mr. Miller, owner of the California Theatre in Los Angeles, was a visitor in Seattle this week.

W. H. Storey, formerly with the D. & R. Theatres Co. in Centralia, and more recently cashier with the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Company in Seattle, returns to the exhibition end of the game this week as manager of the Arcade and Liberty theatres at Hoquiam. Dolan and Ripley have bought these houses from Newman and Connell. J. R. Robbins, a newcomer in the film business, replaces Mr. Storey in Seattle.

Mrs. Sadie Klinger has sold her Klinger Theatre in Connell, Wash., to Mr. and Mrs. Roy Kemp.

Seattle is to have another new suburban house. Report states that a $15,000 house will be erected at 2352 Beacon avenue for the Prefontaine Theatre Co. It will be a frame building.

Manager Fey of the Madison Theatre was host last week to members of the Yale Club at a special preview of "Columbus," distributed by Pathe Exchange. The audience of literary, professional and educational members prominent in the city appreciated the authority of the version.

Warfield Theatre Has Four World Premieres in a Row

What is believed to be a record in world premieres has been established at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, with four first showings in four consecutive weeks. If any house has a better record than this, Manager Charles M. Pincus would like to hear about it. The run started with Buster Keaton's "Hospitality" and was followed by Constance Talmadge in "Dangerous Maid," Louis B. Mayer's "Pleasure Mad" and "Long Live the King," with Jackie Coogan.

The premiere of "Pleasure Mad" was made quite an event, owing to the keen local interest in the production. It is from the book, "The Valley of Content," by Blanche Upright, San Francisco novelist, and Mrs. Upright attended the opening, as did also Louis B. Mayer, the producer, and several members of the cast, including Norma Shearer, Huntley Gordon, William Collier, Jr., Mary Alden and Winifred Bryson.

An Oakland exhibitor in connection with the showing of "The Covered Wagon" in that city advised patrons over the telephone not to spend $1 or $1.50 to see this production at the Lurie Theatre, where it was shown for two weeks, but to wait a month and see it in his house for 25 cents. This advice was given despite the fact that bookings have been so arranged that this production will not be shown again in Oakland during the season of 1923-24. The matter was brought to the attention of the Better Business Bureau of the Oakland Advertising Club, but at the request of the management of the Lurie Theatre no definite action was taken against the misleading offender.

Harry Arthur, general manager of West

Coast Theatres, Inc., and Dave Bershon, general booker, were recent visitors at San Francisco to confer with A. M. Bowles, manager of the Northern California division. An announcement will be made soon of the plans to erect a theatre at Fresno, Cal., which will be the largest and finest picture house in the San Joaquin Valley.

B. Getz, Inc., is building a business unit of eighteen stores and a theatre at West Portal avenue and Vicente street, San Francisco, to serve St. Francis Wood and Westwood Park, declared to be the finest residential park in the world. The theatre will be approached by a court with fountains and gardens.

The Granada Theatre, San Francisco, is celebrating the second anniversary of its opening with a special program. The main film feature is "The Virginian" and there are special concert numbers and other attractions. The Granada Theatre is built after the architecture of old Spain and is one of the most beautiful picture houses in the world.

Nasser Brothers, Robert McNeil and their associates in the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, San Francisco, have purchased the Strand and Rialto Theatres in the suburb of Alameda from Louis Kaliski at a price said to be close to $250,000. The deal was consummated through the offices of J. R. Saul and increases the holdings of this combination to thirty-five houses. Coincident with the transfer of interests Maurice F. Lowery, formerly with the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, was named manager of the Strand Theatre, Alameda.

J. J. Wood, popular theatre owner of Redding, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row. He is known as Mayor of the Sacramento River and directs aquatic sports in the summer season. Just now the chief sport there is the garnering of salmon steaks, fifty-pound salmon being taken frequently.

Tom O'Day, of Vallejo, Cal., has acquired the Liberty Theatre at Marysville, Cal., from Mrs. F. E. Smith, who has conducted this house for years.

Ed Byard of Byard & Byard, who operate a circuit of theatres out of Ferndale and Arcata, Cal., was a recent business visitor at San Francisco. Formerly films were routed from house to house over the circuit, but bookings now are being made separately for each theatre with the idea of securing films of a certain type for certain days of the week.

The Lyric Theatre at Stockton, Cal., has been taken over by Leichter & Abrams, who also operate the Spot Theatre in that city. Frank Parker, former owner of the Lyric, has other theatres at Modesto and Concord.

The Orpheum Circuit, which owns property at Broadway and Twentieth street, Oakland, Cal., is preparing to erect a theatre seating 2,400, plans for which have already been prepared.

Competing Albany Programs Little Hurt by Big Special

The success which marked a week's run of "The Covered Wagon" at the Capitol Theatre, Albany, N. Y., at admission prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50, served to answer the query which has been going the rounds of exhibitors and film exchanges in that territory ever since the first announcement was made of the admission prices which would be charged. The picture, which came as the first to be shown at the new Shubert house here, which has been given over to the legitimate up to the present time, opened Monday night with every seat filled with the exception of a few of the less desirable in the front rows. The picture drew extremely well throughout the entire week, with the matinees also making a creditable showing.

That $1.50 pictures will do business in a city of 115,000, providing that they are of the right sort, was demonstrated by the box office receipts. Other theatres in the city, with prices ranging from 28 to 50 cents, reported that they had felt no inroads because of the higher priced feature at the other house.

The low water has thrown hundreds of the employes in the paper mills out of work for the time being.

Mr. McCarthy is a firm advocate of showing big pictures whenever obtainable, and claims that the returns at his box office back up his contention.

The drawing power of such a picture as "The Call of the Wild" when combined with vaudeville, was aptly shown at Proctor's Grand, in Albany last week, when fully 95 per cent. of the audience remained in their seats at the close of the vaudeville program. Having demonstrated their strength, better pictures are being booked in connection with vaudeville programs in this part of the state.

R. V. Erk, owner of two houses in Iliou and the Barcl in Schenectady, buys pictures like a flash, but nine times out of ten his judgment from a box office standpoint can't be beat. On Wednesday Mr. Erk bought a total of 61 pictures.

If you happen to drop in at the State Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., remember to take a look at a peculiar lamp which adorns the lobby. It is imported and is said to have cost the purchaser about $1,500. Mr. Shirley had it at his Strand Theatre for some time before bringing it to the larger house.

Philadelphia's "Movie Week" Exceeding All Expectations

Every expectation of even the most zealous of the advocates of National Motion Picture Week seems realized in Philadelphia. Marcus Loew, who was in the city Wednesday, stated that the first two days' advance sale came within $50 of the entire advance sale in Chicago, and it was very good there.

The house was entirely sold out the opening night fifteen minutes before the performance began, and every day since there have been lines at the box-office. The opening night had less than 25 pass seats occupied.

Massachusetts

Papers were passed last week and recorded at the office of the Registry of Deeds at Salem, conveying the Federal Theatre, the Empire Theatre and the Salem Theatre, in Salem, to the Gordon interests, who own and manage the Olympia chain of theatres, which dot New England in several states. A new policy has been inaugurated at the Federal Theatre under which four vaudeville acts and feature pictures will be shown. "Win" Danielson, for six years organist at the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, will preside at the organ in the Federal Theatre and will lead the orchestra. The sale is said to involve the payment of approximately $340,000, and the properties were sold by the Koen brothers.

Among the continuing screen offerings at the Boston picture houses are "Scaramouche," which is just concluding its second week of what is expected to be a very long and highly successful run, if all indications are not at fault; "The Spanish Dancer," which this week is ending its second sensational run at the Paramount unit theatre, the Fenway, and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which for the past ten weeks has been enjoying a popularity of remarkable durability at Tremont Temple.

Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Next to the "Hottentot" this is the best picture of this star that I've run. Raymond Hatton, as in the former picture, brings some hearty laughs. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. About as sorry as any picture could be. Print in very poor condition and altogether no show at all. Usual advertising brought poorest attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

BOSTON BLACKIE. (4,522 feet). Star, William Russell. This is one of Bill Russell's best and it pleased a majority of the fans. Pictures of this type are well suited to Russell. Can be played anywhere as a first class program picture. Go heavy on the circumstantial evidence in your advertising, but lay off the prison reform stuff and you will get them in. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR. (5,787 feet). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A good picture, but rather slow. Our patrons liked it though. Cast was very good. Had some clever comedy situations. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre, San Francisco, California.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, Charles Jones. Goodbye, Buck. Many more like this one and you will be up Lost Creek without a paddle. May have been a good picture with an emotional actor in leading part, but fans were sitting on edges of seats waiting for Buck's customary action. They waited five reels in vain. Fox had better start calling him "Buck" again and put him in "hot shot" westerns where he belongs and where the fans want him. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LONE STAR RANGER. (5,250 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The best liked Mix picture since "Tony." Went over big. The larger cities and the reviewers may like Mix in "fancy" pictures, but I think the small towns like him best in straight westerns. This picture did more business than any of the last dozen big specials. Draw all classes in town of 4,000. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Very good. First time for star here. Didn't draw very well but seemed to please those who saw it. The second one drew better. CHRISTIAN. (8,000 feet). Star cast. I expected much and was disappointed in "The Christian," but probably because I first saw it on the stage and acted by capable actors. Most of 'em liked it, but I didn't. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HUNGRY HEARTS. (6,540 feet). Star cast. Excellent picture and business. This picture liked by most of 'em that saw it.

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

Jack Schneider writes a letter. It's on the bum print problem—a problem as important to the small town exhibitor as any he has to face.

Jack is absolutely right and a lot of you feel the way he does, so the letter is put before you on the next page.

Mr. Schneider thinks exchanges ought to pay damages for bum prints; very likely justice in a court of law would say the same, if anybody tried it—but suits cost money.

E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio, had the easier way in the letter he had in Straight From the Shoulder a while back.

He argued that if the exchange didn't come up to par on prints, he quit dealing with that exchange.

If enough of you did that—the exchanges would wake up to the importance of the matter.

LOOK YOUR BEST. (6 reels). Star, Colleen Moore. A very ordinary picture that I played on a Saturday night and put in a strong line of fillers and in that way escaped censure. You can play this, but be careful of your accompanying selections and buy it right. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LOOK YOUR BEST. (6 reels). Star cast. Nice little comedy-drama. Very light in construction. Seemed to please. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. Nine great reels. Our audience was a bit taken aback when we announced a nine-reel picture, but when they saw it they wanted more. Clever plot, well written and superbly played. Not new but a good bet in any small town. Story and actor played big in advertising; fine attendance. Draw factory people in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Although a trifle longer than desirable, our patrons forgot the hard seats in their absorption in the picture. A distinct novelty, for which we paid a real ENTER MADAME. (6,500 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. A clean-cut, high-class picture that seemed to be over the heads of our audiences. Star has absolutely no box-office power. Few liked this one except the manager. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had terrible attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 10-35. E. W. FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Patrons said Miss Murray was too affected in this one. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for week day better than Sunday. Had light attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS. (6 reels). A fine picture. A change from the regular grind, and very educational. Good photography. Pleased ninety-five per cent. Had very good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Nothing but praise for this picture. It has good pulling power and sends them home feeling they have had their money's worth. The cast is splendid. A suitable attraction for any day, anywhere. Print was in fine shape. Attendance very good. Would advise any New England exhibitor to play it and watch the cash roll in. A United Artists Release

LIGHTED A PARADE TO TELL OF PICKFORD PRODUCTION

This generator from the Pickford studios was set into the Moose parade in San Francisco the opening night of the Legion convention and told 75,000 persons that Rosita was coming to the Strand Theatre in a few days. Good work, and inexpensive.

Cloakey Campaign on Green Goddess

Appreciating the color values of Oriental designs, Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, made a drive on oriental art for the run of The Green Goddess.

Jewelry stores were persuaded to parade their oriental and pseudo oriental ornaments for a window display with a card, furniture concerns dug out their rugs for dressed windows and even the drug stores found a way to follow in with incense burners and powder. Oriental backings were painted for department stores willing to use them, the dresses being as much in harmony with the backing as possible, and for a last kick he borrowed the stage dressing for his prologue from a concern, insured the goods for the week and got co-operative windows and newspaper ads from both the store and the insurance firm.

Fifty Special Cards

Fifty special window cards were painted and cut out to suggest the outline of an Indian temple, and in one window he had a temple setting with a large opening down front through which the display could be seen. This was presumably to heighten the realism, but in fact it served to accentuate the green lighting on the display. An oriental attendant kept incense burning and stuck around the window to give motion to the display.

A candy store was hooked to the Green Goddess kisses and a drug concern to a perfume of the same title. Several soda fountains handled Green Goddess sundaes, with colorful mirror announcements and the tea hook-up from the press book was shown to have real value.

Music stores featured oriental numbers such as Chanson Indouen and even an automobile concern told how much the Green Goddess would have appreciated one of the cars of their make.

The prologue was a solo by a man in a costume similar to that worn by Arliss.

Spread the Circle

Jack Rosenthal got The Hottentot for a belated run. He figured while his Model Theatre was a neighborhood house and the picture had played many other Philadelphia theatres, there must be in each territory some persons who had heard of the play after it had left their neighborhood house.

His ballyhoo was a pair of boys in silks mounted on good looking horses, so he not only thoroughly covered his own territory but sent the boys far afield.

Watching the doors demonstrated the fact that he did draw from new territory. Not only were there many new faces in the crowd, but some people told the attendants that they had come some distance to see the picture they had heard so much about.

This is a point city exhibitors are apt to overlook. On a two or three day run, the verbal advertising on specially good plays gets in its work too late to bring all in, and another house in adjacent territory may be able to pull them in, and possibly bring them back for other shows.

If you exploit every picture, you are no better off than though you exploited none.

Loaned a Generator to Get in a Parade

Generally when picture exploitation gets mixed up with a parade, the ballyhoo comes at the end of the line, as the people are turning away, but the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, managed to horn into the very center of the Moose parade which was given on the evening the American Legion opened its convention.

The Moose wanted lights and M. L. Markowitz arranged for the loan of one of the generator outfits used in the Pickford and Fairbanks studios for night and other work. This supplied the current for four big arcs and a number of smaller lights, and was placed in the center of the big parade, where more than 75,000 persons had to read the huge signs which told that Rosita would shortly be seen.

Generator wagons are familiar to Los Angeles, but it was more of a novelty to San Franciscans, and so it interested in a double aspect, and all of the interest was diverted to the coming of the play.

Not many managers can borrow picture equipment from the studios, but it is always possible to plan for some sort of an intrusion on a local event if the wants of the promoters are studied.

Six Day Kiss Poses Help Sell Picture

The six kiss poses used on the large sheets for Six Days have given inspiration to a lot of managers. The Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, built a false dome in the lobby with six divisions, in each of which was one of the kissing poses, properly lettered, and lighted at night by concealed bulbs. Taken in connection with the name of the author, this suggestion helped to sell the Goldwyn to exceptional business.

But not all of the reliance was placed in a lobby stunt. Good use was made of the news service posters, which the stores seemed glad to get, and a lavish use was made of the heralds which are a reproduction of the 24-sheet. The "How to win a wife or husband in Six Days," copy for which is supplied in Eddie Bonns' valuable yellow sheets, was also effective.

A CASE WHERE TWO HEADS WERE BETTER THAN ONE

H. B. Clarke, of the Casino Theatre, Greenville, S. C., used cutouts from both the 24-sheet and the six for A Man of Action. The use of the double cutout gives a better balance than where either is used alone, the side frames helping the effect.

New Zealand Used a Cyclorama for O. T.

One of the most effective lobbies on Oliver Twist comes from New Zealand, where the Empress Theatre, Wellington, made an unusually elaborate effort to put Jackie Coogan over.

The box office is masked in by a picture of Jackie asking for more, and this is backed by a clever cyclorama covering the entire inner wall space of the lobby, cut for the entrances. The painting shows the streets of London as they appeared in the time of Dickens, with the character cutouts from the lithographs peopling the thoroughfare. Above is a partly cut out banner, with two old-fashioned lanterns hanging in front. Pillars on either side are lettered with the name of the star and the production and there is a second banner above the one just mentioned.

Of course the color values are lost in a monochrome reproduction, but some idea of the effect may be gained in black and white, and we do not recall anything used during the first runs here to match this careful and effective appeal.

Almost as good is a display from the same house on Fury, designed by Harold Righton. This suggests a Pinafore set, but with a cutout of Barthelme standing by the box office. On top of this structure is a ship's bell which is struck by the cashier whenever she has a spare moment. Back of the set is a wind machine on a motor driven gear, and a flasher system contributes fairly realistic lightning.

Lightning seems to be the weak point in lobby work and a flasher is about the best anyone has yet done in the way of a mechanical effect. The employment of a man to operate the carbon and file is often too costly.

We should like to see someone try out a scheme whereby a carbon mounted on a slow moving wheel strikes a file surface at some point in its revolution. It would appear that this should give a better flash, and the building would not be very elaborate if a brush feed is used.

If anyone tries out this scheme, we will appreciate a report and if possible a photograph of the device clear enough to show the details of its construction.

It would be not unlike the sandpaper "puff" on animated locomotive cutouts.

ANOTHER EFFECTIVE DISPLAY FROM THE EMPRESS, WELLINGTON

This was designed by Harold Righton for Fury, and the sight effect is supplemented by a storm wheel and flasher lightning. A ship's bell on the box office is rung by the cashier at odd moments.

Governor Endorsed a Picture Theatre

Getting the Governor to write a warm letter of congratulation and approval was one of the ways Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., put over his sixth anniversary—and it was only the sixth monthly anniversary, at that. He put it on the screen and it got a hand at each showing.

In its essential paragraph, the letter runs: "The people of Pawtucket should feel justly proud of their possession of so splendid a playhouse and I feel sure that they appreciate the efforts of your company to provide the high type of entertainment which has been typical of the Leroy Theatre."

Outside of asking the Governor to make it a legal holiday, you could not look for much more than that.

The celebration bill was The Green Goddess, and the Governor does not have to be ashamed of endorsing that. The mailing program also lists the underlines and Mr. Storin seems to have most of the good ones and few of the poor offerings. He is commencing his anniversaries early, but the more the better. Here's looking forward to the sixth yearly anniversary!

Serial Signs

It's not easy to startle Sandusky citizens, for anything that is out of the ordinary is promptly blamed on George J. Schade. That's why the citizenry refused to thrill with alarm when painted signs recently read "Look out, bootleggers. K. K. K." The people just smiled and wondered what was coming to the Schade Theatre.

They found out a few days later when the completed sign read: "Look out, bootleggers. Every K. K. K. will see Within the Law. Schade Theatre, Sun., Mon., Tues."

They just laughed a little and joined the K. K. K. to this extent, at least.

According to the First National publicity, Mr. Schade does not believe in window work, arguing that the goods display will detract from the theatre announcement. He declares that blank walls and similar places in good locations are much more striking. Even at that we should be afraid to offer Schade a window if we didn't want him to use it. We think Walter Eberhardt is goleming again.

Black Cyclorama Lights Up Nicely

At the Rivoli Theatre the other evening we noted that the metallic cyclorama seems to be black or a very deep blue, taking colors from the spots with a new and very pleasing effect. It does not reflect as much light as a gold or silver curtain, but it gives a change from those backings, and if you have an old curtain too badly tarnished to be effective, perhaps your druggist can suggest some wash which will blacken the surface without destroying the luster.

Another good effect can be obtained through the use of a black scrim drape over a metallic curtain. As in the other effect the contrast of the black with the coloring gives emphasis to the value of the lights.

LONDON STREETS MADE NEW ZEALANDERS HOMESICK

This striking lobby was worked for Oliver Twist by the Empress Theatre, Wellington N. Z. A litho cutout of Jackie dresses the box office, and the remainder of the lobby is masked in with a cyclorama depicting other characters in Old London.

The Small Display Suffices Small House

One advantage of a house with a small lobby is that a small display is amply sufficient. A profile light house for The Isle of Lost Ships is all the Classic Theatre, Stratford, Ont., required, where a larger lobby would have lost this single appeal in a maze of frames. The Classic keeps its frames on the side walls and the seven foot lighthouse was a big flash because it had nothing to fight.

This was not even a practical lighthouse, for there was no provision for a lantern, the entire piece being on the flat, but the white paint caused it to loom large before the pedestrian and it pulled in as much money as a larger display would have done in a wider opening.

A narrow lobby is not always an asset, but it does help to keep down costs in that it requires less decoration to achieve an equal effect. This small lighthouse gives the same suggestion of a big production to Stratford that would require a costly construction in a wide lobby. It's all a matter of relativity, as old Doc Einstein would tell you.

Kid Mats

Tod Browning is using the kid matinee at the Olympic Theatre, New Haven, and finds that it helps to make business better with his adult patrons.

The kiddies pack the house Saturday mornings with a ten-cent admission and talk the rest of the week about the pictures.

Mr. Browning has another and newer stunt. A nearby garage will park the cars of the Olympia patrons at half the regular charge. It is glad to do this since most of the business is brought in through the evening, when the business rush is over, and it is more or less found money.

In towns with time limits for parked cars this idea will make real business.

A First National Release

The lighthouse might have been lost in a large lobby, but in the Classic Theatre Stratford, Ont., it loomed large as a beacon even though it was not provided with illumination. The stunt was useful in selling The Isle of Lost Ships to capacity.

Trailed Baseball to Scatter Ashes

Last year the Branford Theatre, Newark, did so well with a small sign below the player board on which the world's series championship games were reproduced by the Ledger that this year the management made even more of an effort and the sign was twice as large. It was just below the automatic scoreboard and read: "Start the day right by reading the Newark Ledger for full accounts of the world's series, then go to the Branford and see Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengeance."

With football following baseball, there is a chance to get an unusual pitch for about eight months of the year. It may cost more than a board in a vacant lot on some side street, but it costs less, per reading, and is really cheaper.

If you want to make it still more interesting, make a photograph each afternoon, ring some of the faces and give free tickets to those who find their pictures in the paper, permitting this to appear as an evidence of the newspaper's enterprise, so they will contribute the space. It will more than double the crowd and double that double crowd's interest.

The ringed photograph is always a big winner. Work it in.

Likes Colors

Because they get especial attention, W. H. Lawrance, of the Lyric Theatre, Duluth, a Finkelstein and Ruben house, used a two color and black full page advertisement for five weeks in succession on Why Worry, The White Rose, Ashes of Vengeance, The Common Law and Richard the Lion Hearted.

The displays were so attractive that when he came to send them in he could find only one, the page for The Common Law. This is in red and yellow, with the red sparingly used to pick out the yellow. It is well done, both as to layout and coloring, but it will not reproduce.

Mr. Lawrance avoids the temptation to use too much of either color, knowing that to do so will defeat the display. He writes that he found the attraction value to be greater than the additional cost. In other words it was a good buy.

Color work is seldom used these days, and we have not yet seen anything to equal the color displays S. Barret McCormick used to get out for the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. After all these years they still stand in a class by themselves.

Cleaned with It

Will R. Winch, of the Wigwam Theatre, El Paso, Texas, got the Fox pictures of the Japanese earthquake before the other news reels came in, and he felt so exultant over the beat that he preceded the film with a special slide which read:

"In presenting the first pictures of the Japanese earthquake, the Fox Film Corporation has beaten all other news reels by several days. The second lot of the Fox pictures will be shown here by the time the other news reels get out their first ones."

There is a nice, swift kick to that last line.

THE WORLD SERIES IS OVER BUT IT WILL COME AGAIN

And next year perhaps you can show your own sign to a mob like this if you act in time to get in with the newspaper. This is the second year the Branford Theatre, Newark, has horned in on baseball, and the sign gets larger year after year.

The Small Cut Can Make Large Space

This long drop for Mister Smith's Theatre in Indianapolis is 125 by 2 and gives a nice display with an indifferent one column cut for a foundation. There is a lot of waste space, which some managers will very probably regard as an extravagant waste, but that white space is the most profitable investment represented, since it gives to a two column display the prominence of a three without the additional cost. Throw that panel out to the edge or even to within a quarter of an inch of the edge and the effect will be lost. It will be a two column display in a two column space, but with a one inch margin you cannot kill that display with anything else on the page except more white space, and it is hard to kill even with that. Coming as it does on a page largely given to heavy cuts, black type and splashy hand drawn titles, it stands out like the moonlit window in a dark barn. You cannot pass it by, and having stopped, you remain to read. Mister Smith's is a little sister to the Circle, and good work is to be expected, but we think that in this display li'l sister beats big sister at a smaller cost.

Too Much Filling Hurts This Effect

There is a little too much type in this oblong from the Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, to give the best artistic effect, but it is difficult to suggest any copy to drop. For that matter it would not even be well to cut the boldface italic to a lighter line. This might make for effect in the art display, but it probably would not give the same emphasis since there is so little talk, so it might be as well to declare this all around good, even though it does seem to be a little too well filled. As a matter of fact there is such good selling copy that it would be a shame to waste any, and there is not too much, at best. It's the right approach, not extravagant, but with an appreciation of the excellence of this production and just enough reference to the initial version to back up the "new" in the circular title. More, there is a nice appreciation of the need for hand work in the circle that is equalled only by the avoidance of this form where type was possible and preferable. It is a well considered layout 65 lines across six, which gives ample, though not extravagant display. It's not a beautifully artistic advertisement, but it is far from being inartistic and it is intelligent and hardworking. The chief achievement to be noted is the display value of the circle and the care taken not to kill this with a too heavy border or too large a mass of cuts. That circle is something to remember and copy, but if you use it, keep large cuts away. A circle with large scene cuts on either side—and scene cuts are a terrible temptation to most artists—would have been a bust.

smaller face, because then it would have been easier to read, and the star names would have been plenty large in an 18 point, which would have given a little more spacing to throw the title into greater prominence, but after all the Pittsburgh busts, this is a slightly and effective contribution.

are not as good as line drawings. The problem here seems to have been whether to use type and line or reverse and half tones. The latter were decided upon, probably because it was felt that the strips would increase the prominence of the space, which is four tens, by the way. Set together so that star and title joined, this would give a black band that would cut off from the rest of the type, but by splitting it up and using a cut on the right to drop down, the entire space is practically framed by the two cuts and the reverse strips. It is a workmanlike job throughout, though we do not like so much all capitals.

More Fancy Letters Spoil Display Value

Here's another good argument in favor of type for displaying a title. This is from the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland and offers a good proportion of type talk, with line cuts for the chief characters instead of half-tone blotches, but the artist has lettered the title and with an outline letter he gets about a tenth the value of a similar sized letter in honest bold face type. Sometimes hand lettering will help a title display, but this is merely a slight departure from a regular outline letter, and even an outline type of the same size would have been better and a bold would have been greatly to be preferred. It might be suggested that since Arliss is the star and since his name will

Apart from these defects the layout is good, and the title is not as badly displayed here as would have been the case had the artist or compositor wedged it into

The handling of the type display is capitally done, though good type display is too characteristic of the present Stillman spaces to call for especial mention. This layout would be noteworthy if it came from some cities. It is not a poor display from any angle, but it is not as good as most of the recent Stillman appeals and is capable of material improvement without much work. The selling talk is mighty nice writing. The space is 150 by 4; a curtailed quarter page. This is larger than most cities use, but Cleveland is getting back to the large spaces though it has not yet come to the half pages used a few years ago.

The credit line in the circle, which has come almost to be a Paramount trademark is replaced by type where the circle would have been much better, but apart from this the result is excellent, though the cut does not come up very well. A space such as this is to be preferred to one carrying two to four single column figures. But one of these days we shall welcome with shouts of joy an advertisement in which appeal is made on Miss Swanson's acting as well as her gowns. but we think it is too meaningless to do any ticket peddling. The space might better have been used to get a larger display. For the lines crowded over to the left. These are large enough to be legible as they stand but with space at command, it would have been better layout to use only the one cut and swell these lines. This seems to be an all too common error about cuts. Too many agents lay out their work to get in all the cuts they can accumulate. They seem to feel that cuts will sell. They seldom do, and surely not when they do not get over a real idea. One good cut helps in that it gets attention to the space. If it is characteristic of the story, as in the present instance, it may help sell the story though its own appeal in addition to getting attention for the type, but it is seldom that two cuts will sell a penny better than one, and to use a second where the one is as good as the single figure is simply to throw away either money or space, or both. Get one good cut, put it where it will show to the best advantage, and then ride on that cut. It's much the better way.

policy will clean up a lot of money with a fifteen hour run each day, and even at the heavy advertising costs in Chicago it probably paid well. The open letter is no longer the startling novelty it was a few years ago, but it can still go into a page of small displays, in which no house gets much more than 200 lines and hog the attention. On a crowded page, heavy with hand lettering and solid frames and all of the other devices for making small spaces seem large, this stands out like a monument on a prairie, the first thing you see when you come to the page and the last thing to be seen as you leave the division. It will be noted that there is comparatively little of the space given the story itself. The premiere, the director, the grind and the stars are all more important selling points than the story itself and so these are sold over the play itself because they will sell more through offering unknown factors. People know the director and players and are more apt to buy them than the story, so the Orpheum puts its weight on these points, while not neglecting the plot. It is well planned in spite of its apparent simplicity. Every word is weighed, as it should be where words cost money.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

THE exhibitor has his choice of presenting Warner Brothers' picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel either as "Lucretia Lombard," the original title of the book, or as "Flaming Passion."

AND therein lies a most emphatic answer to the horde of lay and newspaper critics who have taken motion picture producers harshly to task for changing titles of plays and books when the latter are made into screen productions.

WE stress the importance of this idea of changing titles in this department largely because we believe that a well known title is bought chiefly because of its supposed advertising value. But we are not going into a lengthy discourse as to the comparative merits of an "original" title as opposed to a "box office" title. All we are interested in is advertising and advertising values.

We don't know how many copies of "Lucretia Lombard" were sold or how many persons read the book. But we do know that to the large majority of fans the title "Lucretia Lombard" means little or nothing. There is no denying, however, that Kathleen Norris' name means a lot at the box office. The question is, therefore, how much more does the title "Flaming Passions" mean in an advertising sense than the title "Lucretia Lombard?"

It will be interesting to learn just what percentage of exhibitors choose the original title and what percentage choose to present the picture under its "box office" title.

UNDER Warner Brothers' plan the choice of title is put up squarely to the exhibitor, and the degree in which the plan meets favor with exhibitors may be a gauge to producers in the future as to what course to pursue regarding titles—and may be a means of proving to the critics just whose "fault" it is that titles are changed.

THIS is the first time, to our knowledge, that a picture has been released under a choice of titles, with the exception of a state right picture issued some months ago, which did not get such a national distribution as the Warner release is assured.

The decision to give exhibitors the option as to the title under which to present their picture was a last-minute proposition with the Warner executives, we are informed, and for that reason there is only a limited amount of advertising matter available under the title "Flaming Passion."

Included in this latter is a twenty-four-sheet, a six-sheet, a three-sheet and a one-sheet, as well as a special slide. There is also ready, of course, a special main title and a special trailer. These are not illustrated or mentioned in the press book, due to

This six-sheet on Mae Murray's forthcoming Metro production adapts itself particularly for use as a marquee cutout. The single figure may also be used alone as lobby cutout. Other posters in the line also are good for cutouts.

Samples of the Posters on Preferred's "May Time"

Preferred has been issuing some good paper on its releases. For "Maytime" Jerry Beatty has designed some novel "idea" posters, of which are reproduced above both three-sheets and both one-sheets. Our only complaint with the posters is the over-abundance of credit lines. But contracts are contracts—and motion picture genius must be served!

"The Eternal City"

Modernized Version of Hall Caine Novel Is Pictorially Beautiful and Has Strong Audience Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In screening "The Eternal City," Sir Hall Caine's celebrated novel which was written many years ago, the story, with the consent and collaboration of the author, has been brought up to date and we find the hero, David, as a leader of the Fascisti in their successful struggle with the "Reds." There are shots of Mussolini, the leader, and even a flash of the King of Italy, as well as scenes showing the triumph of the Fascisti.

Against this thoroughly modernized background we follow the tempestuous romance of David and Roma to its ultimate happy outcome. While many who have read the book may probably regret the changes in the story, for the large number who are unfamiliar with it, the bringing of the action up to the present time and having it deal with events which have been widely publicized in the press will add additional elements of interest.

"The Eternal City" is a big production and one which should have a strong audience appeal. There is a strong love story which reminds one of the old adage that true love never runs smooth; the element of patriotism is also an outstanding one, and the point that Rome is "the eternal city" is strikingly brought out, for against the ruins of another civilization we see the action of modern romance and political upheaval.

There is effective drama in the romance of David and Roma, and in the conflict between Bonelli, who is behind the Reds, and David, as a leader of the Fascisti, both loving Roma. There is excitement and thrills in the big, swirling mobs as they rush through the streets of Rome, and suspense in the scene where they entirely fill the ruins of the coliseum awaiting David, who has been trapped by Bonelli.

In filming this production, which First National is distributing, an American cast was sent to Italy under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, with the result that the backgrounds are absolutely authentic. Great care was used in their selection and the scenes have been beautifully photographed with the result that they form a beautiful and striking point in the appeal of the picture.

The action of the picture is concentrated in the hands of but few characters. Barbara LaMarr as Roma does effective emotional work and was an excellent selection for the role. Bert Lytell gives a good portrayal of the role of David, while Lionel Barrymore in the unsympathetic heavy role of Bonelli gives a fine performance. Entirely satisfactory is Richard Bennett as the whimsical scapegrace Bruno and Montagu Love as a prominent "Red."

Roma, with a talent for sculpture, accepts help from Baron Bonelli, goes to Rome, and as Roma Valonna achieves great success. David returns and is unable to locate her; joining the Fascisti, he becomes Mussolini's right hand man in his campaign against the Reds, who are causing strikes and terror. David, believing the Valonna woman is Bonelli's mistress, denounces her. She goes to David, denies the accusation, and they make up. Bonelli, who is secretly the power behind the Reds, determines to break up this affair. He tells Roma it is he who is responsible for her success and arranges with the Reds to capture Rossi and cripple the Fascisti movement. In a fight Rossi kills Bonelli and, leading the Fascisti, entirely overpowers the Reds. Roma takes blame for Bonelli's murder, thereby convincing David she has not betrayed him. David hastens to shoulder the blame himself, but is pardoned for his service to Italy, and he and Roma finally find happiness.

Universal Production for Hoot Gibson
Keeps Up Fast Pace of Entertaining Action

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Between the Hollywood scenes in the first half and the Sheik atmosphere in the last, this picture keeps up a highly entertaining trend of action. Hoot Gibson is at his best. This attraction is above the average program picture and should please beyond the star's usual clientele.

In addition to a good supporting cast, a number of screen celebrities are seen. A light touch of comedy, broadening now and then into burlesque, colors the entire picture and makes it very agreeable entertainment. Clever subtitles add to the amusement.

The hero's experiences in the making of various moving pictures which he succeeds in ruining are full of the awkward blunders that make Hoot Gibson effective. As a Roman guard, he has one or two really hilarious scenes. Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry, Reginald Denny, Hobart Henley and King Baggot, Edward Sedgwick and Laura La Plante are seen in studio scenes for brief moments. They increase the picture's appeal and have no obtrusive effect on the actual trend of the story which is entertaining from start to finish. The desert scenes and the seige of the town furnish a picturesque and melodramatic close. Billie Dove, playing opposite the star is charming and beautiful and the picture has all the important factors of a popular attraction.

"Vincennes"

Intensely Interesting Subject Is Third Number of Pathe's Historical Series

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

One of the deeply affecting situations in history gives this third number of the "Chronicles of America" series a great realistic force. It is another credit to the producers, the Yale University Press. It shows a splendid appreciation of the drama in the development of America, which, without the slightest resort to hokum, is tremendously appealing and thrilling.

The gallant campaign of George Rogers Clark, who faced the opposition of the British and the Indians in claiming the Northwest for America, is an intensely interesting subject as treated here. In the first reel the dangers of the proposed expedition are suggested in an impressive incident. A man, accompanied by his wife and two sons, proceed on horseback to make their home in the West against the advice of friends. Only one of the party, the elder son, lives to tell of the Indian massacre which befalls the family.

From then on, the greater issue of the nation's progress claims the interest. Clark's expedition to Vincennes, undertaken in the dead of winter with miles of swamp land to traverse, hunger, sickness and Indian treachery to contend with, and finally the fight with the British who were in possession of Vincennes, is a picture that no one should miss. Leslie Austin gives a splendid interpretation of this role. Robert Gaillard is a commanding, interesting figure as the British Military Governor, Henry Hamilton, and a brief impressive glimpse of Patrick Henry is afforded by the performance of William Walcott.

"Vincennes," in three reels, is shorter than the first two of the series, but includes fully the same amount of dramatic interest and action.

"Anna Christie"

First National Version of Big Stage Success Has Unpleasant Theme But Is Intensely Dramatic

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Eugene O'Neill's play, "Anna Christie," which was a big success on the stage in New York and which created considerable discussion because of its unusual theme and treatment, has been transferred to the screen by Thomas H. Ince and is being presented by First National.

The theme is not a pleasant one and the story deals with the lowest elements of mankind, the very dregs of society, and of primal passions of sex, with the locale along the waterfront of a big city, in a saloon and aboard a coal barge. The characters are a sailor, who neglects his family, his daughter, whom he believes to be innocent but who has been betrayed by her own cousin and tasted the dregs of life, a woman of bad reputation who is the companion of the girl's father, and a big, burly, boasting, heavy-drinking sailor who falls in love with the girl.

Such surroundings and characters form the basis of a tremendously dramatic story. Conflict of wills and emotions which forms the groundwork of drama is present, in every move and situation. There is hardly a moment during the entire story when there is not strong drama with continual conflict between the girl, her father and her lover.

It is a picture that will undoubtedly appeal to those who are willing to subordinate all other considerations, such as the unpleasantness of the story, its degraded atmosphere, its bare dealing with the seamy side of life, for its theme is a broad one and there is no mistaking the purport of the story. Many will not like and will even be shocked by the whole theme and particularly with the scene where the brow-beaten girl is followed to her room by her degenerate cousin and the clear inference of the scenes immediately following.

Practically no changes have been made in transferring the story to the screen and it would appear that the success of the picture has been staked on the tremendously dramatic story. It is a picture that should be given unusually careful consideration by an exhibitor before presenting it to his audience that he may decide whether it is the type of production which his patrons desire.

The picture is portrayed by an excellent cast. Blanche Sweet, who is featured, is an excellent type for the girl and gives a fine performance in a role that is not always sympathetic. William Russell is excellent as the blustering sailor lover, while Eugenie Besserer is unusually realistic as the degraded woman of the water-front. George Marion, who played the same role in the stage version, is cast as the girl's father and is exceptionally fine. His work is a delight.

Story

Chris, a Swedish seaman, remains away from home for long periods, spending for drink the money that would take him home. His wife, wearied of waiting, comes with her baby Anna to relatives in Minnesota. Years pass; Chris, who in the meantime has not seen Anna, is captain of a coal barge. Anna writes she is coming to see him, and he expects to find her an innocent, pure girl. On arrival, she gets in conversation with Martha, a woman with whom Chris is having a disreputable affair, and tells her how she had been betrayed by her own cousin and then lived with another man until she had come to hate all men and was sick of the world. At Martha's suggestion she keeps this from her father and goes with him on a voyage on the barge. Chris, blaming

"the old devil sea" for all his troubles, determines Anna shall not marry a sailor.

A wreck brings four men to seek refuge on the barge; one is Matt Burke, and despite everything, love ripens between them. Anna, rather than tell of her past, decides to go away. Chris and Matt get in a fight, and, disgusted, she reveals her past. Both leave her alone and go to drown their sorrows in drink. Chris saves her from suicide and later Burke, still under the influence of drink, returns and says no matter what she has been he still loves her and wants to marry her.

"Twenty-One"

Richard Barthelme's Latest for First National Is a Production of Only Average Appeal

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Richard Barthelme's newest First National production, "Twenty-One," is entirely different in type from "The Fighting Blade," "The Bright Shawl" or any of his recent pictures. It is by no means a pretentious production, and much of the action follows along familiar lines. To some this may prove a disappointment while others will welcome the change.

Barthelme, as in his earlier starring pictures, appears in the role of a boy who is the victim of circumstances, but this time he is a rich youth whose mother makes a mollycoddle of him much to the disgust of his father. There is a romance with a girl far beneath him on the social ladder and the distinctive angle of the picture is the playing up of this point that he cannot go ahead and marry the girl anyway until he is twenty-one as his father would have the ceremony annulled. This gives rise to a situation in which the boy becomes a taxi driver and in a sequence which is out-and-out melodrama, he saves his father from thugs who have lured him to a garage.

Though the star has a congenial role and gets considerable sympathy, the story does not seem quite worthy of his talents, and despite the very good work of Dorothy Mackaill and a well-selected cast, and the direction of John S. Robertson, the production as a whole is somewhat disappointing.

Much of the story is interesting but at times, and particularly toward the end, the interest drops and the action becomes commonplace. Possibly under less capable auspices the picture would prove more satisfying, but we have gotten to expect more from Barthelme and John S. Robertson than is brought forth in this picture. As it stands, it is but little better than the average program picture.

"Stephen Steps Out"

Paramount Introduces Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Who Promises to be a Success

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Press-agented as "the real American boy of the screen," Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. steps forth and to a charming degree makes good this tremendous reputation. He is a new type among juvenile stars. His picture makes a great appeal to youth and has something that all the fans will enjoy.

While his famous name will no doubt attract widely upon the occasion of his initial appearance, the young star is possessed of a personality and ability that, once introduced, needs no "prop" whatever. He is natural, genuine and altogether winning. His performance shows a degree of poise and good taste that will swing public opinion at once in his favor.

Richard Harding Davis' story, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent" furnishes material that is breezy and entertaining. It transports the boy from a college dilemma to Turkey, a setting for much intrigue and action. It is all brightened by bits of good comedy and characteristic "Americanisms" that will be popular. Sentiment, too, is an important factor. The old college professor who flunks young Stephen in history, thereby losing his position and the rose-covered cottage where his sweet wife and he lived for years, is affectingly played by James O. Barrows.

The love element is absent but not conspicuously so. It is a boy's story but one that both sexes will enjoy, because of its wholesomeness and action. The cast has valuable personalities such as Theodore Roberts, Noah Beery, Frank Currier little Pat Moore and Harry Myers. Much of the picture's appeal is due to Joseph Henabery's excellent directing, and to fine photography.

Paramount Releases Six-Reel Feature Showing Adventuresome Cruise

Around the World

A honeymoon cruise among the South Sea Islands as undertaken by Commodore and Mrs. A. Y. Gowen brings the spectator face to face with some new degrees of savagery and many interesting sights. Commodore Gowen of Cleveland, Ohio, made this sixteen months' trip, encircling the globe in a 98-foot motor boat.

Although the trip included a visit to a number of points that are centers of civilization, the main emphasis is upon the extreme savage types. Some of these are weird and terrifying in the extreme. For the average person these types seem to have a compelling fascination. Others, probably comprising a smaller class, will find more entertainment in the shots of Java for instance. There are a number of attractive glimpses of this city. A dance by small native girls is one of the most colorful scenes in the film and by far the most charming.

Among the places at which the "Speejacks" stopped are Samoa, Tahiti, the Paumotu Islands, Java, Genoa and New Guinea, and Australia. The Australian Aborigines show striking evidences of some of the most undreamed of brutality. The Bird Hunters of New Guinea are another savage race.

A personal note is more or less evident and adds a genial touch to the atmosphere. The spectator is made to feel something of the adventuresome spirit of the "Speejacks" cruisers and follows their voyage with an interest that at times approaches enthusiasm. Ira J. Ingraham, former head cameraman for Burton Holmes, was the photographer.

Good Program Feature with William Russell as Star Presented by Fox

One of the best Fox vehicles which has recently been afforded William Russell is "When Odds Are Even." The star has been well directed by James Flood in an entertaining story of adventure and love interest. His admirers and in fact any average program audience should enjoy it.

The conflict is between two mining companies for the possession of an opal mine on a South Sea isle. The ocean voyage, the dramatic incidents on the island and the climax, consisting of the race to the mine, afford a well-constructed picture with good suspense. Good types and a fairly convincing atmosphere help to make these South Sea scenes interesting. There is enough heavy action to supply necessary energy to the picture, although William Russell has fewer fistic encounters than usual. He has, nevertheless, a strong role, which is almost sure to please all, and especially those who like to see him in the conventional rather than Western parts.

He is supported chiefly by Dorothy Devore, who plays with a zest quite in keeping with the rather adventurous character of the action. The other characters are well drawn and the picture should please average tastes anywhere.

"Wild Bill Hickok"

William S. Hart Returns in Paramount
Drama of the West of Fifty Years Ago
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Bill Hart, his two guns and a horse, are once more a powerful combination in giving this star's admirers what they have been awaiting for two years. Despite a large and capable cast, it is really a one-man picture. Expert gunplay settles the disputes—and there are enough to give the picture ample suspense and excitement. Men, especially, will find it entertaining.

"Wild Bill Hickok" is a character who distinguishes himself to the extent of being commended by President Lincoln. A few authentic characters, such as Lincoln, Custer, "Bat" Masterson, Calamity Jane and others, are introduced to help give the picture a background. Wild Bill is told to move on from his Western shack by a gang of bandits—a threat which he accepts of course as a challenge. Hence the first big thrill of the picture shows Bill saving himself, his horse and his cabin by dynamic gun play.

His next feat is the cleaning up of a wild town. The battle is spectacularly staged with Bill standing alone in the street spotlight and the gang firing at him from behind barrels. The suspense is well managed, although his various achievements will impress some as being superhuman. His career is terminated because of blindness coming on, but when his arch-enemy remarks that Bill is losing his nerve, he has another chance for heroics, and in an amazingly swift battle of guns, he kills his opponent. There is good love interest, although the ending brings about a separation. The poker game introduces some effective comedy along with a strain of human interest. Altogether the picture should bring satisfaction to the houses where William S. Hart's reputation is high.

Role in Universal Crook Drama
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

The story of a crook's plot for revenge against a judge of the criminal court is told in rather slow-moving style in this Universal drama. Its motive is not entirely convincing. Laura La Plante is appealing and where the plot will not be subjected to too close scrutiny, the picture may be a fair attraction.

Its greatest drawback is the slow, ponderous action. It has the atmosphere of tragedy throughout, with scarcely any relief except for Laura La Plante's pleasing personality. The theme does not seem to warrant five reels of this. It is not more serious than countless others that have been treated with a more human balance of comedy and occasional lightness.

The death of a notorious crook in prison is the actuating incident. The early scenes touching upon this are dismal and long drawn out and form the basis for Boston Blackie's revenge against the Judge who would not waver from the law sufficiently to allow the man to die in his own home. Things are complicated when Blackie's girl actually falls in love with the Judge's son whom she is to trick. There is a lack of realism throughout that will hinder the picture's popularity with a critical audience.

Fight Against Tax

New York Exhibitors Urge Congressmen to Act

The first big step taken by exhibitors and film exchanges in central and northern New York, in an effort to bring about the removal of the admission tax, occurred during the last few days when letters were sent out from Albany to every exhibitor as far west as Syracuse, north to the Canadian line, and south to Poughkeepsie and Binghamton, calling upon them, individually and collectively, to present the matter squarely to their respective congressmen. No effort will be spared in the fight which central and northern New York exhibitors will make to bring about a repeal of the present law.

While the exhibitors in the Albany section of New York State are unorganized with the exception of those in the Capital City, it is possible that a meeting may soon be called at some central point in order to present a solid front which will include every exhibitor within the district.

The Albany Film Board of Trade already has joined hands with the exhibitors in the campaign.

Pathe reports great interest already aroused in the two-reel special "Why Elephants Leave Home" which is described as a vaudeville, wild west show and circus combined. The production ran for twenty weeks at Moss' Empire Theatre in London and was hailed in England as a big success. It was filmed in Ceylon under government auspices and the scenes were secured during one of the great elephant round-ups which occur at intervals of from three to seven years. In addition to thrills, there are many interesting sidelights.

"Flowing Gold" Cast Completed

Richard Walton Tully has commenced production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" for First National release. Other prominent players engaged, in addition to Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nilsson, who will play the leads, include Josephine Crowell, who will play Ma Briskow; Bert Woodruff, cast for Pa Briskow; John Roche, who will be Buddy, and Charles A. Sellon for Tom Parker. There are several minor roles yet to be cast. Joseph De Grasse will be the director, and the picture will be released by First National.

What He Did to Society!

C. B. King, manager of the Crown Theatre, at Mobile, Ala., put across a publicity stunt during the three days that he ran the Hodkinson picture, "The Drivin' Fool."

Under "Personals" in his local paper he inserted the following teaser ad: "Please, Sweet Daddy, go just a little faster so they can call you 'The Drivin' Fool!'"

Harlan Will Star in "Poisoned Paradise"

As a reward for his excellent work in "The Virginian," Kenneth Harlan is to have the star part in "Poisoned Paradise," the story of Monte Carlo and Paris, a Preferred Picture that is just being started by B. P. Schulberg in his studios in Los Angeles.

Kenneth Harlan has played a wide range of parts in his recent Preferred Pictures. He was a young aviator in "The Broken Wing," a New York East Side scrapper in "April Showers" and a sturdy, strong-willed cowboy in "The Virginian."

In "Poisoned Paradise," a novel by Robert W. Service, he leads a life of adventure at Monte Carlo, finally coming into possession of a secret that seemingly gives him power to break the bank at the gambling resort.

The story is said to be the first authentic description of Monte Carlo ever written. Robert W. Service, the author, has lived in Monte Carlo for years and his novel tells the truth about the lives of the gamblers and notorious women of the famous resort.

Clara Bow, who first leaped into fame in "Down to the Sea in Ships" and who has added to her reputation by her work in "Maytime" and "Black Oxen," plays the girl from Paris.

The picture will be directed by Gasnier, who is thoroughly familiar with Monte Carlo.

Tourneur Sees Return of Shorter Features

That shorter feature productions will come back into favor among producers as a result of the present condition of the producing industry, is the contention of Maurice Tourneur, leading director, following a recent survey of producing and exhibiting conditions.

"The present slump in the producing industry has proved to film executives that it is a fallacy to make a so-called big production for the sake of achieving a physically big picture," says Mr. Tourneur.

"Splendor, tremendous sets and long footage will never prove good sales points to either the exhibitor or the public in the distribution of pictures. Big sets must have a reason for being in the picture aside from the belief that they offer an excuse for higher film rentals and higher admission prices.

"Since my affiliation with M. C. Levee in the production of First National pictures we have enforced a definite policy of telling our stories in six or seven reels. This policy has saved us from making the mistakes that have led others into trouble. It is my belief that this policy will be general in the producing industry within the next two months."

Many Exhibitors Think Highly of "Going Up"

Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" is "the best box office bet in years," is the opinion of L. B. Gross, manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal. Just after the beginning of what has proved a highly successful run, Mr. Gross informed J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors.

Showing at the Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac, Wis., "Going Up" scored such a hit that its run was extended, said E. C. Prinsen, the manager of that theatre. Manager H. S. Ford of the Olympic Theatre, Wichita Falls, telegraphed to Associated's branch manager in Dallas: "Douglas MacLean in 'Going Up' packing them in matinee and night."

I. M. Binnard, president and manager of the Liberty, Lewiston, Idaho, wrote to the branch sales manager in Spokane: "When we previewed 'Going Up' I was, as you know, very enthusiastic and thoroughly sold on the picture. I feel certain that 'Going Up' will prove to be one of the very finest entertainment pictures released this year by any company."

Breaks Records

"Why Worry" at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre broke every record for the house during the first and second weeks of its showing and is now on the way to a new high-water mark for the third week," reads a dispatch received this week from Los Angeles.

The telegram adds that the new Harold feature for Pathe has proved a sensation and "has surpassed all of Grauman's expectations."

Reviewers Praise Hodkinson Film

The historical romance, "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," built around the love story of that famous Englishman, Lord Nelson, has completed two very successful runs at the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md., and the City Theatre, New York.

The Baltimore Evening Sun says: "Here in all probability is about the loveliest woman the screen has ever brought us." The New York Daily News says: "The Hodkinson people have really got hold of something good in 'The Affairs of Lady Hamilton.'  And in it is the most beautiful English movie actress we have ever seen."

Metro Working on Service's Poem

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is the Sawyer-Lubin production which Metro will release in February as part of its extensive new-season schedule. Robert W. Service, who wrote "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," spent many years in the Yukon.

Clarence G. Badger has been selected to direct this production and Barbara La Marr is to portray "the lady known as Lou." Mr. Service is to assist in the production of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," giving Mr. Badger his first-hand knowledge of the Yukon.

Exploitation Aids for "Michael O'Halloran"

Supplementary exploitation aids are now being prepared for the Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran," adapted from Gene Stratton-Porter's novel.

The new booklet contains suggestions for putting across Boys' Week, "Be Square" clubs among boys and tie-ups with merchants on the "Be Square" slogan.

Enrico Guazzoni Arrives with Print of Big Film "Messalina"

Signor Enrico Guazzoni, prominent Italian director, arrived in New York November 9. He brought with him a print of his latest production, "Messalina," which is regarded as one of the most sensational European films of the year. Signor Guazzoni will best be remembered for his magnificent production of "Quo Vadis," one of the first elaborate spectacles to be made. It was released in this country during 1913 and is yet being shown. Signor Guazzoni has placed himself under the management of Ferdinand V. Luporini, who is well known in the film business, with headquarters in the Straus Building.

When questioned regarding conditions in Europe, Signor Guazzoni said: "The situation in the Ruhr has brought about an unsettled condition and it is the hope of everyone that the United States will intervene in order to help to bring about a settlement. In Italy there have been no more strikes since the advent of Mussolini to power. Everyone is working and happy."

"I came to the United States to attend to the sale of 'Messalina' after the re-editing and titling to answer the requirements of the American market. I have many plans regarding future productions but do not care to discuss them at this time. American pictures in Italy are well liked, particularly from the technical point of view. Conditions in Italy as to the production of motion pictures are on the way to improvement, after a period of stagnation which has been beneficial to the industry because it served to eliminate the spurious elements."

The production of "Messalina," following such films as "Cleopatra" and "Julius Caesar," was regarded with great interest by the King and Queen and others of the royal family, as well as the officials of the Italian government. They understood the far reaching advantages of publicity to be derived from the faithful reproduction of the Roman era. They were constant visitors during the construction of the settings and the filming of the scenes and extended all possible co-operation, including the use of the Italian cavalry.

The story of "Messalina" is laid in the year of 12 A. D. at the time when the Roman Empire was at its height. Messalina was a woman of rare beauty but of easy virtue, who lived in the Imperial Palace with her husband Claude, who was nephew to Emperor Caligula and a consul. Caligula was a great tyrant and Messalina took advantage of the hatred of his people to make her husband Emperor. Her friend and companion was an Egyptian princess, until they both fell in love with a young slave, famous as a chariot driver. The jealousy between the two, the plot to outwit each other and the hate of the princess for a young girl, a slave, with whom the driver was in love, brought about intrigue and drama which reached the climax in the death of the princess and Messalina.

The settings are tremendous and perfect as to detail, it is said. Exact reproductions of the arena, the forum and the rostrum were constructed of cement. The exactness of the atmosphere created may be judged by the fact that the minister of public instruction had all pupils taken to the forum so that they could obtain a proper impression of the grandeur of the Roman Empire. Historical societies and foreign students gave lessons there. The largest scene required the services of ten thousand extras. The fights of the gladiators and the uprising of the mobs have been pictured realistically, it is stated.

The picture has been purchased by the Pathe Company of London for England at a big price. It is not to be released until 1924.

ENRICO GUAZZONI

Picture Is Heavily Booked

"Pioneer Trails," Vitagraph Film, was booked in sixty houses for showings in fourteen days in Cleveland, Ohio, beginning October 29. Similar bookings for simultaneous showings in groups of motion picture theatres have been arranged for Toledo and Columbus territories. Special ad-Columbus territories.

Ovation Given Young Douglas Fairbanks

The ordeal of having his hand shaken by hundreds of people who pressed forward Sunday evening in the mezzanine of the Rivoli Theatre to congratulate him upon his performance in his first motion picture was almost too much for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. For the truth is, young Doug is a regular, honest-to-goodness American boy and had a good book back at the Algonquin Hotel, which he had left right in the most exciting part, to be dragged over to the Rivoli to see just how New York people were going to like his first Paramount starring picture, "Stephen Steps Out."

Never was a first-night theatre audience more enthusiastic than was the throng that went to the Rivoli to see this young new star in his first screen appearance. Applause was frequent and spontaneous. The World critic said: "It is one of the very truest and best cinema comedies of the year, and it proves that the boy is a natural actor of fine pantomimic ability."

"He has a Fairbanks way with him," said the Tribune. "The impression that he made on the Rivoli audience yesterday was a most favorable one," said Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald.

Although young Fairbanks will not be fourteen for another month, he has much poise.

Work Progressing Rapidly on New Pickford Production

More than one-third of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," Mary Pickford's forthcoming screen production, has been filmed, according to W. W. Kerrigan, business manager for the Mary Pickford company. Over 300 scenes have been shot.

The gigantic gates to Rutland Castle have been duplicated on a stretch of land about forty miles from the Pickford-Fairbanks studio and this location is to be used next, according to present plans.

The cast for this screen version of Charles Major's novel of the same name, includes Allan Forrest, Claire Eames, Marc McDermott, Anders Randolph, Wilfred Lucas, Eric Mayne, Estelle Taylor, Lottie Pickford Forrest and Malcolm Waite.

Tom Terriss has been engaged to direct it.

"The Thrill Girl" Under Way

After spending several days filming horseback riding scenes and airplane stunts, the Robert Hill company has returned to Universal City to begin the interior scenes on "The Thrill Girl," Laura La Plante's first feature under her new contract with Universal.

Edward Hearn, juvenile character actor, will play the lead opposite Miss La Plante. Others in the cast are William Welsh, Frances Raymond, Albert Hart, Bert Roach, Margaret Cullington, Rolfe Sedan, Fred De Silva and Stanley Blystone.

Rex Beach Shearing

Rex Beach has been spending a good deal of his time lately at the Paramount Long Island studio assisting Lloyd Sheldon in editing and titling the Paramount picture made from his story, "Big Brother."

Preferred Planning Ten Big Productions; Studios Active

Plans for ten special productions, to be filmed as Preferred Pictures in the immediate future, are making the Schulberg Studios in Los Angeles one of the busiest spots on the West Coast.

Filming of three pictures is being started almost simultaneously. "Poisoned Paradise," from the novel by Robert W. Service, has been begun by Director Gasnier with an all-star cast headed by Clara Bow.

With the completion of continuities, now being prepared, work will begin on "The Breath of Scandal," from the novel by Edwin Balmer, and "White Man," a screen version of George Agnew Chamberlain's novel.

Since the three stories are of widely differing characters, are laid in widely separated territories and involve the construction of settings of an elaborate nature, three armies of carpenters and technical men have been organized for the preliminary tasks that must be completed before cameras begin to grind.

"Poisoned Paradise" will be filmed amid the picturesque luxuries of Monte Carlo and the equally picturesque but not so luxurious slum districts of Paris. In both cases photographic reproductions of the actual districts to be shown have been used in order to make possible as realistic glimpses of Monte Carlo and the French metropolis as if the companies actually had worked abroad.

"White Man" is a drama of the jungle. One of the most interesting of the feats that must be accomplished during its filming is the moving of one of California's famous big trees from its natural habitat to the Schulberg Studios. Other settings include a genuine jungle, which has been located not far below the Mexican border, and a glimpse of the Metropolitan Opera House and its stage in New York.

"The Breath of Scandal," based on Mr. Balmer's story of modern society, required several elaborate American city backgrounds.

The remaining pictures, seven in number, will be filmed as rapidly as the physical requirements can be met, in order to make possible the release on schedule time of the fifteen Preferred Pictures announced as the season's output by this organization.

Noted Bostonians at Brilliant Premiere Given "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" was presented at the Park Theatre in Boston on November 12 last, marking another milestone in its meteoric career.

Its premiere there was as brilliant as those which greeted the appearance of "Scaramouche" in Washington, New York and in other cities. Boston's aristocracy was out in full force. The Park was filled to overflowing early and throughout the entire presentation a big crowd that could not gain admission was waiting outside.

Among those present were Archie Roosevelt, Rudolph Valentino, Charles Hammond Gibson, Nathan Haskell Dole, Desmond Fitzgerald, internationally known art patron; Mrs. Oakes Ames, Philip Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Philip Saltsonstall, Henry R. Warren, Robert D. Andrews, Miss Sally Bradford, Mrs. Oliver Crocker Stevens, Frank H. Beebe, Frank G. Hale and many others socially prominent, as well as representatives from the Cabot, the Courtney and the Curtis families.

Boston is taking a widespread interest in "Scaramouche." Arrangements have been made for the students of the various schools and colleges to come in a body on special nights to study the historical angles of the production. Among the colleges so represented are Harvard, Emerson College, Wellesley, Boston University, the famous Dana Hall School and others.

The Boston press accorded "Scaramouche" enthusiastic praise. Not only did the dramatic motion picture critics devote space to it but the art critics on the various Boston papers praised it highly because of its great artistry.

Vitagraph Film Given Showing

"The Man From Brodney's" was given a pre-release showing for critics of trade and fan publications on Thursday afternoon, November 22. This is the latest production by David Smith, director of "Pioneer Trails," and is a screen adaptation of the famous novel of India Seas.

Records Broken by "Three Ages"

A telegram from C. M. Morrison, manager of the Imperial Theatre at Jacksonville, Fla., to J. J. Burke, Jr., of the Metro Exchange at Atlanta, Ga., records the fact that Buster Keaton's "Three Ages" broke the season's record.

New York Reviewers Laud "Pioneer Trails" Release Date Set for "Long Live the King"

New York City critics joined with those of London, Boston, Chicago and San Francisco in praising Vitagraph's super-feature, "Pioneer Trails," which was shown at the Rivoli Theatre last week. This is a David Smith production, in which Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Otis Harlan have leading roles.

The Evening Sun said: "It is a Western tale depicting the hardships of the early days and its remarkably swift action, expertly directed without a fumble in continuity, combined with pellucid photography, make it worth while inspecting."

New York Evening Journal: "You will be struck with the great beauty of composition of many of the scenes." New York Mail: "The film contained good old Western stuff with fast and furious riding, a runaway stage coach and gun play." Evening World: "It's an enjoyable film and one we think you'll like." The News: "It means Alice Calhoun and Cullen Landis and these two members of the huge film force are by no means in the background when it comes to doing thrill stuff." New York American: "There are gorgeous shots of scenery, thrilling fights and hair raising action." New York Times: "David Smith, who made this film, has selected some really beautiful locations." Morning Telegraph: "This new Vitagraph picture has all the elements of popular success."

War Veterans in Gloria's Next One

World War veterans of four armies, American, French, English and Canadian, will appear on the screen in the Armistice Day scene in Gloria Swanson's latest Paramount picture, "The Humming Bird."

All of the soldiers used in these scenes were bona fide war veterans, many of them being sent to the Paramount studio by the Veterans' Service Bureau of New York.

"Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's Metro production, is to be released November 25. It is by far the largest and most elaborate picture Jackie has ever appeared in. Massive sets form the background before which Mary Roberts Rinehart's story is enacted.

Among the largest of the sets built at the Metro studios in Hollywood for "Long Live the King" were the enormous castle, a large opera house and a huge cathedral. The castle is a replica of the Castle of Neuschwanstein and occupied some 240,000 square feet of ground. The cathedral duplicates that in Herzegovina and the opera house that in Dresden. These sets are among the largest ever built in Hollywood and give some idea of the stupendous production.

"By far the best thing Jackie Coogan has ever done. His acting is nothing short of marvelous," is a brief excerpt from the Motion Picture News review.

"By far the most ambitious production yet made for the juvenile star. Beautiful and lavish settings, splendid direction, a fine supporting cast and a good holding story," said Exhibitor's Herald.

"A big spectacular picture extremely rich in pathos and human interest with delightful comedy touches. Should pack any theatre," is the opinion of Moving Picture World.

School Kids See Dickens Film

Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield," on Broadway, New York, developed into a three week's engagement.

So strong was the endorsement of school teachers, and their insistence that pupils should see the presentation, that the B. S. Moss offices issued special tickets, admitting high school students at half price to all matinees this week except Friday and Saturday.

Butte Manager Signs for Metro Films

Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, Butte, Mont., recently signed a contract with the Salt Lake City exchange of Metro Pictures Corporation that goes on record as probably the largest ever put into effect in that territory.

Mr. Davis is one of the best known and best liked showmen in the West. For many years he handled the business of the Pantages Circuit in the State of Montana, in addition to overseeing the management of their various theatres in the territory.

Lewis to Produce

Word has been received from the Coast that Ralph Lewis, the F. B. O. star, will make his own starring vehicles and will enter the production field in the near future. The pictures he has been featured in for the F. B. O. were "In the Name of the Law," "Third Alarm," "Westbound Limited" and "The Mailman."

Exhibitors Praise Viola Dana Films

The first two of Viola Dana's series of five Metro features have already been released. These two, "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code," have again proved, more forcibly than ever, the great popularity of this star and the enormous following she has wherever motion pictures are shown.

"In Search of a Thrill," the third of Miss Dana's pictures for the current Metro program, has already been completed. It was recently reviewed by the critics and met with the same enthusiastic reception as did the other two. The two remaining pictures on Miss Dana's schedule are "The Good Bad Girl" and "Love and Lies." The first named is now in production and will be finished shortly after this appears in print.

Newspaper and trade press critics realize Miss Dana's value as a box office attraction. Excerpts from recent reviews on her

Metro features include such lines as these: "Should do well anywhere," "Excellent vehicle," "Wide audience appeal," "Its novelty pep is delightful," "Played role with convincing vim and allurements," "Will go over big," "It is full of whimsical humor," "A clever little comedy," "Well directed."

Metro believes that the three Viola Dana pictures still to come on their 1923-24 program will go over even better than the two already released.

"In search of a Thrill" is an adaptation of "The Spirit of the Road," by Kate Jordan, and is being directed by Oscar Apfel. "The Good Bad Girl," is from Fred Kennedy Myton's story "Angel Face Molly" and is also being directed by Oscar Apfel. "Rouged Lips" and "The Social Code" are stories by Rita Weiman, the former directed by Harold Shaw and the latter by Oscar Apfel.

VIOLA DANA

Excerpts from recent reviews prove that the newspaper and trade press critics realize value of the Metro star as a box-office attraction.

Exploitation Aids for "Tiger Rose"

In a message to exhibitors, the Warner Brothers declare that they have issued the most distinctive exploitation aids for "Tiger Rose," the screen adaptation of the famous David Belasco play in which Lenore Ulric is starred, that have ever been available for a Warner Classic.

For all outdoor advertising and exploitation, the Warner organization has supplied some striking and artistic posters. Each one can be utilized as a cut-out, when mounted, and is a sure eye-catcher. There is a beautiful twenty-four sheet, a six-sheet, two three-sheets, two one-sheets and a special banner in colors to be spread across the street or in the lobby. In addition there is a colorful window card that can be utilized throughout the town.

For lobby decoration, first of importance comes the fifteen framed oil paintings, depicting the most striking and tense scenes from the photoplay. Then there is a 14x36 pastel card which can be used for either the lobby or for window displays. An attractive pennant to hang from the marquee has also been issued.

A special tie-up with the song, "Tiger Rose," published by F. B. Haviland, New York, affords a splendid opportunity for free advertising from music dealers.

Two Films Renamed by Paramount

Two changes of titles of recently completed productions are announced by Paramount. The William de Mille production adapted from Julian Street's novel, "Rita Coventry," formerly called "Holiday Love," is now "Don't Call It Love."

The Herbert Brenon production, "My Man," starring Pola Negri, is now called "Shadows of Paris." This is an adaptation of the French stage play, "Mon Homme," by Andre Picard and Francis Carco.

Chaplin's Next Is a Comedy for United Artists

Charles Chaplin is working on his first comedy film for United Artists Corporation. It will be feature length, and Charlie will take the leading part himself. Also he will retain the "baggy breeches, the kinky cane and the diligent derby."

Contrary to his usual procedure, Mr. Chaplin decided there would be no long delay this time between pictures. A few days after he returned to Los Angeles after witnessing the New York premiere of his serious drama, "A Woman of Paris," he announced that he would begin production of his new comedy on November 12.

Alfred Reeves, Chaplin's studio general manager, went right to work assembling the staff. This will include among others, Eddie Sutherland, "Chuck" Reisner and Edward Biby, formerly with the Chaplin staff.

Universal Will Give Prize for Film Title

Universal is appealing to the exhibitors of the country for title suggestions for Baby Peggy's third Universal Jewel production. This picture was made under the working title "Custody of the Child." In order to spur exhibitors to help them in this quest the film company will give $100 for the winning title.

The board of judges of the Baby Peggy Title Contest consists of the editors of the four leading trade papers, an executive of the Universal Pictures Corporation, the president of Century Comedy Corporation and the editor of the Universal Weekly. They are: George Blaisdell, Exhibitors' Trade Review; William A. Johnston, Motion Picture News; Robert E. Welsh, Moving Picture World; John S. Spargo, Exhibitors' Herald; P. D. Cochrane, secretary of the Universal Pictures Corporation. Julius Stern, president of the Century Comedy Corporation, and Paul Quick, editor of the Universal Weekly.

The titles submitted will be judged from a box office angle. They should be short enough to appear in electric lights on your marquee; they should have a distinct appeal to all classes and ages; they should suggest the theme of the picture, and they should apply particularly to Baby Peggy.

All exhibitors are eligible to enter the Baby Peggy Title Contest, whether or not they are among the few who have not booked any of her previous releases.

There are no conditions to the contest, except that Universal asks that no exhibitor send more than ten title suggestions, and that all suggestions be in the hands of the Contest Editor, Universal Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York City, before midnight, December 31, 1923.

In case the judges pick a title which has been submitted by more than one exhibitor, each one submitting the title will receive the full amount of the award of $100.

The synopsis of the Baby Peggy picture in question is published in the issue of the Universal Weekly dated December 1, 1923.

Catholic Parish Sees "Robin Hood"

The Rev. William F. Galvin, pastor of the Catholic Church of St. Eustachius, Portageville, Mo., showed his parishioners "Robin Hood" to raise funds for his church.

He wrote to William A. Shalit, St. Louis branch manager: "It was far ahead of anything we ever realized on a picture here, but we worked hard, did a lot of advertising and had nice weather, in addition to the fame of the great picture. We enjoyed, it immensely, and are quite satisfied now that your charges for the film were justified."

Alma Rubens to Play Lead

Distinctive Pictures Corporation announces an important change in the cast of its forthcoming production, "Blood and Gold." Alma Rubens, who gave an outstanding performance in "Enemies of Women" and in "Under the Red Robe," will play the leading female role instead of Jetta Coudal, originally announced for the part.

Coogan Film Coming to Rivoli Lull in Production Will Mean Better Casts Says Schulberg

The Eastern premiere of Jackie Coogan's first Metro feature production, "Long Live the King," is set for December 9, when it will be presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York.

Metro confidently expects that this pre-release presentation will set a new box office record at this large Broadway house. As is always the case with the offering of Metro productions on Broadway, the home office exploitation department will carry on a far-reaching campaign on "Long Live the King."

Theatre-goers soon are to see the benefit of the temporary lull in picture activities on the West Coast, according to B. P. Schulberg. For the few pictures that are now being made will involve the use of casts that would have been impossible because of the prohibitive salary demands a few weeks ago.

An example of the bigger casts now available soon will be seen in the Gasnier production of "Poisoned Paradise," a Preferred Picture from the novel by Robert

W. Service. B. P. Schulberg, who had listed the players to take part in the picture, immediately discarded the early selections with the announcement of the studio shut-downs.

"I am delaying the selection of players because I am sure I can find a better cast, not only for the principal roles, but for the minor parts as well, than ever before has been possible," said Mr. Schulberg.

"The list of genuine favorites now available for any big picture makes it possible for the careful producer to give theatre-goers a thing they seldom have seen—all-star productions that are all-star in fact as well as in name."

Clara Bow, whose performances in such pictures as "Maytime," "Black Oxen" and "Down to the Sea in Ships," have placed her in the first ranks of much sought featured players, will enact the leading feminine role. As the little Parisian millinery worker, Director Gasnier believes she will have the most promising part of her brief but meteoric screen career.

Offer Prizes for Best Essays on Five Pictures Hudson Goes to Coast to Supervise Production

Motion picture fans are given an opportunity of competing for $5,000 in prizes to be offered by the Producers' Security Corporation for essays on the Hodkinson releases, "The Mark of the Beast," "Dollar Devils," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Kingdom Within" and "The Lion's Mouse."

The money will be awarded in one hundred and sixty-six prizes. One thousand dollars will be the first prize, five hundred dollars the second and three hundred dollars the third. There will be three prizes of $150, ten of $50, fifty of $25 and one hundred of $10. In the event of a tie the full amount of the prize will be awarded to each winner.

Ballots will be furnished to exhibitors subscribing to the plan. These ballots will contain a column for a vote on each of the five pictures and a space for the contestant to state, in less than one hundred and fifty words, the reason for his preference of the five pictures voted upon. Slides and trailers will be furnished and exhibitors will be offered a special contract for the five pictures.

All votes are to be returned by the contestants to their local theatre, which will forward the six best contributions to the Hodkinson office. The branches will forward to the home office the three best contributions from each theatre. Judges, to be announced from time to time, will choose the winners.

The contest will last for six months, from November 20 to May 20. Because of the generous prizes, the great number of them and the length of time allowed, the contest promises to be very widely participated in.

Many Bookings for "The Virginian"

A large number of first run bookings on Owen Wister's "The Virginian" were recorded this week by Preferred Pictures Corporation. They include the Comerford Amusement Company's circuit throughout Pennsylvania and the following houses: The Orpheum, Springfield, Mo.; President, Washington, D. C.; Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn.; Melba, Dallas, Texas; T. & D. Theatres in Stockton and Oakland, Cal.; Tremont, Nashua, N. H.; Poli's, Meridan, Conn.; Bijou, New Haven, Conn.; Alhambra, Stamford, Conn.; Suffolk, Holyoke, Mass.; Colonial, Logansport, Ind.; the Pendrola, Lockeland, O.; New Family, Adrian, Mich.; and the American, Casper, Wyoming.

Earl J. Hudson, production manager of the First National forces on the West Coast, left New York on Saturday, November 17, after a week's conference with First National executives concerning future production activities of that company. Mr. Hudson was in New York in time to attend the special pre-view of "Flaming Youth" at the Astor Theatre on November 14. This picture is the most ambitious effort of Mr. Hudson's organization to date.

First National will attempt to make "Sundown," a forthcoming drama of the West, one of the screen's epics, according to Mr. Hudson. "Sundown" records present day history—the passing of the old West, with its unfenced ranges and herds of countless cattle. Already scenes have been taken in Mexico of a quarter of a million head of cattle which were driven across the Rio Grande recently by American cattlemen, retreating before the advance of civilization in the western plains. Exclusive rights were obtained by First National for the filming of these scenes.

Independent producers now working on the Coast on pictures for First National distribution are Frank Lloyd, making Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk"; J. K. McDONALD, producing "Boy of Mine," with Ben Alexander; Thomas H. Ince, making "The Galloping Fish"; Richard Walton Tully, at work on "Flowing Gold"; Norma Talmadge, appearing in "Secrets"; Louis B. Mayer, producing "Why Men Leave Home," and the M. C. Levee-Maurice Tourneur organization, at work on "Torment."

Gets Screen Rights to "Bread"

"Bread," rated as Charles G. Norris's greatest novel, has been acquired by Metro for screen production.

This information is contained in an announcement from William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, who recently closed the deal with Arthur H. Jacobs.

Al Hart Back with Hill at Universal

Albert Hart, veteran character actor and "heavy" of the screen, is back with the Robert Hill production unit at Universal City.

He is now cast for a character role in "The Thrill Girl," a comedy drama, with Laura La Plante, which Hill will direct. Production will start in a few days.

Pathe News Horse Race Views May Settle Raging Sport Controversy

Pathe News' views of the Zev-In Memoriam race at Churchill Downs last Saturday are in a fair way of becoming the center of one of the greatest controversies ever waged by the sport experts of America. At the same time, Pathe News, irrespective of the final decision that will be handed down by the experts, has won praise anew for its latest feat of resourcefulness and enterprise in screen journalism.

When Zev, conqueror of Papyrus, and In Memoriam, winner over Zev and My Own in the recent match race at Latonia, met again Saturday, November 17, at Churchill Downs, nobody foresaw how keenly contested would be the last few feet to the finish post. Pathe News was taking no chances, however, and so dispatched with its battery of cameras a slow-motion camera—the only slow-motion camera used at the now famous turf classic.

The race and its outcome are now history. So close was the finish that despite the verdict of the judges in favor of Zev there have been many among the thousands who witnessed the final moments of the great struggle who disagree with the official decision. In the general wrangle consequent upon this divergence of opinion, the Pathe News slow-motion views are very likely to be called into service in the settlement of the controversy.

The first step in this direction was taken on Tuesday evening, November 20, when racetrack experts and writers of prominence gathered at the Pathe News studio to witness a showing of the picture. Prior to the showing, Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, briefly described the exact conditions under which the pictures were taken so that the spectators in viewing the picture might make proper allowances for differences in the camera's angle of vision as distinct from the actual finish line as viewed by the judges. Mr. Cohen's description was illustrated by a chart where-in the true relations of camera, horses and finish post were indicated with mathematical accuracy. The chart and the computations involved were drawn up by Dr. Paul Sorel, professor of mathematics at City College, New York City.

As seen from the camera's angle of vision, the picture shows In Memoriam nosing out Zev across the finish line. The cameraman was standing eight feet in front of the judges' stand and only six feet beyond the finish line, facing the horses. In this position, the camera would slightly favor In Memoriam—being the horse farther away from the camera lens—in registering the positions of the horses in relation to the finish post.

Professor Sorel calculates that this "interval of favorable registration" by the camera would be four inches, figuring the angle of vision and the distance of the cameraman from both horses and the finish line at the time the horses cross the line. In other words, the difference between the vision of the judges and the angle of view of the camera lens, when reduced through a simple process of mathematics, calls for a correction of about four inches in eighty feet—eighty feet being the width of the race course, or the distance from the judges' stand to the finish post opposite.

"Were it possible to determine accurately how far In Memoriam

O'Hara Coming East

George O'Hara, star of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series, is nearing the completion of the pictures of the second series, with about three weeks seeing the wind-up. Feeling in need of a rest, Mr. O'Hara is planning to take his vacation in New York.

was from the rail and how far Zev was from In Memoriam at the finish point," writes G. F. T. Ryall in the New York World of November 21, in discussing the Pathe News picture, "a calculation could be made that might prove In Memoriam winner mathematically beyond a question."

Crowds So Great, Stores Shut and Cops Perspire

"Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, broke records at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in the first week of its return to the metropolis. According to officials of the theatre, 102,424 persons attended the showings last week, paying more than $65,525.15.

Other records in addition to those of receipts and attendance, were broken at the Capitol Theatre last week. To accommodate the crowds, the doors were opened at noon for the first time in the theatre's history. Heretofore, they have not been opened until 12.30 P. M. The other night saw a repetition of the scenes of a week ago when 5,000 people were turned away. Again traffic was suspended for a half hour and a cigar store in the immediate vicinity was compelled to close its doors because of the long line of motion picture patrons in front of the box office.

It is now in its sixth week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, and the business has never dropped below $22,000 a week, according to statements in Variety. It is also running to practically full capacity in London, at the Empire Theatre, where it is now in its 13th week.

N. Y. Letter Carriers Aid "The Mailman"

Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O., "The Mailman," opens this week at the Cameo with an exploitation campaign outrivalling anything ever attempted by the Film Booking Offices. With the full co-operation of the Post Office Department, uniformed parades, letter carriers' and postal clerks' bands, postal mail boxes and window tie-ups, the picture is getting off to a flying start.

In Movie Day parade, staged last Saturday, over two hundred uniformed carriers, carrying ten-foot banners and led by the postal clerks' band, swung down Broadway, advertising to the people lining the curb that the picture was coming to the Cameo Theatre. In the way of high-class exploitation Tiffany's window on Fifth avenue has in its window a silver cup to be presented to the New York letter carriers' band as winners of the national radio band contest. Hundreds of stores have been placarded, "Do your Christmas shopping early, think of 'The Mailman.'" Below this is a line about the theatre.

Even the post offices were used for billing purposes with signs advocating more pay for postal employees and an additional line advertising the picture. On Monday, November 26, the New York Letter Carriers' Band will parade from the City Hall up Broadway to the theatre for the presentation of the contest prize.

Premiere Next Week on "This Freedom"

Before an invited audience at the Central Theatre, New York, next Monday night, the William Fox screen version of "This Freedom," from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, will have its New York premiere showing. This is the second novel by the noted British author to be adapted by Mr. Fox, the first having been "If Winter Comes," which met with exceptional success in New York and throughout the country.

In the filming of both pictures, Mr. Hutchinson assisted in the direction, chose locations which he had described in his books and also wrote the titles. In some instances in "This Freedom" the titles were taken from the book, while in others Mr. Hutchinson wrote them especially for the scenes. The picture was directed by Denison Clift, an American, who recently joined the Fox organization.

Fay Compton, noted on the British stage and screen, and who has been seen in leading roles in many pictures in this country, plays the role of Rosalie Occleve, the woman who neglected her home and family for a career in the banking world. Clive Brook, equally well known throughout Europe, has the part of her neglected husband. A large cast of talented performers is announced in the supporting roles.

The novel, "This Freedom," aroused international discussion, particularly among women. The story is based on the question as to whether a woman can achieve success in the business world and at the same time be a wife and mother.

"Three Ages" Breaks Records in Washington

During "Three Ages" engagement at the Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C., it played to the biggest business the house has done in eighteen months. It is a fact, backed up by box office statements, that only one other picture has done better at the Palace than "Three Ages," the production being Rex Ingram's Metro feature, "The Four Horsemen."

It is a matter of record that Buster Keaton's first full length Metro comedy feature has established him as the leading drawing card among the present-day film comedians, says Metro. Exhibitor reports coming in to the Metro home offices are most enthusiastic in their praise of Buster and the fact that he is now making full length comedies.

Advance reviews on "Our Hospitality," Buster's newest feature length Metro comedy, are to the effect that it is even better than "Three Ages." Critics credit it with presenting more laughs and thrills to the foot of film than any comedy released in many months, Metro reports.

Strong Warner Cast for John Barrymore

A fine cast of players appears with John Barrymore in the Warner Brothers screen version of the famous Clyde Fitch play, "Beau Brummel." Harry Beaumont, who is directing the picture, obtained the finest screen personalities available. The players are: Mary Astor, Irene Rich, Willard Louis, Alec B. Francis, Carmel Myers, Richard Tucker, William Humphreys, Templar Saxe, Clarissa Selwynn, Andre de Beranger, John J. Richardson, Michael Dark, Kate Lester, Carol Halloway, James A. Marcus, Betty Brice, Roland Rushton, Rose Dione, Claire de Lorez, L. H. Chaldécotte and F. F. Guenste. In addition a large number of extras appear as courtiers, soldiers, etc.

The settings are said to be the most pretentious ever undertaken for a Warner Classic. An elaborate castle set probably is the most impressive scenic element in the picture, and the interiors are also lavish and in keeping with the time when the action took place. The many exteriors furnish picturesque backgrounds for the unfoldment of the fascinating story.

Hodkinson Films Named Among Best Pictures

In an article analyzing the year's best pictures, in the current issue of "The Ladies' Home Journal," John Farrar, editor of "The Bookman" and noted literary and dramatic critic, mentions four recent Hodkinson releases as being of special interest and general merit.

The four pictures recommended by Mr. Farrar are: Elmer Clifton's whaling picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships"; Gene Stratton-

Porter's picturization of her novel, "Michael O'Halleran"; the speed film, "The Drivin' Fool," and "Puritan Passions," the screen version of Percy Mackaye's stage play, "The Scarecrow."

In making his analysis Mr. Farrar reviewed the pictures of practically all the large distributing companies, and chose four Hodkinson releases, as compared to three, two or one of the other companies.

Minneapolis Critics Praise "Scaramouche"

Metro presented Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" at the Garrick Theatre in Minneapolis three weeks ago and the press rendered its tribute as it has done wherever else this massive production has been shown. Its opening was truly brilliant, as it was attended by the most prominent people of the city and was given added flavor by Governor J. A. O. Preus, who gave the following statement to the press: "I saw 'Scaramouche' at the governors' conference in West Baden, Ind. It is the finest film production I ever witnessed."

The Minneapolis Daily Star said: "Scaramouche' is a great picture." "Scaramouche," wrote the critic of the St. Paul Daily News, "is undoubtedly one of the great pictures. It may be ranked with 'The Four Horsemen.'"

"Ingram has pictured the French Revolution as we have never seen it pictured before on the screen," wrote the critic of the Minnesota Journal. "Scaramouche' has all elements of a great photoplay," wrote the critic of the Minneapolis Tribune.

"Why Worry" Accorded an Unusual Tribute

An unusual tribute to the box office prowess of Harold Lloyd's latest feature comedy for Pathe, "Why Worry?" was accorded this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which has booked the Pathe comedy for an indefinite engagement at its new demonstration theatre in Boston, the Fenway.

The production opens at this big first-run house on November 25 with special presentation features arranged by one of the country's most prominent showmen, S. Barrett McCormick, who has just been named manager of the Fenway.

The booking of "Why Worry?" at the new Paramount house, Pathe officials declare, possesses unusual significance in view of that organization's recently announced policy to engage for its demonstration theatres only the very biggest and most successful features of the screen.

School Head Endorses Ray Pilgrim Picture

R. J. Stimmitt, of the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, in a contract he closed with Associated Exhibitors this week booked the super-feature, Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Miles Standish," for the two weeks starting December 22 and ending January 4.

An official statement issued by Susan M. Dorsey, superintendent of public schools of Los Angeles, encourages pupils to see the picture, and says:

"The Board of Education has granted this permission because in their judgment 'The Courtship of Miles Standish' has educational merit, especially in view of the fact that the poem on which it is based is one studied in all our schools. The photoplay embraces that part of American history from a time during the voyage of the Mayflower to a period two years after landing in the new world, portraying graphically the adventures of the Pilgrims."

Harry Rapf Plans Broadway Picture

Harry Rapf left New York for the West Coast last week where he will supervise his next production under the Warner Brothers banner and will also make plans for his productions that will follow. Mr. Rapf has already made the final arrangements for filming "Broadway After Dark," the play by Owen Davis, who has contributed more plays to the American stage than any other living playwright, and whose dramatic success, "Icebound," won the Pulitzer prize last season.

"Broadway After Dark" is to face the cameras under the direction of Monta Bell, who assisted Chaplin in the direction of his productions the last two years. Harry Rapf intends not to make a scenic of the great metropolis, nor to spend a fortune on elaborate sets, but to dramatize it in a simple story of human emotions. It is understood that an all-star cast of players will be seen, with Adolphe Menjou playing the leading masculine role.

Marion Coakley to Make Film Debut

Marion Coakley will make her motion picture debut in Richard Barthelme's next starring production, under the direction of John S. Robertson, "The Enchanted Cottage."

Although Miss Coakley has appeared in numerous successful Broadway productions, her last having been "Barnum Was Right," she has never yet appeared before the motion picture camera.

Submarine Rescue Shown in Fox News Weekly

A timely achievement by Fox News is its presentation in the current release of the rescue of two seamen who were imprisoned thirty-one hours in the United States submarine O-5, which was sunk in Cristobal harbor, Panama, following a collision with a steamship of the United Fruit Line.

Photographed by R. G. Lewis, the film graphically depicts the descent of navy divers to the sunken craft, the raising of the wreck and the actual rescue of the limp and exhausted prisoners. The pictures were "shot" from so short a distance that every detail of the rescue is clearly discernible.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Hepworth Has 14 This Season

Following "Boden's Boy," to be released by Hepworth Distributing Corporation, Henry Edwards will start work on the screen adaptation of the E. Temple Thurston story, "The World of Wonderful Reality."

Joseph di Lorenzo, in charge of distribution for Hepworth, said that "The World of Wonderful Reality" would be completed by March, 1924, and would undoubtedly be added to the 1923-1924 releases, making a total of fourteen pictures to be released by Hepworth this season.

Independents Purchase "Trip to Mars"

Export & Import Film Company's announcement of its purchase of United States and Canadian rights to the big five-reel spectacle, "A Trip to Mars," has met with instant response from the independent field.

Masterpiece Film Attractions has bought the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey rights, and the Aywon Film Company has bought the Greater New York rights.

Truart Sales Head Back From Abroad

Alexander Aronson, general manager of sales for Truart Film Corporation, who has been abroad for over two months, making an extensive survey of the foreign market, has returned.

Aronson made numerous affiliations with foreign distributors covering the entire next season's Truart product.

Title Changed

Hepworth announces that Cecil M. Hepworth's production, "Mrs. Erricker's Reputation," from the novel by Thomas Cobb, will be released under the title, "Speak No Evil."

Chicago Likes Normand Film

Aaron Jones closed a contract with Associated Exhibitors this week for an indefinite run of Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" at his Orpheum Loop Theatre in Chicago. The run is to start at the close of the present engagement of Mary Pickford's "Rosita."

"The Extra Girl" has just closed the eighth week of its world premiere run at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. Playing to record houses at the start, this attraction has proved an extraordinary drawing card and the newspapers continued to lavish praise upon it even when the run was several weeks old.

Independents, Take Heed of the Lull, Says Grand

"Now is the time for the independents to put their best films on the market," said Samuel V. Grand, president of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, while in New York City a few days prior to his return to the Boston office.

Mr. Grand expressed himself as being well satisfied with the general business outlook. He based this mainly upon his recent mid-western tour, when he looked over many exchanges and interviewed prominent exhibitors.

Speaking of the independents, he commented: "They should gather organizations which will form the nucleus for much greater companies, and they should draw to them men who are fitted to handle any situation and deal with any business problem. For, when this condition of chaos has passed, we will find that the industry, as a whole, has not suffered and that only the firms and people who richly deserve it have been eliminated."

Women Highly Praise "The Barefoot Boy"

Accordingly a big pre-release premiere was arranged at the Palace Theatre, New York, under the special patronage of Mrs. Slack, with the assistance of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation which is distributing the Mission Film Corporation feature, and the Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York which holds the New York rights. At Mrs. Slack's invitation various bodies of New York clubwomen to whose attention she wishes the picture brought, were present. They opened it highly.

One of the most prominent audiences which has ever assembled to see a motion picture was present.

"The Acquittal" Lauded by Chicago Reviewers

"The Acquittal," Universal's super film starring Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry, was hailed as a "perfect picture" and "better than any stage mystery drama" by the Chicago newspaper reviewers after its world premiere in the big First National first run house, the Chicago Theatre, last week. Booked by Balaban & Katz for their palatial house on short notice, the picture opened with only a limited advertising and exploitation campaign behind it.

The Chicago Herald and Examiner wrote: "It is better than any of the stage mystery dramas."

The Chicago Evening American; "Story, action, direction—they are all extraordinarily good. And when it comes to baffling the spectator—well, you will not know until the very end just who committed the murder."

"Thundering Dawn" Has Manhattan Premiere

"Thundering Dawn," the Universal Super-Jewel, starring J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson, was given its premiere New York City presentation last Sunday evening at the George M. Cohan Theatre. A packed house greeted the Harry Garson production.

"Thundering Dawn" also opened its run over the U. B. O. Circuit, starting Thursday. It is playing simultaneously in fourteen Keith, Moss and Proctor houses, and will play in the remaining four of this chain next week. The picture is reported to be attracting very satisfactory business in every house.

Truart Sells Rights to Luporini

The foreign department of Truart Film Corporation has consummated negotiations with Ferdinand Luporini, for the sale of the rights to the first two Elaine Hammerstein productions, "Broadway Gold" by W. Carey Wonderly and "Drums of Jeopardy" by Harold MacGrath, for Brazil.

With the addition of the rights to these two productions Luporini now controls all Truart product thus far released for this South American country.

Big Campaign Sheet for "Barefoot Boy"

A big twenty-four sheet campaign on "The Barefoot Boy" covering all of Greater New York, has been launched by Commonwealth Film Corporation which holds the Greater New York rights to the production which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing for Mission Film Corporation.

Sam Zierler, head of Commonwealth, has already arranged for 225 twenty-four sheet stands.

Hepworth Films Before Royalty

From the London office of Hepworth comes word that three of Hepworth's one reel novelty subjects received a "command" for special screening before royalty at Balmoral Castle, on September 19th.

The subjects screened were: "Peeps Into Puzzleland," "Do You Remember?" and "A Rubberneck in London." Last year Cecil M. Hepworth's production of "Through Three Reigns" received a "command" performance from Balmoral Castle for a screening before King George, Queen Alexandra, the Prince of Wales and the other members of the royal household.

They Like It

Warner officials are highly enthusiastic over "George Washington, Jr.," the screen version of George M. Cohan's famous musical play, starring Wesley Barry. The print arrived in New York from the West Coast and was given a private showing in the projection room immediately upon its arrival. It is their opinion that the Warner Classic is a sure-fire box-office attraction and one of the funniest comedies ever produced.

Signs for Output

Jensen and Von Herberg's circuit of western theatres signed contracts this week for this year's output of Preferred Pictures, constituting the fifteen novels and stage plays to be produced by B. P. Schulberg.

Exhibitors Eager for "Mothers-in-Law"

Gasnier's latest Preferred picture, "Mothers-in-Law," presented by B. P. Schulberg, has been booked by the following houses: The Grand, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Bethlehem, Lehigh, Pa.; the Orpheum, Springfield, Mo.; Parkway, Baltimore, Md.; Knickerbocker, Nashville, Tenn.; Queen, Austin, Texas; Goddard's Theatre, Sacramento, Cal.; the T. & D., Stockton, Cal.; Isis, Kokomo, Ind.; Robbins, Warren, O.; Opera House, Piqua, O., and the Majestic, Wyandotte, Mich.

"Souvenir" Next Halperin Feature

Halperin Productions has sent from the Hollywood studios the complete cast which has been recruited for "Souvenir," the second Halperin feature for Associated Exhibitors distribution. Agnes Ayres was named to play the lead and Percy Marmont, Kathlyn Williams, George Siegmann, Mary Alden and Robert McKim were also selected.

"Souvenir" has C. R. Wallace assisting Victor Hugo Halperin in the direction. Robert Ellis is now designing the sets.

"Meanest Man" is Heavily Booked

"The Meanest Man in the World," a current First National picture produced by Principal Pictures Corp., has been booked solidly by the West Coast Theatres for showing through their northern and southern circuits in California.

"The Meanest Man in the World" is adapted from the stage success of the same name and its cast includes Blanche Sweet, Bert Lytell and Bryant Washburn.

High Praise Given "Columbus"

"Such a picture does much more than present history, it raises the standard of all picture production and by the success of its well developed effects advances film art appreciably." Thus characterized is "Columbus," the first of Pathe's "Chronicles of America" series, in the November issue of "The Film Bulletin—a Monthly Guide to the Best Pictures," which is published by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau.

"Columbus," says "The Film Bulletin," must be received "as a herald of perfection."

On Way East

Bud Barsky, sales manager for the Sunset Productions, is on his way East with sample prints of the second subject of the Kenneth McDonald comedy-stunt-drama series, titled "Slow as Lightning," and the second release of the J. B. Warner Western super-features, titled "Treasure Canyon." Sunset Productions are producing fourteen pictures this year.

Inspiration in Italy Working on "Romola"

"The White Sister," which is completing the third month of its run on Broadway, will open in San Francisco and Boston on December 3rd. In the meantime, it is playing to capacity houses in Chicago and Philadelphia.

The Inspiration overseas company has begun filming "Romola," adapted from the famous novel by George Eliot. Lillian Gish is playing the title role. Her sister Dorothy also has the important part of Tessa. In the cast also are: William H. Powell, Charles Lane, Herbert Grimwood and several thousand others.

"Romola" will be the second production directed by Henry King to be made in Italy. The great marine battle with which the picture concludes has just been filmed in Leghorn and interiors are now being produced in the Inspiration studio in Florence, Italy.

"The Eternal City" Has Paterson Premiere

"The Eternal City," independently produced by Samuel Goldwyn for distribution through First National, had its world's premiere on November 19th at the Regent Theatre in Paterson, N. J. The advance interest in the picture filled the house to overflowing and brought a line more than a block long in front of the theatre box office waiting for the doors to open.

Charles Dooley, manager of the Regent, stated after the last show of the opening night that the attendance was the greatest of any opening in the history of the theatre and that the gross admission exceeded anything in Paterson's film history.

George Fitzmaurice, who directed the picture in Rome, Italy, and Mr. Goldwyn were present at the opening to note the reactions of the audience. "The Eternal City" is interpreted by a cast including Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, Lionel Barrymore, Richard Bennett and Montague Love.

Hart's Return Rouses Audience's Enthusiasm

That the return of Bill Hart to the screen after an absence of nearly two years is one of the big events of the current season, is being amply demonstrated this week at the New York Rialto where "Wild Bill Hickok," the first of the famous Western star's new series of Paramount pictures, is being shown. The star, it is said, seems to be more popular than ever, and his picture, based upon the exploits of a famous character of Western history and written by himself, is declared on all sides to be the very type of photoplay the millions of Hart fans would have chosen as a vehicle to bring their favorite actor back to the screen.

In its review of the picture the Evening World said: "If you were numbered among the legion of Hart admirers before he 'retired,' then you'll like him in 'Wild Bill Hickok.' We were, and we did." Said the American: "His admirers—and the theatre was packed with them—ate up his every movement. It was such a Hart-y audience, and so completely enthralled!" The World: "Probably no one could have brought to the screen a more fascinating picture of 'Wild Bill Hickok,' that famed old romantic frontiersman, than Bill Hart."

"It is the same Bill," said the Evening Telegram, "the man who plays the rugged Westerner as nobody else can. Hart has been missed from the screen," said the Telegraph, "and 'Wild Bill Hickok' is a fitting and excellent vehicle to bring him back. Welcome back, William S. Hart!"

Laemmle Stands to See "Hunchback" at Capital

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" made its National Capital premiere recently before an audience that packed the Shubert Belasco Theatre with several hundred standing and more than 1,000 turned away from the box office. All of the boxes were draped in the colors of the various embassies. Almost the entire diplomatic corps of Washington was in the audience, which also represented nearly everyone in Washington's blue book.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Pictures Corporation arrived from New York for the premiere shortly after the opening of the picture and had the unique experience of having to stand while the picture was screened. Every available seat was taken.

The box office report shows that the picture broke every existing record for film presentations at the Belasco for the first four performances. Police were required on both Sunday and Monday to regulate the long queues that wended their ways to the ticket windows.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Third of "Chronicles of America" Heads Pathe List for December 2

Heading the list of Pathe subjects scheduled for release on December 2 is "Vincennes," the third of the Chronicles of America series being produced by Yale University Press. Instead of being in four reels, as were the two previous subjects, this one is three reels in length. It depicts the thrilling campaign of George Rogers Clark and his handful of followers who wrested the Northwest from the British and Indians and saved for the United States the territory now covered by Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The final dash in the dead of winter is said to be intensely dramatic.

In "The Great Outdoors," the fourth of the Spat Family series, this discordant trio meets with humorous adventures in a lonely camp in trying to prove to a skeptical uncle that they can live without servants.

"Flip Flops" is a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy marked by fast action and thrills, in which a circus elephant runs amuck. Alberta Vaughan, Lewis Sargent, Jack Cooper and Andy Clyde are in the cast.

The Ruth Roland series, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its eighth episode, in which an attempt is made to blow up with dynamite the cavern in which the fuel substitute is found.

"Join the Circus" presents Snub Pollard in a novelty single-reeler of fast action. Paul Parrott, George Rowe and Katherine Grant are also in the cast.

The Aesop's Film Fable for the week is "The Five Fifteen," which involves mystery and suspense, as well as Cartoonist Paul Terry's characteristic humor.

Pathe Review 48 shows the cultivation of grapes for the market, an interesting study of the peacock, a section showing how candy is made in a big factory, and a color section of the "Valley of the Giants" at Crecy, France.

One Topics of the Day and two issues of Pathe News complete the diversified program.

Sennett to Feature Harry Langdon

Harry Langdon, formerly a well-known vaudeville headliner and more recently a star in screen comedies, has been signed by Mack Sennett under a long-term contract. This is in line with Sennett's policy of expansion to provide additional comedies for Pathe distribution. Langdon will be featured in two-reel comedies.

Educational Working at Top Speed

Educational reports that production activities continue at full speed at the Fine Arts Studio in Los Angeles, on the 1923-1924 program. Lloyd Hamilton who returned after his work in a feature comedy has completed "Lonesome." Jack White has finished the Mermaid "Exit Caesar" with Lige Conley and started "Flying Finance" with Neely Edwards and Lillian Hackett. The third Juvenile comedy "Over the Fence" is nearing completion, the Cameo "Under Covers" is finished and "Film Foolish" now in production.

Five Two-Reel and Six One-Reel Films on Educational Schedule

Educational states that its December schedule of releases will be the most comprehensive so far in the 1923-24 season. Three Christie comedies dominate the program with one Mermaid and one Juvenile comedy, making in all five two reelers for the month, in addition to six single reel issues.

"Kidding Kate," a Christie, with Dorothy Devore and Babe London, released December 2, heads the schedule, with a Bruce Wilderness Tale, "My Boy Bill," during the same week.

For week of December 9 there will be a Mermaid comedy, "Exit Caesar," directed by Robert Kerr, under supervision of Jack White, with cast including Otto Fried, Peg O'Neil, Andrew Arbuckle, Jack Lloyd and others. The single reeler will be a Cameo, "Under Covers," with Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance.

The second of the Christies, "Black and Blue," will be released the third week in the month, also "The Bee," the second of the Secrets of Life series. Jimmie Adams is featured in "Black and Blue," directed by Harold Beaudine. "The Bee" has been proclaimed one of the most interesting single reels ever offered to the public.

The fourth week in the month finds "Over the Fence," a Juvenile Comedy, the third of the series, with same cast as the previous ones, Ernest Butterworth, Roger Keene, Tommy Hicks and Peggy Cartwright with addition of Joe Butterworth. There will be two single reelers, "Film Foolish," as Cameo, and "Home Again," one of the Sing Them Again series.

Week of December 30 will see a Christie, "Call the Wagon," featuring Neal Burns. A Lyman H.

Howe Hodge Podge, "Liquid Lava," will complete the schedule. This makes in all a total of sixteen reels during the month, in addition to the regular issues of Kinograms.

Leading Scientists Praise Educational's Insect Films

The first three of the Louis H. Tolhurst series of microscopic pictures in the Secrets of Life series, titled "The Ant," "The Bee" and "The Spider," were recently shown to the scientific staff of the American Museum of Natural History in New York, which includes some of the most noted men in the world, and it is reported that there were audible comments of approval and applause at the conclusion.

"These are marvelous pictures," said Dr. F. A. Lucas, director of the staff. "Not only are they instructive, but entertaining. Every child, every grown person should see them." Dr. Mutchler, of the department of entomology, said: "The pictures are true to life. They are intensely interesting, and are a well worth while contribution to the screen." A similar comment was made by Dr. Shwarz, research associate of the particular department which deals with this class of insects.

Favorable comments were also made by the other prominent scientists, each a leader in his own particular branch, who attended the private showing.

"SHORT" BILLED ABOVE FEATURE

Note how the Apollo Theatre in Hollywood played up Educational's single reel comedy, "Crash," above the feature in electric lights.

Varied Subjects in "Snapshots"

The sixth of the new series of Screen Snapshots contains a wide variety of material that will appeal to film fans. Included in this issue are Marion Davies, Holbrook Blinn, Johnny Dooley, Ralph Graves, Robert G. Vignola, the French General Goureaud, Blanche Sweet, William Russell, Louise Glaum, unusual wild animal scenes, Madge Bellamy, John Bowers, Sheldon Lewis, Spottiswoode Aitken and Caesars Gravina.

"Leather Pushers" with New Star

Universal reports the completion of the newest of the Leather Pushers series, titled "That Kid from Madrid—Michigan," Billy Sullivan, a former champion, and related to the famous fighting Sullivans, is starred in place of Reginald Denny, who is now appearing in feature productions.

"Next Please" Al's Latest

Having completed "The Poor Little Rich Pup" Al Herman has started work on his next Century Comedy, which will feature Henry Murdock and William Irving.

The title of the current production, "Next, Please," is based on that well-known, ragged phrase so often heard in barber shops throughout the world.

"Kidding Kate"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Dorothy Devore has a congenial and attractive role in this Christie comedy in which she is forced by her mother to masquerade as a little girl in rompers in order that she will not "steal" her fat sister's beau. Of course things don't go as mother intended and Dorothy gets him after all. Babe London is the fat girl and Jimmie Harrison the beau. Although there is nothing new in the idea, the picture contains considerable clever business, is bright and amusing and should please the average audience.—C. S. S.

"Why Elephants Leave Home"

(Pathe—Animal—Two Reels)

This fine showmanship title with its exploitation possibilities refers to a picture that has no sex angle. Instead, it is a two reeler which shows how wild elephants in Ceylon are driven from the jungles into a "kraal," being lured by their domesticated brethren. They are then trained to be of use to man. The picture is novel and interesting throughout. In addition to the corraling of the elephants, forty-odd in all, there are interesting views of a large number of elephants being used for various purposes such as uprooting small trees, hauling logs, etc. It should prove an attractive offering on any program.—C. S. S.

"Under Covers"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

A sanitarium furnishes the background for the rough and tumble comedy in this single reel Cameo, distributed by Educational. Cliff Bowes as an orderly gets into all kinds of scrapes, is fired and returns in disguise to be near his sweetheart, the head nurse, and more mix-ups follow. George Ovey is cast as a doctor. There is considerable material of a familiar trend which will bring the average number of laughs.—C. S. S.

"A Dark Knight"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

A convict's uniform proves a rather dangerous costume for a masked ball in this Joe Rock comedy. He has to serve a prison sentence before he gets to the party, but escapes and finds safety at the ball where a dozen others are wearing a "Convict 13" uniform—safety for a few minutes. It should prove amusing to most fans.—M. K.

"Hollywood Bound"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

As the winner of a popularity contest, the hero played by Sid Smith goes to Hollywood, where he has some difficulty getting into a moving picture studio. A lion, insufficiently tamed, makes his life hectic throughout scenes that are lively and funny.—M. K.

"The Bottom of the Sea"

(Educational—Novelty—One Reel)

As with the previous offering in this series of Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge," distributed by Educational, this issue contains an assortment of humorous animated cartoons and subtitles and sections showing items of interest such as catching tunny fish in Sicily. The cartoon work is especially clever and there are a number of laughs. It should be welcomed as a novelty by the average audience.—C. S. S.

"The Five-Fifteen"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Plotting against the arrival of a precious visitor on the "five-fifteen," a gang of cat-bandits holds up the tram and scares it into many parts. The right compartment containing a bottle of "old stuff," however, is saved. The action is vivid and every bit of it entertaining. An Aesop Film Fable by Paul Terry.—M. K.

"Wet and Weary"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Clyde Cook is the victim of various kinds of wet torment in this comedy, which starts off with a terrific rainstorm, providing many ludicrous sights. The only shelter he can find is under a street cleaner's cart and this leads him to the civic department, where he is given a lawn-sprinkling job. The hose appears to be alive and herein lies much of the comedy. It is a good comedy for the average theatre.—M. K.

"Flip Flops"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Mack Sennett's latest is fast and furious enough to meet with the ardent favor of all slapstick fans. It is comedy of the most obvious type, broad in places but overbrimming with hilarious fun for those who like plenty of slambang effects. Lewis Sargent has a lover role which causes him all sorts of suffering, including some exciting scenes with an elephant.—M. K.

Gibbons of Pathe Reports One-Reelers in Big Demand

Another indication of the growing popularity of the short subject is contained in the report of Pathe's short subject sales manager, Miles Gibbons, who has just returned from a tour of key cities of the Middle West.

"General conditions are sound and the outlook decidedly encouraging," says Mr. Gibbons. "There is an unusually heavy demand for short length screen entertainment, and business as far as Pathe is concerned has never been better."

A notable point in Mr. Gibbons' report is the heavy booking of single reel subjects. He found that the Pollard, Laurel and "Dippy-Do-Dads" are enjoying great vogue and the Aesop's Film Fables are in many instances receiving special mention by critics because of their originality and humor.

Mr. Gibbons attributes this vogue to the uniform quality of entertainment in these series, their wide variety of subjects and to the ease with which a single-reeler can be fitted into a program. This latter is of especial importance in view of the additional length of many features today.

Plans New Witwer Series for F. B. O.; Will Not Be Fight Plays

H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the F. B. O., left this week for the studios at the West Coast to complete plans for the Film Booking Offices' third series of H. C. Witwer's short stories to follow the second series of "Fighting Blood" two reelers now being released.

The new series will not be fight stories but will be based on the Witwer Cosmopolitan stories about the hotel telephone girl. No running title for the series has been selected as yet. In addition to this Mr. Berman will make plans for the Witwer "Alex The Great" series of sporting type pictures.

It is the intention of the F. B. O. to concentrate its entire efforts on the Witwer short subjects for the coming season and will not take on any additional two-reelers for distribution. To date the Witwer "Fighting Bloods" have proven unusually popular and profitable.

"Uncensored Movies"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is one of the very best of the new series of Will Rogers' two-reelers distributed by Pathe. Rogers appears as an investigator sent by a village reform society to Hollywood and also impersonates Tom Mix, William S. Hart, Rudolph Valentino and others. He does this in a kidding manner, poking fun at and burlesquing the situations, as for instance where in chasing the villain he captures him although they start from the same place and one rides wildly up hills while the other rides down the hills. The titles and action are in Rogers' best style and there are a number of laughs and several subtle touches.—C. S. S.

"My Boy Bill"

(Educational—Wilderness—One Reel)

A quarrel by the sea, which ended in "my boy Bill" going out in his boat and failing to return, furnishes the motive for this Bruce picture. The story is told by Bill's father, who is shown waiting through the changes of seasons in vain for his boy to come back. It is marked with a strongly pathetic note and there are many beautiful and artistic shots of the sea under different conditions. It should thoroughly satisfy the Bruce fans and prove acceptable anywhere.—C. S. S.

"Taxi, Please"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

Monte Banks, a taxi driver, spends his time transforming bald heads with the aid of a fake hair grower and dog fur in this comedy. He makes a fortune for his sweetheart's mother, who owns the store, and then elopes with the daughter and the gold. There is not much variety here, but it will get laughs and satisfy the average patron.—M. K.

"Miles of Smiles"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

As a pair of twins, Baby Peggy has a double role in this Century comedy that keeps her very active and amusing. One of the twins gets lost and leads a rough life as assistant to a railroad engineer, while the other one enjoys luxury and ease. They get mixed up of course, but eventually both twins are restored to their parents. The star is a delightful little entertainer as usual.—M. K.

"Wild and Woolly"

(Pathe—Sport—One Reel)

A typical western rodeo or "stampede," as it is called in the film, is the subject of this single reeler which is the first of a new series of "Sportlights" by Grantland Rice which Pathe will distribute. It is a decidedly interesting offering that will appeal particularly to men and to lovers of red-blooded sports. There is a lot of action covering the riding of steers, bronchos and wild, unbroken horses, and the spills provide thrills. There are also interesting sidelights in the shots of the audience.—C. S. PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Louisville, Ky.

There will be a reasonably warm time in Louisville, Ky., next New Year's Eve, for the Louisville Motion Picture Projectionists, Local Union No. 163, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., will give a Grand Ball and Carnival, which it is expected will be the most sizeable event pulled off in that neck o' the woods for quite some while.

And that's saying considerable, because you know when those Kentucky men and their fair ladies start out to do something, that thing is always well done.

Harry F. Petty is chairman of the entertainment committee. Petty is projectionist at the Rex Theatre, Louisville.

I wish you every joy on New Year's Eve, gentlemen. Only wish I might be with you and help roll the joy ball until the "wee sma" hours. Can't be did, though—too far away!

Blade too Narrow

Joe De Reny, projectionist, Grand Theatre, East Stroudsburg, Pa., wrote us under date of September 19, saying:

Have been projecting with Simplex projectors for almost a year and have had no trouble at all until now. The rotating shutter is set almost as perfectly as possible, but it certainly does pull up and down on the screen. Lines show up and down on reading, and even on the picture, especially when I speed up a bit. What is your advice in a case like this? Two-blade shutter; alternating current.

Now see here, Old Timer, without the slightest intention to "roast" you, I must say that if you would invest a few dollars in a Bluebook and STUDY IT, you would have no need to ask questions such as this. I am, of course, glad to help you (though somehow your letter seems to have been mislaid and overlooked for quite a spell, for which accept apologies), but I would far rather see you able to answer such a question yourself.

You will find all such questions answered and fully explained under "Revolving Shutter," pages 611 to 624 of the Bluebook. Your specific question is answered on page 624 and the remedy is given.

If you have travel ghost (white streaks up or down, or both, from white objects on the screen) both ways, then your shutter either has too much lost motion or its master blade is too narrow; probably the former in your case. Hold the flywheel stationary and see how much you can move the rim of the shutter. If the movement is excessive, there either is some gear loose on its shaft or some gear or gears badly worn. If the latter, then I think you had better have a loan head sent you and ship your mechanism to the factory (317 East 34th Street, New York City) for overhauling and repairs. If there seems to be no excess of lost motion, then hold a sheet of dark colored paper in the light beam in front of the projection lens, and at varying distances therefrom, to determine the point where the light beam has least diameter. Perhaps you may be able to move your shutter in or out on its shaft to a position where the light beam has less diameter. The aerial image is the best place, if you can get the shutter to it. If nothing can be done this way, then you must have a wider master blade, and you can get one by either using very small rivets, attaching a bit of metal to each side of the master blade—each side in order to preserve the balance—allowing it to extend over the blade edge sufficiently to add enough width to stop the travel ghost. For myself, I would cut a master blade of stiff cardboard, such as business cards are printed on, making it the required width, riveting it to the metal master blade. The thing is to make the blade a bit wider and to do it without seriously disturbing either the mechanical or the optical balance of the shutter. I advise you, strongly, to get a Bluebook and study up on such things. In the end it will prove the best value you ever got for six dollars, and the fact that you ask this question is evidence that you need it.

Condenser Argument

John A. Maurer, projectionist, Massillon, Ohio, says:

A matter which has an indirect, but a nevertheless important, bearing upon your recent discussion with John Griffith with regard to the condenser line-up of Bruce S. Watson, Muscatine, Iowa, is the thing I shall discuss.

With the plano convex or M. Bi-C. condenser systems now in general use, in which both lenses are of the same diameter, the screen illumination does not fall off nearly so rapidly when crater distance is increased as the ordinary method of calculation would indicate.

This does not mean that the method of calculation is wrong, but that other considerations enter into the matter in such a way as to modify its application. The accompanying diagrams are accurate copies of drawings made by Young's construction—an accurate method of laying out light ray action which takes care of all factors entering into the matter. These diagrams are based upon what I know to be the actual curves of the imported lenses now on the market, assumed to be made from glass having a refractive index of 1.525—which I have found to be the average of a number of specimens tested, and, to be strictly accurate, on yellow light.

Figure II shows the combination of a 6.5 and an 8.5 inch plano convex, with the crater four inches from the face of the collector lens.

Figure III shows the line-up of the Muscatine projectionist. It is of no especial importance in this discussion, and is included merely for your comparison.

By the ordinary method of calculation the light-gathering powers of systems I and II would be in the ratio of the square of 4 to the square of 3, which would mean that system II would pass 44 per cent. less light than would system I. However, you will note that in neither of these systems is the whole of the diameter of the collector lens effective. You will also note that in figure II a larger diameter is working than is effective in figure I. This is partly due to the rays being more nearly parallel between the lenses and partly to the fact that the thinner converging lens reduces the distance between the edges of the two lenses. The angle of rays effective, insofar as concerns the converging lens, is 59 degrees in system I and 52 in system II.

Now, in order to accurately calculate the relative amounts of light in these different angles, it is necessary to compare the areas they intercept on the surfaces of spheres (imaginary) of equal diameters, having their centers at the source of light. The simplest way of getting this comparison is to compare the values of one minus the cosine of half the angle, or as a mathematician would put it, "Vers. 1/2 A." Figured by this method system II PASSES 22 per cent. less light than does system No. I.

And now here is another factor to consider. No. II has much less spherical aberration than has No. I. The importance of this factor in condenser systems has, I think, been greatly underestimated. Its effect here is that a part of the extra light which does get through No. I is wasted at the spot, or if it does appear on the screen it is as discolored light. This effect is so pronounced that it very nearly evens matters up, as between the two combinations. The light from No. I might be a bit the brighter of the two, but that from No. II certainly would be the whiter and more pleasing, and this, be it understood, is entirely aside from any question of getting the entire light beam through the projection lens.

Figures I-a, II-a and III-a show, by pairs, the crossing points of marginal and paraxial rays from combinations I, II and III respectively. They are drawn to the same scale as the other diagrams, i.e., full size. The scale of inches under each diagram has its zero at the center of the combination from which the rays are coming. If you extend the lines of these figures the proper distance to the left you will find they will join up with the rays of figures I, II and III.

I think these drawings really speak for themselves better than I can speak for them, so I will close with the remark that I have been studying this angle of the condenser problem for several months past, both theoretically and by practical experiment.

By the way, I might remark that diagram III-a shows that either Muscatine has not given his exact crater distance, or his condensers are inaccurate as to focal length. He says he uses his aperture 18 inches from the aperture, whereas the line-up he gives forms the best spot at 15 inches from the condenser.

Note: I do not claim that any of these diagrams represent actual exact working conditions, but this does not in the least affect their value as studies of the effect of spherical aberration.

First off, while I think of it, when writers speak of distance from condenser they should always designate whether its optical center, a point midway between the two lenses, or the face of the collector lens is meant.

As to what you have advanced: Well, for the most part, I shall have to leave the discussion of it to those better versed in scientific optics than I am, maintaining, however, that while it is possible that other elements, such as those you have named, may operate to modify the operation of the law of the open light source, as illustrated on page 162 of Bluebook, to some extent, as I now see the matter I would place heavy emphasis on the "to some extent." Figure I-a, II-a and III-a are interesting and instructive—very much so, in showing the varying effect of spherical aberration in different plano convex and in the M Bi-C condenser. If your drawing III-a is correct, as I presume it is, the reduction of spherical aberration by the addition of the two additional surfaces is much more pronounced than I had supposed it to be.

Let us see what some of you optical sharks can do with what brother Maurer has presented.

Why the Sputter

An Iowa man, who desires to be unknown, is up to his eyes in trouble. He says:

I have been projecting motion pictures in this small town for a year and have had no trouble at all. Have the Bluebook and had the Third Edition as well, and have studied hard. To that and the kindly assistance of the boss I attribute my ability to get by. But now I'm up to my eyes in trouble. I am using the same carbons I always did—Columbia—but of late the arc continually sputters and I just can't hold it steady. It has nearly driven me mad with worry.

I built a film storage cabinet a few weeks ago and it works just fine. Have a separate compartment for each reel, with a space below which I keep filled with water. Above the reels is a cupboard in which I keep my supplies. It is very neat and convenient.

Really, friend, I had to laugh. You built a film storage tank with water below and your supply cupboard above. Keep your stock of carbons in it too, don't you? The trouble (sputtering) began just after you got that cabinet finished, didn't it? Sure!

The water reservoir you have kept religiously supplied with very wet water, which is good for the films. BUT when those carbons sputter they are merely swearing at you for subjecting them to a vapor bath and then expecting them to burn well.

Your cabinet is doubtless very nice, and all right for the film, but you yank those carbons out pronto, and put them in a thoroughly dry place; also place half a dozen of them in the bottom of the lamphouse to dry out, and every time you use one replace it from your stock. Do these simple things and see how quickly the carbons will stop sputtering, and start purring in satisfied content. See page 388 of Bluebook.

He Has Trouble

Jacob R. Steinfield, New Orleans, La., has trouble on his mind, which he describes as follows:

I have two Power 6-B projectors, am using fifty amperes from a motor generator set and have been getting what I thought was very good results until right lately. Two weeks ago a projectionist who had a card from the Chicago local visited me and talked very big about "what they did in Chicago." He was not at all slow in telling me what I ought to do, one thing being to take my projection lenses apart and clean their inner surfaces.

I had never done such a stunt. The lenses looked clean and I hesitated, whereupon he took one of them apart and "showed me how." He went out and got a little alcohol, mixed it with water and washed all the lenses, and cleaned everything thoroughly. I'll say he did a thorough job. BUT when I started the show that night, and Chicago had departed, there was a ring of light clear around the screen when the projector of which he cleaned the lens was working. The other was all right—its lens not having been touched.

I have taken the lens apart and, so far as I can see it is all right. Can you tell me what it is and how to fix it?

The trouble is that your Chicago friend did too thorough a job, or scrubbed one wrong place rather. Evidently he wiped the interior surface of the barrel, which he should not have touched, and in so doing removed the black coating, or some of it. The ring you see is light reflected from the sides of the lens barrel.

Take your lens apart and paint the interior of the barrel with a coating of coach painter's lampblack thinned down with turpentine, allowing the paint to dry very thoroughly before re-assembling the lens. In other words, be very certain that all the turpentine has evaporated before re-assembling. You may hasten this by heating the lens barrel SLIGHTLY—just so you can still hold it in your hand without discomfort. Or you may lay the barrel in the blast of a fan for half an hour.

In re-assembling, be very certain that you get each lens in the same place you removed it from, and that the strongest convex surface is next the screen. Set up the holding ring snugly, but DON'T clamp them down tight on the lenses.

You should take your lenses apart and clean their interior surfaces after about five hundred hours' use, if you run say ten hours a day; or after two hundred and fifty hours' use, if you run evenings only. They may look perfectly clean as you look through them, but that is no proof they are not sufficiently fogged to greatly increase the reflecting power of the surfaces, hence the light loss. See page 141 of the Bluebook. Do not imagine that that chap represented Chicago. Chicago has some AWFUL dubs, true; also she has some as good men as you will find anywhere—distinctly high class. Most large cities are the same.

His Difficulty

(In last week's issue an Ohio projectionist complained of his eight-year-old lenses—chief difficulty being curvature of field. I strongly advised him to get new lenses. Due to an accident in the print shop, the additional information which follows was left out of the paper.—Ed.)

Of course, the installation of new lenses would effect no startling change. The patrons might not even notice it, and the manager might have to look twice to see the difference, BUT THE DIFFERENCE IS THERE, and the thing friend manager has to sell HAS been improved, hence, while the difference in seat sales may not be at all noticeable, it nevertheless is there, since the better a thing is the more inclined the public is to buy it.

As to Lenses

As to the possibility of absolute flatness of field, there is only one kind of lens will give that, and that is an anastigmat lens, BUT with the present day high-grade projection lenses available, there should be no perceptible curvature of field with a sixteen-foot picture at 120-foot projection distance; also you should be able to get an acceptable sharpness at top and bottom without your screen tilted, with the projection angle you have, or at least a very slight tilt should do the trick.

I would suggest that you buy direct from a lens manufacturer and get a guarantee that there will be no perceptible curvature of field.

As to a standard—I know of none which could be applied, except this: Cut a strip of mica the width of a film. See to it that it is perfectly flat. On one surface draw perfectly straight scratch lines one-eighth of an inch apart, both ways. Place this in the projector in place of a film, BEING CERTAIN IT LIES PERFECTLY FLAT OVER THE APERTURE; project the lines to the screen and test their straightness with a line stretched over them. If the lines are not straight the lens is imperfect. You may be certain the mica is flat over the aperture if the lines are in sharp focus all over the screen. If any one can suggest a better method of lens testing, let him do so.

Many Picture Theatres Are Building and Opening in the Pacific Northwest

THE theatre building program in the Pacific Northwest is keeping pace with building activities in other lines, according to recent reports from our Seattle correspondent of proposed new houses, those under construction at the present time and several that have made their bow during the past few weeks.

Among those just opening their doors are the Proctor Street Blue Mouse in Tacoma, under direction of John Hamrick, which had its premiere November 13 to a large, enthusiastic audience. It is the most beautiful suburban house in the Pacific Northwest, and was completely furnished and equipped by B. F. Shearer, Inc.

Mayor Fawcett of Tacoma made the opening address. "The Green Goddess" was the feature picture. An unusual record was achieved in the finishing of the house to the final detail before it was thrown open to the public. There will be no gang of workmen on the premises, frantically gathering up the loose ends.

Shearer made complete installation of all furnishings, equipment and interior decoration in eight days, turning the house over complete to J. William Houck, who will manage both Tacoma Blue Mouse theatres.

Other New Houses Scheduled

The Arcade, Myers & Ford's new house in La Grande, Oregon, which has been furnished by B. F. Shearer, Inc., was scheduled to open about November 20.

B. F. Shearer, Inc., has also secured the complete contract for lighting, decorating, furnishing and equipping a new 800-seat theatre in Cottage Grove, Oregon. It will cost in the neighborhood of $75,000.

William Morelock will be the owner. He now operates the Arcade, which he will close when its new namesake is ready for occupancy about January 15. The new house will have a full stage for road attractions.

Seattle is also due for a new house in the suburban district. It will be located at 2352 Beacon avenue, and will be a frame building, 120x40 feet, costing around $15,000. The Prefontaine Building Company will be the owner. E. W. Houghton & Son are architects. B. F. Shearer, Inc., will seat the house with 500 upholstered Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs.

D. Constanti, who owns two houses in Tacoma and one in Puyallup, has let contracts for his new theatre in Sumner. B. F. Shearer, Inc., will completely furnish and equip the house, as well as furnishing all lighting specifications. Projection will be Simplex and the 600 seats will be Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs.

The Heilig Theatre, which has just opened as a high class feature picture house, giving special musical programs and prologues, has installed a Robert Morton organ.

Tilamook's Coliseum Has Opened

Partridge & Morrison's attractive new $75,000 theatre, which recently opened in Tilamook, Oregon, is a notable addition to the motion picture theatres in the Pacific Northwest. The house is of brick and is finished with a marquee and a big electric sign in front. The box office is fitted with an automa-ticket machine.

Inside the color scheme is in soft shades of gray and rose. Gray theatre carpets cover foyer and aisles. All lighting effects are of the flood light type, with a handsome fixture in the ceiling, giving an effect of warmth.

Seven hundred and fifty Heywood-Wakefield opera chairs were used on ground floor and balcony. Drapes and velour stage curtains are of soft blues, and an unusual effect is created by the front exits, which are of the ramp order, fenced by a low railing.

Exits are draped. Beautiful flower gardens at either side give an opportunity for colored lighting effects. Above these the organ grille, which is of fresco effect, extends to the stage at either side.

Well Equipped Projection Room

In the foyer, drapes with valances are elaborated by candle bracket fixtures, while odd lanterns are hung from the ceiling. Several handsome wall mirrors are used effectively. Stairways lead from either side to rest rooms and balcony. The fireproof projection room is above the balcony in the center of the house and is equipped with two Simplex projectors, a Transverter, stereopticon, spotlight and other modern apparatus. A ventilating system is used.

B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle, was in complete charge of interior furnishings, decorating, seating, special lighting effects and booth equipment.

Loew Will Have New Theatre in Woodhaven

Plans have been approved for the construction of a theatre and business building, costing $600,000, at the corner of Ninety-sixth street and Jamaica avenue, Woodhaven, L. I., N. Y.

West Coast Theatres Co. Appropriates $5,000,000 for New Picture Theatre

AN appropriation of $5,000,000 has been made by the West Coast Theatres Company, Inc., for its 1924 expansion and development program in Los Angeles and vicinity.

This sum does not include the money to be expended in the production of motion pictures, but represents the amount of cash to be spent by the concern in the purchase and leasing of property on which new theatres will be erected.

At the present time the concern has a total of 110 theatres in California, fifteen of which are in the northern part and the remainder in Southern California.

Three New Theatres

Part of this appropriation, Vice President Lesser states, will be used for the purchase of property on which three large new "Class A" structures, with a seating capacity of approximately 2,500 will be built.

In addition to these, numerous other smaller houses will either be built or purchased and a large "Class A" theatre, store and office structure, to represent an investment of $500,000, will be erected at Washington and Vermont. Tentative plans for this structure are now being prepared by local architects.

Ten new theatres, which will be operated by the West Coast Company, are now under construction and several of them will be open to the public before the first of the year.

The location of these playhouses and the amount invested in each is given as follows:

Long Beach, $750,000; Avenue Fifty-six and Pasadena avenue, $200,000; Glendale, $300,000; Fifty-fourth street and Western avenue, $400,000; Orange, $150,000; Compton, $100,000; Pomona, $250,000; Santa Monica, $400,000, and San Pedro, $750,000.

The money expended in the construction of these improvements is being made by the West Coast Company and their associates under their 1923 appropriation.

Plan a Realty Company

In conjunction with the $5,000,000 expansion program, Lesser also announces that plans are now being drawn up for the organization of a West Coast Realty Company, to be capitalized at more than $1,000,000.

This corporation will include the present board of directors in the West Coast Theatres Company and is being formed for the purpose of purchasing and improving property in the vicinity of locations selected for theatre sites.

The directors of the West Coast Theatres Company are M. and A. L. Gore, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser, Davis Bershon and Joseph M. Schenck.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

Averaging one a day, six companies incorporated and entered the motion picture industry in New York state during the week ending November 17, according to the records in the state's corporation bureau.

These companies were: the L. S. and R. Amusement Co., of Buffalo, with A. R. Sherry, Jacob Levin and Stephen Rebstock, Buffalo, the amount of capitalization not appearing in the papers; the Protec-A-Film Corporation, capitalized at $20,000, with Philip Bernstein, Charles Ginsburg, New York; Anna Morris, Brooklyn; Fordham Amusement Corporation, $25,000, H. E. Bogdich, E. F. Meisler, M. C. Ryan, New York; Elite Theatre Co., $10,000, Dr. A. Lopes Cardozo, John C. Kemp, W. W. Chambers, Richmond Hill; Advance Productions, Inc., $10,000, Benjamin K. SEATING—

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.

No human heart can escape the drama and the emotion which Seastrom has lifted from life and transferred to the screen. It speaks the universal language of the heart, no matter how noble or ignoble that heart may be.

See it and be convinced how great a miracle the mechanism known as a motion picture camera is capable of when there is heart, intelligence, humility and sincerity in the driving force back of it—the mind which directed it. Goldwyn presents

My dear Mr. Merrick:

After looking over nearly 40 single reels to get a reel suitable for the opening of the new Criterion Theatre with the world's premier of Charles Chaplin's picture, A WOMAN OF PARIS, under our new policy of two de luxe shows daily at $1.00 and $1.55 per seat, I finally picked on your Educational Film, THE ANT, the first of the Secrets of Life series. Joe, I am mighty glad I did for this little picture has been a riot at every show!

The audiences applaud vociferously each time it is shown.

Give us more short reels like this to go with our de luxe shows.

My dear Howard:-

In response to your inquiry with reference to the Secrets of Life subject "The Bee", I am pleased to advise you that this went over very well with our audience and seemingly attracted very great interest. Personally I consider it one of the best, if not the best, subject of its kind that I have ever seen.

I only hope that this letter will not be the incentive to make such subjects into feature lengths as is usually done when one and two reels become successful.

Very truly yours,

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Prints

“THIS subject will not down,” says a memo from the enthusiastic Van Buren Powell, who conducts Moving Picture World’s “Straight From the Shoulder” reports.

Then we read another wail from a small-town exhibitor about the condition of the print on his most recent feature.

This happens about once a week—sometimes oftener.

Until we begin to think that the small theatre owner must run up the flag and call out the village band whenever he accidentally receives a print in shape for showing without apologies.

Not a very encouraging situation.

* * *

LET’S try to get this straight. Either the business of the small town theatres is a very vital and necessary part of this industry, or, it is simply “extra money”—or, it is a nuisance.

What is it?

We have basis for judgment in the amount of money that is spent to get the small theatre man’s contract. Distribution costs are the thorn in the side of this business. And isn’t it true that by far the greatest proportion of the cost is spent on the legion of salesmen roaming the “sticks”?

Over the average it costs as much in most organizations to keep the salesmen moving as they are receiving in salary. And those railroad and hotel expenses are being expended in search of small accounts.

It is conceded, therefore, that the village theatre account is worth something.

Worth following through, at any rate.

Are we doing that? In the most obvious and simple phase of our service—the physical condition of the goods sold?

* * *

YOU can buy a package of Uneeda Biscuits at Acker, Merrill & Condit’s in New York today, and purchase another box at the Four Corners General Store next week—and feel that you have got your money’s worth in both cases.

Is the public not entitled to the same expectation in the case of the motion picture?

Granted that all prints cannot be NEW prints—is there any justification for the print that is impossible—that distorts the acting, renders the story unintelligible, and ruins the patience?

The account that is worth selling is worth keeping.

It is our conviction that the reason small town accounts are not given the service that will KEEP them on the books is that all the emphasis and frenzy is placed on SELLING and not a thought on the keeping.

It is the product of a vicious circle. First, the exchange manager must keep his operating costs at the lowest point possible, meaning the temptation to shave in those parts not immediately concerned with SELLING.

Second, he knows that the ordering of another print puts his head in a noose—he must produce a certain quota of business to justify the print. Rather than take the chance of falling down, he decides, it is far better not to order the additional print, then the home office will never know about the business he MIGHT have secured.

THERE is a problem here that must be solved. We mention it, knowing full well that the mere mention is not going to solve it—that there are financial and physical questions involved that will tax the best brains and most sincere intentions of any organization.

But the thought has come to us that while we are awaiting opportunities to lay laurel wreaths on producing and selling heads—let’s give notice that there is opportunity for a man or an organization to gain a prize for DELIVERING THE GOODS. In good condition—as sold, and as bought.

This week—this month—and this year—they'll never get through talking about the testimonial dinner to HARRY REICHENBACH at the Ritz last Wednesday. SOME large evening; yessir, boy!

As far as the inhabitants of Film Row are concerned it seems foolish to spend time and space on the affair. Everybody was there in person. Everybody—or at least the majority—knows what happened. Description from us is superfluous.

But some one should put down in black and white a tribute to the committee that could handle such an event and carry it through to such glorious success. So here are the names: WILLIAM BRANDT, JOE DANNENBURG, SAM ROTHAFEL, JACK ALICOATE (ex-officio). Sing your own praise—and you can't make it too strong.

But while you are writing the praise for the committee underline each word with a thought of the evening's reason for existence — HARRY REICHENBACH. Harry can surely consider his silvery thatch a real crown after being on the receiving end of an event that packed the Crystal Room of the Ritz with the brains, beauty and wit of the industry.

Just think of having SENATOR JIMMY WALKER for toastmaster and then a card of attractions including "BUGS" BAER, WILLIE COLLIER, HARRY HIRSHFIELD, GEORGE BEBAN, SAMUEL GOLDWYN, NATHAN BURKAN, RICHARD ROWLAND, and a few reels of really humorous film.

The funniest film of all probably being the one of the guests taken as they arrived. Two strangers made and seconded a motion that another reel be taken of the guests departing. It was placed under the table by a unanimous vote.

"BUGS" BAER put everybody at ease at the outset with the remark that he was glad to see the entire industry present, regretting only the unavoidable absence of the cherubic Diamond Brothers.

A World reporter later secured a statement from the Diamond Twins that their absence was due only to their inability to get sufficient police protection.

"Jimmy" Walker spoke the truth when he said he was glad he wasn't the speaker following Baer on the program after which Sam Goldwyn fooled 'em all by coming through with the professional aplomb of a Friar.

Sam's prize thought being: "I hope Harry doesn't take all this too seriously. If he does he may show up at the next dinner with the ninety-five per cent. and I'll have the five."

Willie Collier then told the story of his twelve-month vacation in Hollywood. It's a nifty. Anyway you take it.

Incidentally, Willie explained the origin of the national anthem. "Yes —." "The song was probably inspired by the Patented Non-Bearing Fruit Trees in the rear of my Hollywood Bungalow."

Harry Hirshfield, who draws "Abie the Agent," told of his interview with Henry Ford in which the flivver king explained his antipathy to Jews by saying: "Every time we hire one as a salesman he always uses the demonstration car to go looking for a good job."

Here's another: "How many Jews are there in the United States?" said Mr. Ford. I told him: "You run for President, Mr. Ford, and you'll know the number exactly."

All this brought about by the statement that Reichenbach would probably handle the publicity on Ford's campaign. If Hirshfield sees Henry again he can tell him on our authority that if the Silver King handles the job Ford will not only be elected President but will probably also acquire the jobs of Grand Klaxon of the Ku Klux and Royal High Mogul of B'nai Brith.

Prominent names strewn all over the dais like loose change. Just a few of those recalled: MARCUS LOEW, EARL HAMMONS, MOE MARK, CHARLES O'REILLY, and the various speakers hereinbefore and otherwise mentioned.

Shucks, the dais couldn't hold them all. Magnuts overflowed to the tables for common ordinary folks like you and me. We rubbed shoulders with DAVID HOWELLS, stumbled over the chair of IRVING LESSER, got a hail from AL LICHTMAN, a smile from CHARLIE BURR, a word from PAUL LAZARUS and CHARLIE MOYER, a nod from VIVIAN MOSES, aid from BOB DEXTER, a chuckle from PAUL GULICK and GEORGE BROWN, advice from DOCTOR GIANNINI, a laugh from JERRY BEATTY and an invitation from JOHN FLINN, BOB KANE and CHARLIE MCCARTHY.

PAUL MOONEY was consorting with PORTLAND OREGON JENSEN, which must be proof that it wasn't exhibitors who turned Paul's hair gray.

And JIMMY PHOTOPLAY QUIRK was around looking as cheery as one of his own circulation statements.

The Crystal Room was festooned like a circus tent, with HERB CROOKER in costume doing the barker act. Herb had considerable trouble keeping his hat on straight.

MAX FLEISCHER contributed a corking "Out of the Inkwell" cartoon that told of the Snoop Hound's investigation of Harry Reichenbach's career. The highlight was Harry's visit as a handsome black haired boy of nine to a fortune teller who said: "You will grow up and enter the picture business." The hirsute adornment flashed gray on the instant.

Ye gods! Here is what the times have come to. When the evening broke up and the old-time speech would have been, "Let's go to Jack's!" we heard DANNY organizing a bridge game. KELCEY ALLEN fainted on the spot. EARL GULICK hurried home.

VALENTINO at the Garden had an easy task of selecting one winner out of eighty-eight beauties compared with our job of awarding the prize on the guest reel. At the hour of going to press it is a deadlock between SAM GRAND and BOBBY NORTH. With SAM ZIERLER scuffling the heels of both.

Speaking of appearances, we expected to find ABE WARNER a "convalescent." And he is ready to take on Firpo.

Didja ever try to watch EVERYTHING at a three-ring circus? Yes? Then you'll know why we've used up our space allotment and haven't told half of the happenings. It can't be done. R. E. W.

Padding of Feature Another Cause of Enormous Waste

AMONG all the almost innumerable interviews and suggestions and criticisms that have followed the first real move toward retrenchment in the film industry, I do not recall a single instance in which attention has been called to the enormous waste, to say nothing of the peril to the exhibitor's business, caused by the padding of feature pictures into unwarranted lengths.

Salaries paid to stars are held up as one of the greatest forms of extravagance in the business. Undoubtedly the salaries paid the bigger stars and directors are in most cases ridiculously high. But when a picture that can and should be made in six reels and produced in twelve or thirteen weeks' time, is padded into ten or eleven reels and the production period stretched from twelve or thirteen weeks into twenty weeks or more, it cannot all be blamed on the stars and their salaries. The salaries are bad enough, certainly, but if the stars were on the payroll twelve weeks instead of twenty or more, think what the difference in total expense would be.

There was quite general discussion of this subject of padded, over-long feature pictures earlier in the year, at which time the expressions of exhibitors showed conclusively that the padding of features was proving a terrible handicap to the picture theatre. But in spite of all that was said and done at this time, the self-centered type of director, seeking personal glory before the general welfare of the industry, goes merrily on dragging out his pictures to unwarranted lengths, not only making it practically impossible for an exhibitor to build up a program of varied entertainment, but actually in most cases killing the entertainment appeal of the feature itself through making it boresome.

For example, only recently a popular novel was offered for screening. A well-known director turned it down because it did not offer enough material for a six-reel feature. But another director took this same story and padded it into eleven reels.

This is not building ENTERTAINMENT—the sort of entertainment that made the motion picture the most popular amusement in the country today. But it is hanging a millstone about the neck of the exhibitor who desires to give his patrons ENTERTAINMENT. And it is causing more waste, perhaps, than any other single evil in the industry.

Was it this sort of thing that built

By E. W. HAMMONS
President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

up the wonderful success of the Capitol, Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, or of the Loew theatrical enterprises, or Gordon's or Saxe's or Blank's, or the Balaban and Katz houses or Jensen and Von Herberg's or Grauman's? NO! It was the building up of a show and the advertising of ENTERTAINMENT. These great houses could never have come into existence and prospered by depending each week upon a single feature picture alone, even had the average of truly great pictures among them been much higher than it has been.

Every one of these successful showmen and every other successful exhibitor in the country has sold ENTERTAINMENT to his public. His shows, like vaudeville, have appealed to the public through their great variety and novelty. But how on earth is an exhibitor going to get novelty or variety into his program with a feature eleven or twelve reels long?

Volume business is the only thing that will keep the picture industry going. This is just as true from the exhibitor's standpoint as it is from the producer's or distributor's. The very long novel, if unusually great, may bring the most glory to the author. But the good short story is more widely read and brings the greatest profit to the publisher. In the magazine field, the leading publication devoted to lengthy articles of a serious character can show less than two-fifths of the circulation of the leading magazines devoted to shorter stories of a purely ENTERTAINMENT character. Vaudeville, whose great appeal is variety, so far outstrips in attendance any other form of stage entertainment that there is absolutely no comparison. And the human nature that makes these things true is not going to change when it comes to motion pictures. Still ENTERTAINMENT is the thing. Variety is the great appeal. And the only way picture attendance can be kept up to a high point that will keep this industry prosperous is by giving the public the ENTERTAINMENT that first won its approval for the screen.

So while the whole industry is thinking of economy, it would be well for directors and producers to give special thought to the great waste caused by the padding of feature pictures and to the still more disastrous result in the form of diminishing picture patronage that is sure to result from failure to provide real ENTERTAINMENT on the screens of the nation's theatres. And it would be well for exhibitors to see that directors and producers give thought to this subject by swamping them with emphatic protests, and, if this is not enough, by absolutely refusing to run the program feature which is made into a greater length than is called for by the story.

Anniversary Drive Starts

Hodkinson Salesmen Competing for Ability Awards

The Hodkinson Sixth Anniversary drive is now in full swing. Salesmen and Salesmanagers, in the hope of annexing some of the substantial prizes offered by W. W. Hodkinson for the best showings, are using all their powers of persuasion to get their exhibitor friends to co-operate in bringing their division to the fore.

In addition to November-Anniversary month, George Dillon, Branch Sales Manager for New York, has inaugurated Dillon-December month and is offering special prizes in a sales drive of his own.

Heyl Leaves for Coast

Friends of Chester Bennett, F. B. O. producer of Jane Novak productions and owner of the Bennett Laboratories in Hollywood, will be glad to know that he is slowly recovering from an illness which has kept him confined to his room for several weeks.

Mayer Sees San Francisco as New Film Production Center

LOUIS B. MAYER, independent producer, who went to San Francisco to attend the world premiere of "Pleasure Mad" at the Warfield Theatre, met the leading exhibitors or Northern California at a delightful luncheon at the St. Francis Hotel on November 20. While the affair was arranged on short notice, about fifty were present, including a number from a distance. Mr. Mayer was introduced by Harry Lustig, western district manager for Metro.

The speaker expressed the opinion that combinations of exhibitors, circuits and the like cannot dictate the prices they will pay for films, nor can producers or distributors be arbitrary in this respect. Competition is needed in both producing and exhibiting, he said, but more centralized distribution could do much to eliminate waste.

Plans for the removal of a large part of the Los Angeles picture colony to other fields during the next two or three years were revealed by Mr. Mayer. He stated that producers have not been happy there for some time, that scenic attractions have become inadequate and that new locations were being sought.

"San Francisco in the past," he said, "has made numerous offers to producers to come here. They failed because these concerns had too much invested in Los Angeles, although the scenic and climatic conditions in San Francisco are acknowledged to be superior. The valuation of property in Los Angeles has increased so tremendously that we can sell our holdings at a good profit, and, due to several factors, have decided to move to New York or San Francisco.

"The heads of the companies want the studios moved to New York because the financial interests and main offices are there. The stars, production managers and the like want to come to San Francisco. There is no question but that San Francisco can obtain many of these plants if the proper organization effort is put forth. Tell the eastern heads that this city has no snow, or even frost, that the days are uniformly cool and that it has more hours of sunshine per year than any other city in the United States. Producers know this, but the financial heads do not. I will come to this city if even a few of the other companies can be induced to come."

Among those who attended the luncheon were Harry Lustig, Fred W. Voigt, Phil Weinstein, Charles Muehlman, A. W. Mather, M. S. Vidaver, L. B. Cross, C. M. Thall, Peter Hanlon, Nat Magner, M. Naify, C. C. Griffin, R. McNeil, Thomas O'Day, Louis R. Greenfield, Rex Midley, John DiStasio, Louis Hyman, H. L. Beach and Nasser Bros.

The Industry Must Cure Own Ills, Says Arthur S. Friend

REGRET that so much about the troubles of the industry have been made public was the keynote of a talk given by Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, before the Hays' Committee on Public Relations on the occasion of the presentation of Distinctive's new picture, "The Steadfast Heart," to that body on Tuesday of last week.

Mr. Friend said that he was not in sympathy with the publication of the views of the men in the industry as to what was wrong in the industry.

"It would be foolish and futile," he said, "for me to say now that there is nothing wrong in the industry. There is a good deal that is wrong, but that is not surprising for, after all, the industry as an industry is only a few years old—surely not more than twenty—and in its present phase only ten. It is a combination, this motion picture industry, of art and business, and every other art that we know anything about, and every other kind of business that we know anything about, is hundreds of thousands of years old. In no art and in no business has perfection been reached, notwithstanding the traditions and the experiences that the other arts and industries enjoy.

"Our ills are all remediable but not through the public. The public is not concerned in anything except the result that is shown on the screen. The remedy for every ill in the motion picture industry is to be found, and to be effected, within the industry. Our problems are not insoluble, though many of them are difficult. I am afraid our cries to the public have resulted in bringing to us the big finger of shame. One who has watched us with cynical amusement for some time told me the other day that if some of those in the industry, who were weeping and wailing about what's wrong in the industry, wanted the answer, they could get it by looking into a mirror. I am afraid his quip is not entirely without justification.

"Most of our difficulties can be overcome by the individual effort of the men at the head of the various companies. If we are paying too much to stars or actors, it is our own fault, and if directors are uncontrollable, perhaps we can gain more by the intensive study of ourselves than by bleating about them. Surely a motion picture company is not the only one in the world that has faced the problem of what to do with men or women who promise or threaten to become invaluable.

"Motion picture executives must be something more than swivel chair salary hounds and bonus cutters. A recognition of their duties and a strict attention to them will be most helpful in the curing of the evils of the industry, and let it be hoped that out of the noise made they may hear the call to work."

No Movies in Amoy

One of the few remaining virgin fields for moving picture exploitation has been discovered in China, where the city of Amoy, with a population of 120,000 inhabitants, has been found to be without a single moving picture theatre, or, in fact, without any amusements whatever.

The absence of moving pictures in so populous a community has just been reported to the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., by the American consul.

Buys Studio Site

Harold Lloyd, Pathe's popular comedian, has purchased forty acres in Westwood, Cal., as a site for a mammoth studio which will be erected by the Harold Lloyd Corporation.

While plans for the construction of the Harold Lloyd Studios are actually being drafted at the present time, no definite announcement concerning the details of the new studio enterprise will be forthcoming until the Pathe star completes his present contract with the Hollywood Studios, where he is now renting studio space for the production of his first independent picture for Pathe, titled "The Girl Expert."

The site just purchased lies midway between the tracts recently purchased by William Fox and the Christie Brothers, who are planning a transfer of their activities from Hollywood to Westwood in the near future.

Dance Till Breakfast

Goldwyn Club Affair Is Largely Attended

The Goldwyn Club dance, given at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, Friday night of last week, turned out to be one of the biggest things of the sort in film circles here. In spite of the heavy downpour of rain all afternoon and most of the evening, the attendance reached the 2,500 mark and most of the participants did not go home till it was approaching the breakfast hour.

Dancing began soon after 9 o'clock to music furnished by Vincent Lopez, conducting his Hotel Pennsylvania Orchestra, and from then on till after 3 o'clock alternated with the amusement features which had been provided. More than 90 per cent. of the persons now appearing on the New York stage who had promised to aid in the entertainment portion of the program kept their word, which is in itself something unusual and reflects much credit upon Frank Roehrenbeck and the others in charge of the arrangements.

Johnsons to Sail

Going to Spend Five Years in Africa Making Pictures of Wild Beasts

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, who made "Trailing African Wild Animals," the big Metro success, will sail on the Leviathan on Saturday, December 1, to spend five years in the heart of darkest Africa filming wild beasts for another of their remarkable pictures, which also will be released by Metro.

On arriving at Lake Paradise, in Africa, log cabins will be constructed and a permanent camp made. From these headquarters various journeys will be made to photograph for the motion picture fans of the world the wild life of Africa. Mr. Johnson confidently hopes to obtain even more thrilling motion pictures than those shown in "Trailing African Wild Animals," a picture that has brought to Metro unstinted praise from press, public and exhibitors.

Three European Features Destined for American Market Are Analyzed

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

The following article from W. Stephen Bush, MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondent on the Continent, is the first of a series that will afford a new service to those American producers, importers, distributors and theatre owners that it at all times earnestly desires to serve. These articles will review and analyze big European productions eventually destined for appearance on American screens. Further, if any readers of MOVING PICTURE WORLD wish any specific information regarding the European film world, this publication will be glad to obtain this for them through the co-operation of Mr. Bush.—The Editor.

WITHIN the week I have seen three big foreign features, all of them intended for eventual American consumption. One of them is by a director of some note, whose chef d'oeuvre is, at time of writing, still on the screen of a Broadway theatre after a run of many weeks. Perhaps it will pay to analyze these productions. On the best of authorities I am able to say that in the very near future all of them will be bought for the American market. One of the features deals with a strictly modern theme, revolving around the lives of a family of newly rich, while the others are taken from the classics of the world's literature.

These last two, "William Tell" and "The Merchant of Venice," present interesting points of similarity. In both cases the directors have gone to the countries in which the original stories have been laid. The makers of "The Merchant of Venice" have traveled to Venice and have taken every outdoor and many indoor scenes on the shores of the Adriatic Sea. Likewise the producers of "William Tell" have pitched their tents in the villages and mountains of Switzerland, always on the very spots that have become famous through the Tell legend. Both plays have a cast worthy of their best traditions; not a cast of actors taken from the speaking stage of some noted theatre and hurriedly rehearsed for this performance, but artists trained and ripened in the wisdom and the practice of the screen.

Money on both productions has been spent ungrudgingly, but not unwisely and surely not wastefully. Every inch of both films tells of the honest labor, of the midnight oil and the hard struggle without which the gods have never blessed the work of any mortal man. The scenarios of both have taken into account the needs of the screen above all else, and have shaped the stories with that end in view, unhampered by any false reverence of texts and traditions.

Now in spite of all these points of resemblance, it is altogether likely that one of them will find far greater favor with the public than the other. The difference lies entirely in the direction. In "William Tell" the temptation to "play up" the scenery was as great as in "The Merchant of Venice," but the director of "Tell" has splendidly withstood the temptation, while he of "The Merchant of Venice" has yielded to it with a weakness which is almost pathetic. The director of "Tell" has made the most of his scenic opportunities, but he has been guided by this principle: The scenery is here for the sake of the drama and not the drama for the sake of the scenery. There is not a scene in which the background is not strictly subordinated to the action. The snow-capped mountains and all the rest of it are always the frame of the picture—a glorious and beautiful frame to be sure, but never more than a frame.

The result of this admirable restraint and discrimination of the director is astonishing in its effect on the spectator. The setting blends most harmoniously with the action and from this excellent combination there arises a beauty and power which are far more easily felt than described. Every move of the actors, from the principals to the supers, seems most natural and most convincing.

On the other hand, in "The Merchant of Venice" there is altogether too much Venice and too little of anything else. Not much, of course, of the Venice of Shylock and Antonio has been left in the course of the centuries. This fact alone should have put the producer on his guard and should have made him use infinite discretion in the choice of his outdoor settings. As it is, not only the drama but the actors themselves are all lost in the scenery—gorgeous scenery without a doubt, but nothing more than scenery in a case where drama should at all times have triumphed over mere scenery beyond the shadow of a doubt. As a result, the whole film play appears like something blurred and indistinct, while the actors, thoroughly capable with hardly one exception, seem unnatural and their passing to and fro instead of exciting interest, easily becomes tiresome.

"William Tell" might be described as a feature of the first order if the producers had not dodged some of the finest spectacular episodes, apparently for no reason other than that the difficulties seemed too great. The storm on the lake was shown in the titles and on the shore; a couple of rowboats were shown rocking in the wind and the treetops were swaying in the breeze, when Tell appeared and jumped into the boat to save the fugitive from the pursuing minions of Gessler. Not a bit of the lake was seen. One could not help thinking how an American producer would have welcomed such an opportunity for realism and would have never rested until it was achieved in the finest possible fashion.

Likewise, the wreck of Gessler's ship and the escape of Tell were very poorly done, say, somewhat in the early bad manner of 1911. In an American treatment of the subject this episode would have been one of the big things in the play and would have held and thrilled the spectator, while here everybody was glad when the scene was over—it was so obviously clumsy and labored. European production is showing a most unexpected improvement, but it is still lamentably weak on many vital points in the art of the screen.

The modern feature I have mentioned above is called "Miss Raffke," and is perhaps the most interesting of the three, for it represents a most ambitious effort on the part of a foreign director to produce a play strictly modelled on our comedy-drama, a form of screen entertainment that has been popularized in American picture theatres by a school of very capable directors, who have excelled in just this kind of screen work. When well done, this form of production always has been welcomed with special favor by the public on Broadway as well as in the smaller houses in city and country. This feature is here and there suggestive of one of those "Piggie" plays that Sam Bernard excelled in, with here and there touches of "Potash and Perlmutter," though there is nothing distinctly Jewish in the story.

Though the director's touch is a bit heavy now and then and a strain of coarseness crops to the surface, on the whole he has produced something quite remarkable. He has shown more understanding of American taste and manners than any European director I have ever met; he possesses a sense of humor that seems capable of fuller development; he knows how to mix the ingredients of drama and comedy in quite acceptable proportions. All through the film it is constantly apparent that the director has drawn his inspiration from the American screen and that he had his eye on the American public throughout.

The most remarkable aspect of the situation is this: Heretofore the European productions destined specially for the American market have dealt with classic and historic and, in one or two cases, with freakish subjects. Now this director comes forward with a strictly modern theme and turns out something that might well come into competition with the good daily bread of the American screen. Here is a new and most significant point of departure in European production. It is well worth thinking about.

Anna Christie

"ANNA CHRISTIE" is strong, red meat. Boy, oh, boy—it is DRAMA. They'll never see this in your theatre and come out saying: "What was it all about?"

And when you come right down to it, isn't that the trouble with most of the pictures you play, not that they are merely "good" or "poor"—but the fact that you know when the audience is leaving they are muttering: "The title of that should be 'For No Good Reason.'"

Well, "Anna Christie" had a foundation of concrete in Eugene O'Neil's play. It is DRAMA. We say it again. Real, poignant, gripping drama. Sometimes unpleasant to the taste—as LIFE itself is at times unpleasant. But at every moment it is the sort of DRAMA that is LIFE.

You will be giving them something when you give them "Anna Christie." Something they'll talk about, and argue about, for weeks. Red meat—strong, red meat.

Fox Officials Attend Opening of New Philadelphia Theatre

WILLIAM FOX dedicated another monument to the motion picture industry when the magnificent new Fox Theatre, at Sixteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, was formally opened Sunday night to one of the most distinguished audiences ever seen in a Quaker City playhouse. The invited first night audience included men and women of the highest social standing in Philadelphia and also city and state political leaders.

Freeland Kendrick, mayor-elect of Philadelphia; John Patterson eminent jurist, and Admiral Archibald Scales, U. S. N., were the guests of honor. In his speech of dedication the mayor-elect thanked Mr. Fox and his associates for building such a magnificent temple of amusement in Philadelphia and said he felt sure the standard of entertainment offered at the Fox Theatre would be of the highest. He pledged the support of the Philadelphians to the new theatrical venture.

Sunday shows are not permitted in Philadelphia when admission is charged and it was necessary for a large squad of police to check the thousands who surged along Market street seeking admission, but who did not have the proper invitations.

The new Fox Theatre, with the sixteen-story office building adjoining, cost $3,250,000. The theatre itself has seats for 2,381, of which 1,250 orchestra chairs are on the first floor. An unobstructed view of the screen may be had from any seat in the house. The beauty and simplicity of the lighting system is one of the best features of the theatre.

The opening was attended by Mr. Fox and many of the officials of Fox Film Corporation. Among those in the party were: Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager; Jack G. Lee, vice-president; Saul E. Rogers, vice-president and general counsel; John C. Eisele, treasurer; Clyde W. Eckhardt, assistant to general manager; Sydney Abel, manager of the foreign department; John Zanft, manager of Fox theatres; Vivian M. Moses, director of advertising and publicity; Edwin E. Hill, director of Fox News.

Erno Rapee, formerly musical director of the Capitol in New York, who is the managing director of the new Fox Theatre, arranged an ambitious program for the opening night. The complete program consisted of the dedication prologue, "Hail Pennsylvania," by a male quartette; overture, "Orpheus," by Offenbach; "My Country," a Bruce Scenic; Bird Song from "Pagliacci," by Madame Marie Pos-Carloti; Fox Theatre Magazine; prelude to the "The Silent Command," "My Own United States," by the male quartette, and the feature picture, "The Silent Command."

Light Thrown on Many Problems at Saenger Company Convention

PROBLEMS in management, exploitation, presentation, public relations, education, extension and service were the salient points discussed at the sixth annual convention of managers of the Saenger Amusement Company, which owns and operates nearly sixty theatres in eighteen cities in the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas and Florida.

The convention was held in the executive offices of the Company at their Administration building, Tulane and Liberty streets, New Orleans, La. The managers were in session for three days.

E. M. Clarke, secretary of the Company, and in charge of theatre operations, presided at the sessions. The other officials attending were Julian H. Saenger, president, E. V. Richards, vice-president and general manager, and William H. Gueringer, assistant general manager.

William H. Ennis, consulting electrical engineer of the company made a splendid address on the subject of fire prevention and the exercise of every essential to make an audience panic proof in a crowded auditorium. It was one of the most comprehensive arguments on this seldom discussed subject ever heard in this section, and the men as a unit, were loud in their praise of the study Mr. Ennis made of the situation.

Maurice F. Barr, supervising manager of the New Orleans Theatres, discussed the scope of a manager's sphere in the relation to his public. Gaston Dureau, booking manager, Norman L. Carter, publicity director and the heads of the supply and mechanical departments, led the round table discussion that followed in group conferences. Julian Saenger was host at a midnight party at the Little Club, and the Elks were host at a souper dansant at the Louisiane, to visiting managers together with the St. Charles Theatre Players who were observing their first anniversary. This latter is also a Saenger enterprise.

F. I. L. M. Dinner

Large Gathering Entertained With Timely Speeches and Jazz

Two thousand attended the F. I. L. M. Club dinner at the Commodore Hotel Saturday evening, November 24, and voted the occasion entirely successful.

Beginning at eleven o'clock, the speakers, introduced by Toastmaster James J. Walker, touched upon topics of timely interest. In introducing George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York Censorship Commission, Mr. Walker indicated his intention of leading the fight for the repeal of the censorship measure in Albany next year.

William Brandt spoke of the wisdom of bringing the ten thousand film salesmen in the United States into the fight for the admission tax repeal, and later stated that he planned arrangements to accomplish this in New York State. Sydney S. Cohen, approached after the dinner in regard to this idea, said that it was essential that as many people as possible be enlisted in the battle to remove the admission tax burden.

Chain buying was the topic of remarks by Marcus Loew, who intimated that the situation wherein exhibitor combinations existed was largely due to the competitive methods and the hard bargains driven by exchange managers themselves; he further ventured the hope that it might soon be possible for exhibitors, through organization, to make their film buying arrangements through some central purchasing unit.

The Tide Turns?

The annual convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, held in Albany during the past week, adjourned without a declaration either for or against motion picture censorship, eliminating quietly from the program the proposed showing of deleted portions of motion pictures scheduled for a luncheon during one of the afternoons, at which Mrs. Eli T. Hosmer, of the State Motion Picture Commission, was a speaker. The defeat of the plan to show "forbidden" cuts from motion pictures was one of the most decisive victories for the conservative forces in the convention.

Big Southwest Meetings

Important Conventions to Be Held in Dallas and Oklahoma City

TWO conventions of importance are scheduled for the Southwest in the early part of December. One will be held in Dallas, Texas, and the other in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

All arrangements have been practically completed for the semi-annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, to be held December 4 and 5, at the Jefferson Hotel at Dallas.

The theme of the convention will be a program seeking repeal of the admission tax.

Col. H. A. Cole of Marshall, Texas, well-known exhibitor and president of the organization, has just completed a trip over Texas visiting exhibitors and congressmen, and also went to Washington, where he conferred with the Jake Wells group. Col. Cole was also in conference with exhibitor leaders at New York City and French Lick Springs, and from these various conferences will outline a plan for the Texas exhibitors.

"It is a cold business proposition," said S. G. Howell, editor and head of the publicity committee. "Nearly all of our program will be devoted to that one aim, to repeal the admission tax."

H. B. Robb of Robb & Rowley, West Texas Exhibitors, is at the head of the Dallas arrangements committee.

The Theatre Owners and Managers Association of Oklahoma will hold its second meeting of this year December 3 and 4 at Oklahoma City.

One of the chief topics to be taken up will be reciprocal insurance, and another subject of interest to be discussed will be the workings of the Film Board of Trade. Work looking toward the repeal of the admission tax will be one of the most important matters before the convention.

C. H. Macgowan Married

The news leaked out in film circles during the past week that Claude H. Macgowan, the other half of the Ernest Shipman organization, was married early this month. Though one of the youngest executives in the motion picture business, Mr. Macgowan is a veteran of the film industry. Before he became associated with Mr. Shipman he was general manager for Universal.

Martha Mansfield Dying

Martha Mansfield, stage and screen beauty, lies near death in a San Antonio, Texas, hospital as the result of burns received when her dress caught fire on November 29 while on location in the Southern city. Her chances for recovery are said to be slight.

Miss Mansfield went from the Ziegfeld Follies into motion pictures and attracted much attention for her beauty as well as her acting. She was leading woman for John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and her latest picture was "Potash and Perlmutter."

Motion Picture Day Results Being Compiled; Report Later

RESULTS as indicated in the returns from theatre owners now being made to national headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in connection with the observance of National Motion Picture Day on November 19 are very pronounced in every way and take into account every practical phase of motion picture service, says Sydney S. Cohen, national president.

The outstanding circumstances, he believes, is that the appeal made to the public brought the most gratifying results, indicating that theatre owners may at all times in an honest, frank, open way impress every person in their community with any matter they have under consideration. A report will be made after the board of directors pass on the returns.

Because of this great response on the part of the public, these results in all instances were satisfactory, and in many cases have been of a practically overwhelming character. Through the elements of exploitation indulged in by many theatre owners, the business of the theatres on National Motion Picture Day was much increased. Illustrative of this was a letter from Jay Allen Glenn, of Hendersonville, N. C., who wrote: "I made a three-way connection, the schools with Educational Week, National Motion Picture Day, and the appearance of real actors now making pictures nearby. I had my house full in spite of a Lyceum number in the City Hall next door, and a mass meeting at the Court House."

This was especially evident in Western Pennsylvania where, through the organized theatre owners of that section, many extra efforts in showmanship and organized propaganda were put forth. These included radio talks, a proclamation by the Mayor of Pittsburgh, special newspaper advertising, program development, the use of quartettes, choral unions, and mutual arrangements with the Elks, Moose and other fraternal societies.

Some outstanding phases are indicated in such centers as Aurora, Ill., where in the theatre conducted by Messrs. Burford and Rubens, the attendance was very much augmented and the lines of exploitation of a very advanced nature. Entire pages of advertising matter appeared in the daily and Sunday newspapers of that section. Endorsements were received from the Mayor of the city, the Grand Army Post, Knights of Columbus, Moose, Kiwanis, Boy Scouts, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. M. H. A., Daughters of Veterans, American War Mothers, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Chamber of Commerce, American Legion, W. C. T. U., Lions and many other societies, clubs and leading citizens. Special programs were placed in all of the theatres of the Burford Rubens Circuit for that day.

In Malden, Mass., the Strand, Mystic and Orpheum theatres did a splendid business, augmented largely by the special advertising placed in the Malden newspapers, which covered an entire page. This was supplemented by special news articles and editorial mention and also by securing the endorsement of the Mayor, various civic and fraternal societies, school authorities and leading citizens generally.

From different parts of the country, extended reports are coming into national office indicating the wonderful success of National Motion Picture Day. As soon as the returns are all filed and computed, the matter will be submitted to the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. by National Chairman William Bender, Jr., and a complete report made.

M. P. T. O. A. Insurance at Reasonable Rate Announced

ONE of the enterprising moves associated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is the establishment of the insurance department of that organization. Through the operation of this department it is proposed to save theatre owners from 30 to 40 per cent. in the premiums paid on insurance. Arrangements have been effected with Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange, of 137 South Fifth street, Philadelphia, through which theatre insurance is given exhibitors, and where this has been in force, savings in premiums aggregating about 40 per cent. have been made, it is said.

At the Washington convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, General Manager Perrin, of the Inter-Insurance Exchange, explained the process. His talk so impressed theatre owners that many availed themselves of the advantages he held forth. H. J. Schad, president of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, the owner of several large theatres in Reading and Lebanon, Pa., took out this form of insurance over a year ago and now reports a saving of 40 per cent. Similar reports come from other places.

To make the work of insurance easier for the theatre owner, the M. P. T. O. A. has established the insurance department at national headquarters, 132 West 43rd street, New York City. Letters have been forwarded to all theatre owners calling attention to the savings effected through this form of insurance, and it is believed that considerable money will be saved them in this way. Theatres are now listed in a special class by the Underwriters. This risk is rated higher in most instances than that applied to commercial lines in the face of the fact that theatres are among the best built and safest in the country as a general proposition. This new form of insurances gives theatres a favored classification in line with the material facts and thus cuts down premiums while affording absolutely the same form of protection.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Goes to N. Y. American

Louella Parsons Becomes Screen Editor for Hearst

Louella O. Parsons, for six years motion picture editor of the Morning Telegraph, has accepted a position with William Randolph Hearst to write on motion picture subjects for the New York American. Miss Parsons will conduct a daily and Sunday department and in addition review the current productions. She comes to her new position with many years' experience, having started her career as a reporter on the Chicago Tribune. Leaving the Tribune she became scenario editor of the old Essanay Film Company in Chicago, where she established a reputation as an authority on scenarios. She is the author of one of the first books published on how to write for the movies.

With this background of studio knowledge, the Chicago Herald engaged Miss Parsons to create a motion picture department. This was one of the first of its kind in the country and was the first to treat motion pictures in a serious, dignified manner.

Miss Parsons is a pioneer in motion pictures, having had almost twelve years' experience in writing about every phase of the motion picture. She is considered today to be the best informed woman on matters that concern motion pictures in this country. Her opinion is sought by producers, directors, exhibitors and stars who have learned to rely upon her judgment and her knowledge.

F. B. O. Sales Conference

Optimistic Note Struck at San Francisco Meeting

Pep and optimism were the twin keynotes of the San Francisco sales conferences held last week by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of F. B. O.

Among those who attended the confab at the San Francisco office were, besides General Manager Berman, L. G. Metzger, of Portland; A. H. Huot, of Seattle; W. B. Corby, Salt Lake; Sid Goldman, San Francisco; Harry Cohen, Los Angeles, and Art Schmidt, newly appointed West Coast Supervisor of F. B. O. Mr. Schmidt was formerly general manager of exchanges for Universal and is now making his home in Los Angeles.

Lichtman With Universal

To Handle Presentations On "The Hunchback of Notre Dame"

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has signed Al Lichtman in an executive capacity, and his first job is the management of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Universal's spectacle drama now being presented under special arrangement in various American cities.

Concerning the new arrival in the Universal home office, Laemmle pays the following tribute:

"I am highly gratified to announce Al Lichtman's affiliation with Universal. I have always admired his ability and his foresight. He brings to Universal a far-reaching perception of film conditions and a driving power almost unequalled in the industry."

Lichtman is outspoken in his enthusiasm for Universal.

"I consider my coming to Universal the greatest opportunity I ever had," he says. "It is the biggest thing I ever did. The Universal organization, with its remarkable stability, its great good will and its world wide activities, affords unlimited possibilities for big achievements in the film industry."

GEORGE FITZMAURICE

Independent Achievement

Samuel Goldwyn's "The Eternal City" Breaks Record of New Jersey House

That Samuel Goldwyn's efforts as an independent producer are resulting in an intrinsic reward to the industry, in the form of good pictures, is further demonstrated by the success attained, already, by George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Eternal City," which had a test engagement at Paterson, New Jersey, last week and succeeded in setting a new level for admissions at Fabian's Regent Theatre.

Opening to the biggest Monday in the history of that house, it continued throughout the week to smash box office records and concluded the six-day engagement with a very fine general result.

Last Sunday "The Eternal City" opened at the beautiful Eastman Theatre, Rochester, and on Monday Mr. Goldwyn received a telegram from Managing Director William Fait stating that "The Eternal City" had succeeded in attracting the biggest house the Eastman Theatre has known since its opening, with the exception of two Sundays in its early days.

Coming on top of the success of "Potash and Perlmutter," this new accomplishment of George Fitzmaurice establishes Samuel Goldwyn's independent activity as one of the progressive movements during 1923 for the screen, and demonstrates his perspicacity in selection of cast and subject and the vindication of his faith in George Fitzmaurice as a great artist and balancer of drama.

"The Eternal City" has been set in for indefinite runs in many First National key cities.

Fox Foreign Heads Here

Alberto Rosenvald and E. P. Cetran, branch managers at Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro for Fox Film Corporation, arrived in New York this week for a sales conference at the New York home office. Within the next few weeks Fox managers from South America and also from Australia will report at the New York office. Robert W. Beckman has been appointed Scandinavian Manager of Fox Film Corporation and is on his way to Stockholm to take charge of the newly opened branch office there.

Berman on West Coast

Will Discuss Production Schedules for Next Year

Expressing the keenest optimism over the future of the industry and dismissing the current uneasiness over production costs as merely a temporary difficulty, Harry M. Berman, general sales manager for Film Booking Offices of America Inc., arrived at the Robertson-Cole studios in Hollywood last week to confer on production schedules for the coming season. The sales manager was given a hearty welcome on his arrival.

"F. B. O. remarked Mr. Berman, "Has no complaints to offer for business at the present time. What we are particularly interested in is dynamic salesmanship and showmanship—both of which are absolutely vital to successful administration of a film organization in this era of fast-moving competition."

"F. B. O. is a little more than one year old and I think we should be forgiven for doing a little crowing over the splendid strides we have made."

Mr. Berman then characterized the talk of panic and slumps as exaggerated, asserting that soaring production costs would come down as a natural reaction to the generous expenditures at the studios during the last several months. In his opinion it will not take the leaders of the industry long to get it back to normalcy.

W. B. Frank Elected

Becomes Vice-President of H. E. Roach Studios

W. B. Frank, who recently resigned as feature sales manager for Pathe to join the Hal Roach organization, was elected on Monday, November 26, to the vice-presidency of the Hal E. Roach Studios. News of Mr. Frank's election was contained in a dispatch from Los Angeles, where Mr. Frank is at present conferring with his associates of the Hal Roach Company. In his capacity as vice-president, Mr. Frank will have complete charge of all the Hal Roach business activities in the East. He will leave for New York on Saturday, December 1 and establish headquarters in the Pathe home office building.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Capitol, Charleston, W. Va., Destroyed in $150,000 Fire

Fire of undetermined origin, early in the morning of November 15 in the top of the building, destroyed the Capitol Theatre, one of the most beautifully appointed picture houses in the State, at Charleston, W. Va. The loss to the theatre itself will reach in the neighborhood of $150,000, partially covered by insurance, while adjoining buildings suffered damage from water and smoke that will run into several hundred dollars.

As to the origin of the fire that wiped out the interior of the theatre, with the exception of the balcony and the booth for the motion picture machines—which, although still standing, were heavily damaged by water and smoke—neither officials connected with the theatre nor heads of the local fire department were able to offer a theory.

The Capitol opened on December 26, 1921, marking the entrance to local business activities of A. B. Hyman, of Huntington, one of West Virginia's best known pioneer theatre men and capitalists. Associated with Mr. Hyman were Fred Middleberg, of Huntington, and Charles Middleberg, of Charleston, local automobile man and former member of the city council.

Since its opening the Capitol has been managed by Harris P. Wolfberg. Mr. Hyman visited the Pittsburgh Film Row the day after the fire and stated that the ruined theatre would be rebuilt immediately at an approximate cost of $200,000.

Although it will be several days before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania will announce the definite figure in dollars and cents as to what money will be sent to the national organization as a result of the extra drive for business on National Motion Picture Day, it is unanimously agreed that the day was a big success financially and that most of the local film theatres did much better than average business.

Nothing was left undone here to acquaint the public with the fact that November 19 was the great day on which everybody should attend a picture theatre. The public did its part and attended the picture theatres, many of which listed special added attractions to properly celebrate the big day. Other houses saw to it that their program for the day was somewhat better than average.

Picture theatres took on a holiday attire. American flags and streamers were in abundance, along with the banners announcing the event. Pittsburgh's Fifth avenue was a mass of decorations, and if any city excelled the display put on by the "boys" on "the avenue" we'd like to see a photo of it.

I. H. Fleishman, of the Brighton Theatre, North Side, is again able to be on duty at his theatre, after having undergone an operation at a local hospital.

Ralph Myers, well-known local exhibitor, has been removed to his home from the South Side Hospital, having been permanently injured in an automobile accident. Ralph suffered a broken back.

C. L. Gillis, owner of the theatre which bears his name at Clarksburg, W. Va., was a Pittsburgh visitor recently.

"Ben" Engleberg played "The Gold Diggers" at his Elmore Theatre in Pittsburgh recently, and did his advertising on two billion dollars' worth of German marks. "Ben" said it was not necessary to have a police escort to transport the money from the bank to the theatre.

J. J. Shultz, a newcomer to the picture business, is erecting a $125,000 picture theatre at Wilson, Pa., which is almost ready for opening. The house will be operated by Mike Scarlatti, who made a recent booking trip to the local Film Row.

Chris Vollmer said he would give us a season's pass to his Idle Hour Theatre if we didn't give him any publicity, but we are going to lose that pass, because we want to say that Chris Vollmer is one of the best-natured exhibitors we have ever had the pleasure to meet.

Cincinnati

With the advent of colder weather, business at the downtown theatres is showing a very considerable improvement, although the larger houses are offering some of the best pictures of the current season. Among the holdovers from last week are: "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," at Cox; "Rupert of Hentzau," at Gifts, and "If Winter Comes" at the Walnut.

J. A. Ackerman, manager of the Glenway Theatre, entertained a number of local exhibitors and exchange executives at a banquet at Hotel Claremont, Southgate, Ky., last week, at which he introduced his new patented "Kee-No" card game.

A new $500,000 lodge home and picture theatre is being planned by the Ashtabula Lodge of Moose, at Ashtabula, Ohio. A campaign for funds will soon be started.

Edward Minoughan, who has been operating the Princess Theatre at Marion, Ohio, for some time past, has sold same to Mr.

and Mrs. Joseph Williams, who will continue the original policy of pictures.

Harry Silver, resident manager of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, who has already undergone two major operations at a Detroit hospital, but who was discharged from that institution several months ago as cured, has again been stricken and has returned to Detroit for further treatment. It is now feared that a third operation may have to be performed.

Mrs. Margie Noe, Harlan, Ky., contemplates the erection of a $65,000 movie theatre and store building, while at Winchester, Ky., Paul H. Krause & Co., will put up a $40,000 house at 42nd street and College avenue.

The Southeast

Raleigh, N. C., is to have one of the state's finest theatres when the new State Theatre opens on December 15. The date will be approximately then, although not yet officially announced. The house will play a combination road show, vaudeville and picture bill, and is the last word in convenience for patrons. A Mr. Hines, a newcomer in the industry, of Norfolk, Va., built the house and controls it. He also recently assumed management of Raleigh's Superba Theatre, a straight picture house. It is rumored that one of the best showmen in the State will manage the new State when it opens.

DeSalles Harrison, newly appointed public relations representative in the Southeastern states by the Hays organization, has gone on a trip which will take him into all cities where Better Films Committees are now functioning or in process of organization. He will go to New York, after his circuit is completed, for conferences with Colonel Jason Joy of the Hays headquarters, under whom he is functioning in his Southern work.

C. E. Daffin, of Tallahassee, Fla., is getting ready for the annual hunting party he gives every year, assembling his fine dogs. Quite a number of Atlanta's film men attend this party every year and enjoy Mr. Daffin's hospitality for several days.

Sig Samuels, of Alamo No. 1, Atlanta, with members of his family is on a motor tour in Florida.

J. H. Wheeler, of the Start Theatre, Tarrant City, Ala., was a visitor on Atlanta's Film Row the past week.

Theatres Have Own Electrical Plant

THE theatres on Elm and Akard and the block bounded by Elm, Akard and Ervay streets, Dallas, Texas, are to be furnished electric current by the Theatre Electric Company, according to plans outlined at the recent organization meeting at 1413½ Main street. The company is to be capitalized at $50,000 and has obtained a lease on the building at 208 Akard street, it was announced, in which to install their plant.

An electrical engineer was called into consultation, who submitted figures on the installation of 200-horsepower generator sets. Plans have been made to go before the City Commission for the necessary permits.

Among those in attendance and who agreed to take stock, according to L. G. Bissinger, secretary-treasurer elect, were E. B. Thomas, representing the Happyland Theatre; Raleigh Dent, Laskin Brothers for the Jefferson Theatre; Ray Stennett and Si Charninsky for the Capitol; W. D. Nevills for the Washington Theatre, and Mr. Bissinger for the Queen. Officers chosen were E. B. Thomas, president; Raleigh Dent, vice president, and L. G. Bissinger, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Bissinger states that by installing this plant they can cut their electric bills in two at least. They do not intend to enter into opposition to the established company but merely supply themselves.

Milwaukee Exhibitors Display Little Interest in Movie Day

National Motion Picture Day passed in Milwaukee with little flurry among exhibitors and a great deal less, if that is possible, as far as the public is concerned. It is safe to say that with few exceptions the public was not even aware a motion picture day had been set aside. The exceptions resulted from the feeble attempts made by a bare handful of exhibitors to observe the day.

True, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin went on record several weeks previously endorsing the move, but the organization decided at the same time to put the matter of boosting the day up to each individual exhibitor. As far as the association was concerned, the only other thing it did in connection with the matter was to begin publication on that day of its motion picture directory which is to be a daily feature in the newspapers. Thirty theatres were represented in the first list from which the exhibitor organization will share in the receipts.

The Regent Theatre, operated by Fred Seegert, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, and the Parkway, run by E. W. Van Norman, were among the few houses which tried to impress the public with the fact that Nov. 19 was Motion Picture Day. Mr. Seegert drew considerable favorable comment by showing a film of the pioneer days in the movie game. On the same program he had a modern film and through exhibiting both he was able to demonstrate the progress which has been made in the last few years.

Mr. Van Norman's special attraction consisted of a novelty musical program.

George Fischer, manager of the New Milwaukee, expressed the sentiment of numerous other theatre men when he declared, "Every day is Motion Picture Day at my house. I give my patrons the best that is possible at all times, so a special observance is hardly necessary."

Although downtown exhibitors likewise generally ignored the day, as far as special stunts or other exploitation was concerned, it was one of the biggest Mondays the business has ever known. This apparently was due to the nature of the attractions and not to the fact that it was Motion Picture Day. Saxe's Strand, playing "Flaming Youth," after being forced to run off a special showing Sunday night, was jammed again on Monday, according to E. J. Weisfeldt, manager. The Alhambra, managed by Leo A. Landau and showing "Rupert of Hentzau," also played to capacity.

Ground will be broken shortly at Fond du Lac, Wis., for a three-story $600,000 theatre building with a seating capacity of 2,000, it has been announced by Frank W. Fischer, managing director of the Fischer chain of theatres which already controls some of the leading houses in Wisconsin and Illinois. Announcement of this venture follows closely on the heels of the revelation that Mr. Fischer has closed a deal for the purchase of the Jones Theatre, a 1,400 seat house now under construction in Janesville, Wis. It is understood that Mr. Fischer paid $250,000 in the purchase of the uncompleted theatre from Harry Jones. This house is to be opened on or about March 1.

The site for the Fond du Lac Theatre embraces 26,400 square feet of ground on Main street. It will be modern in every respect and will be so equipped that it will be possible to present pictures or vaudeville.

W. G. Lloyd of Chicago, owner of the Lyric Theatre at Fort Atkinson, Wis., for eleven years, has sold the property to Oliver Grant of Janesville, Wis. The house will now be operated by Mr. Grant's son, William. The Lyric was built in 1880 by a stock company and used for years as an armory, council chamber and fire department on the ground floor, and as an opera house on the upper floor.

Ushers of the New Milwaukee Theatre have formed an organization to promote efficiency it has been announced by Louis Shimon, assistant manager of the house, who is advisor to the group. The organization is to be known as the Milwaukee Ushers' club. Arnold Kallebe is president.

In an effort to eliminate the bicycling evil, the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade has ordered its members to supply all exchange salesmen with form postcards upon which they will record the various offerings at theatres in towns they visit, thus providing a checkup system.

A suit reopening the music tax fight in Milwaukee has been filed against the Whitehouse Theatre, operated by Otto L. Meister. The action, in which the Skidmore Music company of New York is the plaintiff, alleges that the song, "Last Night on the Back Porch," was rendered in the show house without the payment of a tax.

A report on the Indiana conference, which he attended as a delegate from Wisconsin, is to be given by Joseph Rhode, widely known Kenosha theatre man, as a feature of the next board of directors' meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, which is to be held within a few days.

The meeting also is expected to result in selection of a successor to Walter F. Baumann, who recently resigned as executive secretary of the organization. Fred Seegert, president, declares a new man virtually has been selected for the position and merely awaits ratification by the board. He refused to state, however, who the candidate is.

St. Louis

"Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's first big picture under his new Metro contract, opened in St. Louis on Saturday, November 24, playing day and date at four of the city's leading first run houses—the Delmonte, the largest one-floor theatre in the world, owned by Fred L. Cornwell, and the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, owned by Spyros Skouras and his organizations. This broke all records in St. Louis, as never in the history of the city had a picture shown first-run at four houses day and date.

In addition, Metro scored another triumph when "Scaramouche" got away on an indefinite run at the New Pershing Theatre, Delmar boulevard near Hamilton avenue, a St. Louis Amusement Company house that was redecorated and remodeled at a cost of $50,000 to be ready for the initial showing of "Scaramouche." The premier showing of this picture was an event in St. Louis—the city, state and prominent educators, physicians, society leaders, etc., being present as guests of Rex Ingram, director of the picture.

St. Louis exhibitors are interested in the fight being waged against Blue Laws in Frankfort, Ind. Dispatches from that city told of the arrest of twenty-three business men who had kept their places of business open on Sunday, November 18, in defiance of orders from Mayor Keene to close. The Mayor's decision to enforce the blue laws resulted from a controversy between a church faction and the owner of the local picture theatre. The first Sunday the blue law was in effect the other places of business closed, but the next week they decided to rebel. All were released on bond.

I. W. Rodgers Invests in Coal

I. W. RODGERS of Poplar Bluff, Mo., the Daddy of 'Em All among Missouri exhibitors, is seeking new worlds to conquer. Those who remember reading his autobiography published some time ago will recall that he had many interesting callings prior to taking up motion picture exhibition, but none to conjure up the romantic situations as his latest moves promise. For henceforth he may be known as Mr. I. W. Rodgers, the Iron Baron.

Dispatches from Poplar Bluff the past week stated that Rodgers and H. E. Springer of that city had purchased 11,000 acres of land in Wayne County, Mo., from W. I. Hooper, also of Poplar Bluff. The deal involved approximately $800,000, and was one of the biggest of its kind ever pulled off in Southeast Missouri.

The land purchased by Rodgers and Springer is adjacent to the famed Iron Mountain, the greatest iron mine in history. That wonder of the Nineteenth Century recently pulled a sensational comeback by producing iron ore of wonderful purity in large quantities after it had been closed down for almost thirty years. A Chicago electric railway magnate, who bought the mine and surrounding territory as a stock ranch, paying about $400,000 for it, has had his holdings jump in value to some $12,000,000 as a result of the renewed activity at the mine. Rodgers and Springer plan to mine for iron on their property.

The management of the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas, has recently been taken over by Lou Bissinger and Joe C. Singer. He says he is glad to be back home again.

Contract has been let for the re-decoration and renovation of this theatre. A new and comfortable smoking loge will be a feature of the Queen upon the completion of the re-decoration scheme. Mr. Bissinger says it is their intention to bring back to the Queen that atmosphere of comfort and charm which made it popular in the past, to secure some of the biggest stars in the picture business, and to give the theatre-going public a high-class theatre at popular prices.

Woods Theatre, Chicago, Sold to Jones, Linick & Schaefer

A VIVID PERSONALITY

The Woods Theatre Building was purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for $1,100,000 from the A. H. Woods Theatre Company last week. The theatre will hereafter be exclusively devoted to the highest class of motion pictures, it was stated. The property is under a ninety-nine year lease, with ninety-two years yet to run.

"Our firm," said Aaron Jones, "will take over the operation of the new theatre as an exclusive high-class motion picture house."

Ex-County Judge J. A. Sommerlatte, theatre owner and political boss of Lavaca County, Texas, has gained the title of "The Miracle Man." According to The Houston Press, here is what often happens in court:

"A tall, lean, sunburned farmer walks up to the judge and whispers a few words. The judge nods understandingly and says, 'Give me a more thorough description of the animal.' There is more low-pitched talk. Then the judge says, 'All right, your horse will be well in three days.' The farmer shakes hands and goes out. In three days the horse is well.

"If you ask how he does it, the young judge—he's 35 years old, weighs 240 pounds, is black-haired, blue-eyed and upstanding—smiles a kindly smile and tells you without any bluff, boast or bombast that he has a wit of healing. He heals both human beings and dumb brutes. He travels in the dead of night to give relief. Hundreds of Lavaca County citizens are ready to make affidavit that he has cured them. Merchants, bankers, contractors and big farmers and stockmen unite in testifying to this peculiar power the young judge possesses."

Tom Hickey, who wrote this newspaper story, quotes the judge as saying that "We would all be healers even of our own bodily ills if we had the faith that Christ had when he cured the blind, cleansed the leper and caused the crippled to walk. I am fortunate in possessing an abounding, joyous faith. In no other way can I account for the success I have had. I have never studied medicine. I know but little of physiology or anatomy. I only know I can cure."

Judge Sommerlatte's home is in Hallettsville, Texas.

Wright Knocked Unconscious by San Francisco Burglars

One of the most daring theatre robberies in the history of the Pacific Coast took place at the New Mission Theatre, San Francisco, on Monday, November 19, when three youthful bandits held up Winfield Wright, house manager, knocked him unconscious and made away with $5,385, which represented the Saturday and Sunday receipts.

According to Wright he came down to the theatre shortly before noon to bank the money and had just finished counting it when three men, who had evidently hidden in the theatre Sunday night, rushed upon him. Two of them covered him with revolvers while the third knocked him unconscious with a blow in the abdomen. They then threw him into a closet and made their escape. It was several minutes before he recovered sufficiently to give the alarm and a shotgun squad was dispatched to the scene in armed cars, but no trace has been found of the bandits.

Plans are being drawn for a 1,600-seat house to be erected within the next six months, and upon its completion one of the present theatres will be closed. The T. & D., Jr., Circuit now comprises thirty-seven theatres in Northern California.

Troy, N. Y., Woman Arrested as Strand Money Takes Wings

About $150, representing the evening's receipts of the Strand Theatre, in Troy, N. Y., took flight one night last week about the same time as Mrs. Daniel Christian, 19 years of age, cashier of the theatre, which is managed by "Al" Bothner. No sooner was the loss of the money discovered than the police were called, with the result that the woman and her husband were later on apprehended at the railroad station in Albany, where they had purchased tickets for New York. The couple had come to Troy from Syracuse a few days before, the husband securing a job as a waiter and the wife becoming cashier of the theatre. They are now awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of grand larceny.

The Empire Theatre in Syracuse, which is showing plenty of pep these days in lobby and outside advertising, will observe its Anniversary Week this month. The house is managed by Willis B. Whitnall.

The frequent symphony concerts given by the combined orchestras of the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany and the Troy in Troy, at the former house, are really becoming the leading society events of the year. At the one given on Saturday last, the list of patronesses resembled the "who's who" of Albany.

Generally speaking, business is good in Syracuse. The houses are all drawing well and the owners do not appear to be afraid of using newspaper space to inform the public as to attractions booked. One of the most pleasant features of the past week was the return of Edgar Weil to the management of the Strand, following a vacation of many weeks at his home in Little Rock, Ark., recovering from a nervous breakdown.

Uly Hill, managing director of the Strand houses in Albany and Troy, has accepted an invitation to address the State Convention of Music Clubs in this city next April.

The house will cost about $80,000. The house will be about a year in building. Almost simultaneously with the announcement comes another from James Papanakos, former owner of the Olympic Theatre in Watertown, that he is preparing plans for a theatre in Potsdam, on the present location of the Clark Furniture Store. The house will seat 1,000.

"If Winter Comes" has been booked at the Leland for the week of January 27, while "Ponjola" will attract Thanksgiving Day crowds at the Troy in Troy.

Although "Common Law" did a whoppin' big business at the Leland in Albany last week, second only to "Little Old New York," Manager Oscar Perrin finally decided not to use it for another week against "Rosita" at the Mark Strand. Mr. Perrin will use "In the Palace of the King" to buck the Mary Pickford picture during the six days. Incidentally, the Mark Strand is doing some heavy advertising in putting over "Rosita," using hundreds of heralds, window cards as well as six, eight and twenty-four sheets.

Rochester, N. Y.

On Rochester screens: Eastman, "The Eternal City." Regent, "The Eternal Struggle." Piccadilly, "Long Live the King." Victoria, "Daughters of the Rich." Rialto, "Drifting." Strand, "Penrod and Sam."

That the Eastman Theatre already occupies a position of importance among theatres of the country is indicated by the fact that a drawing of the house and an explanation of its purpose forms the outstanding feature in the advertisement of Paramount in the Saturday Evening Post in the issue of November 17.

"Little Old New York" will open at the Piccadilly Theatre the week of December 2.

Rumors that the visit of E. F. Albee to J. H. Finn, manager of the Temple Theatre, might result in tentative plans for the building of a large theatre in Rochester have been denied by Mr. Finn.

Canada

At a general meeting of all exhibitors in London, Ontario, on November 21, the decision was reached for a flat increase of 3 cents in all admission prices for both matinee and evening performances at the local playhouses, the increase to go into effect at once. The cause given for the raising of admission prices was that the salaries of stars in California and elsewhere had forced producers and distributors to charge higher rentals to theatres. Managers announcing the price increase included Fred Jackson of Loew's Theatre; Thomas Logan of the Allen Theatre; and William Stewart of the Patricia Theatre, these being the leading houses of the city.

Announcement has been made that the Continental Screen Service Corporation has closed a contract with the Canadian Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners whereby the company is to supply an advertising slide or an advertising trailer to each of 700 picture theatres in Canada. The same scale is continued for "Covered Wagon." This is the first Canadian run for "Wagon." "Scaramouche" completed a two weeks' run at the Palace Theatre, Montreal, on November 24.

The plan of reserving box seats for evening performances at Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, has been discontinued by Capt. F. W. Goodale, manager, after he had given the special service a test of six weeks.

A thriller taken in 1911, 12 years ago, on Long Island, is to be featured at Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, during the week of December 3. The important part about this presentation is that the hero of the picture is Capt. Frank Goodale, now manager of the Loew house. He was known at the time this picture was produced by Imp under the title of "Through the Air" as "the boy balloonist" and his daily work consisted of flying in a 16-foot dirigible, having a motorcycle engine, from Palisade Park, New Jersey.

Harry Brouse, owner of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, has installed a six-piece orchestra in his "theatre beautiful." This is startling news when it is remembered that for years and years the musical accompaniment for pictures at the Ottawa Imperial has been provided by a pipe organ, with Jack Neville presiding. After years of loneliness, Mr. Neville is now associated with six musical conferees.

Receiver Releases Pantheon, Vincennes, Ind.

THE Pantheon Theatre in Vincennes, Ind., which was one of the theatres owned by the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, recently thrown into the hands of a receiver, has been released from the receivership and has reverted to its original owner, the Wilkerson-Lyons Enterprises, Inc. Fred Sims, receiver for the Consolidated company, said he consented to the release of the theatre because it had not been paying much, and it would have been a big obligation on the Consolidated to hold the lease.

The Consolidated took over the Pantheon on October 1st on a two-year lease, with a plan to issue 8 per cent. bonds to pay for the theatre. Mr. Sims said the Consolidated did not have the money to keep up the lease. Immediately following the theatre's release, Judge Thomas B. Coulter, acting on petition of L. R. Henley, principal stockholder, named Claude E. Gregg and J. B. E. Laplante co-receivers of the theatre. The Pantheon was erected about three years ago at a cost of about $150,000.

Reports received this week from Terre Haute, Richmond and Ft. Wayne show that a large volume of business was done by the Consolidated company's theatres there during the last week, Mr. Sims said. At Evansville twelve members of the orchestra at the Victory Theatre were discharged in order to permit expenses to be cut down during the receivership proceedings.

Texas Manager With No Elaborate Aids Builds a Splendid Exploitation Lobby

ACHIEVING one of the best lobby displays on Circus Days with limited facilities, Thomas Nickelson, of the Crescent theatre, Austin, Texas, puts himself solidly on the exploitation map. With very little material to work with, he has achieved a decidedly realistic circus entrance and he not only broke all the house records, but he set the new marks so high that it promises to stand for a long time to come.

The lobby shown on this page would be entirely creditable were it the work of a management having unlimited resources at command. It would be good looking had it been used at the New York Strand for its first showing. Coming from a theatre without large resources, it is a remarkable achievement.

It's Easy When—

Had this been planned by a theatre with a large revenue, where an expenditure of two or three hundred dollars for a good selling lobby is a matter of no consequence, it would have been good. But Mr. Nickelson, we take it, had no such appropriation, and had to work with what he could get. He used his ingenuity, and he really achieved an effect better in some ways than he could have gained through the mere outlay of money.

Take that same lobby in a big house and probably the tent would have been of muslin or cotton, bought for the occasion and cut to fit. Buying that much cloth would have killed the profit of the Crescent. Mr. Nickelson uses hay covers and gets closer to the real thing. There is a real circus flavor to that laced canopy.

Has Real Flavor

Done with new cloth, there would have been an entrance and an exit and a scalloped border and a lot of trimmings that would not have had the same local color. This looks more like a real circus tent, for it must be remembered that Jackie was traveling with a wagon show and they did not have an elaborate equipment.

That den on the right seems to be the real thing, though the lion is profile. If this is home-made, too, it is more than creditable, but it looks as though it might have been left behind by some road show in difficulties. The elephants on the left are also profile, but they are good enough to carry out the suggestion, and the hay and the roped enclosure are convincingly good and about the only thing lacking is a red wagon structure for the ticket office.

The Will to Work

But the real angle to this display is not that it is exceptionally good, but that the manager was willing to work hard to get an effect that would bring extra money.

He did not sit down and wail that he could not afford to do anything. He went out and borrowed the hay covers and did it. That is the spirit which wins. Hundreds of managers are watching business slip just because they have not the willingness to get out and hustle and do the best they can with the best they can get.

They talk about bad business instead of about bad management.

That is why we appreciate so much the fine achievement of the chap you see in the picture standing by the box office. He writes that the only way to get returns is to exploit, and in doing the best he can he has in this instance done better than the larger houses in the matter of display and proportionately well in the matter of receipts.

He could not get that result through sitting in his chair and lamenting his lack of opportunity.

Red Lights Told of Red Lights' Coming

Before they opened Red Lights at the California theatre, San Francisco, red and yellow teasers told the public to be careful as Red Lights was coming. The day before the opening there was a night parade of automobiles owned by the house staff and supplemented by loaned cars. There were 35 of these and they toured the theatre section with a man on each front seat holding a red fusee. Banners told of the play being advertised. The parade was repeated for the opening night, Saturday.

Three strings of red lamps were strung across Market street from the theatre to a store across the way and an entire block was illuminated by red lamps, Charles E. Kurtzman, the publicity head of the Rothchild chain, personally arranging for this display and providing lamp dip for those merchants who did not possess red globes. Jack Partington, the general manager, worked the police permit on the across the street display. It got packed houses Saturday and Sunday and those audiences spread the word and helped the later business.

Seventy-five Cars in a Motor Parade

Getting seventy-five cars in a motor parade was the chief item in the exploitation work for Mary Pickford in Rosita at the Blackstone and State theatres, Pittsburgh. The two houses were playing the United Artists' release day and date, and Milton D. Crandall felt that it was up to him to do something in a large way to persuade Rowland & Clarke that he was on the job.

He sold the sub-agencies of the Chevrolet cars on the idea that it would help them to help him, and all of the dealers turned out their stock cars for a parade on Saturday afternoon, the various sub-agencies vying with each other to claim the honor of having the best decorated cars. The main agency contributed a truck with a huge megaphone and Crandall hired some musicians, with the result that the parade was both colorful and tuneful.

The general tie-up was the line "Two big stars, Chevrolet and Mary Pickford," and the latter name was displayed in large letters, one letter to a car, with plenty of cars left over.

The police permit gave them a line of march which took them through the busiest streets at the busiest hour of a busy Saturday afternoon, and the dealers were all so pleased with the chance to spread out in a parade that they kicked in with mention of the play in their Sunday advertisements. They also used window cards and set the decorated cars in their show rooms as a further reminder.

All it cost was the hire of the bands, and that was very little for a four and a half-hour ballyhoo.

HERE'S A MANAGER WHO DID NOT LET A CHANCE GO BY

Thomas Nickelson, of the Crescent Theatre, Austin, Texas, had no exploitation facilities, yet this circus tent on Circus Days is one of the best we have seen, and it is all home made. It enabled him to set a new record for the house.

Broke 5 Year Record with Why Worry Gags

Breaking the cash records for five years largely with a teaser campaign is the brag of the Liberty theatre, Kansas City. The attraction was Why Worry, which lends itself particularly well to the teaser idea, but with the aid of Earle S. Nesbit, the advertising agent, they went further than most with the teasers.

The opening gun was painted signs with five foot letters reading merely "Why Worry?" There was nothing to connect it with either play or theatre. This was followed by 2,000 14x14-inch tack cards which were placed all over town. The text on these was "Join the Why Worry Club, the National Joy Movement." An additional 500 were given lath supports and used as yard cards.

THE LIBERTY SPEEDOMETERS

Because the Kansas City team had won the Association pennant and were scheduled to play Baltimore for the Little Pennant, some 50,000 persons welcomed the team back to town after the last game in its own league. They were also met by a float which read: "Why worry? The Blues will win." This followed the parade and was parked at the ball field gate when not in use as a perambulator.

HERE'S AN ORPHAN SOME COMPANY SHOULD ADOPT

Put the glass on the fourth kiddie from the left. The women would rave over him in the pictures, yet he's just an orphan and one of the guests of the Saenger company in New Orleans at a Penrod and Sam showing. Something new for New Orleans.

Then there was a parade of the Priests of Pallas, a local carnival order. A local giant was built up to a seven-foot height and provided with a tin cannon, arranged to throw out packages of light throwaways with the "Why Worry?" slogan. The giant was attended by a short man dressed as Lloyd, and they perambulated the line of March. The cannon was built to explode a blank cartridge when the spring plunger was pulled back. Every little while the gun would be shot off and the lines of waiting spectators deluged with the throwaways. It got more attention than the $50,000 parade.

Then a full page cooperative was worked with the merchants with prizes offered for the best letters regarding purchases made from any of the advertising merchants. The replies were to be sent to Harold Lloyd at the Liberty theatre, the first time the star or title had been used in connection with this campaign.

To tie the teasers to the house liberal newspaper and bill advertising was done and a cutout 40 feet in height was placed on the marquee of the theatre.

Under the canopy were two speedometer faces with movable numbers, which show as white oblongs in the cut. One was lettered: "Harold Lloyd's Laugh-o-meter. 100,000 shrieks per minute." This was supposed to ring up the laughs. The other was lettered: "Why Worry? Join the National Joy Movement now — hysterical members." The blanks represent the figures on the speedometer indicator, and these numbers were changed at each performance.

It was a splendidly planned campaign and it brought in more money than any other attraction in the five-year period.

THIS FORTY-FOOT CUTOUT TIED LLOYD TO A TEASER CAMPAIGN

The Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, broke all records for the past five years on Why Worry largely through a clever teaser campaign which had to be tied to the star and attraction. This cutout is the largest ever used on a Kansas City theatre.

Orphan Youngsters See Penrod and Sam

New Orleans does not do much exploitation, so an orphans' matinee was a novelty when the Liberty Theatre worked it for Penrod and Sam, and the trolley company provided the transportation in bannered cars while a motion picture was made of the group to get the last potential kick out of the stunt.

But put a magnifying glass on the picture of a sample copy of the kiddies and note the little chap who stands fourth from the left, just at the end of the board. He would be a wonder in pictures if he could be trained to act. At any rate he has done First National a good turn, for he is the reason we are using the cut.

An unusual angle was the detailing of a totally deaf reporter to cover the event. A prefatory note to the story told that he was unable to hear the laughter and had to judge their enjoyment wholly through their facial expression. It made a good novelty. It might be a good stunt for others to work, even if the newspaper has no reporter who is really deaf.

Famous Managers in Big Cup Race

Harold B. Franklin, of the theatres department of Famous Players, has offered a silver cup for the best advertisement from any theatre in the F. P. string. Due allowance is made for a theatre's facilities—or lack of them—for preparing advertisements, and the small houses have as good a chance as the larger ones.

The decision will be made monthly and a manager will be allowed to hold the cup until the next award, when it must be passed along to the next winner. He will retain a diploma stating that the theatre won the cup in a certain month.

If any manager wins the cup three times in the year the contest will run, he will be permitted to retain it. If there is no one to qualify for the award, the managers who have presented the three best entries during the year will be entered in a play-off. The contest is to be handled through The Close-Up.

Judging is made on the advertisement in the newspaper and not from original drawings or specially pulled proofs, and the weight will be given the smaller advertisement, other things being equal.

If the contest does no more than emphasize to the local men the importance of learning to make display more important than mere size, it will be worth many times the cost of the cup, elaborate as the trophy is.

The Ushers' Own

Under the title of McVicker's Service Man, the ushers of McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, are issuing a four-page weekly intended for the employees of that theatre. Because of the limited circulation the text is typewritten and run off on the ditto machine.

Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatres department, used to get out a printed sheet along similar lines for the Shea houses in Buffalo, and it is not unlikely that he is more or less concerned in this new venture in a paternal or god-father sort of way.

The idea is to further teamwork and increase the spirit of fellowship in the organization, and it promises success in this purpose.

A First National Release

THIS IS NOT ONLY EFFECTIVE BUT ARTISTIC

It is all compo board, painted, but it looked like the real thing in the lobby of the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon. It is by far the best display on this title yet to be exhibited and a real credit to Gus Metzger, who put the production over with it.

Uses Same Coach for the Street and Stage

When the Scollay Square Olympia, Boston, put on Pioneer Trails, the management dug out a stage coach for a prologue showing an attack on the stage. It provided a vivid introduction to the picture and helped to create the proper atmosphere.

But it was figured that the coach could help more on the street, so the actors reported earlier in the morning and with a banner on top the vehicle ballyhooed the downtown streets until it was needed for the first afternoon de luxe performance, when it was a simple matter to remove the banner from its sockets and run the coach onto the stage. After that it was free to circulate the streets until the night shows called for its stage appearance.

Not many towns can command stage coaches, but it is a comparatively simple matter to build up some old wagon with profile, and where the structure can be made to do double duty, it should be well worth the cost.

Gave Mae a Whirl

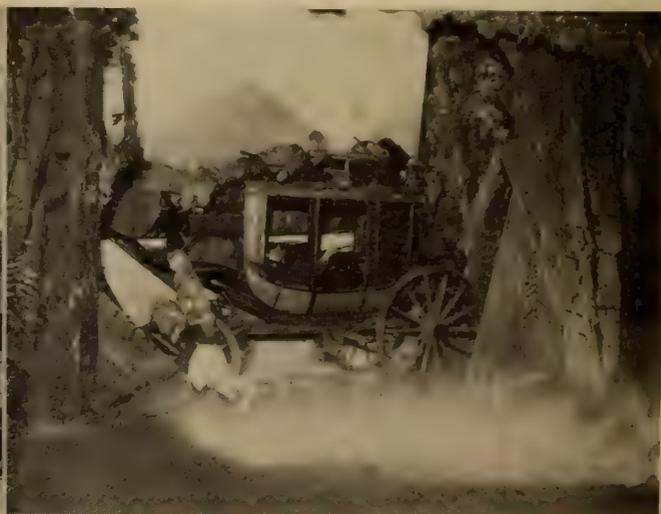

When he played The French Doll, Edward M. Foley, of the Academy Theatre, Haverhill, Mass., had a real French doll, in swagger dress, on a slowly revolving platform. The children were interested in the doll, the women in the dress and the men got the general idea that Mae Murray was to be seen, even though they were not interested in the dress.

USED THE SAME STAGE COACH FOR A BALLYHOO AND PROLOGUE ON PIONEER DAYS

Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre, Boston, put its stage coach to double use for the Vitagraph feature, and set it about the streets when it was not in use for the stage work, the more or less actors doubling on the set and street, in good old minstrel show fashion. The left hand cut shows the ballyhoo and also the two plane banner based on the paper.

Mae Murray Cuts Helps to Agents

Most press agents are glad to learn that a Mae Murray picture has been booked, because it always means a set of cuts that will almost frame themselves into advertising displays. The French Doll is no exception to the general rule and as the first of the series we offer a display from the State Theatre, Cleveland. This employs three of the cuts as a semi-frame to the title and selling talk. The star name is placed above the star figure. It is a simple, yet effective make up, and only one set of a press agent's delight. The character of the roles played by Miss Murray lend themselves well to striking cuts, but even with this material at hand in the shape of stills the cuts could be pulled down through poor work, but the line stuff is invariably good, which leads to the question as to why other pictures cannot be as well advertised in line, at least as regards cut quality. The answer seems to be that there is no reason other than a failure to obtain good work.

A Metro Release

MIGHTY GOOD CUTS

More Dark Secrets in This Half-tone

The management of the Orpheum Theatre, South Bend, Ind., lost a chance for a contest when it put in this display for The Lonely Road and did not make the half-tone cut an identification contest. It's all a deep black mystery, and a half tone like that is about as useful as a bathing suit would be to a cat. When you order a cut and find that the half-tone will not print up, amputate it with a file and recast your space, if necessary, rather than spoil your layout with a piece of junk. That space would be far better employed were it used for type, though whoever picks the copy for the Orpheum lacks finesse. In the bank below the signboard is a three paragraph sentence ending with "To return home then meant the lonely road. Would any wife?" That might get interest were it not that in the bank above the board the conclusion runs "the life of a wife who walked the lonely road and the child who kept her there." What's the use in asking a question already answered? Either bank would have worked, but one nullifies the other and both should not have been used. After you go through the plan book, read your advertisement over and see if you have doubled. The book carries a mass of material from which you are supposed to select what most appeals to you, but it cannot all be written so as to be interchangeable. Pick out paragraphs that do not fight, but which supplement each other in an harmonious whole. Pick out stuff that matches, and if you find the various sections are swearing at each other, dig into your book and get something else. There is ample material at your command, but it requires an intelligent selection. Each of these sections nullifies the other.

Tells Many Titles in Small Display

Getting four titles in a 75-lines by two is something that Nelson B. Bell does regularly for a couple of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., where others feel that they cannot use type to advantage. Bell feels that he cannot afford cuts in the small space, so he gets plenty of display at line rate in half inch spaces for all but the first

First National Releases

A FOUR-IN-ONE

title, which is a spread of two and a quarter inches. This does not count, of course, the signature. It gets further distinction from a smaller companion with a similar weekly program in a still smaller space. These houses are not played up except on Sunday. They are subsidiary to the first run house and do not draw the same appropriation, but they are fully sold on the Saturday-Sunday announcement, since the neighborhood patronage stocks up on titles for the week. Going to the Ambassador is more or less a family habit, and big displays are not required, but even at that Mr. Bell does very nicely in the space at his command and gets a real prominence for his titles. It must have been First National week at the Ambassador, since Dulcy, Trilby and Circus Days form the major portion of the bill. It will be noted that the musical offering is also included in the three line spaces, the smaller features being named just below the title with "Concert number" and the selection on a third line. Evidently it pays to advertise the musical program, too.

Builds Fine Display Around a Single Cut

Perhaps you can build a better display than this from the Globe Theatre, New Haven, but if you can, please shoot it in. We want to see it. Apparently this is all built around one good cut. It is not a fine piece of drawing, for it is a bit too rough to class high, but it is something more than that. It is strong and forceful, and that is to be preferred to delicacy of line in a newspaper display. Apparently the cut was made the basis of the entire display, the remainder being built in around this, with the heavy title and other lines at the top and a small panel below, where it will not detract from the art work. The cut carries the glance up the space and into the announcement display, but it gets a chance to do that because there is nothing at the bottom to hinder the start. Probably the same result could be achieved by opening at the top and putting the heavy lines at the bottom, but we do not think that this would hold true in the same degree since the top of the cut is more interesting than the lower portion and so the interest naturally centres there. We think that even this matter was studied out, though it is possible that the agent did the placement through instinct rather than study. This layout might not work as well with all cuts, but we think that with this particular cut a better display could not well have been planned. It's pretty work.

A Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Release

WORTH YOUR ATTENTION

Builds Pretty Page to Open Theatre

Working with press book material, plus a column of talk about the new house, the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., got out a very pretty appeal, using only a single cut and so getting to put most of the small talk in eighteen point instead of eight. With a new house the temptation to fill up the space with too much talk must have been strong, but the actual display was just enough talk to sell and not so much as to unsell again. P. A. Wills apparently framed the display and he has every reason to be well satisfied with his work. He asks for a criticism, but there is nothing to comment upon other than with approval; which, by the way, is just as much a criticism as an adverse comment. He also sends in a house program for comment. Here there is some room for comment. It is apparently a mailing piece rather than a straight house distribution program, but even at that we think it would be well to make the inside pages into two page sections with the formal house program on the right and trade advertising on the left hand page. At present the top two thirds of the entire page is set as one for a display advertisement with the added features in one line below. It would be more impressive to get this out on regular house program form, even though it is intended to mail it out. The best program form we know is that originated in the Loew houses and now used in all of the Paramount theatres as well. A request to Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, accompanied by a return envelope will probably bring samples.

Overlaid Portrait Makes a Background

Getting away from the usual form for the Lloyd comedies, Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, Washington, makes a full-space half-tone of the star, the foundation on which is laid the selling appeal. It is an odd form and an effective one, always provided that you can get good results from halftones in the newspapers; which does not often hold good. This is better, as a rule, for program and other house work, where a better grade of paper can be used. Here Nelson Bell got away with it very nicely and has achieved an unusual and striking result. It puts Lloyd over at the first glance, and yet it gives a remarkable prominence to the type inserts. There is a particularly happy introduction in the upper space, which starts off with: "Hal Roach presents Harold Lloyd, supported by Jobyna Ralston and nine feet of giant, etc." The chief value of the display is the emphasis given the type, and the result is that usually obtained with type set against a dark ground, but here the ground is also made to work; perhaps even better than the text, since Lloyd will sell more tickets on his face than on his titles, other than that the title assures a new comedy. This is 100 lines by three, but it has the display value of a quarter page at the cost of 300 lines or less than 22 column inches. It is not the size which counts so much as the appeal, and this looms like a torchlight parade on a dark night on a page with no other very pronounced display. Even there it was run with a lot of other black borders and similar devices the type boxes would pull it up. It is one of the best things that Mr. Bell has given us of late.

Coming Back

Monthly calendar programs seem to be coming into style again after a long recess, and a number have come to this desk of late. One from the Elite theatre, Somewhere-or-other, is in straight calendar form with boxed days and shadow letters which do not obscure the titles and which render two color printing unnecessary. The two-day bookings and the more important singles show original designs. The others are merely lettered. The card is 9 by 11 inches, and is provided with a ribbon hanger. Another sample is from the Majestic theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada. This is a cheap stock 5½ by 12 inches to read down the long way, and is in eight point Roman. The column is rather wide for this size type, being 26 ems, or double the usual column width, but the lines are leaded, which helps the reading. This is a weekly program hanger instead of a monthly, and we like it even better. But the best of all is the vest pocket size program, which is small enough for the pocket from which it derives its name or for a woman's shopping bag. Time was when these V. P. programs were almost universally used, even though other programs supplemented them, but W. C. Benson, of the Laurier theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., is about the only manager we know who is using them regularly. Mr. Benson has used them for years, first in Westbrook, Maine, later in Waterville, in the same state, and more recently in Woonsocket. He writes that he has found nothing quite so useful at the same small cost. Why not start a V. P. or a wall program and see how it works?

Flaming Youth Is an Artist's Delight

House artists who work for First National franchise holders are going to have a treat in Flaming Youth, since it lends itself so well to fanciful drawings. The first example comes from the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, where the artist has caught the spirit of the book and gives a sketch typical of the story and fairly typical of the play. It is pretty hard to tell whether this is dress or undress, but that goes for the story, so it matches up and there is an abandon to the pose which very happily reflects the spirit of the production. Apart from the figure this is a nice study in shading and the upward sweep of the lines of the background contributes quite as much to the suggestion of buoyant youth as the figure. The girl is being carried upward in the swirl of excitement. Any other disposition of the shading would have been less successful. This is one of the best of the Circle's recent examples, and the Circle art work is almost always above the average.

Took a Chance

Willing to try anything once, Walter C. Benson, of the Laurier theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., got a new stunt for a pitch. He had the Paramount pictures of the Japanese earthquake and he wanted to tell the town.

He bannered his car and sought the traffic four corners, deliberately disobeying the traffic rules. The crossing cop stopped him while he gave him a bawling out, and Benson did not mind it in the least.

He was right where the largest number of persons could see the sign within a given time and he was undeniably the centre of attraction, so he argued politely with the policeman, and gratefully handed out a pass while he told the cop—and several hundred others who had gathered—what great stuff the quake pictures were.

That's what you can call enterprise.

FURY. (8,709 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Splendid picture. My patrons enjoy a good sea picture and this cannot be beat. Book it. It's fine. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star cast,

Maurice Tournier prod. Book this one, tie up with the schools and clean up. The picture is there, and the schools will be glad to co-operate with you. Cleaned up on this one with the help of the local schools. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

LORNA DOONE. (6,083 feet). Star cast. Good picture that can be put over; as most everyone has heard or read the famous novel. Buy it right and you will make money. Don't be afraid to go after it. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A very good picture with good acting. A mix-up of characters, thrills, trap doors, sliding panels, a mystery comedy with a surprise ending. Everybody left with a smile. Pleased one hundred per cent. Had a good crowd two nights. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A real chuck full of action picture. Better than "One Exciting Night" and on that order. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,636 feet). Star cast, Edwin Carewe prod. A one hundred per cent. picture. No kicks at all and plenty of boosting. Went over big from a picture standpoint, but for a box office attraction it did not do so well; business just fair, I think due to the advertising matter which was not much. Pleased every one, all classes. Draw small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. (5,000 feet). Stars, Lon Chaney, Betty Blythe. Print in fine shape; forest fire scene wonderful. Pleased ninety-nine of a hundred. S. R. O. sign and full house! Good moral tone; suitable for Sunday in larger towns. Draw mixed class in town of 1,100. Bought right. Fine picture for mill town. Admission 15-30. Dan Sanick, Victory Theatre, Sulligent, Alabama.

OMAR THE TENTMAKER. (8,090 feet). Star, Guy Bates Post. If we had no better plays than "Omar," we, or any other house, could not exist a week. Such pictures must be paid for by other pictures. Moral tone, if expressed, wouldn't be moral. Suitable for Sunday?—milkman's matinee, 3 a. m. Attendance—hate to say. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre, Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. (7,650 feet). All I have said about "Omar the Tentmaker," plus a little bit more. Must run such pictures or lose F. N. Moral tone for me rotten. Suitable for junk pile. Those that came were awfully sorry. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. This has been voted the best kid picture ever seen in this theatre; situations funny and out of the ordinary. Freckles Barry's performance may be voted one hundred per cent. with Herman and Vermin, the negro boys, rating high. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Attendance, S. R. O. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. This is a good one. Has universal appeal. Both young and old like it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

QUESTION OF HONOR. (6,065 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. All my patrons were pleased. They like more like this picture. Anita Stewart can put good pictures over. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

ROSARY. (7,045 feet). Star cast. As fine a picture of the down easters as has ever been shown. Our people said it was much better than "Way Down East." Has splendid moral tone and is very good for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ROSE OF THE SEA. (6,037 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Only fair program picture that has no drawing power. It pleased about fifty per cent. of our patrons. Usual advertising yielded good attendance. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen, in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Shamokawa, Washington.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture, but does not seem to please the women. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

SLIPPY McGEE. (6,299 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Only average picture. Colleen is liked here. I considered the picture too slow and draggy. Wheeler Oakman and rest of cast fair. Suitable for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This picture drew well but was not what customers expected. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This one went over fair to ordinary business. Star seems to be slipping a little. This will satisfy her many friends though it lacks much of being a great picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. Picture true to life and was well liked. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,034 feet). Star,

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

This week there's a letter from one of the most sincere champions of this department—Carl Angle-mire.

Seems as though it doesn't matter any more that the pictures are fairly recent—the prints are on the blink just the same.

The exchanges will come back at you with the statement that the exhibitors run hash grinders instead of projection machines.

And yet, if that is the case, how is it that some companies have such a remarkably low percentage of poor print complaints?

For instance, Mr. Laemmle and Mr. A. E. Smith can be mighty proud of the standing among our exhibitor tip senders of, respectively, Universal and Vitagraph.

It's all in the attitude of the producer toward giving the exhibitor what he pays for—as the press backs will admit—a good show.

VAN.

Norma Talmadge. This picture not as good as the old Alice Joyce picture of the same name. Eileen Percy divided honors with Norma. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10, 25, 35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

Fox

BOSTON BLACKIE. (4,522 feet). Star, William Russell. A good Saturday picture, interesting all the way. Russell good in title role. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (3,892 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Pleased all the star's friends and held up for two days. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE. (3,892 feet). Star, John Gilbert. John adds to his following in this one. That boy surely is delivering the goods and it is up to Fox to give him the proper kind of stories. Not a kick, although period of play during early days: of California. Plenty of action and a whirlwind windup. Type of picture will appeal to everybody. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

JUST TONY. (5,233 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Here is one of the best Mix pictures ever produced. With Tony, the horse, the actor can't be beat. Tony himself is worth the admission, any time. Good attendance of all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

LOVEBOUND. (4,407 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A satisfactory program picture. Albert Roscoe opposite star. C. F. Krieh-baum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Like all Fox program pictures, this is a good one. When Fox makes specials they generally flivver but his program pictures all hold up well for us. Moral, buy the program. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

OATHBOUND. (4,468 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A rather pleasing romance of the sea. Gave satisfaction here. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had ordinary attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. The picture is good but Mix is slipping with us. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SHIRLEY OF THE CIRCUS. (4,668 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Fair program picture that got off to a slow start but wound up in whirlwind fashion in the last reel. Fox should have put more circus stuff in this, as many theatre patrons like to see athletic exhibitions, more so in the small villages than in the cities, as no "big tops" ever hit the little towns. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Can you imagine Tom Mix as a mollycoddle, wearing horned-rimmed glasses and working as a clerk in a shoe store? But he does, and with Billie Dove and Tony, the wonder horse, enacts a most remarkable picture, well worth seeing. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A riot. Chuck full of action. A real money getter and can play any theatre in the United States. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had great attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

TRUXTON KING. (5,613 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A thoroughly pleasing drama of the romantic type. Star is gaining prestige here. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

VIRGIN PARADISE. (9,000 feet). Star, Pearl White. One of Fox's old specials which is better than most of the new ones. One of the few I made money on. Pleases one hundred per cent. Good for small town. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Jos. Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS? Star cast. A fine picture, but for some reason or another the box office fell down. All who saw it were well satisfied and not a single patron kicked. Due to high price we barely broke even on this one. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had less than fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

YOSEMITE TRAIL (4,735 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Good program picture; should please wherever the outdoor type of picture is liked. Dustin Farnum pictures always go well with my patrons. Good attendance, small town and outlying districts. Town of 2,000. R. H. Freeman, Opera House, Liverpool, N. S., Canada.

Goldwyn

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. For a small town it's too gruesome. I've had calls for Chaney and I got him; that's all. Hardly fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. A good picture with lots of action and far better than many of the so-called specials. Torrence is best character man in movies today. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star cast. An extraordinarily good picture, very pleasing and very interesting. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star cast. One of the very best, but a little too long for a small town. Too much Monte Carlo. Cast excellent. This one should make money if bought right and if handled right. Some people doubted the title. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HIS BACK AGAINST THE WALL. (4,690 feet). Star, Raymond Hatton. A very good western comedy drama, and should draw well most anywhere. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOST AND FOUND. Star cast. Here is a nice picture. It's different really, wonderful scenery. We like this one. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw local patronage. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

LOST AND FOUND. Star cast. Good, with lots of action; good story and acting. Will please and stand advertising. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

LOVE PIKER. (6,237 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. A wonderful picture. Anita Stewart seems prettier than ever with her bobbed hair. I packed them in on this one. Distributed ten thousand heralds. Everybody well pleased. Business improved from day to day. Ran it four days and made money. Bought it right. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star cast. Did not see it personally but criticisms of patrons were favorable. Not a big special though, as distributor intimates. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. Very good but too long. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star cast. This picture has been heralded as a "knockout" in the cities, all of which it was not here. The public did not like it, told me so emphatically. It isn't really poor, but at the

Does the Dollar Buy as Much as it Did?

"Van, I would like to shake hands with you for some of those articles in some of the last issues of Moving Picture World, on poor films.

"If only some of the PRODUCERS would read these articles and see the logic in them!

"I am in a small town where U. S. money is used to pay admission to the theatres, and I pay the exchanges U. S. money for their film—but such film! It seems that the more we pay for prints, the poorer they are."—C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

price quoted it would be well to give this serious thought before paying a great big rental. I charged a slight increase, had to, and that reacted, as I play the best here at no increase. Used everything you can think of for advertising. Attendance first day good, second day frightful. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STRANGER'S BANQUET. (8,531 feet). Star cast. Personally, I enjoyed this very much, and most of our patrons did. However, the picture had no drawing power, and the posters were not attractive, so we lost out. Produced in excellent style. Rental too high. Buy it at top-program price and it should prove reasonably profitable. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

THREE WISE FOOLS. (6,946 feet). Star cast. A fine show. Great cast, story, production. First money-maker since "The Hottentot." Clean with exception of one title with profanity in seventh reel. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THREE WISE FOOLS. (6,946 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, but don't oversell it even if you overbought it. Just study it and treat it accordingly, and it should satisfy you and your box office. Different enough to please any type of audience. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

Hodkinson

KINGDOM WITHIN. (6,036 feet). Star cast. Very good picture with a story that has heart appeal. Gaston Glass certainly deserves credit for his work as a crippled boy in this production. Drew big attendance. Used ones, threes, sixes, photos, etc. Also special lobby display and cut-outs from twenty-four sheet backed up with garden scene and rustic cabin. H. O. Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Q., Canada.

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Star cast. The name gets them; people expect to see something and get nothing—nuf sed! Good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Star cast. Short and sweet but all there what there is of it, and oh, what a money-getter. Played to a French-Canadian audience. Everybody pleased. H. O'Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Quebec, Canada.

Metro

AN OLD SWEETHEART OF MINE. (5,400 feet). Star cast. Well, they made something out of nothing. An appealing picture from a suggested plot in Riley's famous poem. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

DESIRE. (6,500 feet). Star, Marguerite De La Motte. A little too morbid in spots. Not a "Saturday" picture, and not a "Sunday" picture. If you have a group contract I'd say run it between times and not boast too much. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw all classes. J. E. Madsen, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. Star, James Kirkwood. A flash, a roar, thousands of cattle in a mad stampede, and many other thrills in this smashing story of the great outdoors, superbly produced, fascinating, exciting, absorbing. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture. Wonderful acting and after the show you will be proud you are an exhibitor. Hard to get them in. High class. Has excellent moral tone and is fine for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

FIVE DOLLAR BABY. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A good program picture; somewhat on the order of Fox's "Paw Ticket 210." The first Dana picture I ever ran. Think the star made a good impression. John Herron and Ralph Lewis good in supporting cast. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HER FATAL MILLIONS. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Very good picture. Well acted, photography good, print good. Pleased one hundred per cent. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NOISE IN NEWBORO. (5,300 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A good comedy drama. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. Extra good, nothing but favorable comments on this one. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,300. Admission 20-35. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

THREE AGES. (5,251 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Where Buster is popular, as he is here, this is good. It is a little too choppy though. Not handled by the director so that Buster will make new friends. Used everything in the catalogue for this. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general patronage in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theatre (300 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

Paramount

ADAM AND EVA. (7,153 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A good comedy drama, which pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. Went over good. Made me money. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. The featured players are good drawing cards, so had good crowds, but those that didn't come saved two bits and didn't miss much either. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. A good picture that could have been made better by trimming. Cave man part much too long. Got to hand it to DeMille for artistic stuff. Suitable for Sunday in most places. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

ANNA ASCENDS. (6,900 feet). Star, Alice Brady. A fair program picture that can't stand much boosting and could stand a little knocking. It might get by in some places but here it is about fifty-fifty. Fair attendance, drawing general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Picture was a little too overdrawn from a point of romance. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbonale, Illinois.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A good picture that drew much better than the usual Swanson picture. Huntley Gordon good opposite star. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one should please all of them; there is enough comedy in it to overcome a few bad spots in it. Get behind it and you'll be surprised at the result. Be careful in your advertising and make it plain that it is from the famous play. Good moral tone; not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Not as big as they say. People like it and will boost it. Lavish settings and Swanson can wear fine clothes. Good print. A good bet. Moral tone, not any too good. Possibly suitable for Sunday in certain localities. Had good attendance of university students and better class. City of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

BRANDING BROADWAY. (5,000 feet). Star, William S. Hart. Good. In very good shape. On going out they told me that they were well pleased with the show. This is our second time on Paramount, William S. Hart, pictures. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star cast. Male lead too overdrawn to be true to masculine traits. Two leading characters not suited to each other, but well directed. Might be suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbonale, Illinois.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star cast. For those who like the Arab stuff this will please but my patrons don't care for this kind of picture. Attendance was fair. Draw better class in town of 800. Ad-

Turkey To Win

"Well, Van, are you all set for Thanksgiving? I'm playing "Down to the Sea in Ships" next week—and if my luck holds out I'll invite you up to a Turkey Dinner.

"But if Father Gloom shows up I'll have to set 'em up in the other alley and buy an old hen somewhere."—Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

Saw "Down to the Sea" when it was at the N. Y. Cameo—so it's a safe bet the old hen will still be clucking around while the gobbler goes down to the feast in platters.

mission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Fair picture only; it could have been better. Some patrons were pleased and some were not. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Great entertainment. Big business at advance price. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Boys, be careful. Worth to me no more than an ordinary Paramount picture; very ordinary story played by unknown stars—the known stars do not work in the story, just merely appear. Fair moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Very good picture that pleased them all. Something unusual that will please them. Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. De Roche and Kosloff are in support in this one, it is different and the type that will satisfy any audience more especially the kind that we cater to. Our people want the picture to keep moving; a pretty woman in a pensive mood or the throes of grief, etc., with the footage in the close-ups stretched out is not what they want, they want the story to keep on unfolding and that is what this one did; our audience liked the picture, the attendance was fair. Suitable for Sunday. Draw all types in town of 2,965. Admission 10-22. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

MARRIAGE MAKER. (6,295 feet). Star, Jack Holt. The poorest "piece of cheese" it has been my bad fortune to run. Lay off of this if you don't want to get jolted. It hasn't anything to recommend it. Settings poor, acting of Jack Holt and Agnes Ayers very poor. I paid good money for this but would have rather had the poorest kind of any other picture. It simply was rotten. Really the only thing in this picture was the acting of Charles de Roche. Half of the house walked out on me before the picture was half finished. How they get by, by releasing such stuff is beyond me. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

MAN WHO SAW TOMORROW. (6,993 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This picture has a good cast, nice photography and scenery, good acting, sufficient action. In fact everything except a good plot. The story is a little too improbable to please a critical audience but will get by where Meighan is popular. Received the usual fine print available from Paramount exchange. Had good attendance. Suitable for Sunday. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

MOONLIGHT AND HONEYSUCKLE. (5,000 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. The picture would have been good if another feminine star had substituted. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. This one is very ordinary. Hiers has no drawing power and did not go across to those that did see him. He certainly can't take Wallace Reid's place for Paramount. Had poor attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Fairly interesting comedy-drama. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Fair program picture but not up to the Meighan standard of acting, however will get by. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The jazziest picture of a Jazz-Mad age. Gloria was in all her glory in this one. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Star cast. Exceptionally good picture that should please any audience. Go to it and get some business on this one because it means good advertising for you. Here you have a theme that is hard to beat. You'll be sorry if you don't realize what this is and be sure and sell it to them. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. They have been feeding us too much western themes lately. Probably all right for some communities. A good picture, however. sion 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Ordinary program picture. Pleased about half of my patrons. Something wrong with this picture which I think was due to poor direction. Many of the scenes faked. Acting of Miss Logan was excellent. Personally thought the picture was a shade above the ordinary. Customers thought different as I heard a lot of comments on it. Advertised it as something out of the ordinary and heard a lot of kicks. Used regular advertising to good attendance. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

Pathe

WHY WORRY? (6 reels). Star, Harold Lloyd. A knockout that drew far beyond our expectations on a four-day run and broke the house record. Patrons almost universal in saying that it was Lloyd's greatest yet. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw general class in town of 9,000. Edwin F. Allman, Pike Theatre, Dover, Ohio.

COUNTERFEIT LOVE. (4,850 feet). Star cast. A fair program picture. Photography not up to standard, too many scenes out of focus. L. E. Brewer, Folly Theatre, Duncan, Oklahoma.

Preferred

GIRL WHO CAME BACK. (6,100 feet). Star, Miriam Cooper. Just a picture. Preferred makes a fuss over it. It isn't there. Well produced and if your public is not too discriminating it will pass muster. For me it meant nothing. Used everything for advertising. Had poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Selznick

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. An excellent picture. One of the best we have had this year. Patrons all thought they had seen it and didn't come. Was too much like "Prisoner of Zenda." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. The first time for a Universal feature here, also the star. It didn't seem to take; society pictures; they don't seem to take here in a small place. Pleased about sixty per cent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

TOWN SCANDAL. (4,604 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. As usual, this little star puts it over; she sure shows up the small town reformers and pictures them in their true colors. Everybody well pleased and they were not slow to tell us. Reels in good shape. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Very good attendance, drawing country and town class, town of 2,200. Admis-

TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This star a wonderful character actor. This was a good picture but my patrons don't like Chaney, too much sadness and tragedy in his plays; but they could not help but say it was good. If you like a sob drama, play it. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing country and small town class of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. J. Jenkins, Community Theatre (490 seats), David City, Nebraska.

Vitagraph

LOYAL LIVES. (5,950 feet). Star, Brandon Tynan. I did not get to see this but was told by my patrons it was good. Did good business, so why worry? Used slide, heralds, ones, sixes. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,000. Admission 20-35. W. B. Dobbs, Victory Theatre (250 seats), Gordo, Alabama.

Warner Brothers

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Great, wonderful, splendid; these are a few of the encouraging remarks passed to us by our audiences. Ran it two nights and they sure were justified in making them, as it certainly is a wonderful picture. This is one of the very few one hundred per cent. pictures. Not much business the first night, but after seeing it, on Saturday night we had the best house of the summer and we had some good houses this last summer even though the summer was hot on show nights. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

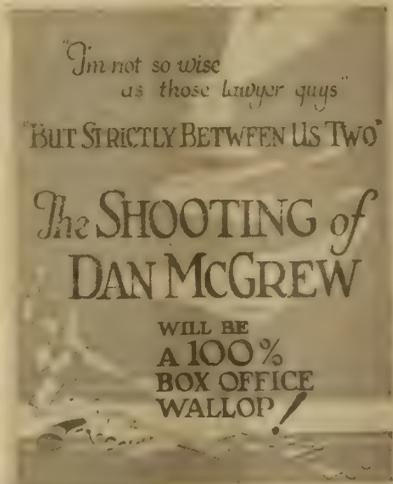

DEVOID of colored ink, printed on ordinary newspaper stock and minus any superficial "flash" whatever, First National press sheets are filled with red meat for the showman—useable material into which he can sink his teeth and go to work selling seats.

The press sheets do not make the impression on the eye that those issued by some other companies make, but in the pages the exhibitor will find just about everything he needs to put the picture over.

IN the First National press sheets we have examined—and we have seen most of those issued for some time past—little time or space is used in selling the picture to the exhibitor. Every inch of available space is filled either with matter intended for newspaper use or with explanations or illustrations of promotional aids.

Economy of space seems to be the order of each press sheet—so much so that there are those who might take the stand that things are omitted which might helpfully have been included in the pages; also some might take exception to the fact that even publicity stories are printed on pages which have material printed on both sides of the sheet, thus making one side more or less useless if the other is clipped. This latter, however, is an easy matter to remedy, inasmuch as two of the press sheets could be obtained.

THE "Anna Christie" press sheet, which has just reached our desk, is typical of almost every First National press sheet. In its six pages—regular newspaper-page size—we find plenty of well-written newspaper stories, including a plentiful variety both as to subject-matter and size. There is also an illustrated fictionization of the play by Eugene O'Neil, which runs about five columns, and which is very readable.

Cover of the pocket-sized pamphlet issued by Metro on "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." In the booklet is printed the Robert W. Service poem which forms the foundation on which the picture is being builded

About a dozen newspaper ads. in varying sizes are reproduced. The art work in all of these is good—strong blacks and whites predominating. Every one of these ads. stresses the sheer drama of the picture and each can be considered good.

There is a page devoted to exploitation stunts and suggestions for tie-ups; heralds, direct-mail campaigns and the like.

Then, too, there are three diagrams for the sign painter to follow in making artistic hand-drawn lobby cards. We mentioned this idea in these columns before, and again we say that this should prove a particularly helpful feature, especially to those houses which go in for a little extra art work on pictures.

The posters and slides are illustrated on the back page. Another feature that appears is a complete list of the aids available, together with the price of each. This is not a novel feature, but it is not common, either. We think it's darned good dope to print the prices of aids right in the press sheet.

WHILE not reproduced in the press sheet, there are some particularly striking lobby cards issued on "Anna Christie." Especially is this true of the two 22x28's, which are excellent, and worthy of a place in the finest lobby.

LAST week we had occasion to mention the fact that the independents were right up with the pace-makers when it came to press books. Our statement is further borne out by the receipt this week of the press book on C. B. C.'s "The Marriage Market."

The book is printed in two colors and is complete in every detail. Posters, slides, oil paintings, lobby cards and the like are reproduced, while on other of the book's sixteen pages can be found publicity stories, exploitation suggestions, newspaper ads.—both type and display—reproductions and explanation of heralds, etc.

All in all, the book lives up to the best traditions of the independents.

C B. C.'s "dealer helps" have always met a high standard. The line-up on "The Marriage Market" is no exception. Herewith are reproduced the twenty-four sheet and the two threes. Standard stuff—and the sort that will help fill theatres.

IT was a darned good still from which this drawing was made—a still that formed the keynote of the entire campaign.

WE are in receipt of the following letter from an exhibitor in a town of 10,000:

"Circus heralds are the only kind that are any good for this small town. We have been getting a lot of little heralds lately, and they don't seem to mean a thing here. People here think, I guess, that if a herald is small the picture is small. So I like the big circus heralds. I don't care how many colors they have, just so long as they are good and strong and BIG."

What do YOU think, Mr. Exhibitor?

IT seems to us that there is a lot in what our friend has to say. On the strength of his letter, we solicited every company in the business for samples of the heralds issued on their recent productions.

We found that the majority of heralds very small affairs—virtually any one of which would easily fit into a small-sized business envelope. And it struck us that every one of these small heralds looked crowded. The type and pictures—where there were any—were small. The former was hard to read and the latter quite uninviting.

The samples of "circus" heralds that we received, on the other hand, fairly screamed their messages. True, the claims of the circus heralds were rather extravagant, but that's a small matter compared to the unpardonable sin of poor "readability."

Then, too, the "circus" heralds "looked like" something—even if the smaller heralds did perhaps cost more.

EVERY piece of promotional matter on "Anna Christie" stresses the dramatic note sounded by the one "key-note" still. Indicating that an entire campaign can be based on even a very few good stills. Above are reproduced two three and a one-sheet. The twenty-four also features the same dramatic picture of "Anna Christie."

The larger throwaways are more show bills than small heralds, and for that reason perhaps more acceptable to the exhibitor who wrote us and to hundreds of others like him.

Here is another example of a credit line that doesn't mean a thing to the box office. Notice on this six sheet that Jack Coogan, Sr.'s name is displayed in type almost half as tall as that of the star. Not the ad. man's fault—merely his misfortune. Why, oh, why, are useless credit lines?

AND, speaking of heralds recalls to us that it is a common practise now for many producers to furnish herald cuts so that exhibitors can print their own heralds instead of having heralds printed in advance and placed with the exchanges for sale to the exhibitor. That's all right for the man who books far enough in advance, but how about the little fellow who only uses a thousand or so?

What do you think of that proposition, Mr. "Little Fellow?"

NAT ROTHSTEIN has sponsored some good press books for F. B. O. in the past, but everything hitherto is going to be surpassed by the press book on Emory Johnson's "The Mailman." We say that because we know whereof we speak. We have seen the F. B. O. bunch at work, and have had the opportunity of seeing some of the aids already finished. We'll probably have much more to tell you about it in a few weeks.

METRO has just issued an attractive little booklet on their forthcoming attraction, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," Robert W. Service's famous poem of the Yukon. It is printed in two colors and will be sent broadcast to exhibitors all over the country as advance notice on the production. The contents of the booklet consists only of the poem itself—a stanza on each page. At the bottom of each page and set in the middle of a double rule are given the big punches of the story as they will be picturized. Looks like good promotional work.

"Boy of Mine"

First National Release Starring Ben Alexander Can Be Recommended Without Qualifications

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. Not because it is one of the most lavish but because it has one of the best stories, is an example of the finest directing and presents acting that is very near flawless. Furthermore, it features Ben Alexander.

It is a gem among pictures because it is amazingly entertaining without any hokum. Just where the dramatic tension is the greatest and one expects one of the time-worn twists, something supremely natural instead takes place. This is perhaps the picture's most distinguished feature.

Booth Tarkington's reputation for creating realistic boy fiction is stoutly upheld. Ben Alexander is a lovable, misunderstood and imperfect boy. He is tremendously appealing because he seems so entirely unconscious of the camera.

The picture is life from a boy's viewpoint. You are made to feel, just as in reading Tarkington, that youth is a detached kingdom with experiences and emotions of its own that very few adults take the trouble to understand. Its tragedies are either insignificant or ludicrous to outsiders. This gives the picture that wonderful blending of comedy and sympathetic interest that reaches any type of spectator.

William Beaudine's directing in this production will be remembered by anyone who is interested in better pictures. He seems to have disciplined a cast of already accomplished players into an interpretation of human character so complete and interesting that nothing is left to be desired. Henry Walthall as the repressed father, without any understanding of his son but possessed of a great love for him, is a new screen study. Irene Rich gives a beautiful performance as the mother and Rockliff Fellows as the boy's pal is delightful.

The comedy deserves special mention. The scenes in the church are extremely funny and the incidents connected with the boy and the rag picker's son getting hold of the "revolver" are worth making a second trip to see the picture. "Boy of Mine" is one of those few pictures no one should miss.

"The Satin Girl"

Grand-Asher Production is Wierd Crook Melodrama Featuring Mabel Forrest and Norman Kerry

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Grand-Asher's newest feature production "The Satin Girl" produced by Ben Wilson, is a wierd crook melodrama which deals with the exploits of a girl who under strange hypnotic influence of an eccentric master-criminal is forced against her own judgment to commit robberies that baffle the police.

The wierd and uncanny note is strongly stressed and much emphasis is placed on the doings of this arch-criminal, his strange surroundings, mysterious trap-doors, etc. This character is purposely overdrawn and played up for melodramatic effect and the story is naturally unconvincing and belongs to the type that cannot be taken too seriously. Themes of this kind, however, have a strange fascination for a large number of spectators, who will be fascinated in watching the development of the action.

The spectator all along knows which character is "The Satin Girl" and can easily deduct that she is the girl who was kidnapped. The main interest lies in following the manner in which she succeeds in eluding the police, and in the development of the romantic element, as the matter is eventually straightened out by a young doctor who falls in love with her and solves the mystery of her identity.

The story is told in the form of a variation of the dream idea, as you find at the climax that the heroine has been reading a novel and has personified her fiance and herself as the main personages in the story. This solution of the difficulty in which the heroine is placed will doubtless prove disappointing to many patrons, although it affords an easy way out of an embarrassing situation.

Norman Kerry is well cast as the young physician and Marc McDermott is effective as the master-criminal. Mabel Forrest does good work as the girl. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory.

On the whole it is not an especially strong picture from a box-office standpoint and is apt to arouse only mild interest on the part of the average spectator.

Story

Soon after receiving a letter of warning, Silas Gregg, a miserly old man is murdered by a mysterious character and his daughter disappears. Not long after this there occurs a series of mysterious robberies which the police blame on an elusive character known as "The Satin Girl." Dr. Taunton, at a party, meets Lenore Vance and becomes interested in her, not knowing that she is really "The Satin Girl," who, against her will, performs the robberies under the strange influence of a man named Fargo. When Lenore takes a ruby from Dr. Taunton she leaves a clue which causes him to unravel the mystery. He discovers that Fargo is the man who murdered Gregg. The police arrive at Fargo's place but find he has killed himself. It develops that the whole story is a novel that Lenore has been reading in which she visualizes herself and Dr. Taunton as the leading characters.

"The Day of Faith"

Eleanor Boardman Is Charming in Goldwyn Picture Which Has Moments of Great Power

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Although the theme in this Goldwyn picture is the important thing, the dramatic treatment is such that its box-office value should be dependable in a majority of houses. The story is one of power, and Tod Brown-in has given it skillful directing.

As the original story by Arthur Somers Roche has been conceived without sectarian prejudice, the religious trend should be objectionable to no one. In places where the "faith" angle might easily have been overdone, restraint has been used. The result is a more human production with just enough idealism to arouse a certain degree of wonderment in the average person without becoming at any point ludicrous.

An example of this and an incident which suggests the spirit of the entire picture is the healing of the lame reporter and his subsequent lapse into his former state. First his restoration is brought about by a shock—a desperate effort to save a lame girl from falling. Later when the inspiration is gone and he faces the taunts of an unbeliever, he finds that the old limp has returned. This might be interpreted in a number of ways. It leaves considerable margin for conjecture and in this lies much of the picture's power.

It has been cut in a number of places, sometimes to a disadvantage. It is not entirely clear until almost the end why the chief enemy to the cause suddenly decides to endorse it. Also the revenge which the public metes out against him is conceived rather too suddenly.

The picture should be a strong aid in pop-to those who are not too much concerned about the plausibility of the story.

A dauntless American establishing order in some imaginary kingdom and falling in love with a princess is a familiar McCutcheon hero. J. Warren Kerrigan has just such a role here. He makes many thrilling rescues and is a romantic figure in numberless adventures.

The kingdom is called Japat, and the struggle is between the heirs to the throne and a vast army of natives who fancy themselves being cheated. They are shown meeting en masse on the hills, climbing the chateau gates and the walls of the building, tumbling into the rooms and being pressed back by a handful comprising the royal party—and the American. Finally as a last touch consistent with the rest of the melodrama, a United States destroyer sends a crew to conquer the natives. This brings the turmoil effectively to a close.

Alice Calhoun is lovely in a formal, gracious role. Other attractive women are Wanda Hawley, Miss Du Pont and Kathleen Key. Pat O'Malley is also in the cast.

Story
Hollingsworth Chase, an American, represents Brodney's, a British law firm, attempting to defend the natives' interests in a revolution in Japat. Chase meets the two heirs to the throne who must marry or else sacrifice the kingdom to the natives. He also meets again a charming princess whom he met in the Duchy of Rapp Thorberg. He and the Princess get deeply involved in the various uprisings and Chase has the greatest difficulty in trying to adjust national affairs and is compelled to swing to the side of the royal party when the natives make a terrific attack. The Princess gives up her title and throne because of the great love and courage of the American.

"The Wanters"

Excellent Entertainment in John M. Stahl Picture Which Looks Like a Big Box-Office Winner
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Characteristic of John M. Stahl's recent pictures, such as "The Dangerous Age," which is proving a big success, "The Wanters," his newest production for First National, is based on a live-wire theme of everyday life. This time he deals with the universal craving for things we do not possess and seeks to show that happiness does not necessarily result in attaining these things.

The theme is concentrated in the experiences of a maid in a wealthy household who marries a member of the family and is surrounded by luxury only to be snubbed by the family, made to feel unwelcome and finally discover that hypocrisy and sham are rampant in that class and that she has not found the happiness she dreamed of.

It will be seen that the story proper follows somewhat familiar lines, but the admirable manner in which it has been handled and the fine work of a well-selected cast makes you overlook little inconsistencies. You find yourself interested to an unusual degree in the girl's experiences; there is a lot of strong human interest, dramatic situations that strike home and excellent comedy touches. The story is set in attractive surroundings among the homes of the wealthy and is finely photographed. It is a picture that is strong in the elements that appeal to the masses, even to the melodramatic and thrilling rescue at the climax which brings about the happy ending.

The result is a thoroughly pleasing and satisfying picture that holds your attention throughout and has every indication of providing a big box-office success. In fact, in Paterson, N. J., at the Garden Theatre, when the writer saw this picture at the supper show on the last day of a week's run, the house was filled, and the lobby was jammed the crowd extending out into the street at the beginning of the night show.

Here is a showman's picture. The title is in itself interest arousing and unusually adaptable to exploitation such as teasers and tie-ups. If you get behind it, you can get them in, and once they are in your theatre, you don't have to worry, for the picture will take care of itself.

Marie Prevost proved to be an ideal selection for the leading role and makes the character seem intensely real. Robert Ellis does excellent work opposite her, acting with fine feeling a role that is more true to life than heroic. Hank Mann contributes a particularly well-handled and convincing comedy bit in a situation that has clever and well-sustained suspense.

Story
Myra Hastings, one of the maids in the wealthy Van Pelt household, dons her mistress' new gown while the family is at the opera. She is seen by Elliott Worthington, a brother of her mistress, who is struck by her beauty and charm. Mrs. Van Pelt finds her wearing the gown and discharges her. Elliot visits Myra at her home and proposes to her. She accepts because she wants beautiful things. Mrs. Van Pelt and her mother receive her coldly and set out to break up the match. After an embarrassing scene where she falls downstairs at a big reception, Van Pelt makes an insulting proposal to her and his wife blames her. Later Myra finds Mrs. Van Pelt planning to run away with another man. Disillusioned by her ill-treatment and by the hypocrisy she finds among the wealthy, Myra leaves. Elliot, realizing he really loves her, follows and saves her life as her foot gets caught in a switch while a train is approaching.

"The Mailman"

Emory Johnson's Latest for F. B. O. Has Thrilling Climax and Many Heart Touches
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Generous in heart interest and thrills, Emory Johnson's latest production for F. B. O. will bring entertainment to the many who enjoyed "The Third Alarm" and "West-bound Limited." It is dedicated to the United States mail service in much the same spirit as the others were, to fire departments and railroad employees. It has the same sincerity and simplicity of theme with an undercurrent of drama, terminating in an exciting climax.

Like its predecessors, "The Mailman" makes its great appeal to the masses. It tells a rather plain story with homelike details and without many of the subtleties that an intellectual audience demands. Probably the only exceptional scenes are those showing the capture of the yacht, by the Government fleet. But these combined with a sympathetic story sincerely set forth make an excellent box-office attraction for the average theatre.

Ralph Lewis gives another of his appealing performances. In the character of the mail carrier, faithful to his work in all kinds of weather and taking a heart-felt interest in all that he meets on his daily rounds he emphasizes again those qualities that have endeared him to the public. The scenes in his home have the sentiment and kindly humor that appeals generally. The little cripple girl next door as played by Josephine Adair is a pathetic bit. This and similar touches are not new but they play upon age old emotions in a way that is affecting to a majority.

The robbery of the mail ship furnishes an excellent climax. A fight on board ship between the mail clerk and the robber followed by the clerk being thrown over board where he is saved by clinging to the suitcase containing the registered mail and the searchlight which signals to captain of the rum-running vessel has good suspense and spectacular value. Johnnie Walker plays with an abundance of spirit. These are the best scenes in the picture and would have made a better final impression than the familiar, melodramatic twist which has been given at the end.

Bob Morley and his son Jack both receive commendations for their faithful service in the United States Mail and Jack is assigned to "The Enterprise," a ship containing registered mail. He is attacked, the mail is stolen but on another ship he sends a wireless for help so that the mail is recovered but he is accused of theft. He is sentenced to hang but the real criminal confesses in time to save him.

"The Whipping Boss"

Monogram Offers Picture Based on Inhuman Use of the Lash in Convict Camps Where Leasing System Prevails
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

It is very evident that the theme of "The Whipping Boss" the second Monogram picture is based on the case of a lad who was the victim of the lash in a lumber camp in a state where the convict leasing system prevailed; a case which obtained a large amount of space in the newspapers and resulted in arousing public opinion and bringing about a reform in this system.

In the main, the picture story follows the actual case, particularly in so far as the treatment of the boy is concerned, although certain changes have been made, a romance introduced for dramatic effect, and a happy ending given the picture.

The outstanding point in the picture and the apparent reason for its production is the inhuman treatment of the convicts. There are scenes where the hero, sick from working in the muck of the cypress swamp is cruelly beaten with a heavy lash, also where the hero just saves an old man from such treatment. A climax has also been introduced in which the whipping boss at the instigation of the villainous superintendent sets fire to a stockade in which the convicts are chained in their bunks. Although the convicts are saved by the timely arrival of members of the American Legion, the effect of these scenes is distinctly depressing and will cause the spectator to become indignant at the thought of such inhuman treatment, which is evidently the intention of the producers.

Introduced into the story are several familiar melodramatic situations, and great stress has been placed on the power of the American Legion for good in a community. The seal of the legion appears on the film.

Over 300 Exhibitors Want "Rosita"

More than three hundred exhibitors have placed their orders through United Artists Corporation with Mary Pickford for her latest picture release, "Rosita," according to a statement just arrived at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios.

Boston Press Praises Metro's "Scaramouche"

The press of Boston was enthusiastic over Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," which was presented at the Park Theatre there on November 12 last. The premiere was a brilliant affair with many of Boston's prominent people present as well as good sized representations from Lowell and Worcester and the surrounding towns.

"Scaramouche," wrote the critic of the Boston Times, "reminded us of a great painting. It is a great story written by a great writer, filmed under the great hand of Rex Ingram, aided by his great cast." The Boston Record: "It has a sweep and power." "Ingram has given the screen as fine a picture as his other triumph, 'The Four Horsemen,'" wrote the critic of the Boston Post. "Scaramouche' is as complete and polished as experience and genuine art can make it," wrote the critic of the Boston Globe.

The Boston Daily Advertiser wrote: "'Scaramouche' is a great picture, greatly acted." "Rex Ingram has done it again!" enthused the critic of the Boston Traveler. The Boston American: "Eloquence, revolutionary gatherings, bloodshed, dragoons, luxury, poverty, the cruel aristocracy, and the fiendish rabble, beauty, ugliness, chivalry and honor, love and coquetry, the bullet and the sword—all lend their bit to the picture."

The Boston Herald: "'Scaramouche' is an excellent picture, intelligently produced and acted."

Lloyd's "Why Worry" Is Given High Praise

"Why Worry?," Pathe's feature comedy starring Harold Lloyd, continues to score heavily in prominent key city runs throughout the country. Newspaper critics have been enthusiastic in their reception in every instance.

During the recent engagement of "Why Worry?" at the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, the Post of that city commented in part as follows: "Why Worry?—when movie fans, and who isn't one, can depend upon Harold Lloyd's coming out about once every so often with a can of celluloid, every flicker of which drags their minds farther and farther away from the drab reality of things—Why Worry, indeed?"

The Kansas City Star reviewer wrote: "Why Worry?" is a 'whiz when it comes to entertainment and completely satisfying."

In Detroit during the engagement of "Why Worry?" at the Adams Theatre, the Free Press calls attention to the extended run of the picture: "So many Detroiters have laughed over the antics of Harold Lloyd in his latest comedy, 'Why Worry?' that this popular comedian and his clever company of funmakers will remain at the Adams Theatre for a third week."

The Public Ledger of Philadelphia, commenting on the presentation of "Why Worry?" at the Aldine, expresses the opinion that this production is "Harold Lloyd's greatest comedy."

Sennett Comedy Subjects for Release by Pathe

At the Mack Sennett Studios Earl Kenton has just completed a two-reel comedy, titled "Inbad the Sailor," in which are cast Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan and Madeleine Hurlock. Roy Del Ruth, who recently completed "Look Pleasant," in which Harry Langdon plays the featured role, supported by Jack Cooper and Albert Vaughn, has started work on a new two-reel comedy with the same cast that appeared in "Inbad the Sailor." Kenton, on the other hand, is directing the same company that appeared in "Look Pleasant" in his latest production just started.

Del Lord, after recovering from a recent illness, is back on the job. The Sennett scenario staff is hard at work rounding out the details for the new comedy scripts for forthcoming pictures to follow those now in process.

Daily rehearsals of new players and directors are progressing under the supervision of Richard Jones, production manager of the Mack Sennett Studios.

Big Circuits Book "America" Series

Another important booking contract on the "Chronicles of America" series was closed this week when the Ascher Brothers Circuit of Chicago signed with Pathe for the entire thirty-three subjects embraced in this group of thrilling historical dramas. The closing of this deal assures a wide showing for this important series in all of the Ascher Bros. theatres located in Chicago and its suburbs.

The Loew Circuit in New York has also contracted for the showing of the entire thirty-three subjects embodied in this group of thrilling historical dramas.

Pre-Review of "Black Oxen"

"Black Oxen," Frank Lloyd's first independently produced picture for release as a First National picture, was given a test preview at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, Calif., recently and despite the fact that the picture was given only a one sheet in front of the theatre an overflow crowd resulted.

The showing, arranged at four-thirty in the afternoon, was announced in the lobby only and the screening began at seven-thirty sharp. The news of the preview spread rapidly and when the initial title was flashed on the silver sheet the theatre was filled.

New Ince Film for First National

Thos. H. Ince's next production for First National will be a drama with the temporary title of "Against the Rules." Based on a story by Frank R. Adams, it is declared to be a worthy successor to "Anna Christie" in point of theme and emotional strength.

An elaborate production is planned, with Leatrice Joy, Percy Marmont and Adolphe Menjou in the principal roles and John Griffith Wray directing.

Vitagraph Film to Be at Rialto

"The Man from Brodney's" will be given its Broadway premiere at the Rialto Theatre, New York, on December 16. This super-feature is a picturization of the famous novel by George Barr McCutcheon and was produced by David Smith for release by Vitagraph.

Immediate Release on "Broadway Broke;" Mary Carr and Percy Marmont the Leads Coming closely upon the success which marked "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law," the screen version of "Broadway Broke," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Earl Derr Biggers, will be released to exhibitors immediately by Selznick Pictures Corporation. It is a Murray Garsson production with Mary Carr in the leading role and was directed by J. Searle Dawley.

Playing opposite Mary Carr, who will always be remembered for her inimitable work in "Over the Hill" as well as for her talent on the legitimate stage, is Percy Marmont, star of "If Winter Comes." The balance of the cast is of the calibre to harmonize with the principals. Among the well-known names are those of Gladys Leslie, Dore Davidson, Maclyn Arbuckle, Macey Harlan, Edward Earle.

Pierre Gendron, Billy Quirk, Henrietta Crosman, Sally Crute, Leslie King, Albert Phillips, Frederick Burton and last, but playing an effective role, "Lassie" Bronte, the dog, known in the picture as "Chum."

The story concerns a once popular Broadway star who finds, as the lines of her face deepen and the color of her hair lightens, that she is no longer able to interest the booking agents. Remembering a manuscript left by her husband, she succeeds in convincing a motion picture producer that it would make a wonderful film. So successful is she in the part she has to play to convince him, that the producer not only buys the manuscript but casts her in a prominent role as the screen "mother."

The millions who remember Mary Carr from her interpretations of "mother" roles, will be quick to grasp the fact that "Broadway Broke" affords her another remarkable opportunity. And remembering how capably she handled other roles, it follows that they will expect no less in this instance. The producers express complete satisfaction with the picture which has been given unqualified praise by all who have seen it at private exhibitions.

Percy Marmont, the lovable Mark Sabre of "If Winter Comes" from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, has a sympathetic part in "Broadway Broke." He portrays Tom Kerrigan, one time leading man for Nellie Wayne, the down and out actress, played by Mary Carr.

A picture of the throbbing life of Broadway in the days when the "roaring forties" roared, "Broadway Broke" introduces characterizations of P. T. Barnum, greatest showman of them all, played by Maclyn Arbuckle; Mark Twain, of the shaggy hair and big heart, presented by Leslie King; General U. S. Grant, with the inevitable cigar, played by Albert Phillips; Augustin Daly, brought to screen life by Frederick Burton.

J. Searle Dawley, who directed, is known as a pioneer director, having forsaken the legitimate stage almost with the inception of motion pictures. Accompanying the release of "Broadway Broke" is one of the most complete lists of accessories ever compiled. Elaborate posters and window cards tell the story in most effective art work. The lobby displays are more lavish than usual. The press book is serviceable and complete. A Broadway picture puzzle is one of the novelties among the accessories. There also are a music cue and a trailer gratis.

"Merry Go Round" Will Excel, Says Laemmle Two Warner Films Soon Coming to Broadway

"'Merry Go Round' will break every record for popularity ever established in the film industry," states Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation. He bases his opinion on the unusual booking of the big feature and on the fact it is being rebooked by many exhibitors, although it is still in the first twelve weeks of its run.

Mr. Laemmle compared "Merry Go Round" with "The Storm," another Universal picture, which is boosted as the most widely shown ever released. Today more than 8,000 exhibitors have shown "The Storm" and Universal exchanges report it still is being booked to an appreciable extent. "The Storm" is less than two years old. "Merry Go Round," in its twelfth week after release date, is far ahead of "The Storm" in its bookings, and promises to go far beyond the former picture in the number and extent of its screenings.

"I am satisfied that more exhibitors in the United States and Canada booked and played 'The Storm' than ever played any other picture," said the Universal chief. "But I am dead sure from present indications that even the record set up by 'The Storm' will be shattered by 'Merry Go Round.'"

Warner Brothers have two Broadway premieres early in December. "Tiger Rose" will open at the Rivoli Theatre on December 2 and "Lucretia Lombard" will open at the Strand on December 9. It is said to be quite likely that both of these pictures will be held over, in which case Warner Brothers will have two of their Screen Classics playing first runs on Broadway at the same time.

Director Hugo Riesenfeld of the Rivoli, following a private screening of "Tiger Rose," was lavish in his praise of this production. He was particularly pleased by the brilliant performance given by Lenore Ulric. Mr. Riesenfeld also spoke in highest terms of the direction of Sidney Franklin in this picture.

At the Strand, Joseph Plunkett is very enthusiastic about "Lucretia Lombard," a story of flaming passion, produced by Harry Rapf, in which Kathleen Norris' famous novel of the same title has been adapted to the screen. He believes that this picture will make a tremendous hit with Broadway audiences, and is planning special presentation.

Warner Brothers have adopted a unique method in releasing "Lucretia Lombard." The innovation consists in releasing the picture under two titles and giving exhibitors a choice of either. The original title reads "Lucretia Lombard, a story of flaming passion." The extra title reads, "Flaming Passion, from the novel, 'Lucretia Lombard.'" Exhibitors can thus decide which title will make the greater appeal in their respective towns and use that one.

"Lucretia Lombard" was directed by Jack Conway and features Irene Rich and Monte Blue. The supporting cast includes Marc McDermott, Norma Shearer, Alec B. Francis, John Roche and others.

"Ponjola" Had Good Run in Manhattan

"Ponjola," Sam Rork's picturization of Cynthia Stockley's novel, which is a current First National release, finished its run at the New York Strand on November 24 after a week of big business. The picture duplicated the success it achieved when it played in San Francisco, Detroit, Chicago and Los Angeles.

The New York Mail called the picture "a drama that reaches the heights of emotional intensity in a logical manner." New York Times: "The story is equipped with good suspense and is compelling. Anna Q. Nilsson is especially effective when she covers her masquerading clothes with a cape taken from another woman in order to make Druro think that Gay Lypiatt still loves him."

The Evening Telegram: "Director Donald Crisp has drawn every ounce of entertainment out of the original story, and has even supplemented it with some valuable touches of his own. With Miss Nilsson is presented a fine cast." The Sun and Globe: "'Ponjola' packed the house at the Strand yesterday with one of the largest crowds we have seen there."

World Premiere of "The Wanters"

The Garden Theatre in Paterson, N. J., was the scene of the world's premiere of "The Wanters," John M. Stahl's latest production for First National distribution, recently. Like its predecessor, "The Dangerous Age," this picture brought unprecedented crowds to the Garden. It features Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis.

New Company to Star Baby Priscilla Moran

Priscilla Moran Productions were incorporated this week to star Priscilla Moran, the five-year-old child actress, who became nationally known over a year ago when Jackie Coogan's parents took her to live with them upon the death of her mother and illness of her father. She was not legally adopted and is now with her father.

A year's lease for stage and office space has been signed with the Hollywood Studios and a complete new unit building is being erected for the offices.

Millarde Webb, for the past five years associated with Sidney Franklin as co-director and production manager, is president of the new company and will direct the productions. Leo Moran, the child's father, is vice-president. Ollie May Baker, with Charles Chaplin and Jackie Coogan for past four years as financial secretary, is secretary and business manager.

Feature length pictures are planned to star the little girl.

As Accuracy Measure, Carroll Enlists Denver's Historians

Frank J. Carroll, who is now in Denver, Colorado, making preparations for the production of "The Birth of the West" has enlisted the aid and support of numerous prominent Denver citizens and authorities on pioneer days in the West.

Officials of the Colorado library and the state historical societies are working closely with the picture producer to insure the utmost accuracy in depiction of details in connection with the story. "The Birth of the West" is the initial production of the Colorado Motion Picture Corporation and the sponsors declare it their intention to see that the picture is a true record of pioneer history aside from its value as picture entertainment.

Discussing the details of preparation in connection with the picture Mr. Carroll said:

"It is one thing to make what the industry calls a 'Western' production on a studio lot and with reckless disregard of accuracy, and another thing to stage a picture that you will not be ashamed to show to men who really know the birth days of their great country.

"And it is the latter kind that the present day demands. The time is past when an author or director can take any liberties he desires with history. The class of patrons and critics attending the picture theatre of today make exacting demands—and they must be met.

"That is the public's side. For another, think of the money we spend nowadays compared with only four and five years ago.

Well, when you get into hundreds of thousand of dollars isn't it only good sense to see that the job is done right? It is hard, work digging into history, hunting up individuals who have a first hand memory of the early days, searching for properties that have actually played a part in such action as your story depicts—but it is all worth it.

"I will say it is quite a bit different from the old days though. Then, as soon as we had a story we could start to work. But what a difference now. Here I have spent weeks in research and travel solely on the task of preparation. But the real difference is that when we are ready to start under this method we will do it right. And that is the chief requisite."

First National Annual Sales Drive Set for All January

Under the guiding hand of E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will start its annual sales drive on the first day of the New Year. The entire month of January will be devoted to the campaign and it is planned to make "First National Month" of 1924 the biggest and most effective sales effort ever conducted by the company.

"For a prosperous New Year book First National first" is the slogan which will prevail throughout the industry during the month of January. Preparations for the campaign have been in progress over a period of many weeks, special accessories including slides, banners and one-sheets are ready, and a publicity drive has been waged through the photoplay columns of the leading newspapers.

"First National Month" will present to the industry five new First National pictures. They are: "Boy of Mine," A. K. McDonald production from the story by Booth Tarkington; "Black Oxen," Frank Lloyd's production of Gertrude Atherton's novel, featuring Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle; "The Song of Love," the newest Norma Talmadge picture; "The Eternal City," Samuel Goldwyn's independently produced picture of the Sir Hall Caine novel, directed by George Fitzmaurice with a featured cast; and "The Swamp Angel," presenting Colleen Moore.

Although only the opening guns of the drive have sounded over the industry's horizon, First National franchise holders are responding. Play dates on all these five pictures are pouring in and it is probable that each of the five will set unusual records in the number of simultaneous play dates throughout the country.

"Mailman" Given Gala Los Angeles Premiere

Emory Johnson's production, "The Mailman," dramatizing the lives of United States postal workers and projecting one of the biggest exploitation tie-ups in the annals of the film industry, had its world's premiere Saturday, November 17, at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles.

The opening was a gala occasion, the mail workers' band of sixty pieces serenading the postmaster of the city, P. P. O'Brien, and other notables, including Mayor Cryer and Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O., who was among the interested spectators.

In connection with the premiere, a monster radio jollification was held by Los Angeles mail workers at the powerful broadcasting plant of the Los Angeles Times. Two million listeners scattered throughout the country heard the speeches of many prominent postal workers, as well as songs sung by postal employes and brief talks by Ralph Lewis, Johnnie Walker, Dave Kirby and others of the "Mailman" cast.

The postal workers of Los Angeles joined with F. B. O. and the West Coast theatres in making the opening of "The Mailman" a civic event of high importance.

Renews Contract

Olga Printzlau has renewed her contract with B. P. Schulberg to write screen adaptations exclusively for Preferred Pictures. She is now working on Edwin Balmer's story, "The Breath of Scandal," and will later do the script for several of the biggest stories on Preferred's program. Miss Printzlau has held a place of prominence among the best known screen writers since her first affiliation with William de Mille whose productions she adapted for several years. Her latest task for the Schulberg organization has been the screen version of Rida Johnson Young's play, "Maytime."

Starts on Tour of Inspection

Henry Ginsberg, general sales manager for Preferred Pictures Corporation, has left New York on a tour that will take him to each of the twenty-eight Preferred exchanges in the United States.

The object of Mr. Ginsberg's trip is to aid the exchanges and salesmen in the sales and exploitation drive that Preferred is putting back of "The Virginian" and "Maytime," both of which are just being released. While in Los Angeles, Mr. Ginsberg will confer with B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures, regarding the new schedule for the coming year.

Music and "Maytime"

Preferred Pictures Corporation has arranged a profitable song tie-up for exhibitors who will book Gasnier's production, "Maytime." G. Schirmer, Inc., publishers of the music score that accompanied the stage presentation of Rida Johnson Young's play, have gotten out a special photoplay edition of the "Sweetheart" song.

This new edition, carrying illustrations from the film production, is designed for special music store tie-ups to be made in co-operation with Schirmer's twenty-two branch offices.

To Direct Again

Al Ray, cousin of Charles Ray, who has been in the scenario department of the Jack White-Mermaid forces, will do his first directing in four years when he starts production on Cameo Comedies, for release through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Wildman Made Head

Truly B. Wildman, Kansas City branch manager of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, was recently elected president of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade.

"Long Live the King" Has Unique Showing

In the little town of Ojai, nestling in the wooded hills of Ventura County in Southern California, Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," had a unique presentation last week.

Without the blare of the press agents' trumpets and with only gratitude, good will and prayers flowing into the Coogan coffers, the little Metro star appeared in person at the little village theatre and greeted the favored audience, while his picture was thrown on the screen.

It happens that Father John Moclair, who is stationed at Ojai, is a life long friend of Jack Coogan, Senior. The latter took this opportunity to show his respect and esteem for Father Moclair, a man of exceptional abilities and opportunities, who nevertheless chooses to stick to the little parish of Ojai. The proceeds of the sale of seats went without deduction of any expenses whatsoever to the needs of the Ojai parish. With Thanksgiving and Christmas rapidly approaching, it is hard to think of any greater gift that could be rendered in behalf of Jackie than the presentation of "Long Live the King" and his personal appearance which at once delighted and rendered practical aid.

"Long Live the King" will be released November 26.

Three New Goldwyns Due for Production

With the announcement that Rupert Hughes, author-director, had completed the continuity on his next picture-story, and would begin work upon it as soon as his cast is selected, Abraham Lehr, vice-president of the Goldwyn Company, spiked rumors that his studio would join the general shut-down. Hughes will film an original screen story, written and adapted by himself, to be called "True Steel." He now is considering players. Hughes recently completed editing of his last picture, to be released in the near future under the title, "Reno." It is a study of the divorce problems in America, produced on an elaborate scale with an all-star cast.

Victor Seastrom, Swedish director, who recently made his first picture in America for Goldwyn, also is preparing a story for the screen and will begin work as soon as the continuity is finished.

Two companies now are working for Goldwyn, one headed by Alan Crossland, filming Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," the others under the direction of Emmett Flynn, making "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model."

Still a third Goldwyn unit is to begin production in the near future, when June Mathis and Charles Brabin start "Ben-Hur," the immortal Lew Wallace story, which he will make in Italy. The director is now in Italy with his technical staff, and Miss Mathis will leave soon.

Erich von Stroheim's "Greed," from Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," is being titled, while Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," King Vidor's "Wild Oranges," from Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, and Rupert Hughes' "Reno" are completed and awaiting release.

"The Virginian" Scores Triumph on West Coast

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred picture, "The Virginian," has just closed two more successful first run engagements, at the Granada in San Francisco and at the Colorado in Denver. The West Coast premiere at the Granada brought tremendous business to that house, according to telegraphic word received from the manager. In Denver, "The Virginian" set a new box-office record for the Colorado Theatre. Moreover, the local press proclaimed it as one of the thoroughly worth while pictures of the season.

The Denver Post said: "It has plenty of blood and thunder to keep the most blasé theatregoer breathing hard, yet the story is told without unnecessary posturing and gives the effect of being a true picture of the old hair-raising days. Has abundant humor and a love story which gives relief whenever the excitement threatens to come in too big doses."

The Denver Times commented: "The plot is along the lines of the typical western picture but the directing and acting are both on a high level. Excitement prevails but there is an entertaining love story in which Kenneth Harlan and Florence Vidor are the principals."

Chicago Critics Laud Big Universal Picture

Chicago film critics, recently reviewing the Chicago opening of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in the Harris Theatre, waxed as enthusiastic over the big Universal spectacle drama as their New York brethren. They unite in characterizing the picture as a "screen masterpiece" and Chaney's work as the "greatest screen characterization ever done."

The following excerpts from Chicago reviews indicate the high praise meted out to the big Victor Hugo adaptation. The Chicago Evening American said: "Chaney has given a truly marvelous characterization, which, if not imperishable, is astonishingly durable. Director Wallace Worsley has done a rare piece of work. 'The Hunchback' is a photo-drama masterpiece."

The Chicago Daily Journal, wrote as follows: "The claims for greatness lie in the hands of Lon Chaney, whose mind must surely have borne a spectre for his work as the hunchback. With Rabelaisian power, he makes a study of the grotesque, which is the greatest the screen has given."

The Journal of Commerce said: "Here is a picture that is worthy of minute attention, for it has been screened so carefully, it measures up so fully to one's expectations, that it comes near occupying a place apart."

The Chicago Evening Post, also hailed the picture as remarkable, in the following terms: "One more has been added to the truly great gigantic spectacular productions with the completing of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' Victor Hugo's pulsating story has been vividly transplanted to the screen in a lavish manner which will call forth your whole hearted admiration even while you shudder."

"Innocence" Has Been Completed by C. B. C.

Production has been completed by Harry Cohn, producer for C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, of that company's newest feature, "Innocence," in which Anna Q. Nilsson heads an all-star cast, it is announced this week.

The production is a picturization of Lewis Allen Browne's famous magazine story, "Circumstances Alter Divorce Cases." Edward J. LeSaint, who directed many other C. B. C. successes, directed "Innocence" also.

The story is said to be especially timely in that it embodies in the working out of its theme a strong plea against conviction on circumstantial evidence—a woman's honor and future happiness being involved. It is said to have aroused much enthusiasm at a special showing on the Coast to which were invited many well known lawyers and several prominent judges.

Harry Cohn expresses his opinion that it is the biggest C. B. C. production yet made. Earl Foxe, Wilfred Lucas, Marion Harlan, Freeman Wood, Kate Lester, William Scott, Jessie Arnold and Vera Lewis are in the cast which supports Anna Q. Nilsson.

Davies Film Grosses $123,110 at Capitol

The engagement of Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" was brought to a close last Saturday night at the Capitol Theatre, New York, after two weeks of the most sensational success that has been recorded in the history of that theatre. During its first two weeks at popular prices, it has attracted 202,682 persons, who paid $123,110 to see it.

When it is considered that "Little Old New York" earlier in the season had a run of twelve capacity weeks at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, the tremendous appeal that the picture has for New Yorkers is a fact of which the Cosmopolitan Corporation may well be proud.

"Little Old New York" is now in its thirteenth week at the Empire Theatre, London. It is in its seventh crowded week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago. Reports from the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, where it opened last Saturday, state that house records were broken there Saturday and Sunday. In its first week at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, it established records in receipts and attendance.

Indefinite engagements started this week in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Milwaukee, Detroit, St. Louis and Seattle.

Big Exploitation Force Behind "Big Brother"

When Allan Dwan's Paramount production, "Big Brother," which was adapted from Rex Beach's story and features Tom Moore, Edith Roberts and Raymond Hatton, reaches the screens of the country the latter part of December, it will have behind it as a mighty exploitation force the combined power of all the organizations, both national and local, allied with the Big Brother Movement.

This work involves the co-operation of local organizations of the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Civil tan Clubs; Elks, Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A., B'nai B'rith, etc., to the number of more than four thousand, and the promotion of Big Brother Nights in every community where the picture is shown.

This is made possible by the active and enthusiastic co-operation of the Big Brother Movement, Inc., through its secretary, Rowland C. Sheldon, who is now at work lining up the 143 local Big Brother committees in the United States and Canada which are directly allied with the central organization.

Universal Xmas Special Includes Six Good Ones

Universal is putting out six pictures during December, two of which are Universal Jewel productions.

In the order of their release they are: "The Darling of New York," a Universal Jewel action drama in which Baby Peggy is starred; "The Near Lady," a comedy starring Gladys Walton; "White Tiger," Priscilla Dean's latest Jewel production; "The Red Warning," a Jack Hoxie picture; "His Mystery Girl," starring Herbert Rawlinson, and "Pure Grit," featuring Roy Stewart.

"The Darling of New York" is Baby Peggy's first feature length picture. It is said to be one of her best bets and shows her in a role entirely new to that to which she has been accustomed.

"Hunchback" Makes Big Hit in London

Reports to the Universal home office from London indicate that "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has taken London by storm, and is hailed by critics and public in the British metropolis as a great picture and worthy of hearty support. It opened last week.

The London presentation was in the Empire Theatre, which Universal obtained for a run of considerable duration. The opening, according to cablegrams, was one of the most outstanding premieres ever held in Great Britain. The first night audience was composed mostly of distinguished Britishers, including an unusual representation from royal circles, and many from the nobility.

The theatre was packed for the opening. The presentation followed along the lines set by the world's premiere in the Astor Theatre, New York City. Marc Lachmann, Universal exploiteer, went from New York to London especially to present "The Hunchback."

Following the initial screening, the London first-nighters gave the picture a remarkable ovation.

Metro Will Release "Fashion Row" Dec. 3

Mae Murray's newest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," will be released December 3. Arrangements are now under way to give it an elaborate Broadway presentation after which it will have a general release throughout the country.

"Fashion Row" reveals a wealth of striking gowns, some of which, it is said, were imported especially for this production from the shops of Paris and others were made after designs and sketches made by Miss Murray. The picture will also reveal a series of dances.

"Fashion Row" was written for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin. It was photographed by Oliver Marsh. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman, general manager.

Mrs. Crawford Opens Casting Studios

Mrs. O. T. Crawford, wife of the late O. T. Crawford, St. Louis theatrical magnate, has opened the United Casting Studios at 262 West 99th street, New York City, which is only a temporary address. "Shadows of Paris" Is Completed

"Shadows of Paris," Pola Negri's fourth American picture, has been completed at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. Herbert Brenon, who produced the picture, began work September 20 and finished in eight weeks, which was the exact scheduled time.

Warners Reunited as Jack Arrives in East

Jack L. Warner reached New York this week from the West Coast studios, bringing with him Ernst Lubitsch, the famous producer; his wife, Eric Locke; Hans Kraely, special writer, and Frank Cassidy, exploitation expert. Mr. Warner brought with him several important prints to be released on Broadway in the near future.

His arrival here constitutes the first reunion of the four Warner Brothers in several years, as one or two members of the firm have generally remained on the West Coast, in charge of production, while the others stayed in the East. His visit is expected to be of short duration and several pressing production problems once disposed of, and a conference held on new material which the Warners are considering, he will return to his post as production manager of the West Coast studios.

Mr. Cassidy is remembered for his feat in piloting the Warner truck, advertising the Seven Classics for 1922-23, on its transcontinental trip from New York to Hollywood, when he visited exhibitors and effected excellent publicity. He will join the Warners' eastern publicity department.

"The Arizona Express" Started on the Coast

The days of the Pony Express, early Indian uprisings and the building of the first railroad across the United States to the Pacific Coast form the colorful historical background for Lincoln J. Carter's famous melodrama, "The Arizona Express," which has just been started at the William Fox West Coast Studios. Carter himself who has been called the "father of the melodrama" in America, is assisting in transferring his stage success to the screen.

Tom Buckingham is directing the screen version of "The Arizona Express." The following cast has been selected to portray the characters who always used to bring the gallery gods to their feet in the days of the play's stage career: Pauline Starke, Evelyn Brent, Anne Cornwall, Harold Goodwyn, David Butler, Francis MacDonald, Frank Beal and William Humphrey.

Burton King Starts Production

With a production now being released by the Film Booking Offices under the title of "The Fair Cheat," starring Dorothy MacKaill, Edmund Breese and Wilfred Lytell, Burton King announces this week that work will be started on his next series of eight pictures of feature length December 1.

The title of the first production has not been announced but the theme deals with blood transfusion and has a country doctor as its principal character. The technical scenes dealing with the actual transfusion will be made under the supervision of the Rockefeller Institute.

Barthelme Picture Progressing

The construction of the big cottage set in John S. Robertson's production of "The Enchanted Cottage," starring Richard Barthelme, was completed at Inspiration Studio in Fort Lee, last week.

Work on the picture, which is a First National release, is progressing rapidly and it is expected that the film will be completed by the first of the year.

Timely News Story Boosts Picture

The Ashland Theatre at Ashland, Oregon, took advantage of a news story and booked "Loyal Lives," the Whitman Bennett production based on the life of United States post office employes. A mail train was held up in the Siskiyou Mountains south of Ashland.

The newspaper reports showed the local robbery to be almost identical in method with that employed in the picture, which was shown while the news of the hold-up was still fresh in the public mind. The post office authorities and mail carriers co-operated in exploiting the picture.

Block Resigns from Famous Players

Ralph Block, former New York dramatic critic, has resigned his position as editor and supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky. Block is at present negotiating with a prominent producer to direct a number of feature productions.

Prior to his association with Famous Players, Block was in turn director of publicity and editorial director for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Considering Two Witwer Series

Two Witwer series are under consideration for early filming by Mal St. Clair, director, who recently rejoined the F. B. O. production forces after a brief excursion into features with Wesley Barry.

One series is "Alex the Great." The other is "The Telephone Girl."

Begins Tenth Year as Art Department Head

Vincent Trotta, pioneer art manager of the motion picture industry, has just entered upon his tenth year as head of the art department of Paramount. One of the real veterans of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, Mr. Trotta began his term of continuous service even before the formation of that company, for it was with the old Paramount Pictures Corporation that he first assumed the duties of his present position, when the Paramount headquarters were in the World Tower building in West 40th street.

A year previous to his association with Paramount Mr. Trotta had organized for the Gaumont Company the first art department in the industry. His work with Gaumont was largely confined to posters. His connection with Paramount, where he assumed charge of all the art work on the trade and newspaper advertising, heralds, booklets and other advertising accessories, marked the beginning of the use of the modern art lay-outs in motion picture advertising and he was also one of the pioneers in the creation of colored inserts in trade paper advertising.

Mr. Trotta's department is not only said to be the largest in the motion picture industry but it is one of the largest in any line of commercial business outside the art specialty houses and some of the leading advertising agencies and engraving concerns. An aggregate of between seventy-five and one hundred men have worked under his direct supervision since the department was organized and the personnel averages between ten and fifteen artists, including apprentices. All of the work is supervised by Mr. Trotta himself and many graduates of the so-called Trotta school are now in charge of art departments of motion picture companies and in other branches of the business.

The Paramount advertising department's colored inserts on the special seasonal announcements in the trade papers have long been looked upon as models of advertising art and never fail to draw favorable editorial comment, not only in the picture trade publications themselves but in the advertising and printing trade journals. The same is true of the direct-by-mail booklets, one of which issued in connection with the Paramount "First Forty-one" and entitled "Your Contract for Paramount Pictures," won second prize against hundreds of entries in a contest at the International Advertising Exposition at Springfield, Mass., for the best piece of direct-by-mail advertising submitted.

Goldwyn Spectacle Goes Into Capitol

Goldwyn's Emmett Flynn production, "In the Palace of the King," a dramatic motion picture spectacle directed by Emmett Flynn and based upon F. Marion Crawford's popular novel, will be screened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, next week. This picture is Goldwyn's biggest contribution to the costume-spectacle films. In the beauty of settings and photography and excellence of acting and directing it ranks among the year's best offerings.

June Mathis made the adaptation and has kept the spectacular subservient to the very human and highly emotional drama in which the King of Spain, his brother, one of his generals and the latter's two daughters are the principal actors. Filming this story was a tremendous and costly undertaking, it is stated, involving the construction of a palace 280 feet high and 300 feet long and one of the greatest sets yet constructed for motion pictures.

Continues Run

The Preferred picture, "The Virginian," continues its successful run. Max Allen, manager of the Allen Theatre, Windsor, Ontario, wired B. P. Schulberg: "Absolutely broke all records."

Blanche Sweet heads the cast as Dolores and others are Edmund Lowe, Pauline Starke, Sam de Grasse, Hobart Bosworth, Aileen Pringle, William V. Mong and Lucient Littlefield.

"Call of the Wild" Cut to Six Reels

In line with his recent pronouncement in favor of a maximum of six reels for feature productions, Hal Roach has cut "The Call of the Wild" from seven to six reels.

This production was adapted from Jack London's famous dog story of the same title and made under the direction of Fred Jackman. The picture was released by Pathe on September 23 and has since been played by leading first-run houses throughout the country.

Will Film "The Yoke"

Announcement comes from the Warner Brothers home office that screen rights have been procured for "The Yoke," Hubert Wales' novel.

This story is to be adapted to the screen by Warner scenarists for production by Harry Rapf.

Fox Releases for the Week of December 2

"The Net," the latest William Fox special production, two star series pictures and one Sunshine Comedy are announced for release the week of December 2 by Fox Film Corporation. "Johnny's Swordfish," an Educational Entertainment, will be released December 9.

"The Net" is an emotional drama of mystery and thrills adapted from the book and play by Maravene Thompson. J. Gordon Edwards directed. Barbara Castleon, Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe are the three principals in the notable cast.

"Cupid's Fireman" is the Charles Jones feature on this week's release. It is adapted from the Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," and presents Jones in a series of dramatic situations behind the footlights. William Wellman directed the picture.

Life in the interesting and dramatic days of 1849 in the South and West is pictured in Dustin Farnum's latest starring picture, "Kentucky Days." Margaret Fielding, who plays Mabel in "If Winter Comes," Bruce Gordon and William DeVault are the principals in the cast.

The Sunshine Comedy on this week's release is "The Income Tax Collector."

Pickford—Fairbanks Studios Hum with Work

Great activity is going on at the Pickford-Fairbanks and Chaplin studios.

Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," is reported as being nearly one-half under way, while Marshal Neilan, the director, is making great progress on the exterior scenes surrounding Haddon Hall.

Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad" is more than three-fourth completed. The biggest mob scenes are scheduled for shooting this week. "The Thief of Bagdad," Mr. Fairbanks asserts, will show some of his greatest screen work, both dramatically as well as from the athletic standpoint.

Charles Chaplin, the creator of "A Woman of Paris," has gone into seclusion and is preparing the story for his next picture which, his associates say, will be a rip-snorting comedy of possibly not more than three reels.

Kiwanis Club Endorses "Michael O'Halloran"

That the Kiwanis Club endorsement of "Michael O'Halloran," the screen version of Gene Stratton-Porter's popular novel, is proving a boon to exhibitors, is evidenced by the marked increase in bookings on this picture reported by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. G. A. Falkner, branch manager for Hodkinson at Washington, D. C., reports private advance reviews of "Michael O'Halloran" by the Kiwanis Club of Richmond, Va., the Kiwanis Club of Norfolk, Va., and the Baltimore, Md., Kiwanis Club. The Columbus, Ohio, Kiwanis Club has also asked permission to review "Michael O'Halloran" with the view of co-operating with the exhibitor in his showing at Columbus. From the Lufkin Chamber of Commerce, Lufkin, Texas, comes a request to Hodkinson that "Michael O'Halloran" be given a special showing at the first-run house there. Reports from the Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Ill., state that the Quincy Kiwanis Club will co-operate with the Orpheum in its showing of the picture.

Many new exploitation aids are now in course of preparation by Hodkinson on "Michael O'Halloran," among them a special broadside showing the various Kiwanis tie-ups now in operation, and containing many novel and attractive exploitation stunts. These will be available for the exhibitor at an early date.

"Grit" Has Premiere at Greenwich, Conn.

Crowds which taxed the capacity of the Greenwich, Conn., theatre at three performances on Wednesday, witnessed the world premiere presentation of the Film Guild feature production, "Grit," starring Glen Hunter, scheduled for early January release through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Grit" is from an original screen story by F. Scott Fitzgerald. Clara Bow, Osgood Perkins, Dore Davidson are also members of the cast.

"Grit" is the fourth of the Film Guild productions with Glenn Hunter to be distributed through Hodkinson.

Hodkinson to Distribute Four Kirkwood—Lila Lee Features

What is regarded in film circles as one of the most important feature distribution contracts entered into in many months, is the announcement from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that it has just closed with a producing unit operating at the Thomas H. Ince studios, for four super-features, co-starring James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, two of screendom's most popular favorites.

The first of these features, bearing the title of "The Painted Woman," has been virtually completed, and will be ready for pre-showing shortly after the first of the year.

James Kirkwood and Lila Lee each has won individual fame in the field of the silent drama.

The popularity of James Kirkwood, one of the outstanding leading men of the screen, has been growing with leaps and bounds, and has been made more secure by his two latest pictures, "Human Wreckage" and "Ponjola," his current feature now playing the leading first run theatres. Mr. Kirkwood has recently played in productions of the following companies: Goldwyn, Fox, Famous Players and Associated First National. Some of his best known productions include "The Struggle Everlasting," "In the Heart of a Fool," "The Scoffer," "Man—Woman—Marriage," and "Bob Hampt of Placer."

In addition to his prestige as a screen luminary, James Kirkwood was one of the foremost actors of the legitimate stage, with which he was identified for upwards of eighteen years. His most recent triumph was with Channing Pollock's much-talked-of play, "The Fool."

Lila Lee, until recently a Paramount star, first came into the public eye at the age of ten, when as "Cuddles" she made her stage debut in a Gus Edwards Revue. Joining Famous Players, her initial vehicle was "A Daughter of the Wolf." Her reputation grew rapidly and her work drew much favorable comment in such productions as "Male and Female," "The Prince Chap," "Heart of Youth," "Midsummer Madness," "The Charm School," "The Easy Road" and "Dollar-a-Year Man." For some time she was leading woman for Thomas Meighan, their last productions being "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Homeward Bound" and "Woman-Proof," the latter just recently released. She played the leading female part opposite Rodolph Valentino in Blasco Ibanez's production of "Blood and Sand."

"The Kirkwood-Lee co-star productions will be made at the Thos. H. Ince studios in Culver City, California, and will be super-features in the fullest sense of the word," W. W. Hodkinson states. "These features, following our recent announcement of the Harry Carey series, now in production, is an earnest indication to the trade of our intention to furnish the exhibitors with worth-while pictures from the best independent sources during the coming year."

New Picture Titled "Boy of Mine"

The new Booth Tarkington story, produced by J. K. McDonald for First National distribution, will be issued under the title of "Boy of Mine." The picture has had two working titles, "Old Fathers and Young Sons" and "Misunderstood."

McDonald is the producer of "Penrod and Sam," the First National Picture which created a sensation when released several months ago.

Jones in New Film

"Not a Drum Was Heard," a story by Ben Ames Williams, has been selected as the next Fox vehicle for Charles Jones. William Wellman is directing.

Franklin Seeking Big Film Plots

Producer-Director Sidney Franklin is making the rounds of New York for literary material for his forthcoming productions under the Warner Brothers banner. Scenarist Paul Bern accompanies Mr. Franklin and both are looking over all of the available dramatic material along Broadway.

It is understood that a number of popular plays and stories have been purchased, but no definite announcements can be made yet in this regard until matters pertaining to copyrights can be settled.

Callaghan-Amsterdam Transaction

Andrew J. Callaghan, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, closed a deal with Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, for the Fred Thomson series of six Western pictures for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

The deal includes that part of Pennsylvania east of and not including counties of Potter, Clinton, Center, Mifflin, Huntington and Fulton; that part of New Jersey south of and including Burlington and Ocean counties and city of Trenton in Mercer County; entire State of Delaware.

Jackie Coogan Fills Holiday Need

That First National's Jackie Coogan pictures are perennial holiday favorites among exhibitors and public is again proved by the requests for such productions as "Oliver Twist," "My Boy," "Trouble," "Daddy" and his latest release, "Circus Days," for bookings during the forthcoming Christmas season.

According to First National exchanges, exhibitors find that the holiday period, primarily belonging to the children, just as surely belongs to the children's favorite screen player.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

“Secrets of Life” Given Extensive Article in Scientific Magazine

Popular Science Monthly, a magazine which publishes news regarding the latest scientific inventions and other items of scientific nature written in non-scientific language, and which is read by over a million people, has devoted two pages of reading matter and photographs to a write-up on the Louis Tolhurst microscopic camera and cool light process of photography and to the “Secrets of Life” series of microscopic subjects released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

This closely follows a three-page article on these interesting subjects published in the December issue of the Motion Picture Magazine, one of the largest and most popular of the “fan” publications and which has a tremendous national circulation.

Editors of large newspapers and magazines are giving exceptional publicity to this series of pictures, hailing them as something new to the screen, and as the pioneers in a new land of promise for the motion picture theatre-goer.

Previous attempts to market subjects of a scientific nature have failed, mainly because the subjects lacked that human interest quality which is so necessary to carry the appeal to picture audiences. It is because the “Secrets of Life” series is built primarily to entertain and to instruct in the form of entertainment, that these pictures have met with success both in theatres and in the public prints.

The series has not only gained the hearty endorsement of scientists at the American Museum of Natural History as well as prominent educators throughout the country, but also has won the approval and recommendation of the owners of large representative theatres playing the series.

Will Rogers in “Uncensored Movies” Prominent on Pathe’s Dec. 9 List

Prominent in the list of short subjects arranged for release by Pathe, the week of December 9, is “Uncensored Movies,” the third of a series of two-reel comedies starring Will Rogers, produced by Hal Roach.

Once again Will Rogers offers to the screen audiences a delightful treat of original humor and wit. In this subject, Rogers engages in a line of entertainment for which he has already become famous on the stage. In his own inimitable way the comedian caricatures such well-known players as “Bill” Hart, Tom Mix and Rudolph Valentino. There are satirical allusions, charming and un-offensive in force, to the prowess of DeMille, Griffith and Fairbanks in their respective fields; and also some amusing sidelights on that necessary ingredient to every screen success—the human touch. In “Uncensored Movies,” Pathe promises an attraction of a decidedly novel and distinctive character.

“Why Elephants Leave Home” is a two-reel actionful adventure picture, depicting for the first time on the screen the perils and thrills experienced in the hunting, capturing and training of wild elephants.

“The Lava Crusher” is the title of Episode No. 5 of “Ruth of the Range,” Ruth Roland’s serial for Pathe.

Speed-up action, peppered with humor, makes “Scorching Sands,” featuring Stan Laurel, one of the funniest of this Hal Roach series of one-reel laugh-provokers.

The current issue of Aesop’s Film Fables series illustrates in a decidedly funny way how “The Best Man Wins.”

Mark of Approval

Pointing to it as a distinctive mark of approval, Pathe announces that four series of “Our Gang” comedies, beginning with “Derby Day,” have been booked by the Fenway Theatre in Boston. The Fenway is a first-run house and has been designated as a Paramount demonstration theatre in Boston. It is managed by S. Barrett McCormick, one of the country’s leading showmen.

Review Board Praises “Secrets of Life”

The highest mark of approval has been placed upon Educational’s new “Secrets of Life” series by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures in the selection of one of these single reel pictures for showing at the Town Hall, New York City, as an Exceptional Picture.

“The Spider,” the third release in this series of microscopic subjects, produced by Principal Pictures Corporation with the new process perfected by Louis H. Tolhurst, was selected by the National Board to run in conjunction with “Anna Christie” at the showing given by the National Board Wednesday, November 28, before a selected audience.

Universal to Release Four Century Comedies in December

With four Century Comedies set for December release by Universal, a most successful year for Stern Brothers’ organization will come to a close.

For December 5th Jack Earle’s latest subject, “A Corn Fed Sleuth,” will be released to theatres all over the country.

December 12th has been designated as the date of release for “My Pal,” a comedy starring Pal the dog.

“Buckin’ the Line,” with Buddy Messinger, will be released nationally on the 19th of December. This is an ideal subject for this month, since it deals generally with football as played by the back-yard kids. A juvenile Army and Navy game is one of the outstanding features of this film.

“You’re Next” Is Latest Century

Al Herman’s latest opus for Century Film Corporation, has been turned over to Universal for a release date. Instead of “Next Please,” which was the original title of the story by David Bader, publicity representative of Stern Brothers, the comedy has been called “You’re Next.”

The action of the story is unusual. In a fight to win the same girl, one of the rivals opens an outdoor barber shop.

The story is carried to a fast and furious finish by Mr. Herman. Henry Murdock, William Irving and Helen Stocking, as well as Joe Bonner and Bernard Hyman, make up a cast of popular Century comedians.

“Go West” at Strand

Following the showing of “The Knockout” two weeks ago at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, another of the Hal Roach series of “Dippy Doo Dad” single-reel comedies for Pathe release was presented this week at the big Broadway house. The latest of this series of clever comedies with all-animal casts to be shown at the Strand is “Go West.”

McCoy to Co-Star

Harry McCoy, whose work in Century Comedies has created considerable interest, has been elevated to co-stardom and with the youthful giant star, Jack Earle, will be featured as a team in six Century comedies. McCoy is a veteran of the screen, having appeared with Mack Sennett even before Chaplin.

Unique Distinction

At the request of the director of the National Father and Son movement, the National Committee for Better Films has drawn up a list of pictures that may be used in connection with National Father and Son Week. The Educational-Christie comedy, “Be Yourself,” is said to be the only two-reel subject included in the list.

Two Titles Changed

Two title changes are announced by Century Comedies, the Buddy Messinger comedy, “Boys Will Be Boys,” has been changed to “The Caddy” and “Own a Home,” featuring Harry Sweet and the Follies Girls, will be known as “The Tourists.”

Earle Film Finished

Century announces completion of “Keep Moving,” starring Jack Earle, assisted by Harry McCoy and a cast of well-known players.

Big Circuit Books Rogers Series

West Coast Theatres Circuit has contracted for the entire series of two-reel Pathe comedies starring Will Rogers, for showing in over twenty cities in Southern California including Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and San Diego. The series includes thirteen subjects to be released one every four weeks, beginning with “Just Passin’ Through,” released October 14.

Books Another

Following the announcement that the new Paramount demonstration theatre in Boston has booked Pathe's "Our Gang" comedy series, comes word that the Fenway adds further to its program of Pathe bookings by signing up the Will Rogers comedy attraction, titled "Uncensored Movies."

Lewis Buys His Own Own Stories

Ralph Lewis, the F. B. O. star, has secured two stories for the first of his new series of Ralph Lewis productions.

Charles Kenyon made the adaptation, the title of which has not been decided upon.

"The Ghost City"

Universal Serial Features Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Two episodes of Universal's newest serial, "The Ghost City," shown for review indicate that it has a story of average serial strength with unusually thrilling and well-handled climaxes. It is a "western" with Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris in the featured roles and the opening chapters indicate that the story deals with a plot of a certain unknown clique to obtain money under threat of draining a reservoir on which the village depends.

Chapter one, "The Thundering Herd," gets away from what appears to be the main theme and deals with the attempt of the heroine to reach the scene of action in time to prevent foreclosure of a mortgage on her father's ranch. This introduces some good aeroplane scenes and ends with an exceptional thrill where a herd of cattle stampedes and the infuriated animals seem to pass directly over the hero and heroine and also the camera.

In the second chapter, "The Bulldogger," the reservoir theme again comes to the fore and the action introduces a final thrill where the villain, seizing important records, escapes on a motorcycle, followed by the hero on horseback. The hero jumps onto the machine which plunges over a cliff onto a ledge and thence into the reservoir below. This is an exceptionally well handled scene.

players, there is a competent cast including Al Wilson, a stunt aviator of note.

Judging by the opening episodes, this serial should furnish entirely satisfactory entertainment for the average serial fan.—C. S. S.

"Universities of the World"

(Fox—Educational—One Reel)

Famous universities and colleges from different parts of the world are pictured in this exceptionally interesting group. Oxford, the University of Paris, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Vassar and some of the most celebrated state universities are included. Glimpses of their buildings, campuses and presidents afford entertaining subject matter.—M. K.

"Scorching Sands"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Stan Laurel's adventures on the desert where he is held by a hostile tribe provide a fair measure of fun in this Hal Roach comedy. He saves his head by agreeing to wed a foreign princess without beauty as an asset. But after various escapes he flees with a beautiful tourist, aided by a rather temperamental camel. It should be entertaining to most fans.—M. K.

"The Corn-Fed Sleuth"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Jack Earle, the young Century giant, is featured in this comedy which is built of the familiar idea of a boob detective. The hero, a farm boy, learns by correspondence how to be a detective. Going to the city, he becomes the prey of a gang of crooks who use him to obtain his own brother-in-law's furniture. He succeeds, however, is getting it back. There are some amusing situations and it is a comedy of average audience appeal.—C. S. S.

"A Dark Horse"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Farmer Alfalfa's cider combined with the mule has such a terrific punch that the famous turf champions, dubbed Zev and Papyrus, have no chance after the mule joins the race. It turns out to be a dream but is highly amusing while it lasts. A good representative of Paul Terry's Fable series.—M. K.

"The Great Outdoors"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the snappiest number of the "Spat Family" series yet released. The personalities of the three combatants, the woman, her husband and her brother, are exceptionally well pointed, and the situation, showing them trying to win a wager in the pine woods, where they are to live one week without servants, provides any number of amusing and some hilarious incidents. An excellent choice for any theatre.—M. K.

"Pathe Review No. 48"

(One Reel)

Modern methods of candy-making is a rather tempting study in this review. Other attractions are pictures of the peacock and his family; the grape gardens in Michigan, and tinted views of "The Valley of the Giants," in Crecy, France.—M. K.

"Join the Circus"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

There is plenty of action here, but nothing sufficiently new or clever to distinguish it. Snub Pollard and Paul Parrott are circus performers of the "ham" variety and their acrobatics, riding and chariot racing are a medium for most of the comic effects. The circus scenes have some appeal, but most of the number is ordinary.—M. K.

"Black and Blue"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A plot which is closely adhered to, good work on the part of the principals, headed by Jimmie Adams, rapid-fire action, much of which is of the knockabout type, keeps the spectator amused and makes this Christie comedy one which will thoroughly entertain the average patrons. The story is a farce, dealing with the attempts of a rival suitor to prevent the hero's marriage. He resorts to all sorts of devices, even to shaving the other fellow's head and staining him black.—C. S. S.

"A Matter of Policy"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This comedy is based on the oft-used idea of a man who tries to get hurt in order that he may collect accident insurance. It ends by his succeeding and finding out his policy is only a sample. Neely Edwards is the star and the manner in which he handles the situations will provide quite a number of laughs.—C. S. S.

"Exit Caesar"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

An amateur theatrical performance in a rube town is broadly burlesqued in this Mermaid comedy, giving opportunities for a lot of slap-stick which will cause considerable amusement for the majority of spectators. As is often the case with comedies of this kind, the action gets away from the main idea, there is a fake diamond hunt and the familiar chase in which the villain gets covered with tar and feathers. While there are quite a number of amusing situations, it is not up to Jack White's best and lacks the originality which is so evident in many of his comedies.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review No. 49"

(One Reel)

The picturesque is a strong element in this review which shows fantastic glimpses of sea gulls in flight; charming wax reproductions of life in the Arctic zone; difficult feats of mountain climbing in the Cumberland Mountains, England; and some particularly beautiful color scenes showing the ceremony of a Japanese girl taking religious vows.—M. K.

The Whipping Boss

the hero is the head of the local post, and it is the legion that is shown as being responsible for the rescue of the boy and the bringing to justice of the guilty parties.

The playing up of the American Legion offering opportunities for tie-ups with that organization, and the wide publicity secured by the case on which the story is based, gives opportunities for attracting patronage and should be of great assistance to the exhibitor showing this picture.

The cast is composed largely of well-known players who acquit themselves creditably, including Lloyd Hughes, Barbara Bedford, J. P. McGowan, Clarence Geldert and Wade Boteler.

Story

Jim, while riding a freight trying to get back home, passes through a town, is arrested, sentenced to imprisonment, and under the convict leasing system is turned over with others to a lumber company and made to work in unsanitary surroundings in a cypress swamp where he becomes ill and notwithstanding his sickness is cruelly whipped by the company's whipping boss. His mother has sent money to pay his fine, but not getting a reply she comes from a distant state to the lumber camp. Forrest, head of the local American Legion post, seeking to abolish the use of the lash on convicts, helps her and they secure an order for Jim's release. Livingston, head of the company, seeking to destroy evidence that he has had Jim whipped, has the whipping boss set fire to the stockade in which the prisoners are chained. Forrest and the Legion boys save the prisoners. Jim, who has been spirited away by friends, is brought on the scene. Livingston and the whipping boss are sent to prison. Woodward, president of the company, wipes out the inhuman conditions in the camp. Forrest, who has saved Woodward's daughter from a convict, patches up the difficulty he had with the girl when he fought her father's treatment of convicts, and they become engaged. Jim finally regains his health.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Making Good Bad

When, after an enormous expenditure of effort and money, a really high grade photoplay is finished, the director swells out his chest and hides not his admiration for his work under a bushel, or under anything else for that matter. The Cameraman ditto: the "Stars" ditto—several times and then some, while the producer—oh well, he blushingly (?) admits that the thing is not at all bad.

The production is projected before studio folks and friends in the screening room at the studio, or at office of the producer, and is pronounced good. It is next projected in a large theatre filled with invited guests. The applause is generous, since the production seems to be nearly all its boosters have claimed for it—I say "nearly all," because nothing human could possibly quite equal the claims of the dyed-in-the-wool booster. To all who have seen it up to this time, however, including the somewhat critical audience assembled in the theatre, it has seemed worthy of enthusiastic praise.

It is now "released," and shortly is shown in a theatre near the home of friends with whom the director is stopping for a week end, whereupon the director, with vest buttons popping with the strain and hat band as taut as a fiddle string, herds the aforesaid friends into the theatre to view the wonderful "child of his brain."

It Is Wonderful

And he finds it to be indeed wonderful. For an hour and a half he squints at the screen wrathfully, while his friends look at him curiously, wondering why he was so insistent upon them visiting the theatre. For what they saw was at times a bit hard to see at all; also, as a whole it did a bit of a shimmy, with an occasional time when a whole row of stone and brick buildings would jump bodily into the air a few inches, settling down with an inaudible slam; also there were two breaks in the film, with complete stoppage of the show each time.

At regular intervals the screen was decorated with "End Part One," "End Part Two," etc. The actors did not move as they had moved at the studio, but with unnaturally quick, jerky steps. They all appeared to be in a terrific hurry about something. A horse, which the director had caused to trot through a scene at carefully calculated speed, went through as though it had swallowed a stick of dynamite and expected it to go off real soon. At regularly recurring intervals flashing spots of white were seen, where some enterprising genius punched from one to a dozen holes in the end of each reel of film to save him the burden of having to watch the action for a change-over cue; also recurring marks where the owner of the film had rammed a punch, composed of well up to a hundred small holes, through from two to three frames, in order that the said owner (and the audience) might know who the film belonged to.

There are whole scenes which have a crazy-quilt, mottled appearance, due to oil thrown on the film from the moving parts of an over-oiled projector. As to focus, the picture is real sharp in the center only, and the blacks in the lower portion of the screen are light gray, because enterprising tooters of wind instruments and wielders of rosined bows just MUST have sixteen-candle-power lights in order to see black notes on white paper not more than eighteen inches from their liquid-brown soul windows.

Can good be bad? There seems to be but one reply, Viz: in the case of a photoplay it certainly can, and very often is.

The possible faults in the projection of a photoplay before an audience is not in the least overdrawn in the foregoing, except that only in the worst cases do we find all the faults spoken of present in any one show. To see a goody number of them is, however, a very common occurrence.

When I attend a motion picture theatre it is usually my custom to jot down a record of the projection faults observed. September 10th, according to my note book, I attended a certain theatre in Mt. Vernon, New York, concerning which I find the following record: Discoloration of light at bottom, gradually getting worse until corrected in one and a half minutes; "End Part One" showed for few frames; constant movement of picture as a whole—worse on one projector than on other—probably due to badly worn intermittent sprocket or movement, or both; discoloration of light at bottom—very bad, one minute; "End Part Four" showed; dirt in aperture shows badly; picture out of frame two feet until corrected after whistling, hand clapping and stamping by audience; projection speed entirely too fast for most scenes, not altered at all; slight flicker tendency and a trifle of travel ghost; slides advertising future shows very dirty and badly handled.

That, mind you, is the record of one show, projected by a man getting the union minimum scale.

Let us now examine into the matter of what is necessary to really high class projection, imagining no vain imaginings, but setting forth only those things imperatively necessary to high class projection—those things which must be provided if the audience is to get 100 per cent. value for its money, and the box office therefore to have the maximum possible drawing power for the class of show given.

First, there MUST be a skillful, CAREFUL projectionist. I say "skillful," because to high grade projection real skill, or knowledge, if you prefer the term, is imperatively essential, particularly if the projection is to be done efficiently from the viewpoint of cost. I say "careful" because no matter how wide is the range of knowledge possessed by the projectionist, if he be careless or slovenly in his work—if he be one of those well known "Aw-that's-good-enough" chaps, his knowledge will count for very little; his work will be mediocre.

Second, there must be first class, high grade projectors, without which it is extremely unlikely, not to say impossible, that a photoplay will be projected at its full possibility of value. Also, while it may be possible that full value be got to the screer with an old, out-of-date projector in the hands of a very skillful projectionist, still it is unlikely, even though the projector mechanism may have been kept in excellent repair. The reason for this is partly psychological, the average projectionist feeling that if his employer does not place sufficient value on high grade projection to supply him with up-to-date projectors, why should he, the projectionist, expend mental and physical energy in an attempt to compel back-number equipment to equal the performance of up-to-date projectors. And, except possibly in small village theatres, the man is in a measure right, too.

Back-number Projectors

"What would I call back-number projectors," you ask?

A fair question! I would call any projector more than three years old a back number, for two reasons.

First, in that time there will have been more than sufficient improvements to fully justify installing projectors:

Second, the improvement in screen results due to up-to-date, new projectors will only have to be sufficient to sell an average of two or three additional seats a day to not only pay for new projectors every three years, but also to pay six per cent. on the money invested, and surely no sane man would seriously question the proposition that sufficiently improved results will be had to increase seat sales by that amount, considering the thousands of seats you have for sale every day many of which often are NOT sold:

Third, there must be ample direct current available. Granted that a very bright screen may be had with A. C., still the light quality is not there, and the result is never equal to D. C. projection.

Fourth, there must be a projection room of sufficient size to allow the men to work comfortably, and the room must be well-located from the point of view of projection results. It must be well-ventilated and well-equipped with all essential things, including toilet and wash basin. The observation ports must be large enough to allow the projectionist to have a full view of the screen when standing or sitting in working position beside the projector.

Fifth, the auditorium must be intelligently lighted. A photoplay just simply cannot be made to appear at its full value to an audience if the screen be light-struck. In the language of the immortal poet, there ain't no such animal! If light from any other source than the lens reaches the screen, then it will smear itself over the blacks as well as the whites, and will make the blacks gray, exactly in proportion to the amount and quality of the stray light. It may or may not turn the whites yellow, but it injures the contrast of black and white, and in many instances entirely ruins the more delicate shadings of photography.

Sixth, I have left one most important factor till the last, viz.: The equipment incident to projection must be kept in the very best possible repair, and the repairs for projectors should be bought ONLY from the projector manufacturer or a responsible agent.

Given these various things I have named, there is no good reason why the high grade photoplay cannot be put on the screen as a brilliant, beautiful thing which will bring good prices and enjoy liberal patronage, or the photoplay of mediocre merit be at least placed before audiences at its full value.

Lacking any of the things I have named there will be an inevitable reaction on the screen and in the box office. The high grade production will have its value to the audiences lowered in exact proportion to the aforesaid lack, while the photoplay of less merit will have little or no merit at all.

Carbon Flaming

Some while ago I asked the engineers of the National Carbon Company to give the reason for flaming at the carbons, saying that I believed it to be caused chiefly by impurities in the carbon.

I have just found on my desk the following, which I believe is the reply from the National, though there seems to be no letter with it, nor any notation on the sheet itself. It reads:

Flaming or chasing of the projection carbon arc is a phenomenon which caused considerable annoyance to projectionists and to audiences during the earlier stages of the motion picture industry. Intensive scientific research has isolated the cause of flaming, and careful manufacturing control of materials and products has practically eliminated this cause of annoyance from the better class carbons.

Today the occasional case of "chasing" may be found only when the so-called "neutral" carbons are used with alternating current, but this combination is gradually being superseded by two combinations non-conductive to flaming. These are the usual direct projection arc trim and the White Flame alternating current trim.

The phenomenon was caused by impurities in the carbon shell, such as iron, calcium and sodium, which were oxidized to an ash in the intense heat near the arc. The ash formed near the crater and had a tendency to halve the anode voltage, thus pulling the arc to the side of the carbon. The arc would flicker and chase around the side of the carbon for about two seconds, until all the ash had been volatilized. When the current passing through the carbon was increased to an overload, the rate of formation of ash was accelerated, with consequent increase in flaming.

Flaming was noticeable to audiences only as an unsteadiness, or flickering of the light on the screen. To the projectionist, however, a chase was characterized by a long, yellow, unsteady arc, moving about the side of the carbon.

There is some misunderstanding here, if this is the National engineer's reply. The information is valuable; also I think that to projectionists it will be new. The flaming I had reference to, however, is not of this nature, but a long, constant, steady blaze coming from the crater and, with the ordinary projection arc, shooting up and forward. It makes for unevenness of heating of the condenser, dirties the collector lens very fast and sets up excessive lens breakage. What we want to know is the why and wherefore of this "flame," which often is present in highly objectionable degree in one case, and not in another where the same amperage is used and the same make of carbon. We thank whoever it may have been that sent in the above, but want further light.

To Make a Shutter

R. C. Higgins, Projectionist, York Theatre, Toronto, Ont., says:

In the issue of September 15 an unnamed party requests the correct procedure for making a rotating shutter. This may be done, without trouble, in the following manner:

First—Measure distance center of shutter shaft to center of projection lens, and mark these two points in position on paper;

Second—Strike an arc and, with correct size of spot in correct working position, project light to the screen;

Third—Place a piece of tin, preferably black in color, in the light beam at the plane at which the shutter is to operate—at the aerial image if practicable;

Fourth—Measure diameter of light beam;

Fifth—At the point on the paper representing the lens center, designated as "B," draw in, carefully, the rectangle (if using slide carrier) of light, or with a compass, the circle if not using a slide carrier. Be sure to have point B as the center of rectangle or circle;

Sixth—Draw two straight lines from point representing center of shutter shaft, designated as "A," to extreme edges of circle or rectangle of light at B. With a protractor measure the degrees between these two lines, which we will assume to be ten degrees;

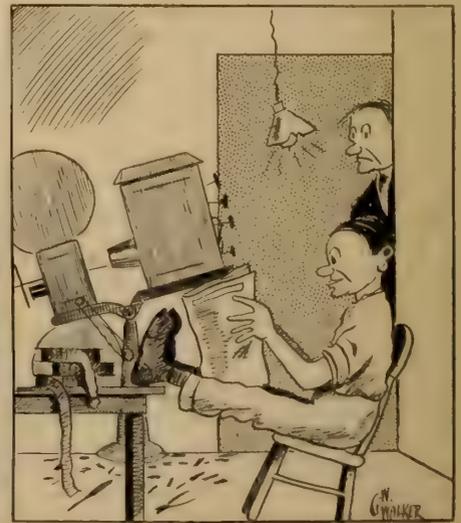

Seventh—All projectionists know the ratio of the various standard professional projectors (Huh! Do they?—Ed). Well, if we were using a projector having a 60 degree time for movement of the film, we would just add the width of the light beam (10 degrees in our case) to the 60 and would have, as a result, a 70 degree master blade width.

This of course allows nothing for lost motion due to worn gears, etc., but I have used this method and found it very successful. As to my observation regarding the intercepting blades, if you have a heavy amperage and a rather slow projection speed, it is necessary that all blades be the same width if flicker-tendency is to be reduced to its lowest limit. However, up to and including 60 amperes, projecting 75 feet and up, per minute, it is permissible to make the intercepting blades a full ten per cent. less in width than the master blade, with all light spaces equal.

Friend Higgins sends a diagram, but I think it hardly necessary to reproduce it. I see nothing wrong with his procedure, except that if the intercepting blades of a three-winger be made narrower than the master blade, then it is impossible to make all light openings the same. The better practice under this condition is to make the two openings next the master blade equal, and the center one of less width.

Possible

It is entirely within the range of possibility that within the year you may be called upon to handle a proposition radically different from anything you have ever dreamed of. How would you like to project films something like two and one-half inches wide, huh? Well, maybe you won't—also maybe you will, and if it really does come through it'll be a stem-winder. It's a Chicago stereoscopic proposition. I've seen samples of the film and would "poo-poo" the whole thing, but I'm not prepared to cast an altogether frozen eye at anything sponsored by so able a man as George K. Spoor, of the old Essanay, particularly when I happen to know he has been working on this particular proposition for more moons than you would care to spare time to count! Well, we'll see what we'll see byemby. Meanwhile don't get all het up and excited. If it comes through at all it'll be quite a spell yet.

This represents exactly what the editor saw in a theatre recently. What do YOU think of it? The person with the hat on is supposed to be me. Did not this man DISGRACE the union he belonged to? Ought not the union slide to be TAKEN AWAY FROM HIM and he be fined in a good, substantial sum for such a disgraceful performance? WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT IT?

Thirty-five New Houses Building and Twenty-one Old Ones Being Improved

IN the following list of thirty-five picture theatres projected, but nineteen furnish definite information regarding the contemplated cost of the houses.

The highest figure given is $750,000, at which figure the house planned for erection on Belle Plain Avenue and Lincoln Robey Streets, Chicago, ties the new Saenger house, at Shreveport, La.

From this figure, the anticipated expenditures run down to as low as $10,000, at which latter cost a two-story house will be erected in Dickson City, Pa.

Between the maximum and minimum figures given above, there is a wide variety of costs. One house will be erected at an expenditure of $500,000, one house at $400,000, one at $350,000 and one at $300,000.

Another will cost $150,000, while two prospective builders figure theirs at $100,000 each.

Getting below $100,000, there are one at $80,000, one at $70,000, one at $60,000, one at $50,000, one at $45,000, one at $40,000 and one at $32,000.

Where They Will Be Built

In regard to location, the score for the various states is as follows:

California 3, Illinois 2, Indiana 1, Kansas 2, Louisiana 1, Massachusetts 1, Michigan 2, Missouri 1, Nebraska 1, New York 5, Ohio 3, Oregon 1, Pennsylvania 7, Rhode Island 1, Tennessee 1, Texas 1 and Wisconsin 2.

By which it will be noted that in this particular list, the Keystone beats the Empire State by two houses.

But all the building activities shown in this issue are not confined to the erection of new houses. In twenty-one already existing theatres improvements will be made, on which the expenditures involved range from $88,000, on the Pittsburgh Camerphone, down to $1,000 on Harry Schwartz's Gerard Avenue house, Philadelphia.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

The LEATHER PUSHERS FOURTH SERIES

Directed by EDWARD LAEMMLE Stories by H. C. WITWER

This greatest series of two reel pictures ever made was Reginald Denny's pride—he lived and loved "The Leather Pushers." It was only after an exhaustive search and careful consideration that a successor to Denny was chosen—Billy Sullivan. The above wire from Denny himself is convincing proof that Sullivan has scored a decisive hit in Denny's famous role and that exhibitors are assured of a tremendously powerful continuation of those famous pictures.

YOUR theatre has made money largely through your ability to entertain two crowds in an evening. But you can't play to two completely different audiences in an evening when your feature runs ten reels or more in length. There aren't enough hours in the evening to get in two whole shows based on such a feature.

And it is NOT entertainment. But you can give your patrons ENTERTAINMENT—and two shows in an evening—if you pick features of proper length and surround them with Short Subjects such as Educational offers.

"THE OPTIMIST"

Is Winning New Laurels for Hamilton Everywhere

The Los Angeles Record says:

"The comedy is worth more serious consideration than the feature at Loew's this week, not because Griffith has stamped Lloyd Hamilton with approval by starring him in a full-length picture, but because 'The Optimist' is a priceless snatch of whimsical burlesque. Hamilton is due to be 'discovered', even as Chaplin, as a comedy genius of laughable ability."

The Los Angeles Times says:

"Praise be! There is also a cracking jazz comedy starring Lloyd Hamilton, called 'The Optimist,' good for a laugh a minute..."

The Cleveland Plain-Dealer says:

"Lloyd Hamilton registers several laughs a minute with his new comedy, 'The Optimist,' now in the Allen. His 'gag-man' seems to have been working overtime thinking up good ones for this picture. It shows a lot of hard work, and the results are worth it... Unlimited possibilities.

"'The Optimist' is honest and honorable slapstick. It certainly cinches Hamilton to his often quoted place in the trio of Chaplin, Keaton and Hamilton."

"Boy of Mine"

First National Release Starring Ben Alexander Can Be Recommended Without Qualifications

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. Not because it is one of the most lavish but because it has one of the best stories, is an example of the finest directing and presents acting that is very near flawless. Furthermore, it features Ben Alexander.

It is a gem among pictures because it is amazingly entertaining without any hokum. Just where the dramatic tension is the greatest and one expects one of the time-worn twists, something supremely natural instead takes place. This is perhaps the picture's most distinguished feature.

Booth Tarkington's reputation for creating realistic boy fiction is stoutly upheld. Ben Alexander is a lovable, misunderstood and imperfect boy. He is tremendously appealing because he seems so entirely unconscious of the camera.

The picture is life from a boy's viewpoint. You are made to feel, just as in reading Tarkington, that youth is a detached kingdom with experiences and emotions of its own that very few adults take the trouble to understand. Its tragedies are either significant or ludicrous to outsiders. This gives the picture that wonderful blending of comedy and sympathetic interest that reaches any type of spectator.

William Beaudine's directing in this production will be remembered by anyone who is interested in better pictures. He seems to have disciplined a cast of already accomplished players into an interpretation of human character so complete and interesting that nothing is left to be desired. Henry Walthall as the repressed father, without any understanding of his son but possessed of a great love for him, is a new screen study. Irene Rich gives a beautiful performance as the mother and Rockliff Fellowes as the boy's pal is delightful.

The comedy deserves special mention. The scenes in the church are extremely funny and the incidents connected with the boy and the rag picker's son getting hold of the "revolver" are worth making a second trip to see the picture. "Boy of Mine" is one of those pictures no one should miss.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

“Get the Habit”

ABOUT this time a year ago there was considerable agitation regarding the excessive length of feature productions.

Letters from exhibitors were numerous; producers and distributors came to the front with frank opinions.

Then the hub-bub died. And it cannot be said that this season's productions gave any encouragement to the exhibitor seeking to BUILD a programme of varied entertainment.

Here is a thought: Production plans for Film-land's "second half of the season" are now under way. Book and play scouts are scouring Broadway; studio gates are swinging wide.

Now is the time to set it down flat and plain as a dictate: No more padded eight—and nine-reel specials.

A good picture in six and seven reels is still a good picture—if it IS good. While many a corking piece of entertainment in seven reels has been made a colorless flivver by the tricks that extend it to nine reels.

* * *

EARL HAMMONS, of Educational Films, pointed out one very interesting angle on this question of excessive feature length in his last week's Moving Picture World interview.

While on the subject of curtailing production costs, declares Mr. Hammons, why not give some thought to the waste footage that serves no good purpose and very often proves harmful?

After viewing most of the pictures of the season the writer is strongly inclined to the belief that there comes a point in the life of every continuity when the production board says:

“Here is where we will have to put in a ball scene, a midnight bathing party, a mob or a wreck. Something to carry the action over two more reels—and it must be big or the audience will get wise to us.”

Being “big”—it must be costly.

The result is that a story which probably had a real reason for existence at the outset, by the introduction of the time-tried devices becomes what the daily critics term, “Another one of those things.”

THE matter of initial production cost, serious as it may be, is but a minor evil in comparison with the real crux of the waste footage problem.

Excessively long features are dulling and killing the exhibitor's opportunity to provide entertainment.

The appeal, the pull, the one vital factor in the growth of the motion picture theatre is the thought in the mind of the average patron: “There is sure to be SOMETHING on the bill that I'll like.”

That thought built the motion picture.

That thought created the picture-going HABIT—and the habit is no more when would-be patrons look up the title of the feature and reach their “yes” or “no” decision solely on that basis.

Let's “get the habit” working for us again.

Let's get the public thinking: “There is sure to be SOMETHING on the bill that I'll like.”

It's money in the box office.

* * *

ALL of which brings us back to our starting point.

Last year saw much more discussion of the excessive length question than there is at this moment. And nothing was done.

Production schedules of roseate hue were under way; all you had to do was to make “bigger and better” pictures and you would get “Covered Wagon” money.

In the twelve months that have intervened a number of us have learned sad lessons. Quite a few of our most untrammelled imaginations are willing to admit that “it is still the picture business.”

We are down to earth. This is stock-taking time. Don't let it pass without serious thought and ACTION on the subject of proper feature length.

Oklahoma Men Condemn Tax; Talbot Re-elected President

OKLAHOMA CITY, Dec. 4.—The Oklahoma Managers and Exhibitors Association convened in annual session at Oklahoma City yesterday and today, with the largest attendance in its history. Morris Lowenstein, vice-president, presided in the absence of President Ralph Talbot, who was unable to attend. A new constitution, set of by-laws and code of ethics were adopted, and slides recommended for both national and service associations. Resolutions requested United States Senators and Congressmen to vote for the admission tax repeal and work for the abolition of the music tax. The selling of films to non-theatrical institutions charging an admission was condemned. The employment of an attorney by the executive committee was authorized. The Far East movement was endorsed.

S. A. Handy, attorney, of Kansas City, spoke on the music tax and L. J. Lally of the same city on reciprocal insurance as a savings proposition. It was voted to investigate the insurance proposition. Tom Ryan, representing the F. I. L. M. Board Adjusting Bureau, and L. W. Brophy of Muskogee were other speakers. A grand ball was given Monday night and the convention adjourned Tuesday night with a banquet. The next annual meeting will be at Oklahoma City on the first Monday in December, 1924.

The following officers were elected:

Robertson Visiting

South American Movie Official in New York Conferring with Manufacturers

Juan Robertson, official of the Sociedad General Cinematografica, one of the leading film distributing and exhibiting companies of Buenos Aires, Argentina, arrived in New York a few days ago. He is here to close several deals with the moving picture manufacturers of this country in co-operation with Mr. Juan Kunzler, the local representative of the South American corporation.

Mr. Robertson is an authority in matters of film booking and distributing, and is well known all over the southern hemisphere. He intends to stay in New York for a few weeks and then will visit coast studios before returning to Argentina.

Sociedad General is, at present, the sole distributor in South America of the Metro, Pathe, Warner Brothers and Al Lichtman pictures.

Lesser on Way West

Irving M. Lesser, vice president of and Eastern representative for Principal Pictures Corporation, has left for the Pacific Coast to hold a conference on production, distribution and general activities of Principal.

To Paint Town Blue

Klan in Youngstown, Ohio, Against a Liberal Sunday

It looks as though the recent Ku Klux Klan political victory in Youngstown, Ohio, whereby the man they supported for mayor was elected, will mean the blues for the movie shows after January 1. Charles Scheible is the mayor-elect. He publicly received the support of the Ku Klux, whose head, Col. E. A. Watkins, led the fight for his election. Watkins was supported by a number of ministers who sought enforcement of the blue laws.

Since the election Scheible has been on the fence as regards enforcement of these laws, and as a result Watkins got the ministers together and forced his way into a position of power, also putting himself in line for the office of chief of police. The first of December the ministers called Scheible into a conference at which a recall was threatened unless Scheible reaffirmed his pledges to enforce all the laws, and gave evidence of his sincerity in considering Watkins for police chief.

A number of business men interested in Sunday amusements and the sale of gasoline have arranged a meeting to prepare a legal defense in the event the blue laws are enforced.

Made "Big U" Sales Head

Al Lichtman Succeeds E. J. Smith as General Sales Manager

E. J. Smith, general manager of sales for the Universal Pictures Corporation, has resigned, and Al Lichtman, who recently joined the Universal home office staff, has been appointed by Carl Laemmle as the new general manager of sales.

Mr. Smith has two propositions under advisement but is anxious to take a short rest before plunging again into the business in which he has spent the last ten years of his life. Lichtman takes over the Universal sales organization at a time when it is contemplating its most active period.

Manhattan Exceeds $7,000

Just 261 of the 287 theatres in Greater New York have deposited a total of slightly over $7,000 as their share of National Motion Picture Day proceeds. National President Sydney S. Cohen expressed his enthusiasm over these returns, saying they are but representative of the co-operation he received throughout the country. The final report will probably not be made until within the next few weeks, as Mr. Cohen now is daily receiving checks from different sections of the States.

Rogers Leaves Mastodon

Charles R. Rogers announces his resignation as an officer of the Mastodon Films, Inc., and Burr-Rogers Producing Corporation. "I find that I cannot give these two companies as much of my time and attention as they require, owing to the fact that I am so entirely engaged in the Corinne Griffith and Hunt Stromberg, Harry Carey units," he writes.

Music Tax Truce Is Ended

Exhibitors in general throughout the country have been misinformed regarding the merits of copyrights on music belonging to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, according to that organization's special advisor, E. C. Mills. Conferences with the executive board of the M. P. T. O. A. are terminated, says Mr. Mills, who declares that it is obvious that no adjustment, amicable to both sides, could be reached through them.

The old condition now exists and will exist, states Mr. Mills. Under it the exhibitor cannot use the society's music unless he obtains a license from the society's headquarters in New York. Using such music without the license he faces prosecution which, according to Mills, has a minimum fine of $250 for those adjudged violators.

Fines totaling over $125,000 have been imposed upon 500 exhibitor violators, according to Mr. Mills. About 1,000 other defendants in this category effected an adjustment of their cases before trial, he states, adding that at the present time charges are being preferred against from 400 to 500 exhibitors in the United States for this alleged copyright infringement.

President Coolidge Recommends Repeal of Admission Tax

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Repeal of the admission tax on theatre tickets is recommended to Congress by the President in his message transmitting the budget estimates for the fiscal year beginning July 1, next. With the President's recommendation behind it, the success of the move for the abolition of these and certain other of the war taxes seems assured.

"We have now reached a point in our financial program where we can lighten the tax burden of the people," it is declared, "which is an added reason for taking a firm stand against any and all programs of spending that would tend to absorb the expected margin between receipts and expenditures.

"Having in mind that the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, contemplates that the Chief Executive, under the fortunate situation in which we now find ourselves, shall make such recommendations as in his opinion the public interests require, I recommend a revision of tax laws along lines which will effect a reduction of income taxes by taxing earned income more lightly than income from business or from investments; by reducing the percentages of the normal tax, and by reducing the surtax rates, with commencement of their application at $10,000 instead of $6,000. I also recommend repeal of the tax on telegrams, telephones and leased wires, and of the tax on admissions, and revision of the miscellaneous taxes which are a source of inconvenience to taxpayers and difficult to collect. On the other hand, amendments which would cause some increase of revenue should also be made to existing income tax laws relative to deductions of capital losses; deductions from gross income for interest paid and non-business losses sustained, where income from tax-exempt securities is involved; and the manner of taxing community incomes. These changes would reduce taxes by more than $300,000,000, which is safely within the probable surplus.

"I know of nothing," continues the President, "which will give the people of this nation greater assurance that we are unalterably committed to a campaign of economy in public expenditure than a reduction of our present taxation. It will take from the realm of debate plans which contemplate extravagant expenditures or expansions of the business of Government beyond those necessary to keep pace with a growing nation, and fix as the measure of our requirements an amount which will represent what is actually necessary to carry on efficiently the proper business and functions of Government and meet our fixed debt charges payable out of current revenue."

Ordinary expenses of running the Government during the coming fiscal year will total $1,645,791,971, it is indicated in the estimates, while an additional $1,985,371,158 will be required for interest payments and reduction in principal of the public debt, making the total appropriations required $3,631,163,129. This is a reduction of slightly less than $200,000,000 in the departmental expenses, as compared with appropriations for the current fiscal year, and of approximately 230,000,000 as compared with the present appropriations for all purposes.

While no specific appropriations are asked for moving picture activities by the War or Navy Departments, the funds for recreation carried in the estimates contemplate continuation of the moving picture entertainments furnished the men in those services, while the Department of Agriculture and the Interior Department expect to continue their moving picture activities. The Department of Commerce, which experimented with moving pictures last year, has discontinued production.

Grainger Returns

Goldwyn Cosmopolitan Sales Manager Back from Tour Predicts Favorably

James R. Grainger, general manager of sales for Goldwyn Cosmopolitan, returned recently from his trip to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., and to many of the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exchanges. He reports that the exhibitors throughout the country are enthusiastic about the quality of the big pictures which they have had from the distributing corporation, and that many of the films are breaking records in various of the big cities.

Many Bills in Congress Affect Industry

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Repeal of the admission tax was one of the first matters to come before the 68th Congress at the opening of the session on December 3, House Bill No. 2, introduced by Representative McGregor, of New York, and referred to the House committee on ways and means, providing for the repeal of this tax. It is expected that similar measures will be introduced within the next few days by members of Congress who have been urged by their constituents to give their assistance to the removal of this tax.

Representative Johnson, of Washington, introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to free places of amusement from the payment of the so-called music tax. This is to be accomplished by an amendment to the copyright law striking out the words "except in case of public performance for profit" from the sentence reading, in full, as follows: "The payment of the royalty provided for by this section shall free the articles or devices for which such royalty has been paid from further contribution to the copyright except in case of public performance for profit."

Several other measures dealing with moving pictures were also introduced at the opening of the session, even before the House was able to organize so as to transact any business. Representative Sanders of Indiana reintroduced his bill, which failed of passage in the last Congress, prohibiting the interstate transportation of inflammable moving picture films, which was referred to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce.

Representative Knutson, of Minnesota, has introduced a bill repealing the admission tax on entertainments, including moving picture exhibitions, when all of the proceeds inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational or charitable institutions or organizations or the American Legion.

There are also several bills providing for the repeal of the tax on telegrams and long-distance telephone messages, and measures dealing with the copyright law, but in the rush of bills introduced in the first days of the session it was impossible for the Government Printing Office to keep current the work of printing them, and their details are not yet available.

Production Possibilities in South Stir Ernest Shipman

The purpose of Ernest Shipman's present tour of the Southeastern states, which was veiled with mystery at the time he left New York about a week ago, has been definitely explained by this letter received from him. It follows:

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 3.

LAST week was one of kaleidoscopic action for my moving picture camera eye. At Washington, D. C., Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., cut through the official red tape so effectively that, within a few hours, the acceptance of our request for Governmental co-operation in connection with the making of our first Long Island picture, "The Romance of the Coast Guard Patrol," was on the records over the signature of Rear Admiral W. E. Reynolds, Commander of the United States Coast Guard. This action insures a moving picture which should be a credit to the industry and a lasting monument to the splendid traditions of the U. S. Coast Guard.

At Richmond, Va., I had the honor of meeting Governor E. Lee Trinkle, Mayor George Ainslee, W. T. Dabney, manager and Charles M. Montgomery, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. Words cannot express the solidity of purpose, the clearness of vision and the exalted ambition which animates the leaders of state and community interests in this part of the country. I found here considerable discussion of the Drinkwater stage version of the life of Robert E. Lee, and a growing sentiment for a moving picture which would do greater justice to events of his period. This may result in a picture creation for Virginia which will include Lee and the other foremost figures of his day.

Charleston, S. C., teeming with material for no end of motion picture possibilities, has a wealth of messages for the public of the world. Here I found actual preparations for my coming, fully scheduled and arranged for by Dr. R. S. McElwee, in charge of the Bureau of Foreign Trade and Port Development, and Meigs B. Russell, energetic manager of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mayor-elect Tom Stoney, whose ancestry dates back for 300 years in Carolina patriotism, was most enthusiastic in tendering the co-operation of the city in the making of one or more big feature pictures. Locations for a studio have been offered with a view to establishing definitely our fourth industry in this cradle of Southern civilization. Here, in Charleston, as in Richmond, a superficial survey of the untouched and untold film possibilities overwhelms me, and to hurry through seems nothing short of a sacrilege.

The business-like air and generally progressive attitude I have found in Jacksonville was just as I had expected from the splendid letters I had received from the Chamber of Commerce. On my arrival I found nearly 1,000 photographs of almost every kind of scenery and background, together with types of people, location addresses and other invaluable information. This file makes it possible for a producer in his headquarters at Jacksonville to select his locations without leaving his office. This is my first experience with such practical efficiency outside of the regular film producing organizations, and it has "sold" me on Florida.

The two days of research work here have already proven that I am making no mistake in committing my associates to Florida for future film activities. After a trip south, I will return here to complete such arrangements as are necessary for the establishment of this fourth industry in this part of the country.

The Paramount exchange here is one of the most efficient I have ever had the pleasure of visiting. Because of the excellent results it is obtaining with the co-operation of the energetic mayor of Jacksonville, I am going to distribute all my new features in Florida from Jacksonville.

Pathe Denies Rumor

A statement this week from the Pathe home office emphatically refutes the rumor that its branch-office in Spokane is about to be closed.

Martha Mansfield Dies of Burns

Martha Mansfield, popular actress of the Fox Corporation died in San Antonio, Texas, November 30, as the result of burns received while she was playing the leading part in the Fox production, "The Warrens of Virginia."

Miss Mansfield had just finished her acting for the day, and had stepped into an automobile, when the costume of the time of the Civil War she was wearing, suddenly burst into flames. It is thought the flames originated from the match of a careless cigarette smoker.

Several actors rushed to Miss Mansfield's assistance. She was hurried to a hospital where she died 24 hours later.

Miss Mansfield was born 23 years ago in Mansfield, Ohio, but was reared in New York where her mother now lives. Miss Mansfield gained prominence in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" in which John Barrymore starred. She appeared with Eugene O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover," and recently was seen in "Potash and Perlmutter."

Bob Dexter Resigns

Versatile First National Official Will Write Fiction

Bob Dexter, advertising and publicity director for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. has resigned, effective December 29th, in order to devote all his time to fiction writing.

Dexter enjoys the distinction of being one of the youngest and at the same time one of the most successful advertising men in the motion picture business. His career started in Australia, where after several years' experience as a reporter and cartoonist he became assistant to C. L. Yearsley, in charge of the advertising and exploitation for J. D. Williams' enterprises.

When Yearsley came to America, Dexter was appointed his successor, although he had just passed his twenty-first birthday. A few years later Bob followed his former chief to New York and joined the advertising department of First National. His exceptional aptitude for the work resulted in rapid advancement and last June, when Yearsley left for a three months' vacation, Dexter took over the entire direction of the department. In September he was formally appointed director of advertising and publicity.

But along with motion picture work, particularly during the first year of his stay in America, Dexter found time to write considerable fiction, which was so well received that he was offered a contract by one of the largest publishing combines in the country. Recently this offer was renewed and accepted at an even more attractive figure.

Dexter will leave First National with a fine record of accomplishment behind him and with the best wishes of all his associates. No man in the organization has more friends.

Decision Affects All Interstate Trade

Omaha, Neb.—The United States Supreme Court decision which upheld the contention of Attorney Dana Van Dusen of Omaha in the case of Charles G. Binderup, against the Pathe Exchange, the Omaha Film Board of Trade, and other exchanges, will affect every big industry in the nation doing an interstate business according to Attorney Van Dusen.

The Supreme Court held that dealing with a branch house within a state is interstate traffic, if the home company of which that branch is a part is outside the state. This was the bone of contention.

Binderup, owner of a string of more than thirty theatres in Nebraska, sued the various exchanges and the Omaha Film Board of Trade for $700,000 damages charging that they had violated the Sherman Anti-trust law in refusing to ship him films as per his order.

The exchanges charged that he had violated his contract in showing films in more than one theatre, and further held that they were not subject to the Sherman Anti-trust law in that Binderup who lived in Nebraska, had dealt with a Nebraska branch, after the films had come to rest in the state.

M.P.T.O.A. Devises Definite Plan for Repeal of the Admission Tax

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A definite plan of action looking to the repeal by Congress of the admission and seating capacity taxes, and for the amendment of the copyright law in such manner as to free those furnishing entertainment involving the use of music controlled by the Composers Authors and Publishers Association from royalty liability to the members of that organization, was promulgated at the two days' session of the national board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The meeting was held at the New Willard Hotel and was well attended. The sessions were presided over by Sydney Cohen.

The activities of the directors were not confined to the discussions of the sessions, for they took advantage of the opportunity afforded them by their presence in the National Capital to visit the congressmen from back home. It is understood that they found a great deal of sympathy among the men they visited for the repeal of the burdensome and aggravating taxes placed upon them by the existing revenue law.

Assurances have come, for instance, from Senator James A. Watson, of Indiana, a member of the Senate Finance Committee and a power in Congress, that he is heartily in favor of eliminating from the tax law the provisions complained of. However, the Senator has declared, he is not favorable to any plan to bring repeal legislation before Congress—and that would be a part of the program promulgated by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon—unless there was considerable assurance of its adoption. He is against giving an opportunity for such a measure to become the football of politics during the session, and here, it is pointed out, is the opportunity for exhibitors and other business men throughout the country to become active in their own behalf.

It was the sentiment of the meeting that there is much hard work to be done in the immediate future. The exhibitors of the country must present a solid front if they are to gain their point, and they must centralize their efforts in the Washington campaign. With this in mind, a resolution was adopted extending a hearty and cordial invitation to any and all organizations which may desire to help present a united front to the end that the repeal of the admission taxes may be effected.

On the House of Representatives side of the Capitol, Representative John Garner, of Texas, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, who has made a long study of general conditions, has expressed himself as of the belief that in order to secure the repeal of the so-called nuisance tax provisions of the present law, in which are included the admission and seating capacity taxes, it will be desirable for the theatre owners to secure from and give to other lines of business co-operation leading to a united front with respect to all industries thus discriminated against.

Friends of the picture industry in Congress have indicated that it will be only by the "pack" method that repeal action will be secured. It must not be overlooked that there is considerable opposition to the repeal of the theatre taxes, and there are men prominent on the Ways and Means Committee who are frowning on that portion of the Mellon recommendations. Some of the Congressmen have been very frank in expressing themselves to their interviewers, others have hedged and some have openly come out in favor of tax repeal. Much of this information was presented by the individual members of the conference in the shape of reports from the various States.

At the conclusion of the meetings the following prepared statement was issued:

A meeting of the National Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was held at the Hotel Willard, Washington, D. C., on Friday and Saturday, November 30 and December 1. The meeting was attended by representatives from all parts of the country, and among those were Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; J. S. Phillips, Forth Worth, Texas; E. J. White, Montana; William Bender, Jr., South Bend, Indiana; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Fred Seegert, Milwaukee; W. A. True, Hartford; G. C. Schmidt, Indianapolis; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis; H. J. Schad, Reading, Pa.; Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; George Aarons, Philadelphia; Martin G. Smith, Toledo, O.; Jules Greenstone, Rochester, N. Y.; Charles Rappaport, Philadelphia; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C.; John McGuirk, Philadelphia, and Sydney S. Cohen, New York.

The first day's session was devoted to a report of the activities of the men in their various states with their members of Congress, and there was general discussions of both local and national importance on questions touching the film industry in general and more particularly with the repeal of the various taxes, viz: the admission tax, seat tax, music tax, and other national legislative affairs. Many of the members present had the opportunity of meeting their representatives at Washington.

The second day's session was devoted to a discussion of the report of the activities of the National Legislative Committee, which had been appointed some time ago for the purpose of securing legislative relief and the repeal of the above taxes. All work of the Legislative Committee was approved and they were instructed to proceed with their endeavors and to do such things as would bring about the success of their efforts along these lines and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in meeting assembled at the Hotel Willard, Washington, D. C., November 30 and December 1, 1923, having received the report of the activities, work and accomplishments of the National Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America since the last meeting, looking toward the repeal of the burdensome admission taxes, and invitations having previously been extended to any and all interested in this problem to co-operate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Now, then, be it:

Resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at this time again extend a hearty and cordial invitation to any and all organizations which may desire to help present a united front to the end that the repeal of the admission taxes be effected.

Japanese Educator Here as Student of the Cinema Art

By TOM WALLER

SLOWLY and quietly, in accord with its usual policy for accuracy rather than speed, Japan is absorbing the fundamental detail and basic principle of the successful American producer. Unheralded, S. Kubata, a college professor, arrived from the Far East several months ago. It was not until the other day when he visited James O'Neill at Will Hays' office that a letter of introduction from the Consulate General of Japan revealed his mission.

Methodically, Kubata is surveying the American field. Deliberately he is tracing the whys and wherefores as to how the American filmed love scene is so realistic and how the American director goes about to void it of that stiffness which is the primary cause of the Japanese film being so low rated in its home territory, O'Neill was told. Then there are a myriad of other things he wants to take back to Japanese megahone welders.

Japan foresees a craze for the cinema which within a comparatively short time will nearly equal, within its own jurisdiction, that of the Yankee country, Kubata gave O'Neill to understand. Home production whenever within the power of achievement has always been the world's understanding of the silent people on the island continent. And Japan today imports two thirds of the film shown in its theatres from America. Japan never expects to see the elimination of American film within its boundary but it is hopeful of reducing the import percentage and becoming less of a recluse in the movie world. In other words Japan is hopeful of home made films being the favorite in the homeland—and later on to have a comfortable exodus for a place in the rest of the world.

Prior to the earthquake the Setting Sun land had seven home studios. These were located in and about Tokio. Kubata has not received word as to the number that stand today.

But Kubata would seem to regard the earthquake, as concerns the Japanese industry, not wholly as a catastrophe. Instead of salvaging the antique, Kubata would favor a brand new reconstruction—a reconstruction inspired by American ideas and American practicality.

Decadence of European Films Due to Faulty Exhibitor Cooperation

By STEPHEN BUSH

THE decadence of the European film is evidenced in most illuminating fashion by the statistics of import and export. According to the best figures available the export of film to Europe has been steadily on the increase while the import of foreign film into the United States has been going back not only steadily but rapidly. The full significance of this fact can only be appreciated when one knows with what difficulties the import of foreign films into the various countries of Europe is really attended.

In looking at the causes of the decline of films made by European manufacturers not the last nor least is the apathetic attitude of the average European theatre owner. The exhibitors here offer the film to their public in a sort of careless, indifferent fashion; they do not even attempt to sell their films to the patrons. Friend Sargent's celebrated department, "How to Sell the Film to the Public," would be like a treatise on higher algebra to a primary class in a public school.

The owner or manager of the humblest show house in some obscure country town in the States knows and practices more showmanship and selling art than the average exhibitor in the big towns here. Here all films are treated pretty much alike. Newspaper advertising here is hardly any, a couple of indifferent posters are stuck up around the theatre, advance notices are rare. Of course there are exceptions in the big centers like London, Paris, Rome, Berlin and Vienna, but the rule is quite as I have described it.

Now the reaction of this lazy and incompetent attitude of the exhibitor on the producers is most injurious. Their initiative is deadened at the outset. The producer becomes a pessimist, figuring constantly on minimums, as there are no maximums. He begins to realize that the returns on his cheap stuff are very nearly as large as the returns on his best efforts.

It cannot be said that the public is altogether indifferent and unresponsive. Indeed as the public is often what the exhibitor himself makes it, its lack of discrimination and appreciation must in most instances be attributed to the negligent theatre owner himself. Whenever the least effort is made to arouse the public the success is plain. Advertise a film as an "American sensation" or a "real American comedy" and even this simple appeal will invariably bring results. I am thoroughly convinced that American methods of exhibition will double and treble the receipts of the theatres in Europe in a very short time. Europeans no less than Americans appreciate quality. Scores of cities in every part of Europe could be named where a house conducted on American ideas and methods would be the most profitable kind of an investment.

The proper appeal will bring the best of clientele, but the years are passing by and no effort seems to be made to extend the sphere and increase the attendance at the motion picture theatre. The continual triumphs of the American film in every part of Europe and the world is the greatest imaginable compliment not only to the American producer and exhibitor but equally to the American public, which, insisting on the best of film fare, has made the European audience more exacting. Our public has been spoiled perhaps, here every bit of quality is still thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed.

A group of German film men have after years of experiments—so it is said—produced a curious contrivance which is supposed to supply "effects" and especially imitations of music to correspond with the action on the screen, like the marching and playing of a band, military and other signals, etc., etc. It was to be a sort of glorified trap-drummer. Having attended a trial of the aforesaid contrivance, for which the most extravagant claims had been made, I must confess that it failed to register in any of the important details.

"Artistic effects," it will be remembered by all the old-timers, were freely advertised in the columns of The Moving Picture World something like ten or more years ago and comparing these "effects" with the German invention I would say that I would much rather have the old "effects," crude and disappointing though they may have been. The musical effects were particularly unsatisfactory, the only thing pleasing was the imitation of the violin. It had been promised to do away with the grating sounds which no method of mechanical synchronization has heretofore ever wholly eliminated. The promise was not kept; on the contrary the grating sound was accentuated. An effort was also made to reproduce the human voice but that failed utterly. Most of the reproduction was scarcely intelligible.

One of the Jackie Coogan productions had had a phenomenally successful run in Berlin and even the highbrow editors of the press pay the little artist high tribute. The various reviews and criticisms in the papers have started a discussion in professional and artistic circles as to just what constituted the merits of the feature.

The German critics have a cherished set of traditions and rules which they apply like chemical tests to every film or theatrical production and judged by these rules and theories the Jackie Coogan play must of necessity have failed. Hence these ponderous pundits are now at war with themselves and with each other.

Of course it would be too much to expect them to abandon their pet rules and principles but somehow the success of the "irregular film play" had to be explained. As a result they have evolved a new set of rules applicable specially to juvenile plays hailing from New York or Los Angeles. Well, they might as well get out of their dilemma that way. What a tremendous value this editorial discussion would have had for the publicity end if it had happened in a regular country like the U. S. A.

Swedish Exchanges Slashed by Slump; Public Discriminating

By TOM WALLER

SWEDEN'S long winter nights are equalized regarding the most popular of indoor sports. One night is spent reading a timely book and the next is devoted to selecting the movie house where the cinema version of that novel, or one as popular, is being shown. Even more so than here, movie advertising, for the most part, regulates or especially "popularizes" the books which undergo screen interpretation.

As American producers now seem to be catering to the reading public, American films are the films of the day for Sweden, there furnishing seventy per cent. of silver screen amusement. Regardless of books however, although in his mind they furnish the most apt of screen material for such a nation, Knut Husberg, whose opinion is thus recorded, declares American movies will always dominate Swedish houses.

The independent houses over there suffer far more than the Independents here, says Husberg, head of the purchasing department of the A. B. Svensk Filmindustri. Sweden's leading movie concern, the interests for which he was here for a short period, returning home this week. His company controls about 100 Swedish theatres and handles film for 400 exhibitors. Much American product is distributed by his company, even though several of the bigger producing units have exchanges dotting the Swedish map.

The house that is not tied up with popular American product is the nearest thing to being "outta luck." The Swedish theatre goes essentially discriminating. Unlike many of his American brothers, this discrimination, borne up by inherent stubbornness, bears hard upon the independent who has not the desired picture. When the seats are sold out in the theatre that has, this gentleman, instead of taking second best, turns around, goes home and continues reading until the eventful night when a seat in the specified house is procurable.

Such a condition—the small exhibitor who specializes in cheap pictures—with such a discriminating public, is one of the reasons to which Husberg attributes the present slump in the Swedish industry; a slump, he says, which has cut the number of exchanges into nearly one half during the past year. The primary factor for this temporary decadence, Husberg says, is that Sweden is now experiencing in full the war's aftermath. This aftermath is not only tightening the purse strings but is callousing the discriminatory side of the public. However, Husberg burnishes the prospects of the ensuing year; hailing it as an emissary of normalcy. The home product now does not exceed twelve films yearly, but these are good pictures, says Husberg who advances the belief that Sweden will never go in very strong for production when America is so close by.

Husberg is "sold" on Associated First National's product and policy. His latest visit was primarily to view this company's material which he boo'd when in the making last spring.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Balaban and Katz Purchase Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago

Balaban and Katz have purchased the Roosevelt Theatre from Frank J. Godsol of Goldwyn Pictures, who took over the house from the Ascher Circuit several months ago. The house is under lease to Balaban and Katz for five years at a reported rental of $5,000 a week and the change of ownership takes place on January 1. The price paid for the 1,600-seat theatre on the valuable State street location opposite Marshall Field & Company's main store is reported at $1,926,000.

The Roosevelt Theatre was built by the Ascher Circuit as their leading picture theatre about three years ago, and after operating the house for a little over a year leased the building to Balaban and Katz at the record rental of $5,000 a week for a term of five years. The house has been used for extended runs of feature pictures at popular prices.

The many friends of Dec Robinson, well-known manager of Peoria, Ill., will be glad to hear that the major operation he underwent at the Presbyterian Hospital here last week was successful, and they hope to see him back on the job at an early date.

The new movie theatre that Manager Greenough is putting up at Streator, Ill., is expected to be ready for opening early in February.

The Avenue Theatre at 3106 Indiana avenue has been taken over by Foleck and Goldsmith, who also operate the Empress and the State Congress theatres.

Edward Schiebel of the Plum Theatre, Streator, Ill., was a visitor along Film Row last week.

The Hyde Park Theatre at 5314 Lake Park avenue has been taken over by James Plodna. E. J. Walsh has been made manager. The house seats 650. Some improvements will be made.

It is reported along Film Row that Aaron Jones has resigned as managing director of the new McVickers Theatre, which recently passed under Paramount control from Jones, Linick & Schaefer. Mr. Jones will devote most of his time to the interests of his firm and supervise the new building projects that Jones, Linick & Schaefer are interested in, as they may build a couple of movie houses next year.

The well known theatrical firm of Marks, Goodman, Marks and Harrison, with offices at 1641 Roosevelt Road, has dissolved partnership and Louis Marks, with Meyer S. Marks, will be known as Marks Brothers in the future. They have taken over the management of the Broadway Strand at 1630 Roosevelt Road, the Orpheum Theatre at 1208 South Ashland avenue and the Marshall Field Theatre at 1650 West Roosevelt Road, all west side houses. Julius Goodman and Louis H. Harrison will continue in business under the firm name of Goodman and Harrison, and the Marshall Square Theatre at 2201 Marshall boulevard and the Illington Theatre, 2114 West Twenty-second, will be under their management. These houses are also located on the west side. At one time the firm was interested in building a new movie house on the north side of the city but as yet nothing has materialized in that direction.

Philip Billiet will build a $20,000 movie theatre at Annawah, Ill.

A. W. Stoolman now is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Champaign, Ill., and Charley Pyle has given up his connection with the house to devote his time to the Park Theatre in that city and other houses that he controls at Danville, Ill.

Frank Fisher, well known manager of movie houses at Kewanee and LaSalle, Ill., in the heart of the coal country, will finish the movie house at Janesville and may extend his circuit in Wisconsin.

Joe Goldsmith, Morris Froelich and Louis Mansback have formed the Follies Amusement Company, with offices at 1210 South Michigan avenue, and will operate and maintain theatres and other places of amusement showing pictures and other programs.

Ascher Brothers, who have been quietly getting rid of unprofitable theatres of the circuit for the past few years, are branching out again. Last week they leased the North Center Theatre which is to be built at Lincoln avenue, Belle Plaine and Robey street, from Jacob Horwitz for a period of twenty years from January 1, 1925, when the house is expected to be ready for the movies. J. E. O. Pridmore will be associated with Architects Oman and Lillenthal in designing and supervising the erection of the house, which will seat 3,000 and be the last word in theatre construction. The house will have a lobby 140 feet in length running through from Lincoln avenue to Robey street, making it one of the largest in the city. It is reported that the Ascher Circuit will pay $55,000 a year rental. Work will start about the middle of December on the new house.

Polka Brothers, who own the movie theatre at Glen Ellyn, Ill., plan to build a 1,000-seat house there. While the village bars Sunday movies, Polka Brothers will go ahead with their plans as soon as they can arrange terms with Sam Bowden, lessee of the movie house now being operated in the village.

When the new Washington Square Theatre is finished at Quincy, Ill., for Pinkleman and Cory, chain theatre owners, it is proposed to close the Gem and Savoy theatres on Hampshire street now operated by them and concentrate the business in the new house. Work on the Washington Square Theatre is going ahead rapidly and it is hoped to have the opening early in the spring.

Again the distributors of prize-fight pictures win out, as the management of the Rose Theatre on West Madison street will show the Dempsey-Firpo pictures to the public after securing an injunction from Judge Charles M. Foell restraining the police and city authorities from stopping the exhibition.

Manager Harry Greenman reports a big business at the New Monroe Theatre all last week, as the premiere of the Tom Mix picture, "North of Hudson Bay," was here.

Indiana

At least one and probably two new theatres are planned for South Bend, Ind., in the near future. Representatives of a group of theatrical men who operate a chain of amusement houses in the Middle West were in the city a few days ago looking for a suitable location. The proposed theatre would seat 1,600 to 1,800 and be devoted to feature productions and vaudeville. Another new theatre proposed for South Bend will be devoted exclusively to vaudeville.

Herman J. Arnold, who for several months has been managing the Lyric in Vincennes, completed a deal a few days ago by which he becomes owner and proprietor. The purchase was made from the corporation which took over the Wilkerson-Lyons enterprises. Mr. Arnold for several years managed the Red Mill, one of the first picture theatres in Vincennes, and was manager of the Lyric when it was first opened. Later he and Herman Becker purchased the theatre and then sold it to the Wilkerson-Lyons concern. Pictures will be shown at the Lyric every night in the week, with vaudeville added on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

The Paramount Theatre on West Mulberry street, Kokomo, has been sold by the Grand Theatre Corporation, headed by W. H. Arnold, to Henry Quigley, clerk of Howard county, and F. H. Summer, of Hartford City.

The Arc Theatre, for many years one of the popular picture theatres at Crawfordsville, has been sold by William Heasman to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jackson, owners of the Strand. Heasman bought the theatre in October from Clarence Stroh, who had owned and operated the place for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson bought the Strand in May.

The new Broadway Theatre, 2400 Broadway, Fort Wayne, which has been under construction since April, made its official debut to the "movie" fans of the city with Thomas Meighan in "Back, Home and Broke" as the feature. One of the features of the new theatre is a baby carriage "garage," a room just off the lobby arranged for the express purpose of "parking" baby carriages. A women's rest room is connected with the "garage." The theatre is owned by the Broadway Theatre Company, which was organized about a year ago by the men operating the Grand and Transfer theatres. H. L. Mollet is president, J. P. Mollet, manager, and R. H. Mollet, secretary-treasurer.

Ten-year Kansas Ban Lifted on "The Birth of a Nation"

Indications are that "The Birth of a Nation," after ten years of disbarment, will at last be shown in Kansas. The film was submitted for approval to the State Board of Motion Picture Review in Kansas City, Kas., by C. W. Stater, exhibitor, who claims the exclusive Kansas rights to show the film. The film was passed with certain eliminations, although the censors have not yet affixed their signatures to the official card of approval.

The picture was submitted to the present board immediately after it took office last June, but was withdrawn by Stater after it was viewed and before action was taken. The film has had a checkered career in the state. It was barred by two administrations, those of Governors Capper and Allen.

Members of the review board admitted that many eliminations would be made. The showing of the picture in Kansas has been objected to by R. G. Liggett, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, representing a majority of the exhibitors of the state. These objections are based on the nature of the film, which, in Mr. Liggett's opinion, might inspire racial prejudice.

R. W. Cassity, owner and manager of the Opera Hall at Purdin, Mo., has sold the contents of the hall to Willard Ross, who has removed them to a one-story building, which will be remodeled into an up-to-date picture house.

The Gem Theatre, a house for the colored in suburban Kansas City, and owned by Guy Shriner, has been completely and extensively remodeled and redecorated.

C. E. ("Doc.") Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, is making trips through the territory getting new members.

W. D. Fite recently sold his interest in the Novelty Theatre at Wichita, Kan., to Charles Bull, his business partner. They are still mutually interested in the Iris Theatre at Eldorado. Mr. Fite is looking for a new house in a town of about 10,000.

Perry Rhine of the Liberty Theatre, Ft. Scott, Kas., reports a very large business on "Merry Go Round," and patrons asked for a return engagement.

Sam Harding of the Capitol Enterprise Corporation, is in New York in company with Joe Cooper.

The Liberty Theatre, owned by Sam Harding, Kansas City, scored a success by the presentation of a Broadcasting Revue last week. It is a new stunt in this section and all credit goes to Lee D. Baisly, house manager. The musical program at the de luxe performances was broadcast from the theatre.

J. W. Watson of the Benton Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, has installed recently a new pipe organ.

Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman Theatre of this city and Milwaukee, is in New York.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which is making attendance history at Cox Theatre, is in its third week and still going strong. An added feature during the current week is the singing of the choir from St. George's Church at the beginning of the second part of the picture. Three special showings are being given on Dec. 1, 8 and 15, for which the Times-Star, a local daily, is offering tickets at 30 cents to every boy and girl between the ages of 6 and 16 who is a pupil of a public, private or parochial school in the city. Other holdovers for the week are "Rupert of Hentzau" at Gifts, while "Ponjola" is repeating at the Family, having previously been shown at the Strand. Both houses are a part of the Libson chain.

Roy H. Beattie, manager of the Palace Theatre, who has been ill for several months, has again been discharged from the Jewish Hospital and is back in his apartment. Beattie expects to resume his duties at the Palace at an early date.

The Chakeres Amusement Co., Springfield, Ohio, operating the Majestic, one of the largest picture houses in the city, will soon begin work on a 2,500-seat house to play Keith vaudeville and pictures, in opposition to Gus Sun's Regent Theatre. This looks like a real war, as only recently the Regent took Paramount pictures away from the Majestic, thus giving the Regent Paramount and First National. The Majestic has lost its Fox films to the Liberty, which now has Universal, Fox and Goldwyn. The Majestic has the new Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan program, while the Fairbanks, legitimate house, is grabbing up the specials between road show dates.

A. T. Loggie, as a taxpayer, has filed suit in the Common Pleas Court at Steubenville, Ohio, to restrain the city of Steubenville from leasing to the La Belle Amusement Co., headed by George Schaffer, certain city property upon which to erect a theatre. Loggie alleges that the lease was made without securing competitive bids, and that it would be imprudent to rent the city's property for the small sum of $12,500 for the first year and $15,000 annually thereafter.

Harris P. Wolfberg, manager and part owner of the Capitol Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., which was completely destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, announces that the house will be rebuilt, with a seating capacity of 2,500.

The Washington Theatre, Toronto, Ohio, a new house, will be formally opened on Christmas Day with "Merry Go Round." Peter Callageous, formerly an exhibitor of Salem, Ohio, will manage the Washington.

Rudolph Friedrich, one of the most prominent exhibitors of Lorain, Ohio, died suddenly of heart trouble. The deceased owned and operated the Elvira, Standard and Paris theatres in Lorain, and the Park at Amherst. The houses will continue under the management of his widow.

Washington, D. C.

Sunday morning belongs to the churches, in the opinion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. This was inferred from a decision rendered on a request of the Washington Chamber of Commerce for the opening of the picture theatres of this city Sunday morning, December 2, for the entertainment of the soldiers, sailors and marines who came here for the big football game the previous day.

Stock in the Crandall Ambassador and Tivoli theatres is being offered to the public at $100 par, with a 20 per cent. bonus in common stock. The first named has a capital stock issue of $350,000, of which $200,000 is preferred, while the Tivoli is capitalized at $650,000, of which $400,000 is preferred. The stock offered is 8 per cent. cumulative preferred and it is pointed out in the prospectus that no Crandall theatre has ever passed a dividend.

Triple Day and Date Booking in St. Louis on Ray Picture

Floyd Lewis, district representative for Associated Exhibitors, has concluded a deal with Spyros Skouras, head of Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company, whereby "The Courtship of Miles Standish" will play day and date at the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol, following a week's run at the Pershing Theatre, Delmar Boulevard near Hamilton Avenue, at a $1.65 top.

Such Is Fame

An amusing incident, but one having a pathetic side as well, came to light as a result of the Universal picture, "Drifting," starring Priscilla Dean, being shown at the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, recently. John A. Schwalm, who guides the destiny of the Rialto, received a letter from a local woman who, after setting forth her qualifications and references, applied for the job of caring for the theatre, explaining that she would do so much cheaper than Priscilla Dean, as she was out of work, etc.

Schwalm, although unable to determine whether the writer of the letter was a practical joker or a practical charwoman, decided to investigate and arranged for a personal interview at his office. It was then that the true facts were learned. The application had been based on a statement which Schwalm was overheard to make that Priscilla Dean was "mopping up" for him at big money. The woman, who was well along in years, took the remark literally, not knowing that the subject of the remark was a movie star. She got the job.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row during the past week included: Dr. Tettley of Flat River and Farmington, Mo.; Tom Evans of Glen Carbon, Ill.; Iscar Wesley, Gillespie, Ill.; W. L. Norman, Benld, Ill.; Tom Reed of Duquoin; George Larmer, attorney for the Reed, Yenn & Hayes Circuit; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Bob Cluster, Johnston City, and Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.

Because of adverse conditions in the coal fields of Illinois and Kentucky and parts of Missouri a number of theatres have closed. Among them are: Auditorium, Dawson Springs, Ky.; Advance, Advance, Mo.; Star, Horse Cave, Ky.; Crystal, Creal Springs, Ill.; Electric, Conway, Mo., and Bijou, Scottsville, Ill. The fact there has been no real demand for soft coal in recent weeks due to the mild weather has played havoc with financial conditions in the coal fields.

The booking arrangement between the Marquette, Palace and Majestic theatres, all located on Franklin Avenue, St. Louis, has been called off. Dr. Harry Hamburg is now looking after the bookings for the Palace and Majestic, while Frank Speros is looking after the Marquette.

Jimmy Grainger, Goldwyn official with Mrs. Grainger, was the guest of William Goldman, owner of the Kings Theatre, at a Thanksgiving Dinner at Goldman's beautiful new home at the corner of Union and Washington Boulevards. Grainger spent a few days in St. Louis.

First Egyptian-style Theatre in San Francisco Seats 2,000

The Alexandria, a $350,000 Egyptian theatre, was formally opened at San Francisco on the evening of November 26 and this city now has the first theatre of this type in Northern California. The house is located at Eighteenth avenue and Geary street, in the Park-Presidio district, and forms the nucleus of a new business section of which much is expected.

The opening was made a community affair, with Mayor James Rolph, Jr., delivering the address of the evening. Officers of the four improvement clubs of this district also participated in the dedication. The new theatre has a seating capacity of slightly less than 2,000 and has been built without a balcony, the rear section being curved in stadium fashion to provide an unobstructed view.

The Egyptian idea is carefully carried out in every detail of the house. Sphinxes guard the outer lobby and Egyptian designs are to be found everywhere. One of the interesting personalities of the house staff is the hostess, Evelyn Powers, who presides over the grand foyer, wearing an Egyptian gown and headdress. Music is furnished by Ben Black's Band and an organ presided over by Frederick Rowley.

The Alexandria is owned by Al Levin, who has been connected with the theatre business in this city for years, and George A. Oppenheimer, of George A. Oppenheimer, Inc., distributor in California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands for Warner Brothers' productions. The opening bill included "Going Up," with Douglas McLean, and "Our Gang" comedy.

The death of Thomas O'Day, which occurred at San Francisco on November 25, came as a shock to members of the picture fraternity, as there was no inkling that he was in any immediate danger from his illness. Although but 42 years old, he had been connected with the picture business for almost twenty years and at the time of his death owned picture theatres at Vallejo and Marysville and was interested in the Hippodrome Theatre in this city. He was associated with G. M. ("Bronco Billy") Anderson in the early days and directed one of the first Wild West pictures ever produced, this being filmed in Niles Canyon, near San Francisco. He is survived by a widow.

Morris Gallas, who has been operating the Isis Theatre at Twenty-first and Mission streets, San Francisco, has secured a ten-year lease on the Majestic Theatre. The house will be remodeled and new equipment will be installed by Walter A. Preddy. This theatre was originally built for the Ackerman & Harris Circuit and immediately following the great San Francisco fire was one of the best known theatres in the city.

E. C. Cunningham, who is remodeling his theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row, making selections of new equipment and arranging bookings.

Ralph Grunauer, assistant to Harry Arthur, general manager of West Coast Theatres, paid the San Francisco division a visit recently.

Charles Thall, assistant to A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres of Northern California, recently went to Stockton to confer with Nick Turner, manager of the T. & D. Theatre, and Fred Miller of the State Theatre.

A picture theatre equipped throughout by Walter A. Preddy, of San Francisco, has been opened at Yuba City, Cal., by Mrs. E. Thorndyke. This is the first theatre opened in that place.

The Star Theatre at San Juan, Cal., which has been burned twice, is being rebuilt.

William Englehardt, an exhibitor of Truckee, Cal., recently paid San Francisco one of his infrequent visits, accompanied by Mrs. Englehardt.

George Rust, of Georgetown, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco and announced that he had closed his picture theatre for the winter.

The Star Theatre at Colusa, Cal., has been purchased by L. B. Smith, of Marysville, Cal.

The presentation simultaneously of "A Woman of Paris" at the Granada and California theatres, San Francisco, proved a great success and records for attendance were smashed at the former house. Midnight shows were necessary the opening night to accommodate the crowds and seven shows a day were on the regular schedule. The stage presentation was identical for the week at both houses, the California show starting a half hour earlier than the one at the Granada to enable musicians and principals to make the switch.

The new theatre of Dr. C. H. Lindner being erected at Colma, Cal., will be opened early in January.

Oakland Theatres, Inc., has been incorporated at Oakland, Cal., with a capital stock of $500,000, by Ernest L. Brune, of Berkeley, A. M. Duncan, E. B. Smith, F. M. Moore and M. Giguere, of San Francisco.

Better Pictures, Inc., has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $200,000 by C. D. Dethiefsen, M. P. Kitchen and E. A. Fitzpatrick.

Seattle

One of the most brilliant affairs of the season was the Northwest premiere of the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Heilig Theatre, November 23. For representative brilliance the audience was as great a success as the picture. Governor Louis F. Hart and a party of eight state officials occupied boxes, as did all prominent city and county executives. Business and professional men, society, and high officials of the navy were present. An audience of 2,000 packed the house and went forth "sold" on the picture, which is doing an absolute capacity business at advance prices, with all seats reserved. A lavish exploitation campaign helped to put it over. The run will be indefinite.

In spite of this heavy competition, and the fact that "first night" was a blustery, rainy one, excellent business was done by "The Spanish Dancer," "The Virginian," "The Midnight Alarm" and "Little Old New York." It is truly a banner week for Seattle film fans.

A rumor is current that Mr. Connell, of Newman & Connell, who recently sold their two houses in Hoquiam, Wash., to Dolan & Ripley, is planning a 500-seat, 10-cent house in downtown Seattle. The site, at Third avenue, near Pike street, was formerly occupied by a cafeteria and is in the same block with the Princess Theatre, which for a time housed 10-cent first-runs last Spring.

Howard S. Clemmer has dolled up his Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, with a brand new electric sign. That's "telling the world," Doc!

Art Brown is new house manager at the Rex Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho.

Manager Frank Edwards, of the Winter Garden, hooked up with the entire postal department for his showings of "Loyal Lives." The city's 300 postal employes delivered 50,000 heralds for him. Eighty mail wagons bore mounted one-sheets advertising the pic-

A HIGH KICKER

See the exhibitor. The exhibitor is kicking. He is kicking at the high price of films. Will the exhibitor's kick reach its mark? Yea, for it packs a mighty wallop! Joe St. Peter, of the Rose Theatre, Everett, Wash., is the kicker in the picture, "Little Joe" is but six feet four. We have no less authority than that of Seth Perkins, manager of Seattle Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, who pals around with Joe, that the little chap is continually kicking about the price of Goldwyn films. Hence Perkins requested a photograph, registering the aforesaid emotion, so that he would not get lonesome when Joe was absent.

Mr. St. Peter is 73 years old. Isn't he an active chap? Perhaps 'tis kicking keeps him-so. He is an old timer in the picture business, having started about fifteen years ago with a Nickelodeon in Portland. He has owned houses in Olympia, Centralia, Everett, Bellingham and Port Angeles. He is a life member of the Elks and is president of the State Lodge. He also is a prominent Shriner. If we were Mr. Perkins we should keep a respectful distance from St. Peter's kick, unless we wanted to go visit St. Peter. This chap don't seem to have any golden key.

ture for a week in advance. To accommodate the crowds the house opens daily at 9:00 and closes at midnight, during the run of the picture. On opening day, Sunday, in spite of tremendous competition, long line-ups waited, extending for nearly a block.

A. F. Cormier planned a coup for Thanksgiving. The annual football game between Centralia and Chehalis teams is the big game of the year. Everybody turns out from the sister cities and feeling runs high. Mr. Cormier, therefore, took Alex Singelow, cameraman, down from Seattle to photograph the game, securing a good live special of about 400 feet. This he planned to spring after the close of his Thanksgiving feature, "Why Worry?", and while the game was still fresh in the minds of his patrons, who will welcome a chance to see it over again.

John Hamrick is back from New York, where he spent three weeks conferring with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan officials regarding the recently reported deal which involved his Blue Mouse theatres. Final arrangements are believed to have been made.

Manager Robert W. Bender, of the Columbia Theatre, distributes slips within his house organization for a monthly prize suggestion contest, which brings as its reward at least one cash prize every month.

Two Impressive Ceremonies Mark Philadelphia Opening

Two impressive ceremonies marked the opening of the new $2,000,000 Fox Theatre in Philadelphia during the week. The first of these took place on Sunday evening when an audience of invited guests witnessed in private showing the first film, "The Silent Command," to be shown in the handsome new structure at Sixteenth and Market streets and a program of elaborate scope. The house was filled to capacity and the enthusiastic demonstrations that greeted speakers and film gave ample proof of the warm welcome extended by the Quaker City public to this Fox amusement enterprise, with its beauty and luxurious comfort. Dedication of the building was made by Mayor-elect Freeland Kendrick following a short introduction by former Judge John M. Patterson. The mayor-elect complimented William Fox and the management on the introduction to the city of this highest type of picture establishment.

On Monday, when the theatre was opened to the public, another special program was arranged. The dedication program consisted of a prologue dedicated to William Penn and employed a male ensemble of 20 voices. Then followed a special edition of the Fox News Weekly of luminaries in Philadelphia public life, a soprano soloist, a prologue to the main play and "The Silent Command," produced with the co-operation of a number of naval officers stationed at League Island, who were present at the opening.

The theatre seats 2,500 comfortably, with spacious aisles giving easy access to the seats, luxuriously upholstered. The building also includes a sixteen-story office structure above the auditorium, and is constructed throughout of reinforced steel, concrete, marble and terra cotta. All of the interior doors and trimmings are of furniture steel with baked enamel finish.

A spacious foyer and lobby on the Market street side is finished in Italian marble with solid marble floors to match. The auditorium has a balcony and orchestra with three rows of loge seats and two rows of proscenium boxes, seventy in all, fitted with stuffed floss divans. An artistic decorative scheme predominates throughout the entire house, old rose brocade being used as background against Convent Sienna marble, with blue Belge marble basing. The latest projection machines are used and for the first time in Philadelphia a rubber screen on the stage. The organ is the largest in the city and has the console mounted on a hydraulic pressure elevator which raises the organist six feet above the level of the orchestra platform.

In addition to a diversified show program it is the purpose of Manager Ernesto Rapee to include pretentious prologues to the main features and to be distinctive in themselves.

Over-exertion, caused by chasing a gang of colored boys from the front of his theatre, the Lloyd, in Chester, Pa., caused the death last week of D. D. Neild, who resided at 3339 North Seventeenth street, Philadelphia. Mr. Neild, who was lessee and manager of the Lloyd, caught one of the gang and brought him back to the theatre, where he called the police to place him under arrest. As the policeman entered the office, Neild said: "This is the cause of all my trouble. Lock him up and I'll appear against—" The sentence was never finished, for he fell into the arms of the policeman. With the assistance of the projectionist, John McElwee, the body was removed to the hospital where he was pronounced dead, and later the remains brought to his Philadelphia home, from where burial services were held.

When an automobile delivery truck belonging to Oscar Ginn, owner of the Ginn chain of picture theatres in Wilmington, Delaware, took fire last week, twenty-six reels of films as well as the truck were destroyed. The truck, driven by H. H. Grubb, was transporting the films from Philadelphia exchange houses to Wilmington and took fire near Holyoke, Delaware. The loss is estimated at $2,000 for the film and $2,500 for the auto. There was no insurance.

Allegheny Theatre Company Transfers Hollen and Cooper

Paul Hollen, for the past several years manager of the Oakford Theatre at Richmond, W. Va., has been transferred to the Lyric Theatre, Beckley. This theatre is the newest and seventh addition to the chain of houses owned in West Virginia by the Allegheny Theatre Company.

C. E. Cooper, of Hinton, will take charge of the Oakford house. For the past year he has been managing the Temple and Masonic theatres at Hinton, and has been with the Allegheny Theatre Company since its organization.

The company has moved its offices from Hinton to Beckley. P. L. Dysard, general manager, will be located in the last named city.

F. N. McCullough, of the Cameo Theatre, Oil City, Pa., has a method of preparing slides that any exhibitor will find useful. Paint the space to be lettered with white show-card ink. After it is dry, scratch what you have to say on it with a nail. This will show white letters against a black background on the screen.

Eugene Quigley, for the past year manager of the Kearse Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., has resigned his position owing to illness, and has gone to his home in Chicago to undergo further treatment.

Harry C. Gordon, manager of the Fairmont Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., resigned his position. Mr. Gordon has been manager of the new $400,000 house since its opening on June

3. He has not made known his future plans, but stated that he would assist during December in "breaking in" the new manager to succeed him, whose name at this writing has not been given out by the West Virginia Amusement Company, owners of the theatre.

Leopold Miller will build a new picture theatre at Elm Grove, W. Va. The present theatre building will be incorporated in the new structure.

Charlie Couch, who for years has conducted the Grand Theatre at Carnegie, Pa., is looking for a buyer, as he intends to take his family to California next spring.

Canada

William Cranston of Toronto, pioneer showman and prominent for years in Canadian picture circles, is critically ill with Bright's disease. He is looked upon as the dean of exchange men in the Dominion, his achievements including the taking of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" as road shows throughout the length and breadth of Canada and Alaska on a number of trans-continental tours. After these tours, he was with the Allens at Toronto for a time and then became Canadian general manager for United Artists Corporation, after which he joined up with Ernest Shipman for the distribution of Shipman's Canadian-made productions.

Texas

Robberies of picture theatres in Dallas, Texas, have occurred so frequently that few exhibitors are leaving large sums in the theatre safes. Perhaps the fifth or sixth attempt of its kind was made at the Rialto Theatre, in the loop district of Oak Cliff, suburb of Dallas, recently. As Manager Jack Hadra was preparing to leave the theatre late at night, three suspicious characters parked their auto a few feet from the theatre. Hadra determined to stand his ground and at this moment a city detective came on the scene. Hadra and the detective ran for the men to do battle, but the would-be yeggmen entered their car and sped away. The Rialto, incidentally, lost several hundred dollars when yeggmen blew open the safe recently.

The Happyland Theatre, Dallas, running tab and pictures, has been leased by R. A. Carter, who has renamed it the Lyric.

The Dye, Ford and Rogers panhandle circuit has reopened the Mission Theatre at Wichita Falls, Texas.

A change of interest has occurred at El Paso, Texas. J. M. Edgar Hart has taken over the management of the Unique Theatre, T. M. Hervey relinquishing that job after more than ten years at the helm. For the first time in years, the Unique will offer first-run pictures only.

Work has been started on the new $750,000 picture theatre in Shreveport, La., for the Saenger-Ehrlich interests. It will be rushed to completion. The Saengers' new theatre at Pine Bluff, Ark., is progressing rapidly.

A. R. Powell, who for some years managed the Sugg and Kozy theatres in Chickasha, Okla., has purchased the Highland Theatre at Guthrie, Okla., and now is managing it.

John N. Stewart, who with his brother, M. D. Stewart, operates a theatre in DeLeon, Texas, has bought the building housing the Wonderland Theatre, Kaufman, Texas.

A. L. Middleton, one of the best known small-town exhibitors in the United States, has sold his theatre at DeQueen, Ark., and is looking for a location either in Arkansas, Texas or Oklahoma.

Omaha

The Marcus Loew interests of New York are given control of the Empress Theatre of Omaha within fifteen days, according to the terms of the decree filed by Federal Judge Woodrough at Omaha more than a week ago. As previously reported in this paper, Loew sued for possession of the Empress in the federal court at Omaha, claiming that he had a purchase contract with W. N. LeDoux, former owner, before the latter sold the theatre to the World Realty Company of Omaha. The decree directs LeDoux now to deliver the assignment to Samuel A. Shirley, Loew's Omaha representative.

E. F. Blazer, attorney for LeDoux, said an appeal bond had been filed with the circuit court of appeals at St. Louis. If this is not approved, he said, the Loew interests would get possession at once. Otherwise they would have to wait until the appeal is decided. The appeal cannot be heard until next June. S. A. McIntyre, local manager for Metro, said Metro is prepared to put in its pictures at once if given control.

Judge Woodrough's decree further directs B. H. Dunham of the federal court to determine what if any damages have been sustained by the Loew interests in the alleged failure of LeDoux to carry out his original sale contract with Loew.

The Palm Theatre, Omaha, was damaged by fire about $2,000. Fortunately the blaze started at 1:15 A. M. and so the house was vacant. The cause is unknown, but it is thought someone may have thrown a lighted cigar or cigaret on the floor at the last performance in the evening.

Children Banned from Dancing in Watertown, N. Y., Theatres

Some of the Watertown, N. Y., exhibitors found themselves in hot water the past week when twelve children of that city, all under 16 years of age, were summoned before Judge H. F. Porter and charged with a violation of the law by dancing at amateur productions in several of the local theatres. Some months ago, considerable attention was aroused when a young girl who had been dancing in the theatres of that city, was brought before the court, and as a result the child was ordered to discontinue the practice. It appears that the theatres have been offering prizes and drawing good crowds. But this practice will now have to cease, according to the courts.

Many exhibitors in northern New York will regret to learn that Edgar B. Haines, who has been covering this section of the state since last May for Universal, has quit his position and gone to Newark, N. J., where he will enter the real estate business. Mr. Haines drove his territory and was always ready to help an exhibitor out whether it be in the projection room, or ushering. Many exhibitors will recall his excellent photographs of northern New York scenery.

With a prize of $25 to the person who guessed the identity of the greatest number of business men of the city, who appeared in celluloid, with backs turned, the Avon in Watertown, N. Y., did a whoppin' business the past week. The idea was entirely new locally and caught on in wonderful shape. This week the picture is being shown with the faces of the men, so that everyone, whether prize winner or not will know how good a guess he or she made.

Co-operating with the Mark Strand in Albany, the trolley company of that city assisted materially in the first of the Junior Movies last Saturday, when over 800 children were splendidly entertained under the auspices of the Albany Mothers' Club. Without cost, the trolley company brought all of the children from the orphanages to the theatre. Girl Scouts served as ushers. The next Junior Movie will be held on the morning of December 29 at the same theatre and "Circus Days" will be shown.

Many exhibitors in this section have booked "The Chronicles of America." The list includes the American of Troy, Park of Hudson, Orpheum of Amsterdam, Royal of Albany, Lincoln, Pearl and Happy Hour of Schenectady, Robbins-Eckel of Syracuse, Olympic of Watertown, Avon of Utica, Strand of Pittsfield, as well as Lou Buettner's entire circuit.

Every child in Watertown who brought a bundle of used clothing to the Avon of that city last Wednesday afternoon was admitted free of charge to a showing of "Circus Days." The bundles were later on handed over to the Salvation Army and distributed among the poor people. There was a similar plan at the same theatre last year which netted something more than 1,000 bundles. The mayor of the city heartily endorsed the scheme.

Some idea of the success which has attended the management of the Leland Theatre in Albany by Oscar Perrin can be gained from the fact that Mr. Perrin has now decided to open the gallery of the house and charge the same admission as on the first floor and balcony. And what is more, Mr. Perrin is getting it not only from the men but from the women. The gallery used to resemble a dungeon, but fresh paint and lights have made it attractive to the extent that patrons prefer to sit there to standing.

"Little Old New York" made a record at the Lincoln in Troy last week and is being held over for this week. In Schenectady the same picture last week established a new box office record at the State. In Rome it opened on Thanksgiving Day for 50 cents, the highest price ever paid for a picture in that city, and played to capacity audiences.

It's a safe bet that Oscar Perrin, who manages the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany, will not be obliged to do much in the way of Christmas shopping for his children this year. Every souvenir that comes Mr. Perrin's way goes home to gladden the hearts of the children.

William Shirley, of the Farash Theatre Corporation in Schenectady, announces that he has bought the entire year's output of F. B. O. Mr. Shirley is entertaining Al Boasberg of New York this week.

A singer, with slides, was tried out at the Albany Theatre here last week, and judging from the hearty reception given, the idea will be further employed by Samuel Suckno, owner of the house.

Morris Silverman, who has made a small fortune out of two theatres in Schenectady, now is dickering for the Barcli in that city, a house which was recently purchased by R. V. Erk of Ilion. It is said that the house is being held for $25,000.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Vineberg observed their wedding anniversary last Wednesday night by attending the Elks' ball in Albany. Incidentally, it was the first night that Mr. Vineberg had taken off from his duties as manager of the Mark Strand in many a week.

Among the visitors in Albany last week was M. E. Troy, who runs houses in Chatham and Hudson. And another who greeted the representative of the Moving Picture World was L. L. Connors of Cambridge.

Court Decides Against Loew in Buffalo Theatre Dispute

Under a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals, the Golde Clothes Shop, Inc., is given the right of possession of the Main street lobby of Loew's State Theatre. Simon Fleischmann, attorney for the Golde interests, asserts he has the right to ask that a writ be issued to the sheriff to force the Loew interests out of the lobby in Main street and put the Golde Clothes Shop there. The heads of the Golde interests in New York will be consulted, however, before such a move is made. The legal battle between the Loew's Buffalo Theatres, Inc., and the Golde Clothes Shop, Inc., has been waged for over two years and has been in every court in the state. Maurice C. Spratt, who died last Monday, was counsel for the Loew interests.

Sydney Samson, president of the Film Board of Trade, has appointed the following committee to arrange for a Get-Together Dinner-Dance late this month: Henry W. Kahn, Metro; Bob Wagner, Hodkinson; Clayton P. Sheehan, Fox; Howard F. Brink, Educational, and Mr. Samson, Bond. James Speer of Dependable exchange has been appointed a member of the Film Board of Trade.

Harry Abbott has closed the Criterion Theatre, refusing longer to sink money into a losing venture. Mr. Abbott is about the tenth to try and put this theatre over.

In order that Ben Berinstein would get his show on the screen in time for the evening show at the Majestic, Elmira, L. Mullen, booker at the Renown exchange, drove his new Chevrolet all the way from Buffalo to Elmira with the film, arriving a few minutes before the evening performance started. Then he started home with the thanks of the management.

Eddie Weinberg, former manager of the local Strand, is alive and well in London, according to a post card which arrived in town this week. Ed is manager of one of the Universal houses in the British metropolis. He is stopping at the Hotel Cecil.

Charlie Hayman had a terrible time in Niagara Falls on Thanksgiving Day. His show failed to arrive and he became so worried over it that he could not eat a thing from the table packed high with Thanksgiving delicacies.

The old Academy Theatre in lower Main street, recently opened by Al Sherry, is attracting S. R. O. business. This house was put down as another impossibility but Al is putting it over like a house afire.

James Cardina received many congratulations on his beautiful neighborhood house, the New Varsity, which was opened to the public Tuesday evening, November 27. The house was literally buried in flowers on opening night.

Record Attendance Marks in Milwaukee Thanksgiving Week

Thanksgiving week found Milwaukee houses playing some of the biggest attractions of the season, with record attendance marks being generally set as a result. Ascher Merrill, managed by Roy C. MacMullen, selected the holiday season for the opening of "Little Old New York," and true to expectations and its run in other cities, the picture shattered all records and gave indications that it would enjoy a healthy run of three or four weeks.

Starting Friday, Nov. 23, the film drew 4,200 patrons on the opening day, most of them social and business leaders of the city who responded to special invitations from Mr. MacMullen. Saturday and Sunday even eclipsed this mark, approximately 4,500 being on hand on each day.

Running neck and neck with the Merrill were Saxe's Strand, the Alhambra, Garden and Butterfly, other downtown houses, each featuring unusual programs.

At the Strand, Eddie Weisfeldt held over for a second week "Flaming Youth" after that picture had set a mark for attendance during its first week. The film equalled the attendance figure established by "Safety Last," Harold Lloyd's picture which figured in a sensational run at the Strand several months ago. As a result of the decision to hold "Flaming Youth" for a second week, Mr. Weisfeldt postponed "Three Ages."

At the Alhambra, the offering was "If Winter Comes" and attendance during the first few days indicated that the public would demand a second week of this picture from Leo A. Landau, manager. The Garden, Mr. Landau's other downtown house, meanwhile showed "The Acquittal" and packed them in likewise.

The Butterfly, with an extensive advertising campaign to help it regain its former position as a first run house, featured Mae Murray in "Fashion Row," and according to A. J. Cooper, new owner, drew capacity.

The admission tax war in Wisconsin has taken on a new meaning with the seizure of the Strand Theatre at Kenosha by the Government for the alleged non-payment of tax. According to A. H. Wilkinson, internal revenue collector at Milwaukee, the theatre will be sold shortly to satisfy the claim of the government for $2,212.

Rick Ricketson Wins Paramount Prize With Huge Two-State Touring Pageant

OFFERING prizes aggregating $700 for the best stunts worked by a Paramourteer on Paramount Month brought out hundreds of good ideas and landed thousands of dollars worth of publicity. The first prize could have been awarded immediately following the close of the contest, but the decision as to the other three winners held up the judges. These were Claud Saunders, director of exploitation; A. M. Bottsford, advertising manager; Charles E. McCarthy, publicity manager; L. J. Bamberger, assistant to Saunders, and Sam D. Palmer.

They have announced that the awards have been made to Rick Ricketson, Denver; Russell B. Moon, New Haven; Kenneth O. Renaud, Salt Lake City, and Joseph T. Emmerling, Omaha, in that order. The prize money was split $250, $200, $150 and $100.

Rick Never Headed

Ricketson took his cue from the constant appeal of his chief to promote the small towns as well as the cities. It has been Mr. Saunders' constant thought to persuade his exploitation staff to help the little houses, which most sorely need such help, and Rick's stunt was planned to provide each town within reach with the nucleus of a local celebration of some sort that would put over the idea of Paramount Month.

Early in the summer he arranged with the Willys-Knight factory to loan him a chassis on which he could build a tableau float. This was provided with advertising material for Paramount and carried a gas tank for the inflation of balloons, a generator and searchlight and a bombing machine.

Planned Ahead

Through correspondence and personal solicitation Rick sold the idea to his entire territory. The Mountain States Theatres Corporation agreed to provide two additional floats and supply thirty framed banners and cutouts provided that Ricketson would tour their territory first. After that he could have the floats and banners for the other towns.

Other theatres were tied to some local scheme, a baby show here, a popularity contest there, and a beauty contest somewhere else. Each local manager planned what he could, and where possible hooked the idea to some civic enterprise, such as the opening of a new paved highway at Golden, fairs of Weld and Adams counties and the Pike's Peak Festival. At Grand Junction an escort of cowboys and girls met the tourists and guided them into town, the Mayor of Delta turned over the keys of the city, and in default of anything definite, the Mayor of one town would send a message to his brother in the next stopping place and the delivery of the message would be the feature of that event.

A Continuous Performance

On September 1, Ricketson started out to cover the territory, working first for the Mountain States, as agreed. Four, six and even eight towns were made in a single day, the events being timed so that the touring floats could come into a town, head the parade, stir things up and rush on to the next booking.

On arrival in each town the salute was fired, the special stunts were observed, the parade toured the business streets, and then two six foot gas balloons would be sent up, with passes or fan fotos attached. These balloons were purchased in bulk and by this means the cost was cut to $1.25 for the pair.

As soon as the balloons were released, the trio of floats would rush off to the next town, and hold a similar celebration there. In the early evening the searchlight would be put to good use.

The Willys-Knight Company had broadcast instructions to all agents to line up the W-K owners, and at no point did the line drop below twenty cars in support of the floats and often rose to seventy or eighty. The cut shows the head end of a 75-car parade in Canon City, with the Mayor riding with Rick.

Over in Wyoming

It was not possible to cover all of Wyoming as well as Colorado, so Rick arranged with the Rialto Theatre, Casper, to handle a popularity contest with a trip to Hollywood as the prize. The usual subscription

After a Word

Close-Up, the house organ for Paramount theatres department, is after "pretentious," and Mort. Bloomstock is on the trail of those who misuse this habitually misused word.

It does not mean "elaborate," but rather connotes trickery and the effort to impress through misrepresentation. Paramount managers are being urged to drop it from their vocabularies, and it would be well if others not under Harold B. Franklin's observation followed suit. Put it into the same pen with "replica"—and lock the door on the outside.

vote was used, and at a cost of about $500 the Rialto not only did a huge current business, but sold off about $6,000 worth of tickets, many if not most of which will be used during the dull pre-Christmas days.

The winner was sent to Hollywood and a pictorial record was made of the trip, which included a trip to Portland by water and a return from there. Under the title of "Miss Wyoming in Hollywood," the winner was featured in a personal scenic, which was run with a trailer made up of scenes from the current product to the end of the year.

As the contest was statewide and the papers taking news service from the Casper paper used the story daily, thousands of lines of publicity were given all of the exhibitors in the state at no cost to the theatres or Paramount. For that matter the entire cost to Paramount did not require a fourth figure for its expression, and brought in publicity worth a hundred times the cost. Rick earned his $250 and more.

Remember that 1924 is going to need a Mid-night Matinee. Don't overlook this real money.

RICK RICKETSON'S PAGEANT CAR AT THE HEAD OF THE PARADE IN CANON CITY COLORADO

You will note the Mayor riding in the car, silk hat and all. Most of the mayors along the route were glad to cooperate because in every town the pageant was hooked to some local event. In Canon City the Daily Record offered cash prizes for the best floats and seventy-five cars were lined up in the parade. This stunt was worked forty times in Colorado and Wyoming.

Planted Skeleton of Capt. Applejack

Thirty-three different angles were worked by Oral D. Cloakey for Strangers of the Night when that picture came to the Regent Theatre, Ottawa. Some of the numbers are two or more parts of a related stunt, but they are all separate items.

His most sensational stunt was to plant the skeleton of Capt. Applejack in an excavation along with a heavy iron box. This was fixed with the police, but apparently not with the workmen on the job, and the result was a sensation when the steam shovel dug up the skeleton, which was carted off to the police station. The following day the box was forced open and found to contain four passes to the Regent for Strangers of the Night. The first day newspaper stories were guardedly worded, because the reporters evidently had their suspicions, but about a third of a column was pretty good, even at that, and the papers were able to save space when the box was opened the following day and the contents reported.

Mr. Cloakey also worked the treasure hunt as outlined in the Bonns-Ferguson yellow kids, but he added his own touch by requiring that the finder of the treasure be in possession of a copy of the co-operating newspaper in which the location of the treasure was hinted at. The treasure was represented by certificates good for a pair of seats or cash sums ranging from one to ten dollars. All had to be presented to Capt. Applejack himself at the newspaper office, which was the excuse for a picturesque pirate in the newspaper's counting room.

A special screening was made for the press, and two hundred well known persons were invited to swell the audience. Both newspapers were given co-operative pages, and a safe company gave both its windows to a double display. One side showed an old-fashioned safe with the door wrenched off and a burglar departing with his loot. The other side showed one of the safes manufactured by the exhibiting company, with the burglar's tools all broken, the safe proof against strangers of the night.

A different angle was found for a sporting goods store. Here a tent was set up in a woodland dressing. Inside the tent was a figure with a gun, sharply silhouetted against the canvas wall by a strong light.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AFTER a week's rest, during which time they aided in the broadcasting through Station WEAJ of the Brooklyn Mark Strand first radio concert, the members of the singing chorus are back again, appearing in three numbers on the program with Mary Pickford's "Rosita." Jerry and Her Piano Quartette were held over for this program, making a line-up of four musical presentations in addition to the Topical Review and a special comedy on the supper show. Out of the two-hour show the musical part took up twenty-three minutes, the Review eight minutes and the feature one hour and twenty-nine minutes.

The Piano Girls, with pianos set at different angles from the week previous, opened without lights excepting individual baby spots which were placed in the instruments to pick out only the face of the player. Deep blue plush cyclorama was used as background to contrast the drop of last week. After a minute two light amber and two light pink spots overhead dimmed up, followed by red borders and blue footlights. This lighting remained to the close, as only two numbers, "Bit by Bit" and "Canadian Capers," were played. Seven minutes, with no lighting from the front.

The Symphonized Jazz, five minutes, was special arrangement of "Moonlight Kisses" and "No, No, Nora." Two 150-ampere Mestrum floods from the booth, magenta color, flooded the entire stage, with one dome flood of same amperage hitting the right half of orchestra with orange and another dome flood on left half with light blue. Purple borders large stage. Six color blend spots and three box lamps of same color hitting silver draw curtains through the glass traps across the stage behind the foots, shooting from beneath. Two arch spots, color blend, hitting silver draws from the sides. Transparent fabrics columns at proscenium arch color blend top and bottom.

As Thanksgiving Day falls in this week,

This stranger of the night was a stuffed bear.

A burglar alarm system supplied its red emergency cars for perambulators and Kreenser's "Prayer of Thanksgiving," sung by the chorus, lends the proper atmosphere. The back drop was neutral blue, with set piece landscape winter scene five feet high across stage one foot in front of the drop. Church with transparent windows, lighted from behind, at the left. The chorus of eighteen girls costumed as Pilgrims entered from the left in twos, threes and fours, grouping center stage for the song. X-rays of small stage light blue. Two light blue box lamps on the set, with two color blend arch spots shooting across from side to side. Large borders green-blue. Two dome Mestrum spots, one deep blue and one purple, on musicians alone. Light blue transparent windows. At finish the number was closed in by silver draws.

After the chorus, seated in with the orchestra, had sung Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" for Armistice Memorial scenes in the Review, the "Rosita" atmospheric prologue was presented. Backed up by deep blue plush cyclorama was a huge set-piece fan of Spanish design, upon which were hung several bright shawls. A raised platform copied from the photoplay was in front of the fan, and grouped around this at opening were the eighteen singers in Spanish costume. They sang "Spanish Serenade," and at finish Mlle. Francelli, made up as Mary Pickford in the picture, came on from left and onto the platform, as a basso, made up as male support in the film, entered from right. Dancer went through "La Rosita" dance, with interpolated business, and then followed specially written song, "Rosita," by the bass, with a close by the ensemble. A 150-ampere light blue flood from the dome covered the stage, with magenta x-rays, and rose and amber spots from the sides on the shawls. Overhead spots on the set were amber, orange, light blue and light pink. Front lights included two booth Mestrum floods, orange, on sides and orchestra. Two light amber transparent windows, and red borders large stage.

placarded every client's home or place of business with the statement that "These premises are protected against Strangers of the Night by the Dominion Messenger and Signal Co." The same company also occupied a vacant store window with a display of the apparatus used in its system. The emergency cars also invaded Hull, just across the river, where you go to get a drink.

Has Sorority Party for Spanish Dancer

John E. Kenebeck, who has been doing unusually good work for Paramount in the Des Moines territory, has been promoted. When the exploitation staff was shot to pieces John was sent out to Australia to see what he could do out there.

Just before he left he used a novel stunt for The Spanish Dancer, about to play at the Des Moines Theatre. He wanted something out of the way so he persuaded one of the societies of Drake University to give a Spanish Surprise Party at the home of one of the local graduates the Friday before the opening. Members of the sorority and society people were present in numbers and the surprise was a preview of the picture and the display of the wedding dress worn by the star in the picture, and which had been loaned by the Lasky organization. This was worn by one of the members of the society. After this use it was put on a dummy and set into a dry goods store window as shown in the cut.

WHAT CAR DO YOU SUPPOSE TRILBY HAS? A LAFAYETTE

One of the girl ushers at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, looked almost as much like Andree Lafayette as she thought she did, so they dressed her up, put her in a Lafayette car and sent her around town to tell of the coming of the play.

Trilby Model's Car Match for Her Name

Things came pretty soft for one of the girl ushers at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, the time they played Trilby. She looked something like Andree Lafayette and the resemblance was heightened by the costume they gave her. The Lafayette Motors Co. made it a family affair by donating a car and a banner told that Andree rode in a Lafayette, "of course."

When she was not driving around she was used in the lobby to preside over the shoe and stocking displays, the usual window hookups being used in the stores tied to this scheme.

Special work consisted of a painted sign on the side of the theatre and a 24-sheet board in one of the very few spots available for posting in Market street. There was a lavish display of paper elsewhere and the co-operating concerns took extra newspaper space to ride on the general campaign.

Ray Coffin, for Richard Watson Tully, and Charmes M. Thall, publicity manager for the West Coast Theatres, collaborated on the stunts and put over the production with a big bang.

Rented a Store

An entirely new twist was given the window stunt when The Green Goddess played the Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J.

The Goldwyn exploitation man suggested a reproduction of the scene of the airplane crash in a window in a vacant store, and the Distinctive studio made the set and the figures of George Arliss and the others who figure in that scene.

It attracted so much attention that the store was hired by a man who figured that if half as many looked into his window it was a good location.

When the Capitol Theatre, the T. & D. house in Sacramento, played Dulcy, M. B. Hustler tied an automobile accessories store to the picture with the urge not to be a Dulcy, but to buy a specified brand of tire chains and avoid skidding. It did not cost much for the card and it helped popularize the play with motorists, who urged others not to be Dulcys when they were caught without chains.

Poster Competition Helps in Three Ways

Making a poster competition the chief publicity stunt on Jackie Coogan in Circus Days put the picture over for the Rialto Theatre, Champaign, Ill.

The town has the State college and Charles Pyle, with some help from Al Sobler, hooked the art class to a practical competition. The university paper got back of the idea and put it over to the students, and the local sheets came in with comment when the best examples were displayed in store windows. That stunt alone might have put the picture over, but Mr. Pyle got hold of a woman clown and sent her around the streets with a team of goats and a trained duck, all three with clown ruffs around their necks. The tobacco hook-up was used and the Potash and Perlmutter Firpo stunt was adapted to a local football stunt. The explanation as to why the U. of I. would win the coming football game was that they had the best line-up, just as the Rialto had the best show. It was not very cleverly adapted, but it was an appeal to college pride and so it helped.

Trailed

Because Potash and Perlmutter in stage form had pleased Great Falls, Mont., among other places, William Steele, of the Liberty Theatre, spent most of his advertising money to tell his world that the screen version was better than the original with "Much as you enjoyed the play, you will admit that the picture is much better."

They came to find out and most of them voted in the affirmative.

CLOWN AND CARTOONS HELP JACKIE COOGAN IN CIRCUS DAYS IN ILLINOIS

A Poster Competition, open to the students of the University of Illinois, got publicity in the local ad. college papers as well as in store windows, for the Rialto Theatre. This was built up with a ballyhoo as shown in the companion cut, a woman dressed as a clown steering a goat team and a clown duck through the streets. The tobacco hook-up was employed to good advantage.

Baby Peggy Is Now Subscription Agent

Using the Baby Peggy Doll to get subscriptions is a new form of co-operation which appeals to the newspapers and brings the theatres using these comedies a lot of exploitation not charged against the house.

The Evening Sentinel, Milwaukee, gave a doll for five six months' subscriptions, provided the names were new, and the Atlantic City Press Union used a gross of the dolls on a similar scheme. Both used page displays to put the appeal over. Papers in Lancaster, Pa., and Rochester, N. Y., have used the stunt with similarly good results, and the idea is spreading through the efforts of Century Comedies publicity.

The newspapers naturally have to play up Peggy's screen appearances at the local houses, and in some instances they have handled the Baby Peggy Club idea as a further exploitation.

All the manager has to do is to book in the comedies.

Having worked out the Peggy resemblance contests, the publicity department is planting the subscription scheme with a Baby Peggy Sundae in a formative stage to follow this. A picture on this page shows how the sundae worked in the window of one of the most popular candy stores in the theatrical section of Broadway. The photographer did not bring out the advertising matter very clearly, but in addition to the seven photographs there are two dolls and three window cards, a good score for a single window.

Uses Full Pages in Neighborhood Towns

Most managers think that they are hustling along at top speed when they take a full page in the home town paper now and then. J. C. Wodetsky, of the Murray Theatre, Richmond, Ind., fades them with four full-page displays for The Bright Shawl in as many feeder towns, Centreville, New Paris, Fountain City and Boston. Each page also carried a large cut of Harold Lloyd on the facing page as a compliment.

Mr. Wodetsky writes that this out-of-town drive builds business every day and is especially good for the supper shows on Saturday and Sunday. It gives him a standout on the swing shows on those two days, and runs up his box office record most pleasingly.

He adds that this is not an experiment, but that he has made it work in Bridgeport and New Haven, when he was with Poli, and in Kalamazoo, with the Butterfield circuit. Having given it a full try, he is passing it along for the rest.

Small-town full pages do not cost a great deal of money, and all they pick up is pure velvet. The manager who overlooks full drives on his surrounding territory is losing money, unless he happens to be packing his house every day, every show, with local patronage.

Mr. Wodetsky sends in a personal letter head that is as shrillingly quiet as a calliope at a baby's funeral. It's terribly loud, but it tells the world that 21 years of experience in promotion has converted him to publicity ideas even on a personal letter head. It is not that he is swell headed. He is merely taking some of his own medicine, and the Murray owners will tell you that his medicine is a pretty good tonic.

A Waiting List

Tod Browning, the First National franchise holder in New Haven, has something new. You've read until you were tired about the tremendous crowds around a show window. Tod tells of a waiting list.

When he had Ashes of Vengeance at the Olympia he decided to tell about it, so he hooked a store to a resemblance contest, with Norma (alias Omar), pearls and a wrist watch and box parties as the prizes. Then he got an "original" costume for the window and was sitting pretty, but the store people had to call a cop. The cop saw to it that each person got a good look and then made way for the next.

And he further adds that the policeman on duty at the theatre estimated that at times the line in front of the box office was a thousand persons long. To prove it he submits a photograph of a crowd of 1,023 persons, the odd 23 being onlookers on the other side of the lobby.

Didn't Worry

With Irene "herself" as competition, L. A. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., almost broke his record on Dr. Jack with Why Worry? and at almost no cost, since he got the bulk of his space free. It took two days of hard rains to keep him below the top figures on the other Lloyd picture.

Part of his space he won with a hook-up page with the merchants and he got a total of three-fourths of a page with the old names-in-the-classified-ads stunt.

Working Again

The laughing Okeh record was dug out to knock them for a goal at the Strand Theatre. Two of the laughing heads of Harold Lloyd were placed on either side of the instrument, and the record was run with a repeater.

H. C. Farley remembered that this had worked well in other places with Dr. Jack, and he was pleased to find that it did just as much for Why Worry?

GETTING AN ENTIRE WINDOW FOR COMEDIES ALONE

The Newman theatres in Kansas City got a full window for Lloyd Hamilton and Mermaid Comedies shown at their theatres, and put a permanent kick in the announcements of their small features through the coming season. They make money on comedies.

Took Entire Window for Comedy Program

Realizing that comedies sell many more tickets than most managers realize, the Newman theatres in Kansas City framed a window in a kodak-pen shop for the Mermaid Comedies, which they feature on their programs.

There were pictures of the stars, a few scenes, mention of the most imminent comedies and dates for the next booking, and the passersby got the idea that comedies must be worth while if a theatre went to so much trouble.

With the Newman, Royal and Star all using Mermaids, this comparatively slight effort gave all three houses a stinger for the small features that will last well into the season. Sure they are only two reels long, but if a two-reeler can sell tickets, why not talk about them even if you do happen to regard them as bobtails? Help them to make all the money for you that you can get. Most managers would be surprised could they get actual figures on the direct drawing value of the comedies, which often sell over a non-appealing feature title. The Newman knows.

Atlanta Theatre in Yellow Sheet

Although most of the tried out stunts in the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan "yellow sheets" are those worked during the run of the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, makes the grade with an exceptionally good house front on The Green Goddess. This has been reproduced and attached to the book. The Metropolitan has every reason to be all swelled up. The cut on this page gives a better idea of the stunt. Smoke can be used if incense pots can be put where the painted braziers now stand. Since this is atop the marquee the use of incense is not necessary. Any material that will make a heavy, visible smoke can be used, or a steam pipe can be run up from the boiler room if the latter is conveniently located. Attachment can also be made to a radiator.

The yellow book on The Green Goddess is a clash of color schemes, but it is worth a lot of money to the man who is going to play the Arliss production, for it lists stunts suitable for any type of theatre and at costs ranging from almost nothing to about half what the idea is worth. Each of these yellow books seem to be a little better than the last one, and they reflect great credit upon the editors, Eddie Bonns and W. R. Ferguson.

Fed the Stars

Booking Potash & Perlmutter into his Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, the same week Carr and Bernard were at the drama house in the next volume, Col. Fred Levy gave a luncheon to the stellar lights and invited others of prominence to complete the party.

And, in spite of his efforts, the story of the luncheon got into the papers rather extensively, and somehow it did not hurt business in the least. For that matter it helped both screen and stage play.

This Auto Dealer Advertised Penrod

It is to be taken for granted that there is always a free matinee on Penrod and Sam. But you can make this special work better if you give it a new form. Pass the cigars to Sid Lawrence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids.

E. C. Sackett is an automobile dealer. Sackett was given the passes and advertised that he wanted every child in the Furniture City to see this wonderful story of childhood days.

He was so anxious that all the kiddies should get a chance that he offered free tickets. All any child had to do was to come to the store with the name of some person who was in the market for an automobile, the details as to the type of car he desired and the make of his present boat.

Of course, there was a lot of duplication and some deception, but Sackett got a lot more information than the big display advertisement he used cost him, and Lawrence contributed the tickets, which cost him less than the newspaper space would have done.

And then you can take an encore on the next picture with the piano dealer, who is always willing to pay for prospect names, and perhaps the sewing machine man can be interested for a third try, if you do not space them too closely together.

The beauty of the scheme is that it gives the salesman a chance for an approach. Instead of a cold start he opens with "Little Willie Brown tells us you are looking for a sedan." The prospect may say that Willie is a gifted little liar, but he has started talking. That's the hardest part, and that's over with. Tell that to the dealer when you take him the idea.

Redder'n Red

Edward Lewis, of Keith's 81st Street Theatre, New York, used 800 red bulbs under the marquee when he played Goldwyn's Red Lights and used two red floods on the roof to catch attention before you got to the house. Cutout letters from the posters proclaimed the title on three sides of the marquee.

He also used a novel introduction to the film. A tiny point of red was thrown on the screen and irides out until the entire auditorium was flooded, then the picture was thrown on the screen and the red light dimmed down. It was atmosphere and color combined.

Looked Far Ahead to Get a Feature

Foresight being better than hindsight, a medal should be pinned on Robert Slote, manager of Crandall's Strand Theatre, Cumberland, Md. He looked so far ahead that he could see around the turn of the road.

Managers have reported their utilization of the local representative in the annual Atlantic City beauty contest. Slote made his candidate and then used her.

Long before the date of the contest he persuaded the local merchants that it would be a big thing if Cumberland were represented in the gathering of bathing beauties. He was willing to do all the work and stand his share of the expense, but he wanted the moral support of all the merchants and some slight financial backing. They would show the huge crowds at Atlantic City that Cumberland was there with the best of them.

The idea took hold. The merchants told Slote to go the limit, and they came in with window and newspaper advertising. Slote generously offered to loan the Strand for the selection of the town's representative from among the competing beauties. That seemed to be a good idea, so he was told to go to it.

Then it struck Slote that it might be a good idea to add a fashion show, and help advertise the merchants who were sharing the cost of the campaign. They applauded the idea and promised the models and the gowns and other details. They also cooperated in a double truck advertising the dual event and their connection with it.

Slote built a black and white setting which is reproduced on this page, and provided the essential runway. The models showed their dresses and the beauty contestants looked their prettiest and most all of Cumberland was there to see. The winner was selected and sent off to Atlantic City, and the town quieted down while the merchants counted their respective profits from extra business. They figured that "Miss Cumberland" had really brought them money and they were correspondingly grateful to Slote; a goodwill he can capitalize in window cards and co-operative pages for a long time to come.

And just note that Slote did not use all this big stuff to pull through a weak sister. He set it for the night he had what he figured would be an especially pleasing bill. He knew he would pull many persons who do not usually turn out for pictures, and he wanted them to go away with the best

Teaser Displays Sold U. S. Grill

Selling Ruggles of Red Gap by teaser is something new that was worked by Jack Hellman, a Paramounteer.

He dropped into Jamestown, N. D., where the Wilson story was booked at the Opera House, and started a series of advertised displays announcing the impending opening of the U. S. Grill, later adding that Marmaduke Ruggles would be its manager. Even then they did not tumble, but looked around to see where the grill was being made ready.

The day before the picture opened, the teasers joined the straight advertising for Ruggles by announcing that they would all enjoy the scenes in the U. S. Grill in Red Gap in the Cruze production.

Here's a New Angle for Book Hook-ups

Pass the butter to the State Theatre, Erie, Pa. It bought $293.50 worth of space with an investment of $40. Then Mike Vogel picked up the idea and put it over in Altoona and McKeesport before the tidal wave caught him. You can do it in your own home town if any newspaper has a contest on—or you can inaugurate one.

In Erie the paper was gunning for subscriptions. The State purchased 100 copies of the Grosset & Dunlap version of The Cheat and donated them for bonus prizes, and the newspaper gave all that space to the announcement of these bonuses with a few kind words for Pola Negri and The Cheat.

Of course you do not have to give out as many books in a small town, but you can get as much in proportion to your investment, and it has worked big in the three instances reported on.

Changed Chaplin

At last they have been having The Pilgrim in Laredo, Texas, and when Manager Epstein found that the ministers were running true to form and getting ready to protest against the ministerial garb, he asked them to come and see the picture, offering to make such eliminations as they might suggest.

Somewhat taken aback at this offer, the ministers made some minor changes and then endorsed what was left. The condemnation made for interest which was added to by the subsequent approval, and business at the Royal was royally good.

Army Helped

Now it's the Santa Fe Trail that is getting the recruiters. Richard Weil, publicity man for Progress pictures, sends in a photograph of an army covered wagon with the explanation that he was able to interest the commandant of an army post across the river from Cincinnati. The nub of the idea was that if you joined the army you could see The Santa Fe Trail. If you wanted a sample, you looked it up at the local theatre.

He not only got the wagon, but an ambulance as well and a cavalry escort.

MADE GREEN GODDESS CAPITAL OF AIRPLANE ACCIDENT

When a local plane crashed in the mountains, Manager Beckman, of the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., brought it in on a truck. The engine and propeller were shown in the lobby and the remainder carried around town on a truck for a ballyhoo.

Pete Smith's Capital Newspaper Campaign

Pete Smith, working to put over The Meanest Man in the World for Sol Lesser at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, built up a fine campaign in which the theatre or the fact that the title was related to a picture were carefully eliminated.

On the face of it, the Los Angeles Express was willing to pay $200 to locate the meanest man in the world. It offered $150 to the person who developed the meanest man with $50 and $20 as consolations. Meanwhile, it paid one dollar each day for the five best letters on the meanest man, these letters being re-assembled for the final judging.

It streamed the question across the front page each day, repeated on 100 painted 28-sheets, bannered 500 newsstands with signs and tack cards and apparently took slide space in 100 theatres of the West Coast corporation.

As the contest drew to a close it put out the meanest man and his mother, father and son. The hero was immaculately dressed, but being the meanest man, his family was uncared for. The four of them paraded the streets in masks and helped to interest in the contest.

As a final there was a ball at the Cinderella dance hall, where motion pictures were made of the arriving guests and those who later competed for the prizes for shaking the meanest hoof.

And when all this publicity had been carefully accumulated, it was shifted in bulk over to the show at the State. It had done all it could for the Express and was ready to hand to perform a similar service for the State, and it put over Bert Lytell like the Barnum & Bailey with Duse in the center ring.

Doubled Contest

About 200 youngsters appeared at the Stacey Theatre, Trenton, N. J., for a Jackie Coogan contest on Circus Days, so Lee Haussman had to hold an elimination in the fire alley, retaining a dozen of the best for the stage appearance, the audience deciding the winners. There were three prizes, a suit or overcoat, a cap and an autographed copy of Toby Tyler.

In addition, the theatre offered a silver cup for the best impersonator at a Hallowe'en street ball conducted by a committee of citizens. This was not limited to children, and a number of men competed for the prize, adding to the general hilarity—and effectiveness—of the stunt. The cup was, of course, included in all the newspaper stories for several days in advance.

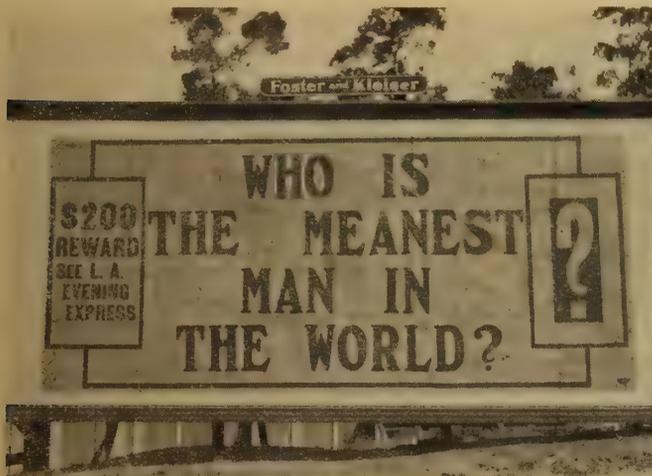

Uses Davies Film for Store Display

Because the Wanamaker store is celebrating the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the A. T. Stewart store, which was purchased by the Philadelphia merchant, a considerable portion of the store advertising dealt with the New York of a century ago, with pictures of old New York and similar material.

In this connection portions of the Cosmopolitan production of Little Old New York were shown at the performances in the store auditorium for two days. This was not the complete film, but scenes showing the very remarkable reproductions of old streets, and was more in the nature of a glorified trailer advertisement for the picture, then showing at the Capitol, while at the same time it fulfilled its purpose of showing the ancient town. It was a particularly valuable advertisement because it was apparently anything but that.

Thrifty

The last word in economy comes from the exhibitor who is saving the ashes of The Eternal Flame to advertise Ashes of Vengeance.

FOUR OF THE STUNTS WHICH HELPED PUT OVER THE MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD IN LOS ANGELES

This was all directed to a newspaper contest which piled up the publicity for the newspaper and which, at the proper time, was transferred to the film. There were 100 boards like that above and any quantity of bannered taxis. Below are shown the four perambulators used and the traveling night apparatus which was used at a motion picture ball at a dance hall

Scandinavian Stunts Follow Live Practice

Exploitation abroad has come to equal the best work done in this country, where exploitation was brought to the status of an independent profession. Australia has done splendid work, England is not far behind, and we have recently shown a number of good examples from the Continent, but among the best are these stunts worked by Raoul le Mat, of Stockholm, who is not only distributor of the Metro product for Norway, Sweden and Denmark, but the owner-manager of an important chain of theatres, the "home" house being the Roda Kvarn, or Red Mill, in Stockholm.

One of the best stunts, though it does not show up so well in the photograph, is a mechanical novelty for Tva Arbland Vilda Djuri Afrika, which is the alias for the Martin Johnson's Trailing Wild Animals in Africa.

This is the kiosk which appears in the centre of the lobby in the upper right hand of the cut. It shows Mrs. Johnson in the act of shooting and a lighting device is used to give the flash of the gun. At each flash an animal leaps from behind a screen at her right, to fall dead at her feet.

The four-in-hand drag shown at the left was used for Hearts Aflame. Anna Q. Nilsson is naturally a particular favorite with her countrymen and especial effort was made to put this release over. This was played at the Rialto Theatre, instead of the Red Mill, and brought a large business.

The lower pictures show the special drive on a comedy week, the bill being composed of Mud and Sand, the burlesque on Blood and Sand, and Rob 'em Good. An automobile parade was formed, with impersonators of Valentino and Fairbanks each in his own car, and numerous stops were made for ballyhoo purposes.

The result of the drive was to give an exceptionally big week without a dramatic feature. Evidently the demand for comedy is as world-wide as its appeal.

All of the stunts are passed along to other users of the Metro service, and Mr. Le Mat goes beyond American exchange practice in his service to clients. This includes the supplying of cloth backed stills instead of the usual light paper prints. The cost of the process is more than offset by the saving of the stills, which are in good condition long after the straight paper prints would be cracked and torn. Sometimes we get so proud of ourselves that we fail to realize that there are comers in other countries and we are glad to pay our respects to this Metro hustler.

Bad men are usually supposed to be life takers rather than savers, but the Olympic Theatre, New Haven, got hold of some mint candies and put them out with a special label reading "Two kinds of life savers, pep-o-mints and The Bad Man at the Olympic." Tod Browning says it helped business. But why not "Pep-o-mints will take your breath away. So will The Bad Man?"

Plenty of Jazz in Good Metro Puzzle

An advertising novelty is just something you get from an exchange. You can make it worth the cost or you can make it get a lot more than that. It's all a matter of putting in something more than the surface use.

Plenty of exhibitors have put out the Metro "E" puzzle on The Eternal Struggle, and have found it a useful novelty. W. G. Bishop, a Metro exploitation man, made it a newspaper stunt in two cities.

In Houston, Texas, some 300 members of the Rotary Club spent most of their time at the weekly luncheon trying to make the blamed thing come out straight. The Pirates, an advertising club in Oklahoma City, let the soup get cold in a similar endeavor.

In each instance the manager of the local theatre offered to pay the luncheon check of any member who could solve the puzzle. In neither case was the award claimed. But the newspaper made the mention of their efforts in the stories of the luncheons, and had to mention the house and attraction.

If you don't want to risk having to buy lunches, offer passes, but see if you cannot get some local organization interested. This can be worked, of course, on any similar stunt and does not merely apply to The Eternal Struggle, though the latter title worked well into the story.

THREE EXAMPLES OF THE BALLYHOO METHODS USED BY RAOUL LE MAT IN SCANDINAVIA

Mr. Le Mat, who is the representative of Metro in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, as well as the owner of a chain of theatres in these countries, is very much awake to the value of exploitation. The upper left hand cut shows a perambulator for Hearts Aflame, with a lobby for the Martin Johnsons' wild animal picture on the right. Below are two of the pictures of his drive on a comedy week with Mud and Sand and Rob 'Em Good

Open Display Is Always the Best

These two display spaces on Cameo Kirby are about the same size and general form, but one has a far greater attraction and selling value than the other. Both are about three tens, though that of the Century is about three lines over the measure. In this Booth Tarkington, Harry Leon Wilson and Cameo Kirby are fighting each other for vigor which the cut with more detail can never attain. Both cuts are apparently press book material. It is merely a matter of choice, and we hold that the choice should invariably lie with the stronger cut where there is an option. The title has double the display. The Century is not a poor advertisement, but working from the same available material, we think that the Temple has framed a much better selling advertisement. This is by no means an isolated example.

Usually the emphasis is given the play and not the extension, and the second week it is the extension and not the play which is the more important argument. For that matter, if you still have the picture to play, we believe that you can make real capital out Second week for this supreme pictorial achievement.

"If Winter Comes"

It is one of the greatest books of the last half century. Its dramatic strength, deep pathos, abundant humor and sense of character delineation, the masterful prose of Charles Dickens has surpassed it.

The screen version of the celebrated novel made a new era in motion picture production—dramatic and artistic—the well known characters of Dickens transferred to the life to men of the most remarkable scene ever recorded.

Many copies of "If Winter Comes" picture play will be sold in more than when you read with this and finished with it in the book.

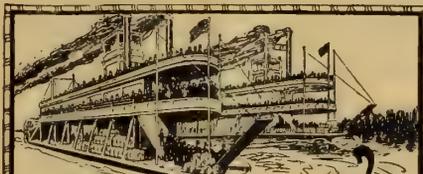

The advertising genius of the picture play is reflected in the original magazine used in the original advertising campaign. When shown, with music by My Heart over the screen that "If Winter Comes" is the picture of good story, picture play and a picture to arrange around and for.

THE TOLEDO EXAMPLE

It almost invariably holds true that the open drawings, not confused with too much text, will sell more tickets than the elaborate cut, especially when it is confused with too much talk. An advertisement must work quickly, if it is to work at all, and there is no place for elaborate argument.

White and Reverse Not in Confliction

For the second week of If Winter Comes the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, uses a three twelves, of which about half is a reverse ground and the rest normal. Whether or not this will work out well depends upon the handling. Here the black is an abrupt transition, but there is a similar transition from sketch to talk, and the result is decidedly good. It is better than if the white had been at the bottom, which would have made the space topheavy. The big fact here is the holding of the picture for a second week, and this is put at the top where there is nothing to fight, the sketch not being heavy enough to detract from the type. That brings you down to the title with the message of success. If a picture is held over for a second week, it must be a good picture. What picture is it? The eye runs down the space to where the title is the easiest thing to find in the distinctive circle. In case you do not already know about the picture, there is a well written sales talk on the left, but we think that in most instances this is not read. The selling has been already accomplished. It is just the final clincher, put in for the very difficult few. Almost everywhere this picture is going to double the usual run, or longer, but we think that in no instance has the extension of the run been better handled and seldom has it been put over as emphatically.

ODD AND EFFECTIVE

of these extended runs. Call attention to the very remarkable success of the picture elsewhere and then advance the suggestion that this favor is due to the fact that the film so closely follows the book. Frankly offer it as the one picture in which the flavor of the novel has not been destroyed to make a continuity writer's holiday. Very often the failure of a screen version is due to the impertinent changes made by the studio writers. Play up the fact that this is still the Hutchinson novel and not the story as some studio employee thought it should have been written in the first place. Most readers will welcome the novelty.

Castellated

Making the entire marquise a castle was the way Ashes of Vengeance was put over by Manager Steffy at the Coliseum theatre, Seattle. Instead of building his castle on top of the marquise, Mr. Steffy built around the supporting columns with painted stonework and masked in the lobby front, running the turrets above the line of the canopy. Of course, there were windows in the castle, and these were peopled by cutouts from the ones and three sheets. It all served to create the desired impression that Ashes of Vengeance was a bigger and better picture.

Helps Hook-Ups

Looking for something for the cooperating advertisers, the Odeon theatre, Savannah, gave passes to all readers who worked on their hook-up page for Why Worry. There were twelve advertisers and to get a single pass the readers had to write twelve sentences each commencing with the title and

The story of "Cameo Kirby" is a story of the Mississippi River. It is a story of the race between three steamboats. the limelight with no very pronounced result. The three names are too nearly of equal value to get any prominence. Probably both Tarkington and Wilson will sell some tickets, but they will sell just as many for the Temple theatre, Toledo, though here the names are less than half the width and about half the height. Not only do the three names crowd each other, but they lie against the cut in such a fashion that whatever chance they ever had is killed off, while at the same time they also murder the cut. The cut would not be a bad one, were it set in properly, but it needs white space to show it off, and here almost every hole is chinked with talk. The picture is offered as "Nat Goodwin's most famous stage success," which serves only to emphasize the fact that this is a rather old subject, since the comedian, favorite of his generation, is a strange name to most of the present-day patrons. There is more appeal to the "See the greatest race between three river steamboats ever staged," in the panel on the left, but there is more vigor to the race suggestion of the cut in the Horator advertisement than to the type, plus the obscure race in the Baltimore appeal. Moreover, there is a sweep to the drawing from the Toledo advertisement that catches the attention more quickly and holds it better. The boats are right at the top of the space and the flow of the stream takes you down to the title, which is not obscured by any disturbing lettering above or below. You are sold Cameo Kirby, a Mississippi story, right at the jump, with the suggestion of love interest in the clutch just below, and with the authors and star over to the right. There is not as much talk in the Toledo handling, but there is greater selling force because the entire display has a breadth that the other lacks. There is the suggestion of strength and dealing with the twelve advertising concerns. There was a prize of $10 for the best set of sentences; none of which could exceed 25 words, but a single admission was given each contestant. The same idea can be applied to other titles, though it works particularly well with Why Worry, and helped to get the picture over by drawing a big opening house to go out and tell the rest of the town. It also brought in many paid admissions.

Atmosphere Sketch Is Made Attractor

Most of the advertisements for Viola Dana in The Social Code use the picture of the little star with her feet up on the table. This works well in the smaller dimensions, but the Colonial theatre, Indianapolis, wanted a larger cut and used this polo scene to suggest the general atmosphere of the picture as set forth in the catalogue at the top of the space. It works nicely, though the layout man has done well to hold all the talk about the play above the cut since this extends across the space. Putting part of the talk below the cut would have lost it. That space is reserved to the smaller features, which makes for a more intelligent handling of the announcement. The picture is chiefly sold on atmosphere, and this gives a large sample of the chief ingredient. The star's name sells the rest.

Sells Ponjola on Nilsson Haircut

Most of the kick in this Boston advertisement for Ponjola is on the haircut which enabled Miss Nilsson to look like a real boy and not a male impersonator. It is by no means new stuff, for back in 1909 the same gag was worked with Ellie Caines, of the old Lubin company, in a one reeler. We sent the cameraman down to a barber shop and made the haircut a part of the picture, but in those one-reel days there was less exploitation and Miss Nilsson is getting much more advertising out of her stunt. This is a very nicely set advertisement for Boston. There was a slump back into the old hand lettered stuff, but the agents are coming over to real type again and getting better displays. Probably the Boston papers always will look like the printing office towel after the Sunday edition has been run off, but the use of type helps somewhat and since Boston does not seem to know anything better it does well enough. Apart from the appeal of the haircut most of the talk is clipped from the Los Angeles reviews, since this showing was too early for the New York criticisms, but the haircut is the best bet for Boston. The boy-girl stuff appeals to the men and to most of the women. Probably they know the book, too, but they will want to see the picture for the sake of the masquerade, and the Gordon houses will clean up with it. There is a lot in knowing what will appeal to your patrons, and here the agent has apparently picked the best bet. It will probably work in other sections as well.

All Lit Up

Planning a change from a second to a first run policy, the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., hired an aviator to fly low over the town at night with the under side of the planes lettered in electric lights.

It helped to establish the policy and give Elinor Glyn's Six Days a two weeks' run instead of the six she was talking about. Of course they used other stunts, too, but this was the star idea.

Splitting a Title Is Cleveland Idea

Loew's Park and Mall theatres, Cleveland, which play the same attraction day and date, combine their space. For Ponjola this space is a 140 x 3, which is ample for the text and sketch appeal. A somewhat curious device is used for the title, Ponjola being made into two words to gain height. This may have been done to increase curiosity, but it is more likely that the object was to get a big display for the word. The text is taken from the press book and hammers on the duality of sex of the heroine. It does not carry quite the idea of the story, but it does make for selling curiosity, and this is the chief object aimed at. To this end the bottom of the space shows the male and female figures while the palm tree is typical of the locale and the star herself is shown in the foliage. It is complete without being redundant, and it makes a very presentable form. In some aspects we think that the split title will attract more attention than the single word, though it is seldom advisable to tamper with titles. The point here is that those who will be sold through the book will be attracted because the title is apparently wrong, while others will wonder what a Pon Jola is, so it will appeal to both sides.

Sure They're Crazy

Working over an old idea, Al Sobler, First National exploitation man in and around Chicago, interested the authorities of the State School for the Feeble Minded at Lincoln to show the inmates Circus Days. The idea was that the degree of insanity in the patient could be tested by his reaction to the comedy.

In other words, if you could not enjoy Jackie Coogan in this play you must be crazy. Of course, this was dressed up in scientific language for the newspapers, but that was the big idea.

Being a thrifty sort of person, the test was made while Circus Days was playing at the Lincoln Theatre, and the whole town hustled in to laugh an alibi. If you have a little insane asylum in your town, think this over.

Still Goes

When A. A. Spitz opened his new Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., he made the opening blast a series of congratulatory telegrams from the stars, and his centerpiece was one from Norma Talmadge, who had the honor of opening the house with Ashes of Vengeance.

It's old stuff, but it seems still to pack a wallop where it has not been done more than a dozen times, and the first time out—man!

Aldinger, Opera House, Primm, Iowa.

FOURTH MUSKETEER. (5,000 feet). Star, Johnnie Walker. The producers made a fuss about this one, but I don't see anything to fuss about outside of the fact that the title is a good drawing card, but the picture is only a very ordinary comedy-drama. Usual allotment of posters brought good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

MEANEST MAN IN THE WORLD. (6,500 feet). Star cast. A very good picture, very pleasing and entertaining. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star cast. Once in many moons will you have a chance to book a picture as good as this one. It's a hundred percent audience picture and ninety-five per cent. better than the so called super-productions. Capacity business for three days; should have held over for balance of week. Book it and boost it. H. O'Regan, Laurier Theatre, Hull, P. Q., Canada.

OLIVER TWIST. (5 reels). Star, Jackie Coogan. The little star gives a superb performance but direction is rather poor as the strength of the feature is nearly all in the first four reels. Had good attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. For me it was O. K. Everybody well pleased. Paid a little too much for it. Should be bought cheaper as it's getting a little old. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 10-20-30. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. One of the best kid pictures ever made, and pleased one hundred per cent. Get behind this one and it will back you up. Suitable for special. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Many good comments. If they liked Marshal Neilan's "Penrod" they will surely like this. Ben Alexander is fine. Entire cast good. Attendance good. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. Great picture but they charge too much money. Ran for three days to very good business. Book this one Sunday and Monday. Advertise this one in the town and be sure you make money. I had pay a fine price for the picture. Draw good class in Brooklyn, New York. Victor D. Stranahan, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star cast. A real picture that will surprise how it will please although it is "lead" stuff, this was the objection I heard before they had seen the picture, they appear here to be fed up on the mischievous "Kid" comedies that goes for my thro and were afraid that this is what it was, but every act is natural, splendid direction; but they did not come and I could not get them, although in the advertising I endeavored to combat the idea that it was a "Gang" or a Baby Peggy comedy. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Picture, Columbia City, Indiana.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (7,700 feet). Star cast. A splendid picture with all the humor, drama and thrill of the greatest characters, fiction, stage or screen has ever known. With the original stars, a follow-up show; a style show; dazzling beauties; all the stuff that makes a splendid picture truly wonderful. If you liked it on the stage don't miss it on the screen. It's better, bigger, greater, funnier than ever shown before. Don't fail to book it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

SCRAP IRON. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. This is a good picture where they like to see a good fight but it did not go good here. Just a fair picture. Moral from not good and is not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. J. Douglas, Strand Theatre, Pierce, Nebraska.

SILENT CALL. (6,784 feet). Strongheart (dog). What I would say about this one would only be a repetition of the good things the boys in this department have already said. This picture, although old, was in good condition and was liked by one hundred per cent of the audience. Any class will like this one. Go after it but if you can get a good film, and boost prices. First National gave us good price but we failed to make money owing to weather. Moral tone, nothing objectionable. It is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10.20. H. H. Hedburg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A very good north woods story and the draws well here. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30,000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. A Northern along the same old form, but there's comedy in it that will put it over. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SMILIN' THROUGH. (8 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. I can only echo all the fine things the other exhibitors have said about this beautifully artistic offering of Miss Talmadge. I had all in playing this until now because of the price. First National had on it when it was new. Although old, the print on this was perfect. Even the occasional compliments told me it was good and after doing a fine business, making a little change and making new patrons for my house, I sent the picture back to the exchange wishing I could only buy a hundred more just as good for next year. I used slide, window cards, mailing list and boards. Attendance way above ordinary. Draw farmers and towns people in town of 800. Admission 10.25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where
we can talk things over

Still the letters come in on the subject of rotten prints.

It looks as though the exhibitors are getting wise. They are beginning to get hep to the way to cure the exchanges of sending punk prints.

On the next page you will see the remedies they are going to put in use.

Next season looks bad for the exchanges whose salesmen promise "You'll sure get a good print on this," and whose managers don't care enough for good will and confidence to back up the promise.

It takes a lot of water dropping on a rock to make a dent in it, but when the producers wake up to the dent in their business there will be some tall doings around certain exchanges.

May the day come soon!

SALOME. (6 reels). Star cast. This picture failed to draw for me. I should have cleaned up with it as an opposition house had the United Artist. Not much Salome. Suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in big city. Admission 10 cents at all times. Stephen G. Bremer, High Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

BROKEN CHAINS. (6,190 feet). Star cast. Drew better than we expected and pleased fairly good, but one thing marred a perfect showing. Oh my! what a print. The ends of each reel show and even were awful to behold. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10.15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Napa, California.

GREEN GODDESS. (9,100 feet). Star cast. "Green Goddess" is high class, lavishly produced and staged, splendidly acted. Artless camera by Herbert Ross point of artistic achievement. "Green Goddess" is one hundred per cent action entertainment. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw high class in city of 200,000. S. Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

ENEMIES OF WOMEN. (10,501 feet). Star, Alton Robinson. An extraordinary good picture, very pleasing and very interesting. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MADE IN HEAVEN. (4,684 feet). Star cast. An old picture, but very pleasing. Used some things. Had fair attendance. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

RED LIGHTS. (6,841 feet). Star cast. Excellent picture. A mystery picture which pleased our audiences. We also played on some bill. Cannon, Marietta Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Hodkinson

CRITICAL AGE. (4,500 feet). Star, Pauline Garon. Not wonderful but we had no kicks which is more than we can say for some of the so-called specials. A good program offering. Print fair. Attendance good. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DOLLAR DEVILS. (5,600 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture and one that will get over and please your patrons. The name will get you nothing but you can get them in by getting out good advertising and let them know that the picture is better than the posters. Had good attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Good feature. Pleased the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Metro

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. One fine picture that will satisfy any audience. This is a picture that has something to it. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. J. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

HEARTS AFLAME. (8,110 feet). Star, Frank Keenan. Frank Keenan and Anna Q. Nilsson are splendid in this. There is also one of the most realistic forest fires that I've seen. Then there is the comedy supplied by Russell Simpson and Martha Mattox as the couple who haven't spoken to each other for twenty-years. "Hearts Aflame" is a real good picture, as are two other Metro features that I know of. Clarence G. Badger's "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and Rex Ingran's "Prisoner of Zenda." C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

METRO PRODUCTIONS. All Clara Kimball Young's on list are "slow" go easy on 'em. Rest of list fair. Good and better, fifty-fifty. Viola Dana's all good. Draw farming and oil class in small town. J. A. Herring Playhouse Theatre (249 seats) Strong Arkansas.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. This is certainly one fine picture. You can't go wrong with it and you can raise your prices without taking any chances of causing a complaint. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SOCIAL CODE. (5 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Fine picture, dramatic work of star and support. Best I have ever shown, but why is it the director instructs a jury in a murder trial to turn and converse with one another and show amazement over the tes-

Exchanges!—The Clouds Are Gathering

"E. L. L. Partridge is right in his idea (about handling the bum print problem): if we would all do that, I am sure we would get better service; but then there is some fellow who would not have nerve enough to cancel out the exchange that gives him rotten service.

"BUT HERE IS ONE WHO WILL!

"Yes, and there's one more exchange I must give credit to for giving us good prints—and that's UNIVERSAL." Jack Schneider, Casino Auditorium, Richmond, Iowa.

"I notice that the kicks on poor prints are many. My advice to the exhibitor suffering this goat-getting service is to cut out entirely the exchange that gives the exhibitor worn-out prints in exchange for good, hard cash. There are many producing companies on the hustle all the time, turning out good pictures, to confine one's-self to any particular company. Patronize the exchange that gives service, and do no business with the exchange that either can not or will not give or send good prints to the exhibitor, REGARDLESS OF THE AMOUNT OF THE FILM RENTAL." Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Speak out, fellows! Let the exchange know how you feel—that is, in language that can be printed, if you can keep your feelings down to that. Now that the industry is slowed up on production for a while, it is a good time for a house-cleaning.

timony adduced. No such scenes are ever witnessed in criminal courts. A jury would be disqualified and a new jury selected if even one member tried to influence another, before the case is finally given them. Moral tone excellent and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Thomas M. Thatcher, Gem Theatre, Somerset, Kentucky.

Paramount

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A splendid picture, well worth seeing. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLOOD AND SAND. (7,235 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. A little old but the best Paramount picture I have run in a long time. Ran this with Universal two reel comedy, also good. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. W. H. Moore, Nusho Theatre, Anadarko, Oklahoma.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A money getter where they like the glittering, brilliant production. Drew and pleased extra well for us. This star is very popular here. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,400. Admission 10-25, 20-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Miss Swanson at her best. Beautiful wardrobe; novel story, excellently directed and produced. Used rotos, billboards, etc., to get good (city) patronage. J. I. Sims, Reliance Theatre, Orangeburg, South Carolina.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An exceptionally good entertainment. Swanson was never better. But they want too much rental, as usual. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

CALL OF THE NORTH. (4,823 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This picture with Holt went over good for us. It was a little old for us, but if the picture is good that is all that our audience wants. Usual advertising brought average attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

THE CHEAT. (6,323 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Excellent production. Pleased everybody, especially as it has a happy ending. A gripping story holding tense interest throughout. Used rotos, newspaper. Draw best class. Good attendance. J. I. Sims, Reliance Theatre, Orangeburg, South Carolina.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. (4,918 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. I would consider this just an ordinary program picture that needs a good comedy to put it over. Don't promise too much on this one. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A poor, tedious show that won't help to bring 'em back. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Fair program picture. Will please a majority. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. A good program picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FOOTLIGHTS. (7,978 feet). Star, Elsie Ferguson. A good program picture that will please a fair majority. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Pleased majority. Good business. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

GHOST BREAKER. (5,130 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. A good picture, but he has appeared to better advantage before. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GLIMPSES OF THE MOON. (6,502 feet). Star cast. An elaborately produced and costumed English society drama, a fashion plate review that pleases a few of the women patrons. Story, though based on a popular book, lacks any interest to the spectator. Characters walk through their parts. No punch or humor in the picture. You are better off without it. Moral tone—none. Suitable for Sunday (only day it is). Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bell-air, Ohio.

GO-GETTER. (7,740 feet). Star, T. Roy Barnes. A comedy drama. Light and fluffy, but entertaining. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. Excellent. Many compliments. Suitable for any day. Had fair attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Brother exhibitors, look out! If you don't want to mortgage your theatre to pay for films stay away from them. They have no hearts to ask you all you have for a picture. That's my experience. Look out. I played "Robin Hood" and had a loss that it will take me the whole month of November earnings to cover same, and the exchange will laugh at you when you explain your trouble to them and it was all due to the high rental price of the films. United Artists is absolutely through with me even if they had the only and best picture in the world. They couldn't show me where they mean good to the poor exhibitor again. I went the limit to advertise it and got a special orchestra for "Robin Hood" and that's the result. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. The title, in my opinion, is not a one hundred per cent. box office magnet, but the picture is a corker. I really believe it accomplished the impossible; that is, pleased everybody. Nowadays it takes a good one to do this, and I consider this feature such a picture. If any fault can be found, it is in the too frequent close-ups of the principal's. One reel less of footage would be desirable. Play up to the name of the author and star, and if you can get them in, everything will be all to the good. Used slide and boards. Attendance was fair. Not exactly the type of feature for Sunday showing, but there is absolutely nothing objectionable to the most refined audience. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,313 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Excellent production. Full of action. Moral tone good. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL. (6,000 feet). Star, Mae Murray. A reissue that is best left alone if you value the good opinion of your patrons. This was a substitute for "Kentucky Derby." The print was good but after seeing up-to-date features with either of the two stars this is a joke. Had fair attendance. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

LEGALLY DEAD. (6,076 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A well produced and directed picture. The only trouble was its improbability, that is bringing the convict back to life after he had been hanged. However, the star does fine work, as does Claire Adams, and interest is held throughout. If they aren't too critical, it will please nearly everyone. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A fine Saturday picture. Gibson's best so far. Laura LaPlante attractive opposite him. I see where she is going to be starred. Not a bad idea. C. F. Kriegbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Not much of a picture first time for star. Supposed to be a western but a mighty poor one. Lay off it, too silly. Used photos, slide and paper. Had fair attendance.

Big Picture!

THE COVERED WAGON (Paramount). A splendid picture; in fact, the last word in pictures and the best seen since the initial showing of the "Birth of a Nation." Perfect realism, a strong love theme, tremendous dramatic action, thrills that are utterly unlike the ordinary sort, coupled with the splendid cast (virtually 3,000 men and women), indicate a picture worthy of the enthusiastic reports sweeping the country. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK (Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan). (FIRST SHOWING IN CONNECTICUT). Capacity at every performance. Positively the best production Marion Davies has ever starred in. Hundreds came back to see it a second time. Received more praise than "Robin Hood" or any of the other so-called "Big Productions." Mr. Exhibitor, get this one at any price; if your opposition gets it, close up when he plays it because everyone will want to see "Little Old New York." Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

LATE REPORTS ARE MIGHTY BADLY NEEDED BY THE BIGGER HOUSES AND RELISHED BY THE SMALLER THEATRES. SEND IN YOUR TIPS!

Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

TRIMMED IN SCARLET. (4,765 feet). Star cast. Here is what I call a fair picture ninety per cent., but not many turned out, new movie show started up and this place isn't large enough for two. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

Vitagraph

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Is very good, of the type of the "Third Alarm." Arthur Hancock, Columbia City Theatre Co., Columbia City, Indiana.

SMASHING BARRIERS. (6 reels). Star, William Duncan. A serial cut to six reels. Don't let this stop you from buying it. It's great. More action and thrills in this than Fox's "Eleventh Hour." Print O. K. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Warner Brothers

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Very little beautiful and a whole lot of the other thing. Selling for three times its valuation. Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 12,000. Admission 10-25. C. G. Couch, Grand Theatre (288 seats), Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Work of the star and supporting cast very good, but this is not a good feature for small towns. Too much booze is disgusting to my patrons. Fair print. Title does not draw. Used slide, boards, window cards. Had fair attendance. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A well made picture with best mine disaster yet seen. Open with a "kid prologue." Not enough religion" to hurt it with mixed crowd. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

PARTED CURTAINS. (6 reels). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A very good picture. Pleased practically everyone, although no one raved over it. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRINTER'S DEVIL. Star, Wesley Barry. Personally I thought the picture very good. Had a good opening but flopped last two days. Cannot explain why. Wesley Barry usually a good drawing card here. Picture very good of its kind and well made and directed. J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

RAGS TO RICHES. (6 reels). Star, Wesley Barry. Fine audience picture. Will please and draw all classes. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. (6,200 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). If you want something just a little bit better than the best, grab this one. We are sure that this picture received more comment from this city than anything we have ever played. Some people back second day, that means something here. It is simply a wonderful picture. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Comedies

HOWLING SUCCESS. (Universal). A very fine comedy; the dog, Brownie, sure does some fine acting in this one. It will please the old folks as well as the children. My patrons ate it up. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers class in town of 150. Admission 10-20, specials, 10-25. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre (285 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

JESSIE JAMES. Man travels in truck. Broke all house records. Packed theatre could not handle crowds. Same old picture out for ten years. Draw general class in town of 5,692. Admission 10-25. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre (300 seats), Burlington, North Carolina.

LOVE IS BLOND. (Chester Comedy). A side splitting comedy from first to last. Condition of film fine. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ONLY A HUSBAND. (C. B. C.) These boys are putting out some good comedies. Every exhibitor should play them as the prices on them are reasonable and not up in the air as with other comedy companies. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). These "kid" comedies are certainly great. Everyone is a corker. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Draw mixed class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-20-25. J. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

PEACEFUL ALLEY. (Warner Brothers). Here is one of Monty Bank's best comedies. It is an old one but the films are good and it can stand up without a blush alongside of any of his new ones. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaprooms of the palace, all of which are large and beautiful with their gorgeous furnishings. The photography of the picture is superb and "In the Palace of the King" is certainly a delight to the eye.

This is enacted by a well-selected cast containing an unusually large number of well-known players. Blanche Sweet and Edmund Lowe have "leading roles and give excellent performances; Miss Sweet is particularly effective in the emotional scenes. Hobart Bosworth is splendid as the rugged old general, Pauline Starke appealing in the role of the blind girl, Sam DeGrasse effective in the unsympathetic role of the king, William V. Mong gives a good interpretation of the king's constant and Lucian Littlefield as the jester and Aileen Pringle as the king's favorite give good performances.

"In the Palace of the King" is a picture well worth seeing, should please the thousands who have read the book, and offers good opportunities for exploitation.

Don John is in love with Dolores Mendoza, whose father, General Mendoza, fears for her honor and forbids the affair, as Dolores is not of royal blood. Don John returns victorious and resumes his suit for Dolores. In the meantime Princess Ebohl, the king's favorite, is leading a plot to capitalize on Don John's popularity and place him on the throne in place of the dissolute Phillip. The king goes to see Don John and in a dispute wounds him and leaves him for dead. General Mendoza takes the palace. Dolores, who fled from her father's wrath to Don John for protection, learns the truth and to save her father tells the court she has been dishonored. Dolores goes to the king and threatens to tell the real truth unless her father is pardoned. Don John recovers and the king not only pardons Dolores's father but agrees to her marriage with Don John.

"The Near Lady"

Gladys Walton Starred in Universal Adaptation of Frank R. Adams Story
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Universal is offering a light comedy-drama with an appeal chiefly for the Gladys Walton clientele. It is a story of the newly rich and gives the star a fine chance to cavort in finery, keeping the comedy note paramount. It is suitable for the program theatre—and more especially for the double bill.

Most of the picture is frothy but rather pleasing entertainment for some of the fans. The comedy is obvious and familiar, but the action is peppy and the general atmosphere tends to keep one fairly interested. It starts out in a barber shop where there are a few laughs and proceeds to the home of the Schultzes where an invention of a sausage machine has brought sudden wealth. Nora, manicurist, becomes a society flower. She is a decorative figure in the drawing room and on the bathing beach—particularly the latter.

The story has very little drama. It has a number of bright incidents and gains a semblance of suspense at the close when the lovers elope in an automobile, are arrested for speeding, but are given a marriage license by the judge instead of a jail sentence. It is not really exciting or deeply moving at any time. But where there is a demand for light features such as this and where Gladys Walton is popular, "The Near Lady" should have a good chance.

Fate took a hand and dealt out love cards to Nora and young Van. Both tried to hide their love. Van faked a drunk scene to get Nora to break the engagement. But she stuck by him when the police threatened whereupon they acknowledged their love and were married.

"Fashionable Fakers"

Johnnie Walker Is Starred in F. B. O. Release That Is Pleasingly Original
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

An antique shop furnishes the rather original setting for most of the action in this up-to-date and youthful subject which has a pleasant freedom from hokum. It has a number of new angles and a story full of interest.

Johnnie Walker plays the character of "The Worm" which was the original title of the story and in some respects more significant than the present title. His performance is exceptionally good. As Thaddeus Plummer, he is an appealing chap whose business it is to bore worm holes and other signs of age into new furnishings.

The story is humanly told without triteness. It has entertaining incidents rather than big scenes or melodramatic thrills. Yet there are moments of light suspense, many natural and amusing touches and one imaginative flash in particular, as when the magic rug, which the "worm" has been fooled into buying, takes him on a gay expedition to the Orient.

Mildred June is youthful and charming and the entire cast shows good taste in the directing. The settings are consistent and pleasing without being especially elaborate. "Fashionable Fakers" is not a big attraction in any sense but as light entertainment is suitable for high class theatres as well as the smaller houses.

First he wishes to see his girl, which he does, and an old misunderstanding is cleared up. Then he wishes for one thousand dollars, which he gets. His employer has left the shop to Thaddeus and another assistant in order to escape the law, so Thaddeus gets the establishment and the girl.

"The Light That Failed"

Paramount Offers Fine Version of Kipling's Strongly Dramatic and Pathetic Story
 Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Rudyard Kipling's well-known and intensely pathetic story of an artist who gradually went blind as the result of a sabre wound has again reached the screen. This version was made by George Melford for Paramount. It is an exceedingly well-made production, and although certain changes have been made in the story, the power and force of the original has been maintained.

"The Light That Failed" is a story in which the pathetic note is always dominant and overshadows every other angle. It contains situations that are touching and intensely dramatic and tremendous sympathy is aroused for the hero in his misfortune. It is an unusually well-made and well-acted picture but naturally the atmosphere is depressing and its appeal to the patron will depend on his reaction to the intensely sympathetic and dramatic values. The spectator who seeks solely to be amused will be disappointed.

This picture has some of the best acting recently seen on the screen. Percy Marmont gives an unusually fine interpretation

How One Wide-Awake Showman Uses Our Reviews

Long before there was any other trade paper in the field, Moving Picture World was regarded as "the exhibitor's Bible" and its reviews have always been accepted by exhibitors as a dependable guide in booking pictures. Many live-wire showmen have found it distinctly advantageous to use quotations from its reviews on programs and advertising matter.

Going these progressive exhibitors one better, Manager C. C. Howell of the Monarch Theatre, Portersville, Cal., devotes an entire page in his house program to reprinting IN FULL Moving Picture World's review of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan production, "Enemies of Women." Thanks, Mr. Howell, for the compliment. You know from experience that our reviews are dependable and give what the exhibitor AND HIS AUDIENCE want to know.

"The Red Warning"

Good Western Stars Jack Hoxie in Spectacular Scenes—Produced by Universal
 Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Jack Hoxie's admirers will like him in his latest Universal Western. He is once more a spectacular hero in scenes that demand hard riding and fighting. The production is up to the standard of the best that the star has done and has the qualities that appeal in the theatres specializing in Westerns.

This is largely because of the fine backgrounds that have been provided. The desert and cattle scenes are picturesque and expansive, giving an impression of bigness that is always effective in Westerns. A large cast strengthens this effect in the climax where the hero heads a band of riders who destroy the cattle rustlers in answer to a signal fire which is "the red warning."

The star does some splendid riding and acts naturally and pleasingly. His pursuit of the villain along the canyon rocks and the fight in the water furnishes a thrilling conclusion. Elinor Field is his pretty leading woman. The picture has been well directed and belongs among the good program Westerns of the year.

"Slave of Desire"

Excellent Cast in Goldwyn Version of Balzac's Highly Imaginative Story

"The Magic Skin"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title "Slave of Desire" Goldwyn is presenting on the screen "The Magic Skin" one of the best known stories by the celebrated French author Honore de Balzac. Highly imaginative and fantastic in the extreme it makes no pretense to probability, for the author sets forth his message by the device of a magic skin the possession of which brings the fulfillment of every wish, each wish causing the skin to shrink until an unselfish wish breaks its magic power.

Although the basic idea is in line with the fairy stories of childhood the surroundings and the manner in which the story is constructed shows that it was intended for the adult intellect. With George D. Baker as the director, it has been given an excellent production and is portrayed by a cast of well-known players. The sets are excellent and there are a number of scenes of great pictorial beauty. The story deals with the power of unselfishness as opposed to the destructive power of selfishness.

The theme is well handled, there are some effective melodramatic touches near the end especially where the Countess Fedora, a vamp, is buried under an avalanche of rock. The action is under way for some time before there is any indication of the imaginative and supernatural angle. Despite the excellent handling of the subject and good work of the players, the production only succeeds in arousing mild interest. This is probably due to the nature of the theme which is quite different from the trend of the average modern story. The moral effect of the picture is good. Its greatest appeal will be for those with an imaginative turn of mind and readers of the works of Balzac.

George Walsh was a good selection for the role of the hero. Carmel Myers is unusually alluring as the vamp, Bessie Love is winsome as the heroine, and George Connelly is effective in the weird and somewhat allegorical role of the keeper of the magic skin.

Rastignac his friend takes Raphael to the salon of the popular Countess Fedora who becomes interested in him and soon he is a great success. He falls in love with her but finds she is false and losing his money at gambling is about to commit suicide. An old man tells him to start anew. He goes to pawn a scarab and finds it entitled him to the possession of a magic skin with which his every wish is gratified but each time the skin will shrink and death will result with the last wish. He gets fame, wishing for wealth his uncle dies and he gets his money, he wishes the Countess may lose her sway over men and she does. Finally, as the skin shrinks, he is racked with fear and is afraid to even wish his friends good cheer. Pauline, grown wealthy, comes to him, but the Countess is present and makes her think she and Raphael are engaged. Finally in a dream, Raphael sees himself using his last wish to save Pauline who is in danger and that this —his first unselfish wish—has broken the spell. Awakening, he goes to Pauline and they plight their troth, unafraid of the menace of the magic skin or that it can any longer harm them.

"South Sea Love"

Shirley Mason Pretty and Appealing in Fox Program Picture of Fair Interest

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A light program picture with some good sea scenes and a peppy role for Shirley Mason is offered by Fox in "South Sea Love." It has no highly involved plot but has a popular amount of action and romance and the star's admirers should find it pleasing.

The half-Spanish, half-French daughter of a sea captain falls in love with a South Sea trader but scorns and deserts him when she hears that he has a wife. There is not much suspense during the interim until they meet again, but the main appeal is pictorial. The star plays a dancer in a tropical cafe where she has a fairly thrilling escape from the owner, and rushes to save her sweetheart whom the sailors are about to torture. The climax is not intensely thrilling because it seems rather stagy and J. Frank Glendon's acting is unconvincing. Shirley Mason's performance helps to make it interesting.

There is an effective storm-at-sea scene and there are many beautiful shots. The fact that the entire picture is lacking in realism will not hinder its success in most program houses as it is light, pleasing and has a pretty star.

"Sporting Youth" Is Being Edited

Byron Morgan, author of many famous racing stories, such as "The Roaring Road," "What's Your Hurry?" and others, is now assisting in the final editing of "Sporting Youth," which he wrote as an original story for Reginald Denny, Universal star.

The story was filmed for Universal under the direction of Harry A. Pollard. It will be released as a Universal-Jewel production in seven or eight-reel length.

Denny's next picture, which will be made sometime after the first of the year, will be a film version of "Love Insurance," a novel by Earl Derr Biggers.

Tom Mix has started work at the William Fox West Coast Studios in his latest starring feature, "Ladies to Board." The story is by William Dudley Pelley. Jack Blystone is directing the screen version. Don W. Lee prepared the scenario.

Gertrude Olmsted is the leading lady. The supporting cast also includes Phil McCullough, Pewee Holmes and Gertrude Claire.

Big Exploitation for "Mailman"

Big preparations are being made by postal workers in San Francisco to put over the engagement of Emory Johnson's production of "The Mailman" when it opens at Loew's Warfield on December 1.

Street parades, band concerts, and other practical methods of showmanship will be employed by the San Francisco people to put the picture over.

John Gilbert's next feature picture produced by William Fox will be an original story by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, titled "Just Off Broadway." Edmund Mortimer is directing.

"Rosita" Given High Praise in Los Angeles

The popularity of Mary Pickford and her pictures never was more clearly demonstrated than at the recent Los Angeles premier showing of this cinema artiste's new production, "Rosita," at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre.

Streets near the theatre were jammed hours before the hour set for opening the theatre doors. Bowing and smiling, Miss Pickford was escorted through a narrow lane forced through the throng of her many admirers.

Inside the theatre the audience, which filled every bit of seating and standing room, the spectators all rose and cheered and applauded the guest of honor as she was ushered to her box.

"Rosita" is outstanding in two particulars," said the reviewer for the Examiner, "the skill with which the star keeps her youthful quality and naivete throughout a role of more adventurous character, and the fact that it is the first Ernst Lubitsch production made in America."

"The picture demonstrates a new Mary Pickford," said the Express, "a Mary Pickford losing none of the charm of her youthful roguishness and impishness, but sobered into mellowness."

"Rosita" has an exceptional background as a production," said the critic for the Times. "Its quality is indeed notable. There is a fine dignity and taste about the sets. The cast has been assembled with splendid discretion. Miss Pickford herself really has outdone anything she has previously achieved."

Critics Call New Ray Film His Best Picture

Under the heading, "Ray at Best in Pilgrim Film, Pre-eminent History Drama," the Washington Post of last Monday said:

"Since Griffith's 'The Birth of a Nation,' there had been no motion picture dealing strictly and authentically with American history on an elaborate scale until 'The Covered Wagon' appeared, to prove anew the tremendous appeal of actual human experience when it is used for screen material.

"Now, however, has come a third pre-eminent American historical drama in Charles Ray's 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' which not only vivifies the immortal characters of Longfellow's epic, but also spans the great adventure of the Pilgrim Fathers.

"The picture is not mere formal history. It is, first of all, a story and entertainment. Mr. Ray gives what is unquestionably the most serious and earnest portrayal in his long and distinguished career."

The Times said: "One leaves the President Theatre this week with a feeling of having witnessed an actual page from American history, and that Charles Ray has in 'The Courtship of Myles Standish' placed both his own name and that of his production in the very first rank of the cinema brigade."

Carl Anderson Obtains the Screen Rights to Big Stories

"Flaming Passion," an original story by Hal Evertz, popular fiction writer, has been obtained by Anderson Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement made this week by Carl Anderson, president of the organization. It will be put into production immediately. California has been selected as the locale and a unit is leaving shortly to begin work.

Anderson has also closed for the screen rights of several of the famous old stage dramas, one of which is "The Danites," which will be filmed in New York.

Foster Gilroy, of the Anderson company, has just returned from Chicago after securing two outstanding stories which are to appear in a widely read fiction magazine in February. These are "Lady Betty," by Lela Cordova, and "The Return of David Brown" by Arnold Walker. It is understood that these two productions will be made in California early in the spring.

"Sundown," First National's drama of the West, will come into being under the directorial hand of Larry Trimble. "Sundown" is an original story written by Earl Hudson, production manager of First National. To date no cast has been selected for "Sundown." The story has been scenarized.

"The Extra Girl" in Great Demand

"The Extra Girl," Mabel Normand's latest starring vehicle, is in great demand for early showings by exhibitors throughout the country, according to reports coming from Associated Exhibitors. It has just completed an eight-week run at the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, opened at the California and Portola theatres in San Francisco, and will soon open in numerous key cities for extended runs.

Jack Root, manager of the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, said: "I consider it Miss Normand's best work. It has pathos, art interest, comedy and thrills. One of the best pictures of the year."

Fine Tie-up for Warner Classic

Exhibitors will have a splendid exploitation tie-up with the Warner Classic, "Lucretia Lombard," the story of flaming passion adapted from the novel of the same name by Kathleen Norris, as the McClure Syndicate has made arrangements to publish this amazing love story in newspapers throughout the United States and Canada.

Such a tie-up should greatly help exhibitors, who can also take advantage of the tremendous sale that has already taken place on the book.

"The Barefoot Boy" Sold for Wisconsin

That great interest is manifest throughout the country in the special attraction, "The Barefoot Boy," the all-star production which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing for Mission Film Corporation is seen by the rapidity with which territories are being signed on it, says C. B. C.

A big sale of this production was recently made to the Celebrated Players' Film Corporation, of Milwaukee, which has contracted to distribute the production in the Wisconsin territory.

"Captain Blood" Screen Rights Bought by Smith T. O. D. C. Campaigns to Give Owners Good Lists

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has returned from London where he met Rafael Sabatini, author of "Captain Blood," world picture rights to which Mr. Smith purchased. He spent a day with the author and tramping over the scenes near Bridgewater, where the Duke of Monmouth entered England in his rebellion against James II. in 1685.

"I recognized the superior screen material in the book when I first read it. It was to help gain the real spirit of Sabatini that we made the pilgrimage by motor from London to the landing place of Monmouth," said Mr. Smith at the Brooklyn studio.

"The sea fights will be the greatest effort at filming water battles ever attempted and I am safeguarding their accuracy in detail. In London I engaged a shipwright who is an expert on ancient shipbuilding. With him I visited the British and London museums and examined the models of craft of England, France and Spain of the latter part of the seventeenth century. He is now searching Europe for any such craft that may be available; and is also preparing plans which will enable us to build such ships as may be needed. When his plans are finished he will come to the United States and join the Vitagraph forces at Hollywood, where production will begin sometime early in the spring."

Mr. Smith announced that J. Stuart Blackton will go to California for his next Vitagraph super-feature, the subject of which has not yet been decided.

Mr. Smith returns to Hollywood in two weeks, accompanied by Mrs. Smith, who made the trip abroad with him. He will take active charge of production at the company's studios there, and his leisure will be spent on his three thousand acre ranch in Southern California, where he indulges in his one hobby—the raising of Hereford cattle. He said that he contemplated no let up at all in Vitagraph production.

Coincident with the announcement from the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation that the organization's first release through Anderson Pictures Corporation would be ready in time for early January play dates, comes the report that President William A. True, of the T. O. D. C., has begun a campaign to insure to his organization the full measure of co-operation from exhibitors anticipated at the time of the formation of this independent corporation.

The first step in Mr. True's plans calls for the covering of the entire theatre owners' field with an inquiry, designed to ascertain not only how many play dates have been set aside for T. O. D. C. product, but just when these dates fall.

"With this data in hand," said Mr. True this week on his return from Washington, "no theatre owner need face the problem of keeping his program up to a high standard of entertainment value. If the country-wide discussion of the curtailment of production has had the effect of implanting a doubt in the exhibitor's mind as to the supply and quality of pictures this season, I can state in behalf of our organization that he can dismiss these fears.

"We have studied these needs carefully, based upon existing conditions among exhibitors in every section of the country, and that we shall be able to offer them the grade of product urgently desired and at an equitable rental goes without saying. It was for this purpose that our distributing corporation was formed."

Metro Film Endorsed by Well Known Society

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" now playing a record breaking New York engagement at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre has been endorsed by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau. This followed the presence recently of more than three hundred members of the Bureau at one of the "Scaramouche" performances—an event that was staged by Metro for the purpose of giving the Bureau members a chance to broadcast the merits of the production to the several thousand of other members in various parts of the country.

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau is an organization very much like, in its functions, to the Drama League which concerns itself with supporting the best things of the stage. Following the viewing of "Scaramouche" its members, highly enthusiastic, promised to do everything in their power to bring it to the attention to the greatest number of people.

C. C. Burr Producing "The Average Woman"

Having finished the first in the series of the big four specials, "Restless Wives," which he has been engaged to produce for the Burr-Rogers Producing Corporation, C. C. Burr announces that he is ready to go into production at his Glendale Studios with the second picture of the 1923-1924 series, "The Average Woman." The story is by Dorothy De Jagers.

"The Average Woman" is an up-to-date story. A cast of screen stars, headed by Harrison Ford, David Powell, Pauline Garon, De Sacia Mooers, Burr McIntosh, William Tucker and Little Russell Griffin, has been selected for the leading parts. William Christy Cabanne is directing. The remaining pictures in the big four series, "Lend Me Your Husband" and "Youth to Sell," will be filmed as rapidly as possible.

C. C. Burr will personally produce three pictures for individual theatre owners who are venturing into the producing business. The first picture of the new series is entitled "The Unloved Wife," from the play of the same name.

Film from Noted Story Is Among Fox Releases

"You Can't Get Away with It," a special production made from the famous Gouverneur Morris story, and an Educational Entertainment, "Johnny's Swordfish," are on the Fox Film Corporation release schedule for the week of December 9.

In cast, story and exploitation value "You Can't Get Away with It" is one of the best of the season's releases, Fox says. Gouverneur Morris, taking the story of a girl who defied the conventions and was then condemned by the world, has developed a powerful emotional drama.

Percy Marmont, whose greatest characterization was that of Mark Sabre in "If Winter Comes," has the leading male role in this picture.

"Johnny's Swordfish" presents interesting adventures in fishing for swordfish. "The Canadian Alps," another Educational Entertainment, will be released December 23 and will be the last of these short subjects for this year.

Reports Bookings

W. F. Seymour, Eastern and Central Division sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has returned from a several weeks' trip through his territory. Mr. Seymour reports the closing, during his stay in the Middle West, of all the remaining unsold key towns out of the Chicago branch office where "Down to the Sea in Ships," the Elmer Clifton whaling feature, has not been shown. These include Indianapolis, Racine, Wis., South Bend, Ind., and the entire Saxe Circuit in Wisconsin.

Wide Publicity for "The Drivin' Fool"

Milton R. Crandall, director of publicity and advertising for the Rowland and Clark theatre circuit, in Pittsburgh, waged a whale of an exploitation and publicity campaign for the showing at the Regent and Blackstone theatres during the week of Nov. 26, of the Hodkinson speed feature, "The Drivin' Fool." One of the big features of the campaign was a tieup with the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh.

The Syria Automobile club distributed hundreds of stickers among members, which urged upon all that they refrain from being "a driving fool." Members of the Co-Operative Club of Pittsburgh were informed at a meeting held at the William Penn Hotel of the engagement of the picture at the two theatres. Other tieups; and voluminous newspaper advertising helped materially in the success of the campaign.

"The Old Fool" Is Film of Family Life

When a picture is of universal interest, it is sure to mean "big money" at the box office and satisfaction for every exhibitor who books it. It was with this truth in mind that the Outlook Photoplay Corporation produced "The Old Fool" which Hodkinson has announced as its forthcoming release.

"The Old Fool" deals with the home life of a family of four generations and presents the problems which such a family has to confront, as well as the vibrant human interest, the laughter, and the pathos that is found in every home, no matter how commonplace. Those who have witnessed a pre-view of the picture agree that it will awaken a sympathetic response in an audience made up of patrons of any age.

Goldwyn Picture Makes Warner Studios to Keep Big Hit at the Capitol Busy Making Big Films

"In the Palace of the King," Goldwyn's first Emmett Flynn production, a picturization by June Mathis of F. Marion Crawford's popular novel of Spain in the reign of King Philip II., was presented at the Capitol Theatre, New York, last Sunday and scored a big hit. It is spectacular and dramatic, with some of the biggest and finest sets ever constructed for a motion picture. The cast is one of unusual importance, embracing Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Pauline Stark, Aileen Pringle, Hobart Bosworth, Sam de Grasse, William V. Mong, Lucien Littlefield and many others.

The New York newspaper reviewers were most cordial to "In the Palace of the King" in their criticisms. New York American said: "Thrills, intrigues, striking sets in 'Palace of King' at Capitol.

The production, pictorially, is an artistic creation."

Evening Telegram: "Takes a well merited place among the worth-while screen offerings of the year." Evening Journal: "A gorgeous production. Settings that make one gasp." Morning Telegraph: "A picture of real worth." Journal of Commerce: "Takes well-merited rank among the worth-while screen offerings of the year."

The World: "Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Hobart Bosworth and Pauline Stark were thoroughly convincing." The Sun and the Globe: "At times you are so enchanted watching its gleaming scenes you lose sight of the fact that your hearts are being broken right under your nose." Evening World: "Seldom have we seen a picture that was easier to gaze upon."

Jack Warner, who is helping make movie history via Warner Screen Classics, came to New York for a short visit, broke records for the largest number of conferences held in the minimum of time, and departed to resume his duties as production manager of the West Coast studios. While here, he announced important production plans which will make the Warner studios one of the busiest organizations in the industry.

Two productions, "How to Educate a Wife" and "Broadway After Dark," will start on the week of December 10. The first is from the pen of Elinor Glyn. The three principals in the cast are Marie Prevost, Monte Blue and Claude Gillingwater. The direction will be by William Seiter.

"Broadway After Dark" will be produced by Harry Rapf and directed by Monta Bell. Adolphe Menjou will head a noteworthy cast.

Next on the Warner program will be the famous Sinclair Lewis novel, "Babbitt." Direction has been assigned to Harry Beaumont. Dorothy Farnum will adapt Clyde Fitch's play, "Lovers' Lane," which William Beaudine will direct, following "Babbitt" in order of production. Following it will be "Cornered," under the directorial guidance of William Seiter.

Monta Bell will have another script ready for him in "The Yoke," a novel which has attained sensational success on the Continent, and which is gaining widespread popularity here. Its author is Hubert Wales.

Harry Beaumont is lined up for "Being Respectable" and Julien Josephson will do the script of "The Tenth Woman."

"Little Old New York" Is Breaking Records Manager Woody's Tour Fruitful for Ray Film

With regularity "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, continues on its record-breaking career in all parts of the country. Following in the wake of its sensational two weeks' run at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the Davies feature struck new high marks in Baltimore, Washington, New Haven and other cities.

All attendance records at the New Theatre, Baltimore, were shattered at the first showing of "Little Old New York." According to Eugene M. Daly, manager of the New Theatre, 10,000 persons saw the film on the opening day.

A. Interrante, manager of the Bijou Theatre, New Haven, Conn., wired that the film opened to the biggest business in the history of that house.

Walter J. Price of Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, sends word to the effect that "Little Old New York" did $22,385.20 on its opening week and that the picture in its two weeks would probably do about $40,000.

Returning a few days ago from a trip through the Central West, J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, literally told with contracts the story of his travels. Primarily the trip was made to confer with branch sales managers of Associated and renew acquaintance with exhibitor friends, but when the executive reached the home offices his bags were fairly bulging with records of first run bookings he had closed.

In Detroit Mr. Woody closed the deal for the indefinite run of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" at John H. Kunsy's Madison Theatre. This engagement got off to a splendid start last Sunday, according to reports to the home offices. Mr. Ray himself was host of the evening of the opening, having hurried on to Detroit at the close of the first week of his run in Washington.

In Omaha Mr. Woody closed arrangements for a test run, starting early in January, in Blank's Rialto Theatre. The results of this run will be watched closely, for on the outcome will depend the conditions under which "The Courtship" will be sold through the Blank circuit in Iowa and Nebraska territory. The same arrangement was made with John Hostetler for the Plaza, Sioux City, where the opening will be in the holiday period, runs in the many other Hostetler houses in Iowa coming later.

Hollywood Mailmen Help Publicize "The Mailman" Keaton Film Premiere on Coast Successful

F. B. O. report that the mail workers of the West Coast are completely "sold" on Emory Johnson's drama, "The Mailman." It was amply proven by the energetic co-operation given the West Coast theatres by the mail men of Hollywood when "The Mailman" opened its engagement at the new Hollywood Theatre last week.

Letter carriers distributed from house to house cards which advertised the production and at the same time carried a line asking the citizens to do what they could to advance the cause of the mail workers

The mail worker's co-operation also embraced other practical stunts which served to arouse interest in the picture in the fast-moving little community by the Pacific. Banners were placed across public thoroughfares and hundreds of cards were used on Hollywood boulevard admonishing pedestrians to "do their Xmas shopping early."

First National Film Is Started

December 1 saw the "shooting" of the first scene of "Lillies of the Field," a Corinne Griffith production, which John Francis Dillon is directing for First National release.

"Lillies of the Field" is an adaptation of the play of the same name by William Hurlburt, which ran for a year on Broadway. It has a rich society background.

Schmidt Joins F. B. O.

The Film Booking Offices announce this week that Artie Schmidt, formerly general sales manager of the Universal, has joined its forces and will be in charge of West Coast division.

Buster Keaton's second feature comedy for Metro, "Our Hospitality," was given its premiere at the Warfield Theatre in San Francisco recently and some of the comments of the San Francisco press were:

"Our Hospitality" is in my opinion the most enjoyable of the Buster Keaton comedies," wrote the San Francisco Examiner critic. The critic of the San Francisco Call said: "Here is a comedian with a desire to really act. Keaton is a comedian, dramatic actor and acrobat par excellence." "Our Hospitality" is Keaton's best comedy," said the reviewer of the San Francisco Bulletin. "Our Hospitality" is even vastly superior to 'Three Ages,' Buster's first feature Metro comedy," said the critic of the Chronicle. "Keaton's new comedy is enormously funny," wrote the reviewer of the San Francisco Journal. "One scene after another precipitates hysterics. This is Keaton's best picture."

Hoffman to Go West

With the return of General Manager of Sales Alexander Aronson of Truart Film Corporation, it is expected that M. H. Hoffman, vice president, will shortly make his contemplated extended trip to the West Coast to supervise production activities which are getting under way full force. It is anticipated that soon Truart will have four or five units continually engaged in production, inasmuch as two more units are expected to start work by December 1.

Cruze Film 34 Weeks at Hollywood

"The Covered Wagon" closed its run of thirty-four weeks at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood Saturday night, breaking the week's record for the house by $1,624. According to the figures received by wire from the Coast and given out by the Paramount office in New York, the gross receipts for the final week were $25,133, as against the house's weekly dollar capacity of $25,068.

The picture opened at the Egyptian last March and its thirty-four weeks of continuous showing broke all long-run records for the Pacific Coast. The total receipts for the engagement were $712,045, or an average of $30,942 per week. The total attendance was 695,717, nearly 100,000 more than the total population of all of Greater Los Angeles.

The Egyptian will be closed for a short time for renovation preparatory to the opening of Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments."

Pathe Films Lead List in Sherwood Selection

In his recently published volume, "The Best Moving Pictures of 1922-23," Robert E. Sherwood leads off his list of the sixteen best with two Pathe feature releases—"Nanook of the North" and "Grandma's Boy." Pathe scores again in Mr. Sherwood's list of "Honorable Mentions" in the same volume by the inclusion of "Safety Last" and "Dr. Jack."

In his chapter on "Short Subjects," Mr. Sherwood has singled out for special mention such Pathe releases as "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?," starring Ben Turpin; Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies; and the Will Rogers vehicles, "The Robin' Fool" and "Fruits of Faith." Paul Terry's "Aesop's Film Fables," which are also released weekly by Pathe, Mr. Sherwood classes as "foremost among the animated cartoons."

Writing of "Nanook of the North," Mr. Sherwood says: "There have been many fine travel pictures, many gorgeous 'scenics,' but there has been only one that deserves to be called great. That one is 'Nanook of the North.' It stands alone, literally in a class by itself. Indeed no list of the best pictures of this year or of all the years in the brief history of the movies, could be considered complete without it."

Premieres on Two Coasts of "The Virginian," Good

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred picture, "The Virginian," had its first New York showing last week at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. C. B. MacDonald, manager of the theatre, reports that "The Virginian" gave that house the biggest opening since the Dempsey-Firpo fight pictures.

The Evening Mail wrote: "The motion picture version of Owen Wister's novel, 'The Virginian,' is a true representation of the original story, beautifully mounted and well directed." The New York American said: "The Virginian" is a well acted, well presented and well aimed bit of entertainment." The New York Tribune commented: "The Virginian" is about the best thing we ever saw Mr. Harlan do."

The New York Herald said: "The Virginian" is a melodrama of the old school but a fresh point of view has been brought to bear on it and it is leavened with very antique hokum." The Evening Journal said: "The photoplay is something about which the producers can well boast."

"The Virginian" also did a record business at its western premiere, according to the management of the Granada Theatre, in San Francisco, where it has just closed a week's run. The critics there were unanimous in their praise.

"The Swamp Angel" Is Finished

Production has been finished on "The Swamp Angel," a First National picture featuring Colleen Moore and giving prominence to a supporting cast of "big names."

Written by Richard Connell and read by thousands as a magazine serial the story was directed by Clarence Badger and is scheduled for January release.

Has Closed Deal for Thompson Films

"Gold Diggers" Make Record in Baltimore

A brand new record for the city of Baltimore, Md., has just been established by "The Gold Diggers," the Warner Brothers' screen version of David Belasco's famous stage play of the same title. This picture is being held over for the second week at the Wizard Theatre in Baltimore. When it is considered that this is the second run and that the picture was held over for a second week also on first run at the Baltimore Metropolitan Theatre, some conception of the production's wonderful drawing power can be gained.

The holding over of a picture on second run establishes a new record for the city of Baltimore, it is stated. The picture did a stand-up business all week at the Wizard.

"The Gold Diggers" is creating new box-office records all over the country, according to reports.

Pathe's "Columbus" Breaks Plaza Records

"Columbus," the first of Pathe's thrilling series of historical dramas, being produced by the Yale University Press under the general title "Chronicles of America," was given its New York premiere at the Plaza Theatre recently and proved a big success, the theatre management reporting that the picture played to increasing business each succeeding day of the run and on the final day smashed all records for Saturday business in the history of the theatre.

The screen critics of the New York dailies accorded the production an enthusiastic reception, emphasizing in most instances the dramatic qualities as well as the authenticity of historical detail embodied in the picture.

The New York Times in its account of the Plaza showing said that the pictures "show those phases of our past which explain the significance of our present, and render these truthfully, inspiringly, and beautifully."

The Evening Mail commented: "'Columbus' held the interest of the spectators from start to finish. . . . The picture is beautifully mounted and moves along in an authoritative manner."

The Evening Post said: "The production does no violence to tradition and presents in a graphic and effective manner the essential points of the historical narrative."

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Films Widely Booked

The Robbins Circuit, which embraces Utica, Syracuse and New York, has booked all of the available seventh year Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases, including Marion Davies' picture, "Little Old New York." Mr. Robbins came to New York to close the deal.

The Rice chain of suburban theatres in Milwaukee has bought "Little Old New York" and all the seventh year Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the Fern, Riviera and State theatres. Tony Sudekum, who operates the Fifth Avenue and Knickerbocker theatres in Nashville and houses in four other towns, has closed with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan for the entire first group of releases.

Distinctive George Arliss picture, "The Green Goddess," Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York" and Goldwyn's "The Slave of Desire" have been booked by the West Coast Theatres. "The Green Goddess" will also be shown at the Ascher Circuit in Chicago.

Goldwyn's spectacular romance of medieval Spain, "In the Palace of the King," was played at the Century Theatre in Baltimore and the Rialto Theatre in Newark last week. It is the attraction at the Capital Theatre, New York, this week.

Mollie Ring in New Meighan Film

"Three Weeks," the Goldwyn studios' picturization of Elinor Glyn's novel, has been completed.

Chaplin Making "The Gold Rush" "Going Up" Smashes Records Everywhere

Announcement is made from the Charles Chaplin studio that "The Gold Rush" will be the title of the forthcoming Chaplin comedy, work on which has been begun and for which the producer-star is now preparing his story.

The story will be a Chaplin story of the days of the "Fortyniners," Chaplin himself will again don the baggy breeches, the old shoes and the faithful derby, and from all reports from those "in the know" the story as being outlined will present the comedy genius in the funniest role he has ever attempted.

This will be Chaplin's first comedy release for United Artists Corporation.

"Unknown Purple" Praised in Boston

When "The Unknown Purple," Truarts' thrilling mystery production, played extended day and date first-run engagements at the Modern and Beacon theatres, Boston, it was greeted with unusual praise by the newspaper critics of that city. In the Boston Advertiser, George C. Mackinon wrote:

"Henry Walthall, once more happily active upon the screen, assumed at the Modern and Beacon this week the pivotal role in a filming of 'The Unknown Purple,' that notable example of melodramatic originality. As a stage play 'The Unknown Purple' went its creepy way here in Boston for several weeks, to the delight and horror of the populace.

"As treated in the films, it has probably gained interest. For the weird phenomenon of the invisible man is handled by the camera in an eerie way which even the most consummate stagecraft could not hope to duplicate. When a piece like 'The Unknown Purple' comes along, with its mysterious purple light and its invisible avenger, people like it because it's different."

Ray Film a Hit in Washington

Charles Ray's pretentious production, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," opened at the President Theatre, Washington, D. C., to a large and enthusiastic crowd, Sunday, November 25, for an indefinite run. It was the eastern premiere of the picture and some of the nation's greatest political and social leaders attended. So great was the crowd seeking admission that the box office had to be closed long before the night performance started, and many hundreds were turned away.

Mr. Ray was enthusiastically cheered at the close of his address. The newspapers were unanimous in their praise, saying that productions of this type attracted a class of patrons who had never before been prevailed on to attend a picture theatre.

Talmadge Starts Second for Truarts

Under the direction of Henry Lehrman, Richard Talmadge, stunt artist extraordinary, has begun work on his second production of a series of thrill dramas for Truarts Film Corporation. The picture which is entitled "On Time" is being produced by Carlos Productions. The same type of high-grade, all-star cast is being assembled by Director Lehrman to support Talmadge in this picture that was presented in the star's support in "Let's Go!"

Phil Rosen, well known for the many virile productions he has directed, has been engaged to direct the third Richard Talmadge picture and will spend two months on the preparation of the continuity and assembling of cast during the time Talmadge is engaged in making picture number two of the series.

Both the second and third productions have melodramatic stories in which Talmadge is afforded an opportunity for stunts, but stories which also are swift-moving, realistic vehicles.

Ramon Novarro Going to Egypt

Having completed his big role before the camera in Fred Niblo's new production, "Thy Name Is Woman," Ramon Novarro arrived in New York last Thursday on the first lap of his journey to Egypt, where he will join Rex Ingram, who is conducting extensive researches there. Mr. Novarro's trip across follows cable instructions received from Mr. Ingram at the Metro offices here last week.

Mr. Ingram's party in Egypt already consists of the following: Alice Terry, his wife; Curt Renfeld, his production manager; John Daumery, well-known technician, and John F. Seitz, who headed the corps of cameramen that so successfully photographed "Scaramouche."

Douglas MacLean's comedy, "Going Up," continues to smash records, according to reports to Associated Exhibitors. Exhibitors are calling this feature one of the outstanding box office winners of recent years, and some, as further evidence of the picture's success and in response to public demand, are prolonging the runs originally scheduled.

L. B. Gross, manager of the Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal., wired to J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated: "Douglas MacLean in 'Going Up' smashed house record Sunday and bids fair to establish new record for week. Congratulations. In 'Going Up' you have best box-office bet in years. Same fans come back again and again. Last reel contains more real laughs than any six-reel comedy. Audience rocked building with dynamic laughter."

E. C. Prinsen, of the Fond du Lac Theatre Company, Fond du Lac, Wis., wired to Ralph Wettstein, Associated Exhibitors branch manager in Milwaukee: "'Going Up,' with Douglas MacLean, finest comedy we have played in months. Booked for three days and played five. Congratulations."

Mary Carr Signed by Johnson

Before leaving Hollywood for San Francisco in quest of location last week, Emery Johnson, the producer, announced that he had signed Mary Carr for a series of big attractions to be released through F. B. O.

His first production with Mrs. Carr will also present Johnnie Walker, the team appearing as mother and son for the first time since their memorable triumph in "Over the Hill."

Kunsky Likes Ray; Woody Tells Plans

J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, who is making a tour of the exchanges in the Middle West, stopped off in Detroit for a few days and closed a deal with John H. Kunsky for "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Charles Ray's super picture. The deal also involves the personal appearance of Mr. Ray with the showing of the picture, which is to open at the Madison Theatre, week of December 2, for an indefinite run. Mr. Woody says:

"We are going to release big pictures only. We have turned down over 100 pictures this year that were submitted to us for distribution. Some of them were mighty good program pictures, others were mediocre, but we are after only pictures that have big box-office value because we have learned it is the only kind exhibitors will pay regular money for—and it does not pay to handle the other kind. Exhibitors can look for some big announcements from Associated Exhibitors during the next few months."

J. Stuart Blackton finished "Let Not Man Put Asunder," the picture of Basil King's story at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn last week. Pauline Frederick, Lou Tellegen and Helena D'Algy played the last important scenes in a drenching rainstorm.

Others in the cast are: Leslie Austen, Pauline Neff, Violet De Barros, Martha Petelle, Gladys Franzin, Clifton Webb and Homer Lynn.

"Anna Christie" in 35 Theatres

December 2 to 8 will be "Anna Christie" week, as far as thirty five leading first run theatres are concerned. During that week the Thomas H. Ince production will appear simultaneously in thirty-five cities of the United States, according to First National. These theatres include the Strand in New York; Chicago in Chicago; Warfield in San Francisco and the Circle in Indianapolis. This array of simultaneous first runs is among the largest the industry has ever seen.

"Anna Christie" has already won unstinted praise from trade and fan magazine critics. It was selected by the National Board of Review for a special screening at the Town Hall, New York, on November 28 in order that the entire membership and its friends might witness a picture that bore testimony to "the progress and power of the screen."

The booking of "Anna Christie" in thirty-five cities was accomplished by First National at a time when exhibitors are seeking the best pictures for pre-holiday presentation. Approximately a million people will see "Anna Christie" during the one week of December 2 to 8.

"Maytime" Debut at Newark

The screen version of Rida Johnson Young's play, "Maytime," which B. P. Schulberg has produced as a Preferred Picture, had its first public exhibition last week at the Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J. This picture, claimed to be the biggest production Gasnier has ever made, opened to big business the first day which was maintained throughout the whole week.

The film will be released generally within the next month. Its cast includes Ethel Shannon, Harrison Ford, William Norris and Clara Bow.

One Feature Company and Five Comedy Units Working for Pathe

With one feature company and five comedy units engaged on new subjects at the Hal Roach Studios in Culver City, production activities at this important producing center are moving along at a fast pace, it is learned in a statement issued this week from the Pathe home office.

Camera work on Hal Roach's new feature, "Somewhere in Missouri," is now well under way. Hal Roach is directing this subject. The cast includes Glenn Trayton, Blanche Mehaffey, Emma Tanzey, John Gavin, Leo Willis, Bob Kortman and Richard Daniels. The story is a human-interest drama built around politics in a small town of the Middle West.

Having made a brief essay into the circle of white shirt fronts and tuxedos in "Uncensored Movies," Will Rogers is back to the he-man togs of the plains in his two latest comedies for Pathe. The second of these, which was started this week, introduces Rogers as a delegate to a cattle-men's convention.

Bob McGowan and the "Our Gang" players are busy on a new two-reel comedy. The new two-reel comedy just started by Stan Laurel promises, it is said, to be one of the funniest of his series for Pathe. James Finlayson and Ena Gregory appear in support of Laurel.

The new "Spat Family" comedy, on which work has started, presents the discordant trio on a motoring trip.

Charles Chase is in a new single-reel comedy, made under the direction of James Parrott.

Finds Metro Films Are Warners' Production Favorites of Patrons Draws Crowded Houses

Metro heads the list of top-notch pictures through a greater percentage of popular hits according to Mark M. Hansen, manager of the Victory Theatre at Oxnard, California. Mr. Hansen canvassed his patrons regularly for a period of many months with the result that out of a total of nine pictures that Victory patrons liked the best three of them are Metro productions. These are "Broadway Rose," one of Mae Murray's recent Metro starring pictures; "Strangers of the Night," the Fred Niblo production of Walter Hackett's great international stage success, "Captain Applejack"; and "The Eternal Struggle" the new Reginald Barker production taken from G. B. Lancaster's widely-read novel, "The Law-Bringers."

"Broadway Rose" belongs to the season just closed but both "Strangers of the Night" and "The Eternal Struggle" are products of the 1923-1924 Metro season. The two latter pictures were produced under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices.

Incidentally Miss Murray has already completed her newest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," while "The French Doll," the first of Miss Murray's pictures of the new season is now an assured success all over the country.

Rin-tin-tin, the trained police dog, continues to receive lavish commendation both here and in England, by reason of his work in "Where the North Begins," the Harry Rapf production for Warner Brothers, which Chester M. Franklin directed. In British trade papers, reviews praise Rin-tin-tin and the production to the skies; in this country the picture, following its Broadway premiere at the Capitol Theatre, is playing to capacity houses.

At the Warner home offices telegrams received from exhibitors testify to the manner in which box offices are reaping profits from the picture. George J. Schade, of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, writes: "Am showing 'Where the North' for three days. First two days already shattered all previous three days' runs by almost one hundred per cent."

From W. M. Smith, proprietor of the Rialto, Tulsa, Oklahoma, comes word that "Where the North Begins," with Rin-tin-tin, broke our Sunday record today in a period when business is very slack."

Playing in Duluth during the week of November 11, at the Lyric, the picture received high praise. The Duluth Herald said: "The Lyric was crowded yesterday and seldom have we seen such an enthusiastic audience."

Commenting on the same picture, the London Cinema has the following to say: "The dog, Rin-tin-tin, is beyond praise." The Bioscope remarks that "this film admirably fulfills its purpose in providing many opportunities for a magnificent Alsatian wolf-hound who plays the leading part with extraordinary intelligence and effect." The Kinematograph Weekly declares: "Rin-tin-tin is himself and an endearing personage."

Yale Press Progresses on Historical Series

Rapid progress is being made on the extensive production schedule of Yale University Press in its screen series of historical dramas for distribution by Pathe. The unusual success which has attended the presentation of the first two numbers of this group in prominent first-run theatres has added fresh impetus to the production activities, and several additional subjects will shortly be ready for distribution.

The next subject to be released is "Vincennes," which has been set for December 2nd. This deals with the historic campaign of George Rogers Clark against the British stronghold of Vincennes during the Revolutionary War. Following "Vincennes" on the release schedule will be "Daniel Boone," which has been set for December 30th.

Already completed are: "The Frontier Woman," directed by Webster Campbell, which is said to throw into high relief the heroic part played by women in the pioneer life of America; and "Peter Stuyvesant," directed by Frank Tuttle and dealing with the Dutch settlement on the Hudson. In preparation are "Wolf and Montcalm" and "The Gateway of the West."

Good Publicity for Vitagraph Production

J. Louis Rome, manager of the Apollo Theatre, Baltimore, Md., created a furore in that city when he played "The Midnight Alarm," the Vitagraph super-feature with Percy Marmont in the lead.

Manager Rome obtained from the City Fire Department the oldest steam fire engine it possessed and two of the old fire horses which had long since been retired. He used this as a street ballyhoo for "The Midnight Alarm."

The newspapers of Baltimore immediately started a controversy over the city government lending its equipment for such an advertising purpose. When it was realized that "The Midnight Alarm" is one of the greatest lessons against carelessness and for fire prevention, public sentiment favored the Fire Department's action.

Officials of Syracuse, N. Y., accepted this view at a pre-release showing of the film. The Syracuse Safety Council publicly endorsed the showing of "The Midnight Alarm" in a letter addressed to Mitchell Fitzer, manager of the Rivoli Theatre.

"Rosita" Goes Well in Milwaukee

To exceptional business Mary Pickford's "Rosita" opened an engagement at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, November 10. The booking was on short notice, but Managing Director Leo A. Landau, conducted an aggressive advance campaign which included big newspaper copy in forceful style, a selected advance trailer, street car displays and window showings.

As a result of the success of "Rosita" at the Alhambra the run was extended for a second week with a shift to the Garden theatre, the companion house of the Alhambra, which is one block away and which plays at exactly the same prices as the Alhambra.

San Francisco Premieres for Two Goldwyn Films

Two of Goldwyn's big productions scheduled for early releases will have their premieres in San Francisco. They are Victor Seastrom's first picture made in this country, "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," and Rupert Hughes' own original screen story, "Reno," formerly called "Law Against Law."

"Reno" has a cast headed by

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

New Grantland Rice "Sportlights" Head Pathe December 16 Program

Week of December 16 marks the release on Pathe program of the first of the new single-reel series of sport pictures based on stories written by Grantland Rice, the well known sporting authority whose articles are syndicated in seventy newspapers. The series is known as "Sportlights" and the first one, "Wild and Woolly," visualizes a Western rodeo with a full quota of thrills and spills.

This week also sees the release of "Sunday Calm," another of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies, in which the kids go on a picnic with results that can easily be imagined. About the only calm thing about this fast-moving and humorous comedy is the title, for it is filled with rip-roaring fun.

The single reel comedy "Fully Insured," presents Snub Pollard as a man who takes out an insurance policy which assures an uninterrupted salary while he is out of a job. He gets fired continually and the agent keeps getting him a new job.

The Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its tenth episode, "Circumstantial Evidence," while the current Aesop's Fable is "The Cat Came Back," in which the cat steals a teddy bear, dreams he goes to the Arctic and is chased back by a bear.

There are a variety of interesting subjects in Pathe Review No. 50, including a pictorial section showing "Three Lakes" in the Adirondacks, the manufacture of wrought iron lamps, the catching of tuna fish and a color section containing picturesque views of the Hopi Indians on their reservation in Arizona.

Two issues of Pathe News and one of Topics of the Day complete the releases for the week.

Tie-up for Rogers Two-Reelers

Pathe announces the completion of arrangements by which the two-reel comedies which Will Rogers is making for Pathe release will be tied up with Rogers' newspaper column, "Slipping the Lariat Over." This column appears weekly in over fifty prominent newspapers and contains humorous quips and illusions to persons and events in the limelight. This should be of benefit to exhibitors in publicizing the Will Rogers series, three of which have already been released by Pathe.

New Christies Carry Out Slogan "More Action and More Laughs"

The promise of more and faster laughs in the new series of 1923-24 comedies is said to be strikingly carried out in the three most recently completed pictures which will be released during this month and early January on program of Educational Film Exchanges. The action has been speeded up to a faster gait and the situations broadened somewhat, but the comedies still contain definite and coherent plots and the high quality of sets, lighting and photography as the former Christies.

"Black and Blue," released in mid-December, presents Jimmie Adams in a unique role and revolves around a situation where he is given a coat of iodine so he cannot attend his own wedding. This shows him in blackface as he was in "Roll Along," but for the greater part of the film he is a white man. The action reaches a fast pace.

"Call the Wagon," released December 30, presents Neal Burns in the type of picture that admits of as fast action as "Black and Blue." It is played amid beautiful sets and the rapid pace starts almost from the opening scene.

The first one in January will be something out of the ordinary for Christie. The action takes place out west where, as the subtitle says, "Where men are men and the women are even better than that." Bobby Vernon is the featured player, appearing as a Ford salesman. In a country where the horse is king, the flivver leads in a bandit chase and capture, accompanied by real acrobatic stunts.

Thus does Christie get off to a flying start with comedies containing "more action and more laughs" as promised.

Century Starts Two

Two new Century Comedies are now in production. Noel Smith has started on Pal the dog's latest, "Putting It Over," and Al Herman is working on "Captain Apple Sauce," starring Buddy Messinger. Two other directors are due to start work in a few days.

Sennett's Bathing Beauties Return in Pathe Two-Reelers

The forthcoming release by Pathe of the two-reel Mack Sennett comedy, "Trifling," marks the return to the screen of the famous Sennett bathing beauties after an extended absence. The producer has selected for this event fifteen of Southern California's most beautiful women, several of whom have won prizes in contests run by newspapers and magazines.

Harry Langdon will have the starring role in this comedy with Alberta Vaughan as his leading woman, and Jack Cooper, Dot Farley, Irene Lentz and Vernon Dent in the cast. Eric Kenton is directing under Sennett's supervision.

It is stated that the bathing girls will be required to do more than stand around and furnish atmosphere. No girls were accepted who were not proficient in swimming, riding, driving a car and general athletic sports. Among the beauties are Eugenie Gilbert, Cecile Evans, a five times winner, and Elsie Tarron, who was adjudged to have the most perfect figure at Santa Monica last summer.

Educational Cites Poll

Showing Old-Time Songs Better Liked Than Jazz

Educational quotes the result of a questionnaire submitted by three radio broadcasting stations as unmistakably indicating a preference for songs of other days over modern jazz.

This questionnaire was sent out in connection with the annual radio show in that city and out of more than 100,000 responses over 70 per cent were in favor of the songs we used to sing. The responses came from every state in the Union, every province in Canada and even from the McMillan Arctic expedition now within eleven degrees of the North Pole.

This, says Educational, is in perfect harmony with the reception that is being bestowed on the "Sing Them Again" series of song-novelty pictures which that company is distributing and which gives the audience a chance to join in the singing of their favorite songs as the words are flashed on the screen.

It is said that audiences in cities ranging from New York to the cross roads hamlet in the West are receiving these old songs in a manner that indicates their preference for the old melodies and appreciation of the chance to sing them again.

Universal Finishes Filming Serial "Beasts of Paradise"

Work has been completed at Universal City on "Beasts of Paradise," the current Universal chapter picture, starring William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick. It was directed by William Craft, veteran maker of many film thrillers.

In addition to the two popular serial stars, the continued feature also, it is said, boasts a strong supporting cast.

Laid aboard ship and on a mysterious island in the South Seas, the picture plot admitted of romantic and suspenseful handling.

The action included much jungle stuff and adventures on the part of the leading characters in which wild animals figure.

The supporting cast includes William H. Gould, well-known vaudeville player, as the chief villain. Others are Ruth Royce, Margaret Morris, Jim Welsh, Clarke Comstock, Joe Bonomo, Slim Cole and many more. As the result of her work in this serial, Margaret Morris won a place as chief supporting player in "The Ghost City," a new serial now in production on the "U" lot.

Mal St. Clair Signs with F. B. O.

Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O., arrived at the Robertson-Cole Hollywood studios recently and the first thing he did was to sign Mal St. Clair to direct a new series of H. C. Witwer two reels.

The title of the Witwer series he will next film will be announced at an early date and production will start at once.

White Signs Burns

"Bobby" Burns, popular writer of comedies, has been added to the Jack White forces and will prepare stories and gags for Mermaid comedies. Mr. Burns has successfully written, directed and acted in comedies. He made a series for Reelcraft and owns a studio near Orlando, Florida.

New Bray Picture

"The Man at the Throttle," the latest Bray production on the Hodkinson releasing schedule, is described as a technical romance with a real thrill. The picture depicts the work of a locomotive engineer and the risks and hazards he experiences.

New Semon Comedy

"Horseshoes," the third of the Larry Semon releases by Vitagraph for this season, has been finally edited and prints are being shipped to Vitagraph branches. The two previous Semon comedies were "The Gown Shop" and "Lightning Love."

"Pinto" with Century

"Pinto," whose cartoon work is syndicated in a large number of newspapers, has been engaged by Century to pass on the scripts for all completed comedies in the capacity of gagman.

Pathe Review No. 50

(One Reel)

Beautiful photography distinguishes a group called "The Three Lakes" in this number: interesting and amusing pictures showing the making of new wrought-iron lamps after old-fashioned methods; "Getting in the Tuna Fish" and color views of the Hopi Indians at their basket weaving in Arizona are included.—M. K.

American succeeds in uncovering and frustrating the schemes of reactionaries in that country to prevent the completion of public improvement fostered by the progressive element, and at the same time rescues a white girl whom he makes his wife.

Owen Moore does good work, especially in the scenes where he appears as an American and also as a Chinaman; his work in the masquerading sequences is not so convincing. His work and the general atmosphere of the production which emphasizes the strange customs of these people as judged from American standards are the principal points of appeal. The story interest lags at times and lacks conviction, but for those who are fascinated by stories of

"Sunday Calm"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hal Roach's inimitable "Gang" manages to get as much fun out of Sunday as any other day in this comedy. Their adventures while on a picnic are amusing but to a less hilarious extent than sometimes. It is more like a chain of bright little incidents than a comedy of one special idea and a big punch. Moments such as the wagon breaking down, Farina making off with the lunch and incidentally getting a ride on the pig, the children chasing hop toads and trying the old swimming hole and finally the rain-storm are outstanding "chuckles."—M. K.

"A Midsummer Night's Scream"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Round Nine of the Fighting Blood series has a flurry in Chinatown and a thrilling fight between Gale and Red Mack. Gale is mysteriously summoned to Chinatown where he fights his way to Patricia in distress as he believes, but it proves to be only a big surprise birthday party in his honor. The fight which makes Gale light heavyweight champion of the world is one of the most exciting of the series. The whole number is excellent.—M. K.

"Film Foolish"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

The intimate side of a true to life dumbbell man-of-all-trades about the average studio is skilfully revealed, with untouched naturalness, in "Film Foolish," directed by Norman Taugog. Slapstick stuff galore, all kinds of plausible mistakes, and lots of the lowdown on how and why some pictures are made, steep this one to the superlative in plenty of the biff and bang.—T. W.

"The Merchant of Menace"

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Better and better seems to be the slogan of the Fighting Blood Series based upon H. C. Witwer's stories. Round Eight is one of the best yet released. As a novelty, it includes a pirate tea on Patricia's yacht which has many bright incidents and a bit of suspense ending in a barge fight between Gale and the heavyweight, Red Mack, which is broken up by the police. It is all sparkling entertainment.—M. K.

"The Income Tax Collector"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Lew Brice is cast as the most unpopular man in the world in this Sunshine comedy. The idea will appeal to a great majority and the action in which the income tax collector is thrown out of a train window, into explosions, through the mouth of a cannon, fed to the lions and still survives so as to make his collection is most amusing. It should be a good choice for almost any house.—M. K.

"Over the Fence"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Educational's latest Juvenile Comedy, "Over the Fence," is the kind that should cause more than the usual number of good hearty laughs. It is just an account of the daily antics of real kids. It can be easily seen that Earl Montgomery got his bunch of kids up to the pitch of fun and fight where they were oblivious to everything else; and those kids go to it, throwing mud at one another as hard as they can in the old swimmin' hole and also succeed with wholesome avidity in mashing the birthday cake of the socially aspiring aunt.—T. W.

"Snooky's Covered Wagon"

(Educational—Animal Comedy—Two Reels)

Without any doubt Educational in this comedy scores one of the greatest exhibitions of a large number of trained animals ever gathered before the camera. The uncannily realistic acting of these animals from the tiniest pig to the biggest lion, and especially that of Snooky the chimpanzee, should make a big hit with everyone. Here is a picture that will make you forget everything else as you sit back and enjoy it. Unique fails to describe the genuine cleverness of this film. Even those to whom animal films do not appeal will like this one, and those who enjoy animal antics will be so pleased that they will thank you for running this picture. The story is by Frank Beebe and it is a John Rounan production.—T. W.

"Fully Insured"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Because of the idea in this comedy being new, it should go fairly well although most of the action is familiar slapstick. Snub Pollard, egg shipping clerk takes out insurance which protects him while jobless, by assuring an uninterrupted salary. It proves easy to get fired—more than once. There are a good number of laughs for those who like rough-and-ready comedy.—M. K.

"The Cat Came Back"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

As a punishment for stealing a little girl's teddy bear, the Paul Terry cat has an exciting nightmare in which he goes on a bear hunt in the Arctic but is chased and terrified by the Mama and Papa bears of his victim. It is a thrilling and amusing number.—M. K.

"Home Again"

(Educational—Song Series—One Reel)

Educational's latest "Sing Them Again Series" under the title of "Home Again" includes "Old Black Joe," "Annie Rooney" and "Home Sweet Home." What led to the composing of each of these songs is enacted by film characters prior to the flashing of the words of each of the respective songs on the screen.—T. W.

Story

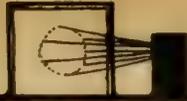

Robert Wells, an American born in China, is sent by his uncle to assist Ray Williams in building bridges in China. Williams is secretly in the pay of Chinese reactionaries to impede this work. To discredit Wells, he has him given insidious drugs which cause him to lose his grip and sink until he becomes an outcast. The son of the Lord of Thundergate, a Chinese reactionary, steals money and disappears. Meeting Wells, who is in a stupor, he changes clothes with him. The deception is not discovered because of the resemblance between the two, as they are really half-brothers. Wells recovers, discovers William's perfidy, and falls in love with a white girl and saves her from a forced wedding with the Lord of Thundergate.

this type, it takes rank well up in its class.

Owen Moore is assisted by a competent cast including Tully Marshall, who does good work as an old Chinese nobleman, Robert McKim as the villain, Sylvia Breamer as his accomplice and Virginia Brown Faire in the role opposite the star.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Electrical Action

Ernest Hauson, Salem, Massachusetts, says:

As a student of electrical engineering I have frequently been referred to your excellent work, "Motion Picture Handbook," for information. I write now with regard to one point which is puzzling me, as follows:

Paragraph 2 on page 6 of the Third Edition, begins: "The general idea is that current seeks to escape from the wires into the ground. This is not true, except insofar as the ground may offer a path from positive to negative."

That statement certainly is sound logic. There is no doubt about that, yet from discussions I have had with men whom I know have had years of experience in practical electrical work, and from my own experience (which is small) I am unable to convince myself that the statement is entirely correct, though I would not have you think I claim you to be in the wrong, for I don't claim anything, being unable to prove anything.

The next sentence of the paragraph reads: "If you could have a generator and wire system working at 5,000 volts pressure, or any other voltage, thoroughly and completely insulated (a condition never found in actual practice) you could stand with your bare feet on wet ground and handle either wire of the circuit without any danger whatsoever, etc."

That is to say, if you had a 5,000-volt alternator or D. C. generator, running at rated speed, connected to supply line which is either open or loaded—no difference as regards the argument?—and the machine and lines have say 100,000 megohms insulation resistance between them and the ground at all points, you claim a man could safely stand on wet earth and handle either wire with bare hands.

Does this claim apply to D. C. systems alone, to A. C. systems alone, or to both? I ask because I think I can see that it would be true of D. C., but I believe conditions are different with A. C. Many electrical men, yourself included, have told me that electricity does not seek to escape into the ground under any conditions. I cannot prove them to be in error, BUT * * *

The good friend then continues for three pages, citing reasons why he feels doubt as to the correctness of the proposition that electricity does not seek the ground except as the ground offers a path from positive to negative. I select the following example, which he cites as illustrative:

Take an automobile ignition system, for example, using a battery of dry cells or storage battery for current source, and a vibrator coil to step the current up for the plugs; or take a Ford, which is a typical example. Here is the experiment:

Selecting a dry day, place the machine on dry ground and pump the tires up to usual pressure. Unscrew all spark plugs. Reconnect the wires to them and lay them all on top of engine. Close ignition switch and when the engine is cranked over by hand, sparks appear at plug points in their respective order, say 1, 2, 4, 3, or whatever the firing sequence may be. Now pick up one of the plugs (if you dare) and, holding it in your bare hand, place the other hand on some part of the engine or metal of the car. When some one then cranks the engine you of course get a jolt. Certainly! for that is the nature of things under those circumstances.

Here Is the Queer Part

Now remove your hand from the car, still holding the plug, but not touching any part of the car except the part of the plug which one side of the high tension circuit. Let some one again crank the engine by hand and YOU WILL STILL GET A WICKED JOLT.

Remember, the car stands on rubber and you on dry ground and you are NOT touching anything except ground and one side of the plug. The man cannot feel a shock except current flows through him, hence he must form part of the circuit, if reasoning is of any value. WHERE AND HOW?

An electrician told me the spark plug shock was due to frequency, but with that I cannot agree. Common sense tells me better. A vibrator could hardly give more than the equivalent of 100 cycles per second, and the shock is felt when a vibrator is used. Hope I have not caused you inconvenience in helping me out.

Nope, you certainly have not, because I can't help you out. Frequency is "out" I think, but there is something here that is too much for me.

After reading friend Hauson's letter I went out and attached a raw (uninsulated) wire to one of the spark plugs of Nancy Hanks, the Go Devil, started the engine at normal speed, and stood on solid granite (which is pretty good insulation) EIGHT FEET FROM THE PLUG and touched the end of the wire with one finger. I was able to touch it without serious discomfort, but there was an effect very much like one gets from a medical battery when the plunger is pulled, say, half way out.

After writing the above and scratching my head a while I went out and tried it over. I found the effect was the same from any part of the length of the wire, or from the plug itself, but was stronger when I touched the other plug. The plugs were still screwed in place in the engine, of course.

I'm stumped. The effect was the same when standing on wet ground and on a solid ledge of granite, which seems to dispose of the idea that current was passing through my body into the ground, and anyhow why would it when the wire itself lay on the rock I stood on?

On the whole I still stand on my original statement, as quoted by friend Hauson, BUT will some of you high tension bugs be good enough to tell Me, Us and Company where in hallelujah that shock comes from. I don't know.

LATER: This thing puzzles me. I'm wondering! My body is being charged at probably many thousands of volts (I don't know the voltage of a spark plug) and discharged to zero many times a second. Could or could not that create sensation unless there be current flow??? I think not! Oh, Shoe! Every time I think I've answered every gosh danged question any mortal man can possibly think of, some nut comes in with a bran new one that has perhaps been right there before my eyes for years, but I'd never thought of it. Get busy, you wise ones. My goat has galloped off into the tall brush and is lost! So I'll give a number of weishimers who couldn't answer anything more complicated than how much is three and four, and wouldn't answer that if they thought it would help anyone, another chance to yelp: "Richardson's learnin' something from US again"!!!

Simple

John C. Billings, Minneapolis, Minn., says:

I am studying hard to fit myself to be a motion picture projectionist. When I say that I don't mean a mere machine operator, but a motion picture projectionist in all I understand that term to mean. Have not progressed so very far yet and am puzzled by some things which may seem simple to you. For instance, the reason I am writing you is that recently a man in one of our theatres, who calls himself an "operator," and really seems, so far as I can judge, to be just that, asked me how I would find the ohmic resistance in a 110-volt fifty-ampere rheostat.

I told him I would divide 110 by 50, which would give me the number of ohms resistance in the rheostat. He said I was wrong. Is he correct?

That depends. If he merely asked you how to find the resistance in a 110-volt fifty-ampere rheostat, he is technically wrong and you are right. However, it may be presumed that you were both talking about a rheostat such as is built to be used in series with a projection arc, in which case he is right and you are wrong, because such rheostats are calculated to deliver their rated capacity when working in series with a projection arc, and since the projection arc itself has considerable resistance, that resistance must first be subtracted. This may be done in either of two ways, the simplest being to subtract the arc voltage from the line voltage and then divide the remainder by the amperage, thus: A 50-ampere arc should operate at about 56 volts. In other words, 56 volts will be consumed in forcing the current across the arc gap.

We therefore subtract 56 from 110 and have 54. We then divide 54 by 50 (voltage by amperage) and find that the rheostat must have 1.08 ohms resistance, OR we may divide 110 by 50, which gives us 2.2 ohms as the total necessary resistance. Then we divide 56 by 50, which gives us 1.12 ohms as the resistance of the arc, and $2.2 - 1.12$ equals 1.08 as the resistance the rheostat must provide.

It is very simple, friend Billings, but is approximate only, since resistance increases with age and the rheostat rated to deliver 50 amperes will, after some use, really deliver considerably less.

Adjustable Shutter

I would like again to call the attention of projector manufacturers to the desirability of an adjustable shutter, or a shutter which may be readily adjusted to different blade and opening widths by projectionists.

The stock (and valid) objection of the past has been that such a large percentage of the men could not adjust such a shutter intelligently, hence would produce a very bad condition, for which the projector itself would be blamed by the exhibitor.

This objection still holds true, insofar as placing such a shutter out as standard equipment. It does not, however, now hold good as to putting it out in the form of special equipment, for there are now a large and increasing number of projectionists who not only would welcome such a shutter, but also would be able to apply it intelligently. I'm for the adjustable rotating shutter as special equipment.

Off Ag'in, On Ag'in

Richard Yancey, Projectionist Criterion Theatre, Poplar Buff, Mo., relates the following happening:

"A very peculiar thing happened here last night. It was drizzling very wet moisture, while lightning was playing hide and seek with itself real frequent when I began the evening show of six reels.

I was projecting the fourth reel when—bing! all the lights, including the projector arc, took a vacation—just went out, as it were. I did not pull my switches, as I should have done. When the lights came on again the projector arc—Powers Projector—lighted up, the projector started and everything was "as was." We use a mercury arc rectifier. The line voltage is 110.

The reason I relate this circumstance is that in the Bluebook you say—page 375—the carbon tips may be within one sixty-fourth of an inch of each other and the arc will not start—that is will not start until the carbons are in actual contact. Mine were more than one-eighth of an inch apart. Please explain what was the cause of the arc lighting.

Could not say positively, but in all human probability a bit of the carbon core fell out, or a bit of carbon dropped off and lodged between the positive and negative carbon tips, or else your current came on again almost immediately. The gas stream will still exist for a second or two after the arc is extinguished, and so long as it does exist the arc will re-strike itself. Just what voltage it would require to cause current to jump an air gap of $1/8$ of an inch between cold carbons I don't know, but certainly it would be in excess of 1,000.

On the whole I think something between the carbon tips is the answer, because by the time your rectifier-tube would be started again after it went dead, the arc stream would have disappeared entirely and no ordinary voltage would then restart the arc.

A. P. S. in Pittsburgh

Recently the American Projection Society inaugurated a policy long since conceived, but held in abeyance awaiting the psychological moment, by establishing a local branch of the society in Pittsburgh, Pa. This branch will be known as Chapter No. Two of the American Projection Society.

This department and its editor congratulate the members of the new branch, and wish for it a long and useful existence, because the objects of the A. P. S. are 100 per cent. good.

Pittsburgh members will, however, do well to not lose sight of these objects, because they form the very keystone of the arch of the whole structure. Without them the A. P. S. falls to the ground, becomes a dead issue and a has-been.

It will also be well to remember that the parent organization has successfully weathered the years by very carefully guarding its membership. So extreme was the A. P. S. in this particular that for at least two or three years no member was allowed to ask a man to join, and one black ball served to reject an applicant. This latter was, however, found to be too severe and was somewhat modified, though to just what extent I do not remember.

You will thus see that getting into the A. P. S. was no easy task, with result that the Society has had the best men in the profession in New York City seeking admission, instead of having to seek for members.

The accompanying photograph shows a portion of the A. P. S. New York City headquarters. To be eligible to membership one must be a competent, capable motion picture projectionist; also he MUST be a man of good character and decent reputation—a man all members will feel it a privilege to associate with.

The objects of the society are: (A)—To supply social contact between the members by furnishing club rooms where they may meet, under right conditions, and enjoy social intercourse, have access to instructive reading matter and enjoy clean, healthful recreation; (B)—To improve the knowledge of the members in the technique of the profession by holding educational meetings at which experts are secured to lecture to the members on various phases of the work of projection.

The editor has for two years been an honorary member of the Society. Prior to that I was an active member, practically ever since the inception of the Society. I am proud of my membership, because it is a recognized fact that only good men are admitted. I therefore am, through my membership, directly allied with that sort of men.

I would respectfully caution the society that, while the establishment of chapters in other cities will broaden the work of the society, still SUCH ESTABLISHMENT SHOULD ONLY TAKE PLACE WITH THE GREATEST CAUTION—after a very thorough investigation to determine whether or no (a) there are sufficient men of the grade required in the territory, and (b) whether or not those men are sufficiently in earnest to give reasonable assurance of permanency for the organization.

I would respectfully suggest that it might be well to require the deposit of a substantial sum of money with the parent organization as a forfeit, to be returned after a certain time—say two years—if the branch has by then demonstrated itself as a going organization. This may seem harsh, but we certainly want no half-hearted, wishy-washy branches of the A. P. S., and if the applicants be in real earnest they will be quite willing to make some practical demonstration of that fact.

In my judgment it will be a tremendous error in any degree to let down the bars by making it easy to obtain membership. If men do not think enough of the A. P. S. to make a real effort to get in, let them stay out. WE WANT NONE BUT HIGH GRADE PROJECTIONISTS AND MEN OF STERLING WORTH IN THE AMERICAN PROJECTION SOCIETY. That has been the slogan of the organization, and the organization has succeeded under it. Let the banner remain, and LIVE UP TO IT.

Groetzinger Moves

Brother Groetzinger, formerly of Ft. Dodge, Iowa, has moved to Cambridge, Md. He orders a lens chart and invites me to drop in on him when in that section of the country. Says he will have a modern projection room when he gets things fixed up.

Without a Shutter

John Massiolan and P. L. Brochar, New York City, come in with the following:

There is a bet on and you have been selected as the one to settle it. A says that under certain circumstances it is possible to project a perfect picture, using an intermittent movement projector, without using any rotating shutter or intercepting the light beam at any time, or in any manner. B says it cannot be done. Which is right?

Call your bet off. Both are right, I think. I say this because of the wording of your proposition. There is no such thing in all the world as a perfect picture, or a perfect anything else so far as I know.

Had you said A claims that under certain conditions an acceptable picture may be projected without a shutter, then I would have said A is right.

Given a very weak illuminant, such as gas, with an ordinary cloth screen, it is quite possible to project without a shutter. I have pulled that stunt myself. There is travel ghost, of course, but it is so faint that it can scarcely be seen, and the resultant increased illumination of the screen improves the picture, which the good Lord knows needs improving.

Butler Approves

O. H. Butler, Centerville, Iowa, approves of the term "Projection Room" as against "Projector Room." He says:

I am in line with the others on the subject now being discussed, viz.: the proper term for the enclosure housing working projection equipment—the room from which motion pictures are projected.

I believe the term "Projector Room," proposed for adoption into the official nomenclature of the industry by the S. M. P. E. would better fit a room where idle projectors are stored. I would certainly say that the enclosure variously dubbed the "booth," "box," "cabinet," "coop," etc., in the past should be termed the projection room, because it is the room in which the actual act of projection takes place.

Also, after all your years of work to establish the term "Projection Room," which same was selected after consulting many projectionists and projectionist organizations, it would most emphatically not be the right or proper thing for the S. M. P. E. to try to force you to overturn all that and accept a new and highly IMPROPER name. I am for "Projection Room" because it is the right and logical term to use.

SEATING—

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

When the C. O. D. Comes Back

As to Premature Publicity: The East Awakens

RECENTLY we received a long letter from a manufacturer of picture display equipment, which reveals a rather interesting phase of affairs.

The product, which is described, is being sold in great quantities and is being sold in that through middle houses and has almost met them more than half way in getting over to them orders to place orders and in allowing commission wherever a middle dealer had really done any commission sales work, yet they had not actually closed the order.

For a long while just he had dealt through a number of middle supply houses and so far as that portion of the business is concerned, both he and those middle houses got perfectly busy and contented.

C. O. D. Shipments

But, he has discovered that every equally house is not as reliable as those with whom the bulk of his business in the past has been conducted and often frequently it has been necessary for him to make shipments C. O. D. and, in a number of instances, the goods have been returned and he has been obliged to take them back, paying transportation both ways.

What bothers the manufacturer is the fact that he feels sure that the concern to whom he made C. O. D. shipments, did not order the equipment on the bare chance of being able to market it but somewhere back of the middle dealer's order was an advertiser who wanted the equipment and he is wondering just what happened when the local dealer failed to get it.

So, naturally, if the advertiser has told that the manufacturer was very satisfied his customer had allowed to accept a substitute and he wonders what the advertiser would say if he knew that the delay in receiving the equipment was not due to the middle dealer.

If we were the manufacturer, we would make it a point to get advertising to impress upon prospective customers that, if any delay were encountered in shipping our products, we would supply them direct.

If we were an advertiser and wanted any particular line of equipment that was widely being advertised, we would write to the manufacturer direct and give him a chance to square himself.

ONE who knows just a bit of the situation and of the picture shows just approximately how many middle-dealer orders are necessarily being handled. It is a good rule that we do not require a detailed description of something in which the advertiser or prospective advertiser has no interest will be largely uninterested.

The advertiser or prospective advertiser had not yet perfected his plans, arranged his distribution, made his list, and in manufacturing contracts, so he is not in a position to do any advertising as yet.

But, nevertheless, he would greatly appreciate your showing appropriate space, a few inches to a page or so, in a detailed description of his device and explain how it will work and everything else at the same time.

The Time to Talk

Experience has taught us that when a device that promises real merit is ready for the market, and not before, is the time to talk about it, and that the advertiser's confidence in such a device is, in a large measure, to be gauged by his willingness to send his money on the cost of advertising.

Which is a very different proposition from getting some publicistic publication to stand, as he may assume, the product market for the product and to make your position in finding a customer and arranging payment.

It is a safe way for the advertiser to treat the game, if the advertiser will not do it, because, if the device fails down, or is never marketed, it is the advertiser who has lost the confidence of the reader.

And if it not only the advertiser will lose out later. It is the legitimate manufacturer of having devices with which the advertiser will either be unconvinced device advertisers to compare who loses orders while prospective trade is waiting for the publisher's account but unsatisfactory article or results, which, in many cases, is due to the.

DURING the past week, the Equipment Department has been in receipt of several requests from export correspondents for information regarding picture display equipment.

The bulk from most of these come from the Far East which would seem to indicate that other Oriental fans are increasing in numbers as that a lot of one-way equipment, which has been running along on one leg and two inches for some time past, has finally given up the ghost with an unexpected suddenness, leaving a big void to be filled by American manufacturers.

Advertisers Alert

We want to congratulate the Advertising Picture World advertisers on being right on the spot when the demand increased, because, in every case we checked the request some payment and back letters of the World and told him to take his pick.

If an other country of the world may be found anything as its use to parallel the laboratory of the famous Flapjack-Lucky organization, illustrated and described on the following page.

In our equipment and efficiency, the West Coast laboratory maintains courtesy evidence in the event in which the advertisements of the reader and business have been limited to every particular in the published end of a picture picture production.

And, in our country, too, America could produce had the public support that would justify the order which such a plant represents. So, let's be glad that we see American work done in order to give back the time that go from such plants to the world.

ASSEMBLY ROOMS OF THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY WEST COAST LABORATORY

No, this is not the employees' gathering place, but where Paramount pictures are assembled for distribution all over the world

New Famous Players-Lasky Laboratory Is Efficient, Speedy and Comfortable

HANDLING a million feet of motion picture film a week and said to be the largest and most complete film plant in the world, the new laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the West Coast studio has just been put into operation.

The new plant is the result of years of planning and experimenting by Frank E. Garbutt, who designed, supervised construction and is now in full charge of this model laboratory. Harry N. Ensign, formerly head of the Realart laboratory, is his assistant. The rapid growth of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which now exhibits Paramount pictures in every civilized country, necessitated the construction of the new film plant. To care for increased production in the future, provision has been made for an additional story to the building. Edwin Bergstrom was the architect and Robert E. Millsap was general contractor.

Facilities for Efficiency, Speed and Comfort

Every possible facility has been provided for the speedy and efficient handling of film and the comfort of employes. Air is changed throughout the plant every four minutes by means of a special air conditioning assembly located in the basement of the concrete structure. The system employed is capable of washing one hundred thousand cubic feet of air in filtered water every minute.

Thomas Ingram, the chief engineer in charge, controls the mechanism which supplies the various departments of the laboratory with air of just the required temperature and degree of humidity. This is of vital importance. In the film drying room the air must be maintained at an exact temperature, day and night. It must also remain at the same degree of humidity. In departments where the film is touched by hands the air is kept very dry to prevent moisture from the fingers marking it.

Subdued daylight is utilized wherever the nature of the work being done permits. This is obtained through the medium of pleasantly tinted walls and wired prism glass windows, a combination that adds much to the comfort of the workers. Artificial lighting is provided throughout the building by means of indirect fixtures. In the switchboard which controls the power used in the building the latest type of safety switches are incorporated.

Conservation of Time and Labor

Many steps are saved and the too frequent handling of film eliminated by the installation of an endless conveyor which carries the reels of film through the varying and progressive stages throughout the plant. The film passes through the developing rooms first, then to the washing and drying rooms. In the latter it is wound on huge drums.

Eight of these drums are installed in the sample copy room and six in the negative room. They were designed by Frank E. Garbutt and constructed in the studio. They are five feet in diameter and eleven feet long. Each drum holds one thousand feet of film. Mr. Garbutt also designed the cinema polishing machines and inspection projection machines, seven in number. These were built in the studio.

Eastman Waxing Machines

After the negative has been polished it goes to the printing room where space has been provided for ten Bell and Howell printing machines, said to be the largest number to be found in any film laboratory. Bell and Howell also provided the device which measures the film, automatically checking off the number of feet, and the machine which splices the film.

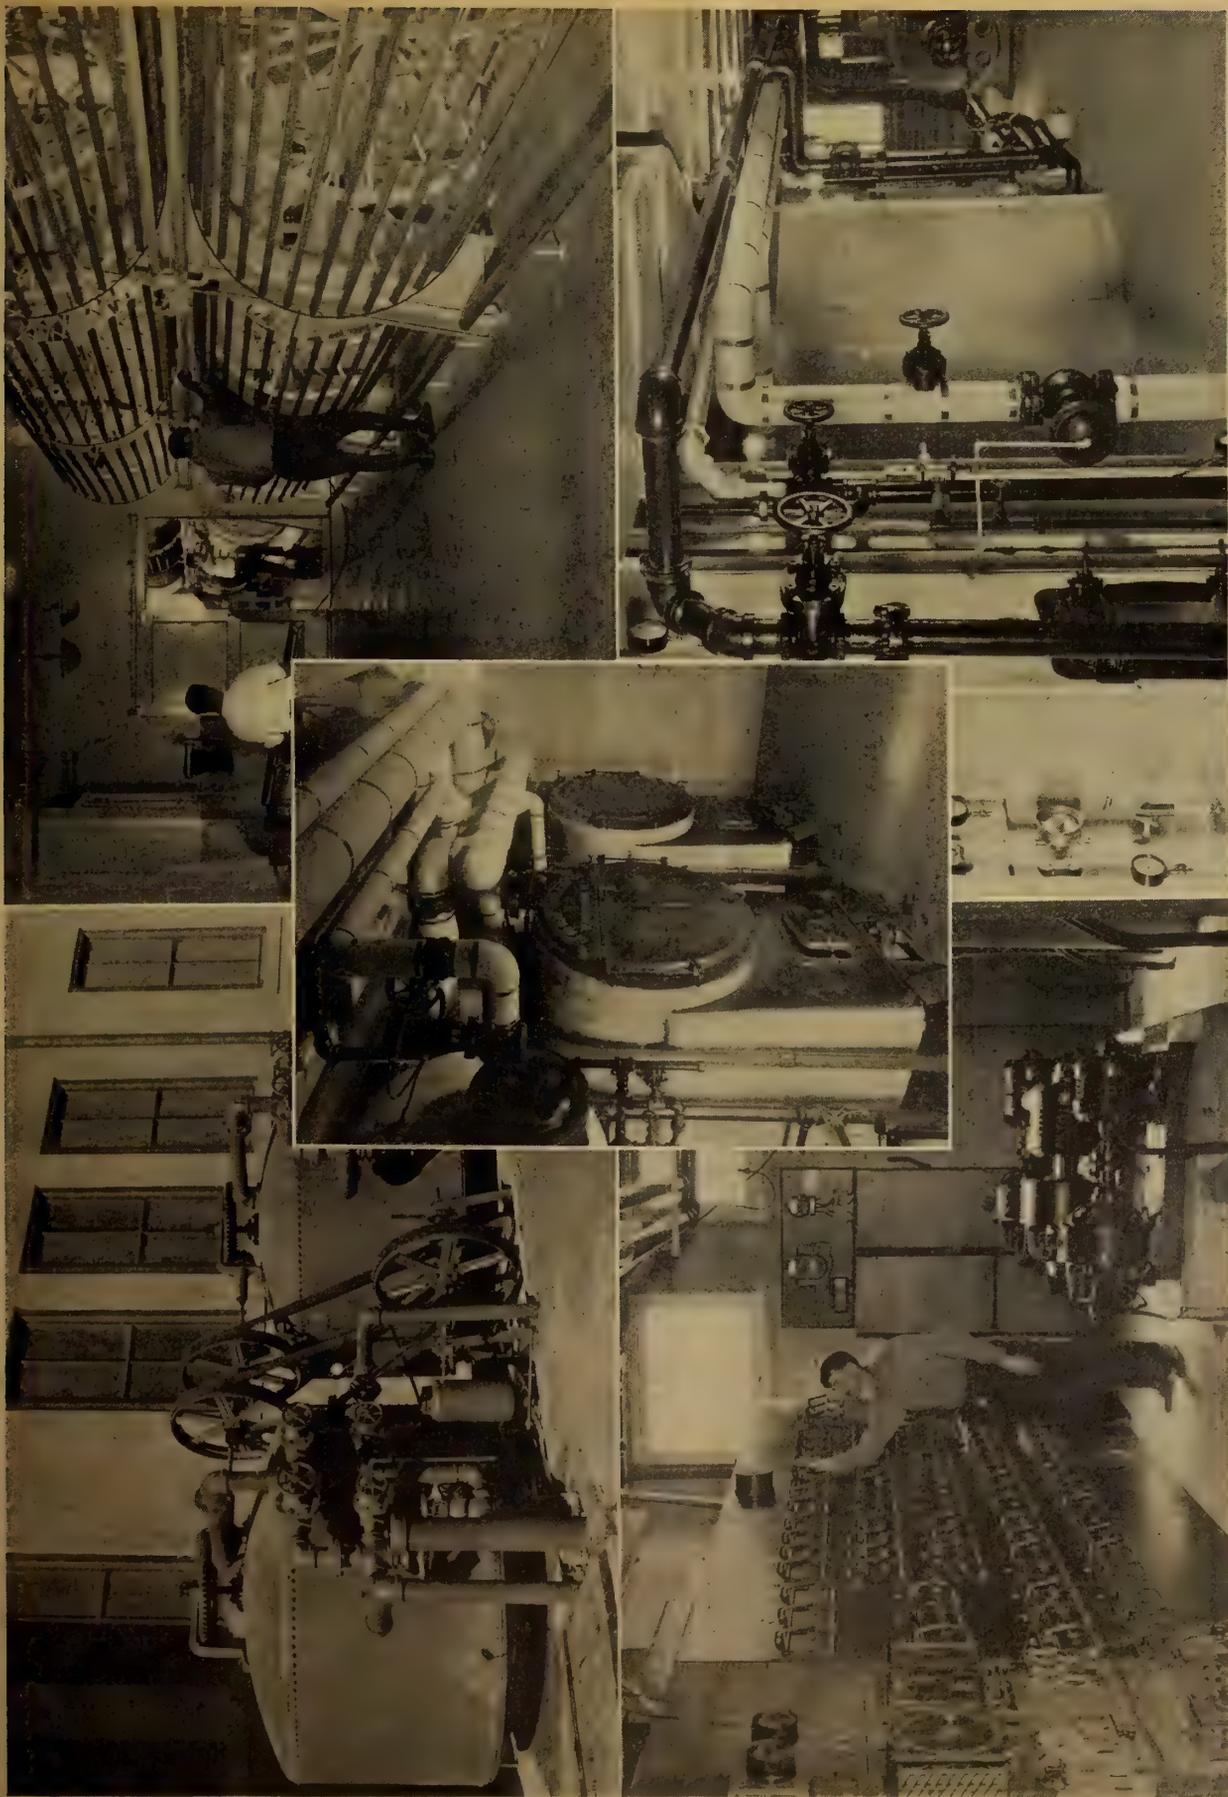

No perforators are used in the laboratory. The waxing machines were made by the Eastman Kodak Company.

Cutting and assembling of the printed film is carried out in large, airy, well-lighted rooms, after which it goes to the shipping department. The greatest care is exercised in the shipping department to see that the film will be well protected on its journey to all parts of the world.

racks and other paraphernalia were designed by Mr. Garbutt.

A Complete Machine Shop

The machine shop is said to be the most complete thing of its kind to be found in any laboratory. All the apparatus is the latest made by the manufacturers. Precision lathes and millers, drill presses, a Precision bench lathe, and a universal grinder are included in the equipment.

Cleanliness is strikingly apparent throughout the plant. In addition to the air washing and filtering operations, which keep the atmosphere pure, a vacuum cleaning system is installed.

There are four projection rooms with a seating capacity of seventy-five persons each. These miniature theatres have artistically decorated walls, folding chairs and a small desk equipped with a ruby shaded lamp and electric signals whereby the speed, focus and framing of the picture can be controlled during technical showings.

Indirect lighting is used for the theatres.

The screens used were designed by Mr. Garbutt and were built on the lot. Each measures seven feet eleven inches by ten feet seven inches. Five of the very latest type of Power 6-B projection machines are installed.

Fire prevention has been the keynote of the construction of the new laboratory. No

THE FILM VAULTS

It will be noted that the entrance to these vaults, in which thousands of dollars worth of negatives are stored, is from the exterior of the laboratory building wood has been used in the whole plant. The small rooms built for the cutting and titling of film, fourteen in number, are absolutely fireproof. The old laboratory, which was built in 1915, is being used for storage.

"Not only is the new laboratory complete in every detail," said Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, "but its superior equipment will permit remarkable results in all the various processes of laboratory work."

Woodstock Exhibitor Makes His Own Juice

A new five hundred seat picture theatre has just been opened at Woodstock, N. B., by F. G. Spencer, with E. A. Neill as manager, C. LaFrance as projectionist, Miss M. Blake, pianist, Mrs. William Sullivan in charge of the box office and John Evans and Frank Baker to do the rest of the work.

The house is steam heated and Mr. LaFrance presides over two projection machines. Mr. Spencer's experience with other theatres is responsible for his making an installation of a General Electric generator, driven by a twenty horse power crude oil engine, which provides electricity for the house independent of the public service supply station.

The fact that a five hundred seat theatre can install such a plant to advantage is well worthy of consideration by those of our readers who have shown so much interest of late in this particular type of equipment.

November Albany Incorporations Show Increased Amount of Capitalization

AN increase in the amount of capitalization was revealed in the companies entering the motion picture industry, or some one of its branches, in New York state during the month of December.

A report just issued by the state's corporation bureau shows that the total capitalization of the month's motion picture concerns reached $2,425,000, and that twenty-five charters had been issued to companies entering the business during November.

There is but little change in the number of companies incorporating in the industry from month to month, a comparison with October showing that during that month twenty-nine companies had incorporated but that these represented a total capitalization of only $338,000.

Incorporations of Week Ending December 1

Five companies were chartered by the secretary of state during the week ending December 1 and entered the motion picture business in New York state.

These companies included the following:
Park West Theatre Company, capitalized at $15,000, and having as directors F. E. Ritsos, ing stated in the papers filed by the last two companies.

More Light for Less Money With the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector

Pictures equalling the best in the largest theatres can now be obtained in smaller theatres without costly apparatus.

The same steady illumination possible with a direct current arc can now be obtained with the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector on either alternating or direct current at a great saving in first cost and at one-fourth the current consumed by the arc, taking into account all inevitable losses by either method.

Maintenance cost is also low because there is no carbon dust to injure the mechanism of the projection machine; and the cost of lamp renewals does not exceed the cost of arc lamp carbons.

The G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector produces better screen results than any a.c. arc equipment and is the equal of the d.c. arc outfit up to 50 amperes.

The simplicity of the Incandescent Lamp Projector (no adjustments during operation) and its healthfulness (no fumes or dust) recommend it to projectionists everywhere.

“The MAN FROM BRODNEY’S”

From

Exhibitors Trade Review

Romance, breath-taking situations and an amazingly realistic battle between a horde of frenzied natives and a handful of whites on a South Sea island mark “The Man From Brodney’s” as a film well calculated to entertain an audience until the last inch of film has passed the shutter.

It will probably do more than that if the reviewer may be taken as a judge of audience response. There isn’t a moment of dilly-dallying. Things start with a rush. J. Warren Kerrigan in the role of Hollingsworth Chase, irrepressible adventurer and thrill hunter, takes action by the scruff of the neck and makes it yell “Uncle” before five minutes of footage have passed.

This is where the gentle innocents bend forward in their seats and breathe hard. The fight is replete in realism. It will make the blood of the average audience leap—the senses tingle.

“The Man From Brodney’s” is clean, wholesome entertainment. Full of heart interest values and spectacular adventure.

“The MAN FROM BRODNEY’S”

From

The Film Daily

Rich in excitement and romance.

Exceptionally strong cast. J. Warren Kerrigan has a fighting time of it in the title role; does some very good work. Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley and Miss Du Pont, a first rate feminine trio, and others include Pat O’Malley, Bertram Grassby, Kathleen Key.

Includes all the situations and elements of appeal that make for a good audience picture. “The Man From Brodney’s” should satisfy the box office. Director Smith has supplied the McCutcheon novel with a thoroughly painstaking and exciting picturization. He hasn’t been sparing in injecting realism and thrills. The picture offers a genuinely good entertainment.

The climax is thrilling.

Plenty for you to talk about here. Play up the title and the author’s name.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Moving Picture World

All of the usual romance and pomp typical of George Barr McCutcheon fiction is found in the Vitagraph picturization of his recent novel, "The Man From Brodney's."

It has color and action without stint in addition to a cast of favorites.

The spectacular angle has been greatly stressed. There are some tremendous scenes showing the storming of a castle, which serve as a big melodramatic climax. Palatial sets and stunningly gowned women have been provided.

Altogether the picture is done in a lavish, ceremonious style.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Harrison's Reports

Like most of George Barr McCutcheon's stories, "The Man From Brodney's" is replete with stirring adventure, fast action and thrills.

The Oriental atmosphere is convincing, and the many scenes showing the uprising of the natives and their storming of the Chateau, in which are housed "whites" whose lives they seek, are exciting.

Warren Kerrigan makes a good hero, and Miss Calhoun a beautiful princess. Wanda Hawley, Miss Du Pont, Pat O'Malley, Charles Wellesley, Henry Barrows, and Bertram Grassby are in the cast. Mr. Grassby is particularly good as the all-powerful native chief.

"The Man From Brodney's" is a good entertainment.

"The MAN FROM BRODNEY'S"

From

Exhibitors Herald

"The Man From Brodney's," a Vitagraph production directed by David Smith from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is a romantic story, and in sets and costumes is elaborately produced, with J. Warren Kerrigan, Alice Calhoun, Pat O'Malley and Wanda Hawley featured.

McCutcheon's novel ran into many editions. Therefore there is a ready-made public for this romance, its princesses, ladies in waiting, and the pomp and trimmings of castles and folk who inhabit them. There are plots and counter-plots and thrilling adventures in "The Man From Brodney's."

No expense was spared apparently on sets and costumes and the story moves along smoothly and rapidly to a climax where the princess foreswears her principality and marries the stalwart American, after he had called upon the American marines to save them from enraged natives.

Gentlemen:-

"Tiger Rose" is a remarkable achievement.
The camera has found the heart of the Rose.

I was fascinated, spell-bound as the story told itself on the screen.

The little French Canadian girl lived again as in the play, - a character marvelously portrayed by Lenore Ulric. She is an unforgettable figure outlined against the Canadian skies and firs. I carried the memory of her out of the theatre into Broadway, still under the spell of the poetry - the beauty, the simplicity and charm of her performance,
- a vivid impersonation.

I congratulate the Warner Brothers. They have created something so unique, so moving, so human that their efforts are sure to be a source of great pleasure to the public.

Miss Ulric has made a girl into a picture; Sidney
Franklin has framed it with wonderful skill.

Once more - my congratulations.

"BOY OF MINE"

The most human picture ever made

"BOY of MINE"

(First National—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ANOTHER of Booth Tarkington's very human boy stories is on view here, and the encomiums offered in favor of "Penrod and Sam" will have to be shared with "Boy of Mine," which incidentally has been adapted and directed by the same parties, with two of the previous company enlisted in the present cast. The author has no rival in the depiction of youth. He understands the youngsters perfectly. He catches accurately and surely the psychology of the childish mind—its whims and caprices, its misunderstandings and conceits. And so he draws another captivating sketch of a real boy, who is understood by his mother, but who is a problem to his father.

And how thoroughly adaptable is Ben Alexander as the youngster! Indeed, he is Penrod again—Penrod to the life. No suggestion of coaching in his work, he portrays the lad with genuine sympathy and feeling. We watch him and extend him pity in his misery because of his father's reproaches. And when he runs away and whistles to keep up his spirits we appreciate that Tarkington has a firm grasp upon his subject. And that Beaudine hasn't forgotten his own youth.

There is plenty of humorous incident to balance the picture, particularly when the children become mischievous in church. Another true touch. Indeed, this story has a full quota of true touches. It extracts sympathy for its figures because it is rich in humanities. The detached kingdom of youth is on display here. And it is worth seeing—make no mistake. Should please everywhere.

Another "hit" in the Big 10

THE ETERNAL CITY First National

THIS is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful pictures ever filmed. It is also one of the most interesting and is one that no lover of the best in pictures can afford to miss. It has a charming love story, plenty of melodrama, fine comedy, sets that are exceptional in every way, some of the best acting of the year, and intelligent direction. What more can be asked? Of course, some liberties have been taken with the story. The recent war is brought in — although no war scenes are shown — and the scene of the returning soldiers is among the best in the picture. Director George Fitzmaurice collected Fascisti. The scenes in the Coliseum at Rome where these men gather to give battle to the revolutionaries are most thrilling. Mussolini himself appears in several scenes and, to make the cast really all-star the King of Italy also shows on her career and does by Marr, as Roma, has the best rôle of her career and does far her finest acting. She is beautiful, as always, and equalled with a skill and spirit that she never before has equalled. Richard Bennett as Braun, an Italian vagabond. His acting is a delight. He plays with a lightness and sureness of touch that mark him as one of the finest actors of the day. Scenically, the picture is superb, and the photography is equal to the subjects. The views of Rome, taken from one of the hills, the shots in the Coliseum, the views along the beautiful roads shaded by Lombardy poplars, the exquisite interiors, all aid in making this picture the height of camera artistry. Just one bit of advice. Don't miss it.

Danny himself said, editorially, in Film Daily

"The Eternal City." The first Fitzmaurice to be produced by Sam Goldwyn. What a box-office! A great love story splendidly told; a splendid cast, and the settings of Italy. With Mussolini, the Premier, appearing in the picture. True, it isn't the wonderful story that Hall Caine wrote — it has been modernized with the Fascisti in it and the world war and other things. But the appeal is still there — the conflict between David and Bonelli for Roma with love triumphant, and some mob effects with the Coliseum of Rome as the setting — magnificent stuff. If you can't do business with this one there's something wrong — with you.

After completing a record week's run at the beautiful EASTMAN THEATRE, Rochester, N. Y., manager William Tait, Jr., wrote the following:

" . . . The picture was well received by our audiences. We played to more than 45,000 people on the week.

"You can certainly feel gratified with your two releases this year. Such pictures are a credit to the industry as a whole."

It's big! It's tremendous! With such a story, such settings, such a director, and such a cast, "THE ETERNAL CITY" was sure to have been a knock-out!

—and it's "Hit" No. 8 of the "BIG 10" "hits."

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

WE are asking the civil authorities and lay population of Los Angeles to be more fair in their attitude towards the motion picture industry. Perhaps there is room for the industry itself to be a mite more restrained in placing the blame for all evils on the studio doorstep.

We had a letter from a film salesman friend of ours the other day. "Just finished a swing through nineteen towns," he writes, "and found my company's product sold solid in fourteen of the towns. Can you figure the amount of traveling expenses, time, and energy tossed to the bow-wows when the manager routed me on a trip like that?"

Some of these days a few of our leading Los Angeles lights will get tired of being blamed for all the excessive spending in this industry and set out on an investigation of distribution efficiency.

Which will be rather hard on our tender feelings back here in New York. The chorus of criticism has been headed West for so long that it is rather fearful to face the prospect of having Wid Gunning, or some other apostle of the creators, turn it back our way.

NOT the least delightful feature of a "Flaming Youth" luncheon given by First National the other day was the spontaneous tribute to Earl Hudson paid by John McCormick and echoed by R. A. Rowland.

There are many reasons for gratification in watching the climb of Earl Hudson—and cherishing the earned praise that is coming to him. Those of us who know the "reg'lar feller" Earl Hudson feel first the personal appreciation of his progress.

But the broader reason is expressed in R. A. Rowland's remarks at the luncheon. "Mr. Hudson was sent to Los Angeles to supervise First National production," he declared, "because he fully met my belief that a trained newspaper man, possessing sound common sense and an innate appreciation of what the public will respond to, is the type of man qualified to build screen entertainment."

That tells a big story. It records concrete action carrying out a new attitude in the selection of those upon whom rests the responsibility for future picture entertainment.

And the results, particularly in the case of Earl Hudson, are justifying the trend.

IN the course of the year we exchange considerable correspondence with exhibitors who are having local troubles over Sunday shows. Often, we find that the exhibitor with the most ticklish Sunday problem gives the least attention to the obvious means of easing it.

Especially is this true in the sort of pictures selected for Sunday programs.

The thought comes to us at this moment because we have just surveyed, through newspaper clippings, some remarkable evidences of the co-operation church and school authorities throughout the country are according the "Chronicles of America" series.

At the risk of donating some valuable space to the purpose of advertising we wish to record our belief here that the theatre manager seeking to enlist the support of the best elements in his community can do no better than consider the possibilities in this Yale University undertaking.

"IS there any good organ that can be purchased by the small exhibitor at a price that will not require mortgaging his house? If so, please let me know the name, as I have never seen one advertised."

E. T. Keyser, who conducts The World's efficient Equipment Department, received that query lately and was forced to answer, "You have nothing on me. Neither have I ever seen a moderate-priced organ advertised."

Which would seem to indicate that the organ manufacturers are inoculated by the common motion picture germ, "milliondollaritis." No organ, judging by the publicity and the advertising, ever cost less than fifty thousand dollars.

While the truth is, we are reliably informed, that there ARE organs which fit the purse of the small town theatre.

Washington Congressman to Campaign Against Music Tax

A DETERMINED fight is to be waged in Congress by Representative Albert C. Johnson, of Washington, at this session against the tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers upon the users of music controlled by them in places of public amusement operated for profit. In discussing the matter with the Washington correspondent of Moving Picture World, Representative Johnson stated that he had received complaints from constituents of his, engaged in the motion picture business, who had been prosecuted for non-payment of the "tax."

"Section one of the Copyright Act," explained Mr. Johnson, "provides for the payment by the manufacturer or publisher to the composer or owner of the copyright of 2 cents on each copy printed or manufactured for use on a mechanical device designed to reproduce copyrighted music. The section then provides 'The payment of the royalty provided for by this section shall free the article or device for which such royalty has been paid from further contribution to the copyright except in cases of public performance for profit.'

"By striking out of this provision the words 'except in case of public performance for profit' the publication or mechanical device will be free from further contribution and can be used by the public generally.

"I have looked into the matter with some care and I have been informed that generally the publishers or manufacturers require authors or copyright owners to assign to them, as one of the considerations for publication or manufacture, all of their rights except the 2 cents royalty. The publishers and manufacturers have secured these assignments and have since organized the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and through this organization have demanded from every user of a copyrighted musical composition in any place of public performance for profit the payment to the society of a tax or license fee.

"The right to impose such a tax or license has been sustained by the courts. My information is that only incidental benefits at best are received by the authors and composers and that the revenues being derived pass into the coffers of the publishers and manufacturers. The copyright law was designed and intended to protect the authors and composers and not to afford a source of profit to publishers and manufacturers.

"The situation as I find it is this: Any person can purchase a musical sheet or a record. If used in other than the home or place where there is no charge for admission they are not subject to any further demand.

If, however, the musical sheet or record so purchased and paid for, is used in any place where there is a charge made directly or indirectly for admission, including hotels, the owner of the place must pay this society a tax or license fee or subject himself to prosecution and heavy penalties.

"I understand that this society is now demanding the tax or license fee from every person, company or corporation using copyright music in any kind of a public place for profit, and that they have at least made demands upon the dancing teachers who use a record on a mechanical instrument while giving a dancing lesson.

"The motion picture theatre men contend that the purchase of music sheets conveys or should convey the right to use them in the only manner in which music can be used, namely, by performing it on some instrument or instruments or through vocal efforts. To republish the music and sell it might naturally be considered an infringement, but when the music becomes the property of the person by right of purchase, its use and its right thereto in the proper and logical way follows, or should follow, as a matter of course. If any incidental obligation was in any way associated with the right to perform it, surely as a matter of business policy, the demonstration and advertising value of theatre presentation would more than fully compensate for this, because of the pronounced stimulation afforded the sale of this music through its being rendered popular in the theatre."

Mr. Johnson will push the matter and endeavor to secure early action by the House of Representatives.

Established Offices

Canadian Exhibitors Locate Offices in Montreal

The executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada, which is affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A., have been established on the ninth floor of the Albee Building, 12 Mayor Street, Montreal, Quebec, where the recently appointed secretary, Maurice West, looks after the business of the institution. The appointment of A. D. Denis, a Montreal exhibitor, as Canadian president in succession to G. B. Sparrow of Montreal has been confirmed. A. Sperdakos of Montreal is treasurer.

The Ontario Division of the M. P. T. O. arranged two meetings for Ontario exhibitors for December, the first of which was held as a general meeting on December 11 at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, and the second is a club luncheon in the same hotel on Tuesday, December 18 at 12.30 with J. C. Brady, Ontario president and the Canadian vice-president, in the chair.

The Toronto office of the M. P. T. O. has been opened at 259 Spadina Avenue which is the headquarters of Ray Lewis, secretary of the Ontario Division.

Fox Official in Wreck

John Zanft Sustains Broken Arm and Cuts in Railway Collision

John Zanft, vice president of Fox Film Corporation, general manager of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, was seriously hurt in the rear-end collision of two sections of the Twentieth Century Limited near Forsythe, N. Y. early last Sunday morning. Mr. Zanft is at his home in New York City under the care of a physician and trained nurse.

Mr. Zanft, who was in the rear Pullman, which received the full force of the impact, sustained a broken arm and several ribs and lacerations of the head and back. He was taken to a hospital in Erie, Pa. in a delirious condition. Representatives of the Fox Film Corporation exchanges in Chicago and Buffalo hurried to Erie, as soon as they received word of the accident.

Mr. Zanft was taken to New York Monday afternoon.

Acquires New Theatre

West Coast Corporation Makes San Diego Deal

Immediately following the announcement of their important realty and theatrical deal in Long Beach, Cal., executives of West Coast Theatres, Inc., through their general manager, Harry C. Arthur, Jr., made known closing negotiations with Robert Hicks of San Diego, whereby the most southerly expansion of the large theatre circuit is given a solid foothold with the acquisition of the magnificent new Balboa Theatre in San Diego, ready for opening sometime during January. The Balboa Theatre has a seating capacity in excess of 2,000.

The deal includes the addition of the Cabrillo Theatre in San Diego to the West Coast chain.

Mr. Adams has been with Universal for seven years, starting as a salesman in the Indianapolis exchange. His good sales record soon won for him the position of branch manager. Later he was made district manager and then assistant general sales manager with headquarters at Kansas City.

Texan Exhibitors at Convention Urged to Join M. P. T. O. of A.

THREE matters of outstanding importance developed at the semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas at the Jefferson Hotel in Dallas on December 4 and 5. They are:

Tenfold increase in membership; starting seven months ago from a handful of sixteen members to a membership today of one hundred and sixty.

Laying plans for the raising of a fund of $15,000 with which to open an office in Dallas with a secretary-manager at the head to attend to all problems of the trade.

Repeal of the tax on motion picture admissions was the main theme of the convention.

It developed that ten of the twenty legislators of Texas had been interviewed and all ten were more or less favorable towards either a modification or absolute repeal of the tax on admissions. It also came to light that the Texas exhibitors believed that the progressive Republicans and, to a large extent, the Democrats, were favorable towards the amusement men.

With the raising of $15,000 and the selection of a secretary-manager, the Texas organization will fight for ethical standards in the trade to advance the idealism of the screen and inaugurate a public service department. This department will be dedicated to any form of public service in behalf of national, state or municipal government. It will enter any non-sectarian, non-political movement for the good of the public.

In connection with the tax repeal, the consensus of opinion was that letters to Congressmen and Senators had but little effect, consequently every member of the organization was urged to interview these officials in their respective districts.

Two propositions calling for group insurance at a saving of from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. were referred to the board of directors. The same action was taken with reference to a proposition presented by a New York slide company which offered compensation for the running of slides and short business reels.

A new constitution and by-laws was adopted. This will widen the scope of the organization.

One of the features of the convention was an address by E. W. Collins, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas and vice-president of the M. P. T. O. of A. The latter organization sent Mr. Collins to Dallas to attend the present session and endeavor to induce Texans to throw in their lot with the national organization. Mr. Collins was offered every courtesy and his address on Wednesday evening at the close of the convention brought applause from the delegates. Mr. Collins said in part:

"The M. P. T. O. of A. offers an outlet for the zeal of all state bodies. I am not here to create discord but instead to create respect for the national organization. I have no apologies and no praise for Sydney S. Cohen, but I appeal to you to join this organization because it is the national body, the only national organization that we have.

"At Chicago some time ago we witnessed a replica of the Battle of Waterloo, a political session if ever there was one. Sydney Cohen picked up the remnants of a broken down organization and he built up a splendid foundation. He lost some good states, it is true, but my point is let us maintain the national body and not break it up so that it could never be solidified. I am asking Mr. Cole and the rest of you gentlemen to join this body no matter who is at the head.

"If his friends stay in the organization and his enemies stay out, there will be no chance to defeat Sydney S. Cohen until 1999. Texas is a great big state. Michigan and Minnesota are two great states. The three I have mentioned can continue to function but only as states. Let us not tear down the foundation because the roof leaks; let's repair the leaks. We cannot throw the fear of God into our natural enemies, taxation proponents, et al, if we stay outside of the national organization."

Mr. Collins argued against producers being let into exhibitor organizations. He predicted that in the years to come the M. P. T. O. of A. will be the dominant factor despite any other exhibitor organization. Reverting to the producer he said that they have disrupted exhibitor bodies. This brought prolonged applause.

Responding to the charge that the national association was "not doing anything," he replied that Texas stands charged with the same allegation. But he said that twenty years from now if motion pictures survive various assaults, it will, like Tennyson's Brook, be going "on and on." He pleaded for the support of Texas and Oklahoma. Since he knew the attitude he was up against in Texas, he asked that the Texans at least not go on record against the national association but to give it a chance. "Maybe," he said, although he paid tribute to Mr. Cohen, "we'll get another officer next May who will please all malcontents. At least let us not tear down the fruits of three and a half years of hard labor." Mr. Collins said 90 per cent. of the theatres in the country staggering under the burden of taxation were neighborhood houses, small exhibitors. For that reason he did not agree with the action selecting Will Hays as the outstanding figure in the taxation fight for the reason that Mr. Hays might run a chance of offending the Democrats due to his political alignment. Further, because the impression exists that Mr. Hays represents the big fellow in this game.

Mr. Collins then closed with a ringing appeal for the Texans not to condemn the M. P. T. O. of A.

At the conclusion of Mr. Collins' address a motion was made to neither approve nor disapprove the national body. After much discussion it was agreed to withdraw this motion insofar as a move suggesting inaction was entirely unnecessary.

The exhibitors gave Mr. Collins a rising vote of thanks and Homer Mulkey, of Clarendón, Texas, shouted out, "If they elect you, Mr. Collins, to head the M. P. T. O. of A. we'll all fight to get in."

Commenting on Mr. Collins' remarks, Mr. Cole, from the chair, said that Texas and other associations on the outside would continue to observe developments in the national association and predicted that within a few years a national organization satisfactory to all elements would be functioning.

Another prominent speaker at the convention was Judge S. A. Handy, counsel for the Kansas exhibitors. Following Judge Handy's address, an appropriation of $500 to aid motion picture theatremen in Kansas in their fight seeking to invalidate the copyrighted music tax now levied on the theatres was voted by a special committee headed by H. H. Hoke, of Taylor, Texas.

Judge Handy was retained to handle litigation in this connection in Texas.

J. S. Phillips, E. L. Byar and A. W. Lilly were named members of an arbitration board to function in connection with the Dallas film board of trade. In this connection it was noted that at the present convention all old lines were swept aside and the greatest of good feeling existed between the exchange men and exhibitors. Fighting for a common cause in taxation and other pressing problems, the antipathy that existed in months gone by was thrown aside for a newer and better understanding.

The exchange men were hosts to the exhibitors at a luncheon Tuesday and in return the exhibitors responded with a banquet on Wednesday night at the Jefferson Hotel, which was the closing feature of the biggest motion picture theatre gathering ever held in this state. Approximately two hundred persons attended the banquet.

Included in resolutions adopted were the following:

That the Dallas Film Board of Trade, functioning under a plan that is described as being fair to the exhibitors, and three exhibitors were named to serve as exhibitor representatives on the board of arbitration. These are Messrs. Phillips, Byar and Lilly.

Vigorous disapproval of bad prints from the exchanges.

Vigorous opposition of the uniform contract whereby all film buys become pay or play dates, removing opportunity to enjoy flexible booking. Opposition also in this same resolution was expressed towards the system of block selling of an exchange's entire production.

Another resolution urged that inasmuch as the requiring of play dates before contracts are approved prevents the exhibitor from protecting his play time as stated play dates frequently mature before contracts are rejected or confirmed, it was urged upon the exchanges that a clause be inserted to protect the exhibitor in this respect.

Padding of films into so-called super-specials of seven or more reels was condemned.

Another resolution had to do with film contracts and it was urged that the deposit clause be eliminated from the contracts by the film distributors and exhibitors.

Another resolution expressed approval of the new trade relations between the exchange men and the exhibitors.

Schnitzer Goes to Coast

Will Enlarge F. B. O.'s Production Program

J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the Film Booking Offices, left last week for the R-C studios in Hollywood on distributing matters.

As soon as Mr. Schnitzer reaches the Coast he will speed up the productions now under way and lay plans to greatly enlarge F. B. O.'s production program for next year.

Mr. Schnitzer will confer with A. A. Schmidt, former general sales manager of Universal, who has recently joined F. B. O. as western division manager on distributing problems.

First National Co-operates in Attack on Admission Tax

THE Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has announced its willingness to co-operate in the plan suggested by William Brandt, of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York City, to assist in the effort to remove the troublesome admission tax from the shoulders of the industry.

E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution of First National, has instructed his sales force to drive home to exhibitors the importance of taking an active part in the fight. The use of salesmen as a propaganda medium to exhibitors was suggested recently by Mr. Brandt and was endorsed by H. M. Richey, special contact man between the Hays organization and the exhibitors of the country on tax matters.

First National is blazing the trail which other distributing organizations are likely to follow for the benefit of the entire industry. Editorial writers of the trade press have long been decrying the lack of interest on the part of exhibitors in general in the admission tax repeal and urging that every exhibitor in the country place himself in touch with his Congressional representative, either by letter or personally, and emphasize the importance of the repeal to the industry. First National salesmen, according to Mr. Eschmann's plan, will re-echo this editorial plea to exhibitors on every possible occasion.

"Inasmuch as salesmen are meeting exhibitors every day," said Mr. Eschmann, "it seems logical that they should supplement the campaign of the trade press to stir each and every theatre owner to action. They are the medium through which such propaganda, emanating from the heart of the industry, may reach the farthest members.

"First National salesmen are fully acquainted with the importance of the tax repeal question. They understand clearly the odious feature of the 'ten per cent. on every dollar or fraction thereof' which threatens to retard the growth of the motion picture. This knowledge, together with the information as to how the problem may best be solved, when passed along by salesmen in personal contact with exhibitors will assist in crystalizing into action the good intentions of many. And action, immediate and insistent, is necessary for the repeal of the theatre admission tax."

Iowa Theatre Owners Organize at an Enthusiastic Meeting

FORTY theatre owners of Iowa attended the initial organization meeting at Des Moines recently and there organized the Iowa Theatre Owners Association.

Two important committees were appointed, one on legislation to watch the revision of the code at the next session of the Legislature, noting especially closely what revisions are made, if any, in the matter of censorship, and state tax; the other a committee to carry out an active fight for the repeal of the seat, music and admittance tax provisions.

J. C. Collins, of Perry, Ia., was elected president; E. P. Smith, of Chariton, Ia., was made secretary-treasurer, and the following were elected a board of directors: Will Mart, Grinnell; E. Metzgar, Creston; Leo Moore, Centerville; J. Smith, Fort Dodge, and Harry Herstainer, Des Moines.

Besides the forty present, about as many more owners from all parts of the state sent enthusiastic letters and telegrams. A sum of $1,000 was subscribed at the initial meeting to finance the work of organizing the state solidly. A banquet was held in the evening at which 100 were present.

To Head Sales Force

Mullin Accepts Position With Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation

J. M. Mullin, recently arrived from London, where he was the manager of the R. C. Pictures Corporation, has been chosen by Samuel V. Grand, president of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, to head his sales force.

Mr. Mullin has for twenty years been intimately connected with practically every branch of the motion picture industry. Starting twenty years ago with the ownership of a small motion picture theatre, his business increased until he was the owner and operator of thirty houses throughout the states of New York, Pennsylvania, some in Kansas and one in Minneapolis. He finally deserted the exhibiting end of the business to enter distribution, but, at the time, the field was so monopolized that he was forced to leave it. From this, Mr. Mullin associated himself with R. C. Pictures and went to England to manage the London office. And now, at Mr. Grand's often repeated request, Mr. Mullin has been persuaded to join Grand-Asher.

Join Copyright Union

Introduce Bill Providing for Our Entry Into International Body

A bill providing for the entry of the United States into the International Copyright Union has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative Sol Bloom, of New York. In discussing his proposal, Mr. Bloom declared that the United States is the only first class power that does not belong to the union, although for years prominent motion picture producers and authors have been working for its passage.

"It is of utmost importance to the manufacturers of copyright material that the United States become members of the Berne Copyright Convention," he said.

"Millions of dollars are lost annually by the pirating of plays, books, motion pictures and popular American songs because we are not members of this union. Not only can we benefit by this protection but we will also get an opportunity of negotiating for the purchase of material in foreign lands to be used as plays and motion picture scenarios in this country."

A similar bill has also been presented to the Senate by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

An Important Message To Theatre Owners

Many of you have heard the expression "Lens Chart."

But how many of you really know just what it means and just what its importance is to you?

Briefly, the new Lens Chart is a chart which will enable your projectionist to give you the very best screen result possible with the lens and carbon arc equipment you are using.

You know, it isn't always the equipment that's the fault. Very often it's just improper adjustment of the lens, carbon crater, working distance and other important factors involved.

This new Lens Chart is the product of John Griffiths, projection optical expert. In it he has concentrated the results of years of experiment, the "know how" which is so important—yet which so few men can supply.

If you are using carbon arc equipment, by all means spend one dollar and get this invaluable chart. For with it YOU CAN CHECK UP AND SATISFY YOURSELF THAT YOU ARE GETTING MAXIMUM SCREEN RESULTS WITH THE EQUIPMENT YOU ARE USING.

ISN'T THAT WORTH A DOLLAR?

If your dealer doesn't have Griffiths' new Lens Chart, we will supply you direct.

J. D. Williams Says Whole World Wants Only Better Class Films

RETURNING from Europe after a seven weeks' stay, J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Pictures, issued the following statement:

"Motion pictures and the business of motion pictures are in the process of evolution in Europe in much the same way that they are in the United States.

"The European public is just as tired of inferior or even ordinary pictures as is the American public. The demand as demonstrated in the cinema theatres is for really worth while entertainment, big theme plays, diverting and well acted subjects so that the public really gets something when it goes to motion pictures.

"These conditions convince me more and more that the pictures of the immediate future must be created by our greater artists and that inspiration must precede the production. The trouble has been that we have had too much perspiration and not enough inspiration. I should call Mr. Griffith's 'Birth of a Nation,' Mr. Chaplin's 'The Kid,' Miss Pickford's 'Daddy-Long-Legs' and Mr.

Lubitsch's 'DuBarry,' presented here under the title 'Passion,' examples of what I conceive to be pictures of inspiration. In each instance there was care, thought and competent effort in preparation and in production.

"The recent weeks in Europe have convinced me that we must and will internationalize the motion picture. We will actually draw on all the world for our backgrounds, we will do away entirely with the great costs of the elaborate outdoor sets.

"Instead of building a Vatican or a Buckingham Palace or a Niagara Falls set at enormous waste in the back lots of Hollywood, we will use the actual thing, greatly to the advantage of the picture and the pocketbook.

"Regarding the high costs of which so much is being said, I am satisfied that internationalizing picture production will cut costs to a normal point. The old law of supply and demand has everything to do with this question. In production, if all of it is done in one place with a limited supply of artists and artisans to draw from, the costs naturally rise. This is so in any line of work. We propose to save money where money should be saved and spend it where it should be spent to insure our best possible approach to perfection.

"Rudolph Valentino joined me in London the day after my arrival and we spent a week together before his departure for the United States, during which time I succeeded in signing him up for five pictures instead of the two originally contracted for. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that Valentino is as popular in England as in America. I was besieged by Continental film buyers all anxious to assure themselves of obtaining Valentino pictures for their respective countries.

"It is my opinion that the star is a worth while addition to any picture, no matter how good the picture may be without him, and that the expense of his salary is negligible to what he draws extra at the box office.

"I found exhibiting conditions very similar in England to those in America. Exhibitors are not breaking even on ordinary pictures, but when they have a big picture they do capacity business. I think the public are bargain hunting for pictures nowadays. They are spending it to see fewer and better pictures. It is going to be a difficult problem for the exhibitor to get enough of the big worth while pictures in future and I think it is necessary to create big, independent stars, directors and producers who can deliver the goods, otherwise our business will suffer.

"There are many excellent opportunities in Europe for producing big pictures with the proper atmosphere, and it is my opinion that the American public would rather see pictures produced in the right settings, provided the leading people are well known to them, and the pictures produced by American organizations who know the taste of the American public.

"Regarding the status of Mr. Valentino's contract and Famous Players, I can say positively that absolutely nothing in the way of an agreement has been signed. If such an agreement is reached it will be announced doubtless by Famous Players and Ritz Pictures. I shall have more to say on this subject at an early date."

Elaborate Ball Plans

Veterans' Benefit to Be Among Big Screen Events

What is expected to be one of the biggest theatrical and motion picture events of the year is the Cosmopolitan Ball and "Midnight Frolic" that will be held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Plaza Friday evening, December 14. The affair, which is for the benefit of the Marion Davies Christmas Fund for disabled veterans of the World War, is being planned on a lavish and extensive scale and has attracted the attention of those outside the motion picture and theatrical worlds.

Foremost figures in production activities on Broadway, as well as all leading players, are behind the affair and giving it their whole-hearted support.

In addition to Miss Davies, star of "Little Old New York" and numerous other Cosmopolitan features, scores of other stars will attend. An elaborate entertainment has been arranged, called the "Midnight Frolic."

Post-Office "Don'ts" for Exhibitors

AS a result of agitation by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade for more efficient handling of film shipments, Peter F. Piasecki, Milwaukee postmaster, has promised to do his utmost to eliminate existing evils and at the same time has appealed to exhibitors and exchange men to aid him by observing certain rules. These rules he has listed in a series of "don'ts," one set being for exhibitors and the other for exchange men. They follow:

FOR EXHIBITORS

Don't hold your film any longer than necessary. Mail as soon as your post-office is open in the morning after your show, so as to catch the first possible train.

Don't forget to insure the parcel and see to it that your postmaster affixes a clear and dated postmark. This will absolve you from any suspicion or blame in case the film is delayed on the return trip.

Don't mail films until all old address labels have been removed from the can. Often films are delayed for days by seesawing back and forth due to two or more labels on the can. Usually such a delay means a dark house for the next exhibitor.

Don't use the old label under which the exchange mailed the film to you and merely add the words "to" and "from." Remove all old labels and paste on the new label which the exchange enclosed for the return of the shipment.

Don't forget to place a card with the proper address inside of the can, so that the parcel may be identified in case the outside label drops off.

Don't neglect to accept C. O. D. parcels when offered to you for delivery. Inform your box office clerk or cashier of any expected C. O. D.'s so that parcels will not be taken back to the post-office probably without your knowledge.

Don't forget to ascertain on what train (date and number) delayed parcels of film or posters actually arrive. Then notify the exchange at once, giving full details, so an investigation may be made while the facts are still fresh.

Don't forget to boost early Christmas mailing. Congestion in the mails during the holiday rush means delayed films to exhibitors.

FOR THE FILM EXCHANGES

Don't forget that parcel post shipments travel without waybills and that a clear, prominent and correct address is therefore necessary. Never use labels in which the name of the sender is more prominent than the name of the addressee, or occupies the position of the space usually accorded the addressee. Postal employes are accustomed to looking for a certain thing in a certain place and any deviation from this means risking delay.

Don't write the address so that it is hard to read. Print names, if possible.

Don't use the term "Advertising Matter" on poster packages. Use, instead, "Motion Picture Film Display," or words of a similar character. Advertising matter to a postal employe means circular matter, something in no particular hurry.

Don't forget to enclose a properly addressed—printed if possible—return label with your can, so the exhibitor has no excuse for not addressing the return shipment correctly.

Don't forget to provide proper credentials for messengers calling at the post-office for film.

Don't forget to boost early Christmas mailing.

Don't forget that you are welcome to bring your troubles to the post-office.

Exhibitors and exchange men are being urged by their respective organizations to observe these rules in order to expedite handling of their mail and also to curb bicycling of film.

"Flaming Youth" Luncheon

Tendered to Colleen Moore, Star of "Flaming Youth," at the Ritz

Seventy-five representatives of the press and members of the industry gathered around a festive luncheon board at the Ritz Carlton on Tuesday, December 11, to meet and do honor to Colleen Moore, the star of "Flaming Youth." It was a "Flaming Youth Luncheon" from the start, when two bobbed-haired beauties, pajama clad a la Pat Fen-triss in the picture, served monogrammed cigarettes, to the end of Miss Moore's little speech to the gathering.

Harry Reichenbach acted as toastmaster and Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, toasted the toastmaster. H. O. Schwalbe gave the theatre men's opinion of Colleen Moore and stated that the screen would always be waiting for such pictures as "Flaming Youth."

John McCormick, the husband of the star, and Western Representative of First National, told how, as a publicity man, he was told to deliver the goods and he delivered—Miss Moore, Reichenbach then called upon a dozen guests to read their favorite line from the book—autographed copies of "Flaming Youth" were placed at each plate—and it was discovered that the novel had many exceedingly interesting passages.

When Warner Fabian, the mysterious anonymous author was called upon, there was a thrill of expectancy. But Mr. (or Mrs.) disappointed the gathering without as much as sending regrets. Joseph Dannenberg told how "Flaming Youth" was far beyond many more expensive pictures in box office values, and Miss Moore ended the luncheon by a short speech and a Merry Christmas.

Mr. and Mrs. McCormick left New York later in the week and will arrive in their new home in California in time for Christmas. Later Miss Moore will star in a new picture. She has already completed one since "Flaming Youth"—"Painted People," from the story "The Swamp Angel" by Richard Connell. Clarence Badger directed.

Declines Nomination

Ralph J. Pugh, Associated First National's general manager in the United Kingdom, recently rejected a nomination by the Lloyd George wing of the Liberal Party to stand for election to Parliament as a representative of one of the Home Counties, at the present election.

Mr. Pugh is a prominent figure in British social circles and has spent much of his time working in the interest of English charitable institutions. At the close of the world war Mr. Pugh entered into the film industry as manager of the David P. Howells exchange in London, which position he left to accept the general management of the First National main office in the English capital.

Repeal Tax Measure

A number of bills of importance to the exhibitors and film producers of the country have been introduced in Congress during the past few days. Another measure to repeal the admission tax has been introduced by Representative Dallinger, of Massachusetts, whose bill also provides for the repeal of the tax on telegraph and long distance telephone messages.

Dividend Declared

At a recent meeting the board of directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the preferred stock, payable February 1, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business on January 15, 1924. The books will not close.

Wants Censors Out

Governor Smith to Urge Freedom for Movies

An effort will be made in the coming session of the New York Legislature to free that state from the present shackles of motion picture censorship. On January 1 Governor Alfred E. Smith, in his annual message, will again come out in a strong statement opposing censorship on the grounds that it is un-American. James J. Walker, of New York City, majority leader of the Senate, will again carry the fight against censorship in the upper house. In case the campaign cannot be carried along non-partisan lines in the Assembly, Maurice Bloch of New York, probable minority leader, will introduce a bill for the repeal of the law.

Big Stock Issue

New Block to Pay Original Franchise Holders on Exchange Investments

Acting upon a course adopted at a meeting held recently in Atlantic City, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has amended its original certificate of incorporation, on file in Dover, Del. This amendment provides for the issuance of additional stock. A statement just released by the company is explanatory, and reads:

"The amendment to the certificate of incorporation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was made so that it might be possible to issue Second Preferred Stock to our Original Franchise Holders in order to fund their advances to First National into a stock account. Sixteen thousand shares of Second Preferred (par value $100) Class A Stock and ten thousand shares Second Preferred (par value $100) Class B Stock have been authorized. A total issue of about two million five hundred thousand dollars of Second Preferred A and Second Preferred B Stock will be issued at an early date direct to our Original Franchise Holders.

"This Second Preferred Stock is being issued for the purpose of funding the advances made by the Original Franchise Holders through the exchange corporations to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which advances have been, up to date, carried on our books in the form of a current liability owed by this company to its exchange corporations and Original Franchise Holders. Thus this two million five hundred thousand dollars will be transferred from a quick liability into a Second Preferred Stock account. "The willingness of our Original Franchise Holders so to fund in the form of Second Preferred Stock the advances they made to First National, is an indication of their confidence in the future of First National and places this company in a still sounder financial position.

"This matter was decided upon by the Directors of First National some months ago but the legal details involved have just been completed. The stock was divided into Second Preferred A and Second Preferred B Stock merely to take care of certain inequalities in the amount of the assessments paid to First National by our various franchise holders.

"An issue of three million dollars of First National Stock has been authorized at this time because in view of the issuance of the Second Preferred Stock to fund the advances made by the Original Franchise Holders, provision legally had to be made at the same time for the authorization of a prior First Preferred Stock. In other words, the arrangement for this issuance of First Preferred Stock has been made because of the willingness of the Original Franchise Holders to take second Preferred Stock, thereby strengthening the financial structure of this company by having available three million dollars of First Preferred Stock ready to be issued in the future if the expansion of the company should create a need for additional capital. However, there is no intention whatsoever of issuing such First Preferred Stock for the present or for the immediate future; and this authorization has been made solely with the desire to use full financial caution in setting up the new financial structure of the company."

San Francisco on Qui Vive for New Year's Movie Ball

The annual Movies' Ball, given by the Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco, will be held this year on New Year's eve at the Exposition Auditorium. A feature of the event will be the crowning of a queen and employes of local theatres have entered the contest for the honor of ruling the ball. The committee having arrangements for the ball in charge includes Anthony L. Noriega, of the Golden Gate Theatre, general chairman; James M. Triplett, of the Royal Theatre; J. A. Bainbridge, Capitol Theatre; G. W. Ullrich, Pantages Theatre; J. M. Barnett and H. F. Ericsson. Proceeds of the affair go to the sick and death fund of the organization.

Charles M. Pincus, manager of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, has been kept busy since assuming charge of this house in arranging world premieres. Four were held recently on successive weeks, which is believed to have established a record, and others are being arranged. Much interest is being shown in the forthcoming presentation of "Black Oxen." It will follow "Flaming Youth" at the Warfield, a production that has hung up new attendance records for the house.

The sight of a blind man being led into one of San Francisco's leading downtown picture theatres recently led to an investigation which developed the fact the blind are frequent patrons of theatres. They are usually accompanied by some one who explains the picture to them, and they take great enjoyment in following the plot. They appreciate the musical features more fully than most people in possession of their sight and frequently compliment the management on the offerings of this kind.

Adam C. Baker, owner of the Galety Theatre, Hillo, T. H., who has been in California for six months, accompanied by Mrs. Baker and their son Kamakele, has arranged to sail for the Islands in time to be home for the Christmas holidays.

R. B. Boomer, formerly in charge of the Spokane, Wash., office of the Universal Exchange, has been made manager of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, succeeding Jack Howard, who has resigned. The Cameo is steadily gaining in popularity, with its singing orchestra a feature that finds special favor.

Ed Baron, who recently joined the executive staff of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, San Francisco, has returned from a business trip to New York.

The deal for the purchase of the theatre of Mrs. F. E. Smith at Marysville, Cal., has lapsed, owing to the death of Thomas O'Day, but it is anticipated that another buyer will be found shortly.

Frank Parker, who recently disposed of the Lyric Theatre at Stockton, Cal., plans the erection of a 2,000-seat house in that city.

Frank Atkins, of Marysville, Cal., has been investigating the proposition of erecting a picture house at Berkeley, Cal., for some time and this step has practically been decided upon.

Rube Goldwater of Stockton, Cal., has arranged to remodel the Lyric Theatre at Sacramento at an estimated cost of $30,000.

George Mann, who conducts theatres at Ureka and Ukiah, Cal., recently had a narrow escape from death when the automobile in which he was riding went off the grade near Requa and turned over three times before it came to a stop. While he sustained painful injuries he escaped broken bones.

The G. & S. Theatre at Santa Rosa, Cal., a beautiful new house seating 2,400, was formally opened on December 3. This theatre will be managed by the King-Reavis Amusement Co., which has operated the Cline Theatre for the past seven years. High-class pictures, with occasional stage attractions, will be featured.

St. Louis

The Amuse Theatre, Neelyville, Mo., owned by Alex Eastwood, was destroyed by fire on December 6. The fire resulted from an explosion of gasoline in the rear of a store conducted by Eastwood. The loss is $16,000.

The Grand Theatre, Keokuk, Ia., was destroyed by fire on the night of December 6. The Grand, the oldest movie house in Keokuk, was owned by the Baker-Dodge organization.

Don Davis, local manager for Associated Exhibitors, has closed a contract with the Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill., whereby that house will play "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for one week, to be followed by another week's run on "The Extra Girl." "Going Up" is the current attraction, while Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry" was on the Belasco's screen all of last week.

Business in Louisiana, Mo., is improving but as yet the town and its amusement palaces have not been placed on the regular calling list of the "red hots" who specialize in carrying off fat bankrolls and movie receipts. A few nights ago a St. Louis movie salesman dropped around to W. A. Boyd's movie palace in Louisiana and found the proprietor out in front looking up and down the street. The clock read 8:15 p. m. "What's wrong, Boyd?" the salesman asked. "Oh, I am just looking for another quarter for my film rental," he answered. A few minutes later the quarter came.

The King Bee, 1710 North Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, owned by Mike Nash, is undergoing extensive improvement. The plans include a one-story concrete addition 18 by 52. Harry W. Wagner is the contractor doing the work.

Robbers held up Fred Hatfield, messenger for the Majestic Theatre, Peoria, Ill., almost in front of the Peoria Police Headquarters on Thanksgiving Night and took the day's receipts from him, totalling about $3,000.

Five hundred patients of the St. Louis Sanatorium's occupational therapy department were guests of J. B. Lueken, owner-manager of the Macklind Theatre, 5413 Arsenal street, St. Louis, at a movie party the afternoon of December 5.

Associated Exhibitors has closed a fat contract with the Reed, Yenn & Hayes Circuit whereby they take all the Lloyd features, "Counterfeit Love," "Tea With a Kick," "Going Up," "Call of the Wild," etc. The deal is said to have involved $6,000.

Seattle

The long continued labor difficulties of John Danz, exhibitor, and the union musicians and operators is like a serial or "chapter play." The latest chapter occurred during the past week, in police court, when a charge of disorderly conduct against George Dillman, manager of the Colonial Theatre, owned by Danz, was continued until December 20. A request from the chief of police that the case be dismissed was protested by the attorney for the unions, and the date set for trial. When the unions' attorney went into Chief Severyn's office to protest against the chief's action in requesting dismissal, he insinuated that the chief was not doing his duty and was "being influenced." Chief Severyn responded by giving his visitor a wholesome and thorough shaking. The chief's requested dismissal of the case against Dillman, charged with having torn an "unfair banner" off a union picket in front of the Class A Theatre, was based on the grounds that a warrant should have issued, charging disorderly conduct, and also because he did not desire patrolmen to constitute themselves as special guards for the theatres. Dillman was released after his arrest in $20 bail.

"Little Old New York," now in its second week at Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, broke every standing record of the house during its first week's run. The presentation given the picture was extremely attractive and atmospheric. Charming living miniatures, lighted by soft lights, formed a setting for the prologue solo. Ushers were costumed in period gowns, so attractive as to warrant a press notice.

F. E. Wesp, formerly with the Seattle Blue Mouse, is now assistant to Dr. Howard S. Clemmer at the Spokane Clemmer Theatre.

Mrs. J. J. Parker, wife of the manager of Portland's Majestic Theatre, died last Monday. Interment was in San Francisco.

Manager Charles McKee of the Hellig Theatre "spotted" Irene Castle and her new husband as the couple entered the lobby to attend the evening performance of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" while in Seattle. The famous dancer admitted that Mr. McKee was correct when he recognized her. The picture is doing big business in its second week.

E. K. Taylor of the Spokane Hippodrome puts out a nifty little four-page house organ called the Hippodrome Evening Post, in facsimile of the famous Saturday Evening Post, containing chatty bits of gossip and news under lettered paragraphs similar to Orpheum vaudeville announcement headlines. The comparisons are not intended to show that Mr. Taylor gets results through imitation, but merely to illustrate the makeup of the sheet. The captions are eye-catchers for the paragraphs that follow. Mr. Taylor announces the installation of a big "thousand throated" pipe organ as his latest achievement for the pleasure and comfort of patrons.

The "Four Horsemen of Virginia" created a lot of attention in Seattle for the Strand's presentation of "The Virginian," which did excellent business.

"Sabbath Blues" No Longer the Rage in Frankfort, Ind.

The "Sabbath Blues" are now a thing of the past in Frankfort, Ind. While they were in force, Mayor Keene motored to Kokomo and took in every "movie" that was in operation. The opponents of the Sunday shows soon found out what had happened and told the mayor what they thought about it. The merchants and the theatre men, realizing the opportunity, opened up for business as usual on the following Sunday and were pinched. John Miller, garage man, was chosen to be tried, the decision to govern the fate of the others.

After listening to the evidence, a jury of three women and nine men voted him innocent of the crime of selling gasoline on Sunday, whereupon the prosecuting attorney announced that the rest of the cases would be dismissed. So ended the "Sabbath Blues" in Frankfort.

Contracts for the erection of a new $500,000 theatre building at Elkhart will be awarded sometime this month and construction work will start not later than April 1. Harry Lerner, formerly of South Bend, is at the head of the project. Mr. Lerner is the present lessee and manager of the Bucklen Theatre in Elkhart. The new theatre will be devoted to pictures and stage productions.

The Cadick Theatre structure at Evansville has been sold for $175,000 and will be used as the site for a new $650,000 Medical Arts building. Work was started on the Cadick about three years ago but was not completed because the company was unable to sell sufficient stock to finance the building.

To Try Out Reserved Seats at Philadelphia Film House

The Stanley Company of America is trying out a policy of reserved seats at the Aldine Theatre, located in the heart of the socially exclusive residential section. It is one of the most attractive houses in the Stanley Circuit and it will be the first picture theatre in this city ever to be conducted along this plan. Tickets will be sold at 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, including the tax, for matinees, and 75 cents, $1 and $1.65, including tax, for the evening performance. In preparation for this new policy the Aldine is closed for a few days, to be reopened on Christmas Day, in order to make the changes necessary for the new plan. The first attraction under the new plan will be two performances daily of "Scaramouche."

William J. Laportes has acquired an interest in the new Lansdale Theatre of Lansdale, Pa., and will make improvements to the theatre, which in the future will be under the direction of the Main Line Amusement Co., the controlling organization of the Ardmore Theatre of which Mr. Laportes is proprietor. The executive office of the Lansdale Theatre Co. will be removed to the Ardmore Theatre Building at Ardmore, just outside of Philadelphia.

After undergoing extensive alterations and renovations, the Strand Theatre of Gloucester, N. J., has been reopened under the proprietorship of Alex Kolemian and with Jack Jaslow as manager. A new screen, projection equipment and seats were added. The music is furnished by a five-piece orchestra. The Strand formerly was conducted as the Academy and as the Broadway, while its owner was L. Pizor. It is the only house in Gloucester not connected with the Stiefel Amusement Co., which controls the Leader, Palace and Apollo.

Change of title has been made in the Morris Theatre at Richmond and Summer streets, under the new ownership of Sam Hyman, who took over the theatre at a purchase

The Harmer Theatre is one of the most attractive theatres in the Lancaster Valley and will be conducted by Mr. Greiner, a former legitimate stage man, who has moved his family from New York to the Pennsylvania town.

Possession of the Fulton Opera House of Lancaster was taken by Ralph W. Koho at a purchase price of $51,000.

Award of a contract for the erection of a hotel and theatre at Tamaqua has been made to the Shamokin Construction and Lumber Co. by the Higgins Amusement Co. of Shamokin and will involve an expenditure of over $500,000.

Renovation and redecoration of the interior of the Victoria Theatre, Tamaqua, Pa., has been completed by the Chamberlain Amusement Co. of Shamokin. The entire interior walls have been decorated, new carpets laid and new curtains hung on the screen stage.

Baltimore

Through a co-operative arrangement between the Baltimore News and the Exhibitor's League of Maryland, 40 picture theatres, all members of the M. P. T. O. A., each get a ten-line ad. daily in that newspaper for which each pays a nominal sum each week. Every few weeks the money paid the News for the ads. is refunded to the League to go into the treasury of the Maryland body. In return, each theatre runs a slide after each performance during each day, telling the public to read their advertisement daily in the News. The committee representing the league includes Frank H. The bandits succeeded in getting $355.45. One man has been arrested and is held under suspicion. Mr. Cluster was cut on the head and after the robbery had to be taken to St. Joseph's hospital and was later taken to his home. He showed remarkable fortitude and was able to go about his work in a few days.

Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh has had no real winter yet. In fact, during the first week of December an excess in normal temperature of 53 degrees was recorded. The weather being mild and reasonably dry, business at the picture theatres has been above average. The two biggest successes of the month so far have been Buster Keaton's "Our Hospitality" and Universal's "The Acquittal." The Keaton comedy at Loew's Aldine and Cameraphone, week of December 3, scored heavily with the S. R. O. audiences, and received much flattering praise from the newspapers. "The Acquittal" is in its third week at the Cameo in downtown Pittsburgh, week of December 10, and still going big.

The contract is for a period of years and the success of Mrs. Henoch with the long run of Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" shows that a Michigan avenue movie house can be made a success if the right kind of films are shown. Lubliner & Trinz will put on first runs with suitable presentations and plenty of music.

Word was received here a few days ago that the Grand Theatre at Keokuk, Iowa, under the management of Dodge and Baker, was destroyed by fire. The loss will exceed $50,000 and marks the end of one of the oldest theatres in that part of the country. No doubt a fine new structure will be built on the site, as Dodge and Baker have had plans for a new movie house for some time past.

J. L. McCurdy, manager of the Randolph Theatre, is also looking after the management of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now running at the Harris Theatre. Dan Roche is handling the publicity of the attraction and business has been good for this super picture.

Howard L. Snyder of Fulton, Ill., manager of the Lincoln Theatre there, plans to build a 1,000-seat theatre there and work will begin at an early date.

H. B. Frank has bought the Liberty Theatre at Atlanta, Ill., from E. L. Bennett.

The Star Theatre at Quincy, Ill., has been fixed up for the winter and Manager Herman Nelson has added an orchestra.

Omaha Showman Found Shot; Had Brooded Over Troubles

J. W. Monaghan, who lost his job as manager for the Palm Theatre at Omaha when it changed hands recently, was found dead in an automobile north of Omaha early in the morning, with a bullet hole back of his right ear and a revolver clutched in his right hand. His wife said he had been looking for a job and had been worrying over financial difficulties. His friends said he was of such a cheerful and sunny disposition that they could not imagine him worrying. He leaves his wife and three children.

The rumor that the new Temple office building and theatre would not be built on Randolph street has been denied and Will Hollander, publicity manager for Balaban and Katz, says that the company will go ahead with its plans.

The Randolph Theatre is to have a new organ soon. During the intermission Manager McCurdy is having a five-piece orchestra provide the patrons with music.

DeKay Vose has sold the Pershing Theatre at London Mills, Ill., to Ellis Jackson, manager of the Cozy Theatre at Bushnell, Ill.

Tongate and Haynes, owners of the Carlisle Theatre at Carlisle, Ill., have opened another movie house at Francisville, Ill., and will book houses from their Carlisle office. They may add other houses to the circuit in the near future.

Simons, Empress, Shenandoah, Iowa; Morris Smith, Hippodrome Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa; Cliff Larson, Lyric Theatre, Creighton, Neb.; C. E. Byers, Opera House, Valley, Neb.; C. W. Shafer, Opera House, Petersburg, Neb.

Canada

Oral Cloakey, peppy manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, has been admitted to the active roll of the Rotary Club in the Capital City of Canada and has become an enthusiastic member. He conducted a special morning matinee at the theatre on Saturday, December 15, under the auspices of the Rotary Club, for the children of all orphanages in Ottawa and Hull, Quebec, the house being thrown open to the many inmates.

For some few weeks, Manager Ben Stapleton of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, tried the Saturday opening arrangement, following up the plan which was adopted last summer for the Ottawa Regent, but after a short trial the engagements were once more drawn to open on Mondays. Programs continue to open at the Regent on Saturdays.

But for the substantial brick construction of the building, the Palace Theatre at Cornwall, Ontario, would undoubtedly have been destroyed by fire which swept a business block of the St. Lawrence River town on December 4. The flames came to a dead stop when they reached the side wall of the Palace and the theatre was practically untouched.

Joe Franklin of the Franklin Theatre, Ottawa, conducted a Puzzle and Rhyme Contest for his successful house during the week of December 10 by publishing a jumbled assortment of sections of the art name of the theatre which were to be cut out and pasted together. Prizes of $10, $5, $2 and 22 passes were offered to contestants who pasted the bits together neatly and who also offered a poem or short essay on the theatre.

Local Conditions an Aid to Amsterdam, N. Y., Exhibitors

Although the carpet mills of Amsterdam, N. Y., are running but three days a week, the picture theatres of the city are really being benefited rather than otherwise. This is rather strange for there are about 10,000 men and women employed in the mills. But in Amsterdam, there is a vaudeville house which charges a 60 cent admission. With the mills running on half time, the mill hands are seeking their amusement at the picture theatres, which charge anywhere from 10 cents to 25 cents, figuring that they can secure from three to six times the amusement for their money than if they had attended the vaudeville. Exhibitors from Amsterdam along Albany's Film Row during the past week, especially those who run the 10-cent houses, assert that their business has picked up since the mills partially closed down.

Alec Papayanakos, owner of the American in Canton, was in New York the past week, where he met Mrs. Papayanakos who arrived on the Aquitania from a visit of several months in Greece.

Here's the recipe which Oscar Perrin is following these days in bringing success to the Leland in Albany. Feature, "Where the Pavement Ends," Fox News Reel, Fox Educational Reel, Mermaid Comedy, "This Way Out." Along with this, for 28 cents, goes some excellent organ music. And the best part of it all is that the same good program is followed week in and out, and the house is packed afternoon and night.

Harry Berinstein, manager of the Majestic in Elmira, and George Roberts, of Albany, general manager of the Berinstein circuit, motored to Buffalo last Monday in Mr. Berinstein's car, which later on disappeared after it had been parked in front of the Hotel Statler.

A canvass of the picture theatres in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, reveals that there has been absolutely no let-up in business thus far even though the Christmas holidays are but a few days away. Some of the managers admitted that they were looking for a slump which thus far, however, has failed to show up.

James J. Kelly, associate manager of the State Theatre in Corning, has been named as manager of the Elwood and Sampson theatres in Penn Yan, which are controlled by Associate Theatres, Inc., owners of the State. Mr. Kelly has already assumed his new duties. E. G. Dodds, formerly of Syracuse, will act as local manager for the State Theatre.

The Arlington in Troy, operated by "Cal" Miller, a former booker in the F. B. O. exchange here, has closed but may reopen after the holidays.

Samuel Wood, former owner of the Strand in Amsterdam, has acquired the Strand in Canajoharie and will open the house on Christmas Day.

Bill Smalley, of Coopertown, made one of his periodical visits to Film Row during the past week, and is reported to have done considerable booking. He reported business as excellent in all of his houses.

Things are breaking a bit better these days for George King, of the Rialto in Binghamton, than on Election Day, when Mr. King, running for alderman, went down to defeat.

"Speejacks" has been added to next week's bill at the Leland, in Albany, the picture splitting over two weeks.

If censorship is abolished in New York State, exhibitors and others favoring the repeal of the present measure will find themselves indebted to Fred Elliott, of Albany, owner of the Clinton Square Theatre now under lease. Mr. Elliott is devoting three or four days each week in traveling over this part of the state, calling upon the owners and managers and asking them to come out and strongly oppose censorship, both in slides, by word of mouth, but especially in seeking out their respective assemblymen and lay the foundation of the campaign which will later on be carried into the legislative corridors of the State Capitol. During the past week, Mr. Elliott was in Utica, Amsterdam, Old Forge, Norfolk, Poland and other places in northern New York.

There is nothing like getting one's advertising where it will do the most good. Bill Smalley, of Cooperstown, showed good judgment in placing each week's program of his house in Sidney in the lobby of the hotel there. There is no question but that the advertisement brings anywhere from a dozen to twenty traveling men, stopping over night in Sidney, to Smalley's attractive theatre a few doors down the street.

The way winter is holding off in northern New York means hundreds of dollars to the exhibitors of that section who lose trade when the country roads become more or less impassable. Up to the present time there is no snow to speak of in any of the northern counties. Exhibitors from this section of the state, in town for film, declare that farmers are still flocking to town for the movies each night, and that business is nearly as good now as during the summer months.

Stock will open on Christmas Day at the Avon in Watertown, according to Nathan Robbins, owner of this and other theatres in central and northern New York. Motion pictures will not be shown at the Avon during the indefinite run of the stock company, but the program at the Olympic, also in Watertown, and owned by Mr. Robbins, is to be augmented by the latest pictures in conjunction with vaudeville.

Edward Windbiel, who with Thomas Shelley runs the Orpheum in Amsterdam, was in town booking pictures last Friday.

Buffalo

Nothing doing on midnight movies in Buffalo. The council, on recommendation of the mayor, has amended the ordinances prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures after midnight. The council has also put the ban on immoral and indecent films. A fine of $250 is provided for a violation.

John J. Maxwell, Jr., formerly manager of the Star and Loco theatres, has been appointed assistant general manager of the Border Amusement Company. Mr. Maxwell was formerly assistant manager at the New Olympic before going with Border, who control the Star, Loco, Ellen Terry and Marlowe.

James Kelly, who has been managing the State Theatre in Corning, N. Y., has arrived in Penn Yan to relieve Harry Morse at the Elmwood and Sampson theatres while the latter is enjoying a much needed vacation.

Charlie Bird, who has resigned as general manager of the Fox western studios, has returned to Hornell, where he intends to make his home. Mr. Bird was formerly manager of a Hornell theatre.

R. C. Fox, former manager of the Paramount exchange, is returning to Buffalo to handle "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" for Universal. "Dick" has been absent from Buffalo for several years. Harry Scott, feature sales manager for Pathe, was in town last week end. So was Harry Buxbaum, First National district manager.

M. Shea is in Chicago conferring with architects on the mammoth new picture theatre which he will soon build in Buffalo.

Rochester, N. Y.

The week on Rochester screens: Eastman, "Anna Christie." Victoria, "Soft Boiled." Piccadilly, "Little Old New York." Regent, "Our Hospitality." Fay's, "The Empty Cradle."

Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" will be shown in Rochester at the Regent Theatre soon.

Without going into the question of whether or not the Eastman Theatre is properly excluded from taxation, Justice John E. M. Stephens has dismissed the order granted previously on the application of Julius Hoesterey, Jr., for a review of the action of the city assessors in including the property in the list of untaxed holdings.

Enid Knapp Botsford, director of the Eastman Theatre ballet, made her first public Rochester appearance this week in connection with the ballet number, "The Fountain," which was on the program with the presentation of "Anna Christie."

So successful was the first week's showing of "Little Old New York" at the Piccadilly that the Marlon Davies production was held over for the second week, something very unusual in this town.

Kansas

A storm of protest has broken over the action of the State Motion Picture Censor Board in authorizing the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Kansas. Governor Davis, when he returns from the trip to Great Bend, where he went to cast his hat into the Presidential ring, will find an assortment of protests that will occupy his attention for several days if he attempts to answer them.

The protests are pouring not only into the Governor's office, but also into the office of the attorney general, Charles B. Griffith. Petitions are coming into Griffith's office begging him to take legal steps to stop the showing of the film.

It is probable Griffith will go to Kansas City, Kas., to urge the censor board to repeal its action in admitting the picture. The supreme court has decided the action of the board was final. Only Governor Davis could stop the picture, and the Governor has said that he saw nothing wrong with it.

A petition of 500 citizens of Salina, business men, city and county officials and school teachers was presented the Governor begging him to stop exhibition of the film. A petition of 103 Fort Scott negroes was sent to Griffith, who transmitted it to Governor Davis. The ministers at Wichita, Fort Scott, Salina and Kansas City, Kas., have filed protests and many personal letters are coming in. Delegations of negroes from Topeka and Coffeyville called on Griffith and protested.

The Beyer Theatre at Excelsior Springs, Mo., was opened last week under the management of H. M. Loop. The theatre is beautifully decorated and the estimated cost is $125,000. The seating capacity is 1,200.

C. R. Acuff & Co. have purchased the Isis Theatre at Bruswich, Mo.

J. D. Wineland, who owns theatres in Picher, Okla., and Webb City, Mo., was a visitor at the Kansas City exchanges recently.

Clarence ("Bones") Smith, an exhibitor of Kansas City, Kas., and secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, is the proud father of a baby girl, who has been named Harriet Ann.

H. L. ("Doc.") Gees, exhibitor of Mulberry, Kas., was a visitor in Kansas City recently.

Mr. Ware of the Varsity Theatre at Lawrence, Kas., was another visitor last week.

Milwaukee Theatre Company Describes Ambitious Plans

Organization of a company to operate a chain of theatres in and near Milwaukee, with George Fischer of the New Milwaukee Theatre at the helm, has been completed. As its first step in its expansion program, the company has virtually completed a deal whereby it will acquire the Greenfield Theatre, an 800-seat house nearing completion in West Allis, suburb adjoining Milwaukee.

The deal for the Greenfield involves a ten-year lease, according to Mr. Fischer. Just as soon as all the papers are signed, steps will be taken by the new company to construct at least two more houses on sites already purchased, Mr. Fischer declared. Just where these sites are located, he refused to make known, but asserted other houses would follow those already contemplated.

With the announcement of the formation of the new company, which according to Mr. Fischer consists of business men of the north side, some of whom are behind his New Milwaukee Theatre, it is expected that Mr. Fischer will virtually turn the direct management of the New Milwaukee over, to Louis Shimon, his assistant, while he will devote his time to executive duties connected with all the houses. Who will be named to manage the Greenfield he has not revealed.

As a climax to the spirit of harmony which has marked the dealings between exhibitors and exchange men in Milwaukee during the last year, a joint ball is being planned by the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade and the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, according to Ben Koenig, secretary of the exchange outfit. This is intended to replace the annual event held by the exhibitor organization. According to Mr. Koenig, Fred Seegert, president of the exhibitors, has expressed approval of the plan. The ball will be held in the municipal auditorium, it is believed.

At the end of twelve days, "Little Old New York" has shown to approximately 53,000 patrons of Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, a new record for the house, according to Roy C. MacMullen, manager. Not only is that figure a new high mark for the theatre since its opening, but with the exception of one picture it is a record for Milwaukee, Mr. MacMullen claims.

With 53,000 movie fans already accommodated, interest in the film apparently is still at a high pitch and as a result, Mr. MacMullen is laying plans which are expected to result in the picture being kept in Milwaukee for a third week. Ever since it opened, extra shows have been necessary to accommodate the crowds, the house being kept open throughout this period from 9:30 a. m. to midnight.

Using odor bombs as their weapons, enemies of Charles Wasiechek, Milwaukee theatre owner, routed patrons simultaneously at two of his five houses, the New Crystal, downtown theatre, and the Pearl, on the South side, he reported to the police several nights ago. Information Wasiechek gave the authorities leads them to believe that the "bombs" were placed as a result of trouble he has had with the labor unions over his hiring of non-union musicians at the New Crystal almost a year ago. Since then his theatre has constantly been picketed.

Indications are that unusually good business will continue with the Merrill for at least several weeks following the close of "Little Old New York." For the week of Dec. 15, that week so usually dreaded by exhibitors, Mr. MacMullen has hooked up with the Knights of Columbus for the showing of Yale's "Landing of Columbus." Twenty thousand tickets have been turned over to the Knights for sale. The picture is to be shown on a program also featuring "The Drivin' Fool," for which the Merrill has tied up with the safety division of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce in an advertising scheme.

Baby Peggy's "Darling of New York" is to be the Merrill's Christmas picture and "Reno" the New Year attraction.

Girl ushers are going to be taboo at the Wisconsin Theatre, 3,500-seat movie house being erected in the heart of Milwaukee's downtown district, according to Eddie J. Weisfeldt who, with the title of manager of production, will be in charge of the theatre for the Saxe Amusement Enterprises. Instead of girls, Mr. Weisfeldt declares he will have a staff of twenty-five boy ushers who will work under an officer and merit system. The head usher will be stationed at the entrance of the inner lobby. Several of the twenty-five assistants will carry the rank of lieutenant and will be in charge of the boys in their section.

Frankel to Play Santa Claus to 1,200 Cincinnati Orphans

Through the courtesy of I. Frankel, manager of Gifts Theatre, at least 1,200 children from the various Cincinnati orphanages will have their Christmas made happier by attending a performance at Libson's house during Christmas week. Mrs. Leah Weiss, Cincinnati novelist, whose new book, "Object!" is just off the press, will arrange transportation for the youngsters.

Isaac Libson who controls practically all of the first-run houses here, has volunteered his support to the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York in the campaign which they are waging against the government admission tax.

The Play-Reviewing committee of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Council has publicly endorsed "Anna Christie," "Stephen Steps Out," "The Printer's Devil" and "The Wanters," all of which pictures were shown here recently.

The Grand Theatre, Marion, Ohio, which has been closed for several months while in the hands of a receiver, has been reopened under management of the Marion Photoplay Co. and will continue pictures.

John Murray, prominently known throughout the central west, has disposed of his theatres at Warren, Ohio, and gone south on account of his health. Smith controls two houses in Warren, as well as two in Alliance, Ohio.

Eugene Quigley, manager of the Kearsse Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., and formerly in

Mr. Weisfeldt, as manager of the Strand in Milwaukee, employs girls as ushers, but he declares that he is convinced that boys are more suited to work in a house of such large size as the Wisconsin.

Roy C. MacMullen, manager of Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, observed Thanksgiving day by acting as host at a banquet for his thirty-five employes in the basement of his showhouse.

George W. Dilley who for some time has combined the show business with the newspaper business, has decided to quit the former and as a result Highland, Wis., is without an exhibitor. Dr. Dilley ran his shows at the Municipal building.

According to word from Platteville, Wis., negotiations are under way to convert a portion of the city hall into a picture theatre. The Gem is the only showhouse this city boasts at present.

charge of the Capitol, Cincinnati, has gone to Chicago to undergo medical treatment. Quigley has been ill for several weeks, during which time he has twice been a patient in a Charleston hospital, but failed to respond to the treatment.

The Jewel Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, one of the houses in the Jewel Photoplay chain, which has been open only on Saturday and Sunday of each week, has been taken over by Wm. Shoemaker, who will operate the house daily, showing second-run pictures at popular prices.

In order to feel the pulse of the movie-going public, John Schwalm, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, is giving each of his patrons a questionnaire asking them to designate their choice as to pictures, stars, music, etc., and soliciting comments and suggestion on the manner of conducting the house, and improving the service.

Phil Chakers has assumed management of the Grand Theatre at Middletown, Ohio.

If anyone entertains doubt as to fate playing funny pranks, he has but to refer to Gordon Hake, Piqua, Ohio, for verification. Hake has been assistant manager of the Piqua Amusement Co. for five years, and recently accepted the position of manager for the Capitol Theatre, Charleston, W. Va. He was on his way to the depot to take a train for Charleston to assume his new duties a few weeks ago, but when reaching the station was handed a telegram that the theatre had been destroyed by fire. Hake says that's what he calls "rubbing it in."

Henry A. Staab Is Wisconsin's Secretary

HENRY A. STAAB, newspaper publisher and a member of the Milwaukee Motion Picture Commission, the censoring organization of the city, has been named executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin. He will take office January 1, according to Fred Seegert, president of the exhibitor unit, who announced the appointment. Mr. Staab succeeds Walter F. Baumann, who resigned several months ago after holding the position for three years.

Although never directly connected with theatrical management, Mr. Staab for years has been in a position to study exhibitor problems and therefore comes to the organization highly qualified for the position. As a member of the Motion Picture Commission, he has met various Milwaukee showmen and has considered with them the problems arising from censorship. In addition, he has been in charge of numerous theatricals staged by the Knights of Pythias lodge, of which he is a former grand chancellor for the state of Wisconsin.

Mr. Seegert announced that hereafter the executive secretary would make frequent trips throughout the state, thus getting into closer touch with exhibitor members, getting first-hand information of their needs and problems, and spreading the doctrine of the movies before various organizations not connected with the business, such as the Rotary clubs and Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Staab, who is 45 years old, at one time was connected with the Milwaukee Herald and more recently with the North Avenue Progress, a community newspaper. Mr. Baumann, whom he succeeds, has entered the film and slide advertising business in Milwaukee.

Milt Crandall Experiments in Drawing to Get Results in Pittsburgh Papers

MILTON D. CRANDALL, now of the publicity staff of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, makes interesting comment germane to the use of half tones in poorly printed papers, though his letter was written before he saw the article of two weeks ago in this department.

As old readers know, the R. & C. advertising has come in for a deal of comment in this department in the past six or eight years, starting with the efforts of Samuel Sivitz to persuade the local compositors to give him type display in the small sizes. Just before he retired from the field, Mr. Sivitz had achieved a good combination effect, though he was still having trouble with his artist.

Ill health compelled his retirement and the battle began all over again. Following his transcontinental trip for Down to the Sea in Ships, Mr. Crandall came onto the R. & C. lot this fall, and his efforts have been directed to a general campaign, which has resulted in the establishment of a photoplay department in the Tuesday issue of the Chronicle-Telegraph, with the other papers taking more interest than they previously displayed. This helps the other houses as well as the numerous theatres under the here from the results of practical experiment. From a number of samples submitted, we have selected some individual results as being especially worthy of comment, but it should be understood that four houses are advertised as a unit in a forty-inch space. Two of these ads—and they are the most successful—follow the style used by Ben Ferris, of the Finkelstein and Ruben houses in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Ferris Style Best

In this the four spaces are set inside of a border and white space is used to hold them apart and give each a distinction of its own. This style seems to have been perfected by Ferris from the four announcements used on the West Coast, and we think it is a decided improvement. It does not use the space to the full, but it gives a better display value than where the entire space is completely filled. The white space pulls up the individual announcements and gives a greater value than if each house had been given its full ten inches.

Rowland and Clark management, but so long as Milt gets what he wants, he is perfectly willing to share with others. Before he is through, he will probably land all of the papers with photoplay pages, for the papers will soon discover that these departments fill a subscriber want.

About Newspaper Work

But more interesting is his effort to get real display without half tones in newspapers where poor press work makes it practically impossible to get even halfway decent results.

Very wisely he has not sought to reform the press rooms. He is not trying to get better printing, but has directed his efforts toward getting a style of drawing that will give good results with poor printing. His experiments should interest not only theatre

The spaces are exactly the same size, yet the individual announcements have more than triple the display value of the other, though the solid display gives the titles in letters four times the size. Moreover, the display has a more characteristic form and the R. & C. display can be picked off the page at first glance.

Replacing Half Tones

In the matter of text it will be noted that Mr. Crandall uses type wherever possible and he gets it into spaces where five years ago a Pittsburgh printer would have declared that type could not be placed. Take the Ponjola advertisement, for example.

The actual size of this display is 33-16 deep by 4 inches wide. Only the title and the signature are lettered. The names are set in 8 point bold, the heading of the panel in 8 point light bold italic and the matter in 6 point italic. There are the portraits of star and lead, a sketch of the Eiffel tower, for Paris, and the diamond mines of Africa. Not much drawing; merely enough to give character to the space without detracting from the type.

MUSICAL presentation with "Ponjola," the First National Picture, and Will Rogers in "Uncensored Movies," the Pathe 'pre-release, was built around the chorus of fourteen voices, the ballet of six and a girls' harp quintette. This ensemble filled the stage and filled the eye, and was one of the most warmly received stage pictures in some time. Running time of this incident was nine minutes, divided into three parts. Other musical incidents took eleven minutes, the Topical Review eight minutes, the Rogers comedy twenty and the feature one hour and fourteen minutes, making a show of two hours and two minutes.

"My Sweetie Went Away" and "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise," especially orchestrated, served as symphonized jazz overture, six minutes, giving various instruments a chance to step out. Two 150 ampere Mestrum booth floods of deep blue covered the entire stage. Two dome Mestrums of same amperage flooded the orchestra with orange. Six color blend spots and three box lamps of color blend shot up from beneath the small stage through the glass traps onto the silver draw curtains. Two arch spots of color blend hit the curtains from the side. Transparent columns at proscenium with two color blends in each.

The Pilgrims Chorus from "Tannhauser" was sung by the feminine chorus before a white patent leather back-drop. Singers were in evening gowns, and were arrayed in formal concert style across the stage. The back drop was lighted from the sides by four vari-colored spots, to the side, colors running to blue, green and magenta. Two dome spots throwing color blends flooded the singers, bringing out in unique hue the various color of the gowns. Two booth spots of deep blue focused on side drapes and orchestra. The large stage foots were green. Five minutes.

Divertissements Distinctive, the big number, opened with a stage picture. The fourteen women singers were pyramided against the deep blue plush back cyclorama by means of two stairways on opposite sides of a platform, six girls being on each stairway and two on the platform. They were in white robes and wigs, with gold cross bands across the bust, Grecian style, and held garlands of flowers. To the right, upstage, were the five harpists in semi-circle formation, and to the left upstage were the six ballet dancers in various poses. Ensemble in Grecian costume throughout. After the tableau the singers took up Handel's "Largo" accompanied by the harps. Then came "Humoresque" by the harps while the dancers did their stuff. The third and final number of this incident was "Chansonette," with singers, harps and dancers working up to a strong finish. Lighting for this centered mainly on overhead spots of orange covering the whole number, augmented by x-rays. Arch spots from the sides were rainbow colored, and the box lamps and spots through the glass traps were color blends. Two booth Mestrums flooded the side drapes and orchestra deep violet, while the transparent columns were color blends top and bottom. The cove lights were yellow.

type letter. This was a holdover, so merely the announcement was needed. This is 211-16 wide and 3¼ deep. It tells all that is necessary, and tells it plainly.

But the star effort is the opening for Enemies of Women, which is reproduced in large size that it may be seen that even in Pittsburgh you can use line cuts if you make them properly. This seems to have been planned along the lines of the old-fashioned wood cuts, made when printing was in its infancy and general results were no better than Pittsburgh can get today.

In all of the cuts used by the theatres the open line and the solid mass replace the intricate, delicately shaded efforts that are so popular in the press book, where they are printed on nice white paper, with good ink. This is worked on cheap paper and with poor ink, and to guard against a blotch every precaution is taken. Even the lines in the background are carefully held apart. A hairline closer and they would puddle up.

This space is 7¼ by 5¼, about one-half larger than the reproduction. It stands up like a 24-sheet. We believe that if the press books carried one or two designs along similar lines, with open drawing for line and black mass instead of shading, many newspapers would find them far more useful than the present line cuts and infinitely to be preferred to the half tones.

THE LOBBY AND A FOYER DISPLAY ON THE ASHES OF VENGEANCE FROM THE PEOPLE'S, PORTLAND

The castle front is not along the usual lines and the shields for still displays add a further touch to the effect. The work is a little more trouble than the solid front, but is infinitely well worth while. The second cut shows another shield in front of a miniature stage built in a recess under one of the ramps leading to the upper floor. It's a pretty idea.

THIS AND A SIMILAR BANNER CAUGHT 100,000 PERSONS

They were carried around the field at three big football games in Boston to tell of the coming of Ponjola to the Gordon Theatre. Three crowds saw these thirty-footers, and at least half of them lived in Boston. Maps were given the visitors.

Two Banners Were Shown to 100,000

Two banners 30 feet long were painted for Ponjola at Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, Boston. These were shown to more than 100,000 persons.

One of the banners was carried around the Braves Field between the halves of the Brown-Dartmouth football game. A similar banner was used at the same time at the other ball park at another game, and one of them was brought into play at the Weymouth-Marquette game the following day. As football draws huge crowds, this was the most concentrated form of advertising, and the moving sign was not only made visible to all of the crowd, but it had a greater display value because of this motion.

Realizing that probably half of the crowd came from out of town, traffic maps showing the most direct route to the theatre from the field were handed out overprinted with "All roads lead to Ponjola," and the name of the house. With a heavy order of paper and some extensive newspaper work, Ponjola got a running start.

San Francisco Mayor Starred in Ballyhoo

Kingsmore has no corner on mayors for ballyhoos. Louis B. Mayer and his staff of trained press agents invaded San Francisco and not only landed the Mayor but the Chief of Police and the Chamber of Commerce. The reason was that a San Francisco woman had written The Valley of Content from which Pleasure Mad was taken, and so the city on the bay was selected for the premiere.

Mr. Mayer, with his family and some of the cast, went up to San Francisco where the party was met by the city officials and taken to City Hall where Mayor Rolph turned over the key of the city. They were also met by an Army Band (with a recruiting angle), and the jazz orchestra and chorus girls, in costume, from one of the cabarets.

It made a big spectacle and the chorus girls were hugely enjoyed by the large crowd.

Then they started the picture at the Warfield.

An effective ballyhoo was a wrecked car paraded through the streets with a sign to the effect that the Pleasure Mad owner had taken a six cylinder joy ride. An ambulance with a bandaged victim on the tailboard preceded the car. There was a special night at the cabaret supplying the chorus girls and an extensive set of teaser posters used before the title was established.

It was a pretty campaign and pulled them to the Warfield.

Mark This Well

George E. Brown, now conducting the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., but best known through his connection with Memphis theatres, has developed one of the best stunts yet on comedy selling.

Mr. Brown had Harold Lloyd in Why Worry and he felt that if he could demonstrate the audience approval, he could get even more business, so he went to see a concern handling radio sets. They were glad to work the stunt for him in return for the advertisement, and they ran an installation from the theatre to the heart of the business district a short distance away.

A loud speaker transmitted the laughter and a sign below told that they were laughing at Why Worry and that the work had been done by the cooperating company.

It's a wonderful stunt, but play it on the level and do not try to ring in the phonograph record. It will not be convincing. You want the laughter and the intervals.

THE FRONT AND BACK OF THE UNIVERSAL FOOTBALL CARD

This ticket was used on the Army-Navy game in New York, but you can work over the idea of the "back" and the fake ticket can always be used for some local happening. It was a big enough stunt to prove interesting to New York and made business.

Cloakey's New Gags for Merry Go Round

Getting a street stunt that required the services of twelve policemen to preserve some semblance of order was a stunt and encore worked by Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on The Merry Go Round. He had this Universal rather late, but it was new in Ottawa and he stood them on their heads.

The stunt was staged with the cooperation of a department store. They wanted to introduce their Santa Claus impersonator with more impressiveness than merely letting him hitch on his whiskers and take his place in the store, so they arranged with the Regent to let him start from there.

Friday evening, Nov. 23, the impersonator climbed out of a special chimney built on the roof of the Regent so as to be in plain view on two streets. He climbed up inside the chimney and came down the outside. The chimney was plastered with a huge sign for The Merry Go Round, which was to open the following Monday. Twelve policemen were on the job to try and keep traffic open, but they succeeded only in preventing the children from hurting themselves or each other. Traffic was tied up for more than a quarter of an hour and it was much longer than that before the street became normal again. The cops almost fell down on the job when Santa came out of the chimney for he let 200 air balloons float down into the sea of juvenile humanity and—you can guess the rest.

Saturday he was host to the children at a special performance at the Regent. He was escorted to the theatre from the store by a military band. Each child able to gain admission was given a balloon and a bag of candy. Santa gave the children a talk and after the show the band took him back to the store, where he held a reception. Provision was made for 1,600 children, but there were so many more that a repeat entertainment had to be given the following week. That was the second traffic stoppage.

The store not only supplied the balloons and candy, paid for the band and the chimney and the services of the Santa, but two of the windows were given to the stunt and the feature, and liberal space in the daily advertising was given the event. More than this, the Rotary Club was enlisted to bring children to the showing, and the bannered automobiles ballyhooed the entire city while the Fire Department put eight men on duty inside the house and staged a small parade with children riding on the apparatus. And above all this, the newspapers, which give no special theatre notices, simply had to cover the events as news.

Mr. Cloakey built the elaborate Merry Go Round shown in the cut on this page, the dolls and other trimmings being supplied by a toy concern, which supplied a number of mechanical figures as well as the doll patrons of the carousel and the ferris wheel in return for a credit card and then gave their own window display to a hook-in. The same thing was done by the electrical concern which did the elaborate wiring.

The display was shown for two weeks in advance of the showing at four stores, playing three days in each.

Direction signs were used on the roads leading into town and in the business section there were cloth signs used to edge-awnings also carrying direction arrows. This is something new, and Cloakey used enough of them to make comment.

There was also a mirrored merry-go-round on the marquee with spots playing on the mirror surfaces which reflected the light to the street. You have to see this to appreciate the effect.

There were other stunts, but these were the high lights of a campaign that was good even for Mr. Cloakey.

Got Pure Reading at Twenty Cents

Maybe you know about it, but anyhow, recently we had "apple week" and you were supposed to eat an apple a day and have apple pie for lunch and all that sort of thing.

They had it in St. Louis, along with the rest of the country, and Herschel Stuart sold the Fruit and Produce Association on the idea that a free distribution through the Missouri Theatre would mean more than merely handing out samples.

He paid $10 for some door-nobs and telephone hangers and not only got several hundred cases of apples but he won fifty-four inches of pure reading matter in connection with a live story. It was not just one story but a lot of small mentions through the week in the course of the general news story. That is better yet.

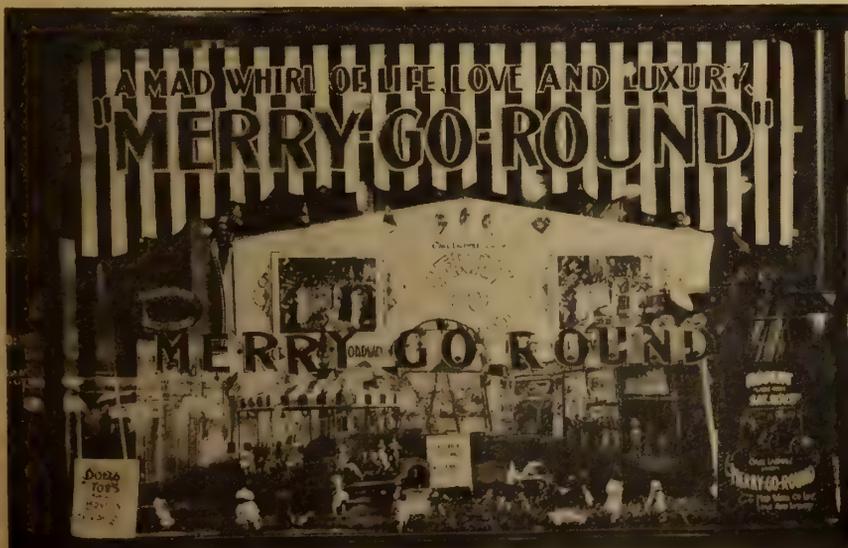

Herschel has a big house in the Missouri, and he has a large advertising allowance, but he doesn't see any use in buying what he can get for nothing. That's one of the reasons he has charge of a big house instead of a dinky 300 seater. He knows, too, that what he gets for nothing is often better than the best he can buy. You can't buy a tie in on a big local movement. You have to horn in, and Herschel and Bill Saal are a fine pair of horns.

Showed the Ages

Using the press book material on Three Ages, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Kraupa, of the Hamilton Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., got a very effective front on Buster Keaton.

A compo board fame was divided into three panels, each backed by dark cloth and in each section was a scene from one of the ages, the cave man and his woman, Buster as a Roman manicuring the lion's nails and the modern Buster amid the ruins of his Ford.

It gave the prospects some idea of what the title meant, and materially helped the sale of tickets.

THIS WINDOW DISPLAY PLAYS FOUR ENGAGEMENTS

It was booked for three-day showings in four stores, making a two weeks' advance for The Merry-Go-Round, and it got two hook-up windows from the toy store and the electricians who provided the bulk of material and wiring.

A Successful Fight Against Competition

Frank H. Burns, exploitation man for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., had a real fight on his hands when they came to play Jackie Coogan in Circus Days. There was a real circus booked in, for the tent shows are still able to play away down south, and the Shriners were going to hold a Ceremonial Session and a Shrine session is a two or three day circus, as a rule, in that section.

Between the two it looked as though it would take a lot of fighting to get them in. It did, but they came, and held the business up. Without competition the chances are that all records would have been left so far behind they never could catch up.

Manager of Theatres H. B. Vincent started in for press stories several weeks in advance and the week before the opening the two of them took off their vests and started in to fight.

Three clowns were hired and cruised around town for ten days on a bannered truck. The banner was so loud that the horn could be dispensed with. One thousand small bags were printed up with circus talk, and these were thrown out around the schools and on the business streets. The bags were too small to hold many peanuts, but at that they were not much smaller than the circus variety.

A candy store was landed on the idea that candy was needed to make circus days complete, and a toy store gave up a window large enough to contain a 24-sheet as a background for toys. They took extra large newspaper spaces to announce that all toy purchases of fifty cents or more would carry a ticket to the attraction. Christmas shopping was never before done so early in Orlando. The tickets were singles and most of them brought in one or more paid admissions.

For ten days the toy department was crowded all day while others gaped at the window, the largest display ever gained in Orlando.

The clowns of course worked the streets during the Shrine parade and a couple of days later they went up and down along the line of the circus parade, tossing out peanuts to the waiting crowds and then tailed the actual circus parade.

Business was close to the top, but did not hit the highest mark. Mr. Burns says that if any exhibitor will use the same energy without too great a competition he can hang up a mark that will show the capacity of the house to its limit.

This is the cheapest big stunt that has been recorded on this picture.

Now It's Gang Club

Utilizing the novelty hats supplied by Pathe on Our Gang comedies, the James Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, staged a parade of length and explosiveness to put over the showing of their first release of this series.

Children attending the theatre the week before were given the hats and a card stating that if they would meet at a certain corner the following Saturday morning they would be conducted to the theatre to witness the first showing. The de Molay Boys' Band was hired to supply the music, and you could hear them some of the time, though for the greater part the whoops of the excited youngsters drowned out the band. The wearing of the hat was essential, but a man was stationed at the rendezvous to supply those who had come unprepared.

phan on the theatrical page, and because it does, it gets the attention of every person who passes that page. It would have been possible to have used a scene cut, and this would have wasted about seven eighths of the cost of the display, a 75 x 2, but this simple sketch sells the reader on reading and then sells him on seeing the production. The copy is enthusiastic but temperate, and it will convince many more ticket buyers than would a slaver of superlatives. The Hunchback will draw its best trade from the better class of persons, and these would not be appealed to through a splash of —est- words. They would regard an attraction so advertised with reasonable suspicion where they will be drawn up to the box office with this appreciative but sober announcement. But the best idea is the use of the cut for attention getting. It is so different from the average that it gets first call on the reader and sells him before he can look over the rest of the page. Where space must be economized because of its large cost, skillful appeal must replace a space spread, and this cut is worth a couple of columns of the usual stuff. To be seen at its best it should be reproduced in a portion of the page, but this is not possible here, so you will have to visualize its surroundings to appreciate just how much personality it displays in its company.

Merry Go Round Is Tied to Two Pages

Although we have used little advertising on The Merry Go Round lately, this big Universal still seems to be cleaning up, though mostly it has dropped to the second and later run houses, but they show it up now and then. This double truck comes in rather belatedly from St. Louis, where it played the Missouri Theatre last September. Generally Herschel Stuart is more prompt in sending his results out. There is not a very close tie-up to the title in the various advertising displays, but they manage to get enough to make up a page and they get a better effort than can be had with the usual trade style because of the drawn design. Just how much the theatre had to pay toward this special space is not developed, but we think that very little was charged to the house. That drawn-design works for all of the cooperating advertisers and it is probable that the extra space was pro rated to them. They profit from the drawn design as much as does the house and there is no reason why they should not help the cost by paying more than for the space they actually occupy. We think that the best hook-up chance was overlooked. The dancing school says nothing about the merry go rounds they teach.

Ralph Ruffner, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., does not believe in wasting his money on full page spaces if he can make less do, and he gets all the value of the full, plus next-to-pure-reading by taking 205 lines across the page for If Winter Comes. Ruff puts it all in a brief slogan in the upper right hand corner and he does not spell hell with dashes, either. He comes right out with it, and it does not look half as bald. He plays up the fact that it was filmed in England because he is appealing to a clientele largely British, and he modestly announces that "there is not another

He gets just as good a display as though he had paid for the 40 additional inches on the page, and by keeping short he gets onto the page with the book notes, where the display will most surely be seen by all who are interested in books and therefore to be presumed to be most interested in the play. He gains two objectives with one gesture, and saves money at the same time, which is characteristic of Ruff.

Sells Ponjola on Record of the Book

Most of the selling of Ponjola at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, is done on the book. The first paragraph tells that this is taken from the Stockley story of the girl who became a man on the African veldt and then goes on to say: "If you've read the book—no need to tell you the story. If you haven't, it would spoil your enjoyment to tell you more. That seems to cover the ground very thoroughly. If you've read the book, you know, and if you haven't, there is the suggestion that you should at least not miss the picture. And all this is carried by a single cut of Miss Nilsson, most of the cut going to a touring organist, which explains the left hand cut, with the organ pipes working very nicely into the drapery design. Keeping the figure to the other side of the space and using a black shadow gives it equal distinction and still holds it from the general design. This is not as showy as some of the recent Circle sketches, but we think that it is better craftsmanship. There is more dignity to the design than the fluffy style of drawing, and at the same time it gives greater strength to the figure to isolate it from the more ornamental section.

Flaming Youth Girl Is Generally Useful

Here is another good display on Flaming Youth based on the same figure the Circle, Indianapolis, used on the same title. This seems to be the full plan book cut, which was fixed over by the Circle to get an effect more along its usual lines. By and large this form is more generally useful, since working with dark grounds is a more or less ticklish experiment. This line work is less apt to mud up and looks as though it would go through cheap work in good shape while still looking well on better paper better printed. If you will turn back to the issue for December 8 you will be able to compare this with the Circle display and note how the Circle artist built up around the press book suggestion. The artist figured that he could do no better, perhaps not as well, and he wisely took the press book figure. This display is from the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore. It entails no art work and yet it gives a fine effect. We fancy that figure will be more generally used on this title than all of the other cuts combined.

Encouraging Crime in Evansville, Ind.

Just think of offering $10 in prizes for the best singing of Yes, We Have No Bananas! It would be better to offer ten dollars not to sing it, but the Victory Theatre, Evansville, Ind., in a P. S. to its display for The Age of Desire offers $4, $3, $2 and $1 prizes to the birds who give the best rendition of this overdone selection. Perhaps the idea is to lure the unsuspecting victims onto the stage where the enraged audience can shoot at them, or perhaps the banana song was still new in Evansville when the advertisement was printed. Perhaps, but we don't think that the darned thing stayed new for as long as a week anywhere. Anyhow the idea of a song contest in which all contestants sing the same song is a variant to the usual amateur night and is passed along for the benefit of others who have to use special nights. The advertisement itself packs a terrific lot of talk for its space. It is three nines, and it carries four or five conversations without seeming to be crowded. Most of it is six point, unleaded. Someone must have dropped the slugs on the floor because the lines do not match up well. The main bank, for instance runs:

"Whatever my son is I him as a babe for the made him. I deserted luxury and riches. I

Of course the second and third lines are transposed. There is a similar drop in the paragraph for the vaudeville act. The trouble may have come from setting in corrected machine lines, but an advertiser is justified in not paying for the space, and if he holds up the bill a couple of times, this sort of thing will stop. Of course mistakes will happen now and then, and should be passed over, but no advertiser should be asked to pay for such hash, and if it is a chronic condition a hold-up will effect a cure. The chief point of interest in the display is the manner in which the cut dominates the space without detracting from the type. This is because the type lines are held to small sizes and are not permitted to fight with the attractor. A space like that with light type is worth four times the space with large letters killing off the display value of the cut. It probably will look a bit too light in the reduction, but it is a well handled display.

Got a Bonus

Four mounted men to advertise Rupert of Hentzau at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, cost Oral D. Cloakey nothing. He worked a local riding school into the Papyrus-Zev race pictures and the proprietor was so well pleased with his share of the advertisement that he gave the horses and riders free for Rupert.

That is the real secret of good exploitation. Leave them pleased and you can come back.

Coal Gold

Painting a couple of sacks of coal with gilt paint and adding a small ad for The Gold Diggers was the idea of J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas.

These fa-e nuggets were planted in doorways and other good places, and pretty soon each lump of coal was going around in the pocket of its personal press agent, who told the rest of the town. It was a tedious job, but well worth the investment of time and gold paint.

"Six Cylinder Love"

Delightful Entertainment in Fox Production of Successful Stage Comedy Dealing with Newlyweds

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

When "Six-Cylinder Love" proved such a big success on the stage there were many who saw in it great possibilities as a screen production. Among these was the Fox Film Corporation, and as a result this picture bids fair to fully live up to expectations, for it has all the ear-marks of a winner.

In the first place it is a delightful little comedy, with witty lines, the best of which have been preserved in the subtitles, a charming story rich in human interest, an excellent cast including the star, Ernest Truex, and several others who contributed to the stage success, all in a well-rounded, well-made production.

The play has been transferred bodily to the screen with only slight elaboration in the use of the greater possibilities of the screen for atmospheric effect, and with the necessary curtailment of some of the lines. However, all of the clever touches which kept the play on the New York stage for two years and made it a success on the road have been retained.

"Six-Cylinder Love" is a straight comedy through which there is an undercurrent of seriousness. It has a story which gets away from the beaten track for the most part. Never does it introduce farce or burlesque but depends on comedy situations naturally developed by the story. You will find yourself laughing aloud many times in watching this picture and smiling almost continually.

Notwithstanding the preponderance of the comedy element there is no dearth of drama, which is brought out in effective relief against the comedy background, making it more intense. The theme of the picture, which deals with newlyweds, is intensely human and will strike a responsive chord in a majority of spectators, not only in the way good-natured fun is poked at them but in the sympathy aroused for the diminutive husband who, after buying a car for his wife, finds himself getting deeper and deeper into extravagance and finally misappropriating money which belongs to another. You feel nothing but pity for the poor chap and will be delighted at the way he gets back on his feet despite obstacles.

Altogether, it is an unusually satisfying picture, tremendously true to life, that gets under the skin, for the action is extremely plausible and might happen to any of us. At the same time while it is amusing you it is putting over a good lesson, especially for the "newlyweds," of the folly of extravagance and trying to live beyond your means to make a show. It is a picture that will appeal strongly to the men and just as strongly to the women and should prove a box-office success in neighborhood as well as first-run houses. In addition to other factors, it offers excellent angles for exploitation.

Ernest Truex is ideal in the role of the young husband. His excellent work and his diminutive stature add greatly to the comedy and the arousing of sympathy and it is doubtful if anyone else could have made this part so effective. Florence Eldridge is well cast as his wife; Ralph Sipperly as the auto salesman, Berton Churchill as the hus-

Story

Richard Burton, fairly well-to-do, finds that after he has bought an auto he has acquired such expensive and sponging friends and his wife and daughter have become so socially ambitious, that he finally has to sell his home and the car. He calls in a clever auto salesman who by means of a ruse sells the car to the Sterlings, newlyweds, living next door. Gilbert Sterling inherits Burton's sponging friends, and his wife starts on a career of extravagance that ends in Gilbert "borrowing" money from his employer. Gilbert sees the light then, kicks out his worthless friends and with his wife moves into a small flat after selling his home. Finally the janitor buys the car and Gilbert is able to pay back the last of the money. His employer then gives him back his job. Gilbert's wife says that he can then buy a car for her—but not an auto, something more old-fashioned—in anticipation of a coming event.

"A Lady of Quality"

Universal Picturization of Burnett Novel With Virginia Valli Is a Beautiful Production

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Hobart Henley's screen version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's story and play is a production of great beauty. As it is one of Universal's Super-Jewels, one naturally expects a superior attraction. It assuredly is this. Pictorially it is very nearly perfect and dramatically it has the elements that appeal widely.

Virginia Valli has never had a more flattering opportunity to exploit her beauty, charm and ability. Her role is one of many moods. The early scenes show her the daughter of an English nobleman, banished by her father and raised in a stable where she learns to "outswear and outride" all the men. When her father takes her back again and she has her first love affair, a new character unfolds itself. "A Lady of Quality" emerges. The star has many effective and affecting scenes. She is beautifully gowned and always exceptionally pleasing to the eye—one of the production's strong points of appeal.

The production has a fine, commendable quality of being beautiful and rich without suggesting anything excessively showy. The castle grounds and interiors are beautiful in the extreme. But there is a marked dignity and good taste about it all.

Some may find the transformation in the heroine rather too sudden and complete to be convincing. There is such a decided break in the spirit of the picture that it is almost like two different stories. The girl's real sweetheart is introduced late in the picture and then is only lightly described. The love interest would have been stronger if more admiration and sympathy had been urged for Milton Sills, who proves to be the worth-while suitor.

But this does not mar the picture's attractiveness for average tastes. It should bring exceptionally good box-office returns because it is an exceptional picture. Hobart Henley's directing, the material beauty of the production, Virginia Valli and a fine supporting cast should mean great satisfaction anywhere.

Story

A girl, raised as a boy because her father had no son, absolutely unconventional, suddenly determines to become a lady of quality. In her new character, Clorinda Wildairs falls impulsively in love with Sir John Ozen, a brilliant Beau Brummel, lady-killer of the most unscrupulous type. In an inadvised moment she permits him to clip a lock of her hair. He gives her the cold shoulder. Later, she falls desperately in love with the Earl's kinsman, the Duke of Osmonde. Sir John Ozen, inspired by pique, holds over her head the telltale lock of hair. In a tempest of passion on both sides, an act is committed which changes the whole course of the Countess' plan of life for a happy one.

"Her Temporary Husband"

First National Farce Comedy with Sidney Chaplin Is a Regular Riot of Laughs and Fast Action

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

First National has a regular whale of a comedy in "Her Temporary Husband." Here is a picture that looks as if it were built around the slogan: "Get the laughs," and it certainly does. No matter how hard-boiled you are, even if you belong to the class who sit back and mentally dare a picture to make you laugh, this one will get you, pretty soon you will be smiling and before you know it you will be laughing aloud.

An out-and-out farce, making no pretense to being taken seriously, it starts in with the first subtitle to let you know it is all in good fun. This attitude is maintained throughout; while the action is getting under way there are snappy subtitles and humorous incidents and by-play on the part of Sidney Chaplin which keeps you in good humor. Then once the main idea begins to unfold, the action gets faster and faster, the humor more and more boisterous up to the climax which is a regular whirlwind, both from the standpoint of action and laughs.

Belonging to the type of farces based on complications due to one person being mistaken for another, this picture introduces a girl who to live up to the provisions of a will must be married within a certain time. Nothing new in this, but she goes to a home for incurables and gets an old bearded man for the job. A chap who has fallen in love with her at sight contrives to take his place after donning a beard, and in the general mix-up his valet has also to disguise as the old man. Then the fun gets fast and furious until all three of these bearded gents are darting through the house, each pursued by a chap who from motives of his own wants the genuine old man out of the way.

Finally a whole gang of thugs is brought into place and this is countered when the valet broadcasts a radio call for help from the army, navy, police, firemen, boy scouts, messenger boys, Elks, Eagles, Moose, etc., etc. Here is a situation possible of portrayal only on the screen with hundreds of soldiers, sailors, and the other groups and apparently thousands of civilians are shown converging on the house. This climax is a riot from every angle. Then on top of that, with no let-down in interest, the manner in which the conspirators are spirited away by the valet and given what's coming to them, brings another round of laughs.

The majority of the responsibility for laughs falls on Sidney Chaplin as a boozeloving valet who is the goat all through the picture, and he is excellent, and especially fine is a scene in which he tries to tell the hero in pantomime what the gang is going to do to him. Owen Moore is well cast as the hero and Tully Marshall as the real old man, with Sylvia Bremer as the girl and Chuck Reisner as a tough.

Everybody enjoys a good laugh. "Her Temporary Husband" is crammed full of them and should prove a great big box-office winner, so don't overlook it.

Story

Blanche, according to her aunt's will, must get married in twenty-four hours to a wealthy man in order to inherit the property. She arranges with a home for incurables to furnish an old man with whiskers who should not live very long. Thomas Burton, a wealthy chap, sees Blanche and it is love at first sight. Learning of the plan, he disguises himself with whiskers and takes the old man's place and marries Blanche. Then a general mixup begins in Blanche's home in which a chap who wishes to marry her, and the old man's secretary, who wants to get his money, plan to kill the old gent and enlist the aid of a tough guy. During the action Burton's valet, Judd, disguises as the old man, while Burton appears as his nephew. The real old man appears and finally great confusion is caused by there being three old men on the scene. Finally when the tough calls for his gang, Judd sends a radio to the army, navy, police, firemen, Elks and many others, and the whole mob descends on the scene. The gang is captured, Burton explains his deception and Blanche agrees to accept her temporary husband as a permanent one.

"The Dangerous Maid"

New Constance Talmadge Feature for First National Has Unusual Amount of Drama

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Seventeenth century intrigue in England furnishes a thrilling and picturesque background in Constance Talmadge's new picture. It is excellent audience entertainment. In book form, the story was entitled "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," and concerns the political adventures of a fiery and romantic maid which will appeal strongly to the average fan.

While light comedy touches are generously scattered, the general style is more serious than the usual Constance Talmadge feature. The dramatic character of the period means considerable suspense. To the conflict between the rebels and King James' forces, the heroine's defiant attitude adds great zest.

The personal note is always paramount. Entertainment is the first consideration, as the historical quality is negligible and the box-office angle is never forgotten.

At the same time the customs and costumes of the day give the drama a colorful background. Curled wigs and gay doublets suggest the luxurious fashions. The star is charmingly gowned and her scenes in the disguise of a boy are among the most interesting and exciting of all. The photography is excellent and the settings, particularly the village exteriors, are notable.

Director Victor Heerman has succeeded in keeping the action bright and absorbing. Conway Tearle is attractively cast as Captain of the King's forces and Marjorie Daw is pretty in a minor role. A number of other characterization bits help to make the picture interesting.

"Reno"

Goldwyn Comedy Drama Pokes Fun at the Variety of Divorce Laws and Has Splendid Melodramatic Climax Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett.

They have lots of fun laughing at the wide variety between the divorce laws of the various states in the Goldwyn picture "Reno." It ridicules the ease with which a divorce may be obtained in some states and the impossibility of getting one in others. It depicts the comedy complications which follow the man and woman divorced in one state, not divorced in another, and how a man by crossing a state line may suddenly find himself a bigamist.

It also pokes fun at the way in which some of the present generation of husbands acquire and shed wives, and how wives change their husbands at the slightest whim. But all the while you are laughing at the complications caused by the divorces issued in Reno and considered differently in other states, you feel that underneath there is a strain of real purpose to show how the laws which have been made to correct an evil are really adding to the immorality of the nation, and a suggestion for a law which will apply equally to every state.

Starting out as a lively comedy drama, the picture has an unusually melodramatic ending, which answers the call for something decidedly new in pictures. Amid picturesque shots of the natural wonders of Yellowstone Park are introduced dramatically thrilling scenes of a fight between the two husbands of the same woman, ending in the one being thrown into the boiling pool of a geyser, and then the body tossed high into the air by the force of the spouting geyser and crushed upon the rocks below.

Most of the action is just good fun but in an effort for contrast there has been introduced scenes with a dash of the risqué which may shock some patrons, as for instance the passionate love scene between Emily Tappan and Walter Heath; also the idea of the no-divorce law in South Carolina could have been more pleasantly shown than by having the husband crush his wife's fingers in the clothes wringer and otherwise abuse her.

It is an exceptionally good box office attraction. The title will attract in the first place, there are plenty of opportunities for laughter, a strong and unusual climax and the whole enacted by a cast which contains any number of names which are good for publicity purposes.

"The Miracle Makers"

Leah Baird's Latest Production for Associated Exhibitors Has Novelty and Suspense

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In her latest production, "The Miracle Makers," Leah Baird offers another dependable box-office attraction. It is a well planned picture, calculated to give the public a popular blending of melodrama, romance and serious drama. The star's performance in a womanly role is sincere and moving.

A new situation is pictured—the smuggling of Chinese boys who have been turned down by the immigration department. This successfully introduces a moment of suspense when the girl saves the human cargo from being thrown overboard because a sea-plane is patrolling overhead.

A forced marriage to a loathsome seaman is the tragic note. While Miss Baird's dramatic work and Richard Headrick, one of the screen's most adorable children, will bring a sympathetic response, this will not hinder some from criticizing the situation as unrealistic. It is hard to believe that any girl would prefer to face the humiliation of bringing up her son without a name rather than to tell the truth—that her husband is a convict. But few could handle this situation more effectively than the star. She is well acquainted with screen values and gives the public enough that is worth while in this picture to atone for some implausibility.

Mitchell Lewis as the heavy, George Walsh as the lead and George Nichols as the girl's father are finely cast. The big fight between Lewis and Nichols arouses unusual human interest because of the difference in the ages of the characters. The villain's death might have been managed in a less melodramatic way. The disposal of him by having him fall down the well approaches burlesque.

"Lucretia Lombard"

Excellent Box-Office Appeal in Warner Brothers' Production Offered with Choice of Two Titles
 Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Here is a picture that comes to the exhibitor with a choice of titles as Warner Brothers are releasing it under the title of the book on which it is based, "Lucretia Lombard," and also under the alternate box-office title of "Flaming Passion." A full line of paper and accessories have been prepared for each title.

Adapted from a widely-read up-to-date novel by the popular author, Kathleen Norris, this picture should prove a big box-office attraction and a money maker in the majority of theatres. It has a story that is interesting throughout with many dramatic situations and a lot of human interest. The production is well-made, capably acted and finely photographed, and in addition to all this there is an unusually thrilling and effective climax, combining drama and melodrama, with a big forest fire, and a flood which sweeps the heroine and her rival from a high trestle into a raging torrent.

The story is based on the intense love of a woman who is married to a dissolute old roue and a man who against his will finds himself engaged to a woman he does not love. It is a pure love, however, and while the depth of their love is brought out there is nothing risqué, or of questionable propriety in the film. The story is finely developed and right at the start arouses your interest and sympathy, and is dramatic enough to make it a worth-while attraction even without the thrilling climax.

The leading roles of Lucretia Lombard and Stephen Winship are finely portrayed by two favorites who have been seen in several other Warner Brothers' successes, Irene Rich and Monte Blue. Irene Rich is particularly well cast in a type of role that she has shown she can handle expertly, one in which the dramatic appeal is enhanced by restrained emotion, a woman who sees no chance for the fulfillment of an almost overpowering love. Monte Blue is also well suited to his role which calls for restrained emotion. In fact it is this element of intense love facing a situation with apparently no happy solution that gives the picture its great strength and appeal.

The excellent acting in this picture is not confined to the feature players, for Alec B. Francis comes in for his share as Stephen's father, a minister, while Marc McDermott gives a fine portrayal of Lucretia's husband, and Norma Shearer is well cast as the other woman. She is vivacious and peppy in the lighter moments and effective and realistic in the more serious ones.

Sir Allen soon pays the price for his riotous living and, confined to a wheel chair, craves drugs. Through a ruse he gets Lucretia to give him an opiate that causes death. Lucretia is accused but Stephen Winship, the district attorney, absolves her of blame. It is a case of love at first sight between Stephen and Lucretia and despite the fact that against his will Stephen is engaged to his father's ward, Mimi, they are attracted to each other. Stephen's father, the Reverend Winship, is shot and at his request Stephen marries Mimi, believing Lucretia does not love him. Lucretia, however, has gone away with his brother Fred to help him out of a difficulty. A forest fire occurs and Lucretia in trying to save Mimi takes refuge on a bridge which is washed away by a bursting dam. Stephen saves the two but Mimi is so injured she dies, leaving Stephen to Lucretia.

"The Shepherd King"

Fox Screen Version of the Biblical Story of David Is a Dramatic and Spectacular Production

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Fox Film Corporation is offering "The Shepherd King," an adaptation of the stage play of the same title, by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, based on the well known Biblical story of David. It has been handled in a reverent manner throughout and while furnishing entertainment for the masses should appeal particularly to the vast majority of patrons who are familiar with the story.

It is a big production and one that is more forceful from an entertainment standpoint than the majority of pictures of this type. In filming it, Director J. Gordon Edwards and his staff spent more than a year in Palestine, Egypt and Jerusalem. As a result not only were interesting scenic effects secured, such as those showing the Jews leaving Egypt, with the pyramids and sphinx in the background, but striking shots silhouetted against beautiful cloud effects. Due to the atmospheric conditions, some of the photography is remarkably beautiful. But overshadowing this is the fact that the action all takes place in what is said to be the identical surroundings called for in the Bible.

The picture also takes rank as one of the big spectacles of the screen, for in addition to the effective use of the natural surroundings there are tremendous and exceptionally realistic sets representing the palace and court-yard of the Hebrew King, through which surge hundreds of men in the big scenes. There are also many big battle scenes in which large bodies of men, hundreds of them on horseback and all effectively costumed, are employed to advantage.

In such surroundings is enacted the stirring story of David's rise from shepherd boy to king, which has been handled in an effective manner, the strongly dramatic character of the story has been brought out forcefully and it holds your attention. We follow David through his career, including the slaying of the giant Goliath and his battles with the Philistines until he becomes the king, while all through the story is woven his romance with the Princess Michal.

It is a well made production that commands attention. With the exception of Violet Mersereau, in the role of the young princess, the entire cast is composed of foreign players. Edy Darclae in the vamping role of the other princess has been seen in foreign productions; the others are unfamiliar to American audiences and are practically all Italians. Especially good is the work of the actor portraying David, who has a strong note of sincerity in his work; the actor portraying the king also gives a commendable performance and the others in the cast are adequate.

One cause of complaint among the exhibitors who write to us is that often they cannot obtain the ideas for their own use that producers use for the covers of their press books. One typical letter states:

"Why is it that producers always seem to use the best illustrations and cuts in advertising their picture to the exhibitor, and he is unable to get that cut at his exchange? It seems to me that if an idea is good enough for a

I wouldn't kick if it were always possible to reproduce the cover, but these colored covers, as you know, usually are either too difficult or too expensive to reproduce to make it practical.

It seems to me that if a press-book cut is good enough for the average exhibitor it ought to be good enough for the producer; vice versa, if the producer thinks his big-city advertising is good, he ought to put it in his press books for the exhibitor.

SILENT COMMAND. Star, Edmund Lowe. A hip, hip, hooray! flag-waving picture that is all right and just about a shade better than program stuff. It won't stand dissection by any critical audience, and you want to go light on your promises, for it won't make good on too strong exploitation. First day, fine; second day, sad. The local critics claimed it "didn't ring true" and the fight on the ship at sea got more laughs than any other part of the film, and it was not intended to be a comedy scrap. You have great material here to work with from an advertising angle; hence my caution to go slow and see it for yourself ere booking, that may have a lot to do with your purchase price if you're not handicapped by local conditions. Heralds and mailing list gave, for the two days, poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

STRENGTH OF PINES. (4,382 feet). Star, William Russell. Any exchange should be ashamed to take good money for such a print; and we are paying almost double for Fox stuff. This was a very good picture when it was a five-reeler, but now (from this print) it's not a four-reeler. Some of my people went out asking me, "What's the matter with that picture?" Well—this one is sure "cut" and dried. If you can't get a good print lay off of this one; don't use it, it will do you harm. We wired for another picture for the second day showing. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Goldwyn

CHRISTIAN. (8,000 feet). Featured cast. Did not go over very good for us. For the price we paid should have received a better print. Cracked sprocket holes, six misframes and parts cut out. Nuff said! Attendance fair. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (403 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

REMEMBRANCE. (5,650 feet). Star, Claude Gillingwater. A good home life picture but the patrons have been fed up on this stuff so long that they are growing weary of it and as a result the S. R. O. sign was not taken down and dusted off. It is still in the attic where it was placed several months ago. Nothing wrong with the picture as no one kicked. Pa gets the credit in this one. Has fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Featured cast. A very fine picture. Pleased one hundred per cent. Be sure and book this one. Had good attendance. Admission 10-35. Town of 5,000. N. Russell, Russell Theatre, Barnesboro, Pennsylvania.

SPOILERS. (8,028 feet). Star, Milton Sills. One of the best pictures I ever ran. Any exhibitor that wants a real honest to goodness "he man" picture should book it now. Attendance, house record. Draw country class in town of 8,000. C. L. Hackworth, Grand Theatre, Huntsville, Alabama.

SOULS FOR SALE. (7,864 feet). Star cast. Patrons liked it better than "Hollywood." Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

Between Ourselves

*A get-together place where
we can talk things over*

The bad print evil has been discussed from about every angle.

The cure rests with the exhibitor—solely.

It's natural with an exchange manager to "get away with it" as long as all he gets is kicks.

But when his salesmen trail the bad prints and come in with the story of exhibitors who state that they're not taking any, thank you—such and such prints were on the bum and there are other exchanges in their territory that are delivering what the exhibitor pays for—then things may begin to change for the better.

Every exhibitor ought to sit down and write courteously to the producer after running a bad print, explaining exactly how and why it was unfit to run. This would help. The producer doesn't want to spend thousands advertising his pictures and let some poor print ruin his future sales and destroy the effects of his advertising.

Tell him and tell the salesman.

PEG O' MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. This play, book, author and story are so well known your feature is sold to the public as soon as you post your first advertising. Saw many new faces, and, judging by the laughter and interest in the screen, I know they were pleased. It is a light Irish comedy drama, but a distinct and refreshing change from the eternal triangle situations that are so common in pictures today. The price was right and I showed this at regular admission to full houses in spite of unfavorable weather. A fine attraction for Sunday. Used slide, boards, window cards and mailing list. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

SOUL OF THE BEAST. (5,300 feet). Star cast. A good outdoor picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

THREE AGES. (5,251 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Little less than a knockout. Continual flashbacks weakened continuity, but has everything to please and did please ninety-five per cent. Second night better attended than first at raised admissions. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw mixed classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harvey, Strand and Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville and Dixon, California.

WHERE THE PAVEMENT ENDS. (7,706 feet). Star cast. Sure wish we had not played this one, Sunday. It is too rough.

We can't understand how this picture ever received a good comment, but it has in several places. It was not liked here. Not any some at all. Moral tone not good and not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance first day. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Paramount

HEART RAIDER. (5,705 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Dandy picture. Different, cute, fast and entertaining. The folks will come out saying, "Twas a fine picture." "Mr. Manager we are well pleased. Made us all feel young again. Full of pep, ambition, and sauer kraut." Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Not his best, but a very good Meighan vehicle and if this star means anything to you, get behind it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Cash in on it, boys. Paramount is fair about rental, too. I wish we had more Meighans in the business. The picture has plenty of action and is human. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). A picture that should satisfy any audience. Plenty of action and some very good comedy. Ran it two days and did a fine business. Don't fail to book this one. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had large attendance. Draw general class in town of 4,000. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, Jewett City, Connecticut.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Of all the Peter B. Kyne stories that have been transferred to the screen I've never seen a poor one. The star is surrounded by a good cast. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

IMPOSSIBLE MRS. BELLEW. (7,155 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best Swanson feature I have used. It pleased them all. Owing to fairs and unfavorable weather the attendance was poor, but it was no fault of the picture. A good picture for any day. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. This was a fifty-fifty picture as far as being entertainment for our audience. It was well acted and cast but they don't like this kind here. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JAVA HEAD. (7,865 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A story of old Salem, a Chinese maiden and an American sailor. Have read some adverse reports on this but considered it a fine picture. Albert Roscoe, Jacqueline Logan, Leatrice Joy and Raymond Hatton are splendid. Had good attendance. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. Fine attraction in every respect but box office picture in our town. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charleston, Illinois.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. A fair picture which did not please but about sixty per cent. Some will probably like it and others will not care for it at all. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LAWFUL LARCENY. (6,237 feet). Star cast. A sterling drama of tangled lives, of a husband who falls into the merciless net of another woman, of a wife who adopts the other woman's weapons in her winning fight for happiness. The picture is well worth seeing. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Pleasing production for usual patrons who attended. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Will please, especially if they care for pictures of this type. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. A pleasing little program picture along the lines of "The Dictator." Pleased practically everyone on a Saturday. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MY AMERICAN WIFE. (6,061 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Good. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Everybody liked this one. This one is one of the good ones of the "Super 39." Meighan is a steady drawing card for us. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Everybody satisfied. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

NOBODY'S MONEY. (5,584 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Fairly good entertainment for our audience. Would class it as a good program picture. Holt has fairly good drawing power for us. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star cast. Picture very good and pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A very fine production that received lots of praise here. Wish we had more as good. This one should have been the special, for in reality it is far better than any of the Paramount specials with possibly the exception of "Manslaughter." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. A rather above the average picture that seemed to give good satisfaction. Nothing big or startling but thoroughly satisfactory. Moral tone O. K., but is a little rough for Sunday showing. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-600 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An excellent picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

SIXTY CENTS AN HOUR. (5,632 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Good, lively comedy that caused no kicks. Better than "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," but Hiers lacks a great deal of being a star. He is just a good comedian with a fat, pudgy face. Has O. K. moral tone and will do for Sunday. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-24, 15-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SNOW BRIDE. (6,000 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Our second Brady. Drew better than her first. It proved fair entertainment for our audience. We are having fairly good success with Paramount pictures. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star cast. Zane Grey story. One of the best stories of its kind ever shown here. A bit slow in the last three reels. Scenery simply wonderful. Get behind it and boost it. Has good moral tone, but is not suitable for Sunday. F. M. Francis, Lincoln Theatre, Charlestown, Illinois.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. This picture went over on Sunday in good shape, it is exceptionally well done; a mountain story which means a certain amount of action. Moreno and Ernest Torrence are to be depended upon any place they are cast. Minter has slipped, believe she cooked herself when she "slopped" over in the Taylor case and her row with her mother. Anyway the audience comments panned her personally, but not the picture. Draw all types, in town of 2,965. Admission 10-22. Arthur Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

TRAVELING ON. (6,267 feet). Star, William S. Hart. A very good picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is a good picture, but just a little too long, but the picture pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Good. Business good. Patrons satisfied. A real picture. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw oil field patronage in town of 2,500. Admission 10-30. C. A. Runyon, Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

Giving Credit Where It Is Due

"We have been reading the Straight From the Shoulder reports for some time and find they are very helpful.

"We never yet have had a poor print from Metro and have never had a better one from any other company.

"The cleaning and inspection service of Metro is great."—Benson & Landman, Town Hall, South Londonderry, Vermont.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,131 feet). Star Betty Compson. Fair program picture that pleased the majority. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

WISE FOOL. (6,768 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. A very good picture, which should please all seeing it. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good program picture. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A picture that will hold the attention of the audience throughout. Poor title. Fair moral tone. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance of better class in town of 7,200. Admission 10-22-28. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre (500 seats), Greenville, Ohio.

Pathe

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. The last word in superb moving pictures. Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" unexcelled and unrivalled by any character ever appearing on the screen, or ever will appear on the screen. With both fear and mirth mixed at the same time and gripping the observer with rapture as well as dread, is entertained as never before, throughout the seven long reels of the best picture ever produced, and will equal any picture yet to come. It is one of the funniest and most entertaining pictures shown on the screen. The picture is a hair raiser and side splitting comedy well worth seeing, in which Harold Lloyd will be seen at his best, and any one failing to see this wonderful picture, will certainly miss an excellent treat, so by all means use it and your talk will do the rest. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Preferred

VIRGINIAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. A very good picture, a most capable cast and well directed. Possibly not quite as good as the exchanges think; be careful. Exploitation, talking up the Owen Wister novel, and with a mailing list you will play this to a box office advantage. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Selznick

RUPERT OF HENTZAU. (9,400 feet). Star cast. Our patrons have "struck" on us with costume pictures. We are avoiding all costume or period dramas for a month, too many are being made. Eighty-five per cent of the American picture patrons want American stories. Moral tone fine and is suitable for Sunday. Had very, very poor attendance. Draw family and railroad class in town of 7,750. Admission 10-25, specials 10-35, supers 10-50. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

QUICKSANDS. (6,541 feet). Star cast. A picture that will please everybody who is human. It keeps the audience thrilled from beginning to end. Draw all classes. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

United Artists

MOLLYCODDLE. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This one is old, but pleased better than "The Three Musketeers." We received an excellent print on this one, in fact, the best we have received from United Artists. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Just what the title implies. This picture sure gets them going. They scream their heads off. Advertising slants, ghosts, storm scene stuff. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (11,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Very good picture that satisfied; what more can you ask for? Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw best class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

Universal

DRIVEN. (5,400 feet). Star cast. A dramatic offering well acted. The story is not particularly appealing, but it is well done. Print was in fine shape. Had fair attendance. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This is a fair program picture, but by no means a special. Patrons considered it satisfactory entertainment. Fair attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

MEN IN THE RAW. (4,313 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A real western feature and something different. Moral tone fair, but not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,178 feet). Star cast. Boost this and boost hard. A splendid picture, but must be worked on. Don't pay too much for it as it won't get the money unless you have every known way to exploit it. Moral tone alright and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfro, Dream Theatre (600 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

MERRY-GO-ROUND. (9,178 feet). Star cast. Fine picture. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and railroad town class in town of 7,750. J. E. Alford, Jacob's Theatre, McComb, Mississippi.

NOBODY'S BRIDE. (4,861 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A very good picture. Pleased ninety per cent. Rawlinson is a good star for us, also Miss Lake. You can buy it right. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers and from town of 150. Admission 10-20, specials 10-25. Jack Synder, Casino Theatre (285 seats), Richmond, Iowa.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Tie up this one; not much of a story, but it is a great Gibson success. You will laugh from start to finish. Good as

Suitable for Sunday

Watch it, boys. The exhibitor who runs on Sunday depends on you to tell him whether a picture is suitable for Sunday.

Weigh this carefully. It would be a shame to let a brother book in a film for the Sabbath that would hurt his house prestige—but it would be just as big a shame as well as unfair to a picture, to vote "no" hastily.

some of the big specials. Good moral tone. Attendance good. Draw all classes, town of 900. Admission 10-20. C. E. Robinson, Town Hall (300 seats), Carmel, Maine.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (7,785 feet). Star, Rockliffe Fellows. Pleased them all. Good comedy mixed in this picture. You can't go wrong with this one. Used photos, paper, program. Had good attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

THRILL CHASER. Star, Hoot Gibson. A fair picture; nothing to brag about. If Universal wants to make anything out of Gibson they will have to put him in the things that he belongs in. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 14,000. Admission 10-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

Vitagraph

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Another one that made me money. Good. Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star, Earl Williams. A very good picture and a good buy. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

ONE STOLEN NIGHT. (4,900 feet). Star, Alice Calhoun. A fair program picture; should please mostly all of Miss Calhoun's followers. Print in good shape. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH. (7,156 feet). Star cast. Wish to let brother exhibitors know to keep off this one. Vitagraph has no right to put out stuff of this kind and charge high rentals for it. The actors' acting and story, just fierce. No intelligent audience could be likely to sit through it. S. L. Taylor, Kozy Theatre, Pass Christian, Mississippi.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star cast. Not fit to be shown in any first class theatre. Showed one performance and pulled it off. A disgrace to the industry. Moral tone poor. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Great for us, fine business and satisfied patrons for three days with vaudeville. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

LITTLE CHURCH AROUND THE CORNER. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A picture that holds heart interest, teaching a good moral. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw ranchers and townspeople in town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MAIN STREET. (8 reels). Star cast. Picture gave complete satisfaction, both to the public and at the ticket office. One of the best money-getters we have run this fall. Temple Theatre, Ilion, New York.

MAIN STREET. (8,000 feet). Star cast. I think it the duty of every exhibitor, especially small town men, to show their patrons this one as it is so true to life. It's a shame to miss it. Pleased one hundred per cent. and made friends for my houses. Drew extra well. Clean, but a better middle week picture than for Sunday. Just think, boys, comedy, drama, tragedy and everything. The heart's desires all in one. Play it by all means. Draw mixed classes in town of 1,800. Admission 10-30, 25-50. J. A. Harvey, Strand and Palace Theatres (500 seats), Vacaville and Dixon, California.

Comedies

BIRTHDAY CAKE AND JUNGLE PETS. (Chester Comedy). This picture is one continuous scream in the second reel. A real knockout; if you have a chance to get it don't fail to do so. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith's Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

BROKE. (Educational). Nothing to it but a good print and good photography. Would make a fairly good comedy for a "blind" man. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. B. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

CHAMPION. (Pathe). Another screamy picture of "His Rascals." They are all good for the grown-ups, as well as the youngsters. If you have never run any of these comedies buy one and be convinced. Draw mostly factory class in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25, 17-30. David W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CRASH. (Educational). This single reel was undoubtedly good when the print was all there, but the print I received was badly cut. What there was of it called out some hearty laughs. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

DETECTIVE. (Vitagraph). This is better than most of his comedies. This one is something on the order of Larry Semon comedies. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

EASTER BONNETS. (Educational). Here's a clever comedy of the refined type. There's nothing objectionable in it as one finds in so many comedies and everybody seems to thoroughly enjoy it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. J. E. Madsen, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

FRIEND HUSBAND. (Paramount). This comedy had never before played here and the print was brand new and had more than the usual amount of laughs of the comedies today. The price was the most reasonable film rental I have ever paid. You couldn't really ask for anything more, could you?

Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

GET OUT AND GET UNDER. (Pathe). Harold reveals a "full house" again. You could charge fifty cents and if Lloyd was "Hitting" alright you'd be safe to meet your patrons afterwards. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

MY MISTAKE. (Crescent). Only fair comedy. Have seen better, but at that, it's very good. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

OUR GANG COMEDIES. (Pathe). Very pleasing type of comedy. Attracts all the children. Draw average small town class. Use one sheets. Good attendance. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

ROARING LIONS ON A STEAMSHIP. (Fox). This Sunshine Comedy has the previous "Lion" comedies beat by a mile. Played with "Penrod" and had our audience in a splendid mood for the long eight reeler that followed. Has good moral tone; it depends on the locality whether it is suitable for Sunday. Attendance S. R. O. Draw factory class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SMALL TOWN IDOL. (First National). Good comedy with Turpin at his best. Pleased a good sized audience. Made the high-brows laugh and drew all classes. Had excellent attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,100. Admission 10-25. Joe Kinneaster, Mystic Theatre (300 seats), Clovis, California.

SPEEDER. (Educational). Very good comedy. Lots of laughs, many of them supplied by Hamilton's facial expressions and his manner of walking. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

STAGE HAND. (Vitagraph). One of Larry Semon's good comedies that pleased a good patronage. The monkey is some actor and he sure knows his "stuff." Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

WEAK END PARTY. (Pathe-Stan Laurel). Good. Lots of laughs. Draw farmers and townspeople in town of 800. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Serials

HAUNTED VALLEY. (Pathe). Started off the best of any serial I ever ran and wound up with the smallest attendance. Runyon Theatre, Barnsdall, Oklahoma.

OREGON TRAIL. (Universal). This serial is holding up wonderful. Seems to please all. Good attendance whenever I run it. Admission 15-55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (499 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

RUTH OF THE RANGE. (Pathe). Star, Ruth Roland. This is a very good serial, but not as good as "Haunted Valley," her former serial. For a western serial you won't go wrong by booking it. But don't depend on it too much. Moral tone ordinary. Not suitable for Sunday. Had ordinary attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,200. Admission 20-30. C. P. Alford, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Spring Hope, North Carolina.

Short Subjects

DEVIL'S FOOT. (Educational). This is first of Sherlock Holmes series. Patrons liked it well. Think they will help my Saturday business. Had good attendance. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. This is the best news reel by test for us. Our patrons like this news reel and we have been using it for two years. Draw better class in town of 4,500. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE DISASTER. (Paramount). Just a repetition of news reel scenes. Wouldn't play it if you run a news reel. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SECOND SERIES LEATHER PUSHERS. (Universal). Just as good as first series and drawing power better. Used extra advertising. Had good attendance. Draw transient patronage. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS. (Pathe). Have used the Federated, Universal and now the Pathe series of Snapshots. Never yet played a bad one. In my opinion best single reel on market. M. Oppenheimer, Lafayette Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

State Rights

ACROSS THE BORDER. (Aywon). Star, Big Boy Williams. (5 reels). Satisfactory, if they like westerns. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

BIG STAKES: (East Coast Productions). Star, J. B. Warner. (4,700 feet). Good picture which took very well with our audience. Supporting cast was good. Mexican jumping bean scene well done and novel. Advertising slants, Mexican border and Mexican bean angle. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

HOMEWARD TIDE. (Sanford Productions). Star, Pete Morrison. A fair program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TEMPORARY MARRIAGE. (Principal). (7,050 feet). Star, Mildred Davis (Mrs. Harold Lloyd). Consider this a splendid picture. Critics all praised picture, saying, however, that Maude George and Tully Marshall steal the picture, especially in the court room scene, which is the best one since "Madame X." Had an interested few guests, lawyers, judges, sheriff; all declared the picture excellent, one which all mothers and daughters should see. (Note: Mr. Charninsky sent a mighty strong review and some press interviews with the men he mentions, but we can't get room to print these. —Ed.) S. Charninsky, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

VALLEY OF LOST SOULS. (5 reels). Star cast. Mediocre picture with unknown players. Films in good condition, however, but picture failed to satisfy. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 400. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Novel Number for Brooklyn House

The Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre is creating much new musical interest through the novel methods employed by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman in tagging the instrumental and vocal end of his programs. No small amount of this aroused interest is due to the feminine chorus of eighteen, and the "orchestra within an orchestra" which has materialized as a result of the popularity of symphonized jazz numbers. The Mark Strand Little Symphonized Jazz Orchestra is made up of ten pieces, all playing in the regular orchestra in addition to being featured upon the presentation stage and in radio concerts.

Laurette Taylor Film Progressing

Robert W. Sherwood, motion picture critic of the New York Herald, in his recently published book, "The Best Moving Pictures of 1923-1924," is said to assign the Metro picture version of "Peg o' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor in her original role among the ten best pictures of that season. Miss Taylor left New York for Hollywood recently to appear in the Metro picturization of two of her other great stage successes, "Happiness" and "One Night in Rome." Of these "Happiness" is already well into production under the direction of King Vidor.

Hunting in New York for Material

Within the next fortnight Ralph Block, former New York dramatic critic and more recently supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky, will leave for New York to negotiate with theatrical producers for the screen rights to a number of current stage successes, which he plans to picturize and direct for next season. Block has spent more than a year with Famous, during which period he adapted twenty popular stories, books and plays.

A Boost

Mae Tinee, motion picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, has named two of the Warner Classics on her list of the twelve best pictures shown during the month of October. The photoplays are: "Where the North Begins," starring Rin-tin-tin, the famous police dog hero, and the screen adaptation of the successful David Belasco play, "The Gold Diggers," featuring Hope Hampton.

Hard-Boiled Cincinnati Succumbsto 'Hunchback'

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened its Cincinnati engagement at the Cox Theatre November 18. Long before the performance began long lines stood in front of the box office. It was necessary to hang out the "sold out" sign, standing room not being permitted in Cincinnati. Cincinnati audiences are known the country over as being hard-boiled.

The Enquirer said: "Fifty-seven adjectives were used by the New York critics in describing this production. After seeing it one is inclined to wonder how they could have restricted themselves to that number. However, one adjective might suffice if necessary and that is 'stupendous.'" The Post remarked: "As we left the theatre the manager asked how we liked this show, and all we could do was to strive in vain to find words to describe just how fine we found this spectacle to be."

The Commercial Tribune said: "In the past two years the screen has not offered as fine an example of its art as we find in 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' During that time it has been our privilege to see all the so-called super specials and while several of them, 'The Covered Wagon,' 'Orphans of the Storm' and 'Fairbanks in Robin Hood' compare favorably with this latest Universal offering they do not touch the same high note of artistry. To us it stands as one of the greatest achievements of the screen." The Times-Star summed up with these words: "A big hit."

Detroit Exhibitor and Critics Laud Ray Film

The following telegram, received by J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, from John H. Kunsky, Detroit exhibitor, on the day following the opening of the Detroit run of Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," states: "The Courtship of Myles Standish" opened to the largest Sunday business ever done at the Madison Theatre during the seven years it has been in operation. Public and press delighted. I look for a wonderful week. You are to be congratulated."

The Detroit News said: "The movie replica of the vessel that carried the earliest pioneers of religious liberty from England to the bleak and wintry coast of Massachusetts rightfully earns most of the attention because it is without doubt one of the screen's greatest achievements in 'set' construction."

The Detroit Free Press commented: "Charles Ray's latest screen play, 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' is the most lavish and costly he has ever made, and shows the star in an entirely new role."

The Times observed: "This historical drama is the only picture Mr. Ray ever made which really takes him entirely out of the rustic character he has made famous."

High Class Patronage Won by Pathe Picture

Letters addressed to the Yale University Press offices in New York show that the "Chronicles of America" series, now being distributed by Pathe, is doing remarkably effective missionary work for the screen in general. These letters, coming from persons outside the industry and bearing, in many instances, signatures of persons prominent in professional walks of life, indicate that this Pathe series of historical dramas is drawing to motion picture theatres in all sections of the country people who have never or seldom patronized the screen as a medium of entertainment.

Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in referring this week to this great body of letters being received from admirers of the "Chronicles of America" series, points out particularly that this new class of patrons being won for the screen are evidently people of discriminating tastes and of the type that it would be well for motion picture exhibitors to make permanent members of their audiences.

Griffith Film Gets Recruits for Army

Still in the process of filming, D. W. Griffith's forthcoming screen spectacle, "America," which he is making at the request of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is already winning recruits for the U. S. Army.

"America," is said to be the first dramatic photoplay ever used for army recruiting purposes, and according to the figuring of army officials will have aided in increasing the personnel of U. S. fighting forces long before it is placed on public exhibition.

Photographs taken by army cameramen during the filming of scenes are being used in an intensive campaign now being conducted by the army recruiting service.

Cordial Co-operation

Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers of "Sea-Tracks of the Speejacks 'Round the World," by Dale Collins, one of the co-voyagers of Commodore A. Y. Gowen on his round-the-world motor boat cruise, has written all its dealers advising them to co-operate with all exhibitors showing the Paramount picture, "Around the World in the Speejacks," in joint exploitation of the book and film.

Critics Flatter

Goldwyn's Tod Browning production of "The Day of Faith," from Arthur Somers Roche's novel of that name, was shown at the Capitol Theatre this week and proved very popular with the big audiences which saw it on Sunday. The film reviewers on the New York newspapers had many flattering things to say of the production, of Eleanor Boardman, the leading player, and other members of the cast.

Warners' Xmas Gift

"The Country Kid" is being used extensively all over the country as a Christmas week attraction, say the Warner Brothers.

This picture opens at the Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston, Mass., for the entire week of December 23, and for the same week at the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I. The Star Theatre at Manchester has "The Country Kid" also for the week beginning December 24.

"The Ten Commandments" Has Brilliant Premiere in Hollywood

Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Ten Commandments," had its world premiere at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood Tuesday night. For the producer, for Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the story of the picture, and for Sid Grauman, who had the honor of first presenting the production to the public, the occasion was an unprecedented triumph.

The audience, which packed the theatre to its doors and which included one of the most brilliant and representative gatherings of motion picture and society notables Los Angeles had ever known, had paid $5.50 per seat for the privilege of being present. It left the theatre praising the production to the skies. The applause mounted to deafening proportions at the Biblical and modern climaxes of the picture. The lighter touches of the first part of the modern story brought forth many laughs, but throughout the last reel the dropping of a pin could have been heard anywhere in the house.

Sid Grauman's presentation was tremendously effective throughout and especially the prologue, which included living pictures of "Moses on the Mount" and "The Last Supper." The musical score by Hugo Riesenfeld also proved startling in its effectiveness and appropriateness to the theme and moods of the picture. It is said that probably never before has a motion picture production been praised by newspaper critics in such superlative terms. Edwin Schallert in the Times said: "It is a picture that you cannot by any stretch of the imagination afford to miss. It offers new splendors in photography and theatrical wonders hitherto unrevealed. It is the greatest masterpiece thus far of pictorial artistry."

Florence Lawrence in the Examiner: "The screen has never borne a greater tale or told it with more conviction. It unquestionably is Cecil B. DeMille's magnum opus."

L. B. Fowler in the News: "It is to be hoped that every one of the one hundred and ten million people of these United States will have an opportunity to see this production. It conveys one of the greatest messages ever brought before the American people. Mere description of the action could not tell you its tremendous power and influence. The director and author have incorporated everything you can think of to make it interesting, fascinating and instructive."

Pearl Rall in the Express: "It is the voice of inspiration. Its very massiveness, the apparent difficulties confronting the director and the broadness of the canvas compel respect and utmost admiration." Guy Price in the Herald: "A mighty picture dramatically, photographically, scenically and morally. It is a triumph for the camera beyond all expectation and proves that real good can be disseminated through the theatre as well as the church."

Ted Taylor in the Record: "The public is going to be a mighty plaything under the spell of 'The Ten Commandments.'" Albert Dorris in the Hollywood News: "When a writer possesses words to properly describe the glory of the sunrise, the majesty of Niagara, the love of good women, then may be expected an adequate description of the message of 'The Ten Commandments.' It is far more than a mere motion picture."

H. C. Evans in the Hollywood Citizen: "The picture will live through centuries to come. Mere words can but give a hazy description of this film of films."

Mr. DeMille will leave Los Angeles in a few days for New York to be present at the metropolitan premiere at the George M. Cohan Theatre December 21.

Song Exploitation for "Big Brother"

The well-known music publishing firm of Watterson, Berlin & Snyder has just published a new ballad entitled "Big Brother," which will be used extensively in the exploitation of the Allan Dwan Paramount production of the same title, to be released this month.

The song was written by Fred Rath, Joseph Garren and Mel Shauer and was sold to Watterson, Berlin & Snyder strictly upon its merits. The entire professional department of the company, which has nineteen branch offices, will be utilized and wherever possible singers will be furnished to theatres for the exploitation of the song in connection with the showing of the picture. Phonograph and piano records of both vocal and instrumental versions will be prepared at the earliest possible moment.

"My Mamie Rose" Being Titled

Irving Cummings and a coterie of scenario and title writers and film editors are now busily engaged with the final editing and titling of "My Mamie Rose," Mary Philbin's new starring feature, recently completed at Universal City under Cummings' direction.

Four New Warner Films Progressing at Coast

Immediately upon his return to the Warner Brothers West Coast Studios, Jack L. Warner pitched into production work on four pictures. He had made a trip to New York and conferred on production plans for the approaching year.

"How to Educate a Wife" and "Broadway After Dark" were the first to go into work. Grand Carpenter has completed the continuity of the first, which is from the pen of Elinor Glyn. The direction is by William Seiter, and the cast is headed by Marie Prevost, Monte Blue, Alec B. Francis and Claude Gillingwater.

The second picture is "Broadway After Dark," from the story by Owen Davis. Monta Bell, who was recently associated with Charles Chaplin, is directing this Harry Rapf production, with a brilliant cast headed by Adolphe Menjou. The third production will be the Sinclair Lewis story, "Babbitt." The continuity has been put into shape by Julien Josephson, and the direction is in the hands of Harry Beaumont, assisted by Frank Strayer. The cast will be announced in the near future. "Lover's Lane," from the Clyde Fitch, is fourth on the program. Dorothy Farnum is at work on the adaptation. William Beaudine will direct it.

Swain Star Featured in 12 New Rural Comedies

Announcement of the completion of distribution arrangements with Hollywood Pictures Corporation is made by General Manager Samuel Bischoff of the Grand Studio, whereby twelve two-reel rural comedies featuring the comedian, Dan Mason, will be released through Grand-Asher and produced at the Grand Studio under the direction of Jack Nelson and supervision of Paul Gerson.

Dan Mason is nationally known for his work in Fontaine Fox's cartoons of the Toonerville Trolley series; also in the role of Pop Tuttle in the Plum Center comedies. The new series in which he will be presented by Hollywood Features Corporation will show him in a series of adventures in his now famous makeup, accompanied by his partner, Wilna Hervey, known as "the biggest girl in pictures."

Jack Nelson will direct. Al Martin is to function as "gag" man and Paul Gerson, who supervised the Plum Center stories, will supervise the new series. Work starts in the near future.

Dickens Film Endorsed by Philadelphia Women

"David Copperfield," a picturization of Charles Dickens' novel, released by Associated Exhibitors, was not only praised by the critics of the Philadelphia, Pa., newspapers when it opened at the Aldine Theatre, last week, but was also endorsed by the board of directors of the Civic Club, Philadelphia's leading women's club.

The reviewer on the North American said: "No stars appear to distract one's attention from the unfolding of this lovely tale. There is no jarring note and one sits as if in a dream. The picture is a work of art in every respect." The Public Ledger said: "The flavor and atmosphere and sentiment of Dickens have been captured by the clever director." The Inquirer: "The London scenes are particularly good and give a really convincing picture of the narrow cobbled streets of that period. The characters have been especially well taken."

The Record said: "'David Copperfield' has been brought to the screen in a fashion to please the most ardent Dickens admirers, and there were many Dickens enthusiasts among the audience who found the picture to be in the true spirit of the author." The Evening Bulletin: "David, played by Buddy Martin, is the image of what one has always dreamed he would be like. He has the same lovable charm and pathetic wistfulness always associated with 'David Copperfield.'"

The Evening Public Ledger: "'David Copperfield' has been brought to life by a refreshingly talented company."

"Anna Christie" Starts First Run Career

With special honors shown it by the National Board of Review, and bearing the personal endorsement of the author Eugene O'Neill, and the trade writers, "Anna Christie" was introduced to the public during the past week on first run screens in big cities throughout the country. Before the end of this week the picture will have been presented in practically every key city.

The New York censor board recently added its voice to the chorus in praise of Ince's art of adapting virile drama to the screen in delicate fashion, by passing the production practically uncut. "Anna Christie" as it will be presented to New York audiences will be the same in development and treatment as Ince made it.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan New Season's Product Includes 18 Big Features

Eighteen big special features are announced for release within the next few months by the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Distributing Corporation. Most of these productions are completed; on others the photography has recently been finished, and work is now under way on the rest. This is the biggest announcement which has emanated from Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan since the amalgamation of the distribution of Goldwyn, Cosmopolitan and Distinctive pictures, made last year.

"Little Old New York," Cosmopolitan's latest Marion Davies production, heads the list. It is now being released to exhibitors of the country after its record-breaking run of three months at the Cosmopolitan Theatre in New York, followed by two additional weeks at the Capitol Theatre, where every record for attendance was smashed, and following long runs in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Detroit, Washington and other towns. In several of these cities it is still playing, as it is in London, where it has been packing the Empire for weeks.

"Little Old New York" was directed by Sidney Olcott and adapted from Rida Johnson Young's stage play by Luther Reed. In the cast supporting Miss Davies are Harrison Ford, Mahlon Hamilton, Louis Wolheim, J. M. Kerrigan, Courtenay Foote, Riley Hatch, Charles Kennedy and others.

On the schedule is Cosmopolitan's production starring Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen, "Unseeing Eyes," from Arthur Stringer's novel of the Canadian wilderness, "Snowblind." Bayard Veiller, noted playwright and scenarist, prepared the continuity, and E. H. Griffith directed. This is a forthright tale of adventure and romance amid the snows of the north woods, with thrills in abundance. A conspicuous bit of villainy is contributed through the skillful acting of Louis Wolheim.

Rupert Hughes' new picture, "Reno," which he wrote and directed, is one of the early releases. This is a dramatic story of the matrimonial entanglements which result from our varying divorce laws in different states. The cast is a brilliant one, including Helene Chadwick, Lew Cody, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Hedda Hopper, Dale Fuller, Kathleen Key, Marjorie Bonner, William Orlamond, Howard Truesdale and a dozen others.

Marshall Neilan's dramatic version of Madeleine Ruthven's Siberian story, "The Rendezvous," is one of "Mickey's" finest productions. The story is altogether foreign in its atmosphere, its action and in nearly all of its characters, yet it was made entirely in America. The cast is a notable one with Conrad Nagel and Lucille Ricksen in the leads. Sydney Chaplin, Emmett Corrigan, Elmo Lincoln, Richard Travers, Kathleen Key, Kate Lester, Cecil Holland, Lucien Littlefield, Eugenie Besserer and R. O. Pennell complete the cast.

"Second Youth" is a Distinctive Pictures production of an Allan Updegraff story in which Alfred Lunt, Herbert Corthell, Walter Catlett, Jobyna Howland, Lynn Fontanne, Mimi Palmeri, Margaret Dale, Faire Binney, Hugh Huntley, Lumsden Hare and Winifred Allen have the leading roles. John Lynch prepared the continuity and Albert Parker directed.

Victor Seastrom's first American production, "Name the Man" a Goldwyn picture from Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man," is a December release. This is declared to be one of the most human and natural stories which have ever been filmed, and a production that marks a milestone in motion picture development. In the cast are: Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Creighton Hale, DeWitt Jennings, Hobart Bosworth, Evelyn Selbie, Winter Hall, Aileen Pringle, Anna Hernandez and Mark Fenton.

For early release is Cosmopolitan's mammoth picturization of Stanley Weyman's colorful story of adventure and action in ancient France, "Under the Red Robe," directed by Alan Crosland, with settings by Joseph Urban. Robert B. Mantell, noted actor of Shakespeare roles, appears as Cardinal Richelieu in this production. John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens have leading roles. Bayard Veiller made the adaptation.

Goldwyn's King Vidor production, "Wild Oranges," from Joseph Hergesheimer's novel, is one of the outstanding pictures in the list. There are but five characters in this production but they are involved in a story which for drama and human appeal is believed to be unexcelled. Vidor has made of it a picture in every way as great and as human as his "Three Wise Fools." In the cast are Frank Mayo, Virginia Valli, Ford Sterling, Nigel de Brullier and Charles A. Post.

Another Cosmopolitan production is "Out of the Dark," from Jack Boyle's story, "The Daughter of Mother McGinn." Frances Marion made the scenario and she aided George Hill in directing it. In the cast are Collen Moore, Forrest Stanley, Margaret Seddon and George Cooper.

Distinctive's new George Arliss production, "The Adopted Father," adapted from a story of Edgar Franklin's by Forrest Halsey and directed by Harmon Weight, is a comedy in which the star has a role different from anything else he has done for the screen. Supporting Mr. Arliss are such players as Edith Roberts, Taylor Holmes, Ronald Colman, Ivan Simpson, Redfield Clarke and Joseph Donahue. "The Adopted Father" is a comedy with an unusual twist. It affords Mr. Arliss one of those roles that he interprets with consummate ease and artistry. It is a story with a big popular appeal.

The production of "Greed," adapted and directed by Erich von Stroheim from Frank Norris' novel of San Francisco, it is announced, will hand the industry a surprise. This picture is declared by those who have seen it to be most realistic. Norris' story has not been departed from at all; its stark realism, its tense drama, its crude and acrid comedy have been kept in the film by Director von Stroheim. In the cast are: Gibson Gowland, ZaSu Pitts, Cesare Gravina, Jean Hersholt, Chester Conklin, Sylvia Ashton, Dale Fuller, Frank Hayes, Fanny Midgley and a score more.

Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," directed by Alan Crosland, with a cast embracing Aileen Pringle, Conrad Nagel, Stuart Holmes, H. Reeves-Smith, Mitchell Lewis, John Sainpolis, Dale Fuller, Joan Standing and others, will be screened early in the new year. The novel has been widely read.

Goldwyn's second Emmet Flynn production, "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," adapted by Carey Wilson from Owen Davis' old melodrama, is one of the classics of a type of stage melodrama which flourished in the late nineties and early in the present century. The cast is headed by Claire Windsor, as the cloak model, Mae Busch, Edmund Lowe, Lew Cody, Raymond Griffith, Hobart Bosworth, Will Walling, Dorothy Cumming and Arthur Hausman.

Going to True Locale

B. P. Schulberg announced this week that Gasnier will leave for Monte Carlo in the near future to take exteriors for "Poisoned Paradise," Robert W. Service's story which is now in production as a Preferred Picture.

The original plan was to reconstruct on the Schulberg lot the principal buildings of the famous resort but it has now been decided to take these street scenes in the true locale described by Service. The party to make the trip will consist of Director Gasnier, Karl Struss, cameraman; Clara Bow and Kenneth Harlan.

Mailman Popularity Contest

Twenty-five thousand votes were cast in the "Loyal Lives" popularity contest for mail carriers at Warren, Ohio. This contest was arranged by the Tribune of that city and the Duchess Theatre, which played the Whitmar Bennett special based on the life of postoffice employes.

The twenty-three carriers of the city were entered in the contest and the prize, a gold watch, was won by Noah Simoson, who had a total vote of 7,061.

Then there will be Cosmopolitan's James Oliver Curwood story of the Canadian wilds, "The Flaming Forest." It contains all of the action which could possibly be put into one picture. John Lynch prepared the scenario.

There is another big Distinctive product, a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's great novel of Egypt, "The Weavers," directed by Harmon Weight, with Alfred Lunt and Mimi Palmeri in the leads. John Lynch made the adaptation. "The Weavers" was one of the most popular of Sir Gilbert's novels and it has been made into a photodrama of splendor and magnificent climaxes.

Another Marion Davies picture produced by Cosmopolitan is "Yolanda," from the novel by Charles Major, author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Luther Reed made the adaptation, Robert Vignola directed and Joseph Urban is responsible for the settings. Lyn Harding, famous English actor, appears as Duke Charles the Bold of Burgund, playing opposite Miss Davies.

Two other Cosmopolitan productions will follow—an American historical romance, "Janice Meredith," from the popular novel by Paul Leicester Ford, which will furnish Marion Davies one of her best vehicles, and "The Great White Way" from H. C. Witwer's story, "Cain and Mabel," directed by E. Mason Hopper, in which Anita Stewart has one of her best roles. In the supporting cast are T. Roy Barnes and Oscar Shaw.

Special Herald for "The Old Fool"

An unusual variety of scenic action is contained in the herald for "The Old Fool," the latest Hodgkinson picture, to be released December 31. Besides the business-pulling stills, there are some interest arousing pen and ink sketches.

New Corporation

The DeLuxe Film Corporation, Detroit, is now in operation. Lloyd Hammond, well known in this territory, is at the head of the new undertaking. All of his first purchases were from Lee-Bradford and include: "Determination," "Is Money Everything?" "The Image Maker," "The Inside of the House of David," and a series of single reels entitled, "Tense Moments from Operas."

First National Booming Films in Its Biggest Sales Contest

Sales meetings in every exchange throughout the United States and Canada on the morning of December 15th gave the final impetus to the First National Month drive in January and launched the biggest contest, with corresponding prize awards, ever to be held by First National. E. A. Eschmann took his sales organization completely by surprise by unexpectedly calling forty meetings in as many exchanges and explaining the details of a sales competition which will result in the most powerful concentrated effort in the history of the big distributing organization.

As spontaneous as the meetings was the enthusiasm of the sales force. Mr. Eschmann's surprise crowned the determination already generated by the productions. The five pictures to be issued during First National Month represent the attainment of the First National ideal of consistent, big-time entertainment, and their quality coupled with the stimulant created by the contest, makes it highly probable that the exchange winning the first prize will set up a new record in played and paid business in its territory.

"Never was there such a demand for high-class box office pictures," stated Mr. Eschmann, "than at the present moment; and never had any company such an opportunity to give five such pictures wider distribution. This is First National's intention and aim and the bookings already written on our productions point surely to its accomplishment. They are pictures which of themselves create enthusiasm and the prizes which have been offered will not be so much in the nature of an incentive as they will be reward for sales efficiency.

"First National quality productions in the field of drama, comedy drama, human interest pictures and costume drama will provide the exhibitor with a wide variety of screen entertainment, all designed for and meriting presentation in the biggest and finest theatres of the country. To mention only our First National Month offerings there is "Black Oxen," a powerful society drama adapted from Gertrude Atherton's best seller. It is a Frank Lloyd Production and features Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle. "The Song of Love," starring Norma Talmadge, is a costume drama, although the story is laid in the present day. The action takes place in Algeria. "The Eternal City," the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, is drama moving against one of the most fascinating backgrounds ever brought to the screen. "Painted People," with Colleen Moore, is delightful comedy-drama and "Boy of Mine," J. K. McDonnald's picturization of Booth Tarkington's story, is heart interest drama, even above the producer's last effort, "Penrod and Sam."

Grand-Asher Talks Distribution Plans

General Manager Bischoff of Grand-Asher is on his way to New York to attend a conference of the executives called to perfect details of the new distribution plan which has been worked out in conjunction with the system that has been developed by Mr. Bischoff for handling independent productions for the screen.

He will be away approximately twelve days and on his return to the Grand studio will have further announcements to make concerning new productions. Meanwhile, all arrangements to start the R.

William Neill production, "Rose of the Ghetto," and the series of Dan Mason comedies, around Christmas, will be made. Both of these units recently signed contracts to produce for Grand-Asher release.

"We are not satisfied," said Bischoff, "with anything less than 100 per cent. distribution for our producers and that is what we are now arranging for. Our facilities to place the Grand-Asher producing companies in line to take full advantage of the present great opportunity for independents, are unrivalled."

"The Acquittal" Makes Record at the Cameo

"The Acquittal," Universal's Jewel production of Rita Weiman's celebrated stage play, made with Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry in the leading roles, had its New York premiere this week in the Cameo Theatre, Forty-second street and Broadway. In the face of heavy opposition in the other Broadway houses, it went over big and made a record for itself in the Cameo.

The success of the New York opening bears out the unusual acclaim with which the production has been received in several other film centers where it has been shown pre-release.

"The Acquittal" is a mystery melodrama laid in society settings. Great praise has been accorded to Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry for their excellent portrayals in the picture.

Others in the strong cast which helped to make "The Acquittal" notable for its good acting, are Richard Travers, Barbara Bedford, Charles Wellesley, Frederick Vroom, Emmett King, Ben Deely, Dot Farley, Harry Mestayer and Hayden Stevenson. It was directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Barbara La Marr to Be a Star

Confirmation was made this week of the report that Barbara La Marr is to be a First National star. A contract was signed this week, stated R. A. Rowland, general manager of First National, whereby Miss La Marr will be presented in a series of pictures by Sawyer-Lubin, to be produced by Associated Pictures Corporation under the supervision of Arthur H. Sawyer.

Barbara La Marr has earned her right to stardom after a meteoric career during which she has risen to be one of the foremost leading women now on the screen. She has appeared recently in "The Eternal City," "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Strangers of the Night" and "Trifling Women." At present she is appearing in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

It has been definitely decided, according to Associated Pictures Corporation, that Clarence Badger will direct Miss La Marr in her first production for First National release. The La Marr pictures will be produced at the new West Coast studios of S-L productions and early in 1924 Miss La Marr will make her debut as a First National star in her first picture.

the release and make this year's celebration of John Greenleaf Whittier's birthday most notable.

This is the first time a picture released on the state right basis has been held back in all territories for simultaneous release, it is said, and this, together with the reports that have come through on the production from pre-release showings, have aroused much interest among exhibitors.

All manner of special exhibits to tie up the poet's birthday and the motion picture have been perfected.

Smith Special Has Exploitation Aids

"The Man From Brodney's," the David Smith special which will be shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, on December 16, was enthusiastically received by critics of fan and trade papers at a pre-release showing by Vitagraph.

Vitagraph has provided artistic paper and a helpful campaign book for this picture. A full page advertisement is shown in full size and the advertising illustration is arranged as a "break-away" so that mats of individual scenes of which the whole is comprised may be used

"Flaming Youth" a Big Success

Loew's Warfield Theatre, in San Francisco, staged the western premiere of "Flaming Youth," a First National picture featuring Colleen Moore and directed by John Francis Dillon. The production opened on December 1, duplicating its success in Chicago and New York, where it was held over for a second week at the Strand Theatre.

Schulberg Wants Some Good Juvenile Actors

"In spite of the belief that Hollywood is overcrowded with screen players; that there are not enough parts for the hundreds seeking work, there is an alarming dearth of good juvenile actors," says B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures.

Mr. Schulberg is feeling around for the proper talent to play in Frank Craven's comedy drama, "The First Year," which is the most valuable property on his list of stories to be produced this season.

"There are plenty of actresses who meet the requirements but I cannot find the actor who quite fits the part. It is astounding that singly in smaller advertisements. The cast is headed by J. Warren Kerrigan, Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley, Miss DuPont, Pat O'Malley and Kathleen Key are also among the all-star players.

Warner Officials Confer

This week Warner Brothers home office took on the aspect of a convention, exchange heads from different sections of the country having come to discuss methods of co-operation between exchanges and exhibitors, as well as to examine prints of pictures recently completed and soon to be released.

Among the exchange men to visit the home offices are Arthur Cohan, and Phil Kaufman, of Regal Films, Canada; W. D. Shapiro, of Franklin Film Co., Boston, Mass.; W. G. Underwood, of Specialty Film Co., Dallas, Texas; Oscar Oldknow, of Southern States Film Co., Atlanta, Ga.; L. Berman, of Independent Film Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

there are so few juveniles in pictures today. There are practically none that have attained any degree of popularity. I can remember a few years ago when there would have been a score of young actors suitable for 'The First Year' but without exception they have now graduated from the juvenile type into straight leads and no new faces have come to take the places they have left."

Chicago Fire Will Be Reproduced on Screen

Recent announcement of Arthur Beck's decision to produce a pictured version of the great Chicago fire of 1871 as the first of his 1924 Specials for Associated Exhibitors created a considerable sensation, which is likely to be heightened now that more has become known of the gigantic proportions which the production will assume.

J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, returning from the West a few days ago, brought information respecting the preliminary work incident to the completion of the scenario. In Chicago he was in conference with Arthur F. Beck, who, for several weeks past, has been supervising the necessary research work in that city.

Mr. Beck is determined to picture this conflagration with scrupulous fidelity to fact and make of the production an important historical document. The picture promises also to be one of the most thrilling spectacles ever seen on the screen, it is stated.

Picture Sells "Old" Song

"Three O'Clock in the Morning," featuring Constance Binney, is meeting with a full measure of success wherever it is being shown. At a recent first run showing in Lynn, Mass., the manager of the theatre arranged for a special window display of the song with the local music dealer, and in spite of the fact that the song broke all sale records months ago, so great was the demand for the song during the week the picture was being shown, that a rush order had to be sent to the publishers of the song to keep pace with the demand.

"Going Up" Given Big Newspaper Publicity

"Going Up," Douglas MacLean's latest comedy released by Associated Exhibitors, came in for its full share of newspaper publicity when it played the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., during Thanksgiving Week. It occupied a prominent position on the front page of one of Long Beach's leading papers, The Press, every day for four weeks in advance of its opening, and when it opened it was impossible for all to get close to the lobby, for the crowd waiting to get in.

It has been the custom of Manager Browne to stage a Thanksgiving party in co-operation with The Press, for the poor children and orphans of Long Beach, each year, booking a special attraction to be shown to the kids on Thanksgiving morning. This year he had "Going Up" booked for Thanksgiving Week, and, feeling that this comedy would appeal to the youngsters as well as to the "grownups," he decided to use it for his special show.

Burr Reports Many First-Run Dates

C. C. Burr reports many first run bookings on his latest release, "Restless Wives." Several of the finest moving picture theatres in the country have booked this photoplay based on a story by Izola Forrester, which will appear in the Christmas issue of Ainslee's Magazine.

According to William N. Skirboll of the Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, Inc., distributors of the Mastodon Films, Inc. product for the states of Ohio and Kentucky, a large number of first run theatres in both those states have arranged for early play dates of "Restless Wives," in which Doris Kenyon is being featured.

Important Bookings for Warners' "Tiger Rose"

"Tiger Rose," the Warner Brothers' screen version of the famous David Belasco stage play of the same name, goes into the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, on December 23 for an indefinite run. The management of the Randolph is extremely well pleased with this production and believe that it will enjoy a run of several weeks. A great reception was given "Tiger Rose" when it opened at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee on December 3.

"Tiger Rose" will open soon at the Stanley in Philadelphia and the Tom Moore in Washington, D. C. It will be shown in practically every leading theatre in America, and reports show it is already creating new box-office records.

Common Sense

L. Ernest Ouimet, president of Laval Productions, Ltd., is now in New York with a print of his first production which has as a working title "The Vital Question."

"I didn't want to make a picture that looked cheap," says Mr. Ouimet, "but I did want to make one where it would be possible for everyone—producer, distributor and exhibitor—to make a reasonable profit. I am proud to say that my first feature represents a cost that everyone said was impossible before I started production. As for the quality of the picture—well, I'll let it speak for itself."

Exploitation Is Aided by Photoplay Editions

Fox Releases for the Week of December 16

Photoplay editions of the popular novels adapted for Paramount pictures have come to be one of the biggest features of the exploitation of the Paramount product. During the past year, including those at present in work, nearly twenty of these special publications have been made by the firms of Grosset & Dunlap and A. L. Burt & Co.

The works of Zane Grey, now being produced as Paramount pictures, have a big popular following and the sales of the photoplay editions reflect this popularity to a marked degree. A special photoplay edition of "The Heritage of the Desert" will be issued simultaneously with the release of the picture in January.

Rudyard Kipling's "The Light That Failed" has just been issued in photoplay edition. It will be pushed as a Christmas book. A special photoplay edition of Julian Street's novel, "Rita Coventry," is now being prepared and will be published under the photoplay title, "Don't Call It Love," at the same time that the William de Mille production is released.

In January Grosset & Dunlap will publish "The Covered Wagon." Present plans call for the issuing of a new edition each week for an indefinite period. Other illustrated photoplay editions planned by Grosset & Dunlap for the first of the year are Homer Croy's "West of the Water Tower" and "His Children's Children."

Among the new photoplay editions planned by A. L. Burt & Co. is Kate Jordan's "The Next Corner," which is being produced for Paramount by Sam Wood, with Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney, Dorothy Mackaill, Ricardo Cortez and Louise Dresser featured.

While the publication of these special editions is proving of immense value in the exploitation of the pictures, both these publishing houses give unreserved credit to the pictures for stimulating popular demand for their product.

"Hoodman Blind," a William Fox special production, adapted from the stage play of the same name by Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett; "Cupid's Fireman," featuring Charles Jones, and a Sunshine Comedy, "The Riding Master," are announced for release by Fox Film Corporation for the week of December 16. The Charles Jones vehicle was previously announced for release on December 2, but it now is included among this week's releases.

"Hoodman Blind" is a melodrama which is said to be ideally suited to presentation on the screen. The story presents the tragedy of a man with the wanderlust and an irresponsible character which permits him to desert one woman for another and then the second for a third. David Butler, who had the leading masculine role in "The Temple of Venus," has the chief part in this picture. Gladys Hulette plays a dual role. The supporting cast includes such well known players as: Regina Connelly, Frank Campeau, Marc McDermott, Trilby Clark, Jack Walters and Eddie Gribbon. John Ford directed the production.

"Cupid's Fireman," the latest

Charles Jones feature, was adapted from the story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," written by Richard Harding Davis. William Wellman was the director. Marion Nixon has the leading feminine role.

"The Riding Master," the Sunshine Comedy release, presents the difficulties that surround a society riding instructor when he falls in love with one of his pupils.

Obtains Three Year Canadian Rights

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Ltd., (Canada), through Harry Kaufman of Premier Films has obtained three years' distribution rights in the Dominion of Canada for the following productions: "Bright Lights of Broadway," "Marriage Morals," "Passionate Friends," from the novel of the same name by H. G. Wells, "The Spider and the Rose," starring Gaston Glass and Alice Lake, "Don't Marry for Money," starring House Peters, "East Side, West Side," "Temporary Marriage," starring Mrs. Harold Lloyd, "The World's a Stage," an Eleanor Glyn story, and "Flesh and Blood," starring Lon Chaney.

Crowds at Capitol to See "Slave of Desire"

Goldwyn's Gilbert E. Gable production, "Slave of Desire," based upon Honore de Balzac's novel, "The Magic Skin," and directed by George D. Baker, proved itself a photoplay of unusual attractiveness to audiences in its showings at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week. The cast is headed by George Walsh, Bessie Love and Carmel Myers. Big audiences attended.

The reviewers on the New York daily papers found many good things to say about the production. The Evening Journal said: "Balzac's glittering romance is so strikingly adaptable to motion pictures that one wonders why it has been overlooked until now."

The Sun and Globe: "The picture had a famous and gripping story to build upon, and carries its eerie, bizarre quality over upon the screen." The Telegraph: "Slave of Desire" a lavish display." New York American: "Balzac would open his eyes wide at the lavish production given his tale."

The Telegram: "Produced on a sumptuous scale worthy of the intrinsic merits of the story." The World: "A highly entertaining member of the cinema community."

Marion Davies Film Held for Third Week

"Little Old New York," Cosmopolitan's Marion Davies feature, has been held over for a third week at the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., due to the enthusiasm with which it was received by the press and the public. The showing of this film at Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee has likewise been continued for a third week. This is the first time in the history of that theatre that a photoplay has been held for a third week.

Goldwyn Cosmopolitan has booked the new Rupert Hughes picture at the State Theatre in Cleveland.

Cosmopolitan's "Unseeing Eyes" has been booked at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago and over the southern circuit of the West Coast Theatres.

The Acamedy Theatre in Haverhill, Mass., has booked the first eleven productions of the season.

New Yorkers Welcome Coogan Film Opening

Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," opened at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway, New York, last week. The story of Jackie's new picture is taken from Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel.

"At last Jackie Coogan, after several mediocre photoplays, has a story suited to him," wrote the critic of the New York Post. "Jackie is adorable," said the critic of the New York Journal. "He displays all his cleverness. He is sparkling and amusing." The New York Daily News said: "The spectacle of a little boy in princely robes falling asleep on a too-high throne is one to challenge fan imaginations. So Jackie Coogan fades out in 'Long Live the King,' Jackie being the sovereign ruler." The New York American stated: "All in all Jackie proves himself a rather remarkable fellow."

The New York World said: "Among the more masterfully conducted pieces of business in the history of the films is the good sense which has been back of the selection of the story for Jackie Coogan." "They have made a beautiful, stirring picture out of it—a picture that every one will love," wrote the New York Herald critic. "Jackie is to us the most appealing actor on the screen," wrote the New York Evening World reviewer.

The critic of the Mail wrote: "Jackie Coogan, resplendent in royal robes, gives the screen the finest and most enjoyable exhibition of his genius in 'Long Live the King.'" The New York Times critic wrote: "Long Live the King' is one of the best pictures in which Jackie Coogan has appeared. It is one of the interesting and jolly productions that bring a tear or two between smiles and hearty laughter."

"Scaramouche" in St. Louis House

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" was selected to open the New Pershing Theatre in St. Louis several days ago. The theatre is one of the most beautiful in the city of St. Louis. Its opening alone was an interesting affair and attracted additional interest.

Invitations for the opening had been sent out to many prominent people in St. Louis and other parts of the state. Governor Hyde was sent one and referred to the fact that he had seen "Scaramouche" on the occasion of the recent Conference of Governors at West Baden, Indiana, when Metro presented "Scaramouche" before it and elicited praise.

Jackie's Greatest Film, Carewe Picks Paris to Say Detroit Critics Complete Sahara Film

Detroit has just seen Jackie Coogan in his first Metro picture, "Long Live the King." Detroit newspaper critics declare that in it Jackie has attained the greatest role of his career. It emphasizes to the nth degree those qualities which have made him the greatest screen favorite in the history of the industry.

"To see Jackie Coogan in 'Long Live the King' is to see this most talented child of the mimic world in the greatest role of his career," said Roy E. Marcotte in the Detroit Free Press. "The picture was produced on a lavish scale, there being settings and scenes which will rival the most spectacular pictures ever produced. The cast is large and in many of the scenes literally thousands of persons appear."

George W. Stark of the Detroit News said: "All the king's horses and all the king's men combined with all the pomp and circumstance that attended the courts of Europe in their most flourishing days cannot diminish the glory that is Jackie Coogan's. Which is another way of saying that young Mr. Coogan in his new picture, 'Long Live the King,' a radical departure in production from anything the boy has ever done, shines more brilliantly than ever."

Production Starts on Hoxie Film

The Jack Hoxie company has just left Universal City for Sonora, where exterior scenes for Hoxie's new feature, "The Drifter," will be filmed. The picture is a western melodrama based on the magazine story, "Hard Rock," by Jacques Jaccard. Robert North Bradbury is directing.

Edwin Carewe will film the interiors of First National's "A Son of the Sahara" in the Eclair studio in Paris. This plan, which was only tentative when the director left the States, became definite when Mr. Carewe with his chief cameraman, Robert Kurrle, and his laboratory expert, Lawrence Courcier, inspected the facilities of the Eclair studio and laboratory in Paris. They found the equipment unusually complete and decided to complete the picture there before returning to the United States.

This will mean that the Carewe company will be located in Paris for at least a month after its return from Biskra, Algeria, where the exteriors are now being taken. The company will probably take up its work there sometime during the first two weeks of the new year.

Mr. Carewe's cast includes Claire Windsor, Rosemary Theby, Bert Lytell, Montague Love and Paul Panzer. They sailed from New York early in November.

Singer Is "Find" in His Latest, Says Blackton

Pauline Frederick and Lou Tellegen have the leading roles and are supported by Leslie Austen, Helena D'Algy and an all star cast in "Let Not Man Put Asunder," under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton.

Mr. Blackton has evolved a score of new lighting effects. The sets are expressive of technical art and ingenuity. Mr. Blackton is supervising the cutting of the film and it will be ready for the Broadway showing in January.

"I have never directed a picture in which the players worked so easily and contributed so much to assist me," he said at Vitagraph studios. "I have in the cast a young woman whom I consider one of the finds of the year, Helena D'Algy. She is a Spanish girl who played in opera through South America. I saw her at the 'Follies' and after considering many candidates for the part I selected her."

"The Humming Bird" to Be Paramount Film

Sidney Olcott, who is directing Gloria Swanson in her current Paramount picture, "The Humming Bird," at the Long Island studio, declares that the screen version of Maude Fulton's play is altogether the most interesting production he ever made and that he firmly believes it will be his best. Rushes of the pictures have been seen by Paramount home office executives and are said to bear out the producer's prediction.

The outstanding feature of "The Humming Bird" is said to be its intense realism of action and setting. It is a story of the apache underworld of Paris.

There is a touch of war in the picture, too, and in order that the war scenes might be absolutely authentic, prints of official English and French films were obtained from the war departments of those countries for incorporation in the production.

Brilliant Davies' Film Premiere at Washington

The brilliancy of the New York opening of "Little Old New York" at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, according to reports, was surpassed by the opening of that Marion Davies picture at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C. Incidentally it broke all records of that house for attendance and for receipts. Its criticisms were just as laudatory as were those it received in New York, London, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and the many other towns where it has been shown.

Several Cabinet members and their wives and many members of Congress and persons otherwise eminent in Washington society were in attendance at the opening performance. The entire mezzanine floor was reserved for guests of the management and of Cosmopolitan Pictures Corporation.

Secretary of States Charles E. Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Denby, Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Work, Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. New, wife of the Postmaster General, were among those present.

Big Exploitation for Hodkinson Reel

An advertising campaign that will be of great benefit to every exhibitor booking "Fun from the Press," says Hodkinson, will be conducted by the Literary Digest during the next month.

Eleven million letters, one to every telephone subscriber, will be sent out, calling attention, in a conspicuous paragraph, to this humor reel.

"Happiness" Shows Distinguished Cast

Metro has selected a group of distinguished players to support Laurette Taylor in her screen version of her great stage play, "Happiness," which is now in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of King Vidor. The complete cast to support Miss Taylor now consists of Pat O'Malley, Hedda Hopper, Edith York, Cyril Chadwick, Laurence Grant, Mario Carillo, Charlotta Minneau, Paterson Dial and Charles Mailles.

Pat O'Malley has already scored a great success this season by his playing in Reginald Barker's "The Eternal Struggle," which is part of this season's Metro schedule. Hedda Hopper is the beautiful wife of DeWolf Hopper, favorite of the American stage. The other members of the cast are all noted for their past work on the screen and have been selected for "Happiness" because of their exact suitability for the roles.

Miss Taylor is already on the coast with her husband, J. Hartley Manners, who wrote "Happiness," and has been immersed in active production for several weeks. Before production was taken up on the coast, Mr. Vidor came east with several members of his staff and photographed important exterior scenes in New York, using its great cosmopolitan atmosphere for background.

"The Love Bandit" Campaign Book

Vitagraph's campaign book for "The Love Bandit," Charles E. Blaney's production of his stage play, is quite novel and unique.

It is made up like the illustrated daily newspapers and presents catchy publicity ideas.

Hurley Free Lancing

Ed Hurley, general press representative for the Film Booking Offices, leaves that organization this week to go into business for himself. He will handle the production of several special features. Hurley is succeeded by Louis Kramer, exploitation man for F. B. O. in the Chicago territory.

"Grit," Hodkinson Film for January Release

"Grit," the fourth of the Film Guild productions, to be released by Hodkinson some time next month, is said to be a perfect combination of youth. In their own fields, both the author, F. Scott Fitzgerald, and the star, Glenn Hunter, signify "youth" to thousands of admirers.

This is Mr. Fitzgerald's first attempt at a movie story, and he wrote it especially for Glenn Hunter. It is a melodrama of the underworld and the East Side of New York, dealing with the struggle of "Kid Hart to find his better self and break away from the gang of crooks who have brought him up. In this he is aided by Orchid McGonigle, a little East Side hoyden.

Frank Tuttle directed.

"Anna Christie" Receives High Praise from Critical Reviewers

"Anna Christie," opening at the Strand Theatre to a critical New York public, which had seen Eugene O'Neill's drama on the spoken stage for more than a year and which was prepared to condemn any failing in the screen version, carried the verdict with flying colors.

The consensus of opinion on this Thomas H. Ince production, presented through First National, was that it was one of the few instances in the industry where a popular stage drama had been brought to the screen intact in theme, characterization and incident and that it gained, rather than lost, in its transference to the screen. Public opinion backed the written statements of all newspaper reviewers.

The Strand did exceptional business throughout the entire week, tending to show that "Anna Christie" lives up to the claims advanced for it—that it draws a portion of the public to the box office which is usually considered beyond the reach of the motion picture's appeal.

More than one of the reviewers frankly stated that he had come to scoff, believing that the virile story would be devalued in the process of filming. "It was to be expected," wrote Robert Sherwood in The Herald, "that 'Anna Christie' would emerge from the hopper of Hollywood, a 'good girl'—that the strength, the reality of O'Neill's play would be mangled beyond all recognition. But this is not what happened. 'Anna Christie' appears on the Strand screen almost exactly as O'Neill wrote it and as Arthur Hopkins staged it. As a result 'Anna Christie' is a singularly fine picture—a credit to Thomas Ince, a credit to the movies. * * *

"Those who saw 'Anna Christie' on the stage need not be afraid to go and see the screen version," wrote Harriett Underhill in The Tribune.

"I approached 'Anna Christie,'" wrote Louella Parsons in her initial review as photoplay editor of the New York American, "with some trepidation and considerable uncertainty. 'Anna Christie' as a play had flourished successfully through an entire season and later carried off a prize. 'Anna Christie' as a picture, I feared, might not fare so well. * * * But I was wrong. 'Anna Christie' as a picture takes with it to the screen many of those qualities that made it such acceptable entertainment as a drama."

It is noteworthy that "Anna Christie" is drawing the attention of the more literary magazines of criticism, some of which express surprise that the movie has advanced to such a point where "Anna Christie" is possible. The praise has been showered not only on Mr. Ince, but on his director, John Griffith Wray, Bradley King, scenarist; Blanche Sweet in the title role; George Marion as Chris; William Russell as Matt, and Eugene Besserer as Martha.

Elaborate preparations are being made, the price set for the opening night being five dollars top.

In New Position

Frederick E. Stanley, who has been a member of the West Coast publicity staff of First National since last January, has been transferred to the scenario department.

Another Excellent Cast Picked

Again has Goldwyn Pictures Corporation given Author-Director Rupert Hughes a cast of noted screen players for his new motion picture. It is called "True as Steel" and went into production on Monday last.

The cast, so far selected, includes Aileen Pringle, who has just completed the leading role in Goldwyn's screen version of Elmer Glyn's "Three Weeks," Eleanor Boardman, who has recently acted the leading role in Goldwyn's Arthur Somers Roche picture, "The Day of Faith," Huntley Gordon, William Haines, Kathleen Key, who appeared in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous" and in Rupert Hughes' previous picture, "Reno," Jean Haskell, Lucien Littlefield and William Orlamond.

Different Cafe Scenes for "Racing Luck"

Two widely different cafe scenes were made by Herman Raymaker for "Racing Luck," Monty Banks' new Grand-Asher feature comedy, recently at the Grand Studio.

The first was a jollification in a little Italian dining place supposedly in "Little Italy," New York. The other setting was a fashionable cafe in the white light district of the Metropolis.

"Under Red Robe" Nearing Release

"Under the Red Robe," which on next Monday starts on the sixth week of its first run engagement at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York, is now being prepared for national release through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan. The picture will be presented in all the leading cities of the country and gives indications of duplicating in the key city first runs its phenomenal success in New York.

Meantime, at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, "Under the Red Robe" shows no diminishing of the interest that it has aroused since its premiere on Broadway. The continued and increasing demand for tickets in advance indicates strongly that the film will run far into the new year. Since its opening before the most distinguished audience that ever saw a premiere in New York, the photoplay has played to big audiences at every performance.

F. B. O.'s. "Lights Out" Still Breaking Records

Al Santell's novel comedy, "Lights Out," continues to smash records, according to reports to the Film Booking Offices. Exhibitors are calling this feature one of the freak films of the industry. Released unheralded, it looks as though it will be one of F. B. O.'s outstanding box-office winners, as is evidenced by the exhibitors prolonging the runs originally scheduled.

Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens are featured, supported by a brilliant cast of prominent players and 3,000 extras. A special feature of the Cosmopolitan engagement is the appearance twice daily of Victor Herbert and his orchestra.

Finishing Touches to "Souvenir"

Associated Exhibitors received word recently from Halperin Productions that the "shooting" of scenes for "Souvenir," the second Halperin feature for Associated distribution, has been completed, and the staff at Hollywood studios is now engaged in the work of cutting, editing and titling.

Agnes Ayres and Percy Marmont play the leads.

Nat. G. Rothstein, director of publicity and advertising for F. B. O., said: "We knew that 'Lights Out' was more than an ordinary feature the minute we saw it, but I will candidly admit, even we did not realize it was a knockout box office cleanup. But we do now. We woke up to this fact when we read the trade paper reviews and when exhibitors who had booked it for two days held it over for a week."

the new "Leather Pushers," starring Billy Sullivan as successor to Reginald Denny. There is also the fourth issue of "The Gumps," "Aggravatin' Mama," featuring Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher.

Serials available include "The Ghost City," just released, featuring Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris, and including in the cast the stunt aviator, Al Wilson. It is a serial with a western atmosphere and plenty of punch and thrills. Also available is "Beasts of Paradise," featuring William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick, which is now in its mid-season.

Showmen Praise New Fox Comedies

The newest Fox series of short subjects "Imperial Comedies" is meeting with unusual success according to statement from Fox Film Corporation. This series started in August and seven have been released. December 23 will see the final number of the first series "Monks A La Mode."

Exhibitor reports indicate that these comedies have been consistent laugh getters. Many first run houses including Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo have booked these comedies and have given them prominence in their newspaper advertising. Among the theatres whose reports to trade papers have praised comedies of this brand are Capitol Theatre, New Bedford; Palm Theatre, Mound City, Ill.; Court Theatre, Huntington, Tenn.

Educational Lists First of New Bruce Films for January Release

Early in January Educational will release "Jean of Hecata Head" the first of the third series of Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales. The series will consist of eight single reel subjects, which, in the order of their release are "Jean of Hecata Head," "The Home-Maker," "Haunted Hills," "The Trader Keeps Moving," "Flowers of Hate," "Just Waiting," "The Ex-Bartender Retires" and "The Farewell."

The editing and titling of these pictures has been completed, and Mr. Bruce announces more drama has been incorporated in them than in the previous series, but that this has been done without sacrificing any of the beauty the Northwest country affords. Each story was chosen to fit the location and it is stated that many of the locations have never before been used in pictures.

"More entertainment value is added by the use of these unique locations," says Mr. Bruce, "which in many instances are a part of the dramatic atmosphere of the picture, as for instance in 'Haunted Hills' the sand spires at the junction of Sand Creek Canyon and Wheeler Canyon in southern Oregon are the only natural formations of their kind outside of the inaccessible region in the Ural mountains. Their weirdness gives a ghostly atmosphere to the background which enhances the dramatic value to a remarkable degree."

Practically the same cast was used in this series as in the 1923 pictures, including Irene Hall, Selmer Jackson, Gurnie Hays, Eddie O'Brien, William Dills, James Gordon, Anne Lockhart and Myrtel Forbes. Daniel Gobbett, with wide experience in all parts of the world, was the cameraman.

"I believe this series will provide the variety of entertainment so evidently needed in many motion picture programs of the day, says President E. W. Hammons of Educational. "These subjects will be idea for use with the feature comedy, or comedy drama of lighter vein. There is a shortage of short dramatic subjects and I believe the new Bruce Wilderness Tales will provide enough dramatic element to balance a program top heavy with a feature-comedy subject."

New Rogers Comedy Highly Praised

As a result of a pre-release showing at Ocean Park, Cal., Will Roger's new two reel comedy "Two Wagons, Both Covered" received unusually high praise from a Los Angeles photoplay critic who declared it looks like this production will land Rogers in the class with Chaplin, Lloyd and Fairbanks.

It is stated Rogers is working under J. A. Howe on a comedy "Great Moments from Little Pictures" in which he impersonates Ford Sterling and the Keystone cops, and also proposes to make a series of comedies involving good humored political satire which Bob Wagner will direct.

New Hamilton Comedy

Lloyd Hamilton has completed "My Friend" his next comedy for Educational. It was directed by Fred Hibbard under the supervision of Jack White, and Ruth Hiatt again appears as the comedian's leading lady. Advance reports indicate that this comedy will surpass anything Hamilton has done for Educational in the past year.

"Bee" Recommended

National Motion Picture League has placed "The Bee," third of Educational's "Secrets of Life" series, produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, in the class of films recommended for supplementary class room instruction on account of its educational value.

New Stan Laurel Two Reel Comedy Tops Pathe December 23 Program

Eight diversified subjects comprise the Pathe program for week of December 23. Prominent among these is a two-reel comedy, "Mother's Joy," starring Stan Laurel, and another "Dippy Doo Dad" entitled "Lovey Dovey."

In "Mother's Joy" Laurel plays the role of a young heir suddenly raised from the penury of a cab driver to the luxury of a rich home. The youth's first adventure into society leads to many laugh provoking developments.

"Lovey Dovey" is said by Pathe officials to be one of the cleverest animal comedies ever presented on the screen and is expected to set a new pace for this type of laugh provoker. The animals operate autos and aeroplanes. There is rapid-fire action and impersonation of human beings, added to laughable subtitles.

"The Five Orphans of the Storm," the current Aesop's Film Fable, is a burlesque of "Orphans of the Storm" and is said to be particularly well suited for Christmas, as it features Santa Claus and his reindeers, hanging of the stocking and other Christmas associations.

"The Desert of Death" is the eleventh chapter of the Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range" in which the heroine is confronted with new perils.

Pathe Review 51 includes a bit of the country in "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," a bird study captioned "Little Mothers," a touch of commerce in "The Locks of Sault Ste Marie," a color section, "Oxen Power," as employed in France and Spain.

New Pathe Series Stars Charles Chase

Another step in the expansion of Hal Roach's activities is disclosed in the Pathe announcement that Charles Chase will be featured in a series of single reel comedies. Chase, who is known as the "Fashion Plate of Fun" will make his debut on the Pathe program on January 6 in "At First Sight" to be followed by "One of the Family" released on January 27. It is planned to issue three Charles Chase single-reelers each month with a "Dippy-Do-Dad" the fourth week.

Broadway Booking

An Educational-Cameo single reeler "Film Foolish" is the comedy attraction at the Rivoli Theatre, New York during the current week.

"Modern Banking"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Those who have wondered about what takes place back of the cages in a bank will watch this Urban Classic No. 52 with interest. The various duties of the banking employees, in making change, opening checking accounts, cancelling paid checks, counting receipts are shown and there are various other bits of information.—M. K.

"Call the Wagon"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Christie Comedies are favorably represented in this one. It has a clever idea and is done with plenty of speed and pep. Neal Burns is a pretty girl's suitor who gets rid of his rivals by making them believe that she has false hair and teeth. She gets even with him and he barely escapes the lunatic asylum. Charlotte Merriam is the girl and Babe London also has a part. It is two reels of interesting entertainment.—M. K.

"A Movie Fantasy"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Hy Mayer's cartoon characters come to life in a clever comedy on the movie star craze. A young bride arranges to take lessons in screen acting and her husband cures her by impersonating the professor, putting her through vigorous exercises, and subjecting her to the gossip of neighbors until she is glad to give up her career for her husband. A popular subject interestingly handled.—M. K.

"Newsprint Paper"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Some new and interesting facts about manufacturing paper are revealed in this Urban Classic No. 47, "From Forest to Newsboy." The felling and chopping of the giant trees and the treatment of the pulp is pictured in detail.—M. K.

"The Morning After"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry's fable hero this time is a dog motor cop. He has other interests besides catching speeders, as the concluding proverb, "Old Stuff is Hard to Get" proves. It should be fairly amusing to anti-drys.—M. K.

"Horseshoes"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

A good many original touches are seen in Larry Semon's latest which has plenty of laughs. Larry wins the disfavor of a giant pugilist and most of the scenes show various amusing tricks in evading him. The action is lively and has a spontaneity that will go very well. He elopes with the prize-fighter's girl and the climax is an exciting motorcycle-automobile race. The comedy is without the elaborateness in settings and costumes of some of the star's recent pictures but makes up for this in speed and fun.—M. K.

"Mother's Joy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Stan Laurel's type of comedy is well featured in this two-reeler, which has a more consistent and effective line of fun than some of his other recent efforts. As the long-lost and banished heir to a wealthy household, he returns, a vast disappointment to his grandfather whom he disgraces by social peculiarities as well as by his musical efforts. There are some highly amusing incidents and altogether it should please the average audience.—M. K.

"Lovey Dovey"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Another of the "Dippy-Doodads" series, and one which is fully as bright and original as the others is now being offered by Pathe. With a maiden duckling and her two monkey-sweethearts as the famous triangle, a quaint and entertaining travesty on the popular thriller with motor and aeroplane races has been made. It is cleverly done and will add to any program.—M. K.

"Under the White Robe"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Neely Edwards' hobo make-up gains him an entree to a masked ball, thus enabling him to elude the police. A skeleton and other mysterious figures float about in mid-air, scattering the guests to the winds. Nervy Ned stands up as best man in a family wedding but a rival of the groom puts out the light, removes the groom and Ned finds himself clasping the hand of the bride in matrimony. Next scene, Reno. This affords fairly good but not new amusement.—M. K.

"Bucking the Line"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

There are some very good bits in this Century comedy with Buddy Messenger. Buddy works or rather amuses himself in his dad's store where there is a laughable scene in the toy department between a baby and a pet monkey. Buddy forgets to be a messenger when sent to deliver goods and distinguishes himself in a football game by substituting a watermelon for a football when kicking and making a touchdown with the real ball. It gains in entertainment value and leaves an impression of satisfaction.—M. K.

"Liquid Lava"

(Educational—Hodge Podge—One Reel)

A great variety of places and incidents are included in this number of Lyman H. Howe's "Hodge Podge." Pictorial beauty is supplied by the views of Roman architecture, the old West, what the searchlights reveals on the water, and the famous New York skyline. A volcano eruption is another feature.—M. K.

"The Way of a Man"

Excellent Thrills in Pathe Serial
Based on Emerson Hough Story

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Emerson Hough's story of pioneer days has been fashioned into thrilling serial by George B. Seitz for Pathe. Serial audiences should respond to this in much the same way as the feature houses do to the author's other great story, "The Covered Wagon." While the action is obvious and entertains without a mental strain, there is a sturdiness and vitality about the theme that makes it an unusually strong attraction.

In the first three episodes, a young Southern gentleman takes a Western trail in search of his dead father's business partner. In company with a caravan of pioneers he is attacked by the Indians. His mission is further endangered by an old acquaintance who has followed, presumably as a friend but really to get possession of his father's property. These complications keep up the suspense so that there is continual excitement.

The Indian attacks have been realistically staged. The make-ups are convincing and general standard of the characterization and atmosphere is high. Harold Miller and Allene Ray are youthful attractive types for the leading parts. Lillian Gale and Whitehorse are fine character studies and Bud Osborne is excellent as the villain.

"Into the Unknown," the first chapter, is in three reels and shows the young Southerner arriving at a Western trading post, attending a masked ball, where he meets Ellen Meriwether, unintentionally piques her but attempts to atone in a thrilling rescue of her, with the Indians close in pursuit.

The second, in two reels, is "Red Skin and White." Further intrigue on the part of the hero's white enemy and a big attack by the Indians, unfinished at the close, furnish excitement in this one.

"In the Toils of the Torrent" shows the hero badly wounded after the Indian skirmish, but restored by the villain, who is forced to use his medical skill. The hero and Ellen Meriwether are trapped in a roaring canyon at the close of this episode.

New Witwer-F. B. O. SeriesTitled "The Telephone Girl"

The new Witwer series which is being filmed by F. B. O. will be known as "The Telephone Girl" and will be based on stories of the same title now appearing in Cosmopolitan Magazine. "Julius Sees Her" has been selected by the author as the title of the first episode.

The series will consist of twelve two-reel episodes and, unlike the "Fighting Blood" series, will be built around a feminine instead of a masculine character. The title role, that of a telephone operator in a Broadway hotel, will be portrayed by Alberta Vaughan, who has been prominent in a large number of Mack Sennett comedies.

Mal St. Clair, who directed the first "Fighting Bloods," is directing this series, and most of the incidents have a humorous twist, but drama develops and the heroine straightens matters out. Prominent in the cast are Al Cooke and Kit Guard, who won great popularity by their work in "Fighting Blood." The cast also includes Gertrude Short and others.

It is believed this series will have a greater appeal for women. However, there is as much ring action which should hold the following built up by "Fighting Blood."

Pathe Signs for New Sennett Series

As a result of the success attending the first series of Mack Sennett two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, it is announced that this famous comedy producer will make a second group for the same distributing organization. The first of the series will be available in January. The first series started with "Nip and Tuck" on August 12 and "Inbad the Sailor" scheduled for December 30 will be the last of the series.

Sid Smith Signed for Cameo Comedies

Educational announces that the well-known comedian Sid Smith has been added to the company making Cameo Comedies under the direction of Gil Pratt. Sid Smith came into prominence with his work in "Hallroom Boys" comedies and has also been starred in a series of two-reelers distributed by Grand-Asher. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are also working in "Oh Girls," a Cameo comedy now in production.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Big Banquet

On Friday, December 24, all the projectionists of the forty or more Loew Theatres in the New York City district will foregather at the "Aristocrat," 69 St. Mark's Place, New York City, where they will partake of the annual midnight banquet in honor of "Mike" Campbell, chief projectionist of the Loew Theatres.

These banquets have been held for a number of years. They have been very successful and have served a good purpose in bringing the Campbell projectionist force together socially once each year. It is expected that the coming affair will be bigger and better than ever. I will tell you all about it later.

Duluth Comes Across

From Duluth Local Union 509, Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., comes the following, under seal:

Brother Richardson: Your article in recent issue relative to the adoption of the word, or term "Projector Room" into the nomenclature of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was brought up at regular meeting last week. Upon being put to a vote it was unanimously decided that the term "Projector Room" is absolutely undesirable, and that the same would be, at best, a misnomer.

The secretary was therefore instructed to advise you that this local places itself on record as unanimously endorsing the term "Projection Room" as the name to be applied to the inclosure housing working projection equipment—the room from which motion pictures are projected.

Signed, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. Local 509,
By E. A. Currey, Secretary.

Good! That is the second local to act in this matter within two weeks, giving notice that they have some interest in things connected with the profession outside the usual routine. Also that they don't propose to allow the producer to instruct them even as to what they shall call the room they work in.

There are many other live-wire locals, I am sure, from which we should and shall hear in due time. Wake up, men! Take a little interest in something else besides merely your wage and actual working conditions. Those certainly are of first importance to you, but that is no reason why they ought to absorb ALL the energy of your organization, especially now that they are pretty well taken care of and out of the way with most of you for some time to come. I should have at least fifty indorsements of "Projection Room" by locals, and at least 10,000 from individual projectionists to present at the next meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Get busy!

From North Wales

Frank H. Kenyon, Projectionist, Princess Picture and Variety Theatre, Colwyn Bay, North Wales, England, says:

Attached find six dollars in exchange for one copy of the "BLUEBOOK of Projection" (Caps are his.—Ed.). If it is not asking too much, I would esteem it highly if you would affix your autograph to same. May say I have the second and third editions, both of which have been very helpful.

Up to now I have been unable to obtain condensers of proper focal length for my optical line-up, so am going to try Cinephor, which I have ordered and expect to arrive shortly.

In closing I thank you for the good work which you are doing and have been doing during the past eleven years I have been reading your writings and learning from you. What about that long promised visit to this little island? Don't let the "stars" leave you behind.

Many thanks for your commendation. It is gratifying to know that one has been able to help even men of other and far removed countries. Makes one feel as though he really has not lived quite in vain. As to the autograph, why, the office has, I think, a few autographed books on hand. No doubt one was sent to you.

I'd like to visit my many English friends alright right, but it's a long way and I'm no bloated plutocrat. Some day when "my ship comes in," perhaps I'll be able to visit old England, and if I do I promise you will "have company" in Colwyn Bay.

Defends Pittsburgh

James M. Hillman, Wilmerding, Pa., says: I see in a recent issue of the department that some chap who calls himself a projectionist has taken a poke at the Pittsburgh men. This man calls himself a Projectionist, but is he? We have to take his word for that, as we cannot examine his work.

I wonder how many of those fellows who sign themselves projectionists really are that, or how many of them are only machine "operators." Doubtless some of them really are what they claim to be, and good ones, too, but also perhaps some make claims they would have trouble in substantiating.

Well, anyhow, I'm one of the Pittsburgh men, member of Pittsburgh Local Union No. 171, so called DUBS, employed at the Capitol Theatre, Braddock, Pa., which has the best projection room in the state. Have a 100—100 Hertner transverter, using 100 amperes at a 65 volt arc. Use one-inch Columbia positives and 7-16 Silvertip negatives and a 6½—9½ plano convex condenser; type S lamps and Peerless arc controls; 5¼ Cinephor lens and projecting a d—n good picture—steady and sharp, though the speed is 13 to 14 reels in two hours, though sometimes we only have ten. Shows are 1 to 3, 3 to 5, 5 to 7, 7 to 9 and 9 to 11.

The "queer ones" in that distinguished city (Pittsburgh) have to keep 'em going or get out, which is one reason for the oil pans you saw beneath the projector mechanisms. I use blotters under the intermittent casing.

I think more of the chap who will try to dig things out for himself, and when he does get it, remembers it, than of the one who has some one else do it for him and then promptly forgets it. That is one reason the Pittsburgh men seldom write. Watch them and shortly you will find what they are preparing to do.

I have the third edition of your handbook, also the Bluebook (fourth edition) and am inclosing check for a dollar for lens chart.

Besides my two projectors I have a switchboard with 28 switches and dimmers and two remote control switches to work, besides keeping my eye on friend picture, and do it all by my lonesome too.

For the love of Mike, give the Pittsburgh men a good word once in a while!

P. S. By the way, with regard to the Pittsburgh Film Board of Trade, if the exchanges would get a few new boxes their films would not get torn on the sides nearly so much. I get some that it requires a hammer, two screwdrivers, a pair of pliers and much language to get the reels out. The metal of some of the boxes is torn around the top, and when you pull out the reel from a single-reel can, unless you are very careful, damage to the film results.

As to the Pittsburgh men, I have not taken them to task nearly as much as the facts in the past would seem to justify. I am encouraged to believe that conditions have improved very much in the Steel City, because the American Projection Society has established its first branch there, and unless the bars of admission have been lowered, which I think they have not, one must be a real projectionist to get into the A. P. S. Heaven knows I've nothing against Pittsburgh itself. I applaud high class work wherever found. I will say, however, that projection speed is NO excuse for the oil cans I spoke of.

If things are better in Pittsburgh I shall be hugely delighted to know it, and will tender my most sincere congratulations to the men on that fact.

As to using the title "Projectionist," why, it probably is true that some use it who have small right to, but the very fact that they do use the term is an incentive to them to make good, and that is one of the main ideas I had in fighting for the adoption of the title Projectionist. Glad to hear from you any time, friend —. Oh piffle, I just found the note at the end of your letter asking that I suppress your name. Alright, 'tis done! Maybe I'll visit Pittsburgh next Summer—maybe.

I read the article by James B. Enoch and it has fired me to the point of writing.

In so doing I wish to call your attention to an organization you may never have heard of—the Association of Independent Cinema Projectionists, which was born here in San Diego three years or more ago. It has grown from a charter membership of ten or fifteen to more than 250 members. I am distinctly proud to say that the entire membership is composed of projectionists, spelled with a capital "P," too.

We insist that every man live up to his title of PROJECTIONIST, hence we have but few grouches in our ranks. As nearly as I know, every man has both a lens chart and a Bluebook of Projection.

Well, doubtless you are by now weary of reading about the A. I. C. P., so I will switch to other topics.

Recently you showed a coffee can film scrap can. I'm not throwing any rocks when I say that such a container has been known to me for years. As to brother Growden and his in-and-out-of-focus effect, I believe if he would get some 32-gauge sheet aluminum and make himself a shutter blade of lighter weight it would greatly reduce the wear and tear on the shutter shaft and bearings, hence reduce lost motion and vibration, and at least tend to reduce the trouble.

For myself I made a pair of your 85-degree shutters and found that I got fully ten per cent. more light on the screen than with ordinary stock shutter. Projecting at 80 feet per minute all flicker tendency disappears. I got the formula from the department some while ago. Believe it would be well to publish it again.

I project in a first run house and get film in very good condition. Try to return it in approximately the same shape in which it was received. Have Powers 6B projectors—two of them, of course. Distance of projection, 70 feet, spreading the light from 50 amperes D. C. over a picture 12 feet 1 inch by 9 feet 1 inch; glass bead screen; use Snap-lite projection lenses, 5.2 E. F. with a 6¼-7¼ condenser—plano convex. Am not sure my conditions are right but will know as soon as chart comes. You will probably hear from the A. I. C. P., Local No. 2, in future.

I am glad to hear from San Diego—glad indeed, because the men there impressed me as progressive when I visited that beautiful city some years ago. I don't quite understand the I. A. C. P., though. If it is an educational organization, auxiliary to the San Diego I. A. local, I'm for it. If it is displacing the local—well, that is very much something else again. Let us have further particulars.

From Duluth

Ray L. Brainerd, Duluth, Minn., orders a lens chart and says:

I have no doubt but that local union 509 will, in due time, officially approve of the term "Projection Room" as against "Projector Room," and so notify you.

The Bluebook is a masterpiece. Every member of Local 509 owns one and consults it, too. The one who is trying to earn his living at the profession of motion picture projection, and do it creditably, cannot be without one.

Would you be good enough to send a decent photograph of yourself? It will be accounted a valuable addition to the decorations of our new lodge room. Never mind saying "no" to this request, as that isn't the answer at all.

Huh, man dear, you don't suppose I'd send an indecent photograph, do you? It happens that I have not, at this time, a good photograph, but as I am offered the honor of a place on the walls of your lodge room, by gum, I'll have some taken real soon, and Local 509 shall have one.

Non-Professional

James L. Jameson, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Perhaps you do not answer questions concerning the motion picture field outside of theatres, but I very much want to know what makes of motion picture projectors approved for use in the home.

I do not pay very much attention to projectors outside the professional field, but here is the list that is approved by the Pennsylvania Industrial Board, or that was approved by that body last Summer. It may or may not have been added to or subtracted from since then. I would suggest that you write the Secretary of the Industrial Board, Harrisburg, Pa., for up-to-the-minute information:

DeVry, with safety cutout and spring gate; Graphoscope, with safety cutout; Acme, 12-F and SVE; Projectoscope; Aladdin; Victor Safety Cinema; Pathoscope; Zenith and the Burwood.

That is the full list supplied me by the Board last Summer. I might add that in order to work with these projectors you must apply to the State Industrial Board for a license, naming the make of projector you propose to handle.

What Do You Think?

There have been those, in the past, who have censured me for what they term my "harsh criticism." To cite an illustrative instance: A man high up in I. A. Councils, recently asked me: "Richardson, what in the name of Heaven ever possessed you to write so harshly about Chicago the last time you were there?"

"In Chicago, as elsewhere," I replied, "I described EXACTLY what I saw, giving praise where praise was deserved, and censure where censure was deserved, just as I have done everywhere and always."

I am not to blame if I find punk work or bad conditions! Is it wrong to give them publicity? Could I get better results by not doing so? Would the profession of projection and the industry be better served were I to smooth over faults and deal only in praise?

I am in earnest about this. If my methods are wrong I want to know it. RESULTS are what I am after. If milder methods will get them better than the methods I have been using, I will be delighted to use milder methods. My whole argument has been that the man who did not NEED censure did not and would not get it; that the man who lacked interest or knowledge, or who was too lazy to give the best possible results, RICHLY DESERVED TO BE EXPOSED, and that his exposure could only be of benefit to the profession of projection and to the motion picture industry.

I would much appreciate the setting forth of YOUR views. If Chicago felt hurt or unjustly dealt with, I would highly appreciate an expression of opinion as to just WHY she felt unjustly dealt with by a frank statement of exactly what I saw with my own eyes. I will make this offer: when next I am in Chicago I will be glad to take the President or Business Agent of the Chicago local with me on a tour of Chicago theatres, and will not say one solitary thing concerning what we see, except what he himself approves of, PROVIDED that he lets me purchase admission tickets, and that we enter without either of us being known.

I have tried hard to be just and fair. I want to be that, but have always felt that IT IS NO MORE FAIR TO REFRAIN FROM SETTING FORTH OBJECTIONABLE FACTS THAN IT WOULD BE TO DETRACT FROM THOSE THINGS WHICH DESERVE PRAISE. I would highly appreciate your views on this point.

Well, Rather!

From Oklahoma comes this:

Thought I'd just let you know that Oklahoma is still lying around out here in the "great open spaces." While I'm about it I'll ask a bit of information regarding something which is not in the Bluebook. Started projecting at the — Theatre last September. Found things in a very unclean condition. Lenses were covered with oil and had been in this condition for six or seven months. Would or would not this collecting of oil deaden the working power of the lenses?

Holy smoke, friend, if you mean that the lenses themselves—the glass surfaces—were covered with oil—but surely you cannot mean that, since if it were true you would get nothing but a blur on the screen. If you mean there was oil on the lens jackets—the barrel in which the lenses are mounted—then I would say that, while such a condition is something no projectionist should or would tolerate, still it would not affect the actual working of the lens.

Two-Blade Shutter

Joe De Renzy, East Stroudsburg, Pa., wants to know why the blades on an extralite shutter, used for A. C., are the same width. Says he stopped travel ghost by following my instructions and increasing width of master blade by about ¼ inch on each side, but that it increased flicker tendency.

The two-blade shutter is used for A. C. because with a three-blader the shutter blades are apt to get into synchronism with the alternations of the current. You know that with single-phase 60-cycle current there is no current or voltage at the arc 120 times each second, hence the light is much diminished at those periods. Should the blades of the shutter cover the lens just at the instant the current is at full value, and uncover it at the instant the current is at negative value, the result would be diminution of light on the screen and since the shutter could not possibly remain in perfect synchronism for but a very short period of time, the net result is a waving effect in screen illumination. This does not occur when a two-blader is used.

The two-blader is made with equal blade and opening widths because thus the flicker tendency is kept at minimum value. See pages 622-623 of the Bluebook for more complete explanation.

A Christmas Suggestion

Someone you know would appreciate a copy of F. H. Richardson's new fourth edition HANDBOOK OF PROJECTION more than anything else you could give.

The Handbook is absolutely the last word on projection. Its 974 pages of information and 842 questions with answers leave nothing to be desired. It is worth its price times over.

This is a suggestion to act on NOW. Xmas is near and the mails will soon be crowded. So mail your order TODAY with $6.00, to:

More Dope on the Operation of Independent Generating Plants

IN our issue of November 3, we published an article on the independent generating plant and its application to the motion picture theatre.

Before our November 3 issue was many days old, we were in receipt of inquiries from readers which showed that they were in the market for approximately $10,000 worth of independent generating plants.

In addition to these inquiries, as to where plants, such as we described, could be obtained, we also received requests for further information on the subject.

Having started to do the manufacturer's work for him, we figure we might just as well finish it, and are, accordingly, answering some of the typical questions asked us, as we have reason to believe that they touch on points which are of vital interest to many readers of the Moving Picture World.

War In the Dark

One inquirer, who frankly states that he knows nothing about independent generating plants or whether they are practical and dependable, wants to know just what the cost per hour for operation would be on a 7 1/2 KW plant, and if he could save money in the long run by installing such a plant.

Our correspondent is losing sight of the fact that the outstanding advantage of an independent generating plant lies not in its possessor's ability to compete in price with the local public service station furnishing current, but in the assurance it gives that he will have the juice on tap when he wants it, in spite of poor service from or a breakdown of his local power station.

The main consideration in the matter is not a few cents one way or the other in current cost, but in obviating cash losses of admissions when the house is dark, to say nothing of the bad effect produced on one's patrons by an interrupted show.

Approximate Estimate of Cost

The case of one of our inquiries whose current bill amounts to $630.88 per annum and who figures out that he has an annual loss of $300.00, due to a dark house, caused by current failure, is a typical one from which it is fair to estimate initial and operating cost of a 7 1/2 K.W. plant and which we dope out approximately as follows:

Depreciation at 15 per cent. (Cost of plant $1,200).....	$180.00
Cost of operation (Generating current 4 1/2 hours per night at 33c. per hour, gasoline at 22c.) figuring 312 shows per annum..	619.32
	$799.32
Present electric light bills	$630.88
Actual loss by dark house.....	300.00
	$930.88
Saving at end of first year	$130.56

We have placed a heavy depreciation charge against the outfit, 50% more in fact than manufacturers tell us that we should and, moreover, it is to be remembered that the owner of the house is not figuring on what its second-hand value will be; also that the outfit will give him many years of service.

Where Mirror or Mazda Would Help

Another exhibitor shows from his inquiry that his requirements are just over the border line of the capabilities of a 7 1/2 K.W. plant. This is caused solely by the

They Ask the World

In this department for November 3 we printed a story on independent generating plant.

Properly this was the province of the manufacturers of such plant, but none of them seemed to realize that the public wanted to know, so we did their work for them.

Within a week we had received inquiries indicating that these correspondents alone were in the market for such plants totaling in excess of $10,000. Just these few who were sufficiently interested to write in for more detailed information—and addresses.

What's the matter with the manufacturers? Are they trying to keep their existence a trade secret? We'll help tell an interested world, but we can't keep on taking space we need for other matters to advertise generating sets. In this issue we carry the matter further for the benefit of our readers. The rest is going to be up to the makers of such equipment.

And to show the general spirit of our readers, who have come to look to this department for real dollars and sense aid in the purchase of equipment, we reproduce one—just one—of a number of recent letters. It runs:

"We are asking you for this information as the Moving Picture World seems to be more interested in subscribers than just merely mailing the magazine each week."

C. C. JOHNSON, Manager,
A-Mus-U Theatre,
Melville, La.

fact that, although he has a small house, he is utilizing a regular arc projection lamp. If he were utilizing either Mirror reflecting or Mazda lamp projection, his wattage requirements would be sufficiently reduced to come within the facilities provided by a 7 1/2 K.W. plant.

In equipping a new or re-equipping an old house, this fact could be carried in mind to advantage and also the fact that one's own independent generating plant permits the use of direct current motors for furnishing power to the electric fans, ventilating apparatus and organ.

Many exhibitors, who would now like to install an independent lighting plant, are up against the fact that they are utilizing alternating current for projection and power purposes, whereas if they had installed A. C. to D. C. motor generators and operated their apparatus on D. C., no changes would be required when installing an independent plant.

Where the Storage Battery Comes In

Another difficulty encountered when one's requirements are close up to the facilities of a certain sized plant is the fact that one can get along all right up to the time when one changes over from one projector to the other, and these few seconds require a higher wattage than an otherwise satisfactory small plant can provide. This is where an auxiliary set of storage batteries could be installed to advantage to take care of this occasional peak of current requirement.

One of our readers states that he is now using alternating current—110 volts—and that all his equipment is wired for this. He wants a generating set that he can throw in when necessary and utilize his present equipment. He is utilizing Mazda projection and he uses but one motor—of 2 1/2 horse power—for operating his organ.

In this case, the best course for him to pursue would be to install an A. C. to D. C. motor generator, to use with his usual current supply and dispose of the organ motor and obtain one wired for direct current. His Mazda projection lamps will require no change beyond the installation of a direct current rheostat. Independent generating plants, to generate A. C. are only built in the larger sizes and the difference in cost between the smaller size D. C. generating plant which he could obtain and one generating alternating current would be far greater than would cover his expenditure for a new motor—less what he could obtain for his present outfit.

Another Method

Should the exhibitor object to the plan of installing an A. C. to D. C. converter which would remain idle while an independent lighting set is operating, the following outfit could be substituted.

A 15 H.P. alternating current motor wired according to voltage and frequency of the public service supply and equipped with starting box and fused main switch may be belted to a 7½ K.W. compound D.C. generator. This for service in connection with the A.C. public service supply.

Connected by belt and fast and loose pulley to the generator, a 15 H.P. gasolene engine would produce the juice when the public service supply failed.

Such an outfit would require a special switchboard equipped with volt meter, ammeter, field rheostat, fuses, and a two pole 100 ampere main switch—it being taken for granted that distributing switches are already installed in the house.

This outfit would be less compact than a direct connected generating plant while its strong point would be the economy in purchase of equipment effected by the utilization of the generator for both public service and emergency current supply.

Economy of A. C. to D. C. Generator

The instances quoted above indicate that, aside from the improvement in projection, every house should be provided with means for converting alternating current to direct current; so that, at any time, it may install an independent generating plant without other change in the equipment.

One correspondent pathetically asks whether he should receive power or light rates for the current utilized on his projection machine.

He should receive the power rate, but he has just about as much of a chance of getting it as a Ford run-about has of holding its right-of-way against a ten ton truck. The chances are, however, that if he installed an independent generating plant, his public service corporation would offer him a lower rate and that he would continue to enjoy that lower rate just as long as he kept that independent plant in commission.

Cases have been known in which lighting companies have made particularly moderate rates to houses equipped to produce their own current, but jumped these rates immediately the exhibitor discarded his independent lighting equipment.

New Film Exchange

DALLAS, TEXAS — Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has plans by Lang & Witchell for erection of two-story film exchange building at Market and Jackson street, 50 by 100 feet, to cost $35,000.

BELVIDERE, ILL.—Midwest Theatres, Inc., operating a chain of moving picture and vaudeville theatres in Aurora, Rockford, Joliet, Decatur, Blooming, Galesburg, Elgin, Beloit and La Crosse, has taken over recently completed DeKalb Theatre.

Greenbaum Didn't Forget Projection Room When His House Was Renovated

THE "Great Transformation Act" as put on by Mark Greenbaum practically gave the town of Lorain a new theatre. It certainly looks like new and the public is flocking to it.

The theatre which was renovated was the old opera house, but is now known as the State Theatre. It was taken over last summer by Mark Greenbaum and his son Jack and by remodeling the lobby and front, together with a thorough renovating of the interior, a fine, home-like, comfortable and up-to-date theatre now appears.

The interior, which is of the double-balcony style, was redecorated and furnished, but beyond this it was quite impossible for Greenbaum to make any great improvements without entirely reconstructing it.

But the lobby received plenty of attention. Greenbaum pulled out a partition and made that portion of the house twice as large. Then he fitted it tastefully with wicker furniture, ferns and flowers for use as a lounging place. This was something new in Lorain and made a hit. The lighting fixtures were all changed so as to give more illumination, and a bubbler fountain was installed.

Two New Simplexes

The projection room was enlarged and two new Simplex projectors installed by the Argus Company, of Cleveland. It is now roomy and one of the best ventilated in the state.

The street front of the old house was completely transformed. A step leading to the sidewalk was eliminated and a new marquee and golden finished wood frames were fitted on the sides. A new electric sign, with changeable letters on both sides of the marquee was set up, the stage rewired and a system of indirect lighting installed in the theatre proper.

The State plays a combination program of five acts of vaudeville and a feature picture, changing twice a week, on Sundays and Thursdays. John Gallagher, formerly manager of the Miles Theatre, Cleveland, is the house manager.

The Week's Record of Albany Incorporations

The week ended December 8 witnessed a decided slump in the number of motion picture companies incorporating and entering business in New York State.

There were but two companies incorporated instead of the six or eight which are generally formed in the Empire State each week.

These two companies are the Hanlon Silhouette Film Company, capitalized for $20,000, and with George W. Hanlon, of New York, together with M. G. and Pauline Blankenburg, of Newark, N. J., and the H. E. R. Studios, with a capitalization of $10,000, and with Grace Sheehan, John Thow and Isaac Schmal, of New York, as directors for the first year.

The American Ace

The Premier of Portable Projectors
Ready for immediate delivery~

A projector that is portable, practical, convenient and gives projection to compare with a permanent installation—these are some of the reasons for the tremendous popularity of the new American Ace.

No need to put up with poor projection—unhandy cases—unsatisfactory lighting—or flimsy construction.

The Ace is not only easily portable, but is practical in the strictest sense of the word.

It gives a steadier, more brilliant picture at all distances from ten to one hundred twenty feet than is possible with any other portable projector.

For churches, schools, industrial sales, advertising, production, welfare and all educational and entertainment purposes, it is ideal—for use in a small room or a large auditorium.

You'll Say It's an Audience Picture!

And a box office picture, too!

That's what we set out to make—a picture that would get the public into your theatre, any time, any place! And we have certainly hit the nail on the head this time; it's a knockout!

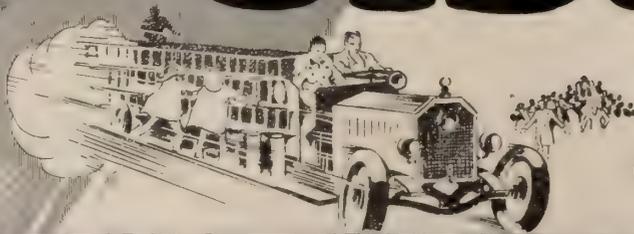

How your audiences are going to thunder their applause—they'll raise the roof as Hoot leaves them thrilled and breathless time and time again. You know what Hoot can do with a bucking bronco—but just wait until you see him with a roaring fire-truck! And speaking of box office receipts—why, that's just what we mean when we say it's his greatest picture!

HOOK and LADDER

UNIVERSAL GIBSON PRODUCTION ♦♦ Directed by EDWARD SEDGWICK

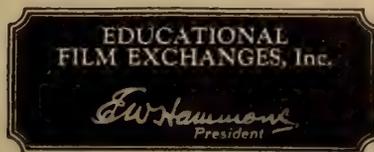

NEW YEAR IS ABOUT TO START that is sure to mean much, for good or ill, to the motion picture industry.

What will the year bring? Will it find the industry still permitting the Ego of some selfish directors to go on padding features into unwarranted, tiresome lengths, or will it see a return to the feature of normal length, that will permit an exhibitor to build up a REAL SHOW, a program of diversified entertainment such as built up the tremendous popularity of motion pictures?

It is largely up to you, Mr. Exhibitor, to bring about this needed reform. If you raise your voice loud enough, it will be heard and heeded. And unless features come to a saner length, all the best wishes for a prosperous New Year for you will be in vain, for, as Danny says in Film Daily, "the public is willing and anxious to pay for real entertainment—diversified entertainment—and sooner or later will refuse to pay for 'Ego'."

Let's all work earnestly for this reform, so that the whole industry may have a prosperous year, which is Educational's sincere wish.

E. W. Hammond

What is an All Star Cast?

WE see many pictures on the market advertised as presenting an "all-star cast." Most often on close examination this "all-star cast" reveals one featured player supported by a group of practically unknown personalities. The phrase "an all-star cast" is used loosely in advertising is not slow to recognize a real all-star cast from a false one. Releases of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan possess casts which are "electric light names." Look over our list and note the combined drawing power of each one of these players. These are truly all-star casts.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases have the finest Casts of all

Frank Elliott in M. P. News: "One of the best pictures produced this season. A story that grips the interest at all times, boasting several fine punches and a climax that will pull the most hard-boiled fan right up to the edge of the seat. For thrill, the big forest fire climax has not been surpassed this year."

Louella O. Parsons in N. Y. American: "The direction is particularly good in this picture. There is a flood, a forest fire and a number of other thrilling events. The forest fire is well done."

Dorothy Day in N. Y. Morning Telegraph: "Lucretia Lombard" is primarily a money-maker, and the Warner Bros. should be quite pleased to add it to their list. A fine screen presentation."

Quinn Martin in New York World: "Lucretia Lombard" is a highly sentimental, very well acted melodrama. It is cast and mounted nicely, and extremely effective."

N. Y. Evening Telegram: "Spectacular thrills follow each other uninterruptedly in this production. Amid the horrors of forest fires and turbulent flood, the drama of conflict steadily develops to a crescendo of emotions, thence rising to a whirlwind climax."

N. Y. Sun & Globe: "Irene Rich, Marc MacDermott, Norma Shearer and Monte Blue give performances that are sincere and fine as anything seen in the films this year."

N. Y. Evening Mail: "Lucretia Lombard" at the Strand this week is a 'sell out.' Exhibitors need have no fear for the box-office when this picture comes to their theatres."

N. Y. Evening Journal: "The narrative, as filmed, bristles with situations. Good effects in the flaming woods and raging rivers."

N. Y. Times Square Daily: "A real box-office hit. 'Lucretia Lombard' is a strong story and Jack Conway, who directed, handled the job skillfully, getting in several touches of the sexy variety that are sure to prove of assistance at the box-office."

N. Y. Evening Post: "Queer to relate, and unusual in this day of the obvious, the production is bound to raise many questions. Excellent, well acted, intelligently cast, an interesting and enjoyable story which is never soporific."

Harriette Underhill in N. Y. Tribune: "The cast is excellent. There is an ingenue who is the last word in ingenues."

Progress & Achievement

"Anna Christie" reaches the theatres for Christmas. It should contribute materially toward exhibitor prosperity in 1924.

The newspaper and magazine critics call "Anna Christie" the greatest picture I have ever produced, and declare it to be an outstanding production of a season in which many fine pictures have been released.

The test engagements have established "Anna Christie" as a highly successful box-office attraction.

For a great many years I have been producing pictures that have made money in the theatres, and I intend to continue to do so for a great many years to come. I refuse to be stampeded by the hysterics of the industry into policies which violate good business judgment.

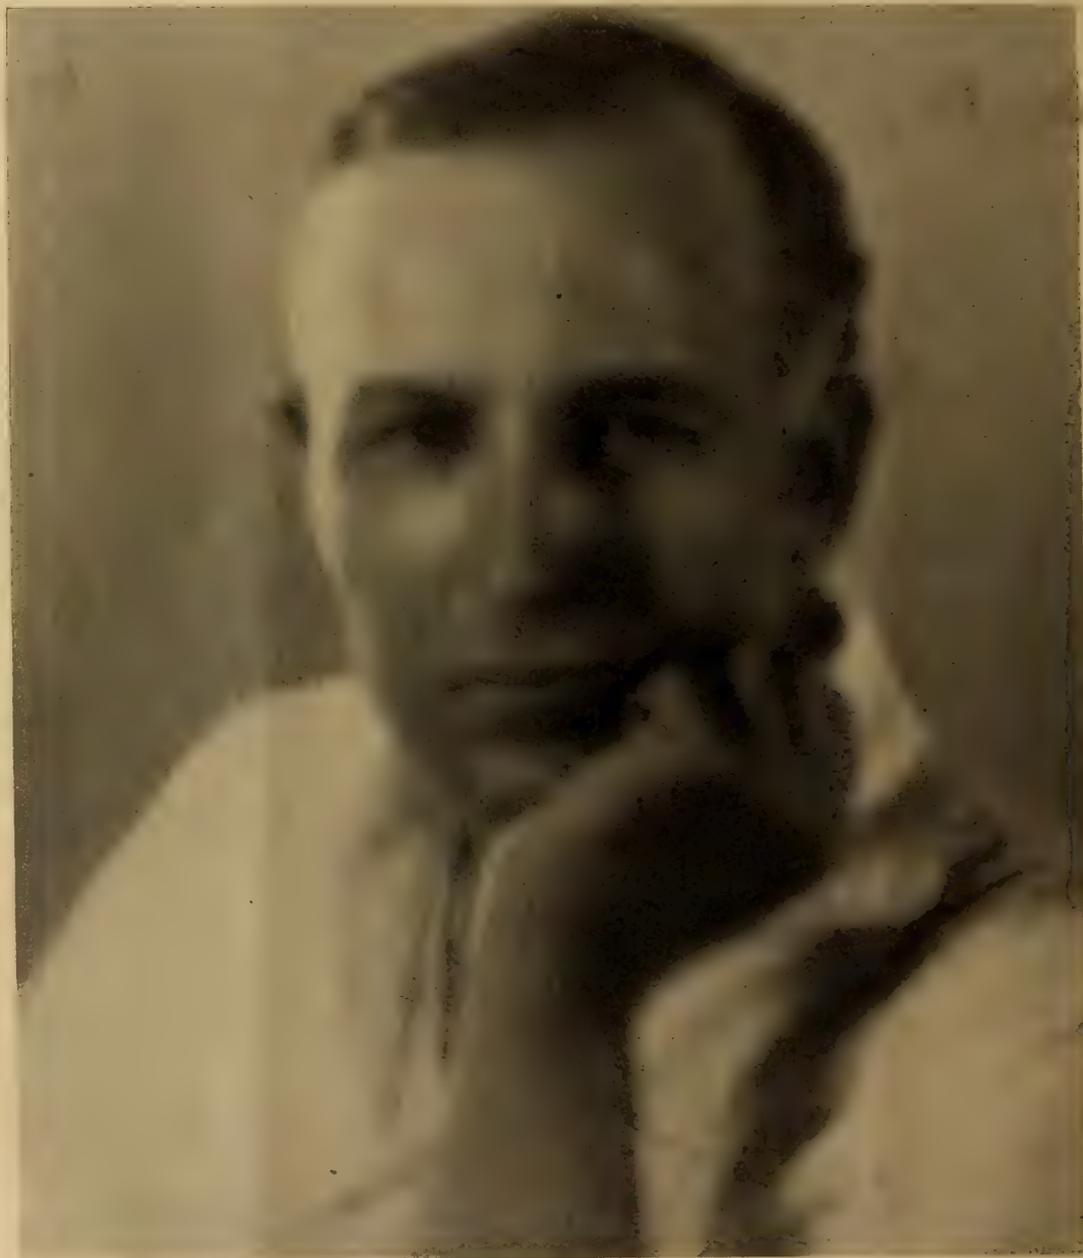

Ours is an industry of progress. We have gone forward more than even we realize during the twelve months of 1923, and I pledge myself, my resources and my organization toward greater progress in 1924, toward finer pictures and higher standards.

Who Writes Screen Plots Juicy with Showmans' Exploitation Possibilities!

Meet "Bill" Pelley! He is the man who wrote "The Light in the Dark," "The Shock," "Her Fatal Millions," "The Fog" and eight other photoplays this year, FIVE OF WHICH ARE NOW IN PRODUCTION. What other Dramatist can point to five of his screen plays all being "shot" at the same time? Tom Mix is making a Pelley story right now; so is Maurice Tourneur; so is Hoot Gibson; so is the U. S. Department of Justice. Richard Thomas has just acquired the rights to a new Pelley story: "What Women Love."

$100,000 OF PHOTOPLAY PLOTS

is the figure Pelley's sales force and exploitation staff have before them for a goal in the year ahead. He operates a printing plant, art department and group of professional exploitation men to wring his plays dry of exploitation possibilities for both producer and exhibitor. He also will start the publication of a house organ, "THE SCREEN SHOWMAN," on January 1st. This is to be sent free to every showman running Pelley's screen plays.

A STORY WITH A WALLOP EVERY TWO WEEKS FOR 1924. ASK YOUR PRODUCER TO SEND YOU HIS PELLELY PLAYS—Fox, Universal, Metro, First National, Film Booking Offices have them and you can buy them right because Pelley sold them right—they will please your patrons!

The Greatest Story of All!

A MASSIVE DRAMA of the beginning of the America that you know. The struggles of a few that became the romance of one hundred million people. It is the story of Her whom you love more than any other . . . of Her for whom you would shed your blood . . . of Her for whom you would sacrifice all—the first great story of America.

The Daughters of the American Revolution wanted a complete, accurate and dramatic version of America's greatest of all stories, the Revolutionary War, told with a true mastery upon the screen. They informed Will H. Hays of their wishes. And Mr. Hays discussed the idea with

Carol Dempster

D. W. GRIFFITH

He agreed to make it. To do so he and his staff of players visited practically every shrine of American Liberty taking scenes of the drama upon the actual ground where they occurred in the Revolution.

Helping Griffith to make this story more accurate than any story of this period has ever been, are The Daughters of the American Revolution, The Sons of the Revolution, President Edwin Worthen of the Lexington Historical Society, the Boston Historical Society, the Mount Vernon Historical Society, the Smithsonian Institution, the New York Public Library.

Robert W. Chambers, accepted as one of the best informed historians on Revolutionary matters, has written the story in the filming. John L. E. Pell is making the historical arrangements.

The name selected for this tremendous production is

Neil Hamilton

“AMERICA”

The cast being chosen is recommended by appearance and ability alone. It is not intended that a famous character shall be altered to fit a famous actor. Literally hundreds of persons have been tested out that these characters shall be real in appearance.

From the Author—

"... when a picture's pathos makes a group of newspaper reporters cry visibly and sniffle audibly as 'Boy of Mine' did last night, and then brings forth shrieks of delighted laughter from everybody, the producer ought to be satisfied."

From Motion Picture News—

"How thoroughly adapted is Ben Alexander as the youngster. No suggestion of coaching in his acting, he portrays the lad with genuine sympathy and feeling. The story has a full quota of true touches... it is worth seeing."

From the Moving Picture World—

"Here is a picture that deserves a place among the best of the season. It is a gem among pictures. It is one of those pictures no one should miss."

Directed by FRANK LLOYD

With its tremendous book sales; with 231 or more newspapers telling the story of "Black Oxen" to their 5,000,000 readers every day; with the publicity this picture is obtaining—and with such a production, our claim is modest.

Read what the Exhibitors' Herald had to say—
"Gertrude Atherton's 'Best Seller' Made Into Splendid Production"

"It ought to be a clean-up for every exhibitor who plays it. It's a novel with a million dollars' worth of publicity and advertising back of it and all this publicity can be turned to good account in exploiting the picture. Never have we seen Miss Griffith more beautiful or more alluring. Miss Atherton's story contains such an unusual theme and has created such a stir that there is an immense audience waiting to see this filmization of her book. And director Frank Lloyd has made an excellent job of it, one that puts him in the front rank of present day directors. 'Black Oxen' will prove a surprise for most picture devotees. A 'best seller' made into a best seller."

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Pride

¶ Out of every great industry there has grown an organ that is flesh of that industry's flesh, soul of its soul.

Suffering as that industry suffers; prospering as its individuals prosper. Sharing the joys and tribulations, the progress and the set-backs, the conquests and the defeats of its industry. But, always, SHARING.

Living with its industry, but never on it; sometimes leading to the hazardous paths of ambition; never following along the highway of expediency; meeting Today's problems squarely, never compromising with Tomorrow for Today's unmerited gain.

An organ whose Memory encompasses the first yesterday, whose Vision is directed to the far horizon.

¶ These thoughts come to mind as we complete the preparation of this year's holiday feature: "Seventeen Years of Picture History as Seen Through the Pages of Moving Picture World."

Pardon us the gesture of pride.

We are making it as an individual, speaking of a third party. For our own humble person shrinks to insignificance in the structure that is Moving Picture World.

* * *

¶ Its beginnings deep-rooted in the industry's struggle for independence, Moving Picture World can face its seventeen-year story without an apology.

Mistakes have been made, it is true. Because Moving Picture World is as fallible as it is human. And it will ever be written that sincere courage errs while expediency temporizes.

Realizing always that the ultimate good of ANY branch of this industry is irrevocably bound up in the continuous well-being of ALL branches—Moving Picture World has at times disagreed with individuals, but never with conscience.

And if there be a page to list the honest mistakes—what glorious chapters record the achievements. To exhibitors, producers, distributors, may be left the testimony of aid rendered individuals, of contributions made to an industry's forward strides.

* * *

¶ I am proud to be a part of Moving Picture World; to be a part of that which is part and parcel of the motion picture industry.

I am proud to be the mouthpiece chosen by the moment to renew Moving Picture World's pledge of unswerving service to its industry.

Drinking the wine of Golden Memories we pledge that Nineteen Twenty-Four will not dim a record that bears no touch of tarnish.

John Flinn and Paul Mooney share the Personality news of the week. Both have acquired the "first of the year" urge and have decided to turn over new pages.

It's something of a shock to hear that John Flinn is resigning from Famous Players-Lasky. It seemed an inseparable combination. John holds an almost unique record of continuous service in important capacity with one organization. It must have been back in 1915 or so that the New York Herald lost him to Lasky; John later figuring as one of the assets in the Lasky-Famous-Paramount mergers.

John Flinn is taking up important executive work after the first of the year with—but, hold on, it isn't ready for announcement yet. But just as John's post is important you may count on it that the organization he joins is also, and will be more so, through his acquisition.

The ever-smiling Paul Mooney, who has been getting the money for Louis B. Mayer and making both exhibitors and distributor sales managers like it, is also "taking up important executive work with a prominent picture company." More anon.

If we were addicted to rumors we might mention Hodgkinson prominently in this week's gossip, but—

One of Bill Johnston's exhibitor readers has at last written a letter to his Congressman. That will help, Bill.

Among the Christmas wishes that have come to our attention:

Jerome Beatty says if his youngsters don't get snow for Christmas he may get sore enough to pack up and go back to California. This summer-like weather is no way to treat a loyal native son who has returned to the Eastern fold.

Harry Schwalbe says that about six "Ponjolas" and "Flaming Youths" next year will make the dollars and cents department of First National believe fully in Santa Claus.

Harry used to be able to smile even in the days when it was all going out to Chaplin and Joe Schenck and a little less coming in. You can imagine his jovial appearance as 1924 nears.

This Week

Al Lichtman is thinking of petitioning Santa or Uncle Sam to make a $.65 coin. Great help to the exhibitors who are going to play "The Hunchback."

That stuff about cutting production cost is all off. The Southern California Jockey Club is going to hold a meeting near Los Angeles early in the year. Applications for bookmaking posts will be filled in the order of receipt—up to the first hundred thousand.

Mark Kellogg has been appointed to the advertising and publicity post at Associated First National, succeeding Bob Dexter.

Brother Kellogg comes from the general advertising field, having directed the advertising work of the Burroughs Adding Machine. Let us say here that if the house organ, dealer helps, and Satevepost copy of Burroughs are any criterion, the picture field has made an acquisition.

That goes double. We have it that Mr. Kellogg is also a "reg'lar feller." On the authority of Bob Dexter. There isn't any better.

Howard Dietz has a Christmas wish. "Hurry along that 'Ben Hur,'" he says. "I want to show 'em something."

C. A. "Doc" Willat was a recent visitor to the office to tell us about the glories of Technicolor. The color sequence in "The Ten Commandments" tells it all in emphatic fashion.

Famous must feel the same way. Going to make a Zane Grey special entirely in Technicolor.

Rumors also that Famous is looking closely into the DeForrest talking pictures.

Everybody is seeking something besides million dollar sets to make 'em sit up next year. A good sign.

March 29th has been set as the date for the next "Naked Truth" dinner. A. M. Botsford will once more be chairman, a reward for efficient service.

Nat Rothstein has the habit of speed and zip so pronouncedly that he came across last week with his beautiful Holiday Greeting card. "The Mail Man" brought it.

A poor trade paper person can hardly get time to work these days with all the rumors that are afloat. Resignations here, acquisitions there—the pot a-boiling merrily. Watch for a lot of short and crisp items after the first of the year.

The boys are not running true to form, however. Going over The World files the other day, we found that ninety-nine out of every hundred men who resigned in the picture business did so because: "I have long contemplated going into business for myself, and now feel that the time is ripe for this departure," etc., etc.

Quite a number of our best known picture people are hanging their Christmas stockings in the lobby of Doc Gianinni's bank.

Our own Christmas wish:

May all your pictures be "Covered Wagons." Whether you make 'em, show 'em, talk about 'em, or sell 'em.

"On with the Music Fight" Ohio Exhibitors Tell Mills

SAM BULLOCK, field representative of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, addresses the following open letter to E. C. Mills, chairman, Advisory Board, American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers:

You are quoted in trade papers of this date as saying that the conferences inaugurated at Atlantic City between your society and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are now at an end. This is the first public intimation Ohio exhibitors have received that the "armistice" you officially asked for at Atlantic City is now declared off. As one who questioned you at some length at Atlantic City, after hearing your statement that you had full authority to act, it does not surprise me to learn of your decision as quoted in the trade papers.

Your agent at Cleveland has absolutely ignored your officially requested armistice of August 9, and from the moment I informed him of our "gentlemen's agreement," immediately upon my arrival from Atlantic City, he loaded the mails with even more insistent demands for so-called "liquidated damages" and returned many license fee checks to our members whom I had advised to pay the license and escape court action under the conditions you suggested when pleading for the armistice before the men who hesitated to give you an audience, but were afterwards impressed by your apparent sincerity.

We know we have a few members, though the number is negligible, who did not understand the joint notice sent out by your society and the M. P. T. O. of America, but we soon had each properly informed in Ohio.

On the contrary your Cleveland agent, while ignoring your armistice entirely at all times to my face, was writing your general manager, Mr. Rosenthal, beseeching him to "abrogate that Atlantic City agreement at once!" I now have the evidence. He played this game from August 13 to October 17, while gathering-in so-called "liquidated damages" despite his New York employers' orders, issued by you. His "damages," plus license fee, are seldom less than $100, a "fine" imposed by him! He persistently denied knowing anything of you or your authority while pleading by mail, "Please abrogate that agreement!" In spite of a partial knowledge of this on our part we kept the faith with your society in Ohio.

Your trade-paper statement is misleading, for while we did correct and control our few uninformed members in Ohio you failed miserably to control your one employe in Cleveland and, incidentally, the same in Cincinnati, though he has acted a little decently in comparison.

Your announced intention to pursue a more vigorous campaign than ever is welcomed by Buckeye exhibitors. Your quoted statement that "$125,000 in fines has been collected from 500 exhibitors" is all we needed to stiffen the backbones of Buckeye fighters. You will need every dollar of that for Ohio will never compromise.

Off with armistice! On with the fight!

Opens New Exchange

Edward Grossman, former special representative for Preferred Pictures, has opened an Exchange in Chicago at 808 S. Wabash Ave. called the Epic Film Attractions.

His first release is the Weiss Bros.' Super production "After Six Days" and will also distribute their series of one-reel classics.

Hodkinson Seeks Exhibitor Advice

Since exhibitors are probably in a position to know better than anyone else what kind of pictures the public wants, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is seeking their advice as to the type of "western" they desire to see Harry Carey appear in. The popular star has been signed up to make a series of six pictures for Hodkinson release and a questionnaire is being sent to ten thousand exhibitors throughout the country in order that they may give their impression of the public taste. They are asked to signify their choice of the character of the star, the location of the setting and the chief interest of the story.

"The Night Hawk," the first picture in the Harry Carey series, has been completed. Hunt Stromberg produced it.

Pictures Made Hits

Associated Exhibitors scored heavily in Cincinnati during the week of December 10 with first runs in two of the leading theatres of the city. Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" was the feature at the Strand, while "The Destroying Angel," one of Leah Baird's 1923 Specials, was the offering at the Palace.

Avoid Post Mortems, Says Pelley by Having Exhibitor Viewpoint

CAN much of the high cost of producing pictures be eliminated by "shooting the piece" on paper and selling exhibitors on a given story plot before the first set is built or the camera turned for the first "take?"

William Dudley Pelley believes that it can and is backing his belief with American dollars. During the past two years Pelley has been selling his screen dramas at the rate of one every three weeks by a novel sales system. With the original intention of bidding for quick decisions from reading staffs, he not only placed the whole synopsis of a play he was offering for sale in a small, handy circular, but went somewhat into cost of production, theme, cast and audience appeal. As a result, his system not only brought handsome returns, it is said, but warrants him in going a step further in 1924.

Installing a complete printing plant in New York City with linotypes and two-color presses, on January 1 he is starting an art and exploitation department.

William A. Pause, the film artist, formerly of the Paramount and Goldwyn organizations, will give all his time to Pelley productions after the first of the year. Charles E. Wagner, formerly of Pathe, will edit press books to be issued as each play is offered producers, and also take charge of a weekly newspaper, "The Screen Showman," which will be a house organ sent to exhibitors who play Pelley's dramas giving them the smartest dope obtainable on how to make Pelley dramas box-office successes. Several other professional exploitation men from other organizations are also going with Pelley after January 1.

Pelley says he intends to "play the producers and exhibitors game" to the utmost of his ability and demonstrate in his elaborate press-books and circularizations how Pelley stories hold exploitation values they cannot afford to ignore.

At the present time Bill Pelley has five screen dramas in course of production to be released shortly in addition to "The Fog," "Her Fatal Millions" and "The Shock," all of which are now going big. The five include: Tom Mix in "Ladies to Board" by Fox; "Courtin' Calamity" with Hoot Gibson by Universal; "Torment" with Owen Moore directed by Maurice Tourneur for First National; "Crimes Against Criminals" for the U. S. Department of Justice, and "What Women Love" to be made by Richard Thomas Productions in the Powers Studio on the Coast.

Film Is Started

Emory Johnson and his company, featuring Mary Carr and Johnnie Walker, have been busy for several days at Santa Barbara, California, shooting exterior scenes for the next Johnson production for F. B. O.

Members of the company motored to Santa Barbara last Sunday and made arrangements to stay a week. Mr. Johnson was accompanied by his talented mother, Emilie Johnson, who will assist her son in filming the production.

The title and theme of the Johnson picture are being temporarily withheld.

C. B. C. Picture Debut

"Forgive and Forget" Well Received at Premiere in Philadelphia

"Forgive and Forget," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation production, had its premiere at the Stanley Company's Karlton Theatre in Philadelphia, last week.

The Public Ledger said: "It has many gripping scenes which appeal to lovers of pictures." The Evening Ledger said: "For those who crave excitement there is plenty in 'Forgive and Forget' to keep them in suspense." The Inquirer stated: "A story that could be told about many present-day homes. It is a picture that is replete with action."

The Record said: "Pauline Garon and Estelle Taylor are pleasant to look at and act as though humor and tragedy cause some animation." The North American said: "'Forgive and Forget' should please. It is well acted."

"The White Sister" Soon to be Released Nationally by Metro

MARCUS LOEW, in announcing that Metro Pictures Corporation will release "The White Sister," the Inspiration picture produced by Henry King, states that the film will be given to exhibitors at once, in order that they may benefit from the national publicity gained for "The White Sister."

"In immediately releasing 'The White Sister' to exhibitors everywhere, Metro feels that it has accomplished a coup that will be eagerly welcomed by the trade," said Mr. Loew. "I consider this the most beautiful production ever made. Miss Lillian Gish gives one of the most remarkable performances I have seen—undoubtedly the finest of her career—and I have the deepest admiration for Henry King's directorial genius and for Mr. Charles H. Duell, Jr., whose vision made 'The White Sister' possible. I know that the picture will be a big money-maker for exhibitors. It has proven

THAT the public in the Latin-American countries appreciates and demands good motion pictures is the report brought to New York by Max Ehrenreich, who has just returned from Buenos Aires, where he acted as general sales representative in South American for United Artists.

Mr. Ehrenreich said he found South Americans thoroughly acquainted with Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith. These stars are just as well known in the small, interior towns of the Latin-American countries as they are in every village and hamlet in the United States, he said.

"The South American public know who that by its great success at advanced admission prices."

Charles H. Duell, Jr., president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., in commenting on Metro's distribution of "The White Sister," declared that the contract signed with Metro "comes as the culmination of two years of continued labor on the photoplay."

"We recall," Mr. Duell said, "how a little group of forward looking men and women began planning the creation of a photoplay which would not only entertain but would elevate. Almost two years ago they instituted a search for a story, a star and a director, to be combined in a film that would embody perfection in acting, beautiful settings, and powerful drama.

"They chose 'The White Sister,' F. Marion Crawford's immortal story of eternal love, and they selected as the star Miss Lillian Gish, the screen's greatest artiste because of her ability to portray a role demanding absolute mastery of the art of photoplay acting."

these picture stars are," said Mr. Ehrenreich, "just as well as our own public here. Their pictures are known and appreciated for just what they—the biggest pictures made. 'Tess of the Storm Country,' 'Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood' and 'One Exciting Night' are the pictures that are all the rage now throughout the South American states. And these releases are all popular, whether they be shown in the larger coast cities or the smaller interior towns.

"I found the Latin-American generally an exceptionally well educated people. They know good pictures and demand the best and are not satisfied unless they have the best. They are quick to note defects in the ordinary picture and equally quick to see and appreciate the better qualities in such pictures as United Artists productions.

"Exhibitors I came in contact with, and there were many in all sorts of cities and towns, are almost without exception men of high calibre. They are shrewd, intelligent buyers of film, study the wants and the needs of their patrons and make every reasonable effort to cater to those demands. They have good theatres and keep them clean and well ventilated, and seem all the time to have the comfort of their public well in mind.

"When a salesman sells a picture to the Latin-American exhibitor and the contract is signed, the salesman can rest assured that the contract is going to be lived up to in every particular, and that he will be given a play-date without trouble.

"Another thing I found in connection with the theatres is that many of the larger and better class houses have a removable roof arrangement, so that on pleasant evenings they become airdomes, and the public sits comfortably out-of-doors and sees the picture. The musical program is another thing that gets a good deal of attention. Latin-Americans all love good music, and exhibitors go the limit in catering to this taste and satisfying this demand. In all the larger houses there are big and well-trained, well-conducted orchestras—orchestras that would be perfectly at home in almost any Broadway theatre."

Shipman in Florida

Ernest Shipman, head of Ernest Shipman, Inc., is having a good time down in Florida. Incidentally, according to a note reaching the office, Mr. Shipman apparently has very little more to view in the land of the fountain of youth. In a single day he drove 475 miles, during the course of which he made quite a few speeches and was tendered royal receptions.

The Public's Voice Demands Diversified Entertainment

By E. W. HAMMONS
President, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

THE end of the year is, and should naturally be, a time for predictions on the coming year, and for a review of the year just drawing to a close. Probably no year in the history of the business has been so significant as 1923. In it production reached a peak never before gained; the reaction from this over-production came with the subsequent curtailment of activities, and finally the settling down to a safe and saner basis. The new year will profit by the mistake of the old. Therefore, it is safe to predict saner production schedules, saner marketing methods and greater prosperity for all.

The short subject, on which the industry was founded, and which for a time has been slighted because of the deluge of over-long features, will undoubtedly again assert itself as an indispensable part of the program. Features of eight, nine and ten thousand feet and upward crowded the short subject from the screens in many theatres; the reaction will be as certain and as emphatic as that which followed over-production.

The public has voiced its objections to the lengthy "padded" pictures which prevent the presentation of a diversified program of high entertainment value. The public has spoken and its voice has been heard. How it will be heeded, the coming year will bring forth.

But it will be heeded if the exhibitor adds his voice and weight to the demand that features be curtailed to a length that will allow him to build a program of real entertainment—a program composed of a feature and surrounded with a variety of short subjects, a program that lends individuality to the theatre and gives the owner or manager an opportunity to show his program building and showmanship abilities, the qualities which made the largest theatres in the country possible and enabled them to hold their patronage because of the diversity of their programs.

The diversified program is the constructive way to build a picture theatre into an institution that will enjoy constant attendance and constant prosperity. The picture house cannot be compared with the legitimate theatre, where the house is rented on a guaranteed so-much-per-week basis, the owners taking their profit from the rental from the property rather than from the profits of the show; the picture theatre must make its profits from its steady, continuous patronage, built up and held by the presentation of well balanced, diversified, entertaining programs which make the theatre an institution rather than the temporary abode of some over-length feature which constitutes an entire program. When the picture house reaches this ideal state, when it has become an institution, recognized in the community as the home of diversified entertainment, the business of exhibiting pictures will be stabilized; the gamble will be removed and steady prosperity will be the reward of the exhibitor.

But this ideal state will not come without pressure from the exhibitor. Emphatic protest to the makers of the over-long, padded features alone will bring it about. And I predict that the coming year will not close without the exhibitor realizing and employing this method of bringing about the solution of a condition that now menaces his future existence and his prosperity.

Hodkinson November Drive Set High Record in Total Sales

THE November Sales Drive conducted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through its branch exchanges for November, came to a close in a blaze of glory. The drive is being continued throughout December, with every branch sales manager and individual salesman keyed to the highest pitch, in the race to compete for the substantial cash prizes that are being awarded.

Ben Weisenbach, who covers southern Wisconsin out of the Chicago branch office, and S. W. Whitehead, of the Los Angeles branch, were the largest individual prize winners, each running first in total volume of business and in the number of features sold. Each has received a check for his efforts. Mrs. Anna Sessions, branch sales manager for New Orleans and Atlanta, carried away the honors in her division, both in volume of business and in branch exchange collections, while Irving Hanover, of the New York exchange, stood first in the total amount of business for the eastern division.

Philadelphia won first honors for the branch exchange with greatest collections in the eastern division; Chicago won the record for the central division, Los Angeles for the western division and New Orleans the southern division.

Cash prizes totaling $3,000 were distributed for the month, and there will be a similar distribution for the best business collections for December.

Cobb After "Cribbers"

N. Y. Chieftain Corraling Unauthorized Films with "Lifted" Numbers

According to George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, the exhibitors of that state are living up to the censorship law, and with but few exceptions no attempts are being made these days to evade its provisions. Chairman Cobb had a conference during the past week with Governor Alfred E. Smith. According to Mr. Cobb, a drive is now being made in New York city against some foreign motion picture film producers.

"We have already obtained several convictions in cases of this character," said Mr. Cobb. "The pictures exhibited have never been authorized and in many cases the numbers of other licensed film have been stolen from pictures not being used at the present time. The state not only loses money through such transactions, but many pictures are being shown which would never have been permitted had they been inspected by the Commission."

New Distribution Deal

Grand-Ascher's "By Divine Right" to Go Through F. B. O.

The Film Booking Offices announce that it will handle the distribution of "By Divine Right," the first production made by the Grand-Ascher organization starring Elliott Dexter and Marion Harris.

The production was made at the Grand-Ascher studios in Hollywood under the direction of William Neal and carries an all-star supporting cast including De Witt C. Jennings, Anders Randolf, Grace Carlisle, Sidney Bracey, Hazel Deane and baby Jeanne Carpenter. The story has been adapted to the screen by Florence Hein from Adam Hull Shirk's novel, "The Way Men Love."

"By Divine Right" offers, it is said, many unusual exploitation possibilities which Nat G. Rothstein and his staff are now working on.

Slump Period Is Bonanza to Rothacker; Big Foreign Plan

By TOM WALLER

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER

District Heads Meet

F. B. O.'s Western District Sales Managers "Talk Things Over"

District Sales Managers of the Film Booking Offices, from the territories east of the Rocky Mountains, held their first get-together meeting at the home office, last Sunday, at which plans were outlined for a mammoth sales and advertising campaign on F. B. O.'s forthcoming "Big Four" releases, which include: "The Mailman," "By Divine Right," "The Lullaby" and "Judgment of the Storm."

The meeting was presided over by H. M. Berman, general manager. Those who attended were: Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director; Lee Marcus and Al Boasberg, of the home office; "Cleve" Adams, Middle West division manager; Max Weisfeldt, Minneapolis and district manager in the Northwest; J. Safron, Philadelphia; A. R. Cherry, Pittsburgh; C. E. Penrod, Indianapolis.

At the same time another get-acquainted convention was being held in San Francisco, attended by all the branch managers in the inter-mountain territory, at which the new Western Division manager, A. A. Schmidt, was introduced to the managers by J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president, who is visiting the West Coast in the interest of production and distributing matters.

Charles Chaplin Lauded

San Francisco Critics Hail Chaplin's Directing as Truthful and New

"A satisfying picture; a different picture; a new picture built along entirely new lines, a picture for which we should be thankful," said the reviewer for the San Francisco Chronicle when Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris," a United Artists release, opened at the California and Granada theatres in a day and date engagement.

"Absorbingly interesting," said the Examiner. "A grim narrative along truthful lines with fascination in the telling." "A picture that warrants being seen more than once," wrote the critic for the Bulletin.

"'A Woman of Paris' will be seen time and time again by the more discriminating of picture lovers," said the reviewer for the News.

THESE last few months, which outwardly have marked the crisis of slumps so far experienced by the industry, have established, peculiar though it may seem, just an opposite precedent for the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. A twenty-four hour day for seven days a week, and even at that not sufficient working time, has boomed this company, during the cloudiest period of moviedom, to today and the greatest business it ever conceived. The prospects for the ensuing year are not illusionary affairs, but contracts piled high; so high that Watterson R. Rothacker, according to William S. Gill, sales manager in New York, is hurrying plans for the erection of subsidiary plants in Manhattan and London.

Originating in 1910, the Rothacker concern, the pioneer of the business, promises next year this time to be the biggest institution of its kind on the globe. The main unit at Hollywood and the general offices in Chicago have found it imperative from time to time in the past year to increase their payroll. Now, this company employs about 700 experts to carry on its work of developing films and making prints. Modern to the minute is the equipment used in the Hollywood plant. In fact, Mr. Gill says, many of these employes have contributed much in a scientific way, making possible the skilled methods in vogue.

Plans for the laboratory unit in London are already completed, while those for the one in New York are at present under serious contemplation.

Work on the London branch will probably commence in the spring or at a time when the English tax problem is less burdensome. Bit by bit the tax is being lightened and the prospects for heavy revenue on the incoming of American films are decreasing.

Mr. Rothacker, who effected negotiations while in London last August, foresees, Mr. Gill remarks, a wonderful future for his potential plant across the water. This unit will commence operation primarily to accommodate American companies on foreign locale. As is generally known, Mr. Gill adds, developing concerns in Europe are far inferior to those of this country; so much so that they are believed to have disheartened many a producer who would otherwise have packed his camera and troupe to the true scene of the scenario. With developing facilities over there as adequate and efficient as they are here, Mr. Gill, who is intimately acquainted with the old world, particularly because of his service as a war correspondent for a big news organization, can prophesy with authority what Europe holds for the American producer as a field for locale.

Just as much as in the respect that it will be a real and profitable accommodation for Americans, Mr. Gill believes this unit, novel to England for its completeness, will be an inspiration to European film men. The Rothacker plant in London will be of a proportionate size to accept business from the entire overseas country, said Mr. Gill, who stated that Mr. Rothacker at present, at least, has under contemplation no plans for other European units.

With the opening of the foreign plant, men trained at Hollywood in the technique of film development and prints will be sent to London. Every device used in the Rothacker augmentary there will be American made.

New Year Fosters Great Things for Independents, Says Cohen

ONLY through the encouragement of the independent producer does Sydney S. Cohen see further development and prosperity of the industry. Slumps like the present will be the same in the new year, he prophesies, unless the picture-going public is augmented by a few of the millions of stay-aways; and such augmentation will be instituted by shorter and more vital reels, thus making opportune the introduction of snappier and more diversified programs. As to the elimination of that obnoxious drag of the moment—the Admission Tax—Mr. Cohen is silently confident, with unanimous exhibitor co-operation, of its repeal.

The committee which will arrange for the fullest co-ordination and co-operation of all the forces in the industry to fight for the repeal, includes: R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J.; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis, Mo.; C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; E. W. Collins, Jonesboro, Ark.; Martin G. Smith, Toledo, O.; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles, Cal.; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; M. E. Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; Joseph W. Walsh, Hartford, Conn., and Sydney S. Cohen, ex-officio.

Reduction of footage and elimination of padding will rehabilitate and energize many features of today which are tedious and boring, Cohen observes. As to short subjects, lots of them; and then watch for the surprising increase in the box office line-up, says Cohen.

"The exhibitors and the public cannot absorb the cost of some of these lavish super-features. Big round numbers mean nothing in the advertisement to the populace and if, instead of drawn out social stuff and too realistically expensive sets, there was a good, strong plot, simply and truthfully and briefly portrayed, the public would be satisfied, the exhibitor would make money and the distributor and producer would profit in their turn by wider distribution."

During the new year Mr. Cohen looks forward to closer contact between the industry and the government, thus the screen will aid in developing many noble public service activities until the point is reached where filmdom will have the sympathetic support of officialdom.

1924 to Be Biggest Year in Principal Pictures' History

THAT 1924 is going to be the biggest productive year since the beginning of Principal Pictures Corporation, is the firm conviction of Sol Lesser, president of that organization.

"Fling wide the gates!" This seems to be the slogan of the Principal Pictures plant and studios on the West Coast. With the recent slump in production drawing to a close, the Principal Pictures studios were among the first to reopen activities with vim. Every available square foot of ground and studio space within the seventeen acres of our Hollywood plant will be utilized throughout the forthcoming season, says Lesser.

Baby Peggy has already commenced the first of her super-features, "Captain January." It will be in full feature length and will be but one of a series of four for the first year. Edward F. Cline is in charge of the direction of this series. The second Harold Bell Wright production, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," is another big production to be given the screen during the coming year. This and two more Wright pictures will be made. "Secrets of Life," the Louis Tolhurst series of microscopic pictures, will also be in full operation. Twelve of these educational and amusement pictures are scheduled.

In addition, there will be made a series of films adapted from well known books and stage plays. Chief among these are John Cort's famous musical success, "Listen Lester," and Owen Davis' footlight hit, "Fools of Fortune." The best known players will be engaged to participate in these offerings and the services of the best available directors will be utilized. Two directors are now under the Principal banner. They are William Beaudine and William Seiter. Edward F. Cline is already well under way on the Baby Peggy series.

"For 1924," says Sol Lesser, "I can see an epoch of Westerns. By this I naturally mean Westerns of the highest class in every sense of the word. They will take the place of the costume plays that have been on the screen for the past two years or more.

"The amusement seeking public does not care for deep plot in picture presentation any longer. The time is ripe and the fans are awaiting pictures that contain intimate drama, action, detail, light and shade in touch. The $2 attraction is fast giving way and I predict that during the forthcoming season only an occasional $2 picture will be a profitable investment. The public have been educated to attend a picture in a picture theatre and that education has been indelibly stamped in their minds. They want to witness picture presentation in picture theatres."

Cosmopolitan Ball Tremendous Success from Every Viewpoint

By C. S. SEWELL

FROM every standpoint, the Cosmopolitan Ball held at the Hotel Plaza, New York, Friday evening, December 14, made good the promises of its sponsors and takes rank as one of the most successful amusement affairs since the birth of the motion picture industry.

The purpose of this entertainment and ball was to raise money for the Marion Davies Christmas Fund for Disabled Soldiers, and the whole-hearted response of the industry and its friends resulted in an attendance that taxed to the utmost the capacity of the Plaza's large ballroom and which included distinguished people of the amusement world, army, navy and society. $15,108.99 was raised for this most worthy cause and every dollar received from the sale of tickets was free and clear for the fund, as Miss Davies paid the entire expenses. This sum will be used under the direction of Gen. F. T. Hines, head of U. S. Veterans' Bureau for disabled veterans in hospitals in New York and Saranac.

Following a couple of hours of dancing an entertainment known as the "Midnight Frolic" was provided, which was unique in many respects and alone was worth many times the admission fee. An aggregation of stage talent of the very highest quality, consisting of stars from current theatrical attractions, provided entertainment for about two hours, after which dancing began again and lasted for several hours. The music was provided by the celebrated orchestra from the Palais Royale led by Paul Whiteman himself and by Wheeler Wadworth's Band. And in addition to all this the hearts of the fans were gladdened by the presence of a number of stars including Thomas Meighan, Hope Hampton, Marion Davies and others.

As an example of the kind of entertainment provided in the "Midnight Frolic," three of New York's leading orchestra leaders rendered Victor Herbert's "A Kiss in the Dark." Vincent Lopez was at the piano, Victor Herbert played the cello and Paul Whiteman played a violin.

Among the other artists who entertained the guests were Donald Brian, Maurice and Hughes, Hal Forde and Lieut. Gitz-Rice, Helen Shipman from "Topics of 1923," Fanny Brice from "Ziegfeld Follies," Frank Fay from "Artists and Models," Ann Pennington and Brooke Johns from "Ziegfeld Follies," Oscar Shaw and Louise Groody from "One Kiss," Little Old New York Girl from "Ziegfeld Follies," John Steele from "Music Box Revue," Jessie James Boys Band and Chorus from "Little Jessie James," Florence Moore from "Music Box Revue," and Jazzarimba Band with colored cake walkers from the Flotilla Restaurant.

First Natl. Month Opens

Salesmen Highly Enthused Over Valuable Prizes Offered

First National month was formally opened on December 15th when sales meetings convened by E. A. Eschmann, general manager of distribution, were held in forty First National exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, at which the details of the drive were explained and the biggest sales contest in the history of First National announced.

With a full knowledge of the box office power of the five pictures to be offered during First National month in January the drive has aroused unprecedented enthusiasm on the part of the sales force even before the fact that a huge prize contest was to be held was known. Following the sales meetings and the announcement of the chance of winning big cash prizes, the field force was inspired to see the drive through to a more than successful conclusion and place it in the class of history making sales efforts of the film industry.

According to wires received at the home office from First National branch managers the determination to cash in on the prize awards extends to all First National exchanges. Under the plan arranged by Mr. Eschmann each exchange has a fair and even chance to head the list when the final check-up is made.

First National Month, beginning January 1st, has been heavily advertised to the public and will officially start with the release of "Boy of Mine," to be followed at weekly intervals by "Black Oxen," "The Song of Love," the "Eternal City" and "Painted People."

Fisher Joins Warners

Warner Brothers Pictures Inc. has added to its sale staff, H. W. (King) Fisher, who left the Warner home offices this week for his territory. He will have headquarters in the branch office at Atlanta, Georgia.

Will Edit Big Film

John Emerson and Anita Loos have been engaged by Samuel Goldwyn to put George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Eternal City," into its final shape. "The Eternal City" is a current First National release.

On Individual Contracts

Steffes Opposes Them in Letter to Minneapolis Exchanges

Individual contracts on playing time for exhibitors in the Northwest are opposed in a letter by W. A. Steffes, president of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, to A. H. Fischer, president of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade. The film men planned to check bicycling by insisting that exhibitors specify the number of days a picture is to be played, the exact location of the theatre and similar information. Mr. Steffes urges that insistence on the individual contract plan would only raise rentals and force small-town exhibitors to close. He points out that his organization has effectively co-operated with the exchange men in checking the bicycling evil.

Distributors must not expect to effect a profit on all pictures released, Mr. Steffes argues. The fixed minimum price plan has, he finds, negligible effect on pictures of exceptional merit. "It is on the program and mediocre pictures that the fixed minimum will prove disastrous," he declares. He wants the matter decided so that he can present a decision to the South Dakota exhibitor gatherings in Sioux Falls.

Metro Releases Two

Viola Dana and Jane Novak Star in Latest Output

"In Search of a Thrill" and "The Man Life Passed By" are two of the productions which are released this month by Metro. The first stars Viola Dana in the third in the series of five pictures which she is scheduled to make for the Metro 1923-1924 season. In the cast also are: Warner Baxter, Mabel Van Buren, Templar Saxe, Robert Schable, Walter Wills, Rosemary Theby, Billy Elmer and Leo White. It was adapted by Basil Dickey from Kate Jordan's story, "The Spirit of the Road," and directed by Oscar Apfel.

"The Man Life Passed By" was written directly for the screen by Victor Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn.

"Fashion Row," Mae Murray's new Metro starring picture, was released the first week in December.

Exhibitors Responding

Receive "Fashion Row" with Hearty Enthusiasm

Mae Murray's new Metro picture, "Fashion Row," which was released early this month, has received an immediate and hearty response from the exhibitors all over the country, it is reported.

It is said to be probable that the number of prints that have already been gotten out on "Fashion Row" will have to be very much increased to meet the demand from exhibitors for early play dates. A sweeping campaign has already been mapped out for the Metro sales force to set up a new record for the greatest number of bookings in the shortest possible time.

Likewise the Metro exploitation force throughout the country, backed by the great advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign prepared by Metro experts at the home offices in New York have been instructed to put forth great efforts in aiding exhibitors with the picture.

Friend Proposes Novel Studio to Center Production in East

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week from the offices of Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, that he and a group of associates are planning to build in the Borough of Queens a multiple-unit studio which would be the largest picture production plant in the world. The enterprise, in which Henry M. Hobart, formerly vice-president of International Pictures Corporation, and Charles S. Hervey, formerly a New York Public Service Commissioner, are interested, calls for the erection of a nine-stage studio on a tract of approximately forty acres situated within twenty minutes of the Times Square district. No further clue as to the location is given, nor is it said that one has been definitely obtained.

Actual organization work on the project was preceded by months of study. This preliminary survey, conducted by William O. Hurst, convinced those interested in the enterprise of the following: That studio rentals in the New York area must be brought below prevailing rates in order to meet the industry's demand for economic production; that such rental reductions are impossible in most existing plants because of high land values and high cost of maintenance; that many studios beyond the high-rent zone are actually too far removed; that the Borough of Queens has adequate land facilities within a few minutes of the heart of the city on which can be constructed a multiple-unit studio of sufficient dimensions to permit of large productions at a minimum of expenses.

These conclusions are predicated on an absolute belief of Mr. Friend, Mr. Hobart, Mr. Hervey and Mr. Hurst that Eastern production of photoplays is logical, because in New York is centered the control of the industry.

Mr. Hurst, who is known as a specialist in studios, issued the following statement:

"The contemplated multiple-unit studio in the Borough of Queens will not only permit of the building of stages of huge size without excessive rentals, but through efficient arrangement of carpenter shops in relation to stages, will permit of tremendous savings in the matter of lost time and lost motion—vital factors in production costs.

"The multiple-unit idea will permit of the occupancy of one stage by one director at a time; there will not be the confusion engendered by two companies attempting to shoot at once. We are determined to eliminate this. Also, we are determined to eliminate the custom of building sets on a stage while a director is shooting."

Titled "Fools' Highway"

Universal Picture Adapted from "My Mamie Rose"

"Fools' Highway" is to be the title of the first Universal Jewel starring vehicle of Mary Philbin, the little Chicago school girl who sprang to film fame overnight by her work in "Merry Go Round." "Fools' Highway" is a screen adaptation of Owen Kildare's celebrated romance of the Bowery, "My Mamie Rose," also recognized as an actual biographical novel, with many real facts and faces, and with the hero, Mike Kildare, a prototype of Owen Kildare himself.

Made under the successive working titles "My Mamie Rose" and "Morality," "Fools' Highway" has been completed and received in New York. Universal executives who have pre-viewed it say it will be one of the greatest hits of the season. Carl Laemmle's wisdom in selecting Mary Philbin as a Universal Jewel star is said to be amply justified by her work in this new picture. Her characterization as the little Bowery orphan, intensely in love with the hardest hitting slugger of the famous Bowery of a generation ago, is heralded as one of the truest ever enacted for the camera.

Frisco Holds "Reno"

"Reno," the latest picture written and directed by Rupert Hughes for Goldwyn, has been retained for a second week at the California Theatre in San Francisco. This photoplay on divorce proved its drawing power at its first week's showing at the California Theatre. It was most thoroughly exploited through a newspaper campaign.

Caine Film Previewed

Goldwyn's first Victor Seastrom picture, "Name the Man!" from Sir Hall Caine's "The Master of Man," was given a preview showing at the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia, last Sunday night. The audience consisted of invited guests from Philadelphia and exhibitors from Eastern Pennsylvania and contiguous territory.

Coogan Picture

Breaks Records

For the first time in the history of St. Louis, four theatres, the Delmonte, New Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, four first-run houses, ran a production simultaneously day and date—and all broke records. This happened recently with Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King."

Patronage at the four houses mentioned took a decided leap while "Long Live the King" was on the screen. Telegraphic advices from St. Louis to the Metro offices have reported that each house had broken its attendance records.

A Christmas Warning Against Pessimism and Extravagance

By ALBERT E. SMITH
President of Vitagraph

PESSIMISTIC conservatives and extravagant radicals are bringing the motion picture industry tumbling about their own ears. Fortunately there is a level road traveled by steady minded men during the quarter of century since I began as a pioneer producer and distributor and which remains the open way to legitimate growth and development.

Since my last stay in Hollywood, the center of motion picture production, I have had opportunity to study and analyze conditions in Great Britain and on the Continent as well as opportunity to review business in the United States and Canada and the prospects for the coming year.

I have seen twenty-six years of progress in motion pictures. Every year of those has been one of advancement in production; only during the stern years of the war did business show any decrease. That decrease was in the foreign market. It was in a large measure, although not altogether, offset by the spread of motion pictures throughout the United States. Never have the level-headed men in this industry had cause to complain about the growth of the industry as a whole. Each year sees new markets for films.

The business of Great Britain and the Continent is being restored to normal in a manner most satisfactory to film distributors and to producers. The Vitagraph exchanges in Great Britain, where we have branches in every large city in the provinces as well as in Scotland, Ireland and Wales, are reporting increased rentals every month. Our French distribution is coming back to what it was before 1914. So encouraging has been Vitagraph's business on the Continent that I reopened last summer a producing studio in Paris which is making pictures direct for Continental consumption. Vitagraph's studios in Hollywood and Brooklyn have not been idle.

This suggests comment on the question of production in the East or in the West. In my opinion this concerns the producer's private plans. There are some pictures, such as "Let Not Man Put Asunder," which J. Stuart Blackton has just finished, which can be made with equal facility in either locality. There are other pictures, such as "Pioneer Trails," which demand the backgrounds that are to be found only in the waste lands and mountains of the far West. I do not see any reason why the industry should be limited to any locality. On the contrary, production under modern conditions permits the making of pictures anywhere on the face of the earth.

Censorious critics have flung much mud at the industry. They have attacked the morals of pictures and the morals of the men and women who have strived to give to the public good entertainment. They sometimes forget that this mode of entertainment has been the most satisfactory to the pocketbook of the American citizen and that in educational values it has surpassed the printed word.

Men and women who write about motion pictures are sometimes misguided through ignorance. It seems to be the one industry which every outsider believes he could improve. "Efficiency experts" who may have been able to obtain remarkable results in directing a factory fabricating cook stoves seek to force their rules in the studios. Unfortunately pictures are not a factory product. No industry reflects so completely the human elements in men and women as ours. It is the wise and level-headed producer who can reconcile the foibles of director and his people with business needs, who advances steadily towards success.

In February I enter upon my twenty-seventh year as a motion picture producer and distributor. The name of Vitagraph is known in every civilized community. It has come to stand for good entertainment and service in distribution. I have applied straight, sound business ethics to its development. Therefore, when I predict in all seriousness that 1924 will show a continued steady growth of markets for film, I speak with more than a quarter of a century of experience. Our own country is soon to be relieved of some of the burdens the war laid upon it. Our industry will share directly in this relief, but the public at large will be the chief beneficiary. This means increased attendance and the building of new theatres.

Vitagraph wishes to all the industry all prosperity for 1924.

Repeats Broadway Hit

Baltimore and National Capital Crowds See "Tiger Rose"

Following its success at the Rivoli, "Tiger Rose," the Warner Brothers Screen Classic adapted from Belasco's stage success, with Lenore Ulric starring, is achieving a series of triumphs throughout the country. This picture is being held over at the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, for an extended run. The picture opened to record business, great crowds were turned away the opening night and capacity houses were the rule the entire week. The Metropolitan management then advertised that this picture had proven such an exceptional drawing card that it was to be held over for an extended period.

In Washington, D. C., "Tiger Rose" also is pulling big crowds, in spite of the fact that it has opposition in the personal appearance of the star in the picture at another theatre. The film is playing at Moore's Rialto Theatre.

DeMille in New York

Cecil B. DeMille and party, consisting of Mrs. DeMille, the three DeMille children, Cecilia, Katherine and John; Jeanie Macpherson and her mother, Mrs. E. Claire O'Neill, and Barrett C. Keesling, Mr. DeMille's personal representative, arrived in New York from Los Angeles Monday and are stopping at the Ambassador. They will be present at the New York opening of Mr. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments."

Fox's Newest Makes Hit

"The Shepherd King" Has Triumphant Manhattan Premiere

The premiere presentation of the William Fox special, "The Shepherd King," was at the Central Theatre on Broadway, New York, December 10. The American said: "It has been done with a fineness and sincerity that indicates that Mr. Gordon Edwards, the director, knew what he was doing. 'The Shepherd King' is an investment that Mr. Fox can point to with pride."

The Evening World called the production "one of great beauty and a production that need bow its head to none of them." The Times said: "It is undoubtedly one of the most striking and beautiful spectacles, with huge throngs and great scenic structures."

The Evening Journal praised it as J. Gordon Edwards' finest picture. The Morning Telegraph said: "It has dignity, sincerity and fidelity welded to strong dramatic interest."

The Evening Post said: "The scenic effects are beautiful. The scenes are stirring and on a whole, 'The Shepherd King' is an entertaining motion picture."

Resigns as Studio Head

After five years as general manager of the Thos. H. Ince Studios in Culver City, Clark W. Thomas has resigned to assume full charge of the Cinema Mercantile Company.

Prior to entering the motion picture field Thomas was an executive of the Packard Motor Car Company in Detroit. The new general manager of the Ince plant has not yet been named.

Move Dance to Frisco

Los Angeles officials refusing to permit dancing past the midnight hour has resulted in the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers deciding to hold their annual ball at San Francisco. Harry D. Wilson, Pete Smith and Harry Brand were sent to San Francisco to make arrangements. The Exposition Auditorium has been secured for the event, which will be held on January 19.

Shorter Films and Less Production Costs Are Predicted for Next Year

By MAURICE TOURNEUR

THE picture business will see striking improvements the next season. The improvements will be evident in every phase of picture making, from the time a story is purchased for production, through the production process on to the final stage of publicity and exploitation.

It is my opinion, therefore, that next season will bring about—First: Shorter, more dramatic features. Second: The two-day policy will gain greater vogue in the larger cities. Third: Waste in production will be eliminated, and more efficiency will be utilized in the present method of making pictures.

There is no doubt in my mind that the shorter length feature of the five or six-reel type will be made by all far-sighted producers. It has often been contended that a producer could not do justice to most stories within this limit. A contradiction to this belief and its proof can be found in the fact that during the earliest days of picture making the most powerful and dramatic of stories were made in three or four reels. They resorted to no padding in those days, and there is no reason why the early state of affairs cannot be put in force today with all our modern contrivances and lighting technique.

But a mere glance at the trade journals, and a conference with leading exhibitors throughout the country, has convinced me that the shorter feature is in great demand. And quite naturally so. For it gives an exhibitor an opportunity to vary his program, to make it more interesting and worth while for his patrons. This fact borne in mind by producers will be a big factor in swinging the public pendulum toward a greater appreciation of the motion picture.

Heretofore, very little, if any attention has been paid to the two-a-day policy. A handful of theatres have tried and are still trying the experiment, and in many of these cases it is proving very valuable indeed. Only productions, of course, of a very high calibre can help to increase the idea of the two-a-day plan. Next season will see these productions, and next season will also see a large number of theatres in the bigger cities putting over this effective and profitable policy.

New Association Expected to Become Strong National Body

THE independent distributors and State right operators took definite steps in New York last week toward the formation of a new association, which may eventually develop into a strong national body, to include all individuals, co-partnerships and corporations engaged in the independent motion picture field.

This action was taken at a meeting held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, December 13, preceded by a luncheon tendered by Charles B. Hoy, of the Hoy Reporting Service, which was presided over by Frederick H. Elliott, now associated with Mr. Hoy and formerly executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The meeting was most enthusiastic and representative of the independent market, a large majority of the important distributors being in attendance.

It was the consensus of opinion of those present that the independent market was in urgent need of a strong organization to function actively in its interests and addresses in support of this contention were made by J. E. Chadwick, of Chadwick Pictures Corporation; Joe Brandt, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow Pictures Corporation, as well as several others.

An organization committee was appointed to formulate plans to carry out the suggestions incorporated in the discussion. The committee consists of I. E. Chadwick, chairman; W. E. Shallenberger, Joe Brandt and Bobby North, of Weber & North, treasurer. This committee will meet on Monday to decide upon the functions of the new organization, as to whether it will revive the old independent producers and distributors association or create an entirely new body, concerned only with credit control and service through an arrangement to be effected with the Hoy Reporting Service, with headquarters at 1650 Broadway, New York.

Bill to Repeal Tax

A bill amending the admission tax provisions of the revenue law so as to repeal the tax on all admissions of 50 cents or less, was introduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., on December 15 by Congressman Peavey, of Wisconsin.

Under the terms of a bill introduced on December 17 by Representative Barkley of Kentucky, the admission tax would be entirely repealed. Mr. Barkley has also introduced bills repealing the tax on telephone and telegraph messages and prohibiting the collection of surcharges for Pullman accommodations.

Ince Forecast Optimistic

THOMAS H. INCE'S survey of present conditions in the motion picture industry is the basis of an optimistic forecast of what the New Year will bring forth.

A message from his Culver City studios follows:

"The coming year will, in my opinion, see a forward stride toward the stabilization of the industry.

"The fair returns that any producer offering a passably entertaining picture once could collect are no longer to be had for the asking.

"Audiences are not satisfied today with average pictures. The past year has witnessed the birth of a score of pictures which deserve to be called great and they have whetted the appetite of the public for more.

"If the productions which have been the vanguard of the new era have not all brought the financial returns they seemed to deserve, they have at least accomplished a definite mission. They have met with sufficient response to arouse the ambition of producers to offer pictures that shall exceed them in honesty, beauty, taste, and, when the subject warrants, magnitude.

"This impetus will necessarily benefit the public as it will the industry at large."

"Courtship of Myles Standish" to Have Broadway Run at Central

CHARLES RAY in "The Courtship of Myles Standish" will start its New York preview Sunday, December 30, at the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street. J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, closed a contract this week with Sam S. & Lee Shubert, Inc., for the taking over of the house by Associated for eight weeks. Plans for a gala opening are being made and arrangements for an extensive exploitation campaign are under way.

Other important bookings made in the last few days call for an indefinite run in M. L. Markowitz's Strand, San Francisco, starting December 29th, and a run of three weeks in the Woods Theatre, Chicago, beginning January 20. The opening of the indefinite run in Tremont Temple, Boston, has been fixed for January 28.

Setting it Straight

Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of Associated First National, takes occasion to comment on the general lack of knowledge regarding foreign conditions among Americans, in the course of a letter correcting a recent misunderstanding in Moving Picture World.

A story concerning Metro's activities in Sweden, supplied by that organization, erroneously stated that Raoul LeMatt was one of the owners of the Roda Kvarn Theatre, of Stockholm.

The truth of the matter is, of course, that the Roda Kvarn is controlled by the Svenska Film-industri, which is owned by Knut Husberg. The latter gentleman, by far the most important film figure in Sweden, was the subject of an article appearing elsewhere in the same issue of Moving Picture World.

December 30, when the Broadway run has its start, is the exact date set for the official release of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," which is easily the most ambitious production Mr. Ray has ever made. Meanwhile, in pre-lease showings outside of New York, this long run feature has played to capacity houses and been hailed as one of the outstanding attractions of the year. Following its memorable engagements at the President Theatre, Washington, and in Detroit, where it smashed the attendance record of John H. Kunsky's Madison, it has just had highly successful runs at the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., and the Plaza, Sioux City, Iowa.

In the course of his review, C. M. S., the critic of the Grand Rapids Herald, said: "The combination of 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,' a screen masterpiece in every respect, and the likeable star, Charles Ray, in person, gives the Majestic Gardens for this week a program of unbeatable appeal and merit. Mr. Ray and Frederic Sullivan, the director, have produced a truly magnificent document."

Previous to the opening of the Sioux City run, R. D. Rehfield, manager of the Plaza, arranged a special showing which was attended by newspaper critics, the head of the Better Film Society, Superintendent M. G. Clark, and the principals of the public schools. The Sioux City Journal said the persons attending the preview "were unanimous in declaring the picture of great historical benefit and deserving of a place alongside the big productions of the past."

F. K. O'Kelly, manager of the Strand Theatre, Pittsburgh, who has booked "The Courtship" for a run opening Christmas week, has written to the home offices of Associated Exhibitors that he is assured of the co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations, and expects "the picture to go over with a bang."

Broadway's Big Funster

Buster Keaton's "Our Hospitality" Praised by Manhattan "Fussies"

Buster Keaton's second Metro feature length comedy, "Our Hospitality," was presented for its New York premiere at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway last week. "Our Hospitality" will cause the Rialto to echo and re-echo with roars of laughter. A splendid bit of satire," said the critic of the New York Times. "Keaton appears at his best in 'Our Hospitality,'" said the critic of the New York Telegram. "A thoroughly fine picture," remarked the critic of the Journal.

"Full of good comedy," said the reviewer of the New York Post. "It's pretty safe to say that Keaton should be the star of 'Our Hospitality,'" said the critic of the New York Evening World.

"There has seldom been a funnier conceit than Buster's train," began the critic of the New York Sun. "The picture is a burlesque of the well known feud melodrama," began the critic of the New York Tribune. "Keaton has chosen regular people to assist him. The two Canfield boys are handsome enough to be leading men in a society drama."

"A vast deal of fun is derived from the vicissitudes of travel in a specimen of the earliest railroad train. There are a number of hair-raising episodes," said the World reviewer. "Our Hospitality" was directed by Keaton and Jack Blystone.

Makes Big Contract

Pathe Picture Presented Through A. H. Blank Enterprises

Among the important bookings closed during the week on the feature version of Emerson Hough's famous novel of the early West, "The Way of a Man," which is being distributed by Pathe, was one closed by the A. H. Blank Enterprises. This contract assures the presentation of this picture, the story of which was written by the author of "The Covered Wagon," in all the important key cities of the state of Iowa. The A. H. Blank houses will stage the production in a series of one week engagements.

Stahl Is Keeping Busy

Finishes "Why Men Leave Home" and Looking for New Material

John M. Stahl has completed the picturization of Avery Hopwood's stage success, "Why Men Leave Home," and in conjunction with A. P. Younger, who wrote the scenario, he is now dividing his time between editing the film and searching for a story for his next production.

Approximately three months were spent in filming "Why Men Leave Home." Lewis S. Stone has the leading role.

Among the other stars in the cast are: Helene Chadwick, Alma Bennett, Mary Carry, William V. Mong, Hedda Hopper, E. H. Calvert, Lila Leslie and Sidney Bracy. Sol Polito was chief of photography and Sidney Algier served as assistant to the director.

For January Release

Elaine Hammerstein Production Adapted from "Drums of Jeopardy"

Early in January, Elaine Hammerstein's second production for Truart Film Corporation will be released. It is an adaptation of "Drums of Jeopardy," the famous Harold MacGrath story, which first appeared serially in a widely read magazine and later was published in book form.

In the cast supporting the star are Wallace Beery, Jack Mulhall, the lead opposite Miss Hammerstein; David Torrence and Maude George.

Pritchard on Coast

R. E. Pritchard has reached Los Angeles, where he has taken up his duties as representative of the sales division of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the producing center. Pritchard was formerly associated with Goldwyn Pictures and previous to that was advertising manager of Educational Pictures. He is well known throughout the film trade in New York and on the Coast.

Inspired Film, Internationalized Will Fill Wants, Says Williams

IN a further talk on the question of the inspired motion picture, J. D. Williams, president of Ritz Pictures, who is just back from an extended European trip, during which he made a careful survey of conditions, adds an amplified chapter to the subject of inspiration as real solution note in picture production. Mr. Williams has reached the important conviction that the demands of the public for great entertainment will be fully and completely met at approximately half the present cost of big pictures and that the inspired picture, internationalized, will do it.

Discussing especially the subject of the inspired picture, a topic which has had practically no attention in motion picture conferences and councils, Mr. Williams said:

"Inspiration comes to the creative artist as a result of contact with the extraordinary, the unusual and the essentially dramatic. We can in these countries, centuries older than our own, draw from the vast treasure houses of the world securing situations, ideas, plots, incidents, things of beauty, of humor, of romance, of dramatic intensity, of charm, of love, mystery, motive and desire, and utilize the best in the great and the small things of human history and achievement. Inspiration is almost certain with a creative mind.

"If thus inspired, it will be possible for the creator of pictures to contrive mosaics for the screen that will be composed of varied elements, some great and compelling, others small and exquisite, fitted and joined into a sum total of human accomplishment and providing for the motion picture the final and tremendous entertainment.

"With so vast an amount of material to draw from, I believe that fifty directors, under this inspiration, could well be working at one and the same time in varied places, instead of a mere handful, to provide the adequate amounts of exalted and compelling entertainment now demanded by the public and essential to the future of the screen.

"Happily there is nothing to worry about, because the inspired picture is inevitable. But the sooner its value is generally recognized the better. I have recently seen the effect on such directors as Henry King, Charles Brabin, Edwin Carewe in contact with the European background, atmosphere and locale. Centuries of human endeavor and accomplishment have stored up story material and human interest in even the out-of-the-way places.

"The romance of Venice, the glories of Rome, the noble achievements of England, that cradle of human liberty, the fascinations to be found in the centuries of France, the tragedies of Russia, the mysticism and beauties of the East provide material so rich, so absorbing, so tremendous in possibilities as to arouse in the heart, mind and soul of the creative or adaptive artist a compelling desire to achieve. This inspiration is provided by this never failing fountain of amazing things. It solves the production problems of this and succeeding generations. It solves, too, the problem of costs because with care and attention the great pictures can be made for half the present expenditures.

"Ritz is committed definitely to international pictures, the inspired pictures, the pictures that solve the two problems of the business, namely, great entertainment value and legitimate costs.

"I have reached the important and definite conclusion that the demands of the public for great entertainment in motion pictures will be fully and completely met at approximately half the present cost of big pictures, and that the inspired pictures, internationalized, will do it."

Adapting Sheldon Story

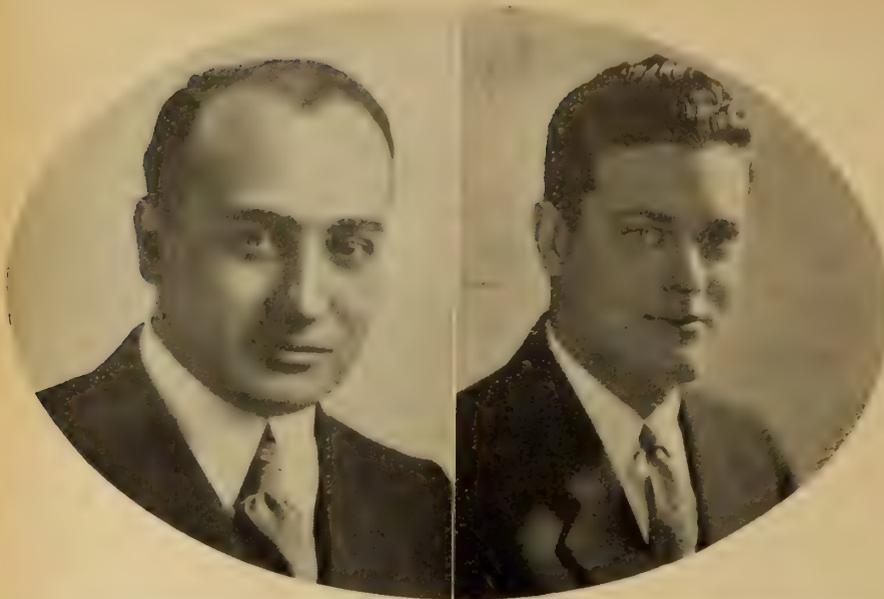

Carl Anderson offices this week announce that Dr. Charles M. Sheldon has consented to the picturization of his book, "In His Steps." It has been estimated that 22,000,000 copies of this work have been issued to date, in nineteen languages. "In His Steps" tells the story of the application of the Golden Rule in a community that decided to live strictly according to the injunction: "Do Unto Others As Ye Would They Should Do Unto You."

Production starts on "In His Steps" next month, and Mr. Anderson plans to announce it among his early spring releases.

Selected as the Best

Four First National Films Among Magazine's Choices

Of the six productions selected by Photoplay Magazine in its January number as the best pictures of the month, four are distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The pictures are selected by photoplay critics who judge pictures from the fan's viewpoint.

Samuel Goldwyn's independently produced "The Eternal City," directed by George Fitzmaurice, heads the list. Not only is "The Eternal City" rated highest as a picture but, in addition, the performances of two of the cast are classified as belonging to the six best performances of the month. These players are Barbara La Marr, playing the leading feminine role, and Richard Bennett in a difficult characterization as an Italian vagabond.

"Anna Christie," Thomas H. Ince's production of the Eugene O'Neill drama, was another of the first six and Blanche Sweet's work in the title role was rated among the outstanding performances.

A third First National release in the list was "Flaming Youth," the sensational drama of modern society featuring Colleen Moore, and the fourth Sam Rork's picturization of Cynthia Stockley's novel, "Ponjola," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood. To Miss Nilsson also went the honor of giving one of the six best performances of the month. "The Acquittal" and "Long Live the King" complete the list of exceptional pictures.

Universal Film Held Second Week at Cameo

"The Acquittal," Universal's Super Jewel mystery picture, adapted from Rita Weiman's play, has been held over for a second week at the Cameo Theatre, New York City, where it now is having its Broadway premiere. It made a decided hit at the Times Square screen theatre last week in the face of strong opposition, and is expected to go over the top on its second week for even better records. It is said to be a picture which builds by word-of-mouth advertising.

The picture received especially favorable press notices. The Evening World said: "The Acquittal" is due to spread thrills around by the bushel." The Mail: "The Acquittal," Rita Weiman's mystery melodrama, which had a successful stage appearance, has been made a gripping motion picture."

The Morning Telegraph: "The Acquittal" which is at the Cameo Theatre this week, is rattling good melodrama." The New York World: "There is as fine and full and tremendous a moment on the screen of the Cameo this week as there is to be found anywhere on Broadway. This includes drama of all kinds now on view, high, low and medium brow. It comes in that exciting court scene." The New York Tribune: "It is a very interesting picture."

Following its run at the Cameo Theatre, "The Acquittal" is scheduled to play the entire U. B. O. Circuit in and around New York City, beginning about the first of the year, in runs from four days to a week.

Keith-Copperfield Bill

Following its three weeks' run on Broadway, "David Copperfield" was booked by the B. F. Keith Offices for the company's entire circuit of theatres in Greater New York. Mark Luescher, director of the publicity forces of the Keith organization, carried on an exploitation campaign which helped to pack the fourteen theatres at every showing.

A Consistent Performer

"The Virginian" Breaking Records, Says Preferred

From present indications B. P. Schulberg's screen version of Owen Wister's novel, "The Virginian," bids fair to be one of the biggest money getters of the current season. It already has proved to be the most consistent record breaker yet released by Preferred Pictures Corporation.

The Columbia Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., reports that on Thanksgiving all existing records were smashed in spite of a down-pour of rain. To the Barcli Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., "The Virginian" brought the biggest Sunday and Monday business since the house opened, and according to a message received by Preferred from the management, the line-up at the box-office was continuous from opening to closing time.

The Colorado in Denver and Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand in Detroit established new marks for high receipts. Other houses that have claimed records are the Grenada in San Francisco, the Temple, Iliion, N. Y., and the Imperial in Jacksonville, Fla. B. S. Moss' Broadway in New York City did the biggest business since the Dempsey-Firpo fight film with this Tom Forman production.

Brooklyn Theatre Will Open House to Orphans Christmas Morning

The Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre is playing host on Christmas morning to all the orphans of Brooklyn who can crowd into the house, to witness a performance which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman has made up especially for the occasion.

The theatre has placed the program under the auspices of the Brooklyn Daily Times, which publication undertook the work of getting out the invitations and providing Christmas gifts for the children. Invitations were mailed and then the newspaper carried stories each day for ten days ahead of the show, illustrating these with cuts of the various performers.

Lloyd Film Versus Three Preachers!

Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy" played Hatton, North Dakota, a town of 821 inhabitants, at advanced prices on a recent Sunday night and made money for the exhibitor. J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, has received this letter from George Sandy, owner of the Grand Theatre:

"'Grandma's Boy' is certainly a wonderful picture. There were three church sermons against me and you know what that means in a town of this size, where nearly everybody attends services. This is the only picture I ever advanced prices for, but everybody says it was worth what I charged, compared with other pictures. Thank you for sending me such a good one."

Seventeen Years Doing This

C. C. Johnson, of the A-Mus-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana, in writing for advice concerning a new theatre he is about to erect, adds this paragraph:

"We are asking you for this information because the Moving Picture World seems to be more interested in subscribers than just merely mailing the magazine each week."

You said it, Brother Johnson. We thank you!

"Painted People" Ready

The new First National picture featuring Colleen Moore, the star's first production since her success in "Flaming Youth," will be released under the title "Painted People." The picture was filmed under the working title of "The Swamp Angel," which is the name of the Collier's Weekly story by Richard Connell from which the feature was adapted. Clarence Badger directed and the cast also includes: Ben Lyon, Mary Carr, Mary Alden, Anna Q. Nilsson, Russell Simpson, Charles Murray, June Elvidge, Charlotte Merriam, and Bull Montana.

Famous Players Pays $392,073 for Allen Theatres in Canada

THE Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, paid a total of $392,073 in cash and stock for the assets of Allen Theatre, Limited, in the purchase of Allen theatres throughout Canada from G. T. Clarkson, Toronto, the receiver, which had been valued at $3,327,000.

This information was announced at the annual general meeting of the Famous Players Corporation at Toronto on December 14 by N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, managing director of the corporation, in making a report of the acquisition of the Allen chain of theatres in Canada. As a result of this purchase, the control of 20 Allen houses was secured, bringing the total number of theatres operated by Famous Players in Canada up to 64. The sum of $200,000 in cash and $150,000 in first preferred stock was paid to Mr. Clarkson, the receiver for Allens, and, in addition, Famous Players spent $57,073 in purchasing stock in several theatres in which the corporation's holdings were not large enough to provide control.

The interest acquired in the Allen Theatre at Vancouver, B. C., was sold by Famous Players for $25,000, this amount reducing the outlay for the entire deal. The price paid for the Allen assets was less than 12 per cent. of the receiver's valuation of the theatres.

Announcement was also made by Mr. Nathanson regarding the acquiring of Loew's Montreal Theatre. The shareholders of that theatre were given par for par for their preferred holdings, while the holders of common stock received 49 per cent., Famous Players keeping 51 per cent. in order to maintain the control. The total cash investment by Famous Players for the big Montreal Loew house was $100,000, which was secured by a mortgage at eight per cent.

The chairman of the annual meeting was Vice-President J. P. Bickell, of Toronto, who, in commenting on the annual report, declared that he looked for still greater improvement in business during the fiscal year, 1923-24.

Earnings for the first quarter of the 1923-24 year, covering a period of the three months of September, October and November, showed gross earnings of $198,672 before depreciation, as compared with $180,648 for the corresponding period one year ago. Net earnings after depreciation stood at $160,000 for the past three months. It was announced at the meeting that the retiring board of directors had been re-elected for the Canadian company without change.

Finis Fox Begins Production

FINIS FOX is expecting to have one of the most elaborate productions of the season in "A Woman Who Sinned," which he has just started to film at the Hollywood studios. He has engaged an all-star cast headed by Mae Busch, Morgan Wallace, Irene Rich and Cullen Landis. Among those playing important roles are Lucien Littlefield, Paul Megel, Hank Mann, Snitz Edwards, Cissy Fitzgerald, Hugh Fay and Ethel Teare.

Finis is not only directing the picture but he also created the story and made the screen adaptation. It is to be the first of a series of four special features that Finis will film for the independent market with all star players.

Finis chartered a three-masted schooner and a palatial steam launch for some of the scenes which are to be taken off the west coast of Mexico. Beautiful and lavish settings with the woman meaning elaborate gowns will be striking features of "A Woman Who Sinned."

Among the more recent Finis Fox productions are "The Bishop of the Ozarks," "The Man Between" and "Bag and Baggage."

Smith Says Exhibitors Need Not Fear Shortage of Good Pictures

THE arrival of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, at the studios in Hollywood last week marked renewed production energy. David Smith is rapidly finishing "Red Roses," the dramatic novel of finance and love by George Randolph Chester, in which Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller have the leading roles. Director Smith will begin casting "Borrowed Husbands," the domestic society drama by Mildred K. Barbour, at once. The continuity for "Borrowed Husbands" was prepared by C. Graham Baker, editor-in-chief of Vitagraph.

President Smith telegraphed to the Vitagraph executive offices in New York, after a conference with his Western organization, that he had found many of the published rumors concerning the industry in Hollywood to be wildly exaggerated. He sees, as do the heads of other producing companies, a need for more effort against unnecessary extravagance and safeguards against waste in production, but exhibitors need have no fear, in his opinion, of a shortage in pictures of fine box office value.

"We have no intention of curtailing our production plans," the statement said.

Warner Film Praised

Critics Favorably Impressed by "Lucretia Lombard"

Entertainment value of high order and box-office appeal were unanimously conceded by New York critics to "Lucretia Lombard," the screen version of the Kathleen Norris' novel, which was given its premiere last week at the Strand, playing to the large pre-holiday crowds. The writers of the metropolitan press also enthusiastically lauded the spirited performances of Irene Rich and Monte Blue, the distinctive direction, and the fine mounting of this Warner Brothers' Screen Classic.

It will be released under alternate titles of "Lucretia Lombard" and "Flaming Passion," exhibitors to decide which of the pair of names they prefer as patronage pullers.

The American said: "Irene Rich, who did such splendid work as the Queen in 'Rosita,' puts thought into her work as Lucretia Lombard. She is intelligent and she is forceful, and she looks like a real woman, not like an ingenue dressed for the part."

A "sellout" is how the critic of the Evening Mail characterized this production. "Exhibitors need have no fear for the box-office when this picture comes to their theatre," he states.

The Morning Telegraph: "The Warner Bros. have done well by the author in giving her story a fine screen presentation. 'Lucretia Lombard' is primarily a money-maker." World: "Very well acted melodrama of a three-cornered love affair." Evening Journal: "Especially good effects in the flaming woods and the raging fire."

Sun and Globe: "Splendid acting. Irene Rich, Marc McDermott, Norma Shearer and Monte Blue give performances that are as sincere and fine as anything seen in the films this year." Times Square Daily: "A real box office hit." Evening Telegram: "Spectacular thrills follow each other uninterruptedly in this Harry Rapf production."

Praise for "Going Up"

Exceptional Photoplays Lists It as High Class

Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," Mr. MacLean's first independent starring production and his first photoplay to be distributed by Associated Exhibitors, is one of the few features listed in the current number of "Exceptional Photoplays" as "A Picture Worth Watching For." The recommendations printed in this publication are made by the National Board of Review, Committee on Exceptional Photoplays.

Of "Going Up" Exceptional Photoplays says: "'Going Up' is an excellent screen adaptation of the Broadway musical comedy success—the story of an author who exploited an aviation hero in his book, thus convinced his readers that he was an aviator himself, and got from one pickle into another in his humorous efforts to live up to this false reputation. Certainly this was good screen material for farce, and Douglas MacLean fits into it as comfortably and effectively as he did in that other finished light photoplay, 'The Hottentot.'"

Appointed Directors

Judge and Phillipson Succeed Moore and Cohen

According to an announcement made by Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., London Branch, Horace Judge, director of advertising and publicity, and Percy Phillipson, general sales manager at that office, have accepted positions on the Board of Directors to fill the vacancies made by the retirement of Sir Harold de Courcy Moore and Charles Cohen who resigned at the completion of their terms of office. The new appointments have met with favor at the American home office and it is expected that with sales and publicity represented on the directorate, the resultant closer relationship will prove a great factor.

Mrs. Reid Is Home; Finishes Crusade

That the movie industry, particularly Hollywood, is not as bad as it is painted, was a point Mrs. Dorothy Davenport Reid, widow of Wallace Reid, stressed in her country-wide drive against narcotics in which she exploited the picture, "Human Wreckage."

Mrs. Reid finished a two months' tour through the Middle West and Canada in time to spend Christmas at her home in Los Angeles. In many of the places where she conducted her crusade it was found necessary to maintain a guard of local police outside her abode. This was done, it was said, because of numerous veiled threats for her life because of the bold expose.

Plan Big Exploitation

Exhibitors Assured Full Co-operation in Selling Picture

Arrangements have been perfected between Pathe and the Yale University Press which provide for the intensive exploitation of the "Chronicles of America" series in every community in which these pictures are booked for showing. The plans, which have been worked out in detail, insure the individual exhibitor the fullest co-operation in selling these pictures to the public of the locality served by his theatre, it is stated.

"The Turmoil" Finished

Hobart Henley Has Completed Universal Picture

"The Turmoil," Universal's Hobart Henley picturization of the Booth Tarkington novel, is completed at Universal City.

Hobart Henley, the director, made "The Flirt." That Tarkington story was commented upon by leading critics as a faithful transcription of the original tale. It survived the flood of screen material as an outstanding achievement. "The Turmoil," according to book reviewers, is a novel of far more power. Its picturization is heralded as correspondingly more powerful.

Cohn in New York on C. B. C. Production Plans

HARRY COHN, producer of the features for C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, came to New York this week from the West Coast production centre.

The object of the trip was to discuss with Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn production plans for the New Year, and also to line up with them certain ideas for production for next fall. It is his belief that in working that far ahead better results may be obtained, and based upon C. B. C.'s great success this year, a much more ambitious program for next year is already being outlined.

One of the things that brought Mr. Cohn East was the desire to finally pass upon "Innocence," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, on which final editing had been completed in the East. He expressed entire satisfaction with the way this and the art titling had been handled, and "Innocence" is now released to franchise holders throughout the country.

He also announced that "Discontented Husbands" will be the next release following "Innocence." A big all-star cast has been lined up for this new production containing names that have won wide favor with the public and at the box office, he says.

Discussing plans for coming productions, Mr. Cohn says the program announced by C. B. C. at the beginning of this year will be strictly adhered to.

For next year, he says, he already has under consideration several stories and scripts which he has brought East with him to discuss their possibilities with Brandt and Cohn. He says he believes he has struck the right stride with productions which he has already made for C. B. C. release this year, and that the company will continue its policy of stories of present day problems, such as "Yesterday's Wife," "Forgive and Forget," "The Marriage Market," "Innocence," and "Discontented Husbands."

Speaking of stories, Mr. Cohn says he believes the greatest possibilities in screen stories lie in stories adapted from stories that have already appeared in published form. Not only have they added publicity value, he says, because of the attention they have already attracted in published form, but they seem to have a closer continuity of thought.

Mr. Cohn said that he believes the salvation of the industry is the "feature of average length, but more than average interest," such as the C. B. C. productions are.

Mr. Cohn says he does not believe in "star" pictures, as such. The story, he says, is the main thing, and, after that, the player who is suited to the various parts. These, of course, should be players whose names have interest to the public and mean money to the box office.

Irvin Cobb Opens Meeting Boosting Her Book

One of the most remarkable luncheons ever seen in the amusement centers of Times Square was held at a joint meeting of the Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., and the Theatrical Press Representatives Association at the Cafe Boulevard on December 13 when plans were consummated for the distribution and sale of Nellie Revell's book, "Right Off the Chest."

Notable people in the industry took part, the principal speaker being Irvin Cobb, who traveled 2,200 miles to be at the luncheon. He told of the many efforts of assistance that had been volunteered, from the initial offer of George H. Doran to publish and market the book through his regular channels without profit, to the work of Sol Bloomer, who assumed the entire distribution of the De Luxe edition. The most crying need, Mr. Cobb declared, was for coherence and centralization in the work of the several committees trying to boost the sale of the book.

The immediate problems of organization were met through the offer of J. P. Mueller of the Mueller Advertising Agency, placing his offices at the committee's disposal for meetings and necessary work. Harry Reichenbach offered to pay for the services of a publicity man to start and follow through the campaign to popularize the book throughout the country.

As soon as the book is available, a special campaign will be staged in New York to committees working from both the Theatrical Press Representatives and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, jointly.

Duplex Expanding Business; To Build Modern Laboratory

DUPLEX Motion Picture Industries, Inc., successors to Duplex Machine Company, headed by one of the pioneers of mechanical filmdom, H. O. Carleton, and supported by a directorate of his three brothers, and Jacob Schaeffer, Jr., vice-president of the National Bank of Bay Ridge, long associated with Carleton Bros. as their financial adviser, is now expanding and going into the laboratory business, as well as greatly enlarged manufacturing facilities for their standard line of motion picture equipment.

In addition they are bringing out a practical home projector, and will furnish a library of films in connection with this projector which will embrace subjects of amusement, interest, education, and science. Both projector and films will be sold at a price which will be popular, and which will bring them within the reach of many who desire motion pictures in the home.

H. O. Carleton first started in the motion picture business by working for Thomas A. Edison as a mechanic on one of the first motion picture cameras built by Mr. Edison in this country. His brother Charles worked with him on this camera, and they used ideas taken from the French model which Edison had. Afterwards both went to work for Vitagraph, developing mechanical devices in the early stages of the picture business.

Mr. Carleton realized that there was a great necessity for mechanical accuracy and labor saving machinery in the picture business. He induced his brothers to join him, and they started work in the basement of their home at 417 Ovington avenue, Brooklyn, to develop their ideas, and there with small hand power machinery made the first Duplex Automatic Step Printer, which was sold to Mr. Hite of the Tanhauser Motion Picture Company of New Rochelle. This machine is still in use.

From a small beginning, with practically no capital, the Carleton brothers have continued to build one after the other the many mechanical devices which they today manufacture, and which begin with the perforator, winding up with the projector.

The latest development of their mechanical line includes the building of an Automatic Developing Machine, a machine in which the positive goes through all the steps of a complete laboratory. This machine is automatic in its action, being operated by one-sixth the amount of labor required under previous conditions.

The new factory and developing plant of Duplex will be located in Long Island City, within easy reach of Times Square, and will be housed in a specially designed building five stories in height, and with a floor space of 50,000 square feet, to be finished some time in the coming summer.

H. O. Carleton has not only done great things in developing the mechanical side of pictures, but in addition has been associated with the business as camera man for many well known companies, and has photographed many great stars in the past.

Plan Big Program

Hodkinson Announces Distribution for Coming Quarter

An elaborate program of feature distribution is announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the first quarter of the new year, including the release of a series of stellar productions now in course of preparation. Plans are being formulated for widespread activities, and intensive campaigns will be waged over the entire country, designed to put Hodkinson feature productions in the very front ranks.

For January release, the Hodkinson program calls for the distribution of "Grit," starring Glenn Hunter, the fourth of the series of Film Guild productions, as well as Whitman Bennett's production of Edward Eggleston's mid-western classic, "The Hoosier Schoolmaster."

In February, Hodkinson will release the first of the James Kirkwood-Lila Lee co-star productions, "The Inner Sight," produced under the direction of Bruce Mitchell, and in the same month Harry Carey makes his film debut under the Hodkinson banner in "Night Hawks," the first of a series of six stellar productions made by Hunt Stromberg.

Tentatively scheduled for March is "Painted Women," the second of the series co-starring James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, and possibly the second of the Harry Carey productions.

"Judgment of the Storm" to Play Big Circuit

"Judgment of the Storm," the Palmer Photoplay Corporation production being distributed by F. B. O., has been booked for the entire Keith circuit, which embraces the B. S. Moss and Proctor houses in New York.

Charles Rosenzweig, manager of F. B. O.'s New York exchange, who closed the deal with Keith, said: "An unusual tribute is accorded 'Judgment of the Storm' in the closing of the contract with Keith, for they are known as shrewd and careful judges of what the public wants. However, all who have seen 'Judgment of the Storm,' acclaim it the greatest of all photoplays and well worthy of all the confidences the Keith people have placed in it."

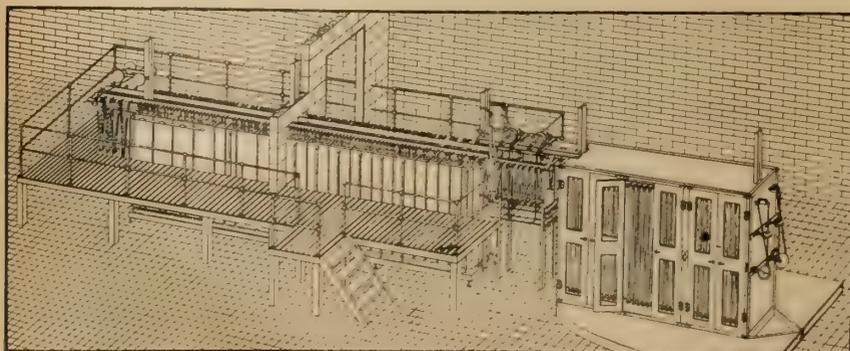

The Palmer Corporation will carry newspaper advertising in every key city in the United States, backed by a direct mail campaign on the picture to theatre patrons. It also will have fifty-two exploitation men in the field working on a campaign which will include a newspaper contest designed to draw patrons to the box-office.

Flinn Leaves Paramount

John C. Flinn will leave the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on January 1 to join an important distributing company in an executive capacity, it is announced. No further details are now available concerning the resignation from the Paramount organization of one of its most energetic members. Mr. Flinn originally conducted the advertising and publicity department. Later he joined the theatre department and was assigned special duties. With the completion of "The Covered Wagon" he managed the exploitation of it, going to London to stage the English premiere. Recently he has been handling the advance exploitation on "The Ten Commandments."

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Pay $1,000,000 for Woods Theatre

Indiana

At last the Woods Theatre is definitely sold to Jones, Linick & Schaefer for a sum in excess of $1,000,000 and the transaction has been confirmed by A. H. Woods, the former owner. Carl Mayer represented Mr. Woods in the deal and Ryan Congdon and Livingston represented the purchasers.

Norman E. Field, general manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, took immediate possession of the house for the new owners and will announce the house manager in a few days. The Woods Theatre in the future will show big film productions on a two-day schedule, with appropriate presentations. Aaron J. Jones has been elected president of the Woods Building Corporation and the A. H. Woods Theatre Company, which control both the office building and the theatre at the corner of Randolph and Dearborn street.

The Jackie Coogan picture, "Long Live the King," at the Chicago Theatre last week proved a good tie-up for children and every youngster bringing something for poor children was admitted free during the matinees. It took several trucks to haul away the clothing that the boys brought to gain admission.

The plans for the new movie theatre that Jacob Horwitz of 10 South La Salle street will build on Robey street are being made by Oman and Lillenthal and the structure when completed will represent an investment of $750,000.

Speer and Whallon, owners of the Lyric Theatre at Gibson City, Ill., have remodeled the house and opened up with a feature picture program.

It is expected that the long run of "Scaramouche" at the Woods Theatre will end next week and Manager Anderson reports the picture has been shown to more than 100,000 in the eleven weeks.

John Dels is planning to build a movie house at Wheaton, Ill., and plans have been drawn by E. N. Drydges which call for a two-story brick and terra cotta building.

Elmer Jerome has been made manager of the Empress Theatre at Decatur, Ill., a mixed program house of vaudeville and pictures, which is under the direction of Wiley McConnell, well known exhibitor.

Another new movie theatre is planned for Joliet, Ill., by Lawrence J. Crowley of that city. A contract has been let to John Krings for the excavation for the new house to cost $350,000. The theatre will front 100 feet on Jefferson street and 132 feet on Scott street and seat 2,200. It is planned to install a fine organ for the musical programs, which will be a big feature.

A new movie theatre will be erected at Lawrenceville, Ill., and it will be named the Gould Theatre.

Another movie theatre is planned for Geneseo, Ill., as a movement is on foot among the business men to build a modern house for the showing of feature films.

A. L. Orr and Son have taken over the management of the Livingston Theatre at Dwight, Ill., having leased the house from Ralph Stevens of this city. The new managers will book feature films and road attractions.

Dee Robinson Dies

Dee Robinson died at Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, Ill., on December 17 while preparatory operations were being made for a blood transfusion from his brother, Sam Robinson, of Peoria, Ill. Robinson was fifty-one years old and head of the Madison Theatres Company of Peoria, controlling theatres in several cities in the Illinois territory. One of the best liked members of the motion picture industry, his passing will be mourned by all. He had been ill a considerable length of time.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the safe of the Strand Theatre at Springfield, Ill. The thief escaped by jumping from the balcony of the house.

Arthur Jackson, owner of the Strand Theatre of Crawfordsville, Ind., has taken over the Arc Theatre of the same city and will book for both houses.

The Garden Theatre Corporation has leased the Garden Theatre at Harvey, Ill., for a period of ten years.

The Orpheum Theatre, Peoria, Ill., was damaged by fire that destroyed more than $2,500 worth of scenery stored in a tunnel leading from the building to an exit.

The engagement of the Harris Theatre for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" terminates on December 22 and the house will be turned back to legitimate productions for a few months.

AARON J. JONES
President, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, extensive operators and owners of Chicago amusement enterprises

Various phases of the motion picture industry were discussed by Charles C. Pettijohn, of New York, and other speakers at a meeting and banquet of the Indianapolis Film Board of Trade at the Hotel Severin, Friday night, December 14. In addition to a number of prominent exhibitors and exchange men, the entire sales staffs and booking agents of the Indianapolis exchanges attended the affair.

Mr. Pettijohn, who formerly lived in Indianapolis, and who is now general counsel for the film boards of trade of the United States, said the work of the national organization was progressing satisfactorily and that the industry is on the threshold of a long era of prosperity.

Frank J. Rembusch, Indianapolis, asserted that one of the difficulties of the industry at this time is promotion. He said promoter exhibitors, promoter distributors and promoter theatre owners who do not know the business are largely responsible for financial and co-operation failures.

Billy Connors, of Marion, secretary of the state organization of theatre owners, declared that the film exchange managers should inform their salesmen of the work being done by the film board of trade and the arbitration committees. He said some of the exchangers failed to protect the jobs of the salesmen unless the salesmen showed more production each week. Such practices should be condemned, he said.

Acting on orders of Fred Sims, receiver for the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Company, Marcus S. Sonntag, appointed to handle the affairs of the Victory and Strand theatres at Evansville, has ordered Charles Sweeton, manager of the American and Majestic theatres, to vacate the Strand Theatre building. The Strand was held under lease by the Consolidated Company. Alleging that the company failed to meet the terms of the lease, Clinton Rose, rental agent for the property, declared the lease invalid on December 1, and granted a five-year lease to Sweeton. Sonntag contends the property is still held under lease by the Consolidated.

Under pressure of the Ministerial Association and a committee representing the Protestant churches of the city, the city council at Washington, Ind., has directed John H. Spencer, city attorney, to draft an ordinance prohibiting moving picture and theatrical shows on Sunday. The ordinance also will require the paying of a license by the theatre owners.

Work was started this week on the construction of a larger stage in the Blackstone Theatre at South Bend. The present stage, according to Ezra Rhodes, manager, is not large enough to permit the staging of road shows or vaudeville acts. Feature pictures will continue to occupy a prominent place on the program regardless of whether road shows or vaudeville acts are booked, Rhodes said.

Shannon Katzenbach and Maurice Fox, of the management of the Indiana Theatre at Terre Haute, have installed a "Have a Heart" box in the lobby of the theatre. Money dropped in the box will be turned over to the Terre Haute Welfare League for the purchase of Christmas gifts for the city's poor children.

Fred E. LeComte, manager of the Liberty Theatre at Terre Haute, was in Indianapolis several days this week attending to his new duties as general manager of the theatres of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation, now in the hands of a receiver. Robert Cotton, assistant manager, supervised the affairs at the Liberty during his absence.

Three Weeks for "Hunchback" in St. Louis; $27,500 Rental

What is said to be the biggest deal involving a single picture to be shown in one picture house in the history of St. Louis has been concluded by Spyros Skouras, president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, with the St. Louis' exchange of Universal. It provides for a three weeks' showing of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Pershing Theatre, commencing January 5. The price paid for the first-run is said to have been a guarantee of $27,500. The picture will play to a $1.65 top and every seat in the theatre will be reserved during the run.

The past week was marked by several other big picture deals in St. Louis. Fred L. Cornwall, owner of the Delmonte Theatre, who several months ago astounded the natives by closing a deal with Metro Pictures for their entire 1923-24 product for all of St. Louis and St. Louis County for a period of two years, paying $200,000 for the privilege, closed a deal with Universal for the St. Louis first-run on Baby Peggy's first big picture, "The Darling of New York." It will be presented at the big West End house Christmas Week.

William Goldman, owner-manager of the Kings Theatre, secured two big pictures for his house, "The Acquittal," to be shown Christmas Week, and "Thundering Dawn." Goldman also concluded all financial arrangements for his $1,000,000 St. Louis Theatre to be erected at Grand boulevard and Morgan street, and this structure will get under way very shortly. He plans to hold the grand opening on next Labor Day.

Miss A. L. Ketchum, owner of the Plaza Theatre, Clara and Etzel avenues, St. Louis, has concluded a deal whereby on January 1 she will take over the Aubert Theatre, Easton avenue at Aubert avenue, and the Chippewa Theatre, Broadway near Chippewa street.

During the week articles of incorporation were issued by Secretary of State Becker to the A. L. Ketchum Theatre Company, which is to have $30,000 capital. The incorporators are A. L. Ketchum, P. A. Koch, P. G. McElwee and R. H. Roberts. This company will operate the Plaza, Aubert and Chippewa in the future.

J. C. Borden opened his Palace Theatre at Lawrenceville, Ill., on Saturday, December 15. It is one of the best arranged houses in that vicinity. The St. Louis Exhibitors Supply Company, of St. Louis, furnished the two Simplex mazda equipped projection machines and the Minusa curtain for this house.

Jimmie Lawson opened the New Grand Theatre at Mount Olive, Ill., on Thursday, December 13.

Joe Schrempf, former owner of the Knickerbocker Theatre in St. Louis and later in the distribution end of the business, has been named manager of the Duquoin Theatre, Duquoin, Ill.

Jim Drake has leased the Gem Theatre in Sixth street near Market, St. Louis, and is giving St. Louis the biggest show in the world for 10 cents. Drake is putting on a double feature and a comedy with news reels and is packing 'em in.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row the past week were Jim Reilly, Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Tom Reed, Duquoin, Ill.; Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.; Leo Bernstine, Springfield, Ill., and W. T. Bollinger, Elvins, Mo.

Canada

The theatre properties operated by the J. B. Sparrow Theatrical and Amusement Company, Ltd., Montreal, have been offered for sale. The announcement has caused a sensation in Montreal theatre circles, not only because two of the most outstanding local theatres are affected, but because G. B. Sparrow, president of the company, was the man who was chosen the first national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada on the occasion of the latter's organization meeting in Montreal last September. Mr. Sparrow recently resigned from the M. P. T. O. presidency and has been succeeded by A. D. Denis of Montreal.

The theatres which have been placed on the market are His Majesty's Theatre, a veritable amusement landmark of Canada's largest city, and the Theatre Francais, in the East End of Montreal. Both of these properties are announced for sale "at sacrifice prices."

During a recent period the Theatre Francais was operated by Marcus Loew on a rental basis. Then it was known as the Metropolitan and later as the Court Theatre. Considerable improvement was made in the structure prior to its acquisition by the Loew interests. After some time, the theatre reverted to the Sparrow company, the organizer of which was the late J. B. Sparrow, father of G. B. Sparrow.

The National Theatre, Bay and Dundas streets, Toronto, one of the older downtown theatres, suffered damage by fire to the extent of $7,000 on December 11, the outbreak occurring when there was no one in the building. The stage section of the theatre was gutted and the roof was burned through.

"Richard the Lion-Hearted" followed "Scaramouche" and "The Covered Wagon" at the Tivoli Theatre, Toronto's two-a-day picture theatre, "Richard" opening a week's engagement on December 17 at $1.50 top, all seats being reserved.

The employees of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, formerly the Allen Theatre, are having their annual Christmas Frolic this year as usual. Manager Miller Stewart presented each member of the staff with a turkey as a gift of the management, forty-five birds being distributed. The employees also enjoyed a special midnight show with themselves as principals, their friends being the invited guests.

Manager George Rotsky of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, formerly the Allen, abandoned the regular two-a-day policy of the theatre during the week of December 17 by presenting "Jealous Husbands" at continuous performances. Mr. Rotsky made a special play with performances starting at 10 o'clock each night, this being arranged, he announced, for the benefit of employees of many retail stores which were open until 9 or 10 o'clock each night to take care of the Christmas rush. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened at the Palace on December 23 with performances twice daily and at prices ranging up to $1.50, this being the regular policy.

Philadelphia

Exhibitors who do not accept shows contracted for on an agreed date with the various exchange houses, included in the membership of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade, will be obliged to pay for such films as are included in contracts at specified dates without the privilege of showing the films on a deferred program, according to a resolution adopted at the meeting of the Arbitration Board held during the week at the De Luxe Exchange headquarters. In the future no redress will be granted either in the way of subsequent showings or in the cancellation of payments, the exhibitor paying for the film as per date of contract.

Another innovation was the determination to do away with the acceptance of contracts signed by agents, bookers, operators and other employes of picture houses and to make future bookings only with the bona fide signatures of the owners.

With the completion of the building operations, which practically made a new theatre out of the Opera House, at Dover, Del., there was introduced to the amusement enterprises of the town one of the most modern picture theatres in that section of the state. On Thursday of last week the reopening ceremonies were inaugurated with the mayor and city officials participating. They warmly commended the owners, a syndicate headed by President George Schwartz, for the erection of so artistic and modern a structure. The house seats 1,000 instead of the former 650. The interior is handsomely decorated in gold and black, a new Typhoon system and an organ introduced and a modern projection room erected.

Two more theatres have been added to those controlled by J. Everett Lewis, enterprising proprietor of the Plaza Theatre at Milford, Del., and the Everett Theatre at Middletown, Del., through the acquisition of the picture theatres in the adjoining towns of Crisfield and Sausbury, Maryland.

An elaborate building program is now in progress at the Opera House of Norristown, Pa., which has been added to the string of theatres owned by Benjamin Sablosky, and including the Lyric, Garrick and Empire. The rebuilding of the century old Opera House will involve an expenditure of $300,000 and when completed will give the city one of the finest theatres of its kind in any city of like size, with a seating capacity of 2,000.

First-Run House for Long Beach, Cal.

THE biggest theatrical and realty deal in Pacific Coast exhibition circles was announced last week by West Coast Theatres, Inc., through Michael Gore, president, with Walter S. Horne Company and I. E. Baker of Long Beach for the construction of a theatre and office building on Ocean Boulevard, in Long Beach, Cal. The deal and business transaction involved is in excess of $4,000,000, calling for the immediate beginning of work on an eight-story de luxe theatre and office building on the north side of Ocean Boulevard, between American and Elm avenues at Long Beach. The site of the new structure is 150 feet by 155 feet, and the property one of the most important business centers of Long Beach.

With this deal the city of Long Beach assumes an important place in Pacific Coast theatricals. The theatre is to seat 3,000. Harry C. Arthur, r., general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., is authority for the statement that plans have been approved by which he executive committee of West Coast Theatres will provide Long Beach with a theatre that is to compare favorably with the biggest and finest institutions in the country.

A big symphony orchestra, under a prominent conductor, will also be a feature of the house, which will be run on a basis equal to the first-run Los Angeles theatres. Frank M. Browne, division manager of Long Beach, will be in charge of the destinies of the new house.

Markowitz in San Francisco Reduces Strand's Admissions

M. L. Markowitz, owner of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has come out with the public statement that theatre admission prices are too high and has taken the lead in a movement to bring these down to a more reasonable level. In a recent statement he said: "For some time it has been the general custom for all downtown theatres showing high-grade, first-run feature pictures to do what the other fellow does, but sometimes some one comes to the realization that existing conditions can be improved by the inauguration of a new policy and such is the case at the Strand Theatre right now. We have come to the conclusion that theatre admission prices are too high, and after carefully weighing the question find we can afford to show the best pictures at lower prices and still make a reasonable profit because of our low rent and operating expenses. Our new schedule of prices is 20 cents for matinees, including Saturdays, with children 10 cents, and 40 cents for evenings, Sunday and holiday matinees, with a 15-cent rate for children. We are featuring independent productions such as those of Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Harold Lloyd, D. W. Griffith and Charles Ray. We are not controlled by any producing company but operate an independent theatre showing independent attractions."

The management of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, has broken its policy of making a weekly change in program regardless of the excellence of the screen attraction, and "Flaming Youth" has been held over for a second week. House records were broken the first week, according to Manager Charles M. Pincus, and the longer run was literally forced by popular demand. The world premiere of "Black Oxen" has been delayed a week because of this. This premiere will be followed by the first showing anywhere of "The Half Dollar Bill," a Graf production made in San Francisco and distributed through Metro.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., will spend about $75,000 in improvements in the Oakland T. & D. Theatre and at the conclusion of the work the name of the house will be changed. Harry Arthur, general manager of this organization, was a recent visitor from Los Angeles, conferring with A. M. Bowles, manager of the Northern California division.

C. L. Laws, manager of the California Theatre, Watsonville, Cal., spent a week at Los Angeles recently investigating the system followed out in the management of leading houses of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., in the southern field.

Under the direction of General Manager William Citron, a Kiddie Revue will be offered every evening during Christmas week at the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, San Francisco.

The National Theatres Syndicate, San Francisco, headed by L. R. Crook, which recently purchased the theatre of Frank Atkins at Marysville, Cal., through the office of J. R. Saul, will enlarge the house and install new furnishings at a cost of about $40,000. The deal included the purchase of this house outright, with the land on which it stands, and involved about $150,000.

B. Getz, Inc., San Francisco, is having plans prepared for a one-story theatre to be erected at San Mateo, a peninsula suburb, at an estimated cost of $115,000.

John Triguero, who operates two theatres at Fort Bragg, Cal., has arranged to take over the Strand Theatre, a new 500-seat house at Santa Rosa. This will be operated as a second-run picture theatre.

James Barlow, of the Rialto Theatre, Stockton, has been quite seriously ill of late and has been confined to his bed in a hospital, but is expected to be able to be out shortly.

The Lyric Theatre, Stockton, Cal., has booked William H. Hart in "Wild Bill Hickok" and has offered a fine silver cup to the troop of Boy Scouts making the best showing in a stunts contest.

Spectacular Fire Destroys Theatre in Everett, Wash.

The Everett Theatre, Everett, Wash., was completely demolished by fire in a spectacular blaze that occurred early Tuesday morning, December 11. The loss is estimated at $100,000. It is partly covered by insurance. The fire is thought to have started from a short circuit or from sparks in the furnace room. The Everett was the only house in the city with a stage large enough to house legitimate attractions. It had for some time been showing high grade feature pictures. The house was built in 1900 at a cost of $70,000. Very recently a large sum had been spent for improvements, alterations, decorations and furnishings. The building was owned by the Everett Improvement Company and under lease to the Star Amusement Company. About $1,500 worth of films and the projection machine were saved from the fireproof projection booth and vault.

C. A. Swanson of the Star Amusement Company was in Seattle the following day. He states that the house will be rebuilt immediately. The new structure will probably be one of the finest houses in the state, although there has not yet been time for anything but a brief review of the situation.

President Howard S. Clemmer of the M. P. T. O. of Washington, and Ray Grombacher, trustee, both of Spokane, called a meeting for Eastern Washington exhibitors who had been unable to attend the organization meeting in Seattle several weeks ago. Telegrams were sent to thirty-five, twenty-five of whom turned out. Wires received from the other ten assured cooperation. The meeting was held in Spokane December 11. It was opened by Mr. Grombacher, who presented Dr. Clemmer. J. M. Hone, executive secretary-treasurer, who maintains the organization's offices in Seattle, went over for the meeting and received the twenty-five new members. A banquet attended by fifty exhibitors and exchange men and their wives and friends concluded the meeting, which was followed on Wednesday by a trustees' meeting in Seattle.

North Carolina Exhibitors Amicably Adjust Music Tax

All differences existing between the North Carolina theatre owners and the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers have been amicably adjusted, according to Henry B. Varner, president of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., who attaches to his notification to all exhibitors a list of all theatres in the state together with the compromise annual dues agreed upon for the performance of copyright music in all theatres.

A series of conferences between Mr. Varner and officials of the society culminated in a meeting of these officials and the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. in Charlotte, at which the entire matter was threshed out to the satisfaction of both sides, and a new scale of fees, approximately one-half the original demands, agreed upon, affecting every theatre in the state. This new scale went into effect on December 1 and Mr. Varner is now busily engaged in getting signed agreements from the individual theatre owners, since the entire plan is contingent upon small exhibitors paying the new fees without protest.

It was agreed by the society to drop all of the forty-one suits now pending in the United States courts against Carolina exhibitors for infringement of their rights under the copyright laws as soon as the new plan gets into effect all over the state, and President Varner is congratulating himself and the exhibitors upon saving something like $20,000 annually for them.

E. J. Sparks Enterprises, controlling four-teen theatres in Florida, a majority of which were former Southern Enterprises houses, has opened permanent Atlanta offices in charge of E. T. Brown for the purpose of handling bookings of pictures and legitimate attractions for their chain of houses, the offices being in the Metropolitan building. The Sparks chain includes the following Florida houses: Jefferson and Orpheum, St. Augustine; Grand, Beacham, American and Phillips, Orlando; Drekkka and Deland, Deland; Baby Grand, Winter Park; Sarasota, Sarasota Star and Opera House, Arcadia; Casino and Auditorium, Lakeland.

To build up the usually dull December receipts, Willard Patterson of the Metropolitan, Atlanta, has devised a ticket book scheme giving $6 worth of tickets for $5. Through a tie-up with the Atlanta Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, these books will be offered to all their carriers with clubs of subscriptions, the carriers who obtain the largest numbers of subscribers each week winning ticket books. The first order of the newspapers was for 2,000 books, which means a lot of extra cash coming in for "Pat." Another tie-up was effected with the United Cigar Stores Company to sell the books and maintain a counter display in each of their Atlanta stores.

The house, as yet unnamed, will be modern in every respect and will seat 750. The exterior is very handsome, being done in red and white brick.

In the basement of the new building there will be baths, free to the public. Pool, billiard halls and bowling alleys are also included in the basement plans. J. De Walt will be house manager and will do all booking of films. Burgettstown is a town of but 1,500 persons, and already boasts of two picture theatres, the Grand and the Auditorium.

Do Southern Women Lead in Industry?

HOW many women are holding executive positions in the film industry "on their own" in the United States? Do the Southern States hold the palm when it comes to progressive women exhibitors, exchange managers, etc.? There are eleven progressive, independent women exhibitors in Georgia alone, and the news of a week includes mention of several "forward" women in the industry in the Southeast. For instance, during the past week:

Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, who formerly operated a live theatre at Easley, S. C., while her husband sold films for Al Lichtman, announces that she has taken over a new theatre at Belton, S. C., and along with its management will also operate the principal hotel there.

Mrs. Willingham Wood built a theatre and leased it to outside parties. Their lease expired November 1 and she announces that in the future she will conduct the show herself.

Mrs. Anna Sessions, Southern District manager for Hodkinson, pays a "pop call" to the Atlanta exchange.

Miss Bertha Schindehaur, with General Film since its first organization until it dissolved, then with Vitagraph, has just resigned her position.

Mrs. Willard (Pat) Patterson (nee Anna Eugene Aiken), publisher of the only regional motion picture trade paper in the South, flays those who would tax the motion picture out of existence.

Mrs. H. T. Allen of Atlanta has just completed a tour of the Carolinas, placing the service of the Pictorial News service in theatres which are pledged to run these slides to pay their dues to the North Carolina M. P. T. O.

Latest Albany Rumor Does Injustice to Wm. Shirley

A rumor which spread like wildfire over Schenectady, N. Y., as well as the Film Row in Albany, to the effect that William Shirley was no longer general manager of the Farash Corporation, controlling the State, Albany and Strand theatres in Schenectady, was officially denied a day or so ago by William W. Farley, of Albany, head of the company. Just how the rumor started is a question which Mr. Farley would like answered, and it is just possible that he will conduct a quiet investigation in an effort to place the blame where it belongs. The fact that Mr. Shirley was in New York the fore part of the week was added to the rumor as a means of substantiation. According to Mr. Farley, there has been no change in the Farash company and none is contemplated.

Eli Rosenbaum, proprietor of the Hippodrome in Ogdensburg, has been named defendant in an action brought by a song publishing company of New York and which is slated for the December term of District Court in Utica. Mr. Rosenbaum has retained Attorney J. A. Goldstein of Utica, but claims that he has a receipt to show that he obtained permission from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to play all copyrighted songs in his theatre.

Captain George Broome, general cashier of the Farash Corporation of Schenectady, has resigned and has been succeeded by Frank Hickey of Albany.

The more enterprising of the picture theatres of Albany, Troy and Schenectady are all dolled up in anticipation of the Christmas Holidays. The lobby of the Mark Strand in Albany is particularly beautiful in its heavy garlands of holly leaves entwined with red rope. The lobby of the Leland in Albany is also handsome in garlands and Christmas bells, while in Schenectady the management of the State and Strand has gone the limit, using small Christmas trees handsomely trimmed. Over the marquee at the Barclay, small Christmas trees wired with tiny electric lights proclaim the spirit of Christmas-tide at night.

The Movie Home Journal, started last April by Oscar Perrin as a means of better advertising attractions at the Leland and Clinton Square theatres in Albany, now calls for a mailing circulation each month of about 2,000 copies.

On Saturday night, December 15, William E. Benton opened his new Capitol Theatre in Whitehall, N. Y. Invitations to the opening had been received by all the film exchanges in Albany, but owing to the distance few managers were able to make the trip. The house takes rank as one of the most beautiful in that section of the state, and it will be handled by Miss Georgiana Wallace, formerly of the new Grand in Whitehall.

Harry Symansky, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, probably books his pictures quicker than any man in this territory. Young and alert, Mr. Symansky seems to know just what his patrons want. Following a screening of "Reno" a few days ago, it took Mr. Symansky just thirty seconds to book the picture and sign the contract.

The sympathy of the readers of Moving Picture World is extended to Walter Hays of Buffalo, vice-president of the Strand chain of theatres, in the recent loss of his mother.

Quite a few of the exhibitors of central and northern New York were along Film Row during the last few days. Charles H. Moyer, who runs houses in Herkimer and Little Falls, had a hard time to find Albany hotel accommodations. Al Bothner, managing three houses in Troy, booked Fox product, while Mrs. A. E. Milligan of Schuylerville reported business as fair. Samuel Wood, who will open a house in Canajoharie on Christmas Day, made his first visit here in many a month. Jack Troy of Hudson also was among the visitors.

The Griswold Theatre of Troy showed fine Christmas spirit in inviting the orphans of that city to attend a presentation of Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days" as guests of F. F. Proctor.

Denny Reegan of the Star in Greenwich hit Albany the other day with blood in his eye. This is in the way of a warning to exchanges not to attempt to "load" poor film on Mr. Reegan, who has a mind of his own and is not afraid to speak it.

Whatever you do, don't hand Sam Suckno, theatrical magnate of Albany, N. Y., a cigar. The other day, one of the film exchange managers presented Mr. Suckno with a cigar which he supposed had been given him by one of the wealthiest residents of the city. Mr. Suckno managed to take a few puffs of the cigar, after which he consigned it to a cuspidor, remarking that it was the worst smoke that he had ever had. It later developed that the cigar had been presented the exchange manager by the dirty towel man, the manager having unwittingly given the wrong cigar to Mr. Suckno.

The Barclay in Schenectady certainly made the right move when it decided to admit all children at all shows for 10 cents. John J. Walker, who formerly owned the theatre, charged children the same admission as adults, but on the advice of Frank Breymaier, the new owner, R. V. Erk dropped the price to 10 cents, and now other houses in the city have followed suit.

Robert Landry, owning houses in Ogdensburg, Malone and Plattsburg, has booked "Little Old New York" for the three places.

Father Blais, who runs the Strand in Schroon Lake, N. Y., is trying out double features.

Frank Breymaier, manager of the Barclay in Schenectady, will give a Christmas party to the employees of the theatre some time between Christmas and New Year's.

William Shirley, general manager of the Farash Theatre Corporation in Schenectady, received a couple of Christmas club checks last week, which caused him to remark facetiously that he would probably distribute them "among the film boys in Albany."

According to the management of the Barclay, over 4,500 residents of Schenectady witnessed in a single day a recent showing of "Chronicles of America." The house opened at 11 A. M., charging a 15-cent admission up to nightfall, when 20 and 30 cents prevailed.

It may be that some of the exhibitors are not making money these days, but Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, is not among the number. Mr. Hellman sports a brand new Cadillac car, and in fact had two a few days ago, but returned one to New York simply because he did not like the color.

New Hampshire

Leave it to "Pete" Latchis to give the public what it wants, say the folks up here. Since the grand opening on November 21 of the new Latchis Theatre, Keene, N. H., a new interest in motion pictures and theatricals has pervaded the city and the theatre has done a rushing business.

The opening show in "The Most Up-to-Date Theatre in the World in a Small City" lived up to all promises. Besides Jackie Coogan's "Long Live the King" there was grand opera singing, Keith vaudeville and Ferdinando's Havana Orchestra. A feature of all the programs has been the new pipe organ, played by Edward Allen.

Canada Incorporates

Announcement is made of the incorporation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada under a company charter with headquarters at Montreal, Quebec. The Canadian association, of course, is affiliated with the M. P. T. O. of the United States. The Canadian M. P. T. O. has adopted a crest or trade mark having for its design a maple leaf superimposed with a chain circle which surrounds a beaver. Within the circle is the name of the association and a line, "Incorporated 1923." Both the maple leaf and the beaver are national emblems of Canada and the chain circle represents the co-operative policy of the association.

Buffalo

Mrs. C. B. Darrow has leased the Central Park Theatre from James Wallingford for a period of years. Jim will now devote all his efforts to the Allendale, a west side community theatre.

Howard Waugh, who formerly managed several houses in Jamestown, N. Y., has been engaged by Harold B. Franklin, head of the Paramount theatre department, as manager of the Place Theatre, the demonstration point theatre of the Paramount company in Memphis, Tenn.

Interests who are trying to put over a Sunday picture ordinance in Geneva, N. Y., have run up against much opposition from churches. Interest centers on the next meeting of the council, December 20, when the ordinance permitting Sunday pictures will come up for its first reading.

James Cardina, who operates the New Varsity and Kensington in Buffalo and the Glen in Williamsville, announces that he will close the Kensington next summer for extensive alterations and improvements, including a new stage, heating plant and organ.

Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager at the Lafayette Square, is in a terrible fix. It looks like he will have to have his tonsils removed a day or so before the big Christmas dinner is served.

The employees of the Victoria Theatre, West Ferry and Grant streets, will be treated to a Christmas "feed" by Mrs. Mitchell H. Mark and Walter Hayes on the afternoon of December 29. The banquet board will be placed on the stage.

Nikitas Dipson has reduced admission prices at the Grand Theatre in Batavia, N. Y., where he has just opened the new Family.

The Church of the Christian and Missionary Alliance in Endicott, N. Y., is being remodeled by Benjamin Dittrich into a picture theatre. It will accommodate 600, have a small stage and space for an orchestra and charge 10 cents. The opening will be late in January, it is hoped.

W. Griffith Mitchell Improves Book Into the Perambulating Poster Kiosk

GETTING back to his old desk in the Majestic Theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., W. Griffith Mitchell signalizes his return to the fold by combining the perambulating book, the Parisian news kiosk and the war-time bomb proof into the Griffith Poster Perambulator as shown in the illustration and which he first used, being a First National franchiser, on Jackie Coogan in Circus Days.

A First National Release

THE PERAMBULATOR

This original structure seems to be a light erection of 1x2s covered with corrugated paper or cloth, dome covered and provided with small castors on which the structure rolls, propelled by a one-man motor inside the device.

The front carries a one sheet below the peep holes, with other ones on the sides and a three sheet at the back. If desired two threes may be pasted back of the peep holes with the one sheet in front, or streamers may be worked on the sides above the ones. The surface is there. You may use it as you please.

Build to Endure

But now that Mr. Mitchell has demonstrated the value of the device it would be better to build for permanency, for this is a stunt that can be worked for every title and which will still be good long after the novelty value has worn off.

Build the top of a solid circle, on which the dome is erected. This will make it cooler in summer, as the head of the motive power will not be exposed directly to the heat from the roof.

Build the frame with a door in the rear through which the man may enter and mount it on roller bearing truck castors, three or four inch size, instead of the lighter furniture castors, and keep these oiled. Cover with sheet metal and paint the house plate above the peep holes and repeat just the name all the way around. Build it of sheet metal and you will have an advertising device that will serve you well, week in and week out, which can be used in inclement weather, and if necessary you can supply your perambulator with an oil stove and even a drop seat for his rest periods.

But first find out how the police feel about it. If they give an O. K., you have one problem permanently solved.

You can add noise making devices or light it up at night for transparency work. It is as elastic as a bootlegger's conscience.

Not So Good

The Royal Theatre, Laredo, Texas, as has been told before, uses two-language posters, specially painted, and all of the titles are done into Spanish. It's not so bad as a rule, but recently "Como una Rosa" did not sound half as attractive as "Mighty Lak a Rose." Takes all the poetry out.

Vital Statistics for Woman Proof

When it came to playing Woman Proof, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, distributed to women patrons a manilla envelope printed up "For Women Only. Don't show this to your sweetheart." There was also a cut of a flock of women storming the doors of the Bachelor Club.

Inside were circulars asking "Do you know what the Woman Proof Age is?" "Is there a Woman Proof age?" "See Tom Meighan in Woman Proof at the Howard" and the date.

In a twelve point framed panel were the vital statistics proving that up to date 2,154 men and women had been married in Atlanta in 1923, of which 1,003 were between 20 and 30, 351 between 30 and 35, 500 between 35 and 40, 101 between 40 and 48, 167 between that and 53 and 134 between 53 and 79. This ended with the same inquiry as to what the woman proof age was and the inference that while there was life there was hope.

It is not altogether new, though new in this form, and it made a novelty that was held to be shown so that each had a circulation value of four or five. It should be easy to work out the figures if your town is not too large, but it would be better to use only the ages of the grooms.

Reciprocal

Getting a hook-up page on Strangers of the Night, the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, put a misspelled word in each space and gave ticket prizes for their discovery. More than one hundred correct answers were turned in and that many tickets disposed of.

It might have ended there had not P. F. Schwie thought to write the Herald in comment on its "tremendous pulling power," and the least an appreciative advertising manager could do was reproduce the letter, and there was no charge for that free publicity. Milk it dry while you're at it.

THE BIG FLASH FOR HAROLD LLOYD IN WHY WORRY PLANNED BY THE STRAND, ALTOONA

This shows an exceptionally good collection of jazzy selling lines and a particularly good use of the cutout figures from the lithographs worked into a single splash front that is better than the average because it is not overdone. There are no repeated figures and each is given an isolation which permits it to be displayed to the fullest advantage where crowding would reduce the effect.

Congratulations!

This department extends its congratulations to the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, to Fred S. Meyer, the manager, and E. M. Brewer, who assists him in the handling of the Palace Theatre program, which has just closed its fourth year.

Four years ago Mr. Meyer brought out a thin weekly program. The local merchants contributed their advertising, more because Mr. Meyer was so thoroughly likable than because they expected to reap any real return. It was, in many ways, much like several hundred other house organs, but it had a personality, it aimed to be something more than the mere recital of the film attractions, plus perfunctory clipped matter. Even then it talked for Hamilton and its interest as well as for the Palace.

Today the program, now a monthly, appears as a one hundred page regular issue and is regarded as one of the most productive merchant advertising mediums in that territory. It has a direct mail circulation of more than 3,000 copies, and it is eagerly looked for and read. And this has all come to pass because when he started out to produce a house organ Mr. Meyer used a pen instead of a paste brush, and used it with intelligence.

Today the magazine has a family running well into three figures, and two or three hundred managers in various parts of the country owe to Mr. Meyer the pattern upon which they have founded their own successful publications.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AFTER adding jazz musicians to the regular orchestra for several weeks, one at a time, to perfect the symphonized jazz incident of the program, the Brooklyn Mark Strand Little Symphonized Jazz Orchestra has now blossomed out as an organization of harmonists which can be lifted out of the symphony orchestra for use in radio broadcasting and for stage presentations. The first appearance of these as a unit was made with the picture, "Flaming Youth," when an atmospheric prelude consisted of the Jazz Orchestra and four members of the ballet. The usual Symphonized Jazz was omitted for that week, and a classical overture took its place.

"Raymond," the overture, although a classic, was snappy enough to sustain the tempo of the program. Two booth floods of Mestrum make, 150 amperes each, covered the entire stage with color blend, and two dome floods of same amperage were on the orchestra, also color blend. Two entrance spots, color blend, crossed on the overhead canopy. The transparent columns had color blend spots shooting from the top, and rose pink spots upward from the base. Took up eight minutes.

Songs and Dances of Long Ago was put on partly because of the wonderful reception of previous old selections. Numbers were "Sweetest Story Ever Told," by Grand Chorus of twelve women; "Minuet," by chorus and four members of the ballet, and "To a Wild Rose," by chorus and premier danseuse. At opening the silver draw curtains served as transparency through which the singers were seen in Colonial costume, grouped with props of gold chairs and settees. For first song four overhead spots, two light pink and two light amber, augmented by two amber spots from one side and two orange from the other, picked out the singers. Silver cyclorama back drop was lighted from behind by three light blue open box lamps, and two green and two magenta spots. Footlights blue. Second number brought on the dancers, and they were taken care of by light blue x-rays and amber and orange arch spots. The chorus sang the number in accompaniment to the dancers, the chorus lighting being the same as described.

For the third number the side spots dimmed off, leaving four overhead spots to care of the solo dancer and ensemble. The green and magenta spots crossed on the back cyclorama.

The atmospheric prologue to "Flaming Youth" had a platform setting for the jazz orchestra. The deep blue plush cyclorama had an opening 12 feet high, 10 feet wide and 18 inches high, back of which was the platform. There was a valance covering the opening, with gold tassels and cords. A crystal chandelier hung down from center, and a tinsel drop was backed up by a purple poplin cyclorama. There were two five-light floor standards behind the arch. Opening selection was "Bambalina," by jazz orchestra and four dancers. Next was "Somebody's Wrong" and "Dreamy Melody" by jazz band alone, and then came "Everybody Strut," jazz and dancers. With the last named number a lobsterscope flicker was used, with dancers in "slow motion," and at the finish all lights flashed up white. The keynote of the lighting for this incident was light green, with magenta for contrast. These two colors blended on the back cyclorama from behind, the effect being very unusual. Ran nine minutes.

The feature picture took up one hour and twenty-two minutes, the Review eight minutes, and the musical incidents twenty-six minutes, making a show of one hour and fifty-six minutes.

Punchy Postals

Following up the out-of-town postcards, the First National has designed a somewhat startling imitation handwritten card on Anna Christie in which Anna announces her impending arrival in the reader's home town and urging him to withhold judgment until he can hear her story.

We presume that the First National exchanges will mail these cards from the exchange cities to get the proper postmark, and imagine that it is going to shake a lot of innocent people to their souls' foundations. If you have Anna booked, better get your mailing list ready. This is too good to overlook.

Tinned Ballyhoo

Opening in the Palace of the King, the Rialto Theatre, Newark, used a knight in armor for a ballyhoo. To take the load off his feet, they gave him a horse, and lettered the blanket. Armored knights are rare in Newark, so every one stopped to look, and noted the play and house.

In the lobby there was more armor and some old Spanish flags, along with two boy trumpeters who sounded fanfares when they were not working in the stage prologue.

This title offers ample opportunities for dressing up the exploitation and Manager Fernkause did not overlook a bet.

Many Windows

Twenty-nine windows for ten days each makes a total of 290 days. That's what George E. Brown got in Charlotte, N. C., for Zaza at the Imperial Theatre.

He made a hook-up with the Colgate people who sent a man down to help him work their dealers, and the special brought with him 1,000 samplers which were promptly labeled for the play and given to the dealers for distribution. They were all distributed the day prior to the opening, but were announced for ten days previously.

This was only one of his stunts, but by far the most effective.

Consistent Drive for Anniversary

For its third anniversary, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, used red on white for all his printing and split the display between the celebration and Stephen Steps Out.

The most important hook-in was with a local candy company which supplied 500 pounds of candy to be distributed to the women patrons, and furnished a white uniformed attendant to pass out the samples, also putting up a booth in the foyer to serve as a base of supplies. Six five pound boxes of the candy were also donated for daily prizes. The other end of this stunt was a window in the candy store. It proved a big puller and cost nothing.

For a ballyhoo the Tech High School band and cadets were invited to see young Fairbanks in his first play and gave an extended parade before arriving at the theatre. At several points along the line the march was halted for an exhibition drill. As the Tech in all its roots and branches is a local pride there was a moral as well as straight ballyhoo value to this stunt. It cost nothing, but Kingsmore donated $25 to the instrument fund of the band as an appreciation, and he could not well have gotten more for his money.

A cafeteria with two large establishments was given 500 passes good only Monday afternoon, and purchased another 500 at ten cents each. All were printed to suggest that the caterers had paid for the slips, which gave a better impression. The natural inference was that the cafe management had picked on the show because it was the best, rather than that the theatre was trying to get a large first audience for an unknown star.

Three thousand imitation hand written postals were sent to schools and colleges to tell about the school atmosphere of the play, and there was a special prologue to mark the third milestone.

First National Helps

First National announces that it has arranged for a popular priced reprint of Black Oxen through A. L. Burt & Co. and has arranged with Waterson, Berlin and Snyder to use When Romance Wakes as the theme song for this production.

They have also arranged with Witmark to use Dear Little Boy of Mine for the plugger to Boy of Mine. Ben Alexander's picture will be used on the front page of this and Miss Griffith will grace the Black Oxen plugger front.

Spent $1,800

Generally an increase in the advertising appropriation on a picture goes into special stunts, but Harry Dahn, of the Capitol Theatre, put an extra thousand dollars into newspaper work when he came to put over Ashes of Vengeance at his house. He spent $1,800 in all, but for that he got a fine business for two weeks, and cleared a large profit on the investment.

He figured that there was a large French population which would particularly appreciate the French locale of this Talmadge production. He knew that the newspapers were the most positive approach, so he took unusually large spaces in both the French and English language newspapers, chiefly in advance. Spending so much, he was careful to get particularly good copy and cuts to make the best possible impression.

Most managers would have diverted a share of that money to ballyhoo, but Dahn wisely figured that ballyhoo work did not accord well with the dignified character of Ashes. He holds his exploits for the zippy stories and gets additional respect for the Talmadge work through his own respectful attitude toward the product. He wanted to bring his patrons into the house in the proper frame of mind.

EXPLOITATION FOR THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME TOOK A NEW ANGLE IN LOS ANGELES

B. F. Robinson, exploitation man in the L. A. exchange borrowed the original props and displayed them in contrast with the modern shoes, autos, as contrasted with a litter, the musical instruments and ancient and modern weapons. Original props are not at the disposal of the average exhibitor, but a few can be rented from a costumer to duplicate this general idea.

This French Doll Was a Real Peach

Figuring that a French doll was about the best exploitation for a run of Mae Murray in The French Doll, George J. Schade hired a human mechanical doll to work in the window of a prominent store. He added a painting and a large card.

The stuntster made appearances every hour from noon until four o'clock, and in the intervals she made frequent appearances in the ready-to-wear department in the store, helping business there materially.

C. C. Deardouff, exploiter for Metro, went out and got some good lingerie shops for stills showing Miss Murray and Schade fixed up a pretty lobby, with the result that business was exceedingly good.

Alphabet Blocks Spelled the Sign

Getting one of the largest windows in the Gimbel store in New York for Baby Peggy in her first full length picture was one of the stunts worked by Joe Weil, of Universal.

Gimbel Brothers had already engineered a drive on the Baby Peggy dolls when they were first introduced. They made a good thing of it. When Weil learned that Peggy herself would be in town for a visit, he tied them up to a special drive on the dolls in connection with the personal appearance of the little star at the store.

An entire window was used with a large picture of Peggy apparently projected by a machine at the opposite side, with a plentiful supply of stills and dolls and a few decorations to appeal to the child heart. A notable touch was the use of alphabet blocks to write the signs. These do not show in the cut, but are directly below the line of photographs.

Such a window can be duplicated by any small store, and it will work as well for the little fellows as it did for the big concern. In the case of the Gimbel store, generous space was used in the store advertisements in the daily papers, running around 8 x 10 inches. The idea, of course, was that the youngsters would come and bring their mothers, and a certain percentage of the latter would make purchases unrelated to the dolls.

Chalk Stencils

Generally stencils are worked on the sidewalk in water color, but P. F. Schwie, of the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, used chalk in his sidewalk work for Strangers of the Night. The design was the skull and bones and "S. of N." and the design was spread all over the city two or three days before anything else was done. The design made a lot of talk but brought no definite conclusions until the same piratical crest was used in connection with newspaper and card advertisements. The cards literally flooded the town.

Lipstick Stills on Flaming Youth

Chicago was the first centre to get Flaming Youth, and one of the initial steps in an intensive campaign of general exploitation was to tie into the idea that Flaming Youth needs some cosmetics for kindling.

Drug store windows were tied up to photographs of Colleen Moore applying the lipstick before going to her first party, and these (there are three sorts), motived a general display of scene stills to enliven the layout of beauty aids.

This is going to be one of the real helps to window grabbing, and if you are a First Nationalist it might be well to start in now to talk over the matter with your drug stores and beauty shops. Fix it in advance and save time when the stills arrive.

But cosmetic is only one of the angles. Dresses, lingerie, jazz phonograph records, books, candy, shoes and silk hosiery are all part of an appeal to flaming youth, and all should be approached. Taken in connection with the wide reading of the book, this picture will yield to splendid cooperative results and you can work with merchants who might not be willing to let in ordinary titles.

Bagged Coin, Too

Dulcy was put over in Sandusky by a characteristically Schade stunt. He had 3,000 bags made, about two by three inches, and printed "Come and see me spill the beans in Dulcy at the Schade Theatre. Constance Talmadge."

These were given out the week before the showing, mostly to the matinee patrons, and the bags were all over town. It was a clever idea and so people came to see Dulcy spill the beans and voted her a good little spiller.

Some time ago we showed a picture of Bluebeard's first seven wives in silhouette. The same thing is now being done by suspending dolls in a shadow box with the statement that Gloria Swanson is Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. In the original the figures were full size, but the idea is less gruesome in miniature and can be worked where managers are afraid of the stronger effect. It is not as striking, but it is also less repellent.

Daddy and Kiddie Both Get Theirs

Neither Daddy Day nor a children's special are novelties, but the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, freshened them up a bit by giving a Daddy Day on Jackie Coogan in Daddy and following this with a Kiddies' Day on Penrod and Sam. Each helped the other, so that the combined pull was equal to about three singles instead of only two.

Daddies got in free, for daddy and the youngsters had tickets to a special morning performance of Penrod and Sam. In each instance these tickets were to be clipped from a local paper, which was tied up to the idea. The hook-in brought three column cuts and large stories.

A First National Release

A CLEVER WINDOW DISPLAY

The cut shows a special window worked out for Daddy, based on a cutout but given so elaborate a mounting that it gains a new dignity. These special displays are well worth the trouble they involve since they not only attract a greater measure of attention but convey the suggestion of a picture well above the average. The frames can be used repeatedly, and the interiors can be worked up even by those who cannot paint backings. Doll furniture can be used to make interiors and twigs will replace painted trees for exteriors, and these will give better results than plain painting.

Try one sometime and you'll not only be delighted with the result, but you will come to take a real interest in building these miniatures unless you are materially different from the average man.

Boys Took Buster for Perambulation

Here is a new idea from Baltimore, developed by H. S. Ansley, a Metro exploiter, for Buster Keaton in Three Ages. Ansley was pretty busy when the picture played the New theatre, and this was merely one of the by-products, but it is newer than the other stunts and is susceptible of general use, though it will work best for comedy productions, since it is certain to get a laugh which might react against a more serious play.

A figure was cut from the three sheet, provided with a cross piece, which was held by two youngsters, and taken for a walk. With the Buster Keaton hats on the two boys, the effect is capital.

A Metro Release

THE WALKING CUTOUT

Ansley's chief hook-up was to a morning and evening paper under the same management. These papers were permitted to print a coupon good for a Keaton hat. Later another coupon was printed good for a free admission if presented by a boy wearing the hat. Some 10,000 hats were distributed.

There was also a special performance for the boys selling the two papers, which gave another ballyhoo. Practically everyone in town knew about the picture, and most of them came, apparently.

The manager who feels that exploitation is too much of a nuisance will presently have nothing to worry about, for his house will fall from under him. You can't keep up steam without fire under the boiler, and exploitation is the fuel that feeds the flames of patronage.

Baby Lighthouse Guided Homeward

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., made a miniature lobby lighthouse for Homeward Bound. It was scarcely as high as the box office and stood directly in front of it. A little sand, a few rocks and two ornamental signs completed the outfit.

BROWNLEE'S LIGHTHOUSE

The chief advantage of such a structure is that it can be stored and repainted for almost any sea picture, or for that matter can be revived without elaborate change. Some means should be provided for wiring a light into the lantern and either a flasher socket or a shutter arranged for. This done it can be used repeatedly. It will store more compactly if built in two vertical sections, one of which can be fitted into the other.

An Overture Prologue

Getting local color for an arctic picture from the orchestra was one of the ways the California theatre, San Francisco, put over The Call of the Wild. The orchestra was put into ulsters and winter hats and placed on the stage before a snow setting in which worked a vaudeville act styled, In Alaska. The bass viol player was dressed as a bear and there were four men dressed as seals, who apparently did the seal orchestra stuff. These latter details may be beyond the reach of the small manager, but he can always put his band in overcoats and use a snow drop.

Live models were employed to demonstrate gowns in the window of a swagger clothes shop to tell about The French Doll at Well's Theatre. The stunt was planned by a Metro exploiter, who aided J. J. THESE SIDESHOW PAINTINGS HELPED JACKIE IN OMAHA

The Rialto Theatre tore a page from the circus agent's little book. These objects of art are 12 x 21 feet and gave the proper sawdust flavor without cluttering up the lobby. Because they were a change from the usual, the paintings took hold.

Worked the Mayor Into His Stunt

Always on the lookout for something to make a loud noise about, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, seized upon the fact that his was to be one of the "demonstration" houses under the new Paramount plan.

The first step was to take a large display advertisement telling the facts and building up local pride, and with this as his excuse he sold the Mayor on the idea of writing the home office thanking Paramount for the distinction conveyed in the selection.

This, of course, was worked into the newspapers as live news.

Then Came Pola

With the stage all set, the announcement was made that The Spanish Dancer would be the first demonstration picture. The film cans were delivered to the Mayor at City Hall and by him taken to the Howard, where an invited audience of some 500 were assembled to pass judgment on the picture. It was an exceptionally smart gathering, including all of the leading welfare workers and clubwomen.

The Mayor paused under the marquis to deliver the film to Kingsmore in a florid address, and then they all went inside to see the picture run off and then went outside again to tell the less fortunate how good a picture it was.

Not ignoring the just regular patrons, Kingsmore had a gypsy fortune teller in the foyer the previous week, and she told fortunes at the rate of twenty an hour, always winding up with the prediction that the client would see The Spanish Dancer the following week. That was the truest thing the seeress said. She was dead wrong on a lot of stuff, but that came out about 98 per cent.

In Again

Now it is Sid Laurence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, who is working the names-on-the-counter idea.

A department store wrote the names of 114 customers on cards and these were disposed on the counters in various parts of the store. If a patron found his or her name on a card, it was taken to the office where a pass for two for Children of the Dust was the reward for its return.

This is a little different from the old way, in which the names were selected at random from the telephone directory, but in general the scheme is the same. It would be better to use a greater number of names and hand out singles.

The big idea is that the store will advertise the play in putting the scheme over, and the benefit to the store comes from the purchases the name hunters make.

Lacked Only Bosco on the Omaha Rialto

Only Bosco, who eats them alive, was omitted from the pictorial display on the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, when they played Circus Days. Huge paintings, each 12 by 21 feet, fluttered to the breeze. They really fluttered, because they purposely were not tied off at the bottom, but were left to flap in the wind and so get attention through motion as well as through their vivid coloring, for these were done in true circus style, and the colors yelled louder than a barker.

There was the wild man, supposed to have been captured near Coffeyville, Kans., the fat girl, the snake charmer and the cooch dancer, and the 24-sheet was trimmed down to fit the space above the entrance. There were four others on the front, but the camera could not look around the corner and you will have to take Harry Watts' word for it that he also offered the dog faced boy, the dwarf, the living skeleton and the bearded lady. If you can arrange for paintings, you can dispense with the circus lobby.

There was also a free matinee for the Orphans, and this inspires Walter Eberhardt to write:

Orphans and newsboys

Or if they fail,

Jackie's cute doubles

Bring in the kale.

We like Walter best when he does not write doggerel—he calls it a quatrain—and we are using his poem just to be mean. A better version would be:

Use the newsboys

Until they strike,

Then pick on orphans

If you like.

Anyhow, business was good.

Apparently Howard Price Kingsmore set the fashion when he used tire cards with "Avoid Strangers of the Night. Ride in a yellow taxi," for his Atlanta campaign at the Howard. They are all doing it there.

Black and White Is Well Combined

On Anna Christie the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, uses a black ground cut with a white insert for a character picture; an unusual effect, but by no means displeasing. The significance is partly sunk in the benday, for white letters do not work well on a light grey, and a black would have been better and a mortise best. But this is less important than usual, since the Allen is not running on a general page but at the bottom of reading, and the show-up is better. For the same reason the underline, which would be lost as another advertisement in a full page of ads is held to its main display because there is nothing else for it to cling to. The chief point about the reverse is the use of such large letters that the text does not sink in. There is nothing smaller than a fourteen point and most of it is thick lettering. It would be possible to use thin lines and lose half of the announcement value with no compensating gain in display. Theoretically the title is displayed in the wrong position since a place a little above and to the right of the center is supposed to be the focus, but it gets over because there is nothing in the preferred position to nullify, and the eye naturally turns to the most available type for explanation.

A First National Release

A GOOD BLEND OF COLOR

Doubles Cuts for Panorama Effect

An unusual handling of cuts is developed by the State Theatre, Loraine, Ohio, on Pioneer Days. Two cuts, intended for four column displays, are cropped and combined for a seven column space about seven and a half inches down the page. Apparently these cuts are cropped both at the sides and on top to get a fit, that on the right being larger than the one on the left, but the resultant effect is that of a continuous cut larger than the press book afforded because there is so little demand for cross page cuts. Both drawings are in the same general style, and so they match up well as a single display. It gives the suggestion of a whole flock of stage coaches, but it gets over the main idea and this ingenious handling is worthy of note. It makes a splash unprovided for by the plan book, and sells the story through the suggestion of bigness, as neither cut could do alone or as both cuts could do if placed one above the other in a higher space. This effect is heightened by keeping down the type talk so that the cuts get a chance to sell. They are not wadded in with about all the display type the printer had in his cases. The lines are kept down to avoid crowding, and the result is that the space looks twice as large as it would were the cuts dwarfed by too much large type. The selling points have not been overlooked. They are carefully displayed, but they are not run up to a size where they can hurt the cuts, and the cuts sell the idea of the picture better than the best type display ever could. We do not call to mind a similar joining of cuts, though we recall that some years ago Ralph Ruffner joined two stills very cleverly to get a wider half-tone than the company could supply. This seems to be a first timer, and worthy of notice for its cleverness of thought as well as of handling.

Long Live the King Has Many Fine Cuts

There seems to be an unusually good supply of single cuts on Long Live the King, and Jackie is an appealing little figure in most of them. Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, built a very fine display around a single pose and got a better effect than if an entire gallery had been worked into the 145 by 4. The display would have been better still had there been more type and less hand lettering, but you can't ask too much of Pittsburgh all at once, and the cut comes out so well you can almost forgive the hand lettering, though there is no reason, in this open space, why the entire panel should be lettered since it would be so easy to have plates made for star and title, if desired, and put the rest into type. For that matter the title would look just as individual if done in a "rugged" face and would cut the cost of the cuts and make it easier to compose the advertisement. Most of the Coogan displays work best where there is a single large figure rather than a number of smaller ones. A single cut will get the attention where you do not know which of half a dozen to look at first. Make a good selection and stick to one, and you will find it will sell more tickets. We think that the best selling would carry some line to the effect that this is a play for children and adults alike. It is far from being "just a kid story" and the grownups will find real appeal and interest in the pathetic little figure of the boy prince. Sell it to everyone, for it will please all ages.

cial panel for the extra features, and probably pays for a greater portion of the space, but all three get the value of a larger general display without having to pay the full cost. We do not think that these signatures get proper display, particularly if the paper happens to print up rather grey. It would be better to run a black line around the letters to let them stand out from the benday. In a reduction of two and a half times the benday will probably close in to black, but the effect in the newspaper is a light grey that is somewhat lacking in strength. A light benday is better when used as the ground for a black letter. White is too light to fight through properly.

Simple Drawing Is Keynote of Display

One of the simplest and yet most dignified displays on Ashes of Vengeance comes from the Strand Theatre, New Orleans, where the scene sketches have been discarded as being too large for the 135 lines by 2 and a simple design substituted. The copy is rather poor, because it is largely swank, and the drawn portion of the design would have been better had merely the star and title been named instead of the statement that if 100,000,000 persons see the picture an equal number will cry "there is no greater picture." There is no real conviction to lines such as this. The figures are too large and there is no sales argument. Much better work is done on either side of the cut. One of these panels is an unusually strong local criticism while the other side gives the details of the cast. This is a sane appeal and not exaggeration. No one is going to respond to the spread eagle appeal of the hand drawn work. It does not get over, and it wastes space that might be better employed in giving greater prominence to star and title, which will sell. But apart from this the display is unusually good as a change from the usual drawings, and it is in keeping with the production.

Dashing Design Is Helpful to Rosita

One of the best displays on Rosita comes from Milwaukee where the Alhambra Theatre presented the attraction with enough advertising to put the play over without arguing so strongly as to suggest that they are afraid that the picture will not go over. That is one fault with some of the big pictures. There is so much argument and large talk that the reader gets the impression that the theatre is trying desperately to sell what it is fearful will not sell. Most Pickford stories will sell on the star name alone. Add Blinn for the support and Lubitsch for the director and it should not be necessary to argue with the patron that he should buy tickets. There are just three words of selling argument here, and a mention of the two dollar top in the first run houses. As a rule the combination of reverse for star or title and white for the other factor is not to be commended, but here both are so large and there is so little other copy that it does not matter. The chief selling point, next the names, is that fine character sketch. It is not only good drawing, but it sells the general idea of the production. In 170 lines by three, virtually a three twelves, there is plenty of room to properly put the cut over, but we think that even in a reduction this figure will stand up very well. Good art work is one of the strong points of the U. A. publicity. You always get plenty of practical help from the pictorial angle.

Gets an Art Effect with Office Types

This four elevens from Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., suggests art work, but it was all done in the composing room at a fractional cost of the art work. Perhaps there was no additional charge since the stuff is very simple. This is merely 12 point linear border, probably machine cast, set solid as a frame to the announcement, the frame being 1 7/8 inches wide. It looks as well as the average benday and it gives a wonderful display to the smaller space devoted to the attraction. It gets more attention for The French Doll than if the type had been expanded to fill the entire space without the frame. In this space we think that an eight point roman would have been better than the six point used for the sub lines, but Mr. Burns evidently sought to keep the large lines up even at the cost of the smaller ones. He will probably raise them next time. The important point is that he gets a fine display at very little cost and creates the impression of elaborateness that will help over the Mae Murray production without increasing the bill. Almost any office with linotype machines has some border material available, and this can be worked into frames, though not all will look as well as this linear. Back in the old days the Bullfinch border was the standard for mass work. We like this better because there is less design. There is a suggestion here that can be worked in a variety of ways. See what you can do in the way of change and send it in. Mr. Burns comments on the fact that the rounded corners give a somewhat unfinished look, and adds that next time he will have the slugs cut to fit that corner space. A better way would be to use right angle corners. It will look just as well. If he wants to get a proper fit for a fancy corner, we would suggest that he use convex instead of concave corner pieces, then he can hollow the slugs with a rat tail file without any trouble to speak of.

DONE IN THE COMPOSING ROOM

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

DERE Santa Claus:—I am only a poor little exhibitor, but I have been a real good little exhibitor all year and I am writing to you in hopes you will not forget me and give me the things I wish for I don't want much only will you please bring me better advertising axessories etc. next year to help be a gooder boy.

Please, Santa, bring me some press bks. maybe without all those bright colors and with more ideas something that will help me make lots of people come to my house instead of trying to show me how much better the picture with the bright colors press bk. is than the one with only a regular printed page, and Santa please send me lots of good axessories that don't cost to get more than the pixure costs to rent and heralds and novlties I mean that each don't cost as much as admission including war tacks.

And, honest Santa, I'll be a good little exhibitor if you send me posters with the names off them of everybody that had anything to do with the pixure including the wardrobe woman and not leaving enough room on them for the stars or pixure's name—and with the big 20four sheets dere Santa please have the title big and the sub-jex simpul so that people can see from far away and don't have them in colors that you cant rede the lettring sometimes like last year.

Also I would oppruciate some publissity in the press bks. which didn't say this is the greatusts pixure ever fillumd because when I dont get the kind i'm asking you for, please, the editor of my papers dont put them in.

Dere Saint Nick please dont think Im complaneing but the nusepaper adds you sent me last year were almost all alike. Kindly this year will you send me some diffrent ones from last years and some of those nice kind with those bright shiny ideas in them and not the name of the producior put right on the prettiest part where I have to have it cut off to save expens by not advting the names which they pay for advting themselves in the Saturday Evening Posed and which dont help me fill my Xmas or any other stocking at all.

And don't think me greedy will you Santa if I ask you to watch over those nice boys who write the traid paper adds and keep them improving the way they have been the past twelve (12) mos? and instead of xtravagant claims giving me information about what they want me to play with and how to do it like they have been giving me lately.

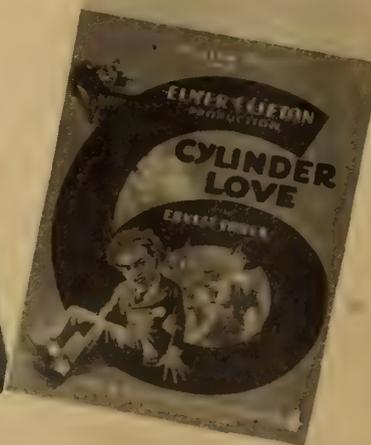

O Santa I almost forgot to ask you for slides without a lot of useless lettering on—you know the kind I want—those with a nice motto on them which makes people come to my house and not those with an awful lot of useless gingerbred kurlique lettring which makes people sick and they say so sometimes, and Id be glad too if you'd bring me publissity kuts without all the captyuins being attached so that they don't take up too much spas and the editor won't print them the same as stories which are too extreim in their clames.

Gosh, Santa, I certainly seem to have asked for a lot, but honest I've been a good little exhibitor and I'll promise to be gooder and gooder if you'll only send me some nice posters, axessories, including novulties, oil paintings, ads., publissity, kuts, trailers, etc and IDEAS.

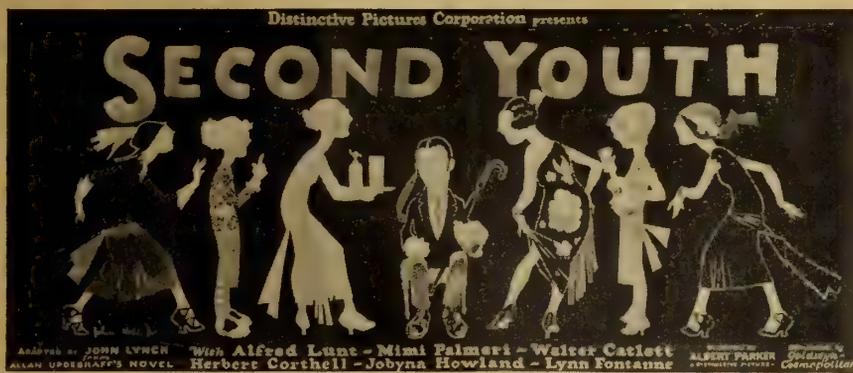

Hoping you are the same I beg to remain.

Yrs. Rspcfy.

WILLIE GETTIT.

Some of the smaller posters and a window card on "Six-Cylinder Love," Fox's new special. There is a full line of paper available, including, of course, a twenty-four. All of the posters are reproduced in the press book

John Held, Jr., whose drawings are to be seen in many magazines, seems to have become quite popular as a movie poster artist lately. Here is one he has just finished for Goldwyn's forthcoming "Second Youth"

FOX has issued a bigger-than-usual campaign on "Six-Cylinder Love." Bigger-than-usual chiefly meaning more comprehensive. The campaign as outlined in the colored press book and the black-and-white section covers the ground completely, from publicity stories to trailer. The reviewers say the picture is good, so, with the help of the campaign books, the exhibitor should have no trouble in putting it over successfully.

GOLDWYN'S most ambitious "yellow supplement" has just been issued. It is an 88-page symposium of ideas on how to put over "Little Old New York." Every mimeographed page contains something of interest to the showman who has booked Marion Davies' big offering—than which little more could be said of anything issued for a similar purpose.

AND we notice that Eddie Bonns, who is mainly responsible for the Goldwyn "yellow supplements," has just been promoted to the position of Special Sales Representative. Here's our best, Eddie!

A good-looking and practical press book is that issued on "Innocence" by C. B. C. Sales Co. It is complete in every detail and fully lives up to the standard of one or two predecessors which, as we have stated, show that the Independents are right up with the leaders when it comes to turning out seat-selling campaigns.

ADVERTISING agency sharps have figured that forty words is a maximum for copy on a street-car card—that the reader's attention cannot be held beyond that point.

Wonder what they'd think of some of the slides issued in this industry—slides with about twelve words of selling copy, including the title, and forty or more words of credit lines? And that's not exceptional. We examined photographs of dozens of slides lately, and our conviction is that anyone who reads the average slide through certainly must have considerable patience.

We know that credit lines are a matter of contracts, but we're going to keep plugging to get them off advertising aids directed at the public, especially the smaller aids.

IT seems to us that we've had the knocking hammer out quite frequently lately. If there is anybody whose toes were stepped on, or who has anything to say, whether bouquet or brickbat, remember that this is the place to say it, and that these columns are always open to any idea that will help anybody who has anything to do with the advertising of motion pictures.

INASMUCH as this is the season of prophecies for the coming year, we are going to be different and not make any.

JUST one parting shot for 1923:

If the same degree of intelligence had been put behind the making of certain of the year's pictures that was put behind the advertising and selling of those pictures, there would have been a much different story in the grosses recorded.

THIS is an acknowledgment and appreciation of all those Christmas greetings we are about to receive.

Wishing you the same—and lots of 'em.

Advance hints of what to expect for "Black Oxen." Here are the slides. Looks as if the keynote of the layouts was going to be the idea of the book strikingly carried out—the rejuvenation of a woman

Two twenty-fours posted by Educational. We understand that these are available for exhibitors at Educational Exchanges. Plenty of room for a date strip on both of these for the exhibitor who wants to boost his short subjects—and they certainly are worth boosting these days.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

F. B. O.

HUMAN WRECKAGE. (7,215 feet). Star, Mrs. W. Reed. Played this some time ago but neglected to report on same. It was a complete failure here. Did not get the business or satisfy those who saw it. Paid too much rental, consequently did not make money. It did not add prestige to my house either. Has good moral tone and Sunday is about the only day it is suited for. Had fair attendance. Draw college class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 20-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

First National

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A western picture with real merit. Should please any class audience. Don't be afraid of it just because it is a western. Has plenty of real comedy, pathos, and action. Has good moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-22. Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre (960 seats), Liberal, Kansas.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Satisfactory, but not as gripping as the press sheet says. Russell Simpson good as the gambling sheriff. Had very good attendance. C. F. Kriehbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackail. Absolutely one of the finest of the season, a knockout, a credit to the industry. Positively one of the cleanest and best pictures I have ever shown. Five stars in this picture and every one of them "carried away" the picture. Harry Short's work wonderful. Boys, step on the loud pedal in your advertising, as this one will not disappoint you. Better on second night than first, although big dance in town caused me to lose money. Patrons still raving over it. Has excellent moral tone and it could be played in a church. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SUNSHINE TRAIL. (4,500 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This will make a good "Double Feature" day; book this five reeler with another five reeler and you will have a very fine day's program. Had "Double Feature" day and had very good business. Draw good class in Brooklyn, New York. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. This is a good picture; however, not as big as many other ones. An excellent program but no special. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and best class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Fox

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK. Star cast. Another one of the so-called specials. Haven't taken in enough to pay for one since "Checkers." Not suitable for Sunday (or any day). Poor attendance. R. X. Williams, Lyric Theatre, Oxford, Mississippi.

ing to it at all. After the show is over you will wonder what it is all about. Not suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Goldwyn

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. Film was in good shape. Suitable for Sunday. Good moral tone. Draw mixed class in town of 1,400. J. L. Douglas, Strand Theatre, Pierce, Nebraska.

SIX DAYS. (8,010 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. This Elinor Glyn story had been touted very strong to me, touted by actual attendance in theatres and I was led to believe that it would be at least a big audience picture, but they are very very discriminating here and as a result it went over poorly. I find no fault with the picture in particular, but I don't think it anywhere near as big for the small towns as Goldwyn thinks it is and the price they request for it. My advice on this picture would be, play it, but buy it right. Had only fair attendance. Used everything for advertising. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. A wonderful show for an intelligent audience, but if you want to get the ordinary people you must go out and hustle. Patrons were highly pleased with it, while it only brought fair attendance. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

Metro

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Very similar to the other Mae Murray pictures and in fact not as good as some of them. It drew fairly well here and pleased about in the same proportion. Used heralds, mailing list, billboards. Had fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FRENCH DOLL. (7,028 feet). Star, Mae Murray. Good box office attraction but will not please as well as the previous pictures by same star. General opinion is that Miss Murray "puts on" too much—in other words, overacts. However, in justice to the picture will say it did the business. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25, 20-40. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

Paramount

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Fine picture, better business on second day than first. Paramount have boosted Swanson subjects to a price that makes it very hard to make a profit on them. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw family and railroad class in town of 7,750. Admission 10-25, specials 10-35, supers 10-50. J. E. Alfo, Jacob's Theatre (1,100 seats), McComb, Mississippi.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Good picture of Hollywood. Wouldn't interest people to see such picture every day. Used new paper ad, ones, threes, also advertised in surrounding papers. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance two nights. Draw town and rural class in town of 1,200. C. R. Seff, Ellis Coon, New Radio Theatre, Correctionville, Iowa.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Pleased our Saturday crowds. Kosloff is fine. Star has slipped a lot and no longer draws. Has average moral tone and will do for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25, 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (600-750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). A life saver. Played this three days; out of five pictures played in seven years one of five that stood up for three days in a town of 3,500. Everyone said it was best they had ever seen. Used window cards, heralds, posters and miniature cottage built for old homestead. Special music. Admission 10-30. Seat 500. A. E. Jarboe, Royal Theatre, Cameron, Missouri.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star cast. Splendid picture. A little bloody but our patrons ate it up. A popular story by popular author and is very well made. Used newspaper, twenty-fours, photos, heralds. Has good moral tone and is a little too rough for Sunday. Had splendid attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-35, real specials 25-50. W. B. Renfro, Dream Theatre (600 seats), Sedro Wooley, Washington.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,695 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Very well liked by our audience who came in good numbers to see this show. Mary Miles Minter is fairly well liked by our patrons. Print O. K. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Good picture for a college town. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbon-dale, Illinois.

YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE. (5,703 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. A fine cast wasted in an ordinary story. The acting in this one is very good. Title and cast drew them out for us. Print was in fair condition. Had average attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-25-35. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (40 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A comedy drama which seemed to please all who saw it, although some expected to see a rough and tumble western. Print poor condition. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission ten cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

Star cast. A light comedy offering with some thrills that gave satisfaction as a program picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44.

"Cupid's Fireman"

Fox Production with Charles Jones Is Appealing in Love Interest and Thrills

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Two popular angles of appeal have been played up in this Fox feature, starring Charles Jones—the fireman and the ballet girl. It is a very good program offering. The thrills and keen love interest should insure its box-office success in almost any house.

Charles Jones shows his increasing ability in a romantic-hero role. In this picture, which is an adaptation of a Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," he has one of the slightly wistful, big-brother parts which he does so sincerely. His scenes with the child have much wholesome appeal. Little Eileen O'Malley has a most attractive personality and wins without possessing the usual prettiness of the screen child.

Most of the action follows the love motive but the fire scenes which come near the end have good dramatic value. Particularly is the climax effective when the floor crashes through, and the hero and the man he is saving disappear. Also there are a few interesting shots towards the beginning showing the firemen jumping from a training tower to a net far below. Marian Nixon is pretty and a charming dancer. The average fan will find much to enjoy in this picture.

Direction by Williams Wellman.

Length, 5,000 feet.

Story

Andy McGee realizes his long ambition to become a fireman when his mother finally consents. She dies soon after and he finds a little orphan girl who "mothers" him. Andy meets a beautiful chorus girl, takes her home, discovers she is married to a worthless drunkard, and agrees not to see her again. The house where the girl lives catches fire, her husband drunkenly locks her in the room, but Andy climbs up and saves her. Her husband is killed despite Andy's effort to save him.

"Danger Ahead"

Phil Goldstone Presents Another Acrobatic Vehicle for Richard Talmadge

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Richard Talmadge's acrobatic skill is as usual the feature of chief interest here. Without his stunts, the story would be hardly satisfying although the acting is good. But the star's particular talent is a lively asset, giving the picture the thrills and action that will be appreciated in the neighborhood theatre.

As a mystery drama, which it purports to be, it is rather far-fetched. Almost anyone will be apt to note the discrepancy in the idea of burying a stranger instead of the hero, who was supposed to be dead. The subsequent action is based upon the hero "doubling" for himself, and forgetting his past after being injured in the struggle.

The scenes showing his escape from the Dago's gang are first-rate spectacular entertainment. He makes many daring leaps, takes some neat falls and at other times gets into strenuous fights which he makes very realistic. Two splendid character actors, Harry Kirby and J. P. Lockney, are of good support. The picture should do well where the other Talmadge pictures have been popular, although the star is deserving of better dramatic material than this.

Story

Bruce Randall is injured after a fight with Mortimer, who has attempted to rob his home, and is reported dead by the police. They bury a man they believe to be Bruce, while Bruce wanders about, unable to recall his past. Two crook lawyers find him, hire him to impersonate Bruce so as to get some pearls in the Randall mansion, and Mrs. Randall believes he is really her husband. He regains his memory in time to defeat the crooks and save his wife's happiness.

"The Call of the Canyon"

Jazz and the Call of the West Effectively Contrasted in Paramount Version of Zane Grey Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As suggested by the title, and characteristic of the novels by the popular author, Zane Grey, "The Call of the Canyon" is a story in which the appeal of the great outdoors, the big open spaces, is dominant. It is a virile story with an unusual twist and plenty of action and drama, but the most impressive point in this Paramount production is the grandeur and magnificence of the western backgrounds, the awe-inspiring views of mountains and canyons. No more beautiful or soul-stirring views of nature have ever been screened.

Aside from its pictorial beauty, this serves to throw into sharper contrast and thereby increase the dramatic effect, the scenes picturing the mad search for amusement on the part of the jazz-loving, irresponsible section of the wealthy class in the East; for it is to this latter class that the heroine belongs while the hero has heard "the call of the canyon."

It is this conflict that supplies the basis for the dramatic structure, and we follow with interest the working out of the action in which the spirit of the open spaces conquers. There is a rugged strength in the treatment of the theme, and several excellent melodramatic scenes, as for instance the sandstorm in the canyon, followed by a stirring fight between the villain and the hero.

This note is evident throughout and has been carried to such an extent that even in the case of the heroine for the greater portion of the film no attempt is made to excuse her actions, and it is only when she realizes what a quitter she has been do you feel any sympathy for her. You are apt to be disgusted with her when she evidences disgust for the things that appeal to the hero and particularly where she characterizes as beastly the fight in which he saves her from the villain.

The climax is a deftly handled one, and although it may not ring entirely true to every-day human nature, there is great dramatic force and unusually well-sustained suspense in the situation where the heroine returns just as the hero is being married to another girl. Your sympathy is kept wavering between your new attitude toward her and your admiration for the other girl, and some are apt to be disappointed when the heroine finds happiness through the sacrifice on the part of the other girl.

The picture is well acted throughout by an excellent cast headed by Richard Dix as the hero, Lois Wilson as the heroine and Marjorie Daw as the other girl.

The jazz scenes are as effectively handled as the western ones. A novel scene, rich in humor, shows a skunk in action. This will get the laughs. Altogether it is a picture that should appeal to the majority of patrons and prove a good box office attraction.

Put Asunder"

Based on novel by Zane Grey.

Directed by Victor Fleming.
 Length, 6,993 feet.

Story

Many years after the world war, Glenn Kilbourne, who has been gassed, returns to New York and finds his fiancée, Carley Burch, a leader in a wealthy, ultra-jazzy crowd. Disillusioned and disgusted, Glenn has a relapse and is ordered to go to Arizona, where he hears the call of the canyon and his dislike of the New York idle set increase. Fearing she will lose him, Carley goes to the canyon but she becomes disgusted with the rough, uncouth life and returns east. Going to visit a friend of Glenn, who is in the hospital, she is made to realize what a quitter she has been. She again goes to Arizona and arrives just as Glenn is being married to Flo Hutter. Just at the last moment, Flo sees Carley, whom she knows Glenn still loves, and, insisting that she take her place, leaves the church. Lee Stanton, who has always loved Flo, is waiting and receives her in his arms.

"His Mystery Girl"

Herbert Rawlinson Starred in Light Comedy

Drama by Universal

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Herbert Rawlinson tries something slightly new here—a characterization of a woman-hater. It should be a fairly good program number, as it has a pretty heroine, a number of light complications and some scenes of action.

The farcical note predominates although there is an alleged mystery motive. As a whole it is hard to definitely classify the picture, as it is something between comedy-drama and burlesque. It is frankly indicated at the beginning that the subsequent action is a frame-up on the hero. As the spectator knows that all of the other characters are only hired performers, there is naturally very little suspense and realism.

If a few unexpected complications had been introduced so as to break the effect of everything being staged, the picture would have a stronger appeal generally. The hero's meeting with the lady in distress, the theft of the diamonds in her purse and the final climax in the deserted house where he is summoned to save her are frankly part of the frame-up. There are comedy touches but not in abundance. The drama seems rather too simple to hold the attention of a certain class of fans. However, most of the scenes have a pleasing note and the lightness will appeal to some audiences.

Cast

Kerry Reynolds.....Herbert Rawlinson

Story by Marion Orth.

Length, 4,487 feet.

Story

Kerry Reynolds, guilty of much seriousness and little play—finds his roommate having a good time, with the assistance of a gay gang. Dick tells him he'll be in the graveyard pretty quick. Kerry goes to a doctor and sees a girl with tears in her eyes. In a hotel lobby he sees the girl again. She leaves her handbag on a "divan." He picks it up—immediately two house detectives chase him. He lands in a lonely house at night with ten men to lick. Dick chases him everywhere. Meanwhile friends laugh "up their sleeves," for it is all a frame-up—but all ends happily.

"Daniel Boone"

Pathe Offers Fourth Number of "Chronicles of America" Series—In Three Reels

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

In the early settlement of what is now Kentucky, which furnishes the basis for the fourth of the "Chronicles of America" series, the same simplicity and dramatic strength that made the first three successful is found. Its realism gives it a distinct advantage with critical minds. It offers substantial entertainment to those who do not depend upon sensationalism and exaggeration for thrills.

There is a quiet thrill, however, in the story of the defense of Boonesboro. Daniel Boone's lonely journey to found this town in 1775, his resourcefulness in eluding the Indians and his persistent fight with only small aid to keep the settlement from the Indians and the French spy is a story of considerable suspense. It works up to a good climax when the Americans dig a counter trench to destroy the enemy who has been digging an underground approach to the walled town. The Indians, already superstitiously afraid of Boone, are sure that he resorts to witchery. They give up just before he is forced to, because they think he is receiving supernatural aid. Elmer Grandin plays the part of Boone with dignity and effective mental poise. All of the acting is carefully done and shows great sincerity in the directing.

"The Old Fool"

Hodkinson Production Effectively Plays Upon Sympathy for an Old Man Who Is Mistreated

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In the Hodkinson production, "The Old Fool," effective use is made of the innate feeling of rebellion in most of us at the sight of an old person being mistreated, with the result that strong sympathy is aroused for the character in the title role and the picture is vested with more than an average amount of human interest.

This is the dominant idea in a story which starts out in the East, switches to the Mexican border and introduces familiar screen situations, such as a smuggling plot to get guns into Mexico, in which the sheriff is the leader of the gang, with the coincidence of having the man who mistreated the old fellow back East as also mixed up in the plot.

While the story is not especially strong or convincing, it serves the purpose as a vehicle for playing up the title character who figures prominently all through the picture. Even the title "the old fool," applied to him in derision has a strong sympathetic note. The manner in which the old man, almost childish in his actions, accepts his ill-treatment and repays good for evil will get a strong hold on the average spectator, and the way in which he continually harks back to the days of the civil war, each time exaggerating his exploits, has strong appeal. The scenes where he meets a veteran who was on the other side and they "fight" over and over the big battles of the civil war, almost coming to blows, will appeal to the majority of patrons.

In addition to this, there is a pretty little romance of a conventional type, considerable action with a western atmosphere and an out-of-the-ordinary climax in which "the old fool" is the dominating character. The picture is capably acted, and backed by its strong human interest note and sympathetic angle, it should prove a good box-office attraction in the average house.

James Barrows gives a fine characterization in the title role, with Lloyd Hughes capably cast as the one member of the family who does not consider him a burden. The remainder of the roles are in competent hands, with Louise Fazenda contributing some amusing comedy touches.

Cast

Story and scenario by J. C. Fabrini.

Directed by E. D. Venturini.

Length, 6,147 feet.

Photographed by Ned Van Buren.

Story

Grandad Steele is considered a burden by everyone in the family except his grandson John and his little great-granddaughter Emily, who like to listen to his stories of the Civil War. As a result of a row with his father over his treatment of the old man, John leaves home and goes to Texas, getting a job on the Baredo Blade.

John is suddenly called home on the death of his father and finds he has been cut off and Granddad Steele left in his charge. He takes the old man to Texas with him, where the old fellow has a wonderful time again "fighting the war" with an old Confederate.

It develops that the sheriff is mixed up with a gang who are smuggling across the border rifles and ammunition secured from John's brother. John helps to quash this plot, but the sheriff escapes and attacks John's sweetheart Mary. John arrives in time to rescue her but the sheriff again seeks to escape. He is killed, however, by Granddad with his old civil war sword.

"Breaking Into Society"

Film Booking Offices Releases Hunt Stromberg Comedy Starring Bull Montana

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Hunt Stromberg is presenting Bull Montana in a feature-length comedy on the social blunders of the "O'Tooles of Tin Can Alley." It is comedy of the broad, obvious type and will appeal to patrons who have shown a liking for this style of entertainment.

There is hardly enough original material for a five-reel subject. For instance, bad table manners have been burlesqued so often that unless there is a preponderance of new ideas, such a scene is apt to seem rather tame. There are, however, a few good laughs in this part. One of the best pieces of comic pantomime is Chuck Reisner's. He is asked to relate how he happened to marry Sally, the gum-chewing, diamond-laden maid who invites the serving maid to sit down at the table with guests. He describes their meeting in a cemetery, his proposal, Sally's refusal, her change of heart when he shows her a diamond and their visit to the minister—all by pantomime. It is a vivid touch and very well done.

There are some exceptionally funny moments toward the close when the guests sprinkle the contents of a snuff box on their ice cream, mistaking it for powdered chocolate. Also the carving of the turkey will bring a few chuckles. The star and the cast, including Carrie Clark Ward, Kala Pasha and Francis Treboal, do very well and show fine direction. If the picture had been done in two or possibly three reels, it would have been far more snappy and more certain of a wider appeal. As it is, the tastes of your patrons for this type of entertainment should be carefully considered.

Story

The O'Tooles suddenly inherit a fortune and move to Pasadena, where they try to get into society by doing some lavish entertaining. Their formal guests receive one terrific shock after another. An old friend, a prize fighter, arrives uninvited and brings his Bowery bride with him. They pass the rest of the time away with tales of the ring-side and committing more social crimes until the guests make a clandestine exit.

"The Marriage Market"

Pleasing Light Entertainment for the Average Patron Provided in Newest C. B. C. Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While in the C. B. C. production, "The Marriage Market," there is an undercurrent of moralizing over the attempts of match-making relatives to secure for girls of the upper social set husbands who are wealthy regardless of their other drawbacks and the absence of love, the picture as a whole is an exceedingly light and romantic story with a theme that often stretches the credulity of the spectator.

The heroine is a very young lady who continually dreams of romance and adventure and in following this idea it is hard to believe that she would be carried away to the extent of the incident on which the story is builded. Coincidence also plays a prominent part in the development. Altogether it is not a story that will stand rigid analysis from the standpoint of probability and even introduces situations which approach farce, but if it is not viewed too seriously there are several points that will appeal to patrons liking light, amusing entertainment.

In the first place, the story is well acted, there is plenty of romance and adventure, and for the most part a breeziness to the action. There are several familiar types, considerable good humor and situations that will please the average spectator and help him to while away a pleasant hour.

Pauline Garon is delightful and pretty to look at in the leading role and adds materially to the picture's appeal. Jack Mulhall is effective in the opposite role of a romantically inclined novelist and the other roles are all in capable hands. Alice Lake does good work, but is handicapped by the fact that her role is an unsympathetic one throughout.

Theodora Bland, a mischievous girl, is expelled from a fashionable school and, returning home, helps a girl who has escaped from a reform school. Theodora gets off in the rain at the wrong station and, seeking shelter, wanders into the home of a young novelist, Wilton Carruthers. Being romantically inclined, she tells Carruthers she is the girl who escaped from the reform school and he saves her when the sheriff arrives.

Reaching home, Theodora makes a hit with her aunt's new husband and finds his daughter is engaged to Carruthers. The girl, Lillian, and Theodora's aunt seek to marry her to a wealthy oil king. She rebels and goes to Carruthers. Lillian finally accuses Theodora of being the escaped reform school girl and breaks off her engagement with Carruthers, who offers to marry Theodora, and is accepted, as the real reform school girl comes forward and confesses, and all ends happily.

"The Best Man Wins"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

With a prize-fighter for a hero, this Aesop Film Fable is a lively account of pugilistic victories. Mr. Rat starts out in excellent training, destroys the trap that would destroy him and finishes with an overwhelming defeat of the village bully four times his size.—M. K.

Pursuing the elusive dollar bill occupies all of Neely Edwards' and Bert Roach's time in this Universal comedy. They have no difficulty in acquiring it but much trouble in keeping it. It is a good number with the two comedians entering into their characters with their usual spontaneity.—M. K.

"Jealous Husbands"

Maurice Tourneur's Newest Production for First National Is Effective Emotional Melodrama

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Unfounded jealousy of a suspicious husband and the havoc it wrought furnishes the basis for "Jealous Husbands," Maurice Tourneur's newest production for First National. In this picture, the director turns from whimsical and imaginative themes, such as he has employed in several recent productions, and presents a strong moral lesson by means of melodrama. It is a production that plays upon the emotions and should prove a good box-office attraction in the average theatre.

The story is not especially strong and the action not at all times convincing, as it is difficult to believe that simply on suspicion a man should go to the extent of having his own child kidnapped. However, this leads to a chain of circumstances that play upon the heart strings, such as the grief of the mother at the loss of her child, her finding him and not knowing he is her boy, the substitution of another child and the final recovery of her own offspring.

There is plenty of melodramatic action in the picture once it gets well under way, although it is slow at first. There is an excellent auto smash-up and other points that introduce thrills. There is strong sympathy for the mother and boy throughout and a feeling of condemnation for the husband which is so strong that you do not feel he is rightfully entitled to the happiness that finally comes. The chief defect in the picture is the fact that the story is not altogether convincing. This, however, will probably be overbalanced in the minds of the spectators by the other good points. There are, however, some scenes which appear a little too brutal as when the boy is cruelly beaten. Though this is done off-stage the shadows carry the idea forcefully.

The work of the cast is excellent. Jane Novak is a good type for the wife and acts with sincerity and feeling. Earle Williams has the unsympathetic role of the husband. Benny Alexander is superb as the boy, and George Seigman does fine acting as the brutal burglar-kidnapper.

There is strong appeal in the title which affords opportunities for effective promotion work and will, if rightfully played up, attract patronage, for it suggests a situation that strikes close to home for many in both sexes.

Finding an incriminating letter, and crazed by jealousy, Martinez accuses his wife of unfaithfulness and when a burglar breaks into the house Martinez gives him their baby boy. Martinez's wife leaves him. Ramon seeks the lad, who in the meantime has run away from the burglars who have brought him up as a crook. THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

Pathe Closes 1923 with Large and Very Diversified Program

Pathe will conclude its 1923 schedule by releasing on December 30 one of the largest programs of the year, with a total of eleven subjects covering sixteen reels of diversified entertainment.

Heading the list is "Daniel Boone," the fourth of the "Chronicles of America" series. It is in three reels and deals with an outstanding character of history. It is said to be strong in drama, action and suspense and covers particularly Boone's Transylvania expedition and the settlement of Boonesboro and the prominent part Daniel Boone played in the fight of the U. S. for independence.

Prominent also in this list is "Girls and Records," the second of the new Grantland Rice series single reel "Sportlights." It compares in an interesting manner the athletic girl of today with her less agile sister of yesterday and introduces several women champions including Helen Wills on the tennis court, Miss Collett on the links, Adeline Gehrig at basketball, a polo team, and Aileen Riggan, the Olympic diving champion.

"The Darkest Hour" is another of Hal Roach's "Spat Family" series in which the discordant trio engage in "brewing their own." Each has his own ideas, and disgusted servants and inquisitive police add to the merriment.

"Inbad the Sailor" is a Mack Sennett two-reel comedy with Billy Bevan and Harry Gribbon in the leading roles, with Madeline Hurlock as a vamp who causes all the trouble. The featured players become assistants to a lighthouse keeper who is subject to hallucinations and imagines they are trying to abuse his sweetheart. This leads to fast action and amusing situations.

Third Sennett Unit in New Pathe Series

Pathe has acquired distribution rights to a third series of comedies to be made under the supervision of Mack Sennett. These comedies will be two-reelers and Harry Langdon, vaudeville favorite recently signed-by Sennett, will be starred.

Contract calls for one of these comedies every four weeks. The first, "Picking Peaches," will be released February 3; the second, "Smile, Please," is scheduled for a month later. "Picking Peaches" marks the return of the famous Mack Sennett Girls, and the supporting cast includes Alberta Vaughan, Jack Cooper, Dot Farley, Irene Lentz and Vernon Dent.

This series is in addition to, and will not supplant, the current Mack Sennett comedies or the Ben Turpin productions which are released by Pathe.

In "It's a Boy" Snub Pollard appears as a daddy on the occasion of the arrival of his first-born, which gives him fine opportunities for amusing situations. The current Aesop's Fable is "The Best Man Wins," which shows what usually happens to a man who looks for a fight and finds it.

Two Clyde Cook Specials on Educational's List for 1924

The beginning of the new year finds Educational with plans perfected for a very comprehensive program of short subjects. During the first half of the 1923-24 season, which is nearing completion, this company introduced several new series, including Juvenile Comedies, Tuxedo Comedies, "The Sing Them Again" series and "The Secrets of Life" series of Tolhurst microscopic comedies.

In addition to these new series, which are now well under way, early in the new year Educational will release two special Clyde Cook comedies, produced by Joseph M. Schenck. Each is in two reels and the first will probably be released in February.

The second week in January will see Lloyd Hamilton's new comedy, "My Friend," the second of a series of six. It has created unusual enthusiasm at previews in Los Angeles, and Educational officials believe it will be even better than "The Optimist," the first of the series, which is winning favor all over the country, receiving exceptional praise from newspaper critics.

January will also see "Jean of Heceta

Special in "Snapshots"

In addition to the usual sections showing a number of prominent motion picture stars, C. B. C. announces that No. 8 of the new issue of Screen Snapshots contains a special feature. This shows a big horse race at Tia Juana which was attended by many well known players, including Dorothy Dalton, Eileen Percy, Agnes Ayres, Richard Dix, Earle Williams, Wallace Beery, Wanda Hawley, Bessie Love, Mae Murray, Frank Mayo, Irving Cummings, Herbert Rawlinson, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Head," the first release of the third series of Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales, also "Ride 'Em Cowboy," the first of twelve two-reelers on Christie's schedule for the 1923-24 season. It stars Bobby Vernon and is one of the broadest and most amusing comedies ever produced by Christie. The remainder of the series will see the starring honors divided between Bobby Vernon, Jimmie Harrison, Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns.

The mid-season finds Jack White's schedule of Mermaid Comedies in full force with the January release of "Flying Finance," in which an entire village is wiped out by a funny cyclone. There will also be additional Juvenile Comedies with Bennie Alexander, Ernest Butterworth, Joe Butterworth, Roger Keene, Jack McHugh, Peggy Cartwright and the other lovable youngsters, together with regular releases of the Cameo single reel comedies. The Lyman Howe Hodge-Podge will also continue throughout the season. The new Cameo comedies are notable for the addition of Sid Smith, who joins Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance in this series.

Riesensfeld Books Universal's "The Fourth Leather Pushers"

Universal announces that "The Fourth Leather Pushers" series of six two-reel pictures has been booked by Hugo Riesensfeld to be shown in either the Rivoli or Rialto theatres in New York. While occasional subjects from the first three series have been presented in these houses, this is the first time that either has booked a complete series.

This booking was arranged by Dr. Riesensfeld and Harold B. Franklin, head of the Famous Players theatre department, as the result of the favorable impression made by screening the first two of the series, "That Kid from Madrid—Michigan" and "He Loops to Conquer."

"The Fourth Leather Pushers" series stars Billy Sullivan, a kinsman of the famous John L. Sullivan. He was selected for this role in the well-known stories of the prize ring written by H. C. Witwer, when Reginald Denny was made a star in Universal Jewel features.

Many of the players in the series appeared in the previous series. The cast includes Esther Ralston, Fay Tincher, Josephine Hill, Ruth Dwyer, Eddie Gribbon, Edgar Kennedy, Clarke Comstock, W. T. McCulley and several ring favorites, including Harry Tenbrook.

The first of the series is scheduled for release December 31 and the second the middle of January. In addition, "Girls Will Be Girls" and "The Rough Tenderfoot" have been completed and "Hail to the Chief" is under way.

Following their showings at one of the Riesensfeld houses, this series will be shown in the Fox houses in and around New York City.

Shows Chase Comedy

"At First Sight," the first of the new series of single reel comedies produced by Hal Roach and starring Charles Chase is being shown at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, during the current week. This is a pre-release showing and marks the premiere of the picture. It is scheduled for release, through Pathe, on January 6.

Lamont With Century

Charles Lamont, who recently completed several comedies for Grand-Asher, has been appointed co-director with Noel Smith in filming Century comedies. The first under this arrangement will be "Putting It Over," in which Pal, the dog, is the star, and Harry Sweet in the leading "human" role. Lamont was formerly an assistant director with Century.

Rankin in New Series

Arthur Rankin, prominent screen juvenile who had a prominent role in the "Fighting Blood" series, has been signed to appear in the first episode of the new H. C. Witwer "Telephone Girl" series which will be distributed by Film Booking Offices of America.

"It's a Boy"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Snub Pollard depicts the wild plans of a father for his first-born in this single reeler. He plans a brilliant career for him as moving picture director and other sensational triumphs. But the baby, it proves, is not of that sex. It is a fairly amusing, though not exceptional number.—M. K.

"A Dutch Treat"

(Fox—Instructive—One Reel)

Here is one reel of charming entertainment. There is a sociable atmosphere about these scenes and people of Holland that makes the interest a little keener than in the average travel picture. Their houseboats, windmills, wooden shoes, industries, cheeses—and last but not most attractive, their children, have an interesting appeal.—M. K.

"Rough Sailing"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Most of the sailing in this Sunshine comedy is done through the air. The wire effects are very good and transport the char-

"Sing Them Again" Week Exploits Series

Still another instance of effective exploitation for short subjects is shown in the inauguration in South Philadelphia, Pa., of a "Sing Them Again" week by two Stanley theatres, the Broadway and the Alhambra, December 9 to 15.

The exploitation consisted mainly in publicity stories in the newspapers calculated to arouse interest in old favorite songs and to stimulate community singing. Both houses took advantage of this campaign and presented Educational's "Close Harmony," the first of the "Sing Them Again" series, day and date, throughout the entire week.

acters out of one danger into another in the home of the Turkish Sultan. The hero's mission is to rescue a pretty American girl from the harem. It has some fairly original action and should go well in the average house.—M. K.

"The Five Orphans of the Storm"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

A fable for the Christmas program has been provided by Paul Terry in this tale of Santa Claus and the little dogs who got left. One of them, however, wins a delicious feast for them all by a brave rescue of a little girl, headed for destruction on an ice floe. The touches of melodrama, human interest and comedy make it exceptionally good.—M. K.

"Flying Finance"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

This has an abundance of action and funny incident. It is a Mermaid comedy with Neeley Edwards in a peppy role that is constantly entertaining. A variety of accidents and escapes culminates in a cyclone which produces some ludicrous effects on the buildings, persons and animals in a small Western town. A few hilarious moments are outstanding. The comedy is certain to appeal because it has so much life.—M. K.

Pathe "Review No. 51"

(One Reel)

A study of the mother ovenbird, a few pretty country scenes, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," different views of the Sault Ste. Marie Locks and the ships, concluding with color pictures of the oxen teams used in France and Spain are found in this review.—M. K.

"The Last Stand of the Red Man"

(Vitagraph—Urban—One Reel)

Picturesque in its scenery and Indian types, this Kineto subject should be well received in a majority of theatres. Titles written in the style and meter of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" add to the atmosphere. Almost anyone is slightly fascinated by studies of Indians and the age which they recall, and this number is an interesting example.—M. K.

"Hansel and Gretel"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

For the Christmas program especially this Baby Peggy comedy will be an excellent attraction. It is the world-famous fairy tale with a few variations. As the story is popular with almost all children, the picture should draw very well. It offered very little chance for comedy in the original, but as produced here has been burlesqued somewhat and greatly elaborated upon. A few may object to having one of their favorite tales so tampered with, but the fantastic touches show a good imagination and are well done, particularly the magic wrought by the old witch. On the whole it is an exceptional Century comedy.—M. K.

"Rustlin' Buster"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Neither the acting nor the story is quite up to the standard of the usual Universal two-reel Western. Jack Mower is physically equal to the action but seems to lack the spirit that makes such performances entirely satisfying. Lola Todd shows a lack of experience that makes her role unconvincing. The story is the familiar one of an innocent man being accused of cattle rustling, but avenging himself and rescuing the girl involved.—M. K.

"Don't Hesitate"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

Fast action is plentiful here. A sheriff in a mild Western town decides to stir up a bit of action and glory for himself by staging a hold-up in the saloon. Meanwhile genuine disciples of Jesse James appear and give him real scare. The titles are snappy and the whole comedy amusing.—M. K.

"Girls and Records"

(Pathe—Spotlight—One Reel)

An ever popular contrast—that between the girl of fifty years ago and the modern flapper—is entertainingly shown in this second of the Grantland Rice "Spotlight" series. Grandmother getting her strenuous exercise by watering the rose garden is followed by interesting pictures of women at various sports, such as a tennis match between Miss Wills and Mrs. Clayton.—M. K.

"The Darkest Hour"

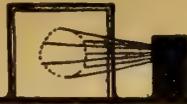

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Hal Roach's "Spat Family" confines its wrangles to its own home this time. The manufacture of home brew proceeds with great argument until the police arrive. That danger over, a terrible storm comes up and the report that a maniac with a knife is in the neighborhood. It is amusing and exciting—one of the best of the series. M. K.

"Inbad, the Sailor"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Love-sick sailors and a beautiful vampire cause plenty of commotion in this Mack Sennett comedy featuring Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon and Madeline Hurlock. The vamp haunts the lighthouse alluringly and the fights between the men and the chief, all in love with her, are many and furious. It is a good slapstick number with an attractive leading lady.—M. K.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Amusing or—What

Recently the editor was consulted by a widely known exhibitor who is at the head of a company proposing to erect a new picture palace in New York City. He asked me as a favor to go to his downtown office and examine the theatre plans, and though to do this ordinarily involves a fee of not less than twenty-five dollars, for certain reasons I was sufficiently interested to do as he asked, without charge.

I found that, as usual, the architect had planned the theatre and placed its "heart" in the most convenient place, regardless of what the net result might be on the screen when it was all finished. In other words, he had planned a beautiful theatre, as such, but had, AS USUAL, made it entirely impossible ever to put a perfect result on the screen, though it so HAPPENS that the result will not be nearly so bad as some. I place "happens" in capitals because it is evident that the fact that the condition is no worse is NOT due to any thought for projection results on the part of the architect, but just the USUAL clear-back, up-as-high-as-we-can-get-it location is in this case only 150 feet from the screen and something like thirty feet above its center.

The near amusing part is that the party in question asked me to see his architect and discuss the matter with him. This I promised to do, but due to an error the visit was delayed, and I again saw the exhibitor before I saw the architect. I found him apparently fairly well convinced that what I had brought to his attention amounted to little. Why? Well, here is the laugh: HE HAD TALKED WITH A SUPPLY DEALER, WHO HAD ASSURED HIM THAT EVERYTHING WAS ALRIGHT, clinching his argument with: "What's the matter with the  Theatre?"

Should one laugh or swear at this? This exhibitor means well. There is not the slightest doubt of that. He spoke of me to others in the highest terms, BUT he nevertheless CONSULTS A SUPPLY DEALER ON PROJECTION PROBLEMS, and is inclined to believe him rather than a projection engineer, partly because he cites for comparison a big Broadway theatre in which the problems have very little similarity.

The supply dealer in question knows the supply business very well indeed, but in the name of all the gods why go to a supply dealer with a problem in projection engineering?

The Real Problem

Here is what I hold. The conditions in the proposed theatre under discussion are not really very bad, though there will be considerable distortion if present plans are carried out. What further handicap may be imposed when the room itself is built remains to be seen, but I'll bet dollars to bad eggs that there will be at least some, though the room may be a good one AS SUCH ROOMS GO.

But the whole procedure is WRONG. The architect should be obliged, when the original agreement is made, to call into consultation a competent, capable projection engineer, not connected in any way with any one who has ANYTHING in the way of equipment to sell. Recognizing that the whole theatre is being built to sell to the public a certain thing which must be placed on its screen, the first problem is to plan a projection condition which will enable a perfect picture to be projected (which involves many things), and then the theatre should be planned around that condition.

As the matter now lies, practically every architect places the cart squarely in front of the horse and hitches the aforesaid horse into the shafts backwards, by first planning the theatre and then letting projection get by as it may. The results are very often pretty awful. I don't so much blame the exhibitor in question. He figures that every one else "goes ahead backwards" in matters of this sort, so why should not he also?

Cannavan Says

International President Cannavan tells me locals are really, as a general proposition, making a real effort to improve the screen results put on by their members. I most sincerely hope that is true. If it is true it is splendid. I know some locals are making a real effort, but was not aware that a considerable number of them had got energetically busy in that direction. Let the good work proceed.

"Operator's"

A friend in Iowa, asks:

Will you kindly inform me with regard to any operator's organization there may be. Is there a national operator's union? How should I proceed to obtain an operator's license?

Certainly there is an operator's national organization, several of them, in fact. There is a national union of operators on ladies waists; also one on straw hats and another on men's overalls. There is, I think, an organization of coal mine operators. Whether the bucket shop operators have one or not I don't know.

However, forgive my little joke and I'll tell you what you want to know, viz: Is there a national organization of motion picture projectionists? Yes. There is such an organization, known as the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. Some name, if you ask me.

Write to William Cannavan, President I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., World Tower

Building, 110 West 40th Street, New York City, for information as to joining same. Licenses are not issued by the organization. That is only done by city or state authorities. You would have to apply to some city where there is a license law, or to the state authorities if Iowa issues state licenses, which I don't think it does. Just what cities in Iowa have license law as applied to motion picture projectionists I do not know.

Corking Good Dope

From Walter Munn, Local Union No. 448, I. A., Pueblo, Colorado, comes what seems to be, everything considered, the best plan I have yet seen for measuring the focal length of plano convex condenser lenses with at least a very fair degree of accuracy—as accurate as anything we now have and which does not entail considerable trouble in application. The only tools required for application of the Munn scheme are a six-inch machinist "scale," or some other accurate steel rule having 64th-inch graduations, and an "outside caliper." Brother Munn explains his plan as follows:

I'll bust through the ice after a year or so of silence, just so that you may know that, though a bit quiet, we of this Mountain State are still very much alive.

In a recent issue you explained two good methods for measuring condenser lens focal lengths. Comparing them to or with my own "home brewed" method, I find mine to be more simple and easy of application. I have made a chart, or table, copy of which is attached hereto. By mechanical drawing I readily find the exact thickness of the curvature of a 4½-inch diameter segment of circles of varying diameters, covering plano convex lens curvatures from five to ten inch focal lengths. (See page 134 of Bluebook.—Ed.) These measurements I made into a chart, copy of which I have pasted to a flyleaf of my Bluebook, to prevent it being mislaid.

By the use of the chart, an outside caliper and a steel rule having 64th inch graduations, it is but the work of a moment to measure accurately the focal length of plano convex lenses. Dimension "C" is found by first measuring dimension "b" and "a" and subtracting the latter from the first.

CAUTION: This must all be done very carefully and accurately, since dimension C varies only slightly for slight differences in focal length, especially in the longer focal length lenses.

To Apply the Chart

First measure dimensions "a" and "b". Subtract "a" from "b" and find, in the left hand chart column, the number most nearly corresponding to the result thus arrived at, opposite which, in the right hand column, will be found the focal length of the lens under consideration.

CAUTION NO. TWO: This will, of course, be understood that this method can only be applied when the lens diameter is just 4½ inches, but it is only very rarely that lenses will be found which will be off standard in this respect.

Our local, No. 448, has instituted educational meetings—business and educational meetings being held on alternate weeks. The Projection Department, the Bluebook and the proceedings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers keep us amply supplied with questions for discussion.

Last summer the wanderlust seized upon my soul, so I turned the "Red Chariot" toward the setting sun. I saw wonderful projection in most of the coast cities, but wish especially to commend the work of the good brothers in charge of projection in the "Blue Mouse" Theatre in Seattle, Washington.

With only one man in the projection room, they put on as smooth a program as is found in the two-man Grauman Theatres down in Los Angeles.

Well, I'll run the good night slide before I wear out my welcome. Congratulations on the Bluebook. It's a wonder!

No man "wears out his welcome" here when he has things of interest and value to submit, and you certainly have that. In the matter of the chart, I would recommend that projectionists cut it out and follow brother Munn's example by pasting it to their Bluebook flyleaf. One beauty of it is that YOU MAY TAKE YOUR CALIPER AND RULE ALONG AND MEASURE THE EXACT FOCAL LENGTH OF THE LENSES YOU BUY, WHEN YOU BUY THEM—that is to say, you who can purchase lenses by personally visiting the supply houses can do so. I would strongly recommend that you get a GOOD machinist's "scale" and a GOOD pair of outside calipers. A machinist's scale is a six-inch steel rule, graduated as finely as 1/100ths of an inch. It is an excellent tool to have.

Since it is unlikely that such tools can be secured at the small town stores—especially the machinists' scale—I will myself undertake to send either one or both of them as you may elect, to all those who forward the price, plus fifteen cents for postage and insurance. The price is as follows: a four-inch outside caliper, with screw adjustment, eighty-five (85) cents. A scale of "stainless" steel, one dollar and eight cents ($1.08); of ordinary steel seventy two (72) cents.

These prices were obtained from Patter-son Brothers, which is perhaps the best retail hardware dealer in all New York. I am not certain whether it was a four or a six-inch scale I priced, but I think six. Either will be plenty enough, and the six-inch one is perhaps preferable, in that it can be carried in the vest pocket if desired. WARNING! DON'T send personal checks. They must be passed through the bank and in many cases exchange paid on them. Send P. O. money order.

I sincerely trust that the Blue Mouse projectionists, of Seattle, will not be angry at what you've said about them. My compliments to them; also to local 448 for its progressiveness in initiating educational meetings. May they succeed and long continue. By the way: What has become of "Bill" Ladd, of Seattle?

It is possible I may pass through Pueblo next summer—POSSIBLE, mind you. By the way, I am, and have been for twenty-one years, a member of Camp No. 2 W. O. W. of Pueblo. Should you happen to b'long, please convey my respects to its Clerk, who ends me a bill real reg'lar.

Old Stuff

I am in receipt of a letter from the Havana Film Company, Havana, Cuba, asking me to draft a letter for them to send out to every exhibitor in Cuba, setting forth the evils of "the missing reel."

It seems the almost universal practice in Cuba is to ship films to theatres "in the roll"—that is to say, without any reel at all. And strange as it may seem to you, some Cuban exhibitors and projectionists have objected strenuously when films have been received by them on reels.

Can you beat that! I might add that this is the practice followed in England, and I understand, in some other European countries, but it is a very bad practice, nevertheless. Film shipped without the protection of a metal reel is readily susceptible to damage, in many ways.

It is true that film on reels takes up more space in shipment; also there is the added weight of the reel but the protection afforded the films is far more than worth all that.

I'd like to see the mugs of some of our United States and Canadian projectionists if they received a "show" not wound on reels. Gee, what a HOWL would go up! Shipping and handling films in "the roll" is back-number stuff! Shame upon you, Cuba!

To obtain "c", subtract "a" from "b." Use steel ruler divided in 64ths

Ward Leonard VITROHM Dimmer plates on switchboard controlling Ward Leonard Reactance Dimmers, Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles.

Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre Building, Los Angeles.

The largest theatre dimmer installation in the world

Continuous duty

The foundation of all WARD LEONARD Theatre Dimmers is a substantial iron plate to one side of which a layer of vitreous enamel is applied. In this the resistor is imbedded. The resistor, enclosed in this glass-hard, non-porous enamel, is impervious to moisture and gases. It completely and permanently protects the resistance from corrosion or oxidation, but dissipates heat with maximum efficiency. It is to this unique construction, more than any other factor, that WARD LEONARD Theatre Dimmers owe their ability to render superior service under continuous duty.

TO the theatre-going public the new Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, is sensational because of its size and magnificence and the beauty of its wonderful lighting effects. More electric energy is required to light the stage and auditorium of this theatre than is used by any other in the world. Naturally, the largest theatre dimmer installation in the world was needed to control this great amount of energy—enough to light 6,000 sixty-watt lamps. And equally naturally, WARD LEONARD VITROHM DIMMER equipment was chosen—because Ward Leonard Dimmers eliminate fire risk, are designed for continuous duty, meet requirements with apparatus of minimum weight and bulk, are absolutely reliable, easy to operate, extremely durable, and economical in upkeep.

Merry Christmas

MERRY CHRISTMAS! people. While there may be a few more vacant spaces near the top of the stockings that we've hung on the mantel, they are nothing like as empty as they might have been if matters were worse. So, take it all in all, it's about an average Christmas as Christmases go.

From a casual inspection of the tree, we would say that there are a few new dew-dads hanging upon it in addition to the regulation candy sticks, cornucopias, gilt balls and yellow birds with green wings.

For instance, we understand that the A. M. P. E. D. A. is about to be represented with a brand new official organ of its own, to which we wish the best of success. We certainly are in sympathy with the owners thereof, who will, in the nature of things, become its most extensive advertisers, and who will have to decide how much of their own publicity they will run.

Right down on one of the most accessible branches of the tree we note three packages marked "For a Good Exhibitor," which we are willing to bet will be found to contain respectively one of those new mirror projection lamps, a new Mazda, that we understand will be a world beater, and an apparatus for projecting a conversational picture.

Beneath the tree, we behold some bulky packages which from their suggestive outlines, we surmise are independent lighting plants carefully wrapped in tissue paper. We sincerely trust that somewhere in the packages will be found rather more definite information regarding their use and desirability than we have yet discovered outside of our own editorial columns.

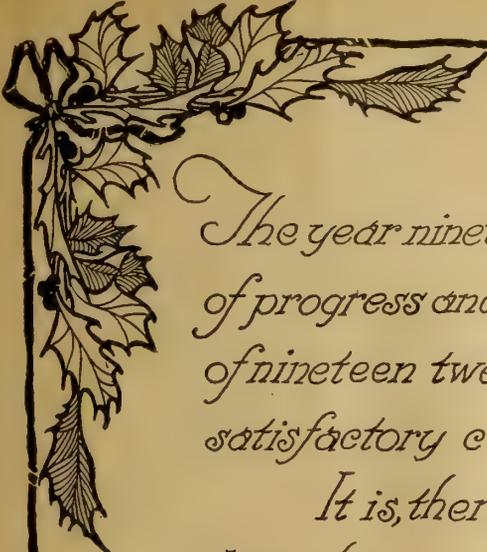

Side by side with these latter offerings of Santa, is something that looks as if it might be an oil burning apparatus for theatre heating. And it certainly does look as if the recipients of these will be in a position to worry the soul of the coal dealer, provided that individual really has one of those attachments.

One of the limbs of the tree is quite badly bent, due to the weight of the gift suspended therefrom. We have been told in strict confidence that it is either a player piano or a theatre organ that looks like a million dollars, but is warranted not to burst the bank account of the exhibitor whose name is on the package.

We don't know the name of the donor of this much-to-be-appreciated gift because with all due and becoming modesty that generous individual has not as yet placed his name upon the package where we can see it, but, as soon as the bundle is unwrapped we will announce this interesting fact in a decidedly loud voice.

From the tip of almost every limb depends what at first glance appears to be a light, but which, upon closer examination, proves to be a new theatre—all spic and span—and brilliantly illuminated. There are about five hundred of these which have been specially prepared during the past year and which will be distributed by Santa in person to the exhibitors who have won them in open competition in the great game of pleasing patron fans.

So, here's wishing the recipients of these gifts all sorts of success with them and the pleasantest, merriest, most profitable Christmas that they have ever enjoyed heretofore and also that it won't be even a marker in prosperity of those yet to come.

The year nineteen twenty-three has been a period of progress and prosperity and we view the approach of nineteen twenty-four with full confidence that this satisfactory condition will continue.

*It is, therefore, particularly pleasant to again have this opportunity to continue the old custom of wishing our friends and associates of the motion picture industry A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year.

The Manufacturers of Independent Generating Plants Take the Floor

IN our last issue appeared an article on the independent generating plant in which the subject was treated from the "cost of operation" point of view.

A previous article, devoted to this branch of equipment, brought forth many letters from exhibitors, from which we made extracts on which we commented last week. This time we are giving the floor to four manufacturers who have expressed their views on last week's installment.

It will be noticed that, while two of these regard our estimate of 15% for depreciation as being too high, they differ on other points. One, indeed, recommending the utilization of alternating current, appears to be rather reactionary.

One manufacturer approves a storage battery installation, while another opposes it.

What They Say

One manufacturer writes:

Fifteen per cent. depreciation, in our experience, is too high. Ten per cent., we believe, is a fairer figure.

Another backs up this recommendation with the following:

It is entirely safe to figure your depreciation on the basis of ten per cent. per year, which will wipe out the entire investment in a ten-year period.

and then goes on to discuss the cost of operation as follows:

With reference to operating expenses, would state that you have figured this high enough, as the fuel consumption should not exceed 1-10 gallon per horsepower hour and .001 pint of lubricating oil per horsepower hour. Basing our figures on the present price of gasoline, which is approximately 16 cents per gallon, and lubricating oil at $1.00 per gallon, you would have a cost of 4.2 cents per K. W. hour for fuel and lubrication.

Now, assuming that your requirements are $7\frac{1}{2}$ K. W. per hour, your cost would be 29.6 cents per hour, or \$1.48 for five hours' operation, or a cost of \$539.38 for five hours' operation 365 days of the year. From what we have been able to learn, there are a great many houses that are operating with less than $7\frac{1}{2}$ K. W.; in fact, many require less than a 5 K. W. plant, and the real small houses probably could get along very nicely with a $2\frac{1}{2}$ or $3\frac{1}{2}$ K. W. outfit.

Approves Storage Batteries

A third manufacturer writes:

There is no doubt but what an independent plant with storage batteries would be the ideal equipment, using a motor generator set to transform the current from alternating to direct for the apparatus and motors whenever the public service current is available as a stand-by.

Advises Alternating Current

While the fourth manufacturer offers many valuable suggestions, we do not agree with that advising the utilization of alternating current, which all progressive exhibitors are now converting into direct whenever possible for projection purposes. With this comment, we quote from his communication as follows:

You have assumed that the carbon arcs must be operated in parallel. The arcs may be connected in series when a 110 volt plant is used so that no additional current will be required when the two arcs are being operated.

As you know, the carbon arc operates at approximate 55 volts. When one arc is being used, the voltage is reduced to approximately 55 volts by means of a rheostat. If the two arcs are connected in series, the second arc is simply taking the amount of current which was used up in the rheostat so that no additional current is required.

You recommend the installation of motor generator sets to convert the alternating current to direct current for operating direct current motors, fans, etc. As a general rule, we do not believe that this will be advisable where the independent plant is to be used for emergency only. We believe that it would be better for the exhibitor to either install an alternating current plant or to install a direct current plant and use a converter for changing the direct current to alternating current for operating the standard equipment during emergencies.

Cost of Battery Considered

The 110 volt storage battery would not be economical. The original cost of a 110 volt storage battery would be just as great, if not greater, than the extra cost for a large plant and the depreciation would be considerably greater.

For example: The $7\frac{1}{2}$ K. W. plant lists at \$1,200, the 10 K. W. at \$1,525, and the 15 K. W. at \$1,800. The 110 volt storage battery of suitable capacity would run from \$700 to \$800. It would also require a more expensive switchboard, which would add to the cost of the plant.

If an exhibitor wants an individual plant for emergency use only, then it would be best for him to install an alternating current plant or to install a direct current plant and a converter to change the current from direct current to alternating current.

For Permanent Usage

If he wanted a plant for permanent use, then the most economical plant would be a 32 volt direct current plant.

The Mazda projecting lamps are made in 600 watt 30 volt and 900 watt 30 volt. Therefore, a 32 volt plant will make a more economical installation than a 110 volt, and right here is where a storage battery could be used to advantage, because the cost of a 32 volt storage battery is less than one-third the cost of a 110 volt storage battery.

Suppose this customer was using the 900 watt 30 volt lamp. Assuming his light load to be about 850 watts during hte time that the picture machine is operating; then his light load, motor load, and one projecting lamp would be approximately four kilowatts.

A 4 K. W. 32 volt machine with a storage battery would handle the requirements because the battery could be relied upon to handle the load during the change from one reel to another.

The cost of a 4 K. W. 32 volt plant with a suitable battery would be in the neighborhood of $1,000.

Reducing Wattage Requirements

The reason that a 110 volt, direct current plant would not be economical would be due to the fact that so much current is wasted in reducing the voltage down from 110 volts to 30 volts. The 30 volt 900 watt lamp consumes 30 amperes. Therefore, the lamp alone would require 3,300 watts where 110 volt direct current was used, whereas it only requires a little over 900 watts where the 32 volt plant is used. The difference goes up in heat.

As suggested above, if the exhibitor wants to use the independent plant for emergency only, the best plant to install would be an alternating current plant, or a direct current plant with a converter to change the current from direct current to alternating current.

Summing Up the Proposition

The proposition sums up in general as follows:

For the theatre depending altogether on an independent plant, the direct current plant is, as a general rule, the best proposition. Where the Mazda lamp is used and the total load does not exceed 4 K. W., the 32 volt plant is the most economical equipment. If the carbon arc is used, either the 60 volt or the 110 volt direct current plant may be used. The 110 volt is usually preferred on account of it being standard voltage.

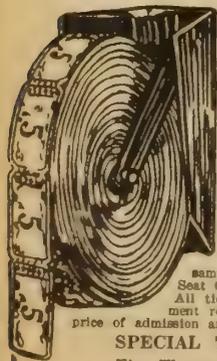

Direct current gives better projection than alternating current and saves the expense of a transverter or motor generating set for the carbon arc.

Where an independent plant is to be used for emergencies only:

First—Where there is no large motor load or large fan load, the 110 volt direct current may be used to advantage because electric lights operate equally well off of either 110 volt direct current or 110 volt alternating current. Small motors can also be obtained which will operate from either alternating or direct current.

Second—Where large motors or large fan loads are required, it is better to install either an alternating current plant or a direct current plant and a converter to change the direct current to alternating current.

The above will hold true in most cases. However, it is advisable to have all the details of the electrical requirements of the picture show before making recommendations because many shows even with the same seating capacity differ radically in their electrical requirements.

SEATING—

the basis of theatre comfort

The restful comfort provided by American theatre chairs is an important factor in securing and maintaining a steady year 'round flow of satisfied theatre patrons.

Any theatre that offers comfortable seating as first among its conveniences, naturally stands out first in the estimation of the comfort and pleasure seeking public.

American craftsmen are skilled in the art of designing theatre chairs which are not only durable in construction, harmonious in color with surroundings, but of the highest achievement from the standpoint of comfort. Obviously, American theatre chairs should be given first choice in planning that new theatre.

Experience has taught us how to utilize all the floor space to insure the utmost seating capacity without crowding. And, among other things, we offer to lay out the floor plan without charge. Each seating problem is considered individually.
